Noting that opinion in democratic societies about the relationship between the State and religions differs widely, the Court has emphasized the margin of appreciation and said that 'special importance' must be given to national decision-making bodies.⁸⁵ This is because it is 'not possible to discern throughout Europe a uniform conception of the significance of religion in society'⁸⁶ and 'the meaning or impact of the public expression of a religious belief will differ according to time and context'.⁸⁷ The variation in rules and traditions from one country to another imposes upon the Court a duty of considerable deference.

Freedom to change religion

Freedom to change one's religion was incorporated in article 18 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, from which article 9 of the European Convention is derived. Like freedom of opinion, conscience, and religion, freedom to change one's religion or belief is absolute and is not subject to any interference by the State.⁸⁸ Of significance in some parts of the world where change in religion is not a simple matter, or where it is plainly prohibited, within Europe this does not seem to be an issue of importance. There have been several decisions holding that pressuring an individual to change religious beliefs is at variance with article 9.⁸⁹ However, there do not appear to be any cases before the Convention organs dealing directly with freedom to change one's religion.

The closest that the Court has come to the issue is in a proselytizing case, Kokkinakis v. Greece. At the time, Greece was the only Member State in the Council of Europe to make proselytizing an offence. The applicant was an elderly Greek businessman who, as a Jehovah's Witness, had spent many months in prison in the course of his lifetime as a result of convictions for proselytizing. The Court linked the issue to freedom to change religion or belief: 'in principle the right to try to convince one's neighbour, for example through "teaching", failing which, moreover, "freedom to change [one's] religion or belief", enshrined in Article 9 (art. 9), would be likely to remain a dead letter'.⁹⁰ In that sense, proselytizing was protected as a form of freedom to manifest one's religion.

The Court was cautious, however, and did not condemn the Greek legislation; rather, it held that it had not been properly applied to the applicant. It insisted upon a distinction between 'bearing Christian witness and improper proselytism', describing the former as 'true evangelism' and the latter as 'a corruption or deformation of it' that might 'take the form of activities offering material or social advantages with a view to gaining new ⁸⁴ Leela Förderkreis e.V. and Others v. Germany, no. 58911/00, § 81, 6 November 2008.

⁸⁵ Leyla Şahin v. Turkey [GC], no. 44774/98, § 109, ECHR 2005-XI.

⁸⁶ Orto-Preminger-Institut v. Austria, 20 September 1994, § 50, Series A no. 295-A.

⁸⁷ Dahlab v. Switzerland (dec.), no. 42393/98, ECHR 2001-V.

⁸⁸ Kokkinakis v. Greece, 25 May 1993, Partly Dissenting Opinion of Judge Martens, § 14, Series A no. 260-A.

⁸⁹ Knudsen v. Norway, no. 11045/84, Commission decision of 8 March 1985, (1985) 28 YB 129, DR 42, p. 247; Kontrinen v. Finland, no. 24949/94, Commission decision of 3 December 1996, (1997) 40 YB 94, DR 87-A, p. 68; Francesco Sessa v. Italy, no. 28790/08, § 37, ECHR 2012 (extracts); Ivanova v. Bulgaria, no. 52435/99, § 80, 12 April 2007.

⁹⁰ Kokkinakis v. Greece, 25 May 1993, § 31, Series A no. 260-A. Also Ivanova v. Bulgaria, no. 52435/99, § 78, 12 April 2007; Jehovah's Witnesses of Moscow v. Russia, no. 302/02, § 139, 10 June 2010.

members for a Church or exerting improper pressure on people in distress or in need; it may even entail the use of violence or brainwashing'. It said that 'improper proselytism' was 'not compatible with respect for the freedom of thought, conscience and religion of others'.⁹¹ In a subsequent decision, the Court said that article 9 does not 'protect improper proselytism, such as the offering of material or social advantage or the application of improper pressure with a view to gaining new members for a Church'.⁹² Some judges were prepared to condemn the Greek anti-proselytizing law outright as a breach of article 9.⁹³

Freedom to manifest religion or belief

In addition to freedom of belief, conscience, and religion, and freedom to change religion or belief, the first paragraph of article 9 recognizes 'freedom, either alone or in community with others and in public or private, to manifest his religion or belief, in worship, teaching, practice and observance'. According to the text, this freedom has several components. It may be exercised 'alone or in community with others' and 'in public or private'. The freedom may involve 'teaching, practice and observance'. However, article 9(1) of the Convention 'does not protect every act motivated or inspired by a religion or belief. Moreover, in exercising his freedom to manifest his religion, an individual may need to take his specific situation into account'.⁹⁴ Paragraph 2 of article 9 applies to freedom to manifest religion or belief in contrast with the other main components of article 9(1).

Freedom to manifest religion or belief is enshrined in article 9(1), although in a sense this reference is superfluous because '[w]hile religious freedom is primarily a matter of individual conscience, it also implies, inter alia, freedom to "manifest [one's] religion" alone and in private or in community with others, in public and within the circle of those whose faith one shares. Bearing witness in words and deeds is bound up with the existence of religious convictions'.⁹⁵ Article 9 lists four forms that manifestation of religion or belief may take: worship; teaching; practice; and observance. It does not protect all acts that are motivated or inspired by religion or belief.⁹⁶

To fall within the concept of 'manifest', as the term is used in article 9(1), there must be an intimate link to the religion or belief, for example 'an act of worship or devotion which forms part of the practice of a religion or belief in a generally recognised form'.⁹⁷ There is no requirement that the impugned act constitute a religious duty, but there must be a sufficiently close and direct nexus between the act and the underlying belief, something that is determined on the facts of each case.⁹⁸

⁹¹ Kokkinakis v. Greece, 25 May 1993, § 48, Series A no. 260-A.

⁹² Larissis and Others v. Greece, 24 February 1998, § 45, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-I.

⁹³ Kokkinakis v. Greece, 25 May 1993, Partly Concurring Opinion of Judge Pettiti, Series A no. 260-A; Kokkinakis v. Greece, 25 May 1993, Partly Dissenting Opinion of Judge Martens, § 20, Series A no. 260-A.

⁹⁴ Kalaç v. Turkey, 1 July 1997, § 27, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-IV. Also Porter v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 15814/02, 8 April 2003; Zaoui v. Switzerland (dec.), no. 41615/98, 18 January 2001; Blumberg v. Germany (dec.), no. 14618/03, 18 March 2008.

⁹⁵ Metropolitan Church of Bessarabia and Others v. Moldova, no. 45701/99, § 114, ECHR 2001-XII. Also Kokkinakis v. Greece, 25 May 1993, § 31, Series A no. 260-A; Leyla Şahin v. Turkey [GC], no. 44774/98, § 105, ECHR 2005-XI.

⁹⁶ Kalaç v. Turkey, 1 July 1997, § 27, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-IV.

⁹⁷ Eweida and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 48420/10, § 82, ECHR 2013 (extracts).

⁹⁸ Cha'are Shalom Ve Tsedek v. France [GC], no. 27417/95, §§ 73-74, ECHR 2000-VII; Leyla Şahin v. Turkey [GC], no. 44774/98, §§ 78, 105, ECHR 2005-XI; Bayatyan v. Armenia [GC], no. 23459/03, § 111,

There is a negative aspect to the freedom to manifest religion or belief. Individuals have the right not to be required to reveal their faith or religious beliefs and not to be compelled to assume a stance from which it may be inferred whether or not they have such beliefs. Consequently, 'there will be an interference with the negative aspect of this provision when the State brings about a situation in which individuals are obliged—directly or indirectly—to reveal that they are non-believers. This is all the more important when such obligation occurs in the context of the provision of an important public service such as education.'⁹⁹

In some States, identity cards have indicated religious domination. Unhappy when the reference to religion on Greek identity cards was eliminated in 2000, the applicants invoked article 9 before the Court. The Court said that identity cards were not intended to provide the devout with a means to manifest their religion.¹⁰⁰ The right to manifest one's religion does not include an entitlement that religion be mentioned on an individual's identity card. Because identity cards are used regularly for a range of services, there is a concern that this might contribute to discriminatory situations.¹⁰¹ The problem is not resolved by allowing a person to leave the reference to religion blank. But although the Court has found that reference to religion on public identity cards is contrary to article 9,¹⁰² it has accepted the mention on German tax documents, whose public exposure was quite minimal.¹⁰³

The Court found that there had been a violation of article 9 in Greece with respect to the swearing-in of a lawyer. There was a presumption that an oath would be taken on the Bible, forcing those for whom it was not a sacred text to declare their religion or belief, or the absence of one. According to the Court, '[i]l n'est pas loisible aux autorités étatiques de s'immiscer dans la liberté de conscience d'une personne en s'enquérant de ses convictions religieuses ou en l'obligeant à les manifester, et spécialement à le faire, notamment à l'occasion d'une prestation de serment, pour pouvoir exercer certaines fonctions'.¹⁰⁴ In another case, the Court found that the Greek legislation governing civil procedure created a presumption that the oath of a witness to tell the truth be taken on the Bible, with a solemn declaration being possible for those making such a request. This, too, was held to be incompatible with the negative dimension of article 9.¹⁰⁵ On the relatively rare occasions when a witness is heard by the European Court of Human Rights, he or she may 'swear' or 'solemnly declare on my honour and conscience' that 'I shall speak the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth'.¹⁰⁶

The Court has also examined issues relating to manifestation of religion or belief as a positive obligation. This means the State must take reasonable and appropriate measures

ECHR 2011; Skugar and Others v. Russia (dec.), no. 40010/04, 3 December 2009; Pichon and Sajous v. France (dec.), no. 49853/99, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 2001-X.

⁹⁹ Grzelak v. Poland, no. 7710/02, § 87, 15 June 2010.

¹⁰⁰ Sofianopoulos and Others v. Greece (dec.), nos 988/02, 1997/02, and 1977/02, 12 December 2002.

¹⁰¹ Sinan Isik v. Turkey, no. 21924/05, § 43, ECHR 2010.

¹⁰² Ibid., §§ 51–53.

¹⁰³ Wasmuth v. Germany, no. 12884/03, §§ 61–63, 17 February 2011.

¹⁰⁴ Alexandridis v. Greece, no. 19516/06, § 38, 21 February 2008; Dimitras and Others v. Greece, nos 42837/06, 3237/07, 3269/07, 35793/07, and 6099/08, § 78, 3 June 2010; Wasmuth v. Germany, no. 12884/03, § 50, 17 February 2011; Sinan Isik v. Turkey, no. 21924/05, § 41, ECHR 2010.

¹⁰⁵ Dimitras and Others v. Greece, nos 42837/06, 3237/07, 3269/07, 35793/07, and 6099/08, §§ 84–88, 3 June 2010.

¹⁰⁶ Rules of Court, Rule 6A(1).

to secure rights under article 9(1), although the analysis is broadly similar to that under article 9(2) when the permissibility of an interference is considered.¹⁰⁷ A 'fair balance' must be struck between the competing interests of the individual and the community. The State has a margin of appreciation in this respect.

Alone or in community

Freedom to manifest religion or belief may be exercised alone or in community with others. According to the Court, this 'encompasses the expectation that believers will be allowed to associate freely, without arbitrary State intervention. Indeed, the autonomous existence of religious communities is indispensable for pluralism in a democratic society and is thus an issue at the very heart' of article 9.¹⁰⁸ For this reason, the reference to 'community' in article 9 points to article 11, which safeguards associative life against unjustified State interference. There have been many cases involving religious institutions and their freedom of association and peaceful assembly. The Court has said that 'where the organisation of the religious community is at issue, Article 9 of the Convention must be interpreted in the light of Article 11'.¹⁰⁹ Furthermore, 'one of the means of exercising the right to manifest one's religion, especially for a religious community, in its collective dimension, is the possibility of ensuring judicial protection of the community, its members and its assets, so that Article 9 must be seen not only in the light of Article 11, but also in the light of Article 6'.¹¹⁰

Refusal of the authorities to grant a legal-entity status to a religious association or church is an interference with freedom of association. This will also amount to an interference with the right to manifest religion or belief, both for the community and the individual members.¹¹¹ Some countries reserve various rights to religious organizations that have legal-entity status such as establishing places of worship, holding religious services in places accessible to the public, producing, obtaining, and distributing religious literature, creating educational institutions, and maintaining contacts for international exchanges and conferences.¹¹² Questions relating to the tax status of buildings used for religious purposes may have important repercussions on the exercise of the right to manifest religious belief by members of religious groups.¹¹³

States are entitled to verify whether a movement or association carries on, ostensibly in pursuit of religious aims, activities that are harmful to the population or to ¹⁰⁷ Jakóbski v. Poland, no. 18429/06, § 47, 7 December 2010.

¹⁰⁸ Church of Scientology Moscow v. Russia, no. 18147/02, § 64, 5 April 2007; Jehovah's Witnesses of Moscow v. Russia, no. 302/02, § 100, 10 June 2010; Metropolitan Church of Bessarabia and Others v. Moldova, no. 45701/99, §§ 118–123, ECHR 2001-XII; Religionsgemeinschaft der Zeugen Jehovas and Others v. Austria, no. 40825/98, § 61, 31 July 2008; Hasan and Chaush v. Bulgaria [GC], no. 30985/96, § 62, ECHR 2000-XI.

¹⁰⁹ Schüth v. Germany, no. 1620/03, § 58, ECHR 2010; Siebenhaar v. Germany, no. 18136/02, § 42, 3 February 2011; Suyato-Mykhaylivska Parafiya v. Ukraine, no. 77703/01, § 112, 14 June 2007.

¹¹⁰ Religionsgemeinschaft der Zeugen Jehovas and Others v. Austria, no. 40825/98, § 63, 31 July 2008.

¹¹¹ Church of Scientology of St. Petersburg and Others v. Russia, no. 47191/06, §§ 37–38, 2 October 2014; Religionsgemeinschaft der Zeugen Jehovas and Others v. Austria, no. 40825/98, §§ 79–80, 31 July 2008; Jehovah's Witnesses of Moscow v. Russia, no. 302/02, § 101, 10 June 2010; Metropolitan Church of Bessarabia and Others v. Moldova, no. 45701/99, § 105, ECHR 2001-XII; Kimlya and Others v. Russia, nos 76836/01 and 32782/03, § 81, ECHR 2009.

¹¹² Jehovah's Witnesses of Moscow v. Russia, no. 302/02, § 102, 10 June 2010; Kimlya and Others v. Russia, nos 76836/01 and 32782/03, §§ 54–55, 86, ECHR 2009.

¹¹³ Cumhuriyetçi Eğitim Ve Kültür Merkezi Vakfı v. Turkey, no. 32093/10, § 41, 2 December 2014; The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints v. the United Kingdom, no. 7552/09, § 30, 4 March 2014.

public safety.¹¹⁴ Because of the special importance of religion and the protection offered by article 9, when religious associations apply for legal status the State must act with particular diligence and ensure that proceedings are not excessively prolonged.¹¹⁵ If a religious community is divided, the State should not take measures favouring one particular leader or group, nor should it compel the community, or part of it, to place itself under a single leadership.¹¹⁶

In public or private

Most of the litigation concerning freedom to manifest religion or belief necessarily involves activities that take place in public. The reference to 'in private' suggests a relationship with article 8 of the Convention and the protection of private life. In a case involving persecution of Jehovah's Witnesses in Russia, the respondent government attempted to justify denial of legal-entity status on the grounds that the activities of the religious group breached the privacy of its members. Examples that were given were the determination of the place and nature of employment, a preference for part-time work allowing time to preach, unpaid work at the community centre, regulation of leisure activities, a ban on celebrating holidays and birthdays and mandatory missionary activity, and 'door-to-door' preaching.¹¹⁷ The Court concluded that 'what was taken by the Russian courts to constitute an infringement by the applicant community of the right of its members to respect for their private life was in fact a manifestation of their beliefs in their private lives in the sense protected by Article 9'.¹¹⁸

Many religions impose standards of behaviour and conduct upon their adherents who are expected to abide by these in their private lives. The Court has provided several examples of manifesting religion or belief in private life, including regular attendance at church services, performance of certain rituals such as communion or confession, observance of religious holidays or abstention from work on specific days of the week, wearing specific clothes, and dietary regulations.¹¹⁹ By following such practices and customs in their daily lives, believers manifest their desire 'to comply strictly with the religious beliefs they professed and their liberty to do so was guaranteed by Article 9 of the Convention in the form of the freedom to manifest religion, alone and in private'.¹²⁰ Sometimes, such practices may be injurious: 'The Court observes, on a general note, that the rites and rituals of many religions may harm believers' well-being, such as, for example, the practice of fasting, which is particularly long and strict in Orthodox Christianity, or circumcision practised on Jewish or Muslim male babies.'¹²¹

¹¹⁴ Metropolitan Church of Besarabia and Others v. Moldova, no. 45701/99, § 113, ECHR 2001-XII; Stankov and the United Macedonian Organisation Ilinden v. Bulgaria, nos 29221/95 and 29225/95, § 84, ECHR 2001-IX.

¹¹⁵ Kimlya and Others v. Russia, nos 76836/01 and 32782/03, § 99, ECHR 2009; Religionsgemeinschaft der Zeugen Jehovas and Others v. Austria, no. 40825/98, §§ 78–80, 31 July 2008.

¹¹⁶ Supreme Holy Council of the Muslim Community v. Bulgaria, no. 39023/97, §§ 76, 96, 16 December 2004; Serif v. Greece, no. 38178/97, §§ 49, 52, and 53, ECHR 1999-IX; Hasan and Chaush v. Bulgaria [GC], no. 30985/96, § 78, ECHR 2000-XI; Suyato-Mykhaylivska Parafiya v. Ukraine, no. 77703/01, § 123, 14 June 2007; Miroslubovs and Others v. Latvia, no. 798/05, § 80, 15 September 2009; Fernández Martínez v. Spain, no. 56030/07, § 80, 15 May 2012.

¹¹⁷ Jehovah's Witnesses of Moscow v. Russia, no. 302/02, § 116, 10 June 2010.

¹¹⁸ Ibid., § 121.

¹¹⁹ Ibid., § 118.

¹²⁰ Ibid.

¹²¹ Ibid., § 144.

Worship, teaching, practice, and observance

The Convention organs have recognized many 'aspects of the practice of a religion or belief in a generally recognised form'¹²² by which individuals may manifest their beliefs including the reading of sacred texts,¹²³ assembling with others for a service of worship,¹²⁴ participation in the life of the community,¹²⁵ proselytizing,¹²⁶ wearing specific clothes,¹²⁷ respecting dietary restrictions,¹²⁸ and the consumption of hallucinogenic drugs.¹²⁹ Respect for the freedom to practice religion cannot provide the State with a pretext to avoid ensuring the protection of fundamental rights, however. When the Polish government attempted to justify its failure to provide access to abortion where this was governed by law for the reason that physicians refused to provide the service on the grounds of conscience, the Court recalled that 'the word "practice" used in Article 9 § 1 does not denote each and every act or form of behaviour motivated or inspired by a religion or a belief... States are obliged to organise their health service system in such a way as to ensure that the effective exercise of freedom of conscience by health professionals in a professional context does not prevent patients from obtaining access to services to which they are entitled under the applicable legislation.'¹³⁰

The term 'teaching' in article 9(1) implies 'in principle the right to try to convince one's neighbour'.¹³¹ It certainly goes beyond the restrictive notion, proposed by a dissenting judge, that 'the term "teaching" in Article 9 (art. 9) undoubtedly refers to religious teaching in school curricula or in religious institutions, and not to personal door-to-door canvassing'.¹³² The word 'teaching' is certainly used in a more narrow school classroom sense in article 2 of Protocol No. 1.

The enumeration of the four forms of manifesting religion indicates that the freedom is not unlimited. Indeed, not every act that may be inspired, motivated, or influenced by religion or belief can be taken as a 'manifestation' in the sense of article 9(1).¹³³ Acts or omissions that do not directly express the belief concerned or which are only remotely connected to a precept of faith are excluded from the scope of article 9(1).¹³⁴

¹²² Kuznetsov and Others v. Russia, no. 184/02, § 57, 11 January 2007; Kalaç v. Turkey, 1 July 1997, § 27, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-IV.

¹²³ Kuznetsov and Others v. Russia, no. 184/02, § 57, 11 January 2007.

¹²⁴ Barankevich v. Russia, no. 10519/03, § 20, 26 July 2007.

¹²⁵ Supreme Holy Council of the Muslim Community v. Bulgaria, no. 39023/97, § 73, 16 December 2004.

¹²⁶ Kokkinakis v. Greece, 25 May 1993, § 36, Series A no. 260-A.

¹²⁷ Leyla Şahin v. Turkey [GC], no. 44774/98, § 78, ECHR 2005-XI; Phull v. France (dec.), no. 35753/03, 11 January 2005; Ahmet Arslan and Others v. Turkey, no. 41135/98, § 35, 23 February 2010.

¹²⁸ Cha'are Shalom Ve Tsedek v. France [GC], no. 27417/95, § 73, ECHR 2000-VII; Jakobski v. Poland, no. 18429/06, § 44, 7 December 2010.

¹²⁹ Alida Maria Fränklin-Beentjes and CEFLU-Luz da Floresta v. the Netherlands (dec.), no. 28167/07, 6 May 2014.

¹³⁰ P. and S. v. Poland, no. 57375/08, § 106, 30 October 2012. Also R.R. v. Poland, no. 27617/04, § 206, ECHR 2011 (extracts).

¹³¹ Kokkinakis v. Greece, 25 May 1993, § 31, Series A no. 260-A; Ivanova v. Bulgaria, no. 52435/99, § 78, 12 April 2007; Larisis and Others v. Greece, 24 February 1998, § 45, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-I; Jehovah's Witnesses of Moscow v. Russia, no. 302/02, § 139, 10 June 2010.

¹³² Kokkinakis v. Greece, 25 May 1993, Dissenting Opinion of Judge Valtikos, Series A no. 260-A.

¹³³ Eweida and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 48420/10, § 82, ECHR 2013 (extracts); Kalaç v. Turkey, 1 July 1997, § 27, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-IV; Kosteski v. 'the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia', no. 55170/00, § 37, 13 April 2006.

¹³⁴ Skugar and Others v. Russia (dec.), no. 40010/04, 3 December 2009; Arrowsmith v. the United Kingdom, no. 7050/75, Commission report of 12 October 1978, DR 19, p. 5; C. v. the United Kingdom, no. 10358/83,

The Convention organs have refused to recognize many practices that were allegedly motivated by religion or belief, such as having one's ashes scattered on one's own land,¹³⁵ putting a photograph on a graveyard memorial,¹³⁶ giving a specific name to a child,¹³⁷ an exemption from a general prohibition on divorce,¹³⁸ assisted suicide,¹³⁹ mandatory participation in a school parade,¹⁴⁰ a refusal of pharmacists to sell contraceptive pills,¹⁴¹ and a refusal to have a tax number because it had a pejorative religious connotation.¹⁴²

Interference with freedom to manifest religion or belief

Freedom to manifest religion often involves conflicts between employers and their employees with respect to working conditions and conduct in the workplace. All European States recognize various public holidays or rest days; indeed, the right to rest and leisure is required by article 24 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and a score of other international human rights and specialized labour instruments. The European Social Charter acknowledges the role of 'tradition or custom in the country or region concerned' in setting rest days.¹⁴³ But in a pluralist Europe, not everyone shares the same 'traditions or customs'.

The Convention organs have held that article 9 does not protect a public servant who is a member of the Seventh-day Adventist Church from being dismissed for refusing to work after sunset on Friday in accordance with requirements of religious observance.¹⁴⁴ Similarly, a private-sector employee who objected to working on Sundays could not avail of article 9.¹⁴⁵ Nor did article 9 protect a Jewish lawyer who was refused adjournment of a case because the hearing conflicted with Yom Kippur.¹⁴⁶ In concluding there was no infringement on the right to manifest religion, the Court explained that it was not disputed that the lawyer was able to perform his religious duties. It said he could have expected his request for an adjournment would be refused and arranged be represented at the hearing so as to comply with his professional obligations.¹⁴⁷

The Convention organs have generally viewed measures taken against employees in such circumstances to be based not on their religious beliefs but rather justified by the specific contractual obligations between the persons concerned and their respective employers. But in one case, the dismissal of an employee was preceded by an attempt of government employees to convince her to abandon her affiliation with a Christian evangelical group known as the Word of Life. This was associated with a more Commission decision of 15 December 1983, DR 37, p. 142; Zaoui v. Switzerland (dec.), no. 41615/98, 18 January 2001.

¹³⁵ X v. Federal Republic of Germany, no. 8741/79, Commission decision of 10 March 1981, 24, p. 137.

¹³⁶ Jones v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 42639/04, 13 September 2005.

¹³⁷ Salonen v. Finland, no. 27868/95, Commission decision of 2 July 1997.

¹³⁸ Johnston and Others v. Ireland, 18 December 1986, § 63, Series A no. 112.

¹³⁹ Pretty v. the United Kingdom, no. 2346/02, § 82, ECHR 2002-III.

¹⁴⁰ Valsamis v. Greece and Efstratiou v. Greece, 18 December 1996, § 37, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-VI.

¹⁴¹ Pichon and Sajous v. France (dec.), no. 49853/99, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 2001-X.

¹⁴² Skugar and Others v. Russia (dec.), no. 40010/04, 3 December 2009.

¹⁴³ European Social Charter, ETS 35, art. 2(5).

¹⁴⁴ Konstinen v. Finland, no. 24949/94, Commission decision of 3 December 1996, (1997) 40 YB 94, DR 87-A, p. 68.

¹⁴⁵ Stedman v. the United Kingdom, no. 29107/95, Commission decision of 9 April 1997, DR 89-A, p. 104.

¹⁴⁶ Francesco Sessa v. Italy, no. 28790/08, § 35, ECHR 2012 (extracts).

¹⁴⁷ Ibid., § 37.

widespread policy of intolerance towards the religion that included the breaking up of meetings and the dismissal of the former principal of the school because she was alleged to have tacitly approved of religious activities in the school.¹⁴⁸

In the field of education, the Court considers that article 2 of Protocol No. 1, which deals with the rights of parents in the choice of schools for their children, is the lex specialis of article 9. At least, that should be the approach if 'the dispute concerns the obligation laid on Contracting States by the second sentence of Article 2 to respect, when exercising the functions they assume in that area, the right of parents to ensure such education and teaching in conformity with their own religious and philosophical convictions'.¹⁴⁹ Thus, in cases concerning religion and education, it prefers to premise the analysis primarily on article 2 of Protocol No. 1. In the Italian case concerning the crucifix in the classroom, the Court concluded there had been no violation of article 2 and that no separate issue arose under article 9.¹⁵⁰

Article 4(3)(b) of the Convention, concerning slavery and servitude, states that the term 'forced or compulsory labour' shall not include 'any service of a military character or, in case of conscientious objectors in countries where they are recognised, service exacted instead of compulsory military service'. The term 'conscientious objector' also evokes the word conscience in article 9(1). As early as 1967, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe affirmed a right of conscientious objection to military service, explicitly associating this with article 9 of the European Convention on Human Rights;

1. Persons liable to conscription for military service who, for reasons of conscience or profound conviction arising from religious, ethical, moral, humanitarian, philosophical or similar motives, refuse to perform armed service shall enjoy a personal right to be released from the obligation to perform such service.
2. This right shall be regarded as deriving logically from the fundamental rights of the individual in democratic Rule of Law States which are guaranteed in Article 9 of the European Convention on Human Rights.¹⁵¹

A formal right to conscientious objection is recognized in article 10(2) of the European Union Charter of Fundamental Rights within the freedom of belief, conscience, and religion provision: '2. The right to conscientious objection is recognised, in accordance with the national laws governing the exercise of this right.'¹⁵² This addition to a text that is clearly inspired by article 9(1) of the European Convention 'reflects the unanimous recognition of the right to conscientious objection by the member States of the European Union, as well as the weight attached to that right in modern European society'.¹⁵³

In early cases filed by conscientious objectors, the European Commission of Human Rights took the view that a right to conscientious objection could not be sustained precisely because the matter was dealt with in article 4.¹⁵⁴ This was similar to the position

¹⁴⁸ Ivanova v. Bulgaria, no. 52435/99, §§ 84–85, 12 April 2007.

¹⁴⁹ Lausi and Others v. Italy [GC], no. 30814/06, § 58, ECHR 2011 (extracts); Folgers and Others v. Norway [GC], no. 15472/02, § 84, ECHR 2007-VIII, § 84.

¹⁵⁰ Lausi and Others v. Italy [GC], no. 30814/06, § 77, ECHR 2011.

¹⁵¹ Resolution 337 (1967) on the right of conscientious objection.

¹⁵² Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, 2010 OJ C 83/02, art. 10;(2).

¹⁵³ Bayatyan v. Armenia [GC], no. 23459/03, § 106, ECHR 2011.

¹⁵⁴ Grandrath v. Federal Republic of Germany, no. 2299/64, Commission report of 12 December 1966, (1967) 10 YB 630. Similarly X v. Austria, no. 5591/72, Commission decision of 2 April 1973, Collection 43, p. 161; X v. Federal Republic of Germany, no. 7705/76, Commission decision of 5 July 1977, DR 9, p. 196;

taken with respect to capital punishment by which it could not be challenged under article 3 of the Convention given the explicit recognition of its permissibility under article 2.¹⁵⁵ Revisiting this case law, the Grand Chamber referred to the travaux préparatoires to confirm its impression that 'the sole purpose of sub-paragraph (b) of Article 4 § 3 is to provide a further elucidation of the notion "forced or compulsory labour". In itself it neither recognises nor excludes a right to conscientious objection and should therefore not have a delimiting effect on the rights guaranteed by Article 9'.¹⁵⁶ The Grand Chamber took the view that the refusal of a Jehovah's Witness in Armenia to report for military service upon being conscripted amounted to a manifestation of religion or belief.¹⁵⁷ The Court concluded that 'opposition to military service, where it is motivated by a serious and insurmountable conflict between the obligation to serve in the army and a person's conscience or his deeply and genuinely held religious or other beliefs, constitutes a conviction or belief of sufficient cogency, seriousness, cohesion and importance to attract the guarantees of Article 9'.¹⁵⁸ Since the Bayatyan case, the Court has held that although many conscientious objectors invoke religious beliefs, there is no reason why the right cannot also protect an individual with pacifist views or other beliefs that make military service unacceptable.¹⁵⁹

The Convention organs were for many years quite reluctant to allow article 9 to be applied in cases relating to immigration, deportation, and expulsion. The European Commission, in a case involving Swami Omkarananda, the leader of a sect known as the Divine Light Zentrum, explained that article 9 'does not in itself grant a right for an alien to stay in a given country'. While acknowledging that the expulsion was 'likely to deeply shake' the organization, the Commission held that there could be no interference with article 9 'unless it can be established that the measure was designed to repress the exercise of such rights and stifle the spreading of the religion or philosophy of the followers'.¹⁶⁰ In another case, the Commission stated that 'freedom of religion does not as such encompass the right to a residence permit for the purposes of taking employment, even if the employer is a religious association'.¹⁶¹ More recently, the Court has been inclined to conclude that there is an interference with article 9 in such cases. In a Latvian case involving the American pastor of an evangelical Christian group known as Morning Star International, the Court concluded that the refusal to renew a residence permit did indeed constitute an interference with article 9.¹⁶² It adopted a similar view in a Russian case.¹⁶³ In a case Conscientious objectors v. Denmark, no. 7565/76, Commission decision of 7 March 1977, DR 9, p. 117; A. v. Switzerland, no. 10640/83, Commission decision of 9 May 1984, DR 38, p. 219; N. v. Sweden, no. 10410/83, Commission decision of 11 October 1984, DR 40, p. 203.

¹⁵⁵ See, for example, Soering v. the United Kingdom, 7 July 1989, § 102, Series A no. 161.

¹⁵⁶ Bayatyan v. Armenia [GC], no. 23459/03, § 100, ECHR 2011.

¹⁵⁷ Ibid., § 102.

¹⁵⁸ Ibid., § 110.

¹⁵⁹ Savda v. Turkey, no. 42730/05, § 96, 12 June 2012.

¹⁶⁰ Swami Omkarananda and the Divine Light Zentrum v. Switzerland, no. 8118/77, Commission decision of 19 March 1981, DR 25, p. 105.

¹⁶¹ Oz v. Germany, no. 32168/96, Commission decision of 3 December 1996. See also El Majaoui and Stichting Touba Moskee v. the Netherlands (striking out) [GC], no. 25525/03, Joint Dissenting Opinion of Judges Zupančič, Zagrebelsky, and Myjer, § 2, 20 December 2007; Eweida and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 48420/10, Joint Partly Dissenting Opinion of Judges Bratza and David Thór Björgvinsson, § 2, ECHR 2013 (extracts).

¹⁶² Perry v. Latvia, no. 30273/03, § 56, 8 November 2007.

¹⁶³ Nolan and K. v. Russia, no. 2512/04, § 62, 12 February 2009.

involving a Muslim fundamentalist who was being deported from Bulgaria, the Court found a violation of the right to family life, and said that it was unnecessary to pronounce itself on the article 9 issue.¹⁶⁴ Another Bulgarian case concerning the expulsion of Jehovah's Witnesses was declared admissible.¹⁶⁵

The Court considered the case of a prisoner serving a lengthy sentence who insisted upon being provided a vegetarian diet, in compliance with his religious beliefs. The authorities had refused this saying that the cost would be excessive, given that only one prisoner was involved. The Court did not find the explanation very convincing and held that article 9(1) had been violated.¹⁶⁶

Limitations (art. 9(2))

Article 9 is one of four provisions of the European Convention with a restrictions or limitations clause. Paragraph 2 of article 9 states: 'Freedom to manifest one's religion or beliefs shall be subject only to such limitations as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society in the interests of public safety, for the protection of public order, health or morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others.' There are similar but not identical clauses in articles 8, 10, and 11. Comparable texts are also used with respect to some of the provisions in the Protocols: article 1 of Protocol No. 1 (protection of property); article 2(3) of Protocol No. 4 (freedom of movement); and article 2(2) of Protocol No. 7 (right of appeal in criminal matters). The Convention organs have developed a flexible methodology for the interpretation and application of paragraph 2 in determining whether or not the interference with a right set out in the first paragraph of articles 8, 9, 10, and 11 is actually in breach of the Convention.

The ancestor of the four provisions is article 29(2) of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights: 'In the exercise of his rights and freedoms, everyone shall be subject only to such limitations as are determined by law solely for the purpose of securing due recognition and respect for the rights and freedoms of others and of meeting the just requirements of morality, public order and the general welfare in a democratic society.' The limitation clause in the Universal Declaration applies generally to all rights set out in the instrument, whereas the specific clauses of this nature in the European Convention, of which article 9(2) is an example, are tailored to the right at issue. A provision comparable in content to article 9(2) appears in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

Prescribed by law

It is a preliminary condition for any restriction upon the rights set out in article 9(1) that the measure be 'prescribed by law'. The interference must, of course, be authorized by a rule recognized in the national legal order. This encompasses 'written law', including various forms of delegated legislation, and unwritten law as interpreted and applied by the courts.¹⁶⁷ But there is also a qualitative requirement for the legal rule. It must be accessible and foreseeable. There may be higher expectations in applying the condition depending ¹⁶⁴ Al-Nashif v. Bulgaria, no. 50963/99, § 142, 20 June 2002.

¹⁶⁵ Lotter and Lotter v. Bulgaria (dec.), no. 39015/97, 6 February 2003.

¹⁶⁶ Jakóbkí v. Poland, no. 18429/06, §§ 52–55, 7 December 2010.

¹⁶⁷ Leyla Şahin v. Turkey [GC], no. 44774/98, § 88, ECHR 2005-XI; Sanoma Uitgevers B.V. v. the Netherlands [GC], no. 38224/03, § 83, 14 September 2010.

upon the individuals involved, in light of their training, professional activity, and experience. It may be reasonable to expect them to obtain expert advice on the law depending upon the circumstances. The law must also be subject to mechanisms so that it can be applied in a manner that is genuine and not arbitrary. If the law grants discretion to public authorities, it must be framed with sufficient clarity and specify the manner in which it is to be exercised.¹⁶⁸ The Court is not prescriptive in this respect, acknowledging that States have a 'margin of appreciation' in deciding upon the legal mechanisms by which they limit or restrict the rights set out in the Convention. In effect, the words 'prescribed by law' refer to the broad, general notion of the 'rule of law'.

Accordingly, the domestic law must provide protection against arbitrary interference by the authorities with rights that are enshrined in the Convention. This is fundamental to the rule of law, a seminal concept that is basic to democratic governance. If the law grants discretion to public authorities, it must be framed with sufficient clarity and specify the manner in which it is to be exercised.¹⁶⁹

Where authorities essentially broke up a meeting being held by Jehovah's Witnesses, the Court noted that 'the legal basis for breaking up a religious event conducted on the premises lawfully rented for that purpose was conspicuously lacking' and held that there had been a violation of the Convention because the interference was not prescribed by law.¹⁷⁰ An application directed against Turkey involved the conviction of two persons for 'la propagande en faveur d'une organisation terroriste'. The applicants had organized a memorial ceremony on behalf of members of a terrorist organization who had been killed in action. The Court found the charge of 'propaganda' was not sufficiently precise. As a result, the requirement that the restriction be 'prescribed by law' was not met and there was a violation of article 9.¹⁷¹

Legitimate purpose

The second component of the analysis is the existence of a legitimate purpose or aim. The inquiry involves the enumeration of purposes set out in paragraph 2, namely the interests of public safety, for the protection of public order, health, or morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others. These exceptions to freedom of religion are to be interpreted narrowly.¹⁷² Nevertheless, examples of violations of article 9(1) because of the failure of the State to put forward a plausible legal and factual justification for the interference are relatively isolated.¹⁷³ In practice, this part of the analysis is rarely very important. It is not uncommon for the Court to simply pass over the issue entirely and move to the heart of the debate, which takes place under the rubric of 'necessary in a democratic society', finding that it violates the final component of the test regardless of whether it fulfils a legitimate purpose.¹⁷⁴ The Grand Chamber has explained that it is the ¹⁶⁸ Hasan and Chaush v. Bulgaria [GC], no. 30985/96, § 84, ECHR 2000-XI; Maestri v. Italy [GC], no. 39748/98, § 30, ECHR 2004-I.

¹⁶⁹ Hasan and Chaush v. Bulgaria [GC], no. 30985/96, § 84, ECHR 2000-XI

¹⁷⁰ Kuznetsov and Others v. Russia, no. 184/02, § 74, 11 January 2007.

¹⁷¹ Güler and Uğur v. Turkey, nos 31706/10 33088/10, §§ 45–57, 2 December 2014.

¹⁷² Nolan and K. v. Russia, no. 2512/04, § 73, 12 February 2009; Svyato-Mykhaylivska Parafyia v. Ukraine, no. 77703/01, § 132, 14 June 2007.

¹⁷³ For example, Nolan and K. v. Russia, no. 2512/04, § 75, 12 February 2009.

¹⁷⁴ For example, Bayatyan v. Armenia [GC], no. 23459/03, § 117, ECHR 2011; Erçep v. Turkey, no. 43965/04, § 53, 22 November 2011.

Court's practice 'to be quite succinct when it verifies the existence of a legitimate aim within the meaning of the second paragraphs of Articles 8 to 11 of the Convention'.¹⁷⁵

In Leyla Şahin v. Turkey, for example, concerning the headscarf ban in public universities, the Grand Chamber made a perfunctory reference to 'public order' and 'the rights and freedoms of others', noting that this issue was not in dispute between the parties.¹⁷⁶ Similarly, a campaign by German government authorities against so-called sects was deemed to respond to the legitimate aim of the protection of public safety and public order and the protection of the rights and freedoms of others.¹⁷⁷ The same grounds were invoked in a case dealing with measures to deal with a leadership conflict in the Muslim community.¹⁷⁸ The rights and freedoms of others was also deemed to be a legitimate purpose in a case involving a lawyer's request to adjourn a hearing because it conflicted with a Jewish holiday. The Court referred to 'the public's right to the proper administration of justice and the principle that cases be heard within a reasonable time'.¹⁷⁹

In the French full-face veil or burqa case, the government invoked 'public safety' as well as 'respect for the minimum set of values of an open and democratic society'. France explained that the second ground was composed of three elements: respect for equality between men and women; respect for human dignity; and respect for the minimum requirements of life in society. After noting that this second ground was not expressly mentioned in article 9(2), the Grand Chamber proceeded to dismiss the elements of gender equality and human dignity. It attributed some credence to the third element, which it said could be associated with 'the rights and freedoms of others'. 'The Court is therefore able to accept that the barrier raised against others by a veil concealing the face is perceived by the respondent State as breaching the right of others to live in a space of socialisation which makes living together easier', the Grand Chamber concluded.¹⁸⁰

In contrast with the limitations clauses in articles 8, 10, and 11, article 9(2) does not recognize 'national security' as a legitimate purpose for an interference with freedom to manifest religion or belief. According to the Court, this is '[f]ar from being an accidental omission'. The Court has explained that the non-inclusion of national security in article 9(2) 'reflects the primordial importance of religious pluralism as "one of the foundations of a 'democratic society' within the meaning of the Convention" and the fact that a State cannot dictate what a person believes or take coercive steps to make him change his beliefs'.¹⁸¹

Necessary in a democratic society

Most decisions concerning the application of article 9(2) to infringements of the right to manifest religion or belief involve assessing whether the impugned measure is 'necessary in a democratic society'. The objective is to consider whether the authorities have struck 'a fair balance between the competing interests of the individual and of society as ¹⁷⁵ S.A.S. v. France [GC], no. 43835/11, § 114, 1 July 2014.

¹⁷⁶ Leyla Şahin v. Turkey [GC], no. 44774/98, § 99, ECHR 2005-XI. Also Ahmet Arslan and Others v. Turkey, no. 41135/98, § 43, 23 February 2010; Karaduman v. Turkey, no. 16278/90, Commission decision of 3 May 1993, (1993) 36 YB 66, DR 74, p. 93; Dahlab v. Switzerland (dec.), no. 42393/98, ECHR 2001-V.

¹⁷⁷ Leela Förderkreis e.V. and Others v. Germany, no. 58911/00, § 94, 6 November 2008.

¹⁷⁸ Supreme Holy Council of the Muslim Community v. Bulgaria, no. 39023/97, § 92, 16 December 2004. Also Religionsgemeinschaft der Zeugen Jehovas and Others v. Austria, no. 40825/98, §§ 75–76, 31 July 2008.

¹⁷⁹ Francesco Sessa v. Italy, no. 28790/08, § 35, ECHR 2012 (extracts).

¹⁸⁰ S.A.S. v. France [GC], no. 43835/11, §§ 114–122, 1 July 2014.

¹⁸¹ Nolan and K. v. Russia, no. 2512/04, § 73, 12 February 2009.

a whole'.¹⁸² It is the most subjective part of the application of paragraph 2, involving subtle distinctions about the proportionality of measures taken by the State that limit or restrict human rights. There is an important relationship between 'necessity' and 'democratic society', of which the hallmarks are pluralism, tolerance, and broadmindedness.¹⁸³

The Court frequently begins its consideration of this element by questioning whether the interference responds to a 'pressing social need'. The term seems to be little more than a gloss on the word 'necessity'. It employs two other notions in this context, insisting that the measure in question be 'relevant and sufficient'. The interference must also respond to an assessment of its proportionality, something that involves balancing the right of the individual against the interest of the State and the society that it represents. Where the Court is considering the positive dimension of the right in question—in other words, the obligation upon the State to take measures to ensure enforcement of the right—it must usually consider the rights of others in the balance as well. If other less severe measures could have fulfilled the same objective, there will be a problem with proportionality.

Nevertheless, in applying the 'necessary in a democratic society' test, the Court will allow the State a margin of appreciation, recognizing that its role is not to sit as a tribunal of fourth instance and that it is in one sense not as well positioned as the national legal institutions to assess many of the relevant factors. Often, especially in sensitive matters that concern morality, ethics, and social policy, the Court refers to the practice in European jurisdictions in determining whether or not any consensus exists. Where there is none, the margin of appreciation will almost invariably be much greater. But although the national authorities make the initial assessment of necessity, 'the final evaluation as to whether the reasons cited for the interference are relevant and sufficient remains subject to review by the Court for conformity with the requirements of the Convention'.¹⁸⁴

Restrictions on religious activity may be necessary in democratic societies in which several religions coexist within one and the same population, so as to reconcile the interests of the various groups and ensure that everyone's beliefs are respected.¹⁸⁵ The Court has 'frequently emphasised the State's role as the neutral and impartial organiser of the exercise of various religions, faiths and beliefs, and stated that this role is conducive to public order, religious harmony and tolerance in a democratic society'.¹⁸⁶ Interference with the activities of religious organizations may be justified in order to protect 'key principles underlying the Convention' such as a prohibition on polygamous or underage marriage¹⁸⁷ and the use of force or coercive practices.¹⁸⁸ In a case where the employee of a private firm objected on religious grounds to providing counselling to homosexuals, the Court said that 'the most important factor to be taken into account is that the employer's action was intended to secure the implementation of its policy of providing a service

¹⁸² Keegan v. Ireland, 26 May 1994, § 49, Series A no. 290.

¹⁸³ Smith and Grady v. the United Kingdom, nos 33985/96 and 33986/96, § 87, ECHR 1999-VI; Vereinigung demokratischer Soldaten Österreichs and Gubi v. Austria, 19 December 1994, § 36, Series A no. 302; Dudgeon v. the United Kingdom, 22 October 1981, § 53, Series A no. 45.

¹⁸⁴ Szuluk v. the United Kingdom, no. 36936/05, § 45, ECHR 2009.

¹⁸⁵ Kokkinakis v. Greece, 25 May 1993, § 33, Series A no. 260-A.

¹⁸⁶ Refah Partisi (the Welfare Party) and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 41340/98, 41342/98, 41343/98, and 41344/98, §§ 90–95, ECHR 2003-II.

¹⁸⁷ Khan v. the United Kingdom, no. 11579/85, Commission decision of 7 July 1986, DR 48, p. 253; Kasymakhunov and Saybatalov v. Russia, nos 26261/05 and 26377/06, § 110, 14 March 2013.

¹⁸⁸ Jehovah's Witnesses of Moscow v. Russia, no. 302/02, § 119, 10 June 2010.

without discrimination. The State authorities therefore benefitted from a wide margin of appreciation in deciding where to strike the balance between Mr McFarlane's right to manifest his religious belief and the employer's interest in securing the rights of others.¹⁸⁹

There have been many cases concerning clothing, head-covering, and jewellery. These may also involve issues under the right to private life and article 8 of the Convention, although the Court has indicated a preference for dealing with such matters under article 9.¹⁹⁰ One factor is the degree to which clothing and jewellery are used to manifest religion or belief. Noting 'the value to an individual who has made religion a central tenet of his or her life to be able to communicate that belief to others', the Court upheld the right of an airline employee to wear a 'discrete' cross on a necklace in a context where other forms of religious manifestation, such as the wearing of a hidjab or headscarf, had been accommodated.¹⁹¹ It reached the opposite conclusion where the applicant was a nurse working in a public hospital and where there were safety concerns about the wearing of any chain or necklace.¹⁹² In fact, States often invoke concerns about health, safety, and security in justifying measures that limit wearing of clothing with religious significance. There is nevertheless the suspicion that restrictive measures are really directed at the manifestation of religion or belief, although it is not always simple, in practice, to establish this with clear evidence.

The turban, which Sikh men are required to wear, has resulted in several applications to the Convention organs, all of them dismissed. One concerned a requirement that all motorcycle drivers wear a protective helmet.¹⁹³ With respect to a rule by which the turban had to be removed for a driver's licence photo, the Court said that the measure was justifiable because of an increase in the risk of fraud and falsification of drivers' licences and that the implementation of such controls was within the State's margin of appreciation.¹⁹⁴ It declared manifestly unfounded an application by a Sikh who objected to removing his turban as part of the security control at a French airport.¹⁹⁵

Reasonable accommodation is a rich concept developed mainly within the context of equality law, principally as a way to address so-called 'indirect discrimination'. It is a way of addressing problems that arise where an ostensibly neutral rule or standard has a discriminatory effect upon an individual or group. It is also a way of confronting what amounts to intentional discrimination that is concealed behind apparently neutral rules, such as a height requirement for certain jobs which unduly excludes women, or strict rules about working hours and working days that exclude members of religious minorities. Flexibility must be shown in attempting to accommodate the differences so as to minimize the discriminatory effect. In a dissenting opinion in a case involving religious holidays, Judges Tulkens, Popović and Keller argued that 'reasonable accommodation' should be considered within the proportionality determination. 'By dint of a few concessions, this would have made it possible to avoid interfering with the applicant's religious ¹⁸⁹ Eweida and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 48420/10, § 109, ECHR 2013 (extracts).

¹⁹⁰ S.A.S. v. France [GC], no. 43835/11, § 109, 1 July 2014.

¹⁹¹ Eweida and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 48420/10, § 94, ECHR 2013 (extracts).

¹⁹² Ibid., § 99 (extracts).

¹⁹³ X v. the United Kingdom, no. 7992/77, Commission decision of 12 July 1978, DR 14, p. 234.

¹⁹⁴ Shingara Mann Singh v. France (dec.), no. 24479/07, 13 November 2008.

¹⁹⁵ Phull v. France (dec.), no. 35753/03, 11 January 2005. Also El Morsli v. France (dec.), no. 15585/06, 4 March 2008.

freedom without compromising the achievement of the clearly legitimate aim of ensuring the proper administration of justice', they wrote.¹⁹⁶

Frequently, the Court makes a 'reasonable accommodation' determination without actually using the expression. For example, dealing with the demand of a Polish prisoner who was a Buddhist and who insisted upon a vegetarian diet, the Court said it was 'not persuaded that the provision of a vegetarian diet to the applicant would have entailed any disruption to the management of the prison or to any decline in the standards of meals served to other prisoners'.¹⁹⁷

Discrimination

Protection against discrimination based upon religion or membership in a religious group is quite central to recognition and enforcement of this fundamental right. In that sense, article 9 is related to article 14 in a special way, unlike the cognate provisions dealing with privacy, expression, assembly, and association in articles 8, 10, and 11. A reaction to discrimination against and persecution of a religious group was central to the political impetus for the creation of the Council of Europe and the adoption of the European Convention on Human Rights.

Many applicants before the European Court have invoked article 14 in conjunction with article 9. As a general rule, the Court has chosen to examine the complaints under article 9 first. Ruling that there has been a breach of article 9, it then notes the subsidiary dimension of article 14 and concludes that there is no need for a separate examination under that provision.¹⁹⁸ However, occasionally there are distinctly different issues relating specifically to article 14 and justifying a separate treatment. Recently, the Court has opted to consider the violation of article 9 in conjunction with article 14 before looking at the stand-alone issue of a violation of article 9.¹⁹⁹

In a case involving the exceedingly prolonged waiting period for recognition of legal-entity status of a Jehovah's Witness community, which resulted in a finding that article 9 had been breached, the Court also considered the subsequent recognition of the community from the perspective of article 14 in conjunction with article 9. The community alleged that the status it was granted was allegedly limited and insufficient, putting it at a disadvantage vis-à-vis other religious communities. The Austrian system did not treat all religious communities in the same way. It distinguished between 'religious societies' and 'religious communities', the latter being subject to more severe State control in terms of religious doctrine, membership rules, and administration of their assets. The Court insisted that because article 9 requires State authorities to remain neutral in the regulation of religious organisations, 'if a State sets up a framework for conferring legal personality on religious groups to which a specific status is linked, all religious groups which so wish must have a fair opportunity to apply for this status and the criteria established must be applied ¹⁹⁶ Francesco Sessa v. Italy, no. 28790/08, Joint Dissenting Opinion of Judges Tulkens, Popović and Keller, § 10, ECHR 2012 (extracts).

¹⁹⁷ Jakóbski v. Poland, no. 18429/06, § 52, 7 December 2010.

¹⁹⁸ Ivanova v. Bulgaria, no. 52435/99, § 92, 12 April 2007; Jakóbski v. Poland, no. 18429/06, § 59, 7 December 2010; Metropolitan Church of Bessarabia and Others v. Moldova, no. 45701/99, § 134, ECHR 2001-XII; Sidiropoulos and Others v. Greece, 10 July 1998, § 52, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-IV; Nolan and K. v. Russia, no. 2512/04, § 79, 12 February 2009; Lausi and Others v. Italy [GC], no. 30814/06, § 81, ECHR 2011 (extracts).

¹⁹⁹ Cumhuriyetçi Eğitim Ve Kültür Merkezi Vakfı v. Turkey, no. 32093/10, §§ 53–54, 2 December 2014.

in a non-discriminatory manner'.²⁰⁰ In the Austrian case, a ten-year waiting period had been imposed upon the Jehovah's Witnesses before they could be considered for religious society status. According to the Court, such a period might be necessary in exceptional circumstances such as would be in the case of newly established and unknown religious groups. But it hardly appears justified in respect of religious groups with a long-standing existence internationally which are also long established in the country and therefore familiar to the competent authorities, as is the case with the Jehovah's Witnesses. In respect of such a religious group, the authorities should be able to verify whether it fulfils the requirements of the relevant legislation within a considerably shorter period. Further, the example of another religious community cited by the applicants shows that the Austrian State did not consider the application on an equal basis of such a waiting period to be an essential instrument for pursuing its policy in that field.²⁰¹

There was, consequently, a violation of article 14 in conjunction with article 9.

Reservations and declarations

Norway formulated the following reservation: 'L'article 2 de la Constitution de la Norvège du 17 mai 1814 contenant une disposition selon laquelle les Jésuites ne sont pas tolérés, une réserve correspondante est faite en ce qui concerne l'application de l'article 9 de la Convention.'²⁰² On 4 December 1956, Norway informed the Secretary General of the Council of Europe that as a result of the repeal of the constitutional provision, a Royal Decree of 30 November 1956 had revoked the reservation to the Convention.²⁰³

Further reading

- Benjamin Bleiberg, 'Unveiling the Real Issue: Evaluating the European Court of Human Rights' Decision to Enforce the Turkish Headscarf Ban in Leyla Sahin v. Turkey', (2005–2006) 91 Cornell Law Review 129.
- Christiane Bourloyannis-Vrailas, 'European Court of Human Rights: Lautsi and Others v. Italy, Introductory Note', (2011) 50 International Legal Materials 894.
- Kevin Boyle and Anneliese Baldaccini, 'A Critical Evaluation of International Human Rights Approaches to Racism', in Sandra Fredman, ed., Discrimination and Human Rights the Case of Racism, Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2001, pp. 135–91.
- Nicolas Bratza, 'The "Precious Asset": Freedom of Religion under the European Convention on Human Rights', (2012) 14 Ecclesiastical Law Journal 256.
- Zachary R. Calo, 'Pluralism, Secularism and the European Court of Human Rights', (2010) 26 Journal of Law and Religion 101.
- Nusrat Choudhury, 'From the Stasi Commission to the European Court of Human Rights: L'Affaire du Foulard and the Challenge of Protecting the Rights of Muslim Girls', (2007) 16 Columbia Journal of Gender & Law 199.
- Vincent Coussirat-Couxtere, 'Article 9§2', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 361–3.
- Peter Cumper, 'Article 9: Freedom of Religion', in Harris et al., eds., Law of the European Convention, pp. 425–42.

²⁰⁰ Religionsgemeinschaft der Zeugen Jehovas and Others v. Austria, no. 40825/98, § 92, 31 July 2008.

²⁰¹ Ibid., § 98.

²⁰² (1955–56–57) 1 YB 41.

²⁰³ Ibid., p. 42.

- Peter W. Edge, 'The European Court of Human Rights and Religious Rights', (1998) 47 ICLQ 680.
- Carolyn Evans, Freedom of Religion Under the European Convention on Human Rights, Oxford: Oxford University Press 2001.
- Carolyn Evans, 'The Islamic Scarf in the European Court of Human Rights', (2006) 7 Melbourne Journal of International Law 52.
- M.D. Evans, Religious Liberty and International Law in Europe, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1997.
- Jochen Abr. Frowein, 'Article 9§1', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 353–60.
- Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 318–38.
- Nicholas Gibson, 'An Unwelcome Trend: Religious Dress and Human Rights Following Leila Sahin vs Turkey', (2007) 25 Netherlands Quarterly of Human Rights 599.
- Grabenwarter, European Convention, pp. 234–50.
- T.J. Gunn, 'Adjudicating Rights of Conscience under the European Convention on Human Rights', in Johan D. Van der Vyver and John Witte, eds, Religious Human Rights in Global Perspective: Legal Perspectives, The Hague: Martinus Nijhoff, 1996, pp. 305–30.
- Erica Howard, 'Bans on the Wearing of Religious Symbols in British Schools: A Violation of the Right to Non-Discrimination?', (2011) 6 Religion and Human Rights 127.
- Renée Koering-Joulin, 'Public Morals', in Mireille Delmas-Marty, ed., The European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights, Dordrecht/Boston/London: Martinus Nijhoff, 1992, pp. 83–98.
- Yannis Kristakis, 'The Protection of forum internum under Article 9 of the ECHR', in Dean Spielmann, Marialena Tsirli, and Panayotis Voyatzis, eds, La Convention européenne des droits de l'homme, un instrument vivant, Mélanges en l'honneur de Christos L. Rozakis, Brussels: Bruylant, 2011, pp. 285–304.
- Sylvie Langlaude, 'Indoctrination, Secularism, Religious Liberty, and the ECHR', (2006) 55 ICLQ 929.
- Ian Leigh, 'Balancing Religious Autonomy and Other Human Rights under the European Convention', (2012) 1 Oxford Journal of Law and Religion 109.
- Tom Lewis, 'What not to Wear: Religious Rights, the European Court, and the Margin of Appreciation', (2007) 56 ICLQ 395.
- Titia Loenen, 'The Headscarf Debate Approaching the Intersection of Sex, Religion and Race under the European Convention on Human Rights and EU Equality Law', in Dagmar Schiek and Victoria Chege, eds, European Non-Discrimination Law Comparative Perspectives on Multi-dimensional Equality Law, London/New York: Routledge 2009, pp. 313–27.
- Loukis G. Loucaides, 'The Right to Freedom of Thought as Protected by the European Convention on Human Rights', (2012) 1 Cyprus Human Rights Law Review 79.
- Jill Marshall, 'Freedom of Religious Expression and Gender Equality: Sahin v. Turkey', (2006) 69 Modern Law Review 460.
- Javier Martínez-Torrón, 'Limitations on Religious Freedom in the Case Law of the European Court of Human Rights', (2005) 19 Emory International Law Review 587.
- Dominic McGoldrick, Human Rights and Religion: The Islamic Headscarf Debate in Europe, Oxford/Portland: Hart Publishing, 2006.
- Dominic McGoldrick, 'Religion in the Public Square and in European Public Life—Crucifixes in the Classroom?', (2011) 11 HRLR 451.
- Ovey/White, Jacobs and White, European Convention, pp. 264–75.
- Carlo Panara, 'Lausi v Italy. The Display of Religious Symbols by the State', (2011) 17 European Public Law 139.
- Megan Pearson, 'Article 9 at a Crossroads: Interference Before and After Eweida', (2013) 13 HRLR 580.
- Ted Stahnke, 'Proselytism and Freedom to Change Religion in International Human Rights Law', [1999] Brigham Young University Law Review 251.

- James Sweeney, 'Freedom of Religion and Democratic Transition', in Antoine Buyse and Michael Hamilton, eds, Transitional Jurisprudence and the ECHR, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2011, pp. 103–30.
- Paul M. Taylor, Freedom of Religion: UN and European Human Rights Law and Practice, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2005.
- Anastasia Vakulenko, '“Islamic Headscarves” and the European Convention On Human Rights: an Intersectional Perspective', (2007) 16 Social Legal Studies 183.
- Ben Vermeulen, 'Freedom of Thought, Conscience and Religion (Article 9)', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 751–71.
- Lucy Vickers, 'Freedom of Religion and Belief, Article 9 ECHR and the EU Equality Directive', in Filip Dorssemont, Klaus Lörcher, and Isabelle Schömann, eds, The European Convention on Human Rights and the Employment Relation, Oxford / Portland, OR: Hart, 2013, pp. 209–236.

Article 10. Freedom of expression/Liberté d'expression

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of expression. This right shall include freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart information and ideas without interference by public authority and regardless of frontiers. This article shall not prevent States from requiring the licensing of broadcasting, television or cinema enterprises.

2. The exercise of these freedoms, since it carries with it duties and responsibilities, may be subject to such formalities, conditions, restrictions or penalties as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society, in the interests of national security, territorial integrity or public safety, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, for the protection of the reputation or rights of others, for preventing the disclosure of information received in confidence, or for maintaining the authority and impartiality of the judiciary.

1. Toute personne a droit à la liberté d'expression. Ce droit comprend la liberté d'opinion et la liberté de recevoir ou de communiquer des informations ou des idées sans qu'il puisse y avoir ingérence d'autorités publiques et sans considération de frontière. Le présent article n'empêche pas les États de soumettre les entreprises de radiodiffusion, de cinéma ou de télévision à un régime d'autorisations.

2. L'exercice de ces libertés comportant des devoirs et des responsabilités peut être soumis à certaines formalités, conditions, restrictions ou sanctions, prévues par la loi, qui constituent des mesures nécessaires, dans une société démocratique, à la sécurité nationale, à l'intégrité territoriale ou à la sûreté publique, à la défense de l'ordre et à la prévention du crime, à la protection de la santé ou de la morale, à la protection de la réputation ou des droits d'autrui, pour empêcher la divulgation d'informations confidentielles ou pour garantir l'autorité et l'impartialité du pouvoir judiciaire.

Introductory comments

'Give me the liberty to know, to utter, and to argue freely according to conscience, above all liberties', wrote John Milton in the Areopagitica, his challenge to attempts in Parliament to require the licensing of printers and thereby State control of free speech. He was writing at the height of the English revolution, of which he was a supporter. The importance of freedom of expression echoed through the writings of the Enlightenment thinkers such as Voltaire, Locke, and Diderot.

The right also featured in the early codifications of human rights. For example, the English Bill of Rights of 1688 declared: 'That the freedom of speech and debates or proceedings in Parliament ought not to be impeached or questioned in any court or place out of Parliament.' The pre-eminence of freedom of expression can also be seen in the French Déclaration des droits de l'homme et du citoyen, adopted at the same time as the United States Constitution, where '[l]a libre communication des pensées et des opinions' is described as 'un des droits les plus précieux de l'Homme'. The first amendment to the United States Constitution declares that 'Congress shall make no law... abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press.'

The first of Franklin D. Roosevelt's 'four essential freedoms', proclaimed in his 1941 State of the Union Address at the dawn of modern human rights law, was 'freedom of speech and expression—everywhere in the world'. Article 19 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights affirms 'Everyone has the right to freedom of opinion and expression; this right includes freedom to hold opinions without interference and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media and regardless of frontiers.' It was the inspiration for the text of article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights, to which it bears a very close resemblance. Article 10(1) adds a second sentence dealing with licensing and article 10(2) sets out the permissible limitations on freedom of expression in a text modelled on article 29(1) of the European Convention on Human Rights.

The association between free speech and political democracy has always been fundamental. The European Court has said that 'freedom of expression constitutes one of the essential foundations of a democratic society and one of the basic conditions for its progress and each individual's self-fulfilment'.¹ Yet in its implementation and enforcement, it remains a complex right, bedevilled with limitations and exceptions. Just as free speech seems essential to the survival of democracy, its abusive exercise may also threaten to destroy it. 'Militant democracy' calls for limits on those who use words to threaten the rule of law and promote fascism and totalitarianism. On very important aspects, such as the repression of so-called 'hate speech', views still vary greatly on the appropriate measures that may be justifiable in order to ensure respect for the rights and freedoms of others.

The corresponding provision in the European Union Charter of Fundamental Rights, article 11(1), is identical to the first sentence of article 10(1) of the European Convention. It is meant to have the same meaning and scope but 'without prejudice to any restrictions which Union law may impose on Member States' right to introduce the licensing arrangements referred to in the third sentence of Article 10(1) of the ECHR'.²

Drafting of the provision

The initial draft European Convention on Human Rights was prepared by the International Juridical Section of the European Movement, chaired by Pierre-Henri Teitgen, with David Maxwell Fyfe and Fernand Dehousse as rapporteurs. Both Maxwell Fyfe and Dehousse had been involved in the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights at the United Nations the previous year. The enumeration of rights in the draft contained the following: 'Every State a party to this Convention shall guarantee to all persons within its territory the following rights: ... d) Freedom of speech and of expression of opinion generally.'³ The European Movement draft also contained a restrictions or limitations clause, inspired by article 29 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights: 'The rights specified in Articles 1 and 2 shall be subject only to such limitations as are in conformity with the general principles of law recognised by civilised nations and as are prescribed by law for: a) Protecting the legal rights of others; b) Meeting the just requirements of morality, public order (including the safety of the community), and the general welfare.'⁴

¹ Rekúényi v. Hungary [GC], no. 25390/94, § 42, ECHR 1999-III.

² Explanation Relating to the Charter of Fundamental Rights, Official Journal of the European Union, C 303/33, 14 December 2007.

³ Convention for the Collective Protection of Individual Rights and Democratic Liberties by the States, Members of the Council of Europe, and for the establishment of a European Court of Human Rights to ensure observance of the Convention, Doc. INF/5/E/R, I TP 296-303, at p. 296, art. I(d).

⁴ Convention for the Collective Protection of Individual Rights and Democratic Liberties by the States, Members of the Council of Europe, and for the establishment of a European Court of Human Rights to ensure observance of the Convention, Doc. INF/5/E/R, I TP 296-303, art. 3.

At the first session of Consultative Assembly of the Council of Europe, in August 1949, Teitgen called for adoption of a convention that would include 'freedom of speech and expression'.⁵ Asked to prepare a text for discussion in the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions at the first session of the Consultative Assembly, held from 22 August to 5 September 1949, Teitgen proposed the following: 'Freedom to hold opinions without interference and to express them in speech or writing.'⁶ Teitgen also submitted a text based upon article 29(2) of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. It is the forerunner of paragraph 2 of article 10: 'In the exercise of these rights, and in the enjoyment of the freedoms guaranteed by the Convention, no limitations will be imposed except those established with the sole object of ensuring recognition and respect for the rights and freedoms of others, or with the purpose of satisfying the just requirements of public morality, order and security and general welfare in a democratic society. These rights and freedoms may in no case be exercised contrary to the aims and principles of the Council of Europe.'⁷

At the 30 August 1949 meeting of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions, Teitgen proposed the following: 'The right not to be molested on account of his opinions and the freedom to express them by word of mouth and through the press'. The Committee preferred an alternative version, submitted by Henri Rolin of Belgium: 'Freedom of opinion and expression, in accordance with Article 19 of the Declaration of the United Nations'.⁸ It was changed slightly in the final report of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions to the plenary Consultative Assembly: 'Freedom of opinion and expression, in accordance with Article 19 of the United Nations Declaration.'⁹ There was no particular discussion in the Assembly and the text proposed by the Committee was adopted without debate.¹⁰ The restrictions or limitation clause, still then a general provision applicable to the entire draft convention, was somewhat altered by the Consultative Assembly: 'In the exercise of these rights, and in the enjoyment of the freedoms guaranteed by the Convention, no limitations shall be imposed except those established by law, with the sole object of ensuring the recognition and respect for the rights and freedoms of others, or with the purpose of satisfying the just requirement of public morality, order and security in a democratic society.' It was adopted without a vote after a short debate.¹¹

Following adoption of a draft convention by the Consultative Assembly, the Committee of Ministers decided to convene a Committee of Experts. In preparation for the Committee of Experts, the Secretariat-General of the Council of Europe prepared a report that discussed and compared the draft with the Covenant on human rights that was then

⁵ Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 19 August 1949], I TP 38-154, at p. 46.

⁶ Proposals by Mr P.H. Teitgen, Rapporteur, 29 August 1949, Doc. A 116, I TP 166-8. Also Report presented by Mr P.H. Teitgen, 5 September 1949, Doc. A 290, I TP 192-213, at p. 206. See also I TP 228.

⁷ Proposals by Mr P.H. Teitgen, Rapporteur, 29 August 1949, Doc. A 116, I TP 166-8. Also Report presented by Mr P.H. Teitgen, 5 September 1949, Doc. A 290, I TP 192-213, at p. 206. See also I TP 228.

⁸ Minutes of the Sitting [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions, Consultative Assembly, 30 August 1949], Doc. A 167, I TP 174-80, at p. 174.

⁹ Report [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions], 5 September 1949, Doc. AS (1) 77, I TP 216-39, at p. 228.

¹⁰ Recommendation No. 38 to the Committee of Ministers adopted 8 September 1949 on the conclusion of the debates, Doc. AS (1) 108, II TP 274-83, at p. 276.

¹¹ Official Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 8 September 1949], II TP 14-274, at pp. 134-42.

being considered by the United Nations Commission on Human Rights. It noted a text proposed by France to the Commission on Human Rights, explaining that while generally in accordance with article 19 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, it espoused a 'very broad notion' of information.¹² France had proposed the following: 'Every person shall be free to receive and disseminate information of all kinds, including facts, critical comment and ideas, by the medium of books, newspapers, oral instruction or in any other manner.'¹³ As the report noted, no definitive text had been agreed by the United Nations Commission on Human Rights. It had decided to wait for the results in the United Nations General Assembly on the Convention on Freedom of Information.¹⁴ The report also contained a comment from the United Kingdom prepared within the context of the United Nations debate, noting with approval the recommendation of the United Nations General Assembly that a provision on freedom of information be included in the Covenant. The United Kingdom said it supported 'wholeheartedly the proposal to enumerate the specific limitations on the right to freedom of information which are to be permitted'. The following was suggested:

1. Every person shall have the right to freedom of thought and the right to freedom of expression without governmental interference: these rights shall include freedom to hold opinions, to receive and impart information and ideas, without government interference, regardless of frontiers, either orally, in writing or in print, in the form of art, or by duly licensed visual or auditory devices.
2. The exercise of these freedoms carries with it duties and responsibility and may therefore be subject to certain penalties, liabilities and restrictions provided by law, which are necessary in the interests of national security, for prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of public safety, health or morals, for the protection of the reputations or rights of other persons, for preventing the disclosure of information received in confidence, or for maintaining the authority and impartiality of the judiciary.¹⁵

The Committee of Experts met in February and March 1950. Two Turkish experts, Cavat Ustun and Ilhan Lutem, tabled the following amendment: 'Freedom of opinion and expression, in accordance with Article 19 of the United Nations Declaration, to the extent that this can be reconciled with the principles set forth in paragraph 3 of the Preamble to the Statute of the Council of Europe'.¹⁶ The Sub-Committee that examined the proposal said it was difficult to approve as it imposed a restriction on freedom of opinion and expression 'which would be too extensive'. Cavat Ustun said he had made the proposal because 'there is in

¹² Preparatory Report by the Secretariat-General concerning a Preliminary Draft Convention to Provide a Collective Guarantee of Human Rights, Doc. B 22, III TP 2-37, at p. 30.

¹³ Report of the Fifth Session of the Commission on Human Rights to the Economic and Social Council, UN Doc. E/1371(Supp.), p. 21.

¹⁴ The United Nations Conference on Freedom of Information, held in early 1948, adopted the text of a Convention on Freedom of Information. There had been 'divergent views' about the draft convention in the Third Committee of the United Nations General Assembly meeting in late 1948 and the plenary Assembly postponed debate on adoption of the draft convention until its fourth session in 1949 (see GA Res. 277 B (III)). Work on the Convention on Freedom of Information was again postponed by the General Assembly at its 1949 session. The relevant resolution recommended that a provision on freedom of information be included in the draft Covenant on human rights under consideration in the Commission on Human Rights (see GA Res. 313 (IV)). The issue of a Convention was postponed at a subsequent session and ultimately abandoned.

¹⁵ Comments of Governments on the Draft International Covenant on Human Rights and Measures of Implementation [UN Doc. E/CN.4/353/Add.1-3], Doc. A 770, III TP 156-79, at pp. 162-4.

¹⁶ Amendments to Articles 2 (paras 5 and 6) and 6 proposed by the Turkish Experts concerning the Consultative Assembly's Draft Convention, Doc. A 775, III TP 182-4, at p. 182 (emphasis in the original).

Turkey a law which forbids the diffusion of propaganda on extremist ideas'. To this, the Sub-Committee explained that the imposition of special conditions was authorized by other provisions in the draft Convention.¹⁷ The Swedish expert, Torsten Salén, proposed the following addition to the text of the Consultative Assembly: 'These freedoms can only be subjected to the restrictions, sanctions and responsibilities defined by law in the interest of public order, national security and the good functioning of public administration and justice, as well as for the safeguarding of the good traditions and respect for the freedom of others.'¹⁸

At the conclusion of its first session, in February 1950, the Committee of Experts adopted the following provision: 'Everyone has the right of freedom of opinion and expression; this right includes freedom to hold opinions without interference and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media and regardless of frontiers.'¹⁹ The Committee explained that instead of enumerating rights by reference to the relevant provision in the Universal Declaration, as had been done by the Consultative Assembly, it was better to incorporate the text verbatim. Accordingly, the Committee 'scrupulously adhered to the text of the Universal Declaration'.²⁰ There are two small differences in the Committee text: the fifth word is 'to' rather than 'of' and the word 'opinion' is in the singular.

At the second session of the Committee of Experts, in March 1950, the United Kingdom representative submitted an amendment that was very similar to the text it had proposed in the United Nations Commission on Human Rights:

- 1) Everyone has the right to freedom of thought, and to freedom of expression without governmental interference; these rights shall include freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart information and ideas without government interference regardless of frontiers, either orally, in writing or in print, in the form of art or by duly licensed visual or auditory devices.
- 2) The exercise of these freedoms carries with it duties and responsibilities and may therefore be subject to such penalties, liabilities and restrictions as are prescribed by law and are necessary in the interests of national security or public safety, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, for the protection of the reputations and rights of other persons, for preventing the disclosure of information received in confidence, or for maintaining the authority and impartiality of the judiciary.²¹

The redundant reference to 'freedom of thought' already present in the freedom of religion text submitted by the United Kingdom was removed by the Drafting Committee in its revision of the proposal. The Committee made several small stylistic changes to the second paragraph and added reference to 'territorial integrity' after 'national security'.²²

¹⁷ Continuation of the Report of the Sub-Committee Instructed to Make a Preliminary Study of the Amendments proposed by the Members of the Committee, Doc. A 802, III TP 206-13, at p. 208.

¹⁸ Amendments to Article 2, para. 3, 5, and 6 of the Recommendation of the Consultative Assembly proposed by the Swedish Expert, Doc. A 777, III TP 184.

¹⁹ Preliminary Draft Convention for the Maintenance and Further Realisation of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 15 February 1950, Doc. A 833, III TP 236-46, at p. 236. Also Draft text of the first section of a draft Convention based on the work of the Consultative Assembly, Doc. A 809, III TP 220-31, at p. 222.

²⁰ Preliminary Draft of the Report to the Committee of Ministers, 24 February 1950, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 1, A 847, III TP 246-79, at pp. 260-2.

²¹ Amendments to Articles 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 8, and 9 of the Committee's Preliminary Draft Proposal by the Expert of the United Kingdom, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 2, A 915, III TP 280-9, at p. 286.

²² Amendments to the British draft proposed by the Drafting Committee composed of Sir Oscar Dowson, MM le Quesne, Dons Moeller, and Salén, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 10, p. 3, A 919, III TP 288-95, at p. 292.

The Report of the Committee of Experts explained that '[t]he permission accorded in this paragraph to the imposition of certain restrictions in the interests of territorial integrity was accepted by the Committee on the clear understanding that it did not permit a restriction on the rights of national minorities to advocate their views by democratic means'.²³ The Committee of Experts prepared two different drafts. The first, 'Alternatives A and A/2', consisted of the text derived from the Consultative Assembly draft that had been adopted by the Committee of Experts at its first session.²⁴ The second, labelled 'Alternatives B and B/2', contained the text that had been proposed by the United Kingdom.²⁵

The Conference of Senior Officials that convened in June 1950 assigned a Drafting Committee to attempt to reconcile the competing versions. It prepared a new formulation on freedom of expression based on the British proposal as amended by the Drafting Committee of the Committee of Experts, with a few changes. The reference to 'without governmental interference' in the first phrase was removed, probably because it was deemed redundant given a similar expression later in the paragraph.

- 1) Everyone shall have the right to freedom of expression; these rights shall include freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart information and ideas without government interference, regardless of frontiers, either orally, in writing or in print, in the form of art or by duly licensed visual or auditory devices.
- 2) The exercise of these freedoms, since it carries with it duties and responsibilities, may be subject to such penalties, liabilities and restrictions as are prescribed by law and are necessary in the interests of national security (territorial integrity), or public safety, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, for the protection of the reputation or rights of others, for preventing the disclosure of information received in confidence, or for maintaining the authority and impartiality of the judiciary.²⁶

Small changes were made by the Drafting Committee: the replacement of 'governmental interference' with 'interference by public authority' and the addition of 'in a democratic society' after 'necessary'.²⁷ The text was further modified by the plenary Conference of Senior Officials. The semi-colon in paragraph 1 was changed in favour of a new sentence and the parentheses in paragraph 2 surrounding territorial integrity were removed. The final version of the Conference of Senior Officials read:

- 1) Everyone has the right to freedom of expression. This right shall include freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart information and ideas without interference by public authority, regardless of frontiers, either orally, in writing or in print, in the form of art or by duly licensed visual or auditory devices.
- 2) The exercise of these freedoms, since it carries with it duties and responsibilities, may be subject to such penalties, liabilities and restrictions as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a ²³ Report to the Committee of Ministers submitted by the Committee of Experts Instructed to Draw Up a Draft Convention of Collective Guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Doc. CM/WP 1 (5) 15, A 924, IV TP 2-55, at p. 32.

²⁴ Ibid., p. 52. See also Preliminary Draft Convention, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 14, A 932, III TP 312-35, at pp. 320-2.

²⁵ Report to the Committee of Ministers submitted by the Committee of Experts Instructed to Draw Up a Draft Convention of Collective Guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Doc. CM/WP 1 (5) 15, A 924, IV TP 2-55, at pp. 62-4. See also Preliminary Draft Convention, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 14, A 932, III TP 312-35, at p. 318.

²⁶ New draft alternatives B and B/2, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 9, A 1372, IV TP 182-91, at p. 188.

²⁷ Draft Convention appended to the draft report, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 16, appendix, A 1445, IV TP 218-40, at p. 224.

democratic society, in the interests of national security, territorial integrity, or public safety, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, for the protection of the reputations or rights of others, for preventing the disclosure of information received in confidence, or for maintaining the authority and impartiality of the judiciary.²⁸

The Report of the Conference attributes the reference to 'territorial integrity' to the Turkish delegate's insistence that these words be retained.²⁹ It also mentions '[i]n this connection' the reservations of the Danish delegate 'according to which it was well understood that no restriction should be introduced which would interfere with the right of national minorities to give expression to their aspirations by democratic means'.³⁰ The implication is that Turkey's concerns were with the exercise of freedom of expression by minorities to promote autonomy and secession.

The text was further revised by the Committee of Ministers at its fifth session, in early August 1950. The United Kingdom had proposed some minor changes to the punctuation of the English version that were of no substantive significance.³¹ The Irish government recommended '[t]hat Article 10(2) of the present draft be amended to stipulate that no restriction should be imposed on the right of national minorities to give expression to their aspiration by democratic means'.³² The Committee of Ministers removed the phrase 'either orally, in writing or in print, in the form of art or by duly licensed visual or auditory devices' at the end of paragraph 1. A third sentence was added to paragraph 1: 'This article shall not prevent States from requiring the licensing of broadcasting, television or cinema enterprises.' The travaux préparatoires provide no indication of the source of this amendment or of any debate surrounding it. In paragraph 2, the words 'penalties, liabilities and restrictions' were replaced with 'formalities, liabilities, restrictions or penalties'.³³ The provision did not give rise to any discussion in the Consultative Assembly at its 1950 session.

Immediately prior to adoption of the Convention, in Rome in November, two small modifications to the English version of the text of article 10 were made: the word 'and' replaced the comma between 'public authority' and 'regardless' in the second sentence of paragraph 1; 'conditions' replaced 'liabilities' in paragraph 2.

The heading 'Freedom of expression' was added according to the provisions of Protocol No. 11.³⁴

Analysis and interpretation

Freedom of expression is said to constitute 'one of the essential foundations of a democratic society and one of the basic conditions for its progress and for each ²⁸ Draft Convention annexed to the Report, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19 annex, CM/WP 4 (50) 16 rev., A 1452, IV TP 274–95, at p. 280.

²⁹ Text of the Report submitted by the Conference [of Senior Officials] to the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19, CM/WP 4 (50) 16 rev., A 1431, IV TP 242–73, at p. 262.

³⁰ Ibid.

³¹ Comments by the United Kingdom Delegation on the Report of the Conference of Senior Officials and the text of the Draft Convention, Doc. A 1690, p. 3.

³² Amendments proposed by the Irish Government (4 August 1950), Doc. CM 1 (50) 2, A 1863, V TP 58–61, at p. 60.

³³ Draft Convention adopted by the Sub-Committee, Doc. CM 1 (50) 52, A 1884, V TP 76–99, at p. 82; Draft Convention adopted by the Committee of Ministers, 7 August 1950, Doc. A 1937, V TP 120–45, at pp. 126–8.

³⁴ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(2).

individual's self-fulfilment'.³⁵ It applies both to 'information' and 'ideas' that may be favourably received or regarded as inoffensive or as a matter of indifference as well as to those that offend, shock, or disturb.³⁶ It is 'all the more important when it comes to conveying ideas which offend, shock or challenge the established order'.³⁷ This is a requirement of pluralism, tolerance, and broadmindedness 'without which there is no "democratic society"':³⁸

Although the relationship of freedom of expression to democracy is profound, its importance as a fundamental right goes well beyond speech of a political nature. Freedom to receive and impart information and ideas also extends to artistic expression. Indeed, it 'affords the opportunity to take part in the public exchange of cultural, political and social information and ideas of all kinds'.³⁹ There is an association between artistic and political speech in that '[r]hose who create, perform, distribute or exhibit works of art contribute to the exchange of ideas and opinions which is essential for a democratic society'.⁴⁰ Because of the important relationship between freedom of expression and democracy, publications that relate to a debate on a matter of general concern, and that constitute political or militant expression, are entitled to 'a high level of protection of the right to freedom of expression'.⁴¹

Article 10 consists of two paragraphs. It is similar in form to articles 8, 9, and 11 of the Convention, in that the right is set out in the first paragraph and the permissible limitations defined in the second. Paragraph 1 comprises three sentences. The first two are derived from and closely based on article 19 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. The third, referring to licensing of broadcasting, television, or cinema, was an innovation of the drafters of the Convention. Paragraph 2 is modelled on article 29(2) of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. It sets out the limitations on freedom of expression.

The European Court of Human Rights exercises a supervisory function. Its purpose is not to replace competent national authorities. In applying article 10, the Court goes beyond simply ascertaining whether the State exercised its discretion reasonably, carefully, and in good faith. It is required to examine the interference in light of the case as a whole, considering whether this was proportionate to the legitimate aim and whether the reasons provided by the national authorities to justify the interference are 'relevant and sufficient'. The Court must 'satisfy itself that the national authorities applied standards which were in ³⁵ Palomo Sánchez and Others v. Spain [GC], nos 28955/06, 28957/06, 28959/06, and 28964/06, § 53, ECHR 2011; Lingens v. Austria, 8 July 1986, § 41, Series A no. 103.

³⁶ Palomo Sánchez and Others v. Spain [GC], nos 28955/06, 28957/06, 28959/06, and 28964/06, § 53, ECHR 2011; Handyside v. the United Kingdom, 7 December 1976, § 49, Series A no. 24; Lehideux and Isorni v. France, 23 September 1998, § 55, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-VII; Murphy v. Ireland, no. 44179/98, § 72, ECHR 2003-IX; Monnat v. Switzerland, no. 73604/01, § 55, ECHR 2006-X.

³⁷ Women On Waves and Others v. Portugal, no. 31276/05, § 42, 3 February 2009.

³⁸ Handyside v. the United Kingdom, 7 December 1976, § 49, Series A no. 24; Lindon, Otchakovskiy-Laurens and July v. France [GC], nos 21279/02 and 36448/02, § 45, ECHR 2007-IV; Verein gegen Tierfabriken Schweiz (VgT) v. Switzerland (no. 2) [GC], no. 32772/02, § 96, ECHR 2009; Palomo Sánchez and Others v. Spain [GC], nos 28955/06, 28957/06, 28959/06, and 28964/06, § 53, ECHR 2011; Axel Springer AG v. Germany [GC], no. 39954/08, § 78, 7 February 2012.

³⁹ Karataş v. Turkey [GC], no. 23168/94, § 49, ECHR 1999-IV.

⁴⁰ Ibid.

⁴¹ Lindon, Otchakovskiy-Laurens and July v. France [GC], nos 21279/02 and 36448/02, § 48, ECHR 2007-IV. Also Müller v. Switzerland, no. 41202/98, § 27, 5 November 2002.

conformity with the principles embodied in Article 10 and, moreover, that they relied on an acceptable assessment of the relevant facts'.⁴²

The freedom of expression provision of the American Convention on Human Rights provides expressly, in article 13(2), that freedom of expression 'shall not be subject to prior censorship but shall be subject to subsequent imposition of liability'. This is the notion of prior restraint, deeply rooted in American law, where the first amendment to the Constitution creates a strong presumption against any 'preventive' limits on free speech.⁴³ The European Convention is not explicit on the subject, although the Court has held that 'prior restraints on publication entail such dangers that they call for the most careful scrutiny'.⁴⁴ It has also said that article 10 does not prohibit prior restraints on publication as such, noting that this is clear from use of the words 'conditions', 'restrictions', 'preventing', and 'prevention' that appear in that provision.⁴⁵ Concerns about prior restraint are especially acute with respect to the press 'for news is a perishable commodity and to delay its publication, even for a short period, may well deprive it of all its value and interest. This danger also applies to publications other than periodicals that deal with a topical issue.'⁴⁶ The Court has carefully distinguished situations of individualized or targeted prior restraint, where the presumption this is a violation will be strong, and general measures that restrict freedom of expression.⁴⁷ A general measure applies to pre-defined situations regardless of the individual facts of each case 'even if this might result in individual hard cases'.⁴⁸

The scope of freedom of expression is larger with respect to criticism of government than it may be when a private citizen is the target, or even an individual politician. Democracy requires that the acts or omissions of government be scrutinized closely, not only by the legislative and judicial arms of the State but also by public opinion. The dominant position held by government dictates that it show restraint when it resorts to efforts to stifle its adversaries, including the use of criminal proceedings, and particularly where other means are available, even if the attacks and criticisms appear unjustified.⁴⁹ Because 'thought and opinions on public matters are of a vulnerable nature', the mere possibility that the authorities will interfere, or that there will be interference by private parties who are not subject to proper control or who have the support of the authorities, is capable of imposing 'a serious burden on the free formation of ideas and democratic debate and have a effect'.⁵⁰

Freedom of expression cases will often involve issues that overlap with other freedoms protected by the Convention, notably privacy, religion, assembly and association, set out in articles 8, 9, and 11, respectively. The Court often makes a determination to focus its ⁴² Mouvement raélien suisse v. Switzerland, no. 16354/06, § 49, 13 January 2011; Mouvement raélien suisse v. Switzerland [GC], no. 16354/06, § 48, ECHR 2012 (extracts).

⁴³ Near v. Minnesota, 283 US 697 (1931).

⁴⁴ Verein gegen Tierfabriken Schweiz (VgT) v. Switzerland (no. 2) [GC], no. 32772/02, § 93, ECHR 2009; The Sunday Times v. the United Kingdom (no. 2), 26 November 1991, § 51, Series A no. 217; Dammann v. Switzerland, no. 77551/01, §52, 25 April 2006.

⁴⁵ Ahmet Yıldırım v. Turkey, no. 31111/10, § 47, ECHR 2012.

⁴⁶ Ibid. Also RTBF v. Belgium, no. 50084/06, § 105, ECHR 2011 (extracts).

⁴⁷ Animal Defenders International v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 48876/08, § 106, ECHR 2013 (extracts); Observer and Guardian v. the United Kingdom, 26 November 1991, § 60, Series A no. 216.

⁴⁸ Zdanoka v. Latvia [GC], no. 58278/00, §§ 112–115, ECHR 2006-IV.

⁴⁹ Farullayev v. Azerbaijan, no. 40984/07, § 116, 22 April 2010.

⁵⁰ Aliuş Taner Akçam v. Turkey, no. 27520/07, § 81, 25 October 2011.

examination of an application on article 10, generally without any elaborate explanation for its decision.⁵¹

Positive obligation or interference?

Once it has been established that article 10 is applicable, consideration must be given to the negative or positive nature of the obligation in question. If the obligation is negative and not positive, the question to be addressed is whether there has been an interference with the right by the State. Where this is the conclusion, the analysis then proceeds to article 10(2), where the Court begins by inquiring as to whether the interference has been 'prescribed by law'. In cases of negative obligations, when the Court concludes there is no interference the application will be dismissed without paragraph 2 even being considered.

If the alleged violation cannot directly be attributed to the State, the latter may nevertheless have a positive obligation to secure rights under article 10 to those within its jurisdiction.⁵² For example, Turkey was held to have a positive obligation to investigate and provide protection when journalists and staff of a newspaper that supported the Kurdistan Workers Party were victims of violence and intimidation.⁵³ The Court has also examined the obligation to protect freedom of expression in the employment context⁵⁴ and where exercise of free speech may infringe upon property rights.⁵⁵ More generally, States have a positive obligation to create 'un environnement favorable à la participation aux débats publics de toutes les personnes concernées, leur permettant d'exprimer sans crainte leurs opinions et idées, même si celles-ci vont à l'encontre de celles défendues par les autorités officielles ou par une partie importante de l'opinion publique, voire même sont irritantes ou choquantes pour ces dernières'.⁵⁶

Positive obligations may also require the State to facilitate access to various media. The Court has said that in order to ensure that there is true pluralism in the audio-visual sector, it is insufficient that provision be made for several channels or for 'the theoretical possibility for potential operators to access the audio-visual market'. It is also necessary 'to allow effective access to the market so as to guarantee diversity of overall programme content, reflecting as far as possible the variety of opinions encountered in the society at which the programmes are aimed'.⁵⁷ The Court has held that the lack of any adequate legislative framework enabling journalists to use on-line material without threat of legal consequences is in itself a violation of article 10.⁵⁸

Assessing the existence of a positive obligation involves striking a 'fair balance' between the general interest of the community and the interests of the individual. The search for this balance has been described as being 'inherent throughout the Convention'.⁵⁹ The obligation will vary depending upon the diversity of situations in States Parties as well as ⁵¹ Karademirci and Others v. Turkey, nos 37096/97 and 37101/97, § 26, ECHR 2005-I.

⁵² Fuentes Bobo v. Spain, no. 39293/98, § 38, 29 February 2000; Palomo Sánchez and Others v. Spain [GC], nos 28955/06, 28957/06, 28959/06, and 28964/06, § 59, ECHR 2011; Appleby and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 44306/98, §§ 39–40, ECHR 2003-VI.

⁵³ Ozgür Gündem v. Turkey, no. 23144/93, §§ 42–46, ECHR 2000-III.

⁵⁴ Wojtas-Kaletka v. Poland, no. 20436/02, § 43, 16 July 2009.

⁵⁵ Appleby and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 44306/98, ECHR 2003-VI.

⁵⁶ Dink v. Turkey, nos 2668/07, 6102/08, 30079/08, 7072/09, and 7124/09, § 137, 14 September 2010.

⁵⁷ Centro Europa 7 S.R.L. and di Stefano v. Italy [GC], no. 38433/09, § 129, ECHR 2012.

⁵⁸ Editorial Board of Pravoye Delo and Shtetel v. Ukraine, no. 33014/05, § 64, ECHR 2011 (extracts).

⁵⁹ Verein gegen Tierfabriken Schweiz (VgT) v. Switzerland (no. 2) [GC], no. 32772/02, § 81, ECHR 2009.

their choices with respect to priorities and resources. In freedom of expression cases, the Court has taken into account the nature of the freedom in question, its contribution to the public debate, the nature and scope of restrictions on freedom of expression, the existence of alternatives, and the weight to be given to the rights of others.⁶⁰

In matters involving positive obligations, the Court will determine whether measures have been taken that are reasonable and appropriate. This should not impose an impossible or disproportionate burden on the authorities.⁶¹ Obviously, in the case of a positive obligation, where a non-State actor is involved, there can be no question about the interference being 'prescribed by law'. The whole point is that the violation is not being addressed by the State. However, the Court has often said that although 'the boundary between the State's positive and negative obligations under the Convention does not lend itself to precise definition, the applicable principles are, nonetheless, similar'. In other words, a fair balance must be struck between the competing interests of the individual and of the community as a whole, subject to the margin of appreciation enjoyed by the State.⁶² In striking this balance, the aims set out in article 10(2) are not without relevance.

There are dissident voices on the Court with respect to the extent of positive obligations. In an article 10 case involving access to media, several judges warned that developing the concept of positive obligations could result in losing sight of 'the fundamental negative obligation of the State to abstain from interfering':

The very initiative to legislate on the exercise of freedom in the name of broadcasting freedom, and in order to promote democracy in general terms, and for aims which may not necessarily fully conform to one or more of the legitimate aims of Article 10 § 2, remains problematic. The ban itself creates the condition it is supposedly trying to avert—out of fear that small organisations could not win a broadcast competition of ideas, it prevents them from competing at all. It is one thing to level a pitch; it is another to lock the gates to the cricket field.⁶³

Special scrutiny is required when criminal punishment is imposed for offences related to freedom of expression. After noting that sentencing was in principle a matter for national courts, the European Court said that 'the imposition of a prison sentence for an offence in the area of political speech will be compatible with freedom of expression as guaranteed by Article 10 of the Convention only in exceptional circumstances, notably where other fundamental rights have been seriously impaired, as, for example, in the case of hate speech or incitement to violence'.⁶⁴ Punishment of a journalist for disseminating statements made by another person during an interview 'would seriously hamper the contribution of the press to discussion of matters of public interest and should not be envisaged unless there are particularly strong reasons for doing so'.⁶⁵

⁶⁰ Frăsila and Ciocirlan v. Romania, no. 25329/03, § 54, 10 May 2012; Remuszko v. Poland, no. 1562/10, § 65, 16 July 2013.

⁶¹ Rees v. the United Kingdom, 17 October 1986, § 37, Series A no. 106; Osman v. the United Kingdom, 28 October 1998, § 116, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-VIII.

⁶² Verein gegen Tierfabriken Schweiz (VgT) v. Switzerland (no. 2) [GC], no. 32772/02, § 81, ECHR 2009.

⁶³ Animal Defenders International v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 48876/08, Joint Dissenting Opinion of Judges Ziemele, Sajó, Kalaydjieva, Vučinić and De Gaetano, § 12, ECHR 2013 (extracts).

⁶⁴ Bingöl v. Turkey, no. 36141/04, § 41, 22 June 2010.

⁶⁵ Björk Eidsdóttir v. Iceland, no. 46443/09, § 80, 10 July 2012.

Scope of freedom of expression

Article 10 guarantees freedom of expression to 'everyone'. It applies to both natural and legal persons and has frequently been invoked by the latter, notably by publishing houses and media outlets. No distinction is made with respect to the role played by those who exercise freedom of expression,⁶⁶ or whether the aim pursued is to make profit.⁶⁷ In addition to books, newspapers, magazines, and similar publications, freedom of expression will apply to a speech,⁶⁸ a poem,⁶⁹ a brochure,⁷⁰ a leaflet,⁷¹ a flag,⁷² a press conference,⁷³ a letter,⁷⁴ a slogan,⁷⁵ a caricature,⁷⁶ a painting,⁷⁷ a photograph,⁷⁸ the constitution of an organization,⁷⁹ submissions by lawyers in court,⁸⁰ an advertisement,⁸¹ a website,⁸² and SMS or text messages sent by mobile phone.⁸³ Imaginative and unconventional forms of expression are also covered by article 10. For example, a display of dirty clothing near the Hungarian Parliament as a representation of the 'dirty laundry of the nation' was deemed a form of political expression encompassed within article 10.⁸⁴ Likewise, public nudity as a way of affirming the 'inoffensiveness of the human body' constitutes expression of views or opinions.⁸⁵ Blowing a hunting horn so as to disrupt a fox hunt was a form of expression of opinion covered by article 10.⁸⁶ Similarly, it applied to the pouring of red paint on statues of Atatürk as a means of expressing 'lack of affection' for the iconic Turkish leader.⁸⁷ The removal of a ribbon from a wreath that had just been laid by the president of Ukraine on the country's independence day as a way of ⁶⁶ Çetin and Others v. Turkey, nos 40153/98 and 40160/98, § 57, ECHR 2003-III (extracts).

⁶⁷ Société de conception de presse et d'édition and Ponson v. France, no. 26935/05, § 34, 5 March 2009; Auronic AG v. Switzerland, 22 May 1990, § 47, Series A no. 178.

⁶⁸ Karkin v. Turkey, no. 43928/98, § 10, 23 September 2003.

⁶⁹ Karatas v. Turkey [GC], no. 23168/94, § 49, ECHR 1999-IV.

⁷⁰ Baran v. Turkey, no. 48988/99, § 29, 10 November 2004.

⁷¹ Unabhängige Initiative Informationsvielfalt v. Austria, no. 28525/95, § 9, ECHR 2002-I; Özer v. Turkey, nos 35721/04 and 3832/05, § 6, 5 May 2009.

⁷² Fáber v. Hungary, no. 40721/08, §§ 57–59, 24 July 2012.

⁷³ Çetinkaya v. Turkey, no. 75569/01, § 28, 27 June 2006.

⁷⁴ See the discussion in Gąsior v. Poland, no. 34472/07, Dissenting Opinion of Judge David Thór Björgvinsson, 21 February 2012.

⁷⁵ Savın v. Turkey, no. 13304/03, § 32, 2 February 2010.

⁷⁶ Cumpănă and Mazăre v. Romania [GC], no. 33348/96, § 22, ECHR 2004-XI; Leroy v. France, no. 36109/03, §§ 6 and 27, 2 October 2008.

⁷⁷ Müller and Others v. Switzerland, 24 May 1988, § 27, Series A no. 133; Vereinigung Bildender Künstler v. Austria, no. 68354/01, § 27, 25 January 2007.

⁷⁸ Mosley v. the United Kingdom, no. 48009/08, § 115, 10 May 2011; Österreichischer Rundfunk v. Austria (dec.), no. 57597/00, 25 May 2004; Verlagsgroupe News GmbH v. Austria (no. 2), no. 10520/02, §§ 29 and 40, 14 December 2006.

⁷⁹ Eğitim ve Bilim Emekçileri Sendikası v. Turkey, no. 20641/05, §§ 73–77, 25 September 2012.

⁸⁰ Kyprianou v. Cyprus [GC], no. 73797/01, § 151, ECHR 2005-XIII; Nikula v. Finland, no. 31611/96, § 30, ECHR 2002-II; Steur v. the Netherlands, no. 39657/98, ECHR 2003-XI.

⁸¹ Krone Verlag GmbH & Co. KG v. Austria (no. 3), no. 39069/97, § 11, ECHR 2003-XII.

⁸² Neij and Sunde Kolmippi v. Sweden (dec.), no. 40397/12, 19 February 2013; Editorial Board of Pravoye Delo and Shtekel v. Ukraine, no. 33014/05, § 63, ECHR 2011 (extracts); Ahmet Yıldırım v. Turkey, no. 3111/10, §§ 48–49, 18 December 2012. For a detailed review of the human rights considerations associated with the Internet and its regulation, see Ahmet Yıldırım v. Turkey, no. 3111/10, Concurring Opinion of Judge Pinto de Albuquerque, ECHR 2012.

⁸³ Bahçeci and Turan v. Turkey, no. 33340/03, §§ 5–6, 16 June 2009.

⁸⁴ Tatár and Fáber v. Hungary, no. 26005/08 and 26160/08, § 36, 12 June 2012.

⁸⁵ Gough v. the United Kingdom, no. 49327/11, § 147, 24 October 2014.

⁸⁶ Hashman and Harrup v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 25594/94, § 28, ECHR 1999-VIII.

⁸⁷ Murat Vural v. Turkey, no. 9540/07, § 56, 21 October 2014.

manifesting the view that he was not the legitimate head of State was viewed in the same way. The Court noted that the applicant was an activist in the opposition party whose leader, Yulia Tymoshenko, was then in prison.⁸⁸

Article 10 guarantees not only the right to impart information but also the right of the public to receive it.⁸⁹

Because the concept of 'expression' in article 10 is mainly concerned with the expression of opinion and the receiving and imparting of information and ideas, '[c]ertain classes of speech, such as lewd and obscene speech have no essential role in the expression of ideas. An offensive statement may fall outside the protection of freedom of expression where the sole intent of the offensive statement is to insult.'⁹⁰ However, 'the use of vulgar phrases in itself is not decisive in the assessment of an offensive expression as it may well serve merely stylistic purposes'.⁹¹ The application by a Croatian soldier who had been convicted of 'tarnishing the reputation of the Republic of Croatia' because of his use of obscene language to speak of the origin of Croats was held to fall outside the protection of article 10 'because it amounted to wanton denigration and its sole intent was to insult'.⁹² Nevertheless, 'providing increased protection by means of a special law on insults will not, as a rule, be in keeping with the spirit of the Convention'.⁹³

Freedom of expression applies to the means of dissemination and not just to the content because restrictions on the former necessarily interfere with the right to receive and impart information.⁹⁴ The 'style' constitutes part of the communication as the form of expression.⁹⁵ The freedom to receive and impart information and ideas protected by article 10 is concerned with the language itself. The Court has said it applies to any language that 'affords the opportunity to take part in the public exchange of cultural, political and social information and ideas of all kinds'.⁹⁶ However, it does not guarantee the right to use a language for interaction with the public administration⁹⁷ or in elected institutions.⁹⁸

The European Commission of Human Rights held that 'the right to freedom of expression by implication also guarantees a "negative right" not to be compelled to express oneself, that is, to remain silent'.⁹⁹ The Grand Chamber has declined to rule out the possibility that article 10 may extend to a right not to express oneself.¹⁰⁰ However, in a case where an academic challenged a conviction for refusing to provide information the ⁸⁸ Shvydka v. Ukraine, no. 17888/12, §§ 37–38, 30 October 2014.

⁸⁹ Observer and Guardian v. the United Kingdom, 26 November 1991, § 59(b), Series A no. 216; Guerra and Others v. Italy, 19 February 1998, § 53, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-I.

⁹⁰ Rujak v. Croatia (dec.), no. 57942/10, § 29, 2 October 2012.

⁹¹ Uj v. Hungary, no. 23954/10, § 20, 19 July 2011.

⁹² Rujak v. Croatia (dec.), no. 57942/10, § 30, 2 October 2012.

⁹³ Otegi Mondragon v. Spain, no. 2034/07, § 55, ECHR 2011.

⁹⁴ Ahmet Yildirim v. Turkey, no. 3111/10, § 50, ECHR 2012; De Haes and Gijssels v. Belgium, 24 February 1997, § 48, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-I.

⁹⁵ Uj v. Hungary, no. 23954/10, § 20, 19 July 2011.

⁹⁶ Eğitim ve Bilim Emekçileri Sendikası v. Turkey, no. 20641/05, § 99, 25 September 2012.

⁹⁷ Inhabitants of Leeuw-Saint-Pierre v. Belgium, no. 2333/64, Commission decision of 16 December 1968, (1968) 11 YB 228, Collection 28, p. 1; Fryske nationale partij v. the Netherlands, no. 11100/84, Commission decision of 12 December 1985, DR 45, p. 240; Samo Pahor v. Italy, no. 19927/92, Commission decision of 29 June 1994.

⁹⁸ Clerfayt, Legros, and Alii v. Belgium, no. 10650/83, Commission decision of 17 May 1985, DR 42, p. 218; Birk-Levy v. France (dec.), no. 39416/06, 21 September 2010.

⁹⁹ Srahal v. Austria, no. 20871/92, Commission decision of 7 April 1994.

¹⁰⁰ Gillberg v. Sweden [GC], no. 41723/06, § 86, 3 April 2012.

Court did not consider that article 10 had been breached.¹⁰¹ In a case concerning a refusal to give evidence, it held that article 10 was not applicable.¹⁰²

Freedom of expression is, of course, subject to derogation in accordance with article 15. Along with the protection against arbitrary detention, freedom of expression is commonly given as one of the classic examples of a right that may be reduced or suspended during public emergencies such as war. However, in the State practice of derogation there do not appear to be any examples of declarations suspending article 10. Freedom of expression is also a right that may interact with article 17, where it is provided that nothing in the Convention may be interpreted as implying for any State, group, or person any right to engage in any activity or perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms set forth herein or at their limitation to a greater extent than is provided for in the Convention.

Article 10(1) refers specifically to the 'freedom to hold opinions'. This formulation echoes the guarantee, in article 9(1) of the Convention, of 'freedom of thought'. It has not given rise to any particular difficulties of interpretation or application. Like article 9(1), interference by the State or by other individuals with the freedom to hold opinions can only become an issue when such opinions are expressed, communicated, and disseminated. These matters fall under the freedom to impart information and ideas. The Court has said that the freedom to receive and impart information and ideas 'basically prohibits a Government from restricting a person from receiving information that others wish or may be willing to impart to him'.¹⁰³

Press

Freedom of expression is intimately related to freedom of the press. Indeed, the two rights are often presented as if they are synonymous. The notion of 'freedom of the press' is probably as old as Gutenberg and the invention of moveable type. Early legal scholars, such as William Blackstone, took strong positions supportive of freedom of the press:

The liberty of the press is indeed essential to the nature of a free state; but this consists in laying no previous restraints upon publications, and not in freedom from censure for criminal matter when published. Every freeman has an undoubted right to lay what sentiments he pleases before the public; to forbid this, is to destroy the freedom of the press; but if he publishes what is improper, mischievous or illegal, he must take the consequence of his own temerity.¹⁰⁴

Today, of course, 'press' is a generic term that refers to various forms of print and electronic media. We continue to use the old term 'press' in much the same way that we refer to 'fonts' and 'upper and lower case', linguistic remnants of an earlier technology. Audiovisual media, including radio and television, are particularly important: '[b]ecause of their power to convey messages through sound and images, such media have a more immediate and powerful effect than print'.¹⁰⁵ The impact of television and radio as ¹⁰¹ Ibid., § 94.

¹⁰² Ezelin v. France, 26 April 1991, § 33, Series A no. 202.

¹⁰³ Gillberg v. Sweden [GC], no. 41723/06, § 82, 3 April 2012; Leander v. Sweden, 26 March 1987, § 74, Series A no. 116; Gaskin v. the United Kingdom, 7 July 1989, § 52, Series A no. 160.

¹⁰⁴ Blackstone's Commentaries on the Laws of England, Book IV, pp. 151, 152.

¹⁰⁵ Jersild v. Denmark, 23 September 1994, § 31, Series A no. 298; Pedersen and Baadsgaard v. Denmark [GC], no. 49017/99, § 79, ECHR 2004-XI.

familiar sources of entertainment, often received in the intimacy of the listener's or viewer's home, further reinforces their impact.¹⁰⁶

The European Court of Human Rights has frequently insisted upon the importance of the press because of its role in imparting information and ideas of public interest, and in discovering and forming an opinion of the ideas and attitudes of political leaders.¹⁰⁷ For this reason, it plays a vital role of 'public watchdog' in the proper functioning of democratic societies.¹⁰⁸ Not only does the press 'have the task of imparting such information and ideas: the public also has a right to receive them'.¹⁰⁹ The responsibility of the press in this respect includes reporting on opposition gatherings and demonstrations.¹¹⁰ Caution is required when measures or sanctions may dissuade the press from taking part in a discussion of matters of public interest.¹¹¹

Journalists have the freedom to resort to a degree of exaggeration and even to provocation.¹¹² Neither the national courts nor the European Court are entitled to substitute their own view for those of the press as to the reporting techniques to be adopted in any particular case.¹¹³ Journalists are afforded great protection by article 10 subject to the condition that they are acting in good faith in order to provide accurate and reliable information in accordance with the ethics of journalism.¹¹⁴ In the context of a public debate on an important issue, journalists cannot be required to prove the veracity of statements, only that they have acted with due diligence in order to establish this.¹¹⁵ Article 10 does not grant them wholly unrestricted freedom of expression, even when matters of serious public concern are involved.¹¹⁶ They must not overstep certain bounds, in particular when respect of the reputation and rights of others is required.¹¹⁷

¹⁰⁶ Murphy v. Ireland, no. 44179/98, § 74, ECHR 2003-IX.

¹⁰⁷ De Haes and Gijssels v. Belgium, 24 February 1997, § 37, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-I; Colombani and Others v. France, no. 51279/99, § 55, ECHR 2002-V; Fatullayev v. Azerbaijan, no. 40984/07, § 88, 22 April 2010.

¹⁰⁸ Goodwin v. the United Kingdom, 27 March 1996, § 39, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-II; Axel Springer AG v. Germany [GC], no. 39954/08, § 79, 7 February 2012; Aquilina and Others v. Malta, no. 28040/08, § 43, 14 June 2011; De Haes and Gijssels v. Belgium, 24 February 1997, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-I, pp. 233–4, § 37.

¹⁰⁹ Handyside v. the United Kingdom, 7 December 1976, § 49, Series A no. 24; Lingens v. Austria, 8 July 1986, §§ 41–42, Series A no. 103; Axel Springer AG v. Germany [GC], no. 39954/08, § 79, 7 February 2012; Thorgeir Thorgeirson v. Iceland, 25 June 1992, Series A no. 239, p. 27, § 63; Bladet Tromsø and Stensaas v. Norway [GC], no. 21980/93, § 62, ECHR 1999-III; Gawęda v. Poland, no. 26229/95, § 34, ECHR 2002-II.

¹¹⁰ Najafli v. Azerbaijan, no. 2594/07, § 63, 2 October 2012.

¹¹¹ Kaperzyński v. Poland, no. 43206/07, § 70, 3 April 2012; Standard Verlags GmbH v. Austria, no. 13071/03, § 49, 2 November 2006; Kuliś and Różycki v. Poland, no. 27209/03, § 37, 6 October 2009.

¹¹² Pedersen and Baadsgaard v. Denmark [GC], no. 49017/99, § 71, ECHR 2004-XI; Prager and Oberschlick v. Austria, 26 April 1995, § 38, Series A no. 313; Bladet Tromsø and Stensaas v. Norway [GC], no. 21980/93, § 59, ECHR 1999-III.

¹¹³ Axel Springer AG v. Germany [GC], no. 39954/08, § 81, 7 February 2012; Jersild v. Denmark, 23 September 1994, § 31, Series A no. 298; Eerikainen and Others v. Finland, no. 3514/02, § 65, 10 February 2009.

¹¹⁴ Radio France and Others v. France, no. 53984/00, § 37, ECHR 2004-II; Colombani and Others v. France, no. 51279/99, § 65, ECHR 2002-V.

¹¹⁵ Braun v. Poland, no. 30162/10, §§ 50–51, 4 November 2014.

¹¹⁶ Kaperzyński v. Poland, no. 43206/07, § 57, 3 April 2012.

¹¹⁷ De Haes and Gijssels v. Belgium, 24 February 1997, § 37, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-I; Colombani and Others v. France, no. 51279/99, § 55, ECHR 2002-V; Fatullayev v. Azerbaijan, no. 40984/07, § 88, 22 April 2010; Pedersen and Baadsgaard v. Denmark [GC], no. 49017/99, § 78, ECHR 2004-X; Times Newspapers Ltd v. United Kingdom (nos 1 and 2), no. 3002/03 and 23676/03, § 42, ECHR 2009; MGN Limited v. the United Kingdom, no. 39401/04, § 1341, 18 January 2011; Mosley v. the United Kingdom, no. 48009/08, § 113, 10 May 2011.

An important protection for journalists deemed necessary to ensure the effectiveness of their work is the ability to protect the confidentiality of their sources of information. This is sometimes described as a 'privilege' in the sense that in the course of legal proceedings they are entitled to refuse to divulge their sources so as to protect the identity of informants.¹¹⁸ Because of the importance of the confidentiality of sources in the protection of freedom of the press in a democratic society, 'an interference cannot be compatible with Article 10 of the Convention unless it is justified by an overriding requirement in the public interest'.¹¹⁹

The Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe has adopted a Recommendation on the protection of journalistic sources that declares: 'Domestic law and practice in member States should provide for explicit and clear protection of the right of journalists not to disclose information identifying a source in accordance with Article 10 of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms...'¹²⁰ Referring to that instrument, the Court has said that it understands that the concept of journalistic 'source' refers to 'any person who provides information to a journalist'. As for 'information identifying a source', this includes both 'the factual circumstances of acquiring information from a source by a journalist' and 'the unpublished content of the information provided by a source to a journalist'.¹²¹ The Court has expressed its concern about the chilling effect that will result if journalists are seen to assist in the identification of anonymous sources.¹²² The protection of sources is important even when they are unaware that they are generating material to be used in a journalistic investigation, for example when they are filmed surreptitiously.¹²³

International human rights law provides explicit support for a right of reply to a person who is injured by inaccurate or offensive statements disseminated by the press.¹²⁴ Despite the absence of any formulation in the European Convention similar to that in the American Convention on Human Rights, the European Court has held that an obligation to publish a rectification or a reply may be considered a normal element of the legal framework governing the exercise of freedom of expression. Moreover, this may extend to an obligation to inform the individual concerned about the reasons why a media outlet has refused to publish a reply or rectification. According to the Court, '[s]uch an obligation makes it possible, for example, for the person who feels aggrieved by a press article to present his reply in a manner compatible with the editorial practice of the newspaper concerned'.¹²⁵ Thus, although the Convention does not guarantee a right of ¹¹⁸ Van der Heijden v. the Netherlands [GC], no. 42857/05, § 64, 3 April 2012; Goodwin v. the United Kingdom, 27 March 1996, § 45, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-II. For a review of the case law, see Sanoma Uitgevers B.V. v. the Netherlands [GC], no. 38224/03, §§ 59–63, 14 September 2010.

¹¹⁹ Sanoma Uitgevers B.V. v. the Netherlands [GC], no. 38224/03, § 18, 14 September 2010; Goodwin v. the United Kingdom, 27 March 1996, § 39, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-II; Roemen and Schmit v. Luxembourg, no. 51772/99, § 46, ECHR 2003-IV; Voskuil v. the Netherlands, no. 64752/01, § 65, 22 November 2007; Telegraaf Media Nederland Landelijke Media B.V. and Others v. the Netherlands, no. 39315/06, §§ 86–88, 22 November 2012.

¹²⁰ Recommendation No. R (2000) 7, Appendix, principle 1.

¹²¹ Nagla v. Latvia, no. 73469/10, § 81, 16 July 2013.

¹²² Financial Times Ltd and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 821/03, § 70, 15 December 2009; Nordisk Film & TV A/S v. Denmark (dec.), no. 40485/02, ECHR 2005-XII; Sanoma Uitgevers B.V. v. the Netherlands [GC], no. 38224/03, § 65, 14 September 2010.

¹²³ Nordisk Film & TV A/S v. Denmark (dec.), no. 40485/02, ECHR 2005-XIII.

¹²⁴ American Convention on Human Rights, (1978) 1144 UNTS 123, art. 14.

¹²⁵ Kaperzyński v. Poland, no. 43206/07, § 66, 3 April 2012.

reply or rectification, the freedom of expression of the media outlet cannot be invoked if the national law imposes a requirement of rectification. The Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe has recommended that member governments provide an individual about whom information has been published, in any medium, with 'an effective possibility for the correction, without undue delay, of incorrect facts relating to him which he has a justified interest in having corrected, such correction being given, as far as possible, the same prominence as the original publication'.¹²⁶ According to the Court, in certain cases there may be a positive obligation for the State, even in the case of privately owned media, to ensure that an individual has 'a reasonable opportunity to exercise his right of reply by submitting a response to the newspaper for publication and, secondly, that he had an opportunity to contest the newspaper's refusal'.¹²⁷

If the links between democratic governance, the rule of law, and freedom of expression are important, there is also an important connection with the right to a fair trial and the proper operation of the judicial system. Media contribute to this by reporting upon trial proceedings and on justice more generally. Article 6 of the Convention guarantees the right to a 'public trial'. In practice, this right is ensured with the help of the media. A particular dimension of the reputation or rights of others is the reporting of criminal proceedings. In this area, the Committee of Ministers has adopted Principles concerning the provision of information through the media in relation to criminal proceedings.¹²⁸ It seeks a balance among a number of factors, including the public interest in being informed about criminal proceedings, the protection of the presumption of innocence, accuracy of the information that is published, and the protection of privacy.

The duty of the press in a democratic society 'extends to the reporting and commenting on court proceedings which, provided that they do not overstep the bounds set out above, contribute to their publicity and are thus consonant with the requirement under Article 6 § 1 of the Convention that hearings be public'.¹²⁹ The Court has described as 'inconceivable' the possibility that there be no prior or contemporaneous discussion of the subject matter of trials, explaining that '[n]ot only do the media have the task of imparting such information and ideas; the public also has a right to receive them'.¹³⁰

Nevertheless, 'the public nature of court proceedings does not function as a carte blanche relieving the media of their duty to show due care in communicating information received in the course of those proceedings'.¹³¹ There is considerable deference to the role of the judiciary, which may be subject to legitimate criticism of its shortcomings but without losing sight of its special role in society.¹³² In one case, the media breached a ¹²⁶ Resolution (74) 26 of the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe on the right of reply—Position of the individual in relation to the press. See also Recommendation Rec(2004)16 of the Committee of Ministers to member States on the right of reply in the new media environment.

¹²⁷ Melnychuk v. Ukraine (dec.), no. 28743/03, ECHR 2005-IX.

¹²⁸ Rec(2003)13 of the Committee of Ministers, Appendix.

¹²⁹ Axel Springer AG v. Germany [GC], no. 39954/08, § 80, 7 February 2012; News Verlags GmbH & Co. KG v. Austria, no. 31457/96, § 56, ECHR 2000-I; Dupuis and Others v. France, no. 1914/02 § 35, ECHR 2007-VII; Campos Dâmaso v. Portugal, no. 17107/05, § 31, 24 April 2008.

¹³⁰ Axel Springer AG v. Germany [GC], no. 39954/08, § 80; News Verlags GmbH & Co. KG v. Austria, no. 31457/96, § 56, ECHR 2000-I; Dupuis and Others v. France, no. 1914/02 § 35, ECHR 2007-VII; Campos Dâmaso v. Portugal, no. 17107/05, § 31, 24 April 2008.

¹³¹ Kurier Zeitungverlag und Druckerei GmbH v. Austria, no. 3401/07, § 44, 17 January 2012; Eerikäinen and Others v. Finland, no. 3514/02, § 63, 10 February 2009.

¹³² Prager and Oberschlick v. Austria, 26 April 1995, § 34, Series A no. 313; Falter Zeitschriften GmbH v. Austria (no. 2), no. 3084/07, §§ 38–39, 18 September 2012.

prohibition on photographing a convicted person without her consent as she left the hearing where the verdict was pronounced. The European Court said the presentation of the individual in the press had been 'particularly intrusive', finding that the applicant's interest in restricting publication outweighed that of the media in informing the public.¹³³

In the United Kingdom, jurors are forbidden to divulge the content of their deliberations. The Times was prosecuted for publishing an account of jury deliberations by a disgruntled juror. Noting that divulgence of jury deliberations had not been conducted as part of research into jury methods, or where disclosure might be justified by the interests of justice, but rather with the aim of contributing to the 'serious debate concerning the use of expert medical evidence in criminal trials', the Court declared the case inadmissible.¹³⁴

Physical ill-treatment by State agents of journalists who are performing their professional work may constitute interference with article 10, in addition, of course, to raising issues with respect to article 3. The Court has held that the intent of those who perpetrate such abuse is not important because 'what matters is that the journalist was subjected to the unnecessary and excessive use of force, amounting to ill-treatment under Article 3 of the Convention, despite having made clear efforts to identify himself as a journalist who was simply doing his work and observing the event'.¹³⁵

The quality of journalism varies enormously. For some newspapers, the public interest in promoting democratic discussion about the issues of the day is rather remote. A distinction has been made between 'reporting facts—even if controversial—capable of contributing to a debate of general public interest in a democratic society' and the making of 'tawdry allegations about an individual's private life'.¹³⁶ For this reason, while the contribution of the press to public debate weighs heavily in considerations about acceptable limitations on freedom of expression, the same factors do not apply to 'press reports concentrating on sensational and, at times, lurid news, intended to titillate and entertain, which are aimed at satisfying the curiosity of a particular readership regarding aspects of a person's strictly private life'.¹³⁷ Such reports 'are often taken in a climate of continual harassment which may induce in the person concerned a very strong sense of intrusion into their private life or even of persecution',¹³⁸ leading to obvious conflicts with the right to private life, enshrined in article 8 of the Convention.¹³⁹ In such cases, 'the focus must be on whether the publication is in the interest of the public and not whether the public might be interested in reading it'.¹⁴⁰ The public interest in matters involving the private life of important public officials may increase as time elapses.¹⁴¹ Public interest ¹³³ Egeland and Hanseid v. Norway, no. 34438/04, §§ 61 and 63, 16 April 2009.

¹³⁴ Seckerson v. The United Kingdom and Time Newspapers Limited v. the United Kingdom (dec.), nos 32844/10 and 33510/10, 24 January 2012.

¹³⁵ Najafi v. Azerbaijan, no. 2594/07, § 68, 2 October 2012.

¹³⁶ Mosley v. the United Kingdom, no. 48009/08, § 114, 10 May 2011. Also Armonienė v. Lithuania, no. 36919/02, § 39, 25 November 2008.

¹³⁷ Von Hannover v. Germany, no. 59320/00, § 65, ECHR 2004-VI; Hachette Filipacchi Associés (ICI PARIS) v. France, no. 12268/03, § 40, 23 July 2009; MGN Limited v. the United Kingdom, no. 39401/04, § 143, 18 January 2011; Société Prisma Presse v. France (dec.), nos 66910/01 and 71612/01, 1 July 2003; Leempoel & S.A. ED. Ciné Revue v. Belgium, no. 64772/01, § 77, 9 November 2006.

¹³⁸ Von Hannover v. Germany (no. 2) [GC], nos 40660/08 and 60641/08, § 103, ECHR 2012.

¹³⁹ See, in particular Lindon, Otchakovskiy-Laurens and July v. France [GC], nos 21279/02 and 36448/02, Concurring Opinion of Judge Loucaides, ECHR 2007-IV.

¹⁴⁰ Mosley v. the United Kingdom, no. 48009/08, § 114, 10 May 2011.

¹⁴¹ Von Hannover v. Germany, no. 59320/00, §§ 59–60, ECHR 2004-VI; Editions Plon v. France, no. 58148/00, § 53, ECHR 2004-IV.

is not confined to political figures or criminal activity; it also extends to sporting issues and performance artists.¹⁴² Nevertheless, the justification for press freedom that is rooted in the role as 'public watchdog' is obviously not relevant in the same way.¹⁴³ According to the Court, 'as a matter of principle' the rights enshrined in articles 8 and 10 'deserve equal respect' and therefore the margin of appreciation accorded to States should be the same.¹⁴⁴

The Internet

When the European Convention was adopted, the Internet was still the stuff of science fiction. Its enormous importance today in the expression of ideas, their dissemination, and in access to information needs no demonstration. It has become 'one of the principal means by which individuals exercise their right to freedom of expression and information, providing as it does essential tools for participation in activities and discussions concerning political issues and issues of general interest'.¹⁴⁵ As one judge noted, '[i]f streets and parks of a city are the historical quintessential public fora, the Internet is today's global marketplace of ideas'.¹⁴⁶ The Committee of Ministers has explained that information and communication technologies 'provide unprecedented opportunities for all to enjoy freedom of expression'.¹⁴⁷ In important ways, the Internet has democratized access to the media, greatly reducing—if not eliminating—barriers in terms of both cost and regulatory framework that served in the past as practical obstacles to the expression of opinions and ideas. Consequently, because of technological progress there is immensely greater genuine freedom of expression today than there was in 1950, when the European Convention was adopted.

The Internet raises particular problems in terms of the protection of freedom of expression.¹⁴⁸ The Court has explained that '[i]n light of its accessibility and its capacity to store and communicate vast amounts of information, the Internet plays an important role in enhancing the public's access to news and facilitating the dissemination of information generally'.¹⁴⁹ For example, '[t]he risk of harm posed by content and communications on the Internet to the exercise and enjoyment of human rights and freedoms, particularly the right to respect for private life, is certainly higher than that posed by the press. Therefore, the policies governing reproduction of material from the printed media and the Internet may differ'.¹⁵⁰

¹⁴² Nikowitz and Verlagsgruppe News GmbH v. Austria, no. 5266/03, § 25, 22 February 2007; Colação Mestre and SIC—Sociedade Independente de Comunicação, S.A. v. Portugal, nos 11182/03 and 11319/03, § 28, 26 April 2007; Sapan v. Turkey, no. 44102/04, § 34, 8 June 2010.

¹⁴³ Axel Springer AG v. Germany [GC], no. 39954/08, § 91, 7 February 2012.

¹⁴⁴ Ibid., § 87; Hachette Filipacchi Associés (ICI PARIS) v. France, no. 12268/03, § 41, 23 July 2009; Timciuc v. Romania (dec.), no. 28999/03, § 144, 12 October 2010; Mosley v. the United Kingdom, no. 48009/08, § 111, 10 May 2011.

¹⁴⁵ Ahmet Yıldırım v. Turkey, no. 3111/10, § 54, ECHR 2012.

¹⁴⁶ Mouvement raëlien suisse v. Switzerland [GC], no. 16354/06, Dissenting Opinion of Judge Pinto de Albuquerque, ECHR 2012 (extracts).

¹⁴⁷ Declaration CM(2005)56 final. See also Recommendation CM/Rec(2007)16; Recommendation CM/Rec(2007)11; Recommendation CM/Rec(2008)6; Recommendation CM/Rec(2012)3.

¹⁴⁸ See, generally, Council of Europe Commissioner on Human Rights, The rule of law on the Internet and in the wider digital world, Council of Europe Issue Paper, December 2014.

¹⁴⁹ Times Newspapers Ltd v. the United Kingdom (nos. 1 and 2), nos 3002/03 and 23676/03, § 27, ECHR 2009.

¹⁵⁰ Editorial Board of Pravoye Delo and Shiekel v. Ukraine, no. 33014/05, § 63, ECHR 2011 (extracts).

Referring specifically to issues concerning the application of article 8 of the Convention and the protection of private life, the Court said:

Although freedom of expression and confidentiality of communications are primary considerations and users of telecommunications and Internet services must have a guarantee that their own privacy and freedom of expression will be respected, such guarantee cannot be absolute and must yield on occasion to other legitimate imperatives, such as the prevention of disorder or crime or the protection of the rights and freedoms of others. Without prejudice to the question whether the conduct of the person who placed the offending advertisement on the Internet can attract the protection of Articles 8 and 10, having regard to its reprehensible nature, it is nonetheless the task of the legislator to provide the framework for reconciling the various claims which compete for protection in this context.¹⁵¹

One of the features of the Internet is the 'hyperlink' by which texts and documents are connected so that the reader is referred to related materials. In one sense, this fulfils the same function as a footnote or a bibliographic reference in traditional publications. At the same time, the 'hyperlink' is a form of publication that may contribute to disseminating information that threatens the rights and freedoms of others. In Mouvement Raëlien Suisse, seven dissenting judges explained that '[a] reference is not an endorsement or an identification, and even an endorsement would not create a clear danger of committing a crime. Otherwise the "referring" person would be obliged to distance himself all the time and that would impose a considerable burden on freedom of speech in the world of the Internet.' They described as 'unrealistic' the imposition of responsibility on a person who uses a hyperlink to reference another website where that website can easily be found using a search engine.¹⁵²

Literary and artistic expression

Artistic expression 'affords the opportunity to take part in the public exchange of cultural, political and social information and ideas of all kinds'.¹⁵³ Noting that article 10 does not specifically contemplate artistic expression, the Court has said this can be implied from the reference to 'broadcasting, television or cinema enterprises' in the second sentence as these are media whose activities extend to the field of art. The Court also referred to the reference in article 19(2) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights to information and ideas 'in the form of art' to support its conclusion that artistic expression is also included in article 10(1) of the Convention, despite the silence of the provision.¹⁵⁴

A novel is a form of artistic expression contemplated by article 10 because 'it affords the opportunity to take part in the public exchange of cultural, political and social information and ideas of all kinds. Those who create or distribute a work, for example of a literary nature, contribute to the exchange of ideas and opinions which is essential for a democratic society'.¹⁵⁵ Indeed, because of the important relationship between freedom of expression and democracy, publications that relate to a debate on a matter of general concern, and that constitute political or militant expression, are entitled to 'a high level of ¹⁵¹ K.U. v. Finland, no. 2872/02, § 49, ECHR 2008.

¹⁵² Mouvement raëlien suisse v. Switzerland [GC], no. 16354/06, Joint Dissenting Opinion of Judges Tulkens, Sajó, Lazarova Trajkovska, Bianku, Power-Force, Vučinić, and Yudkivska, ECHR 2012 (extracts).

¹⁵³ Müller and Others v. Switzerland, 24 May 1988, § 27, Series A no. 133.

¹⁵⁴ Ibid., § 27.

¹⁵⁵ Lindon, Otchakovsky-Laurens, and July v. France [GC], nos 21279/02 and 36448/02, § 48, ECHR 2007-IV; Karataş v. Turkey [GC], no. 23168/94, § 49, ECHR 1999-IV.

protection of the right to freedom of expression'.¹⁵⁶ Often, literary creation has been associated with political activism, and it is this that has provoked the ire of the authorities. In Turkey, poems were prohibited that 'through the frequent use of pathos and metaphors, called for self-sacrifice for "Kurdistan" and included some particularly aggressive passages directed at the Turkish authorities'. While acknowledging that '[t]aken literally, the poems might be construed as inciting readers to hatred, revolt and the use of violence', in deciding whether this was in fact the case the Court said 'it must nevertheless be borne in mind that the medium used by the applicant was poetry, a form of artistic expression that appeals to only a minority of readers'.¹⁵⁷ It made a similar comment about a novel providing a fictional account of ill-treatment and atrocities perpetrated by the Turkish authorities.¹⁵⁸

But artistic works or publications need not have political content or contribute to democratic debate in order to be deserving of protection under article 10. In a Turkish case concerning the censorship of an erotic novel by French author Guillaume Apollinaire, the Court noted that it had earlier been published in the distinguished La Pleiade collection and that it had become 'une œuvre figurant dans le patrimoine littéraire européen'.¹⁵⁹ The right of everyone 'to enjoy the arts' is affirmed in article 27(1) of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. It can only be honoured to the extent that there is genuine freedom of artistic expression.

Freedom of expression in the workplace

Freedom of expression is one of the main ways of ensuring the effective enjoyment of freedom of assembly and association, and is of special importance to the activities of trade unions.¹⁶⁰ There is much authority for the application of article 10 to the workplace when the freedom of expression of civil or public servants is concerned.¹⁶¹ Article 10 also applies when the employer is not the State and the relations between employer and employee are governed by private law. Then the State has a positive obligation to protect the right to freedom of expression, even in the sphere of relations between individuals.

Although trade union rights enjoy special protection under article 11 of the Convention, where this is made explicit in the final words of paragraph 1, the relationship with article 10 is also quite fundamental. Trade union rights are, of course, also ensured by a specialized body of international law developed under the aegis of the International Labour Organisation, a United Nations agency whose existence can be traced to the establishment of the League of Nations. Citing the case law of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, the Grand Chamber of the European Court has insisted that freedom of expression was 'a conditio sine qua non for the development of... trade unions'.¹⁶² ¹⁵⁶ London, Otchakovsky-Laurens, and July v. France [GC], nos 21279/02 and 36448/02, § 48, ECHR 2007-IV. Also Müller v. Switzerland, no. 41202/98, § 27, 5 November 2002.

¹⁵⁷ Karataş v. Turkey [GC], no. 23168/94, § 49, ECHR 1999-IV.

¹⁵⁸ Alınak v. Turkey, no. 40287/98, § 41, 29 March 2005.

¹⁵⁹ Akdaş v. Turkey, no. 41056/04, §§ 28–30, 16 February 2010. But see Lautsi and Others v. Italy [GC], no. 30814/06, Concurring Opinion of Judge Bonello, § 4.1, ECHR 2011 (extracts), where Judge Bonello sarcastically described the novel as a 'smear of transcendental smut'.

¹⁶⁰ Vellutini and Michel v. France, no. 32820/09, § 32, 6 October 2011; Zima v. Hungary, no. 29723/11, § 28, 9 October 2012.

¹⁶¹ Kudeshkina v. Russia, no. 29492/05, § 85, 26 February 2009; Vogt v. Germany, 26 September 1995, § 53, Series A no. 323; Guja v. Moldova [GC], no. 14277/04, § 52, ECHR 2008.

¹⁶² Palomo Sánchez and Others v. Spain [GC], nos 28955/06, 28957/06, 28959/06, and 28964/06, §§ 26, 56, ECHR 2011, citing Advisory Opinion OC-5/85193.

Consequently, wrote the Grand Chamber, 'for the purpose of guaranteeing the meaningful and effective nature of trade union rights, the national authorities must ensure that disproportionate penalties do not dissuade trade union representatives from seeking to express and defend their members' interests'.¹⁶³

So-called 'whistleblowing' raises issues of freedom of expression, notably in the context of employer-employee relations. The Grand Chamber has spoken of 'the right of civil servants and other employees to report illegal conduct and wrongdoing at their place of work'.¹⁶⁴ According to the Court, 'the signalling by an employee in the public sector of illegal conduct or wrongdoing in the workplace should, in certain circumstances, enjoy protection. This may be called for in particular where the employee or civil servant concerned is the only person, or part of a small category of persons, aware of what is happening at work and is thus best placed to act in the public interest by alerting the employer or the public at large'.¹⁶⁵ Six criteria have been identified in assessing the necessity of an infringement with article 10 in such circumstances: '(a) public interest involved in the disclosed information; (b) authenticity of the information disclosed; (c) the damage, if any, suffered by the authority as a result of the disclosure in question; (d) the motive behind the actions of the reporting employee; (e) whether, in the light of duty of discretion owed by an employee toward his or her employer, the information was made public as a last resort, following disclosure to a superior or other competent body; and (f) severity of the sanction imposed'.¹⁶⁶

Indeed, employees also owe a duty of loyalty to the employer, notably in the protection of reputation and of commercial interests, which may limit the scope of their freedom of expression.¹⁶⁷ This is particularly so in the case of civil servants since the very nature of civil service requires that a civil servant is bound by a duty of loyalty and discretion', the Court has said.¹⁶⁸ Civil servants in a democratic society have a mission of assisting the government in discharging its functions. Because members of the public have a right 'to expect that they will help and not hinder the democratically elected government, the duty of loyalty and reserve assumes special significance for them'.¹⁶⁹

Even members of the military are entitled to invoke article 10, although 'the proper functioning of the armed forces is hardly imaginable without legal rules designed to prevent servicemen from undermining the requisite discipline, for example by writings'.¹⁷⁰

¹⁶³ Ibid., § 56, citing I/A Court H.R., Compulsory Membership in an Association Prescribed by Law for the Practice of Journalism (Arts 13 and 29 American Convention on Human Rights), Advisory Opinion OC-5/85 of November 13, 1985. Series A No. 5. For a more spirited defence of the importance of freedom of expression for trade unions, see Palomo Sánchez and Others v. Spain [GC], nos 28955/06, 28957/06, 28959/06, and 28964/06, Joint Dissenting Opinion of Judges Tulkens, David Thór Björgvinsson, Jočienė, Popović, and Vučinić, ECHR 2011.

¹⁶⁴ Guja v. Moldova [GC], no. 14277/04, § 97, ECHR 2008.

¹⁶⁵ Heinisch v. Germany, no. 28274/08, § 63, ECHR 2011 (extracts); Vogt v. Germany, 26 September 1995, § 53, Series A no. 323; Ahmed and Others v. the United Kingdom, 2 September 1998, § 55, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-VI; De Diego Nafria v. Spain, no. 46833/99, § 37, 14 March 2002, no. 4063/04, § 46, 19 February 2009.

¹⁶⁶ Matúš v. Hungary, no. 73571/10, § 34, 21 October 2014.

¹⁶⁷ Heinisch v. Germany, no. 28274/08, § 64, ECHR 2011 (extracts).

¹⁶⁸ Guja v. Moldova [GC], no. 14277/04, § 70, ECHR 2008.

¹⁶⁹ Ibid., § 71.

¹⁷⁰ Szima v. Hungary, no. 29723/11, § 25, 9 October 2012; Vereinigung demokratischer Soldaten Österreichs and Gubi v. Austria, 19 December 1994, § 36, Series A no. 302; Hadjianastassiou v. Greece, 16 December 1992, § 39, Series A no. 252.

Regardless of frontiers

Freedom of expression may be exercised 'regardless of frontiers' (sans considération de frontière). This language was inherited from article 19 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and received no particular attention during the drafting of the European Convention. It can be traced to proposals in the United Nations Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press, where it was initially associated with the idea that any abuses of freedom of expression could only be those 'determined by the law of nations'.¹⁷¹ Although the term was adopted with almost no discussion, one of the drafters of the Universal Declaration stated that '[b]y implication, the words "regardless of frontiers" implied ideological barriers as well as physical frontiers'.¹⁷² Another participant in the negotiations 'wondered whether "regardless of frontiers" referred to geographical or moral frontiers'.¹⁷³

Turkish legislation blocking access to an internet site was described by the Court as being 'in direct conflict with the actual wording of paragraph 1 of Article 10 of the Convention, according to which the rights set forth in that Article are secured "regardless of frontiers"'.¹⁷⁴ Similarly, a 'direct conflict' with article 10(1) was signalled by the Court with respect to French legislation conferring on the Minister of the Interior broad powers to issue administrative bans on the dissemination of publications of foreign origin or written in a foreign language. The Government had argued that the legislation was justified by the difficulty in instituting proceedings against authors or publishers located abroad. The Court said that 'the exceptional circumstances in 1939, on the eve of the Second World War, might have justified tight control over foreign publications' but that 'the argument that a system that discriminated against publications of that sort should continue to remain in force would appear to be untenable'.¹⁷⁵

Licensing of broadcasting, television, or cinema enterprises

Licensing of broadcasting, television, or cinema enterprises is specifically authorized by the third sentence of article 10(1). There can be no claim that freedom of expression, as guaranteed by article 10, is breached merely because such licensing measures have been adopted by a State. This provision is unique to the European Convention on Human Rights, added by the Committee of Ministers at the very end of the drafting process without debate or discussion to shed light on the purpose or intent. Nothing similar appears in the freedom of expression provisions of the other major human rights treaties.

The Court has said that licensing is permitted by article 10(1) 'particularly in its technical aspects'.¹⁷⁶ However, granting of a licence may also be made conditional on considerations such as 'the nature and objectives of a proposed channel, its potential audience at national, regional or local level, the rights and needs of a specific audience and the obligations deriving from international legal instruments'.¹⁷⁷ The imposition of such

¹⁷¹ UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.1/45. Also: UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.1/48.

¹⁷² Official Records of the General Assembly, Third Session, 1948, p. 409 (Aquino, Philippines).

¹⁷³ UN Doc. E/CN.4/SR.63, p. 13 (Pavlov, Soviet Union).

¹⁷⁴ Ahmet Yıldırım v. Turkey, no. 3111/10, § 67, ECHR 2012.

¹⁷⁵ Association Ekin v. France, no. 39288/98, § 62, ECHR 2001-VIII.

¹⁷⁶ Centro Europa 7 S.R.L. and di Stefano v. Italy [GC], no. 38433/09, § 139, ECHR 2012; Demuth v. Switzerland, no. 38743/97, § 33, ECHR 2002-IX.

¹⁷⁷ Centro Europa 7 S.R.L. and di Stefano v. Italy [GC], no. 38433/09, § 139, ECHR 2012.

conditions may result in interference with freedom of expression that may not correspond to one of the legitimate aims permitted by paragraph 2 of article 10. Nevertheless, the other criteria in paragraph 2 will be applied to the interference in assessing whether it is permissible.¹⁷⁸

For example, replying to an application that challenged the denial of a license for a station of a religious nature, the United Kingdom explained that the capacity for national radio service was 'very limited' and that the measure was consistent with a policy 'to promote the efficient use of scarce resources in order to safeguard pluralism in the media, cater for a variety of tastes and interests and avoid discrimination as between the many different religions practised in the United Kingdom'. It added that there was no restriction on licenses for local or satellite radio stations because the same constraints on spectrum capacity did not apply. The Court, by a majority, declared the application inadmissible.¹⁷⁹ In another case, the Court accepted the explanation by Switzerland that its licensing system was 'capable of contributing to the quality and balance of programmes through the powers conferred on the government'.¹⁸⁰

In such a sensitive sector as the audio-visual media, the State has a positive obligation to establish a regulatory framework capable of guaranteeing 'effective pluralism'.¹⁸¹ The licensing of media outlets should not permit powerful economic or political groups to obtain a position of dominance, something that may exercise pressure on broadcasters and 'eventually curtail their editorial freedom', thereby undermining 'the fundamental role of freedom of expression in a democratic society as enshrined in Article 10 of the Convention, in particular where it serves to impart information and ideas of general interest, which the public is moreover entitled to receive'.¹⁸² Similarly, where the dominant position is held by public broadcasters that are owned by the State, the licensing regime must be justified by a pressing social need.¹⁸³

Formalities, conditions, restrictions, or penalties

Article 10 is one of four provisions of the European Convention with a restrictions or limitations clause. Paragraph 2 of article 10 states: 'The exercise of these freedoms, since it carries with it duties and responsibilities, may be subject to such formalities, conditions, restrictions or penalties as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society, in the interests of national security, territorial integrity or public safety, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, for the protection of the reputation or rights of others, for preventing the disclosure of information received in confidence, or for maintaining the authority and impartiality of the judiciary.' There are similar but not identical clauses in articles 8, 9, and 11. Comparable texts are also used ¹⁷⁸ Demuth v. Switzerland, no. 38743/97, § 33, ECHR 2002-IX; Tele 1 Privatfernsehgesellschaft mbH v. Austria, no. 32240/96, § 25, 21 September 2000; Radio ABC v. Austria, 20 October 1997, § 28, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-VI; Groppera Radio AG and Others v. Switzerland, 28 March 1990, § 61, Series A no. 173.

¹⁷⁹ United Christian Broadcasters Ltd. v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 44802/98, 7 December 2000.

¹⁸⁰ Demuth v. Switzerland, no. 38743/97, § 35, ECHR 2002-IX.

¹⁸¹ Centro Europa 7 S.R.L. and di Stefano v. Italy [GC], no. 38433/09, § 134, ECHR 2012.

¹⁸² Ibid., § 133; VgT Verein gegen Tierfabriken v. Switzerland, no. 24699/94, §§ 73, 75, ECHR 2001-VI; De Geillustreerde v. the Netherlands, no. 5178/71, Commission decision of 6 July 1976, DR 8, p. 13.

¹⁸³ Informationsverein Lentia and Others v. Austria, 24 November 1993, § 39, Series A no. 276; Centro Europa 7 S.R.L. and di Stefano v. Italy [GC], no. 38433/09, § 133, ECHR 2012.

with respect to some of the provisions in the Protocols: article 1 of Protocol No. 1 (protection of property); article 2(3) of Protocol No. 4 (freedom of movement); and article 2(2) of Protocol No. 7 (right of appeal in criminal matters). The Convention organs have developed a flexible methodology for the interpretation and application of paragraph 2 in determining whether or not the interference with a right set out in the first paragraph of articles 8, 9, 10, and 11 is actually in breach of the Convention. The formalities, conditions, restrictions, and penalties that apply to freedom of expression are to be construed strictly,¹⁸⁴ with any need for restriction to be 'established convincingly'.¹⁸⁵

The ancestor of the four provisions is article 29(2) of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights: 'In the exercise of his rights and freedoms, everyone shall be subject only to such limitations as are determined by law solely for the purpose of securing due recognition and respect for the rights and freedoms of others and of meeting the just requirements of morality, public order and the general welfare in a democratic society.' The limitation clause in the Universal Declaration applies generally to all rights set out in the instrument, whereas the specific clauses of this nature in the European Convention, of which article 10(2) is an example, are tailored to the right at issue.

A provision comparable in content to article 10(2) appears in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. It is quite laconic by comparison with article 10(2) of the Convention.¹⁸⁶ The Covenant does not admit territorial integrity or public safety, the prevention of disorder or crime, preventing the disclosure of information received in confidence, and maintaining the authority and impartiality of the judiciary as permissible grounds justifying restriction or limitation of freedom of expression.

Duties and responsibilities

Paragraph 2 of article 10 begins with the following words: 'The exercise of these freedoms, since it carries with it duties and responsibilities, may be subject to such formalities, conditions, restrictions or penalties . . .' The provision is similar in its general formulation to the second paragraphs of articles 8, 9, and 11. However, the reference to 'duties and responsibilities' that accompanies the exercise of freedom of expression is the only one of its kind in the Convention. The rights to private and family life, to opinion, belief, and religion, and to freedom of assembly and association are not made subject to duties and responsibilities. The Court has often invoked the notion of duties and responsibilities, especially with respect to the media.¹⁸⁷ Nevertheless, it applies to all who exercise freedom of expression.¹⁸⁸

In reporting on issues of general interest, journalists have the duty and responsibility to act in good faith so as to provide accurate and reliable information 'in accordance with the ¹⁸⁴ Stoll v. Switzerland [GC], no. 69698/01, § 61, ECHR 2007-V.

¹⁸⁵ Janowski v. Poland [GC], no. 25716/94, § 30, ECHR 1999-I; Nilsen and Johnsen v. Norway [GC], no. 23118/93, § 43, ECHR 1999-VIII; Lingens v. Austria, 8 July 1986, § 41, Series A no. 103.

¹⁸⁶ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, (1976) 999 UNTS 171, art. 19(3).

¹⁸⁷ Aquilina and Others v. Malta, no. 28040/08, § 44, 14 June 2011; McVicar v. the United Kingdom, no. 46311/99, § 84, ECHR 2002-III; Bladet Tromsø and Stensaa v. Norway [GC], no. 21980/93, § 66, ECHR 1999-III.

¹⁸⁸ Lindon, Oshakovskiy-Laurens and July v. France [GC], nos 21279/02 and 36448/02, § 51, ECHR 2007-IV.

of journalism'.¹⁸⁹ The duties and responsibilities associated with freedom of expression 'are liable to assume significance when there is a question of attacking the reputation of a named individual and infringing the "rights of others"', the Court has said.¹⁹⁰ The media has an ordinary obligation to verify factual statements¹⁹¹ and can only be dispensed from this where special grounds exist. This will depend on the reasonableness of reliance upon the sources of the information.¹⁹²

Duties and responsibilities may also arise in an employment context. An example of such 'duties and responsibilities' would be the duty of loyalty owed by an employee to the employer in the protection of reputation and commercial interests. A 'whistleblower' employee who chooses to disclose information must carefully verify, to the extent permitted by the circumstances, that it is accurate and reliable.¹⁹³ Along the same lines, a senior police officer who had considerable influence on trade union members and other servicemen 'should have had to exercise her right to freedom of expression in accordance with the duties and responsibilities which that right carries with it in the specific circumstances of her status and in view of the special requirement of discipline in the police force'.¹⁹⁴

Prescribed by law

It is a preliminary condition for any restriction upon the fundamental right that is protected by article 10 that the measure be 'prescribed by law'. This term 'alludes to the very same concept of lawfulness as that to which the Convention refers elsewhere when using the same or similar expressions, notably the expressions "in accordance with the law" and "lawful" found in the second paragraph of Articles 8 to 11'.¹⁹⁵ This means that the impugned measure must have a basis in domestic law, a condition that goes beyond matters of form and that speaks to the quality of the law in question. It includes 'written law', including various forms of delegated legislation, and unwritten law as interpreted and applied by the courts.¹⁹⁶ If the law grants discretion to public authorities, it must be framed with sufficient clarity and specify the manner in which it is to be exercised.¹⁹⁷ The law must be accessible and foreseeable, meaning that it must be ¹⁸⁹ Kaperzyński v. Poland, no. 43206/07, § 57, 3 April 2012; Goodwin v. the United Kingdom, 27 March 1996, §39, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-II; Fressoz and Roire v. France [GC], no. 29183/95, § 54, ECHR 1999-I; Wolek, Kasprów, and Łęski v. Poland (dec.), no. 20953/06, 21 October 2008; Eerikäinen and Others v. Finland, no. 3514/02, § 60, 10 February 2009; Brunet-Lecomte and Lyon Mag' v. France, no. 17265/05, § 42, 6 May 2010.

¹⁹⁰ Axel Springer AG v. Germany [GC], no. 39954/08, § 82, 7 February 2012; Aquilina and Others v. Malta, no. 28040/08, § 44, 14 June 2011; McVicar v. the United Kingdom, no. 46311/99, § 84, ECHR 2002-III; Bladet Tromsø and Stensaas v. Norway [GC], no. 21980/93, § 66, ECHR 1999-III.

¹⁹¹ Wizerkaniuk v. Poland, no. 18990/05, § 66, 5 July 2011.

¹⁹² Axel Springer AG v. Germany [GC], no. 39954/08, § 82, 7 February 2012; McVicar v. the United Kingdom, no. 46311/99, § 84, ECHR 2002-III; Bladet Tromsø and Stensaas v. Norway [GC], no. 21980/93, § 66, ECHR 1999-III; Tønnesberg Blad A.S. and Haukom v. Norway, no. 510/04, § 89, ECHR 2007-III.

¹⁹³ Heinisch v. Germany, no. 28274/08, § 67, ECHR 2011 (extracts).

¹⁹⁴ Szima v. Hungary, no. 29723/11, § 32, 9 October 2012. Also Rekútyeni v. Hungary [GC], no. 25390/94, § 43 in fine, ECHR 1999-III.

¹⁹⁵ Kenedi v. Hungary, no. 31475/05, § 44, 26 May 2009.

¹⁹⁶ Leyla Şahin v. Turkey [GC], no. 44774/98, § 88, ECHR 2005-XI; Sanoma Uitgevers B.V. v. the Netherlands [GC], no. 38224/03, § 83, 14 September 2010.

¹⁹⁷ The Sunday Times v. the United Kingdom (no. 1), 26 April 1979, § 49, Series A no. 30; Tolstoy Miloslavsky v. the United Kingdom, 13 July 1995, § 37, Series A no. 316-B; Rotaru v. Romania [GC], no. 28341/95, § 52, ECHR 2000-V; Hasan and Chaush v. Bulgaria [GC], no. 30985/96, § 84, ECHR 2000-XI; Maestri v. Italy sufficiently precise in its formulation to enable an individual to regulate his or her conduct.

There is a subjective dimension here, because there may be higher expectations of individuals depending upon their training, professional activity, and experience, and it may be reasonable to expect them to obtain expert advice on the law depending upon the circumstances. In a French case, the Court agreed that the relevant case law was dated and rather scant, but it also took into account the fact that the applicants were senior officials of a publishing company. 'Being professionals in the field of publishing it was incumbent on them to apprise themselves of the relevant legal provisions and case-law in such matters, even if it meant taking specialised legal advice', it concluded.¹⁹⁸

There are many examples in the case law of measures taken that infringe the protection of freedom of expression yet that are not prescribed by law. For example, in a Ukrainian case, the applicable legislation concerning defamation authorized a judicial order that the offending statement be retracted but did not entitle the national courts to require an apology, yet one of the applicants was condemned to make one. The European Court held that the infringement was therefore not prescribed by law.¹⁹⁹ Under legislation in the Netherlands, the public prosecutor and not an independent judge had the authority to require surrender of materials obtained by journalists from confidential sources. Acknowledging that 'the public prosecutor, like any public official, is bound by requirements of basic integrity', the Grand Chamber noted that 'in terms of procedure he or she is a "party" defending interests potentially incompatible with journalistic source protection and can hardly be seen as objective and impartial so as to make the necessary assessment of the various competing interests'.²⁰⁰ It concluded: 'Such a situation is scarcely compatible with the rule of law'.²⁰¹ The Court said that 'the quality of the law was deficient in that there was no procedure attended by adequate legal safeguards for the applicant company in order to enable an independent assessment as to whether the interest of the criminal investigation overrode the public interest in the protection of journalistic sources'.²⁰²

Italian legislation governing allocation of telecommunications frequencies 'did not enable the applicant company to foresee, with sufficient certainty, the point at which it might be allocated the frequencies and be able to start performing the activity for which it had been granted a licence, this notwithstanding the successive findings of the Constitutional Court and the CJEU'. Consequently, the foreseeability requirements established by the Court in its case law were not met.²⁰³

The criminal offence of 'denigrating Turkishness', set out in article 301 of the Criminal Code of Turkey, was held to lack the required clarity and therefore to fail the 'quality of law' test. According to the Court, 'while the legislator's aim of protecting and preserving values and State institutions from public denigration can be accepted to a certain extent, the scope of the terms under Article 301 of the Criminal Code, as interpreted by the [GC], no. 39748/98, § 30, ECHR 2004-I; Amann v. Switzerland [GC], no. 27798/95, § 50, ECHR 2000-II; Vajnai v. Hungary, no. 33629/06, § 46, 8 July 2008.

¹⁹⁸ Lindon, Oichakovsky-Laurens, and July v. France [GC], nos 21279/02 and 36448/02, § 42, ECHR 2007-IV.

¹⁹⁹ Editorial Board of Pravoye Delo and Shtikel v. Ukraine, no. 33014/05, §§ 54–59, ECHR 2011 (extracts).

²⁰⁰ Sanoma Uitgevers B.V. v. the Netherlands [GC], no. 38224/03, § 92, 14 September 2010.

²⁰¹ Ibid., § 98.

²⁰² Ibid., § 100.

²⁰³ Centro Europa 7 S.R.L. and di Stefano v. Italy [GC], no. 38433/09, § 153, ECHR 2012.

judiciary, is too wide and vague and thus the provision constitutes a continuing threat to the exercise of the right to freedom of expression'.²⁰⁴ It said that the wording of the provision did not enable individuals to govern their conduct or to foresee the consequences of their acts. In reality, as the Court noted, 'any opinion or idea that is regarded as offensive, shocking or disturbing can easily be the subject of a criminal investigation by public prosecutors'.²⁰⁵ In an earlier case involving article 301 of the Turkish Criminal Code, the Court had declined to rule on the foreseeability issue, taking the view that it was closely related to the nature of the interference and of the right considered in the context of the necessity of the interference.²⁰⁶

Applying legislation in such a way as to extend its application by analogy will fall foul of the requirement that an interference be prescribed by law. For example, Turkish legislation imposed certain formalities to be followed by associations, such as trade unions, wishing to publish or distribute leaflets, statements, or similar publications. The applicants were prosecuted under this provision because they did not follow the procedure in the case of a press conference. The European Court held that in convicting the applicants, the Turkish judicial authorities went beyond what was reasonably foreseeable and thereby 'extended the scope of a criminal statute by applying it by analogy'.²⁰⁷

Legitimate aim

The second component of the analysis is the existence of a legitimate purpose or aim. The inquiry involves the enumeration of purposes set out in paragraph 2, namely the interests of national security, territorial integrity or public safety, the prevention of disorder or crime, the protection of health or morals, the protection of the reputation or rights of others, preventing the disclosure of information received in confidence, and maintaining the authority and impartiality of the judiciary. In practice, this part of the analysis is rarely very important. It is not uncommon for the Court to simply pass over the issue entirely and move to the heart of the debate which takes place under the rubric of 'necessary in a democratic society', finding that it violates the final component of the test regardless of whether it fulfils a legitimate purpose.²⁰⁸ The Grand Chamber has explained that it is the Court's practice 'to be quite succinct when it verifies the existence of a legitimate aim within the meaning of the second paragraphs of Articles 8 to 11 of the Convention'.²⁰⁹

The first of the legitimate aims listed in article 10(2) is national security, territorial integrity, or public safety (à la sécurité nationale, à l'intégrité territoriale ou à la sûreté publique). Public safety also appears in the limitations clauses of articles 8, 9, and 11, and national security in articles 8 and 11, but article 10 is the only provision to include territory integrity. In a Turkish case where a sympathizer of Kurdish activist Abdullah Öcalan was prosecuted under the Law on Associations for signing a declaration in 2001 in support of lifting the ban on activities of the Kurdistan Workers' Party (PKK) imposed by ²⁰⁴ Dink v. Turkey, nos 2668/07, 6102/08, 30079/08, 7072/09, and 7124/09, § 116, 14 September 2010.

Also Tatár and Fáber v. Hungary, no. 26005/08 and 26160/08, § 31, 12 June 2012.

²⁰⁵ Altuğ Taner Akçam v. Turkey, no. 27520/07, §§ 93–95, 25 October 2011.

²⁰⁶ Dink v. Turkey, nos 2668/07, 6102/08, 30079/08, 7072/09, and 7124/09, § 116, 14 September 2010.

Also Tatár and Fáber v. Hungary, no. 26005/08 and 26160/08, § 31, 12 June 2012.

²⁰⁷ Karademirci and Others v. Turkey, nos 37096/97 and 37101/97, § 42, ECHR 2005-I.

²⁰⁸ For example, Bayatyan v. Armenia [GC], no. 23459/03, § 117, ECHR 2011; Ercep v. Turkey, no. 43965/04, § 53, 22 November 2011.

²⁰⁹ S.A.S. v. France [GC], no. 43835/11, § 114, 1 July 2014.

virtue of an Order of the Minister of Interior, the Court recognized a legitimate aim that it said was 'to protect public order and safety'.²¹⁰ In a case dealing with the security situation in south-east Turkey, measures limiting freedom of expression were said to have been 'in furtherance of certain of the aims mentioned by the Government, namely the protection of national security and territorial integrity and the prevention of disorder and crime'.²¹¹

The second legitimate aim or purpose justifying a limitation on article 10(1) is the prevention of disorder or crime (à la défense de l'ordre et à la prévention du crime). In a case concerning artistic expression, where planning regulations were in dispute, the Court considered that the protection of the cultural heritage fell under this rubric as a legitimate purpose.²¹² A ban on display of sectarian emblems in a Northern Irish prison was deemed to fulfil the legitimate aim of prevention of disorder or crime.²¹³ The notion has also been applied in the case of disciplinary matters within the armed forces, such as instigation to insubordination, because this may lead to 'disorder'.²¹⁴

The issue of protection of health or morals (à la protection de la santé ou de la morale), the third of the categories, has arisen mainly in cases involving artistic expression. For example, when publication of Guillaume Appolinaire's Les onze mille verges led to prosecution by Turkish authorities, it was common ground that the legitimate purpose was the protection of morals.²¹⁵ However, in judicial proceedings against a Viennese art gallery for displaying a collage of various public figures in sexual positions, including Mother Teresa, the Austrian cardinal Hermann Groer and the former head of the Austrian Freedom Party Jörg Haider, the Government's argument that the legitimate purpose was the protection of morals was rejected. The Court said that this aim was not referred to in the relevant legislation or court decisions.²¹⁶ In a Swiss case involving prosecution for displaying obscene works of art, the Court had no difficulty with the claim that this pursued the protection of public morals.²¹⁷

The fourth category of legitimate aim set out in article 10(2) is the protection of the reputation or rights of others (la protection de la réputation ou des droits d'autrui). The other three limitations paragraphs, in articles 8, 9, and 11, use a similar, although somewhat distinct, expression: 'the protection of the rights and freedoms of others'. The protection of the reputation or rights of others is unique among the enumerated purposes permitting restriction of freedom of expression in that it is also contemplated by a distinct provision of the Convention, article 8.²¹⁸ Legislation governing defamation claims pursues the legitimate aim of protecting the reputation or rights of others.²¹⁹ In one of the leading cases, Otto-Preminger-Institut v. Austria, the Court considered section

²¹⁰ Aydin v. Germany, no. 16637/07, §§ 66–67, 27 January 2011.

²¹¹ Karatas v. Turkey [GC], no. 23168/94, § 44, ECHR 1999-IV.

²¹² Ehrmann and SCI VHI v. France (dec.), no. 2777/10, § 2, 7 June 2011.

²¹³ Donaldson v. The United Kingdom (dec.), no. 56975/09, § 23, 25 January 2011.

²¹⁴ Sejma v. Hungary, no. 29723/11, § 24, 9 October 2012; Engel and Others v. the Netherlands, 8 June 1976, § 98, Series A no. 22; Vereinigung demokratischer Soldaten Österreichs and Gubi v. Austria, 19 December 1994, § 32, Series A no. 302.

²¹⁵ Akdaş v. Turkey, no. 41056/04, §§ 23–24, 16 February 2010.

²¹⁶ Vereinigung Bildender Künstler v. Austria, no. 68354/01, § 31, 25 January 2007.

²¹⁷ Müller and Others v. Switzerland, 24 May 1988, § 39, Series A no. 133.

²¹⁸ Axel Springer AG v. Germany [GC], no. 39954/08, § 83, 7 February 2012; Chauvy and Others v. France, no. 64915/01, § 70, ECHR 2004-VI; Pfeifer v. Austria, no. 12556/03, § 35, 15 November 2007; Polanco Torres and Movilla Polanco v. Spain, no. 34147/06, § 40, 21 September 2010.

²¹⁹ Aquilina and Others v. Malta, no. 28040/08, § 39, 14 June 2011.

188 of the Austrian Penal Code, whose objective is the suppression of behaviour directed against objects of religious veneration that is likely to cause 'justified indignation', to be pursuing the legitimate purpose of protecting the right of citizens not to be insulted in their religious feelings by the public expression of views of other persons.²²⁰ The term 'others' has been used to apply to political parties²²¹ and to companies and commercial enterprises,²²² as well as to individuals.

The Grand Chamber has said that 'a clear distinction must be made between criticism and insult'.²²³ Dealing with dismissal of trade union officials for publishing a cartoon mocking a firm's human resources manager, the Grand Chamber referred to the International Labour Office's Committee on Freedom of Association, stating that 'in expressing their opinions, trade union organisations should respect the limits of propriety and refrain from the use of insulting language'.²²⁴ Accordingly, the dismissal was compatible with the legitimate aim of protecting the reputation of others.

Preventing the disclosure of information received in confidence (pour empêcher la divulgation d'informations confidentielles), the fifth category of legitimate purpose set out in article 10(2), is without equivalent in any of the other restriction or limitation clauses of the Convention. There is a difference in the English and French texts that has attracted judicial attention. The English wording 'might suggest that the provision relates only to the person who has dealings in confidence with the author of a secret document and that, accordingly, it does not encompass third parties, including persons working in the media'.²²⁵ But the Court has rejected such an interpretation as being unduly restrictive, and has considered it 'appropriate to adopt an interpretation of the phrase "preventing the disclosure of information received in confidence" which encompasses confidential information disclosed either by a person subject to a duty of confidence or by a third party and... by a journalist'.²²⁶ Punishment of a journalist for revealing information received in confidence about a Swiss diplomat was considered compatible with this legitimate aim.²²⁷ In a whistleblowing case, where a senior prosecutor released documents to the media, the Court accepted that the legitimate purpose was preventing the disclosure of information received in confidence. 'In so deciding, the Court finds it significant that at the time of his dismissal the applicant refused to disclose the source of the information, which suggests that it was not easily or publicly available', it said.²²⁸

The final category of legitimate purpose listed in article 10(2) is the maintenance of the authority and impartiality of the judiciary. Because this phrase is to be understood 'within the meaning of the Convention', account is to be taken 'of the central position occupied in this context by Article 6 (art. 6), which reflects the fundamental principle of the rule

²²⁰ Otto-Preminger-Institut v. Austria, 20 September 1994, § 48, Series A no. 295-A. Also Wingrove v. the United Kingdom, 25 November 1996, §§ 46–51, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-V.

²²¹ Lindon, Oshakovskiy-Laurens and July v. France [GC], nos 21279/02 and 36448/02, § 47, ECHR 2007-IV.

²²² Uj v. Hungary, no. 23954/10, § 22, 19 July 2011.

²²³ Palomo Sánchez and Others v. Spain [GC], nos 28955/06, 28957/06, 28959/06, and 28964/06, § 67, ECHR 2011.

²²⁴ Ibid.

²²⁵ Stoll v. Switzerland [GC], no. 69698/01, § 58, ECHR 2007-V.

²²⁶ Ibid., §§ 59–61.

²²⁷ Ibid., § 56.

²²⁸ Guja v. Moldova [GC], no. 14277/04, § 59, ECHR 2008. Also Haseldine v. the United Kingdom, no. 18957/91, Commission decision of 13 May 1992, (1992) 35 YB 47.

of law'.²²⁹ The term 'judiciary' (pouvoir judiciaire) is interpreted broadly so as to include 'the machinery of justice or the judicial branch of government as well as the judges in their official capacity'.²³⁰ The term 'authority of the judiciary' includes the notion that 'the courts are, and are accepted by the public at large as being, the proper forum for the settlement of legal disputes and for the determination of a person's guilt or innocence on a criminal charge'.²³¹ The Court has said that '[w]hat is at stake as regards protection of the authority of the judiciary is the confidence which the courts in a democratic society must inspire in the accused, as far as criminal proceedings are concerned, and also in the public at large'.²³²

Necessity in a democratic society

Any infringement on freedom of expression, to the extent that it is prescribed by law and responds to a legitimate aim, can only restrict the right if it is 'necessary in a democratic society'. The Convention organs have often said that the 'necessity' for any restriction on freedom of expression must be 'established convincingly'.²³³ The first step in this analysis of necessity involves determining whether there is a 'pressing social need'.²³⁴ The pressing social need must be appreciated in the context of the interests of a democratic society. For example, when press freedom is at issue, the importance for a democratic society of ensuring and maintaining a free press must be weighed in the balance.²³⁵ Where freedom of the press is at stake, the national authorities have only a limited margin of appreciation to decide whether there is a 'pressing social need' to take such measures.²³⁶ The Court has often insisted that there can be little scope for restrictions on political speech or on debates about questions of public interest.²³⁷

In assessing this pressing social need, States enjoy 'a certain margin of appreciation'. This margin of appreciation goes hand in hand with European supervision, embracing both the legislation and the decisions applying it, even those given by an independent tribunal. The Court is therefore empowered to give the final ruling on whether any 'formalities, conditions, restrictions or penalties' are reconcilable with freedom of expression as protected by article 10.

In supervising the respect for freedom of expression, the Court does not take the place of domestic courts. Rather, it reviews the decisions they have taken in light of their own power of appreciation, ensuring that this has been done reasonably, carefully, and in good faith. The European Court looks at the interference complained of in the light of the case as a whole, assessing whether the reasons given by the national authorities to justify the ²²⁹ The Sunday Times v. the United Kingdom (no. 1), 26 April 1979, § 55, Series A no. 30.

²³⁰ Ibid.

²³¹ Kyprianou v. Cyprus [GC], no. 73797/01, § 172, ECHR 2005-XIII; Worm v. Austria, 29 August 1997, § 40, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-V.

²³² Kyprianou v. Cyprus [GC], no. 73797/01, § 172, ECHR 2005-XIII.

²³³ Steel and Morris v. the United Kingdom, no. 68416/01, § 87, ECHR 2005-II; Mouvement raëlien suisse v. Switzerland [GC], no. 16354/06, § 48, ECHR 2012 (extracts).

²³⁴ Otegi Mondragon v. Spain, no. 2034/07, § 49, ECHR 2011.

²³⁵ Fatullayev v. Azerbaijan, no. 40984/07, § 82, 22 April 2010.

²³⁶ Wizerkaniuk v. Poland, no. 18990/05, § 65, 5 July 2011.

²³⁷ Verein gegen Tierfabriken Schweiz (VgT) v. Switzerland (no. 2) [GC], no. 32772/02, § 92, ECHR 2009; Lingens v. Austria, 8 July 1986, § 42, Series A no. 103; Castells v. Spain, 23 April 1992, § 43, Series A no. 236; Thorgeir Thorgeirson v. Iceland, 25 June 1992, § 63, Series A no. 239; Wingrove v. the United Kingdom, 25 November 1996, § 58, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-V; Monnat v. Switzerland, no. 73604/01, § 58, ECHR 2006-X.

interference were 'relevant and sufficient' and whether the measure taken was 'proportionate to the legitimate aims pursued'.²³⁸ In doing so, the Court has to satisfy itself that the national authorities applied standards which were in conformity with the principles embodied in article 10 and, moreover, that they relied on an acceptable assessment of the relevant facts.²³⁹

Gravity is an important issue in determining the proportionality of interferences. A prohibition upon prisoners wearing an Easter lily outside their cells, something considered to be a sectarian emblem, was considered in light of the fact that it constituted a 'relatively minor interference' with freedom of expression.²⁴⁰ In a whistleblowing case involving a public servant, the Court identified several following factors to be balanced in determining whether the interference was proportional: the public interest involved in the disclosed information; the authenticity of the information disclosed; the damage, if any, suffered by the public authority as a result of the disclosure; the motive behind the actions of the reporting employee; and the penalty imposed.²⁴¹

The nature and severity of any penalties are factors that are often considered in assessing the proportionality of an interference.²⁴² As a general principle, the nature and severity of any sanction imposed are relevant factors in assessing the proportionality of an interference.²⁴³ Civil sanctions such as an injunction are generally viewed to be less serious than criminal punishments.²⁴⁴ The Grand Chamber said a sentence of five days' imprisonment, to be served immediately, imposed upon a senior lawyer for contempt of court, was 'harsh' and disproportionate. It constituted a breach of article 10 in that it was imposed as a reaction to comments made by the lawyer on behalf of his client during a trial.²⁴⁵ The severity of sanctions is of special importance when the press is involved because of the danger that this may deter its engagement in matters of legitimate public concern.²⁴⁶

Sometimes, harsh sentences have been imposed for acts of political protest that, absent the political dimension, would never have attracted such punishment. A sentence of ten days' administrative detention, the maximum allowed by the law, on a 63-year-old woman with no criminal record for 'petty hooliganism', imposed because she had removed a ribbon from a memorial wreath as a form of political protest, failed the necessity test and constituted a violation of article 10.²⁴⁷ A sentence of more than ²³⁸ Hertel v. Switzerland, 25 August 1998, § 46, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-VI; Steel and Morris v. the United Kingdom, no. 68416/01, § 87, ECHR 2005-II; Stoll v. Switzerland [GC], no. 69698/01, § 101, ECHR 2007-V.

²³⁹ Mamère v. France, no. 12697/03, § 19, ECHR 2006-XIII; Lindon, Otchakovskiy-Laurens, and July v. France [GC], nos 21279/02 and 36448/02, § 45, ECHR 2007-IV; Perna v. Italy [GC], no. 48898/99, § 39, ECHR 2003-V; Zana v. Turkey, 25 November 1997, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-VII, pp. 2547–8, § 51; Aquilina and Others v. Malta, no. 28040/08, §§ 40–42, 14 June 2011.

²⁴⁰ Donaldson v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 56975/09, §§ 31–33, 25 January 2011.

²⁴¹ Guja v. Moldova [GC], no. 14277/04, § 74, ECHR 2008. Also Heinisch v. Germany, no. 28274/08, §§ 71–92, ECHR 2011 (extracts).

²⁴² Otegi Mondragon v. Spain, no. 2034/07, § 58, ECHR 2011.

²⁴³ PETA Deutschland v. Germany, no. 43481/09, § 50, 8 November 2012; Ceylan v. Turkey [GC], no. 23556/94, § 37, ECHR 1999-IV; Annen II v. Germany (dec.), nos 2373/07 and 2396/07, 30 March 2010; Skatka v. Poland, no. 43425/98, §§ 41–42, 27 May 2003; Pedersen and Baadsgaard v. Denmark [GC], no. 49017/99, § 93, ECHR 2004-XI.

²⁴⁴ PETA Deutschland v. Germany, no. 43481/09, § 50, 8 November 2012.

²⁴⁵ Kyprianou v. Cyprus [GC], no. 73797/01, §§ 178–180, ECHR 2005-XIII.

²⁴⁶ Cumpănă and Mazăre v. Romania [GC], no. 33348/96, § 111, ECHR 2004-XI.

²⁴⁷ Shuydka v. Ukraine, no. 17888/12, §§ 35–42, 30 October 2014.

13 years' imprisonment for vandalizing statues of Atatürk was 'grossly disproportionate'.²⁴⁸ In general, 'peaceful and non-violent forms of expression should not be made subject to the threat of imposition of a custodial sentence'.²⁴⁹

Some interferences are inherently serious because of what is at stake. Thus, 'an attack on the respectability of individuals by using grossly insulting or offensive expressions in the professional environment is, on account of its disruptive effects, a particularly serious form of misconduct capable of justifying severe sanctions'.²⁵⁰ But in a defamation case, the Court thought a €1,000 fine was disproportionate.²⁵¹ According to the Court, given the margin of appreciation allowed to States, criminal sanctions for defamation cannot be considered disproportionate.²⁵² A criminal sentence depriving a media professional of the right to exercise his or her profession was described as 'very harsh' because it heightens the risk of a chilling effect on public debate. According to the Court, this has potentially 'an enormous dissuasive effect for an open and unhindered public debate on matters of public interest'.²⁵³ Imposition of a fine upon parliamentarians for a rather innocuous protest that purportedly disrupted an official session threatened to have a 'chilling effect on the parliamentary opposition' and was consequently contrary to article 10.²⁵⁴

Politicians have a right to the protection of their reputation, even when not acting in a private capacity, 'but the requirements of that protection have to be weighed against the interests of open discussion of political issues, since exceptions to freedom of expression must be interpreted narrowly'.²⁵⁵ They are expected to have a thick skin, especially when they have themselves shown little respect for others.²⁵⁶ But this does not mean 'that politicians should not be given an opportunity to defend themselves when they consider that publications about them are erroneous and capable of misleading public opinion'.²⁵⁷

Public officials are also subject to wider limits of criticism than private individuals, although the criteria applied to them cannot be the same as for politicians.²⁵⁸ The State is also entitled to protect its own institutions from abuses that may be associated with expression. The Court has said that although 'it is perfectly legitimate for the institutions of the State, as guarantors of the institutional public order, to be protected by the ²⁴⁸ Murat Vural v. Turkey, no. 9540/07, § 68, 21 October 2014.

²⁴⁹ Ibid., citing Akgöl and Gül v. Turkey, nos 28495/06 and 28516/06, § 43, 17 May 2011.

²⁵⁰ Palomo Sánchez and Others v. Spain [GC], nos 28955/06, 28957/06, 28959/06, and 28964/06, § 76, ECHR 2011; Editions Plon v. France, no. 58148/00, § 44, ECHR 2004-IV.

²⁵¹ Vellutini and Michel v. France, no. 32820/09, § 43, 6 October 2011.

²⁵² Lindon, Ouchakovskiy-Laurens and July v. France [GC], nos 21279/02 and 36448/02, § 59, ECHR 2007-IV; Radio France and Others v. France, no. 53984/00, §40, ECHR 2004-II; Rumyana Ivanova v. Bulgaria, no. 36207/03, § 68, 14 February 2008; Reinboth and Others v. Finland, no. 30865/08, § 90, 25 January 2011; Kaperzyński v. Poland, no. 43206/07, § 69, 3 April 2012.

²⁵³ Kaperzyński v. Poland, no. 43206/07, § 74, 3 April 2012; Cumpănă and Mazăre v. Romania [GC], no. 33348/96, § 118, ECHR 2004-XI.

²⁵⁴ Szél and Others v. Hungary, no. 44357/13, § 85, 16 September 2014. Also Kardosony and Others v. Hungary, no. 42461/13, § 88, 16 September 2014.

²⁵⁵ Artun and Güvener v. Turkey, no. 75510/01, § 26, 26 June 2007; Otegi Mondragon v. Spain, no. 20341/07, § 50, ECHR 2011; Pakdemirli v. Turkey, no. 35839/97, § 45, 22 February 2005.

²⁵⁶ Lindon, Ouchakovskiy-Laurens, and July v. France [GC], nos 21279/02 and 36448/02, § 56, ECHR 2007-IV; Wirtschafts-Trend Zeitschriften-Verlags GmbH v. Austria, no. 58547/00, § 37, 27 October 2005; Oberschlick v. Austria (no. 2), 1 July 1997, § 34, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-IV.

²⁵⁷ Gajior v. Poland, no. 34472/07, § 43, 21 February 2012; Sanocki v. Poland, no. 28949/03, §§ 61–62, 17 July 2007.

²⁵⁸ Janowski v. Poland [GC], no. 25716/94, § 33, ECHR 1999-I.

competent authorities, the dominant position occupied by those institutions requires the authorities to display restraint in resorting to criminal proceedings'.²⁵⁹

Another relevant factor in the proportionality determination is the extent to which the impugned expression is disseminated. For example, in assessing whether an interference was 'necessary' in the case of a work of fiction, the Court noted that a novel is a form of artistic expression that, 'although potentially maintaining its readership for a longer period, appeals generally to a relatively narrow public compared with the print media'. This meant that the number of persons exposed to the offending remarks and the potential damage to rights and reputation was limited.²⁶⁰ There is a higher level of tolerance when statements are made spontaneously, for example at a press conference,²⁶¹ rather than in a publication, where there has been time for sober reflection.²⁶² Legislation often exonerates the press in cases of defamation when the impugned statement is merely reproduced verbatim from another source. The Court has suggested that this is a fairly general approach.²⁶³

There is an important distinction between statements of fact and value judgments. According to the Court, '[w]hile the existence of facts can be demonstrated, the truth of value judgments is not susceptible of proof. The requirement to prove the truth of a value judgment is impossible to fulfil and infringes freedom of opinion itself, which is a fundamental part of the right secured by Article 10.'²⁶⁴ Nevertheless, even a value judgment must have some factual basis. Otherwise, it is excessive.²⁶⁵ The requirement that facts be produced to support a value judgment is less stringent if the information is well known.²⁶⁶

When fiction is concerned, there can obviously be no requirement that the statements be 'true'. However, sometimes 'fiction' introduces real characters or facts, and when this is the case the author or publisher may be required to show that passages in a novel found to be defamatory have a 'sufficient factual basis'. They are more than mere value judgments.²⁶⁷

The extent of acceptable criticism will be narrower when private individuals are concerned than when it is directed at politicians or civil servants acting in the exercise of their functions.²⁶⁸ Unlike a private citizen, the politician 'inevitably and knowingly lays himself open to close scrutiny of his every word and deed by both journalists and the ²⁵⁹ Otegi Mondragon v. Spain, no. 2034/07, § 58, ECHR 2011.

²⁶⁰ Lindon, Oschakovsky-Laurens, and July v. France [GC], nos 21279/02 and 36448/02, § 47, ECHR 2007-IV.

²⁶¹ Otegi Mondragon v. Spain, no. 2034/07, § 53, ECHR 2011.

²⁶² Palomo Sánchez and Others v. Spain [GC], nos 28955/06, 28957/06, 28959/06, and 28964/06, Joint Dissenting Opinion of Judges Tulkens, David Thór Björgvinsson, Jociene, Popović, and Vučinić, ECHR 2011.

²⁶³ Editorial Board of Pravoye Delo and Shekel v. Ukraine, no. 33014/05, § 61, ECHR 2011 (extracts), citing Jersild v. Denmark, 23 September 1994, § 35, Series A no. 298; Thoma v. Luxembourg, no. 38432/97, § 62, ECHR 2001-III.

²⁶⁴ Otegi Mondragon v. Spain, no. 2034/07, § 54, ECHR 2011; Fuentes Bobo v. Spain, no. 39293/98, § 46, 29 February 2000; Bırol v. Turkey, no. 44104/98, § 30, 1 March 2005; Prager and Oberschlick v. Austria, 26 April 1995, § 36, Series A no. 313.

²⁶⁵ Lindon, Oschakovsky-Laurens, and July v. France [GC], nos 21279/02 and 36448/02, § 55, ECHR 2007-IV.

²⁶⁶ Feldek v. Slovakia, no. 29032/95, § 86, ECHR 2001-VIII.

²⁶⁷ Lindon, Oschakovsky-Laurens and July v. France [GC], nos 21279/02 and 36448/02, § 55, ECHR 2007-IV.

²⁶⁸ Palomo Sánchez and Others v. Spain [GC], nos 28955/06, 28957/06, 28959/06, and 28964/06, § 71, ECHR 2011.

public at large, and he must consequently display a greater degree of tolerance'.²⁶⁹ In a case involving defamation proceedings against an Icelandic journalist by the owner of a strip club, the Court said that:

by having engaged in the particular kind of business in question and bearing in mind also the legitimate public concern highlighted in paragraph 67 above, Mr Y must be considered to have inevitably and knowingly entered the public domain and lain himself open to close scrutiny of his acts. The limits of acceptable criticism must accordingly be wider than in the case of a private individual or an ordinary professional.²⁷⁰

The Court dealt with a case of lèse majesté directed at the King of Spain as if he were a political figure and did not attach any special significance to the position as head of State.²⁷¹ It said that 'while some of the remarks made in the applicant's speech portrayed the institution embodied by the King in a very negative light, with a hostile connotation, they did not advocate the use of violence, nor did they amount to hate speech, which in the Court's view is the essential element to be taken into account'.²⁷² According to the Court, the fact that 'the King occupies a neutral position in political debate and acts as an arbitrator and a symbol of State unity should not shield him from all criticism in the exercise of his official duties or— as in the instant case—in his capacity as representative of the State which he symbolises, in particular from persons who challenge in a legitimate manner the constitutional structures of the State, including the monarchy'.²⁷³ In Colombani, French legislation that made foreign heads of State and diplomats immune to criticism solely because of their status was considered. The Court said this 'could not be reconciled with modern practice and political conceptions', concluding that it was the special protection afforded to foreign heads of State that undermined freedom of expression.²⁷⁴ In making the assessment with respect to public figures, it is relevant whether the impugned remarks concern private or personal matters,²⁷⁵ or personal honour,²⁷⁶ or whether they constitute a gratuitous attack.²⁷⁷

The prohibition of hate speech is a limitation on freedom of expression that is dictated by international law. A general rule appears in article 7 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights: 'All are entitled to equal protection against any discrimination in violation of this Declaration and against any incitement to such discrimination.' A more specific obligation concerning the prohibition of incitement to hatred appears in article 20(2) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights: 'Any advocacy of national, racial or religious hatred that constitutes incitement to discrimination, hostility or violence shall be prohibited by law.' The Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe has defined the notion of 'hate speech' as covering 'all forms of expression which spread, incite, ²⁶⁹ Otegi Mondragon v. Spain, no. 2034/07, § 50, ECHR 2011; Lingens v. Austria, 8 July 1986, § 42, Series A no. 103; Vides Aizsardzibas Klubs v. Latvia, no. 57829/00, § 40, 27 May 2004; Lopes Gomes da Silva v. Portugal, no. 37698/97, § 30, ECHR 2000-X.

²⁷⁰ Björk Eidsdóttir v. Iceland, no. 46443/09, § 68, 10 July 2012.

²⁷¹ Otegi Mondragon v. Spain, no. 2034/07, § 54, ECHR 2011.

²⁷² Ibid.

²⁷³ Otegi Mondragon v. Spain, no. 2034/07, § 56, ECHR 2011.

²⁷⁴ Colombani and Others v. France, no. 51279/99, § 69, ECHR 2002-V. Also Artun and Güvener v. Turkey, no. 75510/01, § 31, 26 June 2007; Pakdemirli v. Turkey, no. 35839/97, § 52, 22 February 2005.

²⁷⁵ Standard Verlags GmbH v. Austria (no. 2), no. 21277/05, 4 June 2009; Von Hannover v. Germany, no. 59320/00, § 64, ECHR 2004-VI.

²⁷⁶ Otegi Mondragon v. Spain, no. 2034/07, § 57, ECHR 2011.

²⁷⁷ Pakdemirli v. Turkey, no. 35839/97, § 46, 22 February 2005.

promote or justify racial hatred, xenophobia, anti-Semitism or other forms of hatred based on intolerance²⁷⁸

The European Court has examined the proportionality of measures directed at restricting hate speech in a number of decisions. The Court has noted that inciting to hatred does not necessarily entail a call for an act of violence, or other criminal acts. Consequently, '[a]ttacks on persons committed by insulting, holding up to ridicule or slandering specific groups of the population can be sufficient for the authorities to favour combating racist speech in the face of freedom of expression exercised in an irresponsible manner'.²⁷⁹ Political speeches that incite hatred based upon religious, ethnic, or cultural prejudice 'représentent un danger pour la paix sociale et la stabilité politique dans les États démocratiques'.²⁸⁰ Frequently, cases concerning hate speech have been declared inadmissible pursuant to article 17 of the European Convention.²⁸¹

One particular form of legislation dealing with incitement of hatred is directed at 'denialism'. The most familiar example is provided by measures in a number of States directed at those who contest the existence or scale of the destruction of the European Jews by the Nazi regime. In a German case, the prohibition by a civil court of public display of pamphlets denying the Holocaust was deemed necessary in a democratic society, given that it rests upon 'principles of tolerance and broadmindedness which the pamphlets in question clearly failed to observe'. The European Commission further addressed the fact that German legislation dealt specifically with Holocaust denial: 'The fact that collective protection against defamation is limited to certain specific groups including Jews is based on objective considerations and does not involve any element of discrimination contrary to Article 14 of the Convention'.²⁸² In another case, the Court noted the importance of the specific 'historical and social context in which the expression of opinion takes place', noting 'that a reference to the Holocaust must also be seen in the specific context of the German past . . . and respects the Government's stance that they deem themselves under a special obligation towards the Jews living in Germany'.²⁸³

The measures directed at denialism are, of course, intimately related to the protection of minorities against racism. When Swiss legislation directed at denial of genocide in a more general sense, the Court considered that the prosecution of a Turkish extremist for contesting the Armenian genocide of 1915 was not consistent with the Convention, noting that it had not been alleged by the applicants that the denial was intended to incite

²⁷⁸ Recommendation No. R (97) 20.

²⁷⁹ Vejdeland v. Sweden, no. 1813/07, § 55, 9 February 2012; Féret v. Belgium, no. 15615/07, § 73, 16 July 2009.

²⁸⁰ Féret v. Belgium, no. 15615/07, § 73, 16 July 2009.

²⁸¹ J. Glimmerveen and J. Hagenbeek v. the Netherlands, nos 8348/78 and 8406/78 (joined), Commission decision of 11 October 1979, (1980) 23 YB 366, DR 18, p. 187; Marais v. France, no. 31159/96, Commission decision of 24 June 1996, DR 86, p. 184; Lehideux and Isorni v. France, 23 September 1998, §§ 47 and 53, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-VII.

²⁸² X. v. Federal Republic of Germany, no. 9235/81, Commission decision of 16 July 1982, DR 29, p. 194. See also B.H., M.W., H.P., and G.K. v. Austria, no. 12774/87, Commission decision of 12 October 1989, DR 62, p. 216; Honsik v. Austria, no. 25062/94, Commission decision of 18 October 1995, DR 83-A, p. 77; Nationaldemokratische Partei Deutschlands Bezirksverband München-Oberbayern v. Germany, no. 25992/94, Commission decision of 29 November 1995, DR 84, p. 149; D.I. v. Germany, no. 26551/95, Commission decision of 29 June 1996.

²⁸³ PETA Deutschland v. Germany, no. 43481/09, § 49, 8 November 2012. For a note of caution about such relativism, see PETA Deutschland v. Germany, no. 43481/09, Concurring Opinion of Judge Zupančič, Joined by Judge Spielmann, 8 November 2012.

hatred against Armenians or that manifestations of racism had taken place during the relevant period.²⁸⁴ The Court has insisted that it does not 'arbitrate the underlying historical issues which are part of a continuing debate between historians that shapes opinion as to the events which took place and their interpretation'.²⁸⁵ The case of 'established historical facts', of which the Holocaust is pre-eminent, stands as an exception to this general rule.²⁸⁶

Protection of copyright obviously results in possible interference with the exercise of freedom of expression. The Court has explained that balancing of rights is involved, given that the interest of protecting intellectual property is contemplated by article 1 of Protocol No. 1.²⁸⁷ The positive obligation upon States to protect intellectual property through the enforcement of copyright provides 'weighty reasons' to justify interference with freedom of expression.²⁸⁸

Discrimination

It does not appear that the Convention organs have ever found a violation of article 14 in association with article 10.

A media outlet alleged discriminatory treatment when it was excluded from attending a trial involving juvenile offenders. The judge authorized a limited number of journalists to attend, chosen by drawing lots, but the applicant was not among the successful ones. The Court held that although there was a difference there was no unjustified discriminatory treatment, in that it was necessary to limit access to the hearing and the method of selection chosen fell within the margin of appreciation.²⁸⁹

An Irish republican detainee in a British prison complained of discrimination in his freedom of expression when he sought to wear an Easter lily as a manifestation of his political views. He argued that loyalist prisoners were allowed to wear poppies to honour war victims, a tradition that was not followed by Irish nationalists, and that he should be allowed to do the same. The Court noted that the Prison Service had differentiated on the basis that the Easter lily was an emblem directly related to the community conflict, whereas the poppy was an emblem that distinguished one community from the other in Northern Ireland but was not directly connected with the conflict. The Court said States were entitled to a wide margin of appreciation in assessing the emblems that might inflame existing tensions if displayed publicly and those that should not. Therefore, prisoners who wore a poppy were not in an analogous situation to the applicant and there was no prohibited discrimination related to article 10.²⁹⁰

A French magazine complained of discrimination because it was prosecuted for publishing photos associated with an article on remuneration of professional athletes because they included tobacco advertising. It argued that similar restrictions were not ²⁸⁴ Perinçek v. Switzerland, no. 27510/08, §§ 51–54, 17 December 2013.

²⁸⁵ Farullayev v. Azerbaijan, no. 40984/07, § 87, 22 April 2010; Chauvy and Others v. France, no. 64915/01, § 69, ECHR 2004-VI; Karsai v. Hungary, no. 5380/07, § 35, 1 December 2009; Giniewski v. France, no. 64016/00, §§ 50–51, ECHR 2006-I.

²⁸⁶ Garaudy v. France (dec.), no. 65831/01, ECHR 2003-IX; Lehideux and Isorni v. France, 23 September 1998, § 47, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-VII.

²⁸⁷ Anheuser-Busch Inc. v. Portugal [GC], no. 73049/01, § 72, ECHR 2007-I.

²⁸⁸ Neij and Sunde Kolmisoppi v. Sweden (dec.), no. 40397/12, 19 February 2013.

²⁸⁹ Axel Springer AG v. Germany (dec.), no. 44585/10, 13 March 2012.

²⁹⁰ Donaldson v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 56975/09, §§ 38–39, 25 January 2011.

placed on audio-visual media. The Court dismissed the complaint because it said that the print media were not similarly situated.²⁹¹

Reservations and declarations

There have been four reservations to article 10 of the Convention. Azerbaijan formulated a reservation concerning a requirement of a certain level of national ownership of mass media.²⁹² Malta made a reservation concerning restrictions upon the political activity of public officers during working hours or on official premises.²⁹³ Monaco made a reservation with respect to a State monopoly on radio and television broadcasting.²⁹⁴

Portugal formulated the following reservation: 'Article 10 of the Convention will be applied subject to Article 38(6) of the Constitution of the Portuguese Republic, which provides that television may not be privately owned.'²⁹⁵ It was withdrawn in 1987.²⁹⁶

Spain formulated an interpretative declaration specifying that the final sentence of article 10(1) is to be interpreted as being compatible with the system governing the organization of radio and television broadcasting then in effect.²⁹⁷ At the time of ratification, in 1974, France formulated the following interpretative declaration: 'The Government of France declares that it interprets the provisions of Article 10 as being compatible with the system established in France under Act No. 72-553 of 10 July 1972, determining the legal status of the French Radio and Television.'²⁹⁸ France withdrew the declaration in 1988.²⁹⁹

None of these reservations or declarations appears to have been at issue in any litigation.

Further reading

- Yutaka Arai, 'Article 10: Freedom of Expression', in Harris et al., eds, Law of the European Convention, pp. 443–514.
- Eduardo Andres Bertoni, 'The Inter-American Court of Human Rights and the European Court of Human Rights: A Dialogue on Freedom of Expression Standards', [2009] EHRLR 332.
- Violeta Bešević, 'A Short Guide to Militant Democracy: Some Remarks on the Strasbourg Jurisprudence', in Wolfgang Benedek, Florence Benoit-Rohmer, Wolfram Karl, and Manfred Nowak, eds, European Yearbook on Human Rights, Antwerp: Intersentia and Vienna-Graz, Neuer Wissenschaftlicher Verlag, 2012, pp. 243–57.
- Antoin Buyse, 'The Truth, the Past and the Present: Article 10 and Situations of Transition', in Antoine Buyse and Michael Hamilton, eds, Transitional Jurisprudence and the ECHR, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2011, pp. 131–50.
- Josep Casadevall, Egbert Myjer, Michael O'Boyle, and Anna Austin, eds, Freedom of Expression, Essays in Honour of Nicolas Bratza, Oisterwijk: Wolf Publishers, 2012.
- Marina Castellaneta, La libertà di stampa nel diritto internazionale ed europeo, Bari: Cacucci, 2012.

²⁹¹ Société de conception de presse et d'édition and Ponson v. France, no. 26935/05, § 80, 5 March 2009. Also Hachette Filipacchi Presse Automobile and Dupuy v. France, no. 13353/05, § 65, 5 March 2009.

²⁹² (2002) 45 YB 17.

²⁹³ (1966) 9 YB 24–25.

²⁹⁴ (2005) 48 YB 11.

²⁹⁵ (1978) 21 YB 14–15.

²⁹⁶ (1987) 30 YB 4–5.

²⁹⁷ (1979) 22 YB 22–25.

²⁹⁸ (1974) 17 YB 4.

²⁹⁹ (1988) 31 YB 4.

- Gérard Cohen-Jonathan, 'Article 10', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 365–418.
- Margaret de Merieux, 'The German Competition Law and Article 10 ECHR', (1995) 20 European Law Review 388.
- Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 339–72.
- Grabenwarter, European Convention, pp. 251–96.
- Mauro Gatti, 'Mouvement Raëlien Suisse v. Switzerland (Eur. Ct. H.R.), Introductory Note', (2012) 51 International Legal Materials 925.
- John Hedigan, 'The Princess, the Press and Privacy. Observations on Caroline von Hannover v. Germany', in Lucius Caflisch, Johan Callewaert, Roderick Liddell, Paul Mahoney, and Mark Villiger, eds, Liber Amicorum Luzius Wildhaber, Kehl, Germany: N.P. Engel, 2007, pp. 193–206.
- Christian Jacq and Francis Teitgen, 'The Press', in Mireille Delmas-Marty, ed., The European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights, Dordrecht/Boston/London: Martinus Nijhoff, 1992, pp. 59–81.
- Renée Koering-Joulin, 'Public Morals', in Mireille Delmas-Marty, ed., The European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights, Dordrecht/Boston/London: Martinus Nijhoff, 1992, pp. 83–98.
- Katrien Lefever, Hannes Cannie, and Peggy Valcke, 'Watching Live Sport on Television: A Human Right?', [2010] EHRLR 396.
- Loukis G. Loucaides, 'The Right to Information', in Loukis G. Loucaides, Essays on the Developing Law of Human Rights, The Hague: Brill, 1995, pp. 3–31.
- Darragh Murray, 'Freedom of Expression, Counter-Terrorism and the Internet in Light of the UK Terrorist Act 2006 and the Jurisprudence of the European Court of Human Rights', (2009) 27 Netherlands Quarterly of Human Rights 331.
- M. O'Boyle, 'Right to Speak and Associate under Strasbourg Case-Law with Reference to Eastern and Central Europe', (1993) 8 Connecticut Journal of International Law 282.
- Mario Oetheimer, 'Protecting Freedom of Expression: The Challenge of Hate Speech in the European Court of Human Rights Case Law', (2009) 17 Cardozo Journal of International & Comparative Law 427.
- Ovey/White, Jacobs and White, European Convention, pp. 276–89.
- Karen Reid, A Practitioner's Guide to the European Convention on Human Rights, London: Sweet & Maxwell, 2011, pp. 464–503.
- Arjen van Rijn, 'Freedom of Expression (Article 10)', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 773–816.
- M.A. Sanderson, 'Is Von Hannover v Germany a Step Backward for the Substantive Analysis of Speech and Privacy Interest?', (2004) 6 EHRLR 631.
- Jasper P. Sluijs, 'From Competition to Freedom of Expression: Introducing Article 10 ECHR in the European Network Neutrality Debate', (2012) 12 HRLR 509.
- Albert Verdoodt, 'The Right to Use a Language of One's Choice', (1995) 38 A YB 50.
- D. Voorhoof and J. Englebert, 'La liberté d'expression syndicale mise à mal par la Cour européenne des droits de l'homme', (2010) 83 RTDH 743.
- Dirk Voorhoof and Patrick Humbler, 'The Right to Freedom of Expression in the Workplace under Article 10 ECHR', in Filip Dorssemont, Klaus Lörcher, and Isabelle Schömann, eds, The European Convention on Human Rights and the Employment Relation, Oxford/Portland: OR: Hart, 2013, pp. 237–86.
- Patrick Wachsmann, 'Liberté d'expression et négationnisme', [2001] RTDH 585.
- Guido Westkamp, 'Axel Springer AG v. Germany; Von Hannover v. Germany (no. 2) (Eur. Ct. H.R.), Introductory Note', (2012) 51 International Legal Materials 631.
- Katja J. Ziegler, 'The Princess and the Press: Privacy After Caroline van Hannover v. Germany', in Katja S. Ziegler, ed., Human Rights and Private Law: Privacy as Autonomy, Oxford: Hart Publishing, 2007, pp. 189–208.

Article 11. Freedom of assembly and association/Liberté de réunion et d'association

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and to freedom of association with others, including the right to form and to join trade unions for the protection of his interests.

2. No restrictions shall be placed on the exercise of these rights other than such as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security or public safety, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others. This article shall not prevent the imposition of lawful restrictions on the exercise of these rights by members of the armed forces, of the police or of the administration of the State.

1. Toute personne a droit à la liberté de réunion pacifique et à la liberté d'association, y compris le droit de fonder avec d'autres des syndicats et de s'affilier à des syndicats pour la défense de ses intérêts.

2. L'exercice de ces droits ne peut faire l'objet d'autres restrictions que celles qui, prévues par la loi, constituent des mesures nécessaires, dans une société démocratique, à la sécurité nationale, à la sûreté publique, à la défense de l'ordre et à la prévention du crime, à la protection de la santé ou de la morale, ou à la protection des droits et libertés d'autrui. Le présent article n'interdit pas que des restrictions légitimes soient imposées à l'exercice de ces droits par les membres des forces armées, de la police ou de l'administration de l'État.

Introductory comments

Although freedom of association and peaceful assembly are often grouped with the other two great freedoms, religion and expression, in a sense they are adjectival rights in that they provide a means to implement the other freedoms. In his seminal 'four freedoms' speech, Franklin D. Roosevelt listed religion and expression but not association and peaceful assembly. Freedom of peaceful assembly and association are closely related to the exercise of political rights as part of modern democracy, although they also take on significance with respect to the practice of religion. They were widely recognized in national constitutions well before their codification in international human rights instruments.¹ An early formulation appears in the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States: 'Congress shall make no law... abridging... the right of the people peaceably to assemble.'

Within the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, they are formulated in a succinct sentence, article 20(1): 'Everyone has the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and association.' It is followed by a second, related provision: '(2) No one may be compelled to belong to an association.' During the drafting of the Declaration, the right to freedom of association was closely related to important debates about the rights of trade unions, and the second sentence of article 20 was obviously directed at issues relating to compulsory membership in unions. In addition to a general recognition of freedom of association, the Declaration also affirms, in article 23(4): 'Everyone has the right to form and to join trade unions for the protection of his interests.'

¹ UN Doc. E/CN.4/AC.1/3/Add.1, pp 147-58.

The close relationship between freedom of association and trade unions is reinforced by a very substantial body of law generated within the International Labour Organisation. Its central instrument is Convention No. 87 on Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise, adopted in 1948.² The influence of Convention No. 87 was certainly felt by the drafters of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. A more contemporary assertion of freedom of association appears in the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union: 'Everyone has the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and to freedom of association at all levels, in particular in political, trade union and civic matters, which implies the right of everyone to form and to join trade unions for the protection of his or her interests.'³ The scope of article 12 of the Charter is wider than article 11 of the Convention because it may be extended to the European Union level.⁴

Within the Council of Europe system, the European Social Charter of 1961 and the revised European Social Charter of 1996 affirm that 'workers and employers have the right to freedom of association in national or international organisations for the protection of their economic and social interests'. Detailed provisions of the Charters set out the right to organize and to collective bargaining.⁵ The European Commission for Democracy through Law (the Venice Commission) has devoted considerable attention to freedom of assembly and freedom of association, issuing many opinions on detailed issues and legislative provisions. Of particular interest is its opinion interpreting the guidelines of the Organisation for Security and Cooperation in Europe and the Office of Democratic Initiatives and Human Rights dealing with freedom of peaceful assembly.⁶ The Venice Commission has issued guidelines on the financing of political parties,⁷ on their dissolution,⁸ and on a range of related issues.⁹ Freedom of assembly and association has also featured in work of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe.¹⁰

Drafting of the provision

The initial draft European Convention on Human Rights was prepared by the International Juridical Section of the European Movement, chaired by Pierre-Henri Teitgen, with David Maxwell Fyfe and Fernand Dehousse as rapporteurs. Both Maxwell Fyfe and Dehousse had been involved in the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human ² International Labour Organisation Convention No. 87 on Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise, (1950), 68 UNTS 17.

³ See, for example, Sindicatul 'Păstorul cel Bun' v. Romania, no. 2330/09, § 33, 31 January 2012.

⁴ Explanation relating to the Charter of Fundamental Rights, Official Journal of the European Union, C 303/34, 14 December 2007.

⁵ European Social Charter, ETS 35, arts 5, 6.

⁶ CDL(2008)062. Cited in Oya Ataman v. Turkey, no. 74552/01, § 16, ECHR 2006-XIII.

⁷ CDL-INF (2001) 8. Cited in Parti nationaliste basque—Organisation régionale d'Iparralde v. France, no. 71251/01, § 16, ECHR 2007-II.

⁸ CDL-INF(2000)1.

⁹ Guidelines and Explanatory Report on Legislation on Political Parties: Some Specific Issues, CDL-AD(2004)007rev; Report on the Participation of Political Parties in Elections, CDL-AD(2006)025; Code of Good Practice in Electoral Matters, CDL-AD(2002)23.

¹⁰ For example, Recommendation 1516 (2001) on the financing of political parties. Cited in Parti nationaliste basque—Organisation régionale d'Iparralde v. France, no. 71251/01, § 17, ECHR 2007-II.

Rights at the United Nations the previous year. The enumeration of rights in the draft affirmed '[f]reedom of association and assembly'.¹¹ The European Movement draft also contained a restrictions or limitations clause, inspired by article 29 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights: 'The rights specified in Articles 1 and 2 shall be subject only to such limitations as are in conformity with the general principles of law recognised by civilised nations and as are prescribed by law for: a) Protecting the legal rights of others; b) Meeting the just requirements of morality, public order (including the safety of the community), and the general welfare.'¹²

At the first session of the Consultative Assembly of the Council of Europe, Pierre-Henri Teitgen called for adoption of a convention that would include 'freedom of association and assembly'.¹³ Mandated to prepare a text for discussion for the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions at the first session of the Consultative Assembly, held from 22 August to 5 September 1949, Teitgen proposed the following: 'Freedom of assembly, in accordance with Article 20 of the United Nations Declaration. Freedom of association, in accordance with Article 20 of the United Nations Declaration. Freedom to unite in trade unions, in accordance with Article 23(4) of the United Nations Declaration.'¹⁴ Teitgen's draft provision on freedom of assembly and association was adopted by the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions at its 30 August 1949 meeting.¹⁵ The texts in the draft report adopted by the Committee read: 'Freedom of meeting, in accordance with Article 20 of the Declaration of the United Nations. Freedom of association, in accordance with Article 20 (paragraphs 1 and 2) of the Declaration of the United Nations. Freedom to unite in trade unions, in accordance with paragraph 4 of Article 23 of the Declaration of the United Nations.'¹⁶ In the final report to the Consultative Assembly the awkward translation of réunion in French was changed from meeting to assembly and Declaration of the United Nations changed to United Nations Declaration in all three paragraphs.¹⁷ The texts proposed by the Committee were adopted without debate by the Consultative Assembly.¹⁸

In the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions of the Consultative Assembly, Teitgen had also proposed a limitations clause of general application: 'In the exercise of these rights, and in the enjoyment of the freedoms guaranteed by the Convention, no limitations will be imposed except those established with the sole object of ensuring recognition and respect for the rights and freedoms of others, or with the purpose of satisfying the just requirements of public morality, order and security and general welfare

¹¹ Convention for the Collective Protection of Individual Rights and Democratic Liberties by the States, Members of the Council of Europe, and for the establishment of a European Court of Human Rights to ensure observance of the Convention, Doc. INF/5/E/R, I TP 296-303, at p. 296, art. 1(f).

¹² Ibid., art. 3.

¹³ Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 19 August 1949], I TP 38-154, at p. 46.

¹⁴ Proposals by Mr P.H. Teitgen, Rapporteur, 29 August 1949, Doc. A 116, I TP 166-8. Also Report presented by Mr P.H. Teitgen, 5 September 1949, Doc. A 290, I TP 192-213, at p. 206. See also Report [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions], 5 September 1949, Doc. AS (1) 77, I TP 216-39, at p. 228.

¹⁵ Minutes of the Sitting [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions, Consultative Assembly, 30 August 1949], Doc. A 167, I TP 174-80, at p. 176.

¹⁶ Report presented by Mr P.H. Teitgen, 5 September 1949, Doc. A 290, I TP 192-213, at p. 208.

¹⁷ Report [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions], 5 September 1949, Doc. AS (1) 77, I TP 216-39, at p. 228.

¹⁸ Recommendation No. 38 to the Committee of Ministers adopted 8 September 1949 on the conclusion of the debates, Doc. AS (1) 108, II TP 274-83, at p. 276.

in a democratic society. These rights and freedoms may in no case be exercised contrary to the aims and principles of the Council of Europe.' The restrictions or limitation clause, still then a general provision applicable to the entire draft convention, was somewhat altered by the Consultative Assembly: 'In the exercise of these rights, and in the enjoyment of the freedoms guaranteed by the Convention, no limitations shall be imposed except those established by law, with the sole object of ensuring the recognition and respect for the rights and freedoms of others, or with the purpose of satisfying the just requirement of public morality, order and security in a democratic society.' It was adopted after a short debate without a vote.¹⁹

The Committee of Ministers decided to refer consideration of the Consultative Assembly draft to a Committee of Experts. In the meantime, the United Nations Commission on Human Rights had produced provisions on freedom of assembly and association for the draft Covenant on human rights. The relevant texts are as follows:

Article 18

Everyone has the right to freedom of peaceful assembly. No restrictions shall be placed on the exercise of this right other than those prescribed by law and which are necessary to ensure national security, public order, the protection of health or morals, or the protection of the rights and freedoms of others.

Article 19

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of association with others.
2. This freedom shall be subject only to such limitations as are pursuant to law and as are necessary for the protection of national security, public order, public safety, health or morals, or the fundamental rights and freedoms of others.
3. National legislation shall neither prejudice, nor be applied in such a manner as to prejudice, the guarantees provided for in the International Convention on Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise, in so far as States parties to that Convention are concerned.²⁰

In preparation for the Committee of Experts, the Secretariat of the Council of Europe prepared comments comparing the draft Covenant with the draft convention adopted by the Consultative Assembly:

Article 18

Article 2, paragraph 7 and Article 6 [the general limitations clause] of the Resolution cover this provision, except for the reservations as above under Article 16 [on freedom of thought, conscience and religion] regarding the control of State restrictions on this freedom.

Article 19

This provision is covered by paragraph 8 of Article 2 and Article 6 [the general limitations clause] of the Resolution. However, the aim and character of the international control have been give [sic] a definition which is not found in Article 6 of the Resolution. As for paragraph 3, there is a choice to be made between this Universal Declaration text to which paragraph 9 of Article 2 of the Resolution refers, and the provisions of paragraph 3 of the draft Covenant.²¹

¹⁹ Official Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 8 September 1949], II TP 14-274, at pp. 134-42. See also Preparatory Report by the Secretariat-General concerning a Preliminary Draft Convention to Provide a Collective Guarantee of Human Rights, Doc. B 22, III TP 2-37, at pp. 16-18.

²⁰ Report of the Fifth Session of the Commission on Human Rights to the Economic and Social Council, UN Doc. E/1371(Supp.), p. 23.

²¹ Preparatory Report by the Secretariat-General concerning a Preliminary Draft Convention to Provide a Collective Guarantee of Human Rights, Doc. B 22, III TP 2-37, at pp. 20-1.

The United Kingdom also submitted comments on the draft Covenant:

Art. 19(a). It has been the consistent view of H.M. Government that the terms of the Covenant should define the obligations of States which accede to it in clear and precise terms. H.M. Government consider it reasonable to provide for the possibility of certain restrictions on the full freedom of association of members of the armed forces, of the police and of the administration of the State and it does not seem clear that such restrictions are necessarily permissible under paragraph 2 of this Article as at present drafted.

(b) Further, His Majesty's Government consider that the language used to describe the limitations in this Article should be the same as that used in Article 18. They therefore propose that paragraph 2 should be amended to read:

(2) No restrictions shall be placed on the exercise of this right other than those prescribed by law and which are necessary to ensure national security, public order, the protection of health or morals, or the protection of the rights and freedoms of others, provided that this Article shall not prevent the imposition of restrictions on the exercise of this right by members of the armed forces, the police or the administration of a State.²²

At the first session of the Committee of Experts, in February 1950, Sir Oscar Dowson of the United Kingdom proposed that the draft provision on freedom of assembly be replaced with the following text:

- 1) Everyone has the right to freedom of peaceful assembly. No restrictions shall be placed on the exercise of this right other than those prescribed by law and which are necessary to ensure national security, public order, the protection of health or morals, or the protection of the rights and freedoms of others.²³

However, the Committee of Experts concluded its first session with the adoption of the following, essentially reflecting the text adopted by the Consultative Assembly: 'Everyone has the right of freedom of peaceful assembly. Everyone has the right of freedom of peaceful association. No one may be compelled to belong to an association. Everyone has the right to form and to join trade unions for the protection of his interests.'²⁴

The report of the Committee explains that instead of enumerating rights by reference to the relevant provision in the Universal Declaration, as had been done by the Consultative Assembly, it was better to incorporate the text verbatim. Accordingly, the Committee 'scrupulously adhered to the text of the Universal Declaration'.²⁵ The texts it adopted are very similar to those of articles 20 and 23(4) of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. What the Declaration labels 'peaceful assembly and association' became two distinct sentences, with the dubious addition of 'peaceful' before association.

At the second session of the Committee of Experts, in March 1950, the United Kingdom representative submitted amendments:

Everyone has the right to freedom of peaceful assembly. No restrictions shall be placed on the exercise of this right other than such as are prescribed by law and are necessary in the interests of ²² Comments of Governments on the draft International Covenant on Human Rights and Measures of Implementation [UN Doc. E/CN.4/353/Add.1-3], Doc. A 770, III TP 156-79, at p. 164.

²³ Amendments to Article 2 of the Recommendation of the Consultative Assembly proposed by the Expert of the United Kingdom, Doc. A 798, III TP 204-7, at p. 206.

²⁴ Preliminary Draft Convention for the Maintenance and Further Realisation of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 15 February 1950, Doc. A 833, III TP 236-46, at p. 238. Also Draft text of the first section of a draft Convention based on the work of the Consultative Assembly, Doc. A 809, III TP 220-31, at p. 224.

²⁵ Preliminary draft of the Report to the Committee of Ministers, 24 February 1950, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 1, A 847, III TP 246-79, at pp. 260-2.

national security or public safety, or for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others.²⁶

This text differed slightly from the earlier proposal in minor ways. The words 'other than those' were replaced by 'such as are', 'to ensure' became 'in the interests of', the words 'national security, public order,' became 'national security or public safety, or for the prevention of disorder or crime, for', and the word 'for' was added before 'the protection of the rights and freedoms of others'. The British experts also proposed a new provision on freedom of association:

- 1) Everyone has the right to freedom of association with others.
- 2) No restrictions shall be placed on the exercise of this right other than such as are prescribed by law and are necessary in the interests of national security or public safety, or for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others; provided that this article shall not prevent the imposition of restrictions on the exercise of this right by members of the armed forces, the police or the administration of the State.²⁷

The United Kingdom proposal did not include the text on trade unions derived from article 23(4) of the Universal Declaration. Nevertheless, the Report of the Committee of Experts explained its understanding that '[t]he rights defined in this Article include the right to associate in trade unions'.²⁸

The United Kingdom proposal was revised by a Drafting Committee and the rights of peaceful assembly and association combined in a single sentence:

- 1) Everyone has the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and to freedom of association with others.
- 2) No restrictions shall be placed on the exercise of this right other than such as are prescribed by law and are necessary in the interests of national security, public safety or for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others; provided that this article shall not prevent the imposition of lawful restrictions on the exercise of this right by members of the armed forces, the police or the administration of the State.²⁹

The Committee of Experts concluded its work with the submission to the Committee of Ministers of two different drafts. The first, labelled 'Alternative A', contained the texts in the report of the first session of the Committee of Experts.³⁰ The second, 'Alternative B', contained the British text as amended by the Drafting Committee.³¹

²⁶ Amendments to Articles 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 8, and 9 of the Committee's preliminary draft proposal by the Expert of the United Kingdom, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 2, A 915, III TP 280-9, at p. 286.

²⁷ Ibid., pp. 286-8.

²⁸ Report to the Committee of Ministers submitted by the Committee of Experts Instructed to Draw Up a Draft Convention of Collective Guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Doc. CM/WP 1 (5) 15, A 924, IV TP 2-55, at p. 32.

²⁹ Amendments to the British draft proposed by the Drafting Committee composed of Sir Oscar Dowson, MM le Quesne, Dons Moeller, and Salén, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 10, p. 3, A 919, III TP 288-95, at p. 292.

³⁰ Preliminary Draft Convention, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 14, A 932, III TP 312-35, at p. 322; Report to the Committee of Ministers submitted by the Committee of Experts Instructed to Draw Up a Draft Convention of Collective Guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Doc. CM/WP 1 (5) 15, A 924, IV TP 2-55, at p. 64.

³¹ Preliminary Draft Convention, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 14, A 932, III TP 312-35, p. 318; Report to the Committee of Ministers submitted by the Committee of Experts Instructed to Draw Up a Draft Convention of Collective Guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Doc. CM/WP 1 (5) 15, A 924, IV TP 2-55, at p. 52.

The Conference of Senior Officials that convened in June 1950 assigned a Drafting Committee to attempt to reconcile the competing versions that had been prepared by the Committee of Experts. It prepared a new formulation on freedom of peaceful assembly and association based on the British proposal as amended by the Drafting Committee of the Committee of Experts, but with the addition of a new phrase in the first sentence explicitly acknowledging the role of trade unions drawn from article 23(4) of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. A reference to 'democratic society' was also introduced in paragraph 2.

- 1) Everyone has the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and to freedom of association with others, including the right to form and to join trade unions for the protection of his interests.
- 2) No restrictions shall be placed on the exercise of these rights other than such as are prescribed by law and are necessary in the interests of national security, public safety, or for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals in a democratic society, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others; provided that this article shall not prevent the imposition of lawful restrictions on the exercise of this right by members of the armed forces, the police or the administration of the State.³²

A few modifications were made in the final version adopted by the Conference:

- 2) No restrictions shall be placed on the exercise of these rights other than such as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security, public safety, or for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals in a democratic society, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others; provided that this Article shall not prevent the imposition of lawful restrictions on the exercise of this right by members of the armed forces, the police or the administration of the State.³³

The Report of the Conference contained a detailed comment on the reference to trade unions that had been added in paragraph 1:

In this Article, the Conference has introduced express reference to the right to form trade unions, so as to bring this Article into confirmation with the United Nations Universal Declaration. This Declaration mentions the right to form trade unions as a right distinct from the right of association in general. Certain delegates considered, however, that the right to form trade unions was also included in the right of association.

On account of the difficulties raised by the 'closed shop system' in certain countries, the Conference in this connection considered that it was undesirable to introduce into the Convention a rule under which 'no one may be compelled to belong to an association' which features in the United Nations Universal Declaration.³⁴

After the work of the Conference had concluded, the United Kingdom proposed the following: 'Insert "or" between "national security" and "public safety" (deleting the comma) and delete "or" after "public safety"'.³⁵

³² New draft alternatives B and B/2, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 9, A 1372, IV TP 182-91, at pp. 188-90.

³³ Draft Convention annexed to the Report, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19 annex, CM/WP 4 (50) 16 rev., A 1452, IV TP 274-95, at p. 280. Also Draft Convention appended to the draft report, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 16, appendix, A 1445, IV TP 218-40, at p. 224.

³⁴ Text of the report submitted by the Conference [of Senior Officials] to the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19, CM/WP 4 (50) 16 rev., A 1431, IV TP 242-73, at p. 262.

³⁵ Comments by the United Kingdom Delegation on the Report of the Conference of Senior Officials and the text of the draft Convention, Doc. A 1690, p. 3.

The Committee of Ministers, at its fifth session in early August 1950, revised the text and made some small stylistic adjustments to paragraph 2:

- 2) No restrictions shall be placed on the exercise of these rights other than such as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security or public safety, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others. This Article shall not prevent the imposition of lawful restrictions on the exercise of this right by members of the armed forces, the police or the administration of the State.³⁶

Prior to adoption of the final text of the Convention, in November 1950, the Committee of Legal Experts added the word 'of' before 'the police' and 'the administration' in the final phrase of paragraph 2.³⁷

The heading 'Freedom of assembly and association' was added by Protocol No. 11.³⁸

Analysis and interpretation

Like articles 8, 9, and 10, article 11 consists of two paragraphs, the first describing the two rights in question and the second their permissible restrictions or limitations. In its analysis of alleged violations, the Court initially considers whether there has been an infringement of one of the rights. Then it proceeds to examine the possibility that the infringement is subject to an acceptable restriction. In contrast with the restriction clauses of articles 8, 9, and 10, article 11(2) contains a second sentence that reflects its special focus on labour relations: 'This article shall not prevent the imposition of lawful restrictions on the exercise of these rights by members of the armed forces, of the police or of the administration of the State.'

The freedoms set out in article 11 are closely associated with democracy, something that is a 'fundamental feature of the European public order'.³⁹ The Convention was designed to promote and maintain the ideals and values of a democratic society.⁴⁰ The Court has stressed that democracy is the only political model contemplated by the Convention or compatible with it.⁴¹ It has spoken of the hallmarks of democratic society, attaching special importance to pluralism, tolerance, broadmindedness,⁴² and social

³⁶ Draft Convention adopted by the Sub-Committee, Doc. CM 1 (50) 52, A 1884, V TP 76-99, at p. 82; Draft Convention adopted by the Committee of Ministers, 7 August 1950, Doc. A 1937, V TP 120-45, at p. 128.

³⁷ Report of the Committee of Legal Experts held at Rome, 2 and 3 November 1950 (revised text), Doc. CM/Adj (50) 3 rev., A 2531, VII TP 10-13.

³⁸ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(2).

³⁹ Staatkundig Gereformeerde Partij v. the Netherlands (dec.), no. 58369/10, § 70, 10 July 2012; United Communist Party of Turkey and Others v. Turkey, 30 January 1998, § 45, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-I.

⁴⁰ Bączkowski and Others v. Poland, no. 1543/06, § 61, 3 May 2007.

⁴¹ Ibid.

⁴² Stankov and the United Macedonian Organisation Ilinden v. Bulgaria, nos 29221/95 and 29225/95, § 86, ECHR 2001-IX; Handyside v. the United Kingdom, 7 December 1976, § 49, Series A no. 24; Gerger v. Turkey [GC], no. 24919/94, § 46, 8 July 1999; Association of Citizens Radko and Paunkovski v. the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, no. 74651/01, § 64, ECHR 2009 (extracts); Gorzelik and Others v. Poland [GC], no. 44158/98, § 90, ECHR 2004-I; Bączkowski and Others v. Poland, no. 1543/06, § 63, 3 May 2007; Skiba v. Poland (dec.), no. 10659/03, 7 July 2009; Christian Democratic People's Party v. Moldova, no. 28793/02, § 64, ECHR 2006-II; Hyde Park and Others v. Moldova (nos 5 and 6), nos 6991/08 and 15084/08, § 69, 14 September 2010.

cohesion.⁴³ Although 'individual interests must on occasion be subordinated to those of a group, democracy does not simply mean that the views of a majority should always prevail: a balance must be achieved which ensures the fair and proper treatment of minorities and avoids any abuse of a dominant position'.⁴⁴ Freedom of association 'is particularly important for persons belonging to minorities, including national and ethnic minorities, and that, as laid down in the Preamble to the Council of Europe Framework Convention, "a pluralist and genuinely democratic society should not only respect the ethnic, cultural, linguistic and religious identity of each person belonging to a national minority, but also create appropriate conditions enabling them to express, preserve and develop this identity"'.⁴⁵ According to the Court, States must refrain from applying arbitrary measures that interfere with the rights protected by article 11(1). Because of 'the essential nature of freedom of assembly and association and its close relationship with democracy there must be convincing and compelling reasons to justify an interference with this right'.⁴⁶

Article 11 has important links with the freedoms of religion and expression set out in articles 9 and 10. Although its scope extends well beyond the exercise of the freedoms of assembly and association in the exercise of freedom of religion and expression, the visceral connection is undeniable. The Court has noted that 'the protection of personal opinions guaranteed by Articles 9 and 10 of the Convention is one of the purposes of the guarantee of freedom of association'⁴⁷ and of peaceful assembly.⁴⁸ Moreover, this 'applies all the more in relation to political parties in view of their essential role in ensuring pluralism and the proper functioning of democracy'.⁴⁹

In practice, although the Court frequently insists upon the 'autonomous role' of article 11, freedom of association and peaceful assembly are often linked by the Court to issues of freedom of religion and expression, and less frequently to some other rights such as privacy⁵⁰ and property. Sometimes, the Court specifies that there is a violation of article 11 'interpreted in the light of' article 9⁵¹ or article 10,⁵² or simply that it has 'taken ⁴³ Ouranio Toxo and Others v. Greece, no. 74989/01, § 42, ECHR 2005-X (extracts).

⁴⁴ Chassagnou and Others v. France [GC], nos 25088/95 and 28443/95, § 112, ECHR 1999-III, p. 65.

⁴⁵ Gorzeltik and Others v. Poland [GC], no. 44158/98, § 93, ECHR 2004-I.

⁴⁶ Barankevich v. Russia, no. 10519/03, § 25, 26 July 2007; Ouranio Toxo v. Greece, no. 74989/01, § 36, ECHR 2005-X (extracts); Makhmudov v. Russia, no. 35082/04, § 64, 26 July 2007; Adali v. Turkey, no. 38187/97, § 267, 31 March 2005.

⁴⁷ Vörður Ólafsson v. Iceland, no. 20161/06, § 46, ECHR 2010; Chassagnou and Others v. France [GC], nos 25088/94, 28331/95, and 28443/95, § 103, ECHR 1999-III; Young, James and Webster v. the United Kingdom, 13 August 1981, § 57, Series A no. 44; Partidul Comunistilor (Nepecceristi) and Ungureanu v. Romania, no. 46626/99, § 44, ECHR 2005; Freedom and Democracy Party (ÖZDEP) v. Turkey [GC], no. 23885/94, § 37, ECHR 1999-VIII; Zhechev v. Bulgaria, no. 57045/00, § 33, 21 June 2007.

⁴⁸ Ezelin v. France, 26 April 1991, § 37, Series A no. 202; Djavit An v. Turkey, no. 20652/92, § 39, ECHR 2003-III.

⁴⁹ Herri Batasuna and Batasuna v. Spain, nos 25803/04 and 25817/04, § 74, ECHR 2009. Also Communist Party of Turkey and Others v. Turkey, 30 January 1998, §§ 42–43, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-I; Christian Democratic People's Party v. Moldova, no. 28793/02, § 62, ECHR 2006-II.

⁵⁰ N.F. v. Italy, no. 37119/97, §§ 35–40, ECHR 2001-IX.

⁵¹ Barankevich v. Russia, no. 10519/03, § 35, 26 July 2007; Church of Scientology Moscow v. Russia, no. 18147/02, § 98, 5 April 2007; Skiba v. Poland (dec.), no. 10659/03, 7 July 2009.

⁵² Association of Citizens Radko and Paunkovski v. 'the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia', no. 74651/01, § 63, ECHR 2009 (extracts); Association of Citizens Radko and Paunkovski v. 'the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia', no. 74651/01, § 63, ECHR 2009 (extracts); Skiba v. Poland (dec.), no. 10659/03, 7 July 2009; Schwabe and M.G. v. Germany, nos 8080/08 and 8577/08, § 101, ECHR 2011 (extracts); Berladir and Others v. Russia, no. 34202/06, § 36, 10 July 2012; Galsyan v. Armenia, no. 26986/03, § 96, 15 November 2007;

account' of the other provisions of the Convention.⁵³ It also does this in the other direction, noting that article 9⁵⁴ or article 10⁵⁵ must be 'interpreted in the light of' article 11. In a case involving a form of performance art where two individuals displayed dirty laundry in front of the Hungarian legislative assembly, the State argued that this was an 'assembly', and thereby subject to specific legislation requiring authorization for such a manifestation. The Court said it was satisfied that the event 'constituted predominantly an expression . . . all the more so since it involved only two persons and lasted a very short time' and that it should be considered under article 10.⁵⁶ In another case where a press release was delivered in public with twenty-five people present, the Court preferred to address the matter under article 10 rather than article 11.⁵⁷ Occasionally, the Court has also addressed issues related to article 11 within the frame of article 3 of Protocol No. 1,⁵⁸ sometimes with a degree of controversy.⁵⁹ The Court speaks of one or the other provisions being the lex specialis.⁶⁰ When making its determination of the relevant provision, the Court says that it is 'having regard to the specific circumstances of the case and the way in which the applicants formulated their complaints'.⁶¹

Frequently, if the Court concludes that if there is an infringement of article 11, it will forego further separate analysis of a violation under the other provisions of the Convention.⁶² In Appleby and Others v. the United Kingdom, which concerned the right of an environmental group to set up stands and disseminate information, the Court ruled that there was no violation of article 10, and then summarily dismissed the complaint under article 11, saying that 'largely identical considerations' applied.⁶³

Positive obligation or interference

Judgments affirm that 'although the essential object of Article 11 is to protect the individual against arbitrary interference by public authorities with the exercise of the Herri Batasuna and Batasuna v. Spain, nos 25803/04 and 25817/04, § 74, ECHR 2009; Öllinger v. Austria, no. 76900/01, § 38, ECHR 2006-IX.

⁵³ Young, James and Webster v. the United Kingdom, 13 August 1981, § 66, Series A no. 44.

⁵⁴ Moscow Branch of the Salvation Army v. Russia, no. 72881/01, § 58, ECHR 2006-XI; Hasan and Chaush v. Bulgaria [GC], no. 30985/96, § 91, ECHR 2000-XI.

⁵⁵ Palomo Sánchez and Others v. Spain [GC], nos 28955/06, 28957/06, 28959/06, and 28964/06, § 61, ECHR 2011; Szima v. Hungary, no. 29723/11, § 13, 9 October 2012.

⁵⁶ Tatár and Fíber v. Hungary, no. 26005/08 and 26160/08, § 29, 12 June 2012.

⁵⁷ Karademirci and Others v. Turkey, nos 37096/97 and 37101/97, § 26, ECHR 2005-I.

⁵⁸ Sılay v. Turkey, no. 8691/02, §§ 22–23, 5 April 2007; Sadak and Others v. Turkey (no. 2), nos 25144/94, 26149/95 to 26154/95, 27100/95, and 27101/95, § 47, ECHR 2002-IV. See also Ždanoka v. Latvia [GC], no. 58278/00, § 141, ECHR 2006-IV.

⁵⁹ Ždanoka v. Latvia [GC], no. 58278/00, Partly Dissenting Opinion of Judge Wildhaber, ECHR 2006-IV; Ždanoka v. Latvia [GC], no. 58278/00, Partly Dissenting Opinion of Judges Spielmann and Jaeger, ECHR 2006-IV; Ždanoka v. Latvia [GC], no. 58278/00, Dissenting Opinion of Judge Rozakis, ECHR 2006-IV.

⁶⁰ Trade Union of the Police in the Slovak Republic and Others v. Slovakia, no. 11828/08, § 52, 25 September 2012; Skiba v. Poland (dec.), no. 10659/03, 7 July 2009; Schwabe and M.G. v. Germany, nos 8080/08 and 8577/08, § 99, ECHR 2011 (extracts); Galsryan v. Armenia, no. 26986/03, § 96, 15 November 2007; Ždanoka v. Latvia [GC], no. 58278/00, § 141, ECHR 2006-IV.

⁶¹ Schwabe and M.G. v. Germany, nos 8080/08 and 8577/08, § 100, ECHR 2011 (extracts); Djavit An v. Turkey, no. 20652/92, § 36, ECHR 2003-III.

⁶² N.F. v. Italy, no. 37119/97, § 39, ECHR 2001-IX; Wilson, National Union of Journalists and Others v. the United Kingdom, nos 30668/96, 30671/96, and 30678/96, § 50, ECHR 2002-V; Panyi v. Hungary, no. 35127/08, § 47, 17 January 2012.

⁶³ Appleby and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 44306/98, § 52, ECHR 2003-VI.

rights protected, there may in addition be positive obligations on the State to secure the effective enjoyment of such rights'.⁶⁴ This does not mean that as a matter of principle the negative and positive aspects of article 11 may not be entitled to the same level of protection. Saying the matter was difficult to describe in the abstract, the Court added:

The boundaries between the State's positive and negative obligations under Article 11 of the Convention do not lend themselves to precise definition. The applicable principles are nonetheless similar. Whether the case is analysed in terms of a positive duty on the State or in terms of interference by a public authority which needs to be justified, the criteria to be applied do not differ in substance. In both contexts regard must be had to the fair balance to be struck between the competing interests of the individual and of the community as a whole.⁶⁵

In one case, the Court determined that 'both approaches are possible given the mixture of action and inaction on the part of the authorities with which it is confronted'.⁶⁶

The Court first addressed the question of positive obligations with respect to freedom of association in a trade union case involving the closed shop. The collective agreement between union and employer, rather than the government, was responsible for depriving the applicants of a right not to associate. Noting that the contract was the 'proximate cause', the Court said that 'it was the domestic law in force at the relevant time that made lawful the treatment of which the applicants complained. The responsibility of the respondent State for any resultant breach of the Convention is thus engaged on this basis'.⁶⁷ A few years later, it addressed the matter of positive obligations with respect to freedom of peaceful assembly, recognizing a duty on the State to ensure that it can be exercised without interference or disruption by individuals and groups opposed to those seeking to exercise their rights. Austria argued that it was under no positive obligation to protect a demonstration protesting the availability of abortion. Noting that it did 'not have to develop a general theory of the positive obligations which may flow from the Convention', the Court said:

A demonstration may annoy or give offence to persons opposed to the ideas or claims that it is seeking to promote. The participants must, however, be able to hold the demonstration without having to fear that they will be subjected to physical violence by their opponents; such a fear would be liable to deter associations or other groups supporting common ideas or interests from openly expressing their opinions on highly controversial issues affecting the community. In a democracy the right to counter-demonstrate cannot extend to inhibiting the exercise of the right to demonstrate. Genuine, effective freedom of peaceful assembly cannot, therefore, be reduced to a mere duty on the part of the State not to interfere: a purely negative conception would not be compatible with the object and purpose of Article 11.⁶⁸

⁶⁴ Barankevich v. Russia, no. 10519/03, § 33, 26 July 2007; Wilson, National Union of Journalists and Others v. the United Kingdom, nos 30668/96, 30671/96, and 30678/96, § 41, ECHR 2002-V; Demir and Baykara v. Turkey [GC], no. 34503/97, § 110, ECHR 2008; Gustafson v. Sweden, 25 April 1996, § 45, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-II.

⁶⁵ Sørensen and Rasmussen v. Denmark [GC], nos 52562/99 and 52620/99, § 58, ECHR 2006-I. See also Hatton and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 36022/97, § 98, ECHR 2003-VIII; Demir and Baykara v. Turkey [GC], no. 34503/97, § 111, ECHR 2008.

⁶⁶ Demir and Baykara v. Turkey [GC], no. 34503/97, § 116, ECHR 2008.

⁶⁷ Young, James and Webster v. the United Kingdom, 13 August 1981, § 49, Series A no. 44.

⁶⁸ Plattform 'Ärzte für das Leben' v. Austria, 21 June 1988, § 32, Series A no. 139.

The Court has described the positive obligations as being 'of particular importance for persons holding unpopular views or belonging to minorities, because they are more vulnerable to victimisation'.⁶⁹

Subsequently, many decisions have affirmed the positive obligations associated with the right enshrined in article 11. In a trade union case, the Court applied the concept of positive obligations where employers had de-recognized unions for collective-bargaining purposes and had offered more favourable terms of employment to those prepared to work without union representation.⁷⁰ Where an employee protested the closed shop by which he was forced to belong to a trade union, the Court held 'that national authorities may, in certain circumstances, be obliged to intervene in the relationships between private individuals by taking reasonable and appropriate measures to secure the effective enjoyment' of the right not to belong to an association.⁷¹ The positive obligation has been affirmed in cases involving meetings or demonstrations concerning gay rights, nationalist and irredentist claims⁷² and those of national minorities,⁷³ and membership in racist organizations.⁷⁴ Difficult issues arise because typically these cases involve conflicts between rival groups, and protecting one of them may often involve restricting or denying the rights of assembly of others.⁷⁵ The positive obligation may also be relevant when States deny the right to hold a meeting or a demonstration on the pretext that it could provoke violent reactions and counter-demonstrations.⁷⁶

Freedom of peaceful assembly

Freedom of assembly is 'a fundamental right in a democratic society and, like the right to freedom of expression, is one of the foundations of such a society'.⁷⁷ It covers both private and public meetings, including those that take place in public thoroughfares and static meetings that take place in fixed venues. Often, it involves a demonstration, a march, or a parade. Nevertheless, the 'mere fact that an expression occurs in the public space does not necessarily turn such an event into an assembly'.⁷⁸ The term 'assembly' may be defined in national legislation, but it has its own autonomous meaning under the Convention.⁷⁹

[I]n qualifying a gathering of several people as an assembly, regard must be had to the fact that an assembly constitutes a specific form of communication of ideas, where the gathering of an indeterminate number of persons with the identifiable intention of being part of the communicative process can be in itself an intensive expression of an idea. The support for the idea in question is ⁶⁹ Bączkowski and Others v. Poland, no. 1543/06, § 64, 3 May 2007.

⁷⁰ Wilson, National Union of Journalists and Others v. the United Kingdom, nos 30668/96, 30671/96, and 30678/96, § 41, ECHR 2002-V.

⁷¹ Gustafson v. Sweden, 25 April 1996, § 45, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-II.

⁷² Stankov and the United Macedonian Organisation Ilinden v. Bulgaria, nos 29221/95 and 29225/95, ECHR 2001-IX.

⁷³ Ouranio Taxo and Others v. Greece, no. 74989/01, ECHR 2005-X (extracts).

⁷⁴ Redfearn v. the United Kingdom, no. 47335/06, 6 November 2012.

⁷⁵ Öllinger v. Austria, no. 76900/01, ECHR 2006-IX.

⁷⁶ Alekseyev v. Russia, nos 4916/07, 25924/08, and 14599/09, §§ 72, 77, 21 October 2010; Makhmudov v. Russia, no. 35082/04, § 67, 26 July 2007; Barankevich v. Russia, no. 10519/03, § 33, 26 July 2007; Christians against Racism and Fascism v. the United Kingdom, no. 8440/78, Commission decision of 16 July 1980, DR 21, p. 138.

⁷⁷ Djavit An v. Turkey, no. 20652/92, § 56, ECHR 2003-III.

⁷⁸ Tadr and Fáber v. Hungary, nos 26005/08 and 26160/08, § 38, 12 June 2012.

⁷⁹ Ibid., § 38.

being expressed through the very presence of a group of people, particularly—as in the present case—at a place accessible to the general public. Furthermore, an assembly may serve the exchange of ideas between the speakers and the participants, intentionally present, even if they disagree with the speakers.⁸⁰

Because of its fundamental role in democratic life, the right of peaceful assembly is not to be interpreted restrictively.⁸¹ The right may be invoked by individual participants as well as by those who have organized the assembly.⁸² It avails to both physical persons and organizations, and applies to all assemblies 'except those where the organisers and participants have violent intentions or otherwise deny the foundations of a "democratic society"'.⁸³ According to the Court, 'any measures interfering with the freedom of assembly and expression other than in cases of incitement to violence or rejection of democratic principles—however shocking and unacceptable certain views or words used may appear to the authorities—do a disservice to democracy and often even endanger it'.⁸⁴

Although it is often expressed in abbreviated form as the 'right of assembly', the adjective 'peaceful' is an important qualifier.⁸⁵ The right belongs to everyone to the extent that they do not have violent intentions.⁸⁶ The possibility of violent counter-demonstrations does not neutralize the right, nor may it be restricted because of the possibility that extremists with violent intentions who are not involved in the organization of the meeting may join a demonstration.⁸⁷ Thus, '[e]ven if there is a real risk of a public procession resulting in disorder by developments outside the control of those organising it, such procession does not for this reason fall outside the scope of Article 11(1)'.⁸⁸ The fact that a protest, demonstration, or sit-in takes place in the absence of official notification or authorization, and that it may involve unlawful disruption of traffic, does not mean that it is violent in nature and therefore deprived of the protection of article 11(1).⁸⁹ Moreover, 'peaceful protest against legislation which has been contravened does not constitute a legitimate aim for a restriction on liberty within the meaning of Article 11 § 2'.⁹⁰ In a case where the government said slogans of demonstrators had incited violence, the Court

⁸⁰ Ibid.

⁸¹ Djavit An v. Turkey, no. 20652/92, § 56, ECHR 2003-III; Skiba v. Poland (dec.), no. 10659/03, 7 July 2009; Rassemblement jurassien and Unité jurassienne v. Switzerland, no. 8191/78, Commission decision of 10 October 1979, DR 17, p. 93; Christians against Racism and Fascism v. the United Kingdom, no. 8440/78, Commission decision of 16 July 1980, DR 21, p. 138; Barraco v. France, no. 31684/05, § 41, 5 March 2009; Schwabe and M.G. v. Germany, nos 8080/08 and 8577/08, § 110, ECHR 2011 (extracts).

⁸² Adalu v. Turkey, no. 38187/97, § 266, 31 March 2005; Barankevich v. Russia, no. 10519/03, § 25, 26 July 2007.

⁸³ Alekseyev v. Russia, nos 4916/07, 25924/08, and 14599/09, § 80, 21 October 2010.

⁸⁴ Sergey Kuznetsov v. Russia, no. 10877/04, § 45, 23 October 2008. Also Association of Citizens Radko and Paunkovski v. the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, no. 74651/01, § 76, ECHR 2009 (extracts).

⁸⁵ The African Charter of Human and Peoples' Rights is the only major international human rights treaty not to include the adjective 'peaceful' in the relevant provision on freedom of assembly: African Charter of Human and Peoples' Rights, (1981) 1520 UNTS 217, art. 11.

⁸⁶ Stankov and the United Macedonian Organisation Ilinden v. Bulgaria, nos 29221/95 and 29225/95, § 77, ECHR 2001-IX; G. v. Germany, no. 13079/87, Commission decision of 6 March 1989, DR 60, p. 256; Galstyan v. Armenia, no. 26986/03, § 101, 15 November 2007; Barankevich v. Russia, no. 10519/03, § 32, 26 July 2007.

⁸⁷ Schwabe and M.G. v. Germany, nos 8080/08 and 8577/08, § 103, ECHR 2011 (extracts).

⁸⁸ Christians against Racism and Fascism v. the United Kingdom, no. 8440/78, Commission decision of 16 July 1980, DR 21, p. 138.

⁸⁹ G. v. Germany, no. 13079/87, Commission decision of 6 March 1989, DR 60, p. 256.

⁹⁰ Cisse v. France, no. 51346/99, § 50, ECHR 2002-III.

found that 'the slogans could be considered ambiguous and that the applicants could thus have negligently incited others to violence by displaying the slogans during certain demonstrations'.⁹¹

Interference with freedom of peaceful assembly

Freedom of assembly protects 'the abstract possibility of holding an undisturbed peaceful assembly'. Consequently, the organizers of a meeting may contend that there is an interference with their rights if the authorities deny permission to hold the meeting.⁹² The issue is more difficult with respect to prospective participants in a meeting that does not take place. In a Hungarian case, although conceding 'the obvious difficulties of proving an intention to participate in events which never materialised', the Court ruled inadmissible a complaint by forty-seven applicants who had been victims of the situation that the meeting was designed to protest. It said it bore in mind evidence that the organizer never expected more than twenty to attend.⁹³ Where a government challenged the existence of an infringement because children had participated in a gathering, the Court said children are entitled to exercise freedom of assembly: '[I]t was rather a matter of personal choice for the parents to decide whether to allow their children to attend those gatherings and it would appear to be contrary to the parents' and children's freedom of assembly to prevent them from attending such events which, it must be recalled, were to protest against government policy on schooling'.⁹⁴

The European Convention on Human Rights does not recognize freedom of movement, a lacuna that was eventually addressed in Protocol No. 4. Nevertheless, freedom of movement arises indirectly to the extent that an individual needs to move freely in order to exercise freedom of peaceful assembly. The Court found a violation in the repeated denial of travel authorization to a Turkish Cypriot who wished to cross the 'green line', the ceasefire line dividing the limits of occupied Cyprus. The refusal to grant permits to the applicant in order to cross into southern Cyprus had the consequence of impeding participation in bi-communal meetings with Greek Cypriots, 'preventing him consequently from engaging in peaceful assembly with people from both communities'.⁹⁵

Criminal prosecution and conviction for activities related to participation in a peaceful assembly will constitute an interference with the right,⁹⁶ as will arrest during a peaceful demonstration.⁹⁷ In reaching this conclusion, the Court will consider whether the demonstration was prohibited or not authorized⁹⁸ and if there was an attempt to order its dispersal on the grounds that it was illegal or obstructed traffic.⁹⁹ Prohibition of a meeting of residents to protest against a municipal planning policy, followed by dispersal by the police when it was attempted, were held to constitute an interference.¹⁰⁰ Where ⁹¹ Schwabe and M.G. v. Germany, nos 8080/08 and 8577/08, § 115, ECHR 2011 (extracts).

⁹² Pasyi and Others v. Hungary, no. 5529/05, § 27, 7 October 2008; Bączkowski and Others v. Poland, no. 1543/06, § 73, 3 May 2007.

⁹³ Pasyi and Others v. Hungary, no. 5529/05, § 26, 7 October 2008.

⁹⁴ Christian Democratic People's Party v. Moldova, no. 28793/02, § 74, ECHR 2006-II.

⁹⁵ Djavit An v. Turkey, no. 20652/92, § 61, ECHR 2003-III.

⁹⁶ Mkrtychyan v. Armenia, no. 6562/03, § 37, 11 January 2007.

⁹⁷ Galshtyan v. Armenia, no. 26986/03, § 102, 15 November 2007.

⁹⁸ Ziliberg v. Moldova (dec.), no. 61821/00, 4 May 2004.

⁹⁹ Steel and Others v. the United Kingdom, 23 September 1998, § 7, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-VII; Lucas v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 39013/02, 18 March 2003.

¹⁰⁰ Makhmudov v. Russia, no. 35082/04, § 56, 26 July 2007.

Bulgarian authorities prevented a nationalist group from holding meetings, save one occasion when it allowed a public demonstration provided there were no speeches, posters, and slogans, the Court said there had 'undoubtedly' been an interference with freedom of assembly.¹⁰¹

The holding of a meeting or demonstration may be made conditional upon obtaining authorization from the authorities.¹⁰² Nor does a requirement of prior notification violate article 11(1), provided that it is not a disguised means of restricting freedom of assembly.¹⁰³ Exceptional circumstances may compel the need to allow an essentially spontaneous and unplanned meeting that responds to very recent developments. In such circumstances, the right to hold such a meeting may prevail over the need to provide the authorities with prior notice.¹⁰⁴ Respect for official notice periods may have the consequence of making such a meeting practically impossible, because by its very nature the demonstration must be a prompt reaction to unforeseen developments.¹⁰⁵ For that reason, 'regulations of this nature should not represent a hidden obstacle to the freedom of peaceful assembly as it is protected by the Convention',¹⁰⁶ and in exceptional circumstances they will not warrant an infringement of freedom of peaceful assembly. Nevertheless, it cannot be excluded that absence of prior notification or authorization, where this is a requirement, may provide a justification to disperse a demonstration.¹⁰⁷

Provision of various security measures, including first aid services, is also important,¹⁰⁸ as well as the 'prevention of disorder or crime'.¹⁰⁹ The Court has insisted that associations and others who organize demonstrations respect the rules of democratic life in which they participate.¹¹⁰ If States have the right to require authorization or notification, then they are also entitled to impose sanctions when these formalities are not observed.¹¹¹ The government may regulate the free movement of people at public meetings.¹¹² There is no automatic right to demonstrate in a particular place. In a Russian case, the Court criticized

¹⁰¹ Stankov and the United Macedonian Organisation Ilinden v. Bulgaria, nos 29221/95 and 29225/95, § 80, ECHR 2001-IX.

¹⁰² Güneri and Others v. Turkey, nos 42853/98, 43609/98, and 44291/98, § 79, 12 July 2005; Bukta and Others v. Hungary, no. 25691/04, § 35, ECHR 2007-III; Oya Ataman v. Turkey, no. 74552/01, § 39, ECHR 2006-XIII; Rassemblement Jurassien Unité v. Switzerland, no. 8191/78, Commission decision of 10 October 1979, DR 17, p. 119; Plattform 'Ärzte für das Leben' v. Austria, 21 June 1988, §§ 32 and 34, Series A no. 139; Sergey Kuznetsov v. Russia, no. 10877/04, § 42, 23 October 2008; Çiloğlu and Others v. Turkey, no. 73333/01, § 47, 6 March 2007; Rai and Evans v. the United Kingdom (dec.), nos 26258/07 and 26255/07, 17 November 2009.

¹⁰³ Balçık and Others v. Turkey, no. 25/02, § 49, 29 November 2007; Skiba v. Poland (dec.), no. 10659/03, 7 July 2009.

¹⁰⁴ Skiba v. Poland (dec.), no. 10659/03, 7 July 2009; Berladir and Others v. Russia, no. 34202/06, § 43, 10 July 2012; Eva Molnár v. Hungary, no. 10346/05, § 36, 7 October 2008.

¹⁰⁵ Eva Molnár v. Hungary, no. 10346/05, § 38, 7 October 2008.

¹⁰⁶ Oya Ataman v. Turkey, no. 74552/01, § 38, ECHR 2006-XIII; Samüt Karabulus v. Turkey, no. 16999/04, § 35, 27 January 2009; Berladir and Others v. Russia, no. 34202/06, § 39, 10 July 2012.

¹⁰⁷ Eva Molnár v. Hungary, no. 10346/05, §§ 37 and 38, 7 October 2008.

¹⁰⁸ Oya Ataman v. Turkey, no. 74552/01, § 39, ECHR 2006-XIII.

¹⁰⁹ Berladir and Others v. Russia, no. 34202/06, § 42, 10 July 2012.

¹¹⁰ Oya Ataman v. Turkey, no. 74552/01, § 38, ECHR 2006-XIII; Skiba v. Poland (dec.), no. 10659/03, 7 July 2009; Samüt Karabulus v. Turkey, no. 16999/04, § 36, 27 January 2009.

¹¹¹ Berladir and Others v. Russia, no. 34202/06, § 41, 10 July 2012; Ziliberberg v. Moldova (dec.), no. 61821/00, 4 May 2004; Rai and Evans v. the United Kingdom (dec.), nos 26258/07 and 26255/07, 17 November 2009.

¹¹² Djavit An v. Turkey, no. 20652/92, §§ 66–67, ECHR 2003-III; Rune Andersson v. Sweden, no. 12781/87, §§ 2–3, Commission decision of 13 December 1998, DR 59, p. 171; Skiba v. Poland (dec.), no. 10659/03, 7 July 2009.

the lack of diligence on the part of the organizers of a demonstration, noting that the authorities had suggested a venue for their activity that was not accepted 'without any valid reason'.¹¹³

The formalities associated with holding a meeting or a demonstration find some justification in the positive obligation imposed upon governments to ensure that freedom of assembly is ensured. Possible disruption of traffic is another reason supporting the reasonableness of prior notice or authorization.¹¹⁴ Almost inevitably, a demonstration in a public place will lead to a degree of disruption of traffic,¹¹⁵ and a restriction on public assembly for this reason alone may often be disproportionate. Although recognizing that some disruption of traffic is a rather normal and acceptable feature of the exercise of freedom of association, this is not to be equated with deliberate attempts to obstruct vehicles, something that the Court may frown upon.¹¹⁶

Sometimes, the Court will conclude that the government has exaggerated the claim that traffic is disturbed or impeded.¹¹⁷ In a very general sense, States should exercise a high level of tolerance of demonstrations, bearing in mind that 'any demonstration in a public place may cause a certain level of disruption to ordinary life and encounter hostility'.¹¹⁸ For example, shouting of slogans 'is a well established feature of peaceful protest'.¹¹⁹ On occasion, the Court has recognized the tolerance of the authorities.¹²⁰ A case from Moldova involved the arrest of demonstrators who were, quite ironically, protesting harassment by the Ministry of the Interior. The alleged purpose of the arrest was to ensure that authorization for the demonstration had been given. According to the Court, even assuming that such a check were necessary, as the applicants have observed, it could have been carried out at the demonstration, or shortly after it had ended. Instead, by arresting the demonstrators and taking them to the police station, the demonstration was ended prematurely. Furthermore, in terms of the justification for the arrests, the Court finds that little relevance can be attached to the provocative nature of the demonstration. The applicants sought to protest against alleged harassment by the Ministry of Internal Affairs. The street outside the Ministry was clearly the most appropriate place to carry out such a protest. Even if their signs and chants were calculated to insult the Minister, he was clearly a public figure of some prominence in Moldova. In a democratic society, greater tolerance should be shown to those expressing opinions which are critical of such figures, even if those opinions are expressed inarticulately or intemperately.¹²¹

If the necessary permission has not been obtained or notification given, 'where demonstrators do not engage in acts of violence it is important for the public authorities to show a certain degree of tolerance towards peaceful gatherings if the freedom of assembly guaranteed by Article 11 of the Convention is not to be deprived of all substance'.¹²²

¹¹³ Berladir and Others v. Russia, no. 34202/06, § 56, 10 July 2012.

¹¹⁴ Skiba v. Poland (dec.), no. 10659/03, 7 July 2009; Éva Molnár v. Hungary, no. 10346/05, § 34, 7 October 2008.

¹¹⁵ Patyi v. Hungary, no. 35127/08, § 40, 17 January 2012; Nurettin Aldemir and Others v. Turkey, nos 32124/02, 32126/02, 32129/02, 32132/02, 32133/02, 32137/02, and 32138/02, § 43, 18 December 2007.

¹¹⁶ Barraco v. France, no. 31684/05, § 46, 5 March 2009.

¹¹⁷ Patyi v. Hungary, no. 35127/08, § 41–42, 17 January 2012.

¹¹⁸ Oya Ataman v. Turkey, no. 74552/01, § 38, ECHR 2006-XIII.

¹¹⁹ Hyde Park and Others v. Moldova (nos 5 and 6), nos 6991/08 and 15084/08, § 49, 14 September 2010.

¹²⁰ Barraco v. France, no. 31684/05, § 47, 5 March 2009.

¹²¹ Hyde Park and Others v. Moldova (nos 5 and 6), nos 6991/08 and 15084/08, § 43, 14 September 2010.

¹²² Oya Ataman v. Turkey, no. 74552/01, § 40, ECHR 2006-XIII. Also Berladir and Others v. Russia, no. 34202/06, § 38, 10 July 2012; Galstyan v. Armenia, no. 26986/03, §§ 116 and 117, 15 November 2007;

Freedom of association

The Court has said that 'the way in which national legislation enshrines [freedom of association] and its practical application by the authorities reveal the state of democracy in the country concerned'¹²³. Article 11 applies to organizations, including political parties as well as to individuals.¹²⁴ Organizations are not excluded from the protection of the Convention merely because the government considers that it threatens the constitutional structures of the State.¹²⁵

Litigation about freedom of association before the Convention organs has focused on three main categories of organization, their members, and potential members: religious groups; political parties; and trade unions. For each type of association, other fundamental rights are generally at issue. In the case of religious organizations, issues concerning freedom of thought and religion arise, notably in light of article 9 of the Convention.¹²⁶ With respect to political parties, election rights as set out in article 3 of Protocol No. 1, as well as freedom of expression, enshrined in article 10 of the Convention, are important. According to the Court, 'the protection of opinions and the freedom to express them is one of the objectives of the freedom of association as enshrined in Article 11'.¹²⁷ As for trade unions, the right to work and related issues is usually associated with economic, social, and cultural rights. These are not part of the European Convention framework, although their protection is ensured through other instruments of the Council of Europe, notably the European Social Charter.¹²⁸

In addition to this synergy with other fundamental rights, freedom of association may also be a source of conflicts with them. A case involving the Romanian Orthodox Church raised an interesting problem about the right to form an association within an association, in that this was a trade union within a church. Two dissenting judges took the view that allowing clergy and lay employees of the Romanian Orthodox Church to organize a union threatened the integrity of the Church itself. In this way, article 9 was employed to restrict the scope of article 11.¹²⁹

Article 11 recognizes an intrinsic value in freedom of association, regardless of its association with other rights specifically set out in the Convention, its Protocols, and other sources of international human rights law. According to the Court, '[i]t is only natural that, where a civil society functions in a healthy manner, the participation of citizens in the democratic process is to a large extent achieved through belonging to associations in Bukta and Others v. Hungary, no. 25691/04, § 37, ECHR 2007-III; Akgöl and Gül v. Turkey, nos 28495/06 and 28516/06, § 43, 17 May 2011; Barraco v. France, no. 31684/05, § 43, 5 March 2009.

¹²³ Sidiropoulos and Others v. Greece, 10 July 1998, § 40, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-IV; Republican Party of Russia v. Russia, no. 12976/07, § 75, 12 April 2011; Eğitim ve Bilim Emekçileri Sendikası v. Turkey, no. 20641/05, § 48, 25 September 2012; Zhechev v. Bulgaria, no. 57045/00, § 34, 21 June 2007; Jehovah's Witnesses of Moscow v. Russia, no. 302/02, § 100, 10 June 2010; Church of Scientology Moscow v. Russia, no. 18147/02, § 73, 5 April 2007; Koressky and Others v. Ukraine, no. 40269/02, § 38, 3 April 2008.

¹²⁴ United Communist Party of Turkey and Others v. Turkey, 30 January 1998, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-I; Socialist Party and Others v. Turkey, 25 May 1998, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-III.

¹²⁵ United Communist Party of Turkey and Others v. Turkey, 30 January 1998, § 27, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-I.

¹²⁶ Metropolitan Church of Bessarabia and Others v. Moldova, no. 45701/99, § 105, ECHR 2001-XII.

¹²⁷ Ouranio Taxo and Others v. Greece, no. 74989/01, § 35, ECHR 2005-X (extracts).

¹²⁸ European Social Charter, ETS 35.

¹²⁹ Sindicatul 'Păstorul cel Bun' v. Romania, no. 2330/09, Joint Dissenting Opinion of Judges Ziemele and Tsotsoria, 31 January 2012.

which they may integrate with each other and pursue common objectives collectively'.¹³⁰ This is associated with pluralism, built upon recognition of the 'diversity and the dynamics of cultural traditions, ethnic and cultural identities, religious beliefs, artistic, literary and socio-economic ideas and concepts'. Furthermore, '[t]he harmonious interaction of persons and groups with varied identities is essential for achieving social cohesion'.¹³¹ Freedom of association protects a broad range of organizations created for various purposes, such as protection of cultural heritage, social and economic objectives, ethnic identity, and the manifestation of a minority consciousness.¹³²

Vicims of an infringement may include those who do not belong to an organization but who are discouraged from joining it by an official act. In the Slovak Republic, the Minister of the Interior made statements that threatened the activity of a police union. This intimidated the applicants and was 'a situation which could have thus had a chilling effect and discouraged them from pursuing activities within the first applicant trade union, including organising or taking part in similar meetings'.¹³³

Interference with freedom of association

Associations of individuals for various legitimate purposes should be able to be formed and to operate informally. Nevertheless, there may be important advantages for such associations in obtaining a form of legal status. Thus, 'the ability to establish a legal entity in order to act collectively in a field of mutual interest is one of the most important aspects of freedom of association, without which that right would be deprived of any meaning'.¹³⁴ The refusal of government authorities to recognize an association as a legal entity may constitute an interference with freedom of association.¹³⁵ Violations of freedom of association have arisen because of government-imposed requirements that associations be registered.¹³⁶

Official registration may be crucial to the ability of an organization to function properly. Without legal entity status, the association may be deprived of grants as well as the possibility of receiving financial donations and of engaging in charitable activities. Significant delays in obtaining legal entity status may amount to an interference with article 11.¹³⁷ Recognition as a legal entity may also be necessary for an association to own or rent property, to maintain bank accounts, to hire employees, and to ensure judicial ¹³⁰ Alekseyev v. Russia, nos 4916/07, 25924/08, and 14599/09, § 62, 21 October 2010; Gorzelik and Others v. Poland [GC], no. 44158/98, § 92, ECHR 2004-I.

¹³¹ Zhechev v. Bulgaria, no. 57045/00, § 35, 21 June 2007; Tebieti Mühafize Cemiyeti and Israfilov v. Azerbaijan, no. 37083/03, § 53, ECHR 2009.

¹³² Gorzelik and Others v. Poland [GC], no. 44158/98, § 92, ECHR 2004-I; Bekir-Ousta and Others v. Greece, no. 35151/05, § 36, 11 October 2007.

¹³³ Trade Union of the Police in the Slovak Republic and Others v. Slovakia, no. 11828/08, §§ 60–61, 25 September 2012.

¹³⁴ Church of Scientology Moscow v. Russia, no. 18147/02, § 81, 5 April 2007; Bozgan v. Romania, no. 35097/02, § 19, 11 October 2007; IPSD and Others v. Turkey, no. 35832/97, § 35, 25 October 2005; Sidiropoulos and Others v. Greece, 10 July 1998, § 40, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-IV.

¹³⁵ Gorzelik and Others v. Poland [GC], no. 44158/98, § 52, ECHR 2004-I; Sidiropoulos and Others v. Greece, 10 July 1998, § 31, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-IV; Partidul Comunistilor (Nepeceeristi) and Ungureanu v. Romania, no. 46626/99, § 27, ECHR 2005-I (extracts); The United Macedonian Organisation Ilinden and Others v. Bulgaria, no. 59491/00, § 53, 19 January 2006; Tsonev v. Bulgaria, no. 45963/99, § 43, 13 April 2006; Ramazanov and Others v. Azerbaijan, no. 44363/02, § 60, 1 February 2007; Bozgan v. Romania, no. 35097/02, § 19, 11 October 2007.

¹³⁶ Zhechev v. Bulgaria, no. 57045/00, § 37, 21 June 2007.

¹³⁷ Ramazanov and Others v. Azerbaijan, no. 44363/02, §§ 58–61, 1 February 2007.

protection of the community, its members, and its assets.¹³⁸ In the case of religious organizations, registration may be essential for entitlements such as the right to establish places of worship, to hold religious services in places accessible to the public, to the production and distribution of religious literature, to the creation of educational institutions, and to the maintenance of contacts for international exchanges and conferences.¹³⁹

Several cases in Russia have resulted from the 1997 Religions Act by which organizations previously benefitting from legal-entity status were required to amend their founding documents and 're-register' within a specific period of time, failing which they could be dissolved by judicial decision. For the Court, this was an interference with article 11.¹⁴⁰ The Court rejected the argument of the government that a religious organization could not claim to be the victim of a violation of freedom of association because it had not been dissolved and had retained its status as a legal entity. The issue was whether the body could be re-registered. The Court said that 'even in the absence of prejudice and damage, the religious association may claim to be a "victim" since the refusal of re-registration directly affected its legal position'.¹⁴¹

Where an organization exists already, its dissolution constitutes an interference with freedom of association.¹⁴² The Committee of Ministers has recommended to Member States that '[t]he legal personality of [non-governmental organisations (NGOs)] can only be terminated pursuant to the voluntary act of their members—or in the case of non-membership-based NGOs, its governing body—or in the event of bankruptcy, prolonged inactivity or serious misconduct'.¹⁴³ The termination of an NGO 'should only be ordered by a court where there is compelling evidence that the grounds specified . . . above have been met. Such an order should be subject to prompt appeal'.¹⁴⁴

Article 11 may be infringed when measures impact upon individuals because of their membership in an association. For example, the ability of an association to attract members, or its image and prestige, may be challenged. An Italian masonic lodge successfully argued against a requirement that public employees declare that they are not its members constituted an interference with freedom of association. The Court said this had the consequence either of discouraging membership or of imposing an unfair hardship on those who remained members because they were denied the possibility of public employment.¹⁴⁵ Legislation in Turkey required official authorization from the Interior Ministry for members of associations to travel abroad. When members of an association did so without permission, their organization was dissolved by the courts.

¹³⁸ Koretsky and Others v. Ukraine, no. 40269/02, § 40, 3 April 2008; Jehovah's Witnesses of Moscow v. Russia, no. 302/02, § 102, 10 June 2010.

¹³⁹ Jehovah's Witnesses of Moscow v. Russia, no. 302/02, § 102, 10 June 2010.

¹⁴⁰ Church of Scientology Moscow v. Russia, no. 18147/02, §§ 83–85, 5 April 2007; Moscow Branch of the Salvation Army v. Russia, no. 72881/01, §§ 64–65, ECHR 2006-XI; Jehovah's Witnesses of Moscow v. Russia, no. 302/02, § 173, 10 June 2010.

¹⁴¹ Church of Scientology Moscow v. Russia, no. 18147/02, §§ 77–80, 5 April 2007.

¹⁴² United Communist Party of Turkey and Others v. Turkey, 30 January 1998, §§ 32–34, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-I; Association Rhino and Others v. Switzerland, no. 48848/07, § 44–45, 11 October 2011.

¹⁴³ Recommendation CM/Rec(2007)14 of the Committee of Ministers to member States on the legal status of non-governmental organisations in Europe, para. 44. Cited in Tebieti Mühafize Cemiyeti and Israfilov v. Azerbaijan, no. 37083/03, § 39, ECHR 2009.

¹⁴⁴ Recommendation CM/Rec(2007)14 of the Committee of Ministers to member States on the legal status of non-governmental organisations in Europe, para. 72. See also Association Rhino and Others v. Switzerland, no. 48848/07, § 62, 11 October 2011.

¹⁴⁵ Grande Oriente d'Italia di Palazzo Giustiniani v. Italy, no. 35972/97, § 135, ECHR 2001-VIII.

Noting that similar legislation did not exist in other Council of Europe States, the Court found this to be an interference with article 11.¹⁴⁶ Article 11 also restricts the possibility of penalizing past membership in a political party.¹⁴⁷

Associations are in principle entitled to choose their members and to exclude those whom they do not accept. A British trade union was successful in challenging a tribunal decision ordering it to accept as a member someone affiliated with the British National Party, an extreme right wing and racist formation. The applicable legislation prohibited a trade union from expelling an individual based solely upon that person's membership in a political party. The Court stated that it had 'some sympathy with the notion that any worker should be able to join a trade union'. At the same time, it noted that:

[h]istorically, trade unions in the United Kingdom, and elsewhere in Europe, were, and though perhaps to a lesser extent today are, commonly affiliated to political parties or movements, particularly those on the left. They are not bodies solely devoted to politically-neutral aspects of the well-being of their members, but are often ideological, with strongly held views on social and political issues.

The Court concluded that there had been a violation of article 11 because the law prevented the trade union from excluding someone from membership based upon political opinion.¹⁴⁸

Freedom of association has a negative dimension in that it protects the right of a person not to be required to join an association.¹⁴⁹ Although 'compulsion to join a particular trade union may not always be contrary to the Convention', forms of pressure that strike at the very substance of freedom of association would constitute an interference with article 11.¹⁵⁰ In this respect, 'regard must also be had in this context to the fact that the protection of personal opinions guaranteed by Articles 9 and 10 of the Convention is one of the purposes of the guarantee of freedom of association, and that such protection can only be effectively secured through the guarantee of both a positive and a negative right to freedom of association'.¹⁵¹ Personal autonomy, which is described as 'an important principle underlying the interpretation of the Convention guarantees' supports the individual's freedom of choice that is 'implicit in Article 11 and confirmation of the importance of the negative aspect of that provision'.¹⁵²

¹⁴⁶ Izmir Savaşa Karşıtları Derneği and Others v. Turkey, no. 46257/99, § 32, 2 March 2006.

¹⁴⁷ Ždanoka v. Latvia [GC], no. 58278/00, Partly Dissenting Opinion of Judges Spielmann and Jaeger, § 5, ECHR 2006-IV.

¹⁴⁸ Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen (ASLEF) v. the United Kingdom, no. 11002/05, §§ 47–53, 27 February 2007.

¹⁴⁹ Sigurður A. Sigurjónsson v. Iceland, 30 June 1993, § 35, Series A no. 264.

¹⁵⁰ Vörður Ólafsson v. Iceland, no. 20161/06, § 45, ECHR 2010; Gustafsson v. Sweden, 25 April 1996, § 45, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-II; Young, James, and Webster v. the United Kingdom, 13 August 1981, § 55, Series A no. 44; Sigurður A. Sigurjónsson v. Iceland, 30 June 1993, § 36, Series A no. 264; Sørensen and Rasmussen v. Denmark [GC], nos 52562/99 and 52620/99, § 54, ECHR 2006-I.

¹⁵¹ Sørensen and Rasmussen v. Denmark [GC], nos 52562/99 and 52620/99, § 54, ECHR 2006-I; Chassagnou and Others v. France [GC], nos 25088/94, 28331/95, and 28443/95, § 103, ECHR 1999-III; Young, James, and Webster v. the United Kingdom, 13 August 1981, § 57, Series A no. 44; Sigurður A. Sigurjónsson v. Iceland, 30 June 1993, § 37, Series A no. 264.

¹⁵² Sørensen and Rasmussen v. Denmark [GC], nos 52562/99 and 52620/99, § 54, ECHR 2006-I.

Political parties

Political parties possess a special place within the guarantee of freedom of association because of their central role in the functioning of democratic government. The Grand Chamber has spoken of 'the primordial role played in a democratic regime by political parties enjoying the freedoms and rights enshrined in Article 11 and also in Article 10 of the Convention'.¹⁵³ But 'even more persuasive than the wording of Article 11, in the Court's view, is the fact that political parties are a form of association essential to the proper functioning of democracy. In view of the importance of democracy in the Convention system . . . there can be no doubt that political parties come within the scope of Article 11'.¹⁵⁴ Indeed, democracy is central to the entire vision of the European Convention on Human Rights.

That is apparent, firstly, from the Preamble to the Convention, which establishes a very clear connection between the Convention and democracy by stating that the maintenance and further realisation of human rights and fundamental freedoms are best ensured on the one hand by an effective political democracy and on the other by a common understanding and observance of human rights . . . The Preamble goes on to affirm that European countries have a common heritage of political tradition, ideals, freedom and the rule of law. The Court has observed that in that common heritage are to be found the underlying values of the Convention . . . ; it has pointed out several times that the Convention was designed to maintain and promote the ideals and values of a democratic society . . .

In addition, Articles 8, 9, 10 and 11 of the Convention require that interference with the exercise of the rights they enshrine must be assessed by the yardstick of what is 'necessary in a democratic society'. The only type of necessity capable of justifying an interference with any of those rights is, therefore, one which may claim to spring from 'democratic society'. Democracy thus appears to be the only political model contemplated by the Convention and, accordingly, the only one compatible with it.¹⁵⁵

Political parties have an 'essential role in ensuring pluralism', without which 'there can be no democracy'.¹⁵⁶ Moreover, 'the notion of "democratic society" is devoid of any meaning if there is no pluralism, tolerance or open-mindedness'.¹⁵⁷ Pluralism is built on 'the genuine recognition of, and respect for, diversity and the dynamics of traditions and of ethnic and cultural identities, religious beliefs, artistic, literary and socio-economic ideas and concepts'.¹⁵⁸ Moreover, '[t]he harmonious interaction of persons and groups with varied identities is essential for achieving social cohesion'.¹⁵⁹ However, '[p]luralism and democracy are based on a compromise that requires various concessions by ¹⁵³ Refah Partisi (the Welfare Party) and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 41340/98, 41342/98, 41343/98, and 41344/98, § 87, ECHR 2003-II; Linkov v. the Czech Republic, no. 10504/03, § 34, 7 December 2006; Redfearn v. the United Kingdom, no. 47335/06, § 55, 6 November 2012.

¹⁵⁴ United Communist Party of Turkey and Others v. Turkey, 30 January 1998, § 25, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-I; Ouranio Toxo and Others v. Greece, no. 74989/01, § 34, ECHR 2005-X (extracts).

¹⁵⁵ United Communist Party of Turkey and Others v. Turkey, 30 January 1998, § 45, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-I.

¹⁵⁶ Refah Partisi (the Welfare Party) and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 41340/98, 41342/98, 41343/98, and 41344/98, §§ 88-89, ECHR 2003-II; Partidul Comunistilor (Nepecceristi) and Ungureanu v. Romania, no. 46626/99, § 45, ECHR 2005-I (extracts).

¹⁵⁷ Ouranio Toxo and Others v. Greece, no. 74989/01, § 35, ECHR 2005-X (extracts).

¹⁵⁸ Gorzelik and Others v. Poland [GC], no. 44158/98, § 92, ECHR 2004-I.

¹⁵⁹ Ouranio Toxo and Others v. Greece, no. 74989/01, § 35, ECHR 2005-X (extracts).

individuals or groups of individuals, who must sometimes agree to limit some of the freedoms they enjoy in order to guarantee greater stability of the country as a whole'.¹⁶⁰

Because of the role played by political parties within democratic political systems, measures taken against them affect not only freedom of association but democracy as such:

It is in the nature of the role they play that political parties, the only bodies which can come to power, also have the capacity to influence the whole of the regime in their countries. By the proposals for an overall societal model which they put before the electorate and by their capacity to implement those proposals once they come to power, political parties differ from other organisations which intervene in the political arena.¹⁶¹

In a case involving dissolution of a political party because it failed to maintain minimum requirements for the number of members, the Court was not impressed with the government's claim that the party was entitled to reorganize itself into an association. This was 'a legal shape its founders and members did not seek', and the solution 'would reduce the freedom of association of the founders and members so as to render it either non-existent or of no practical value'.¹⁶² The Court noted the uniqueness of political parties and their position as the only actors capable of nominating candidates for election.

In several European states, minimum membership requirements are imposed upon political parties. In Russia, where the requirements are the highest in Europe, a political party that was not alleged to have encouraged violence or otherwise acted so as to undermine the democratic and pluralist system, or to pursue racist objectives, was dissolved because it did not comply with requirements of minimum membership and regional representation. The Court said it was not convinced by the justifications provided, namely that the condition was necessary 'to strengthen political parties and limit their number in order to avoid disproportionate expenditure from the budget during electoral campaigns and prevent excessive parliamentary fragmentation and, in so doing, promote stability of the political system'.¹⁶³ It rejected the financial argument, noting that no support was given to marginal parties if they failed to get 3 per cent of the vote, and that 'financial considerations cannot serve as a justification for limiting the number of political parties and allowing the survival of large, popular parties only'.¹⁶⁴ The Court viewed the fragmentation argument as being overly protective of large political parties, noting that 'small minority groups must also have an opportunity to establish political parties and participate in elections with the aim of obtaining parliamentary representation ... [D]emocracy does not simply mean that the views of the majority must always prevail'.¹⁶⁵

The Russian legislation also required that political parties demonstrate a minimum number of regional branches. The apparent purpose of the measure was to discourage regional parties that might threaten the country's unity and territorial activity.¹⁶⁶ The Court noted that 'there can be no justification for hindering a public association or political party solely because it seeks to debate in public the situation of part of the State's

¹⁶⁰ Refah Partisi (the Welfare Party) and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 41340/98, 41342/98, 41343/98, and 41344/98, § 99, ECHR 2003-II.

¹⁶¹ Ibid., § 87.

¹⁶² Republican Party of Russia v. Russia, no. 12976/07, § 105, 12 April 2011. Also Zhechev v. Bulgaria, no. 57045/00, § 56, 21 June 2007.

¹⁶³ Republican Party of Russia v. Russia, no. 12976/07, § 111, 12 April 2011.

¹⁶⁴ Ibid., § 112.

¹⁶⁵ Ibid., § 114.

¹⁶⁶ Ibid., § 123.

population, or even advocates separatist ideas by calling for autonomy or requesting secession of part of the country's territory'.¹⁶⁷ The Court said that a review of practice in Council of Europe states showed a consensus allowing the establishment of regional parties, although it has accepted that 'a different approach may be justified where special historical or political considerations exist which render a more restrictive practice necessary'.¹⁶⁸ For example, it did not exclude the claim that in the immediate aftermath of the disintegration of the Soviet Union, some restriction on regional political parties might have been justifiable at the time.¹⁶⁹ In making the assessment, the historical context is important.¹⁷⁰

Many States have legislation concerning the funding of political parties and this may have an impact upon freedom of association.¹⁷¹ Legislation that prevented a French-based political party associated with the Spanish Basque Nationalist Party receiving funding from foreign legal entities was recognized as an interference with article 11.¹⁷² The Conseil d'État had concluded that the legislation was intended to 'preclude the possibility of creating a relationship of dependency which would be detrimental to the expression of national sovereignty'. The Court therefore held that the aim was protection of the 'institutional order'.¹⁷³ It said it had no difficulty accepting a prohibition on funding by foreign States in order to preserve national sovereignty, but the same rationale did not seem valid with respect to foreign political parties.¹⁷⁴

Trade unions

The right to form and join trade unions is specifically mentioned in article 11(1). The language derives from the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and recognizes that '[e]veryone has the right to form and to join trade unions for the protection of his interests', although this appears in a provision dealing with the rights of workers rather than with freedom of association.¹⁷⁵ The Court has treated the right to form and join trade unions as 'a special aspect of freedom of association which also protects, first and foremost, against State action',¹⁷⁶ while nevertheless insisting that '[t]he essential object of Article 11 is to protect the individual against arbitrary interference by public authorities

¹⁶⁷ Ibid.

¹⁶⁸ Ibid., § 126; Tănase v. Moldova [GC], no. 7108, § 172, ECHR 2010.

¹⁶⁹ Republican Party of Russia v. Russia, no. 12976/07, § 127, 12 April 2011.

¹⁷⁰ Refah Partisi (the Welfare Party) and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 41340/98, 41342/98, 41343/98, and 41344/98, § 104, ECHR 2003-II; Partidul Comunistilor (Nepeceeristi) and Ungureanu v. Romania, no. 46626/99, § 48, ECHR 2005-I (extracts).

¹⁷¹ Within the Council of Europe, there are relevant materials from the Venice Commission (Guidelines and Report on the Financing of Political Parties) and the Committee of Ministers (Recommendation Rec(2003) 4 of 8 April 2003 on common rules against corruption in the funding of political parties and electoral campaigns).

¹⁷² Parti nationaliste basque—Organisation régionale d'Iparralde v. France, no. 71251/01, §§ 37–38, ECHR 2007-II.

¹⁷³ Ibid., § 43.

¹⁷⁴ Ibid., § 47. See, however, Parti nationaliste basque—Organisation régionale d'Iparralde v. France, no. 71251/01, Dissenting Opinion of Judge Rozakis, ECHR 2007-II.

¹⁷⁵ Universal Declaration of Human Rights, GA Res. 217 A (III), UN Doc. A/810, art. 23(4).

¹⁷⁶ Young, James, and Webster v. the United Kingdom, 13 August 1981, § 52, Series A no. 44; Vörður Ólafsson v. Iceland, no. 20161/06, § 45, ECHR 2010; National Union of Belgian Police v. Belgium, 27 October 1975, § 38, Series A no. 19; Swedish Engine Drivers' Union v. Sweden, 6 February 1976, § 39, Series A no. 20; Demir and Baykara v. Turkey [GC], no. 34503/97, § 109, ECHR 2008.

with the exercise of the rights protected'.¹⁷⁷ Article 11 'safeguards freedom to protect the occupational interests of trade union members by trade union action, the conduct and development of which the Contracting States must both permit and make possible'.¹⁷⁸ Attention is drawn to the words 'for the protection of his interests' in article 11(1) of the Convention. These words are 'not redundant' and are deemed to safeguard 'freedom to protect the occupational interests of trade-union members by trade-union action, the conduct and development of which the Contracting States must both permit and make possible'.¹⁷⁹ The case law has identified three 'essential elements' of freedom of association in the context of trade union activities: the right to form and join a trade union;¹⁸⁰ the prohibition of closed-shop agreements;¹⁸¹ and the right for a trade union to seek to persuade the employer to hear what it has to say on behalf of its members.¹⁸² The Grand Chamber has explained that the list is not finite but is 'subject to evolution depending on particular developments in labour relations'.¹⁸³

Pointing to the more detailed provisions concerning trade unions in the European Social Charter of 1961, the Court has insisted that article 11(1) 'does not secure any particular treatment of trade unions, or their members, by the State, such as the right that the State should conclude any given collective agreement with them'. In its early case law, the Court said such a right is not 'indispensable for the effective enjoyment of trade union freedom' nor is it 'an element necessarily inherent in a right guaranteed by the Convention'.¹⁸⁴ Later, it took a more nuanced view: 'even if collective bargaining was not indispensable for the effective enjoyment of trade-union freedom, it might be one of the ways by which trade unions could be enabled to protect their members' interests. The union had to be free, in one way or another, to seek to persuade the employer to listen to what it had to say'.¹⁸⁵

The Court found the legislative framework of labour relations within the United Kingdom to be inadequate to the extent that employers were not required to recognize trade unions and could provide financial incentives to employees who would agree not to be represented by the relevant union. The Court explained that a corollary of this was authorization under United Kingdom law to treat less favourably employees who were not prepared to renounce a freedom that was an essential feature of union membership. 'Such conduct constituted a disincentive or restraint on the use by employees of union membership to protect their interests', it said.¹⁸⁶ Thus, 'by permitting employers to use financial incentives to induce employees to surrender important union rights, the

¹⁷⁷ Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen (ASLEF) v. the United Kingdom, no. 11002/05, § 37, 27 February 2007.

¹⁷⁸ Sindicatul 'Păstorul cel Bun' v. Romania, no. 2330/09, § 58, 31 January 2012; Demir and Baykara v. Turkey [GC], no. 34503/97, § 140, ECHR 2008; National Union of Belgian Police v. Belgium, 27 October 1975, §§ 39–40, Series A no. 19; Swedish Engine Drivers' Union v. Sweden, 6 February 1976, §§ 40–41, Series A no. 20; Schmidt and Dahlström v. Sweden, 6 February 1976, § 36, Series A no. 21.

¹⁷⁹ Tüm Haber Sen and Çınar v. Turkey, no. 28602/95, § 28, ECHR 2006-II.

¹⁸⁰ Ibid., §§ 30–32.

¹⁸¹ Sørensen and Rasmussen v. Denmark [GC], nos. 52562/99 and 52620/99, §§ 75–77, ECHR 2006-I.

¹⁸² Wilson, National Union of Journalists and Others v. the United Kingdom, nos 30668/96, 30671/96, and 30678/96, § 44, ECHR 2002-V.

¹⁸³ Demir and Baykara v. Turkey [GC], no. 34503/97, § 146, ECHR 2008.

¹⁸⁴ Swedish Engine Drivers' Union v. Sweden, 6 February 1976, § 39, Series A no. 20.

¹⁸⁵ Wilson, National Union of Journalists and Others v. the United Kingdom, nos 30668/96, 30671/96, and 30678/96, § 44, ECHR 2002-V; Demir and Baykara v. Turkey [GC], no. 34503/97, § 143, ECHR 2008.

¹⁸⁶ Wilson, National Union of Journalists and Others v. the United Kingdom, nos 30668/96, 30671/96, and 30678/96, § 47.

respondent State has failed in its positive obligation to secure the enjoyment of the rights under Article 11 of the Convention. This failure amounted to a violation of Article 11, as regards both the applicant trade unions and the individual applicants.¹⁸⁷

The Court's refusal to recognize collective bargaining as a component of article 11 remained controversial and eventually, in 2008, led to a reversal of its case law. In a Turkish case, the Grand Chamber stated:

[T]he Court considers that, having regard to the developments in labour law, both international and national, and to the practice of Contracting States in such matters, the right to bargain collectively with the employer has, in principle, become one of the essential elements of the 'right to form and to join trade unions for the protection of [one's] interests' set forth in Article 11 of the Convention, it being understood that States remain free to organise their system so as, if appropriate, to grant special status to representative trade unions.¹⁸⁸

A 'closed shop' is 'an undertaking or workplace in which, as a result of an agreement or arrangement between one or more trade unions and one or more employers or employers' associations, employees of a certain class are in practice required to be or become members of a specified union. The employer is not under any legal obligation to consult or obtain the consent of individual employees directly before such an agreement or arrangement is put into effect.'¹⁸⁹ Undoubtedly influenced by the strong position of industrial and trade unions, particularly in the social-democratic parties present in the Consultative Assembly, as well as in some Western European governments at the time the European Convention of Human Rights was being prepared, the drafters of the Convention deliberately excluded a provision equivalent to that found in article 20(2) of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which affirms that 'no one may be compelled to belong to an association'. The issue of the 'closed shop' is directly addressed in the travaux préparatoires of the Convention. The report of the 19 June 1950 meeting of the Conference of Senior Officials states: 'On account of the difficulties raised by the "closed shop system" in certain countries, the Conference in this connection considered it undesirable to introduce into the Convention a rule under which "no one may be compelled to belong to an association" which features in [Article 20 § 2] of the United Nations Universal Declaration.'¹⁹⁰ This passage has generated much debate and no consensus before the Court.¹⁹¹ According to one individual opinion, '[t]he "travaux préparatoires" of the Convention—which anyway are not conclusive—speak only of "undesirability" and so do not enable one to conclude that the negative aspect of trade union freedom was intended to be excluded from the ambit of Article 11'.¹⁹² Nevertheless, the case law is quite clear that ¹⁸⁷ Ibid., § 48.

¹⁸⁸ Denir and Baykara v. Turkey [GC], no. 34503/97, § 154, ECHR 2008.

¹⁸⁹ Young, James, and Webster v. the United Kingdom, 13 August 1981, § 13, Series A no. 44.

¹⁹⁰ Report of 19 June 1950 of the Conference of Senior Officials, Collected Edition of the travaux préparatoires, vol. IV, p. 262.

¹⁹¹ Young, James, and Webster v. the United Kingdom, 13 August 1981, § 51, Series A no. 44; Ibid., Dissenting Opinion of Judge Sørensen, Joined by Judges Thór, Vilhjálmsson, and Lagergren, § 2; Sørensen and Rasmussen v. Denmark [GC], nos 52562/99 and 52620/99, § 33, ECHR 2006-I; Sørensen and Rasmussen v. Denmark [GC], nos 52562/99 and 52620/99, Dissenting Opinion of Judge Lorenzen, § 2, ECHR 2006-I.

¹⁹² Ibid., Concurring Opinion of Judges Ganshof van der Meersch, Bindschedler-Robert, Liesch, Gölcükdü, Matscher, Pinheiro Farinha, and Pettiti.

closed-shop agreements whereby a monopoly is granted to one trade union as a representative of employees are not permitted.¹⁹³

In some legal systems, an individual may not be required to join the trade union but must nevertheless contribute financially to it, either directly or indirectly. According to one decision, 'the imposition on non-union members of an obligation to pay fees to a trade union and Government measures entailing favouritism towards or discrimination against a trade union may in certain circumstances be considered incompatible with the right to organise and the right to join an organisation of one's own choosing'.¹⁹⁴

There is no explicit right to strike in the European Convention, nor has the Court considered it to be implied by article 11(1). According to the Court, '[t]here is no express inclusion of a right to strike or an obligation on employers to engage in collective bargaining. At most, Article 11 may be regarded as safeguarding the freedom of trade unions to protect the occupational interests of their members'.¹⁹⁵ The Court has said that while 'the ability to strike represents one of the most important of the means by which trade unions can fulfil this function, there are others'.¹⁹⁶ A right to strike is set out in other international human rights and labour instruments, such as the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, where it is explicit,¹⁹⁷ and International Labour Organisation Convention No. 87, where it has been deemed incorporated by interpretation as something inherent in the right to organize.¹⁹⁸ Article 28 of the European Union's Charter of Fundamental Rights provides: 'Workers and employers, or their respective organisations, have, in accordance with Community law and national laws and practices, the right to negotiate and conclude collective agreements at the appropriate levels and, in cases of conflicts of interest, to take collective action to defend their interests, including strike action.' In a recent judgment, the Court referred to the importance of these international law sources for the construction of article 11, stating that it would be 'inconsistent for the Court to adopt in relation to Article 11 an interpretation of the scope of freedom of association of trade unions that is much narrower than that which prevails in international law'.¹⁹⁹ Accordingly, the Court said, 'the taking of secondary industrial action by a trade union, including strike action, against one employer in order to further a ¹⁹³ Demir and Baykara v. Turkey [GC], no. 34503/97, § 145, ECHR 2008; Sørensen and Rasmussen v. Denmark [GC], nos 52562/99 and 52620/99, § 54, ECHR 2006-I. For dissenting views on this difficult and controversial issue, see the opinions of Judges Rozakis, Bratza, Vajić, Zupančič, and Lorenzen in Sørensen and Rasmussen v. Denmark [GC], nos 52562/99 and 52620/99, Joint Partly Dissenting Opinion of Judges Rozakis, Bratza, and Vajić, ECHR 2006-I.

¹⁹⁴ Vörður Ólafsson v. Iceland, no. 20161/06, § 53, ECHR 2010.

¹⁹⁵ UNISON v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 53574/99, ECHR 2002-1.

¹⁹⁶ Ibid. Also Wilson, National Union of Journalists and Others v. the United Kingdom, nos 30668/96, 30671/96, and 30678/96, § 45, ECHR 2002-V; Schmidt and Dahlström v. Sweden, 6 February 1976, § 36, Series A no. 21; Enerji Yapı-Yol Sen v. Turkey, no. 68959/01, § 28, 21 April 2009.

¹⁹⁷ (1976) 993 UNTS 3, art. 8(1)(d). On the right to strike and international law, see Hrvatski liječnički sindikat v. Croatia, no. 36701/09, Concurring Opinion of Judge Pinto de Albuquerque, §§ 3–6, 27 November 2014.

¹⁹⁸ Report of the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations, ILC, 43rd Session, 1959, Part I, Report III, pp. 114–15, relying upon International Labour Organisation Convention No. 87 on Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise, (1950) 68 UNTS 17, arts 3, 8, and 10.

¹⁹⁹ National Union of Rail, Maritime, and Transport Workers v. the United Kingdom, no. 31045/10, § 76, 8 April 2014. See also Hrvatski liječnički sindikat v. Croatia, no. 36701/09, Concurring Opinion of Judge Pinto de Albuquerque, § 9, 27 November 2014.

dispute in which the union's members are engaged with another employer must be regarded as part of trade union activity covered by Article 11'.²⁰⁰

No distinction is made between the State as the instrument of public power and the State as employer; those who work for the State are entitled to the same freedom of assembly as those who work in the private sector.²⁰¹ If confirmation is required, this is made apparent in the final words of article 11(2).

Restrictions on freedom of peaceful assembly and of association

Like articles 8, 9, and 10 of the Convention, article 11 contains a second paragraph setting out the scope of permissible restrictions on freedom of peaceful assembly and association. Article 11(2) is the longest of the four restriction clauses in the Convention, mainly because of the final sentence of paragraph 2 dealing with limitations on freedom of association in the armed forces and the police. The term 'restrictions' as it is used in article 11(2) may apply to measures taken before an assembly, during an assembly, and after it, for example punitive measures.²⁰² Such restrictions are only acceptable to the extent that they are prescribed by law, pursue a legitimate aim listed in article 11(2), and are deemed necessary in a democratic society.

The ancestor of the restrictions and limitations clauses is article 29(2) of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights: 'In the exercise of his rights and freedoms, everyone shall be subject only to such limitations as are determined by law solely for the purpose of securing due recognition and respect for the rights and freedoms of others and of meeting the just requirements of morality, public order and the general welfare in a democratic society.' The limitations clause in the Universal Declaration applies generally to all rights set out in the instrument, whereas the specific clauses of this nature in the European Convention, of which article 11(2) is an example, are tailored to the right at issue.

The restriction clauses in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights are similar to article 11(2). There are two separate provisions, one dealing with freedom of peaceful assembly and the other with freedom of association.²⁰³ Where the European Convention speaks of 'the prevention of disorder or crime' the Covenant refers to 'public order (ordre public)'. The Covenant also allows lawful restrictions on members of the armed forces and the police, but it does not extend this to the administration of the State. Also, the Covenant's freedom of association provision contains an additional paragraph: 'Nothing in this article shall authorize States Parties to the International Labour Organisation Convention of 1948 concerning Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organize to take legislative measures which would prejudice, or to apply the law in such a manner as to prejudice the guarantees provided for in that Convention.'²⁰⁴ Article 11(2) of the European Convention is also more extensive than the restriction ²⁰⁰ National Union of Rail, Maritime, and Transport Workers v. the United Kingdom, no. 31045/10, § 77, 8 April 2014.

²⁰¹ Tüm Haber Sen and Çınar v. Turkey, no. 28602/95, § 29, ECHR 2006-II; Demir and Baykara v. Turkey [GC], no. 34503/97, § 109, ECHR 2008; Swedish Engine Drivers' Union v. Sweden, 6 February 1976, § 37, Series A no. 20.

²⁰² Sergey Kuznetsov v. Russia, no. 10877/04, § 35, 23 October 2008; Ezelin v. France, 26 April 1991, § 39, Series A no. 202.

²⁰³ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, (1976) 999 UNTS 171, arts 21, 22(2).

²⁰⁴ Ibid., art. 22(3).

clauses dealing with labour rights in the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.²⁰⁵

Prescribed by law

It is a preliminary condition for any restriction upon freedom of peaceful assembly that the interference be 'prescribed by law'. The restriction must be authorized by a rule recognized in the national legal order. This includes 'written law', including various forms of delegated legislation, and unwritten law as interpreted and applied by the courts.²⁰⁶ But there is also a qualitative requirement for the legal rule. It must be accessible and foreseeable and be formulated with sufficient precision to enable the citizen to regulate his or her conduct.²⁰⁷ Factors such as a failure by national courts to refer to a legal provision in support of the interference and inconsistencies between the legislation itself and case law may inform the Court's conclusion that the measure is not prescribed by law.²⁰⁸ If the law grants discretion to public authorities, it must be framed with sufficient clarity and specify the manner in which it is to be exercised.²⁰⁹ Accordingly, the domestic law must provide protection against arbitrary interference by the authorities with rights that are enshrined in the Convention. This is fundamental to the rule of law, a seminal concept that is basic to democratic governance.

If the Court determines that there is no legal authorization for a restriction on freedom of assembly, it will conclude there has been a breach of article 11 without further consideration of the proportionality. Where the participation of a Turkish Cypriot in bi-communal meetings was stymied by the denial of permits to cross the green line into southern Cyprus, the Court concluded that there was no law applicable to the issuance of permits.²¹⁰ Measures preventing meetings and a march to promote equality for gays were not founded on legal provisions.²¹¹ In a case concerning the Non-governmental Organisation Act in force in Azerbaijan, the Court raised serious questions about the foreseeability of the law in question, notably because it allowed for warnings by the Ministry of Justice that activities were 'incompatible with the objectives' of the legislation. This could result in the dissolution of an association. The Court did not reach a definitive conclusion on the issue, however.²¹²

²⁰⁵ International Covenant on Economic, Social, and Cultural Rights, (1976) 993 UNTS 3, arts. 8(1)(a), (c). See Hrvatski liječnički sindikat v. Croatia, no. 36701/09, Concurring Opinion of Judge Pinto de Albuquerque, § 9, fn. 32, 27 November 2014, with the references to Matthew Craven, The International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, A Perspective on its Development, Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1995, p. 258 and Ben Saul, David Kinley, and Jaqueline Mowbray, The International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, Commentary, Cases and Materials, Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2014, p. 581.

²⁰⁶ Leyla Şahin v. Turkey [GC], no. 44774/98, § 88, ECHR 2005-XI; Sanoma Uitgevers B.V. v. the Netherlands [GC], no. 38224/03, § 83, 14 September 2010.

²⁰⁷ Rekvenyi v. Hungary [GC], no. 25390/94, § 34, ECHR 1999-III; Mkrchyan v. Armenia, no. 6562/03, § 39, 11 January 2007; Association of Citizens Radko and Paunkovski v. the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, no. 74651/01, § 64, ECHR 2009 (extracts); Gorzelik and Others v. Poland [GC], no. 44158/98, § 64, ECHR 2004-I; N.F. v. Italy, no. 37119/97, § 29, ECHR 2001-IX.

²⁰⁸ Mkrchyan v. Armenia, no. 6562/03, §§ 39–43, 11 January 2007.

²⁰⁹ The Sunday Times v. the United Kingdom (no. 1), 26 April 1979, § 49, Series A no. 30; Tolstoy Miloslavsky v. the United Kingdom, 13 July 1995, § 37, Series A no. 316-B; Rotaru v. Romania [GC], no. 28341/95, § 52, ECHR 2000-V; Hasan and Chaush v. Bulgaria [GC], no. 30985/96, § 84, ECHR 2000-XI; Maestri v. Italy [GC], no. 39748/98, § 30, ECHR 2004-I.

²¹⁰ Djavit An v. Turkey, no. 20652/92, § 67, ECHR 2003-III.

²¹¹ Bączkowski and Others v. Poland, no. 1543/06, §§ 69–73, 3 May 2007.

²¹² Tebieti Mühafize Cemiyeti and Israfilov v. Azerbaijan, no. 37083/03, §§ 60–65, ECHR 2009.

The Court held that the 'prescribed by law' requirement was not met when the authorities failed to register an association within time limits set by the legislation. The law did not specify with sufficient precision the consequences of this failure to respond within the legal time limits, in effect enabling an arbitrary prolongation of the registration procedure. As a result, 'the law did not afford the applicants sufficient legal protection against the arbitrary actions of the Ministry of Justice'.²¹³ Russian law governing the requirements for amending the State Register of political parties did not provide applications with sufficient provision enabling them to foresee which documents they would need to submit and the adverse consequences if the submission as deemed defective by the authorities.²¹⁴ By declining to provide a religious institution with clear reasons for the rejection of its application for re-registration, the Court said the Moscow Justice Department had 'acted in an arbitrary manner'²¹⁵ and breached an express requirement of domestic law that such refusal should be reasoned.²¹⁶ Russian authorities also denied registration to the Salvation Army, invoking a legal provision that prohibited foreign nationals from being founders of a Russian religious institution. But the Court did not find this to be the case and said the refusal of registration had 'no legal foundation'.²¹⁷

In a case dealing with disciplinary action taken against a judge who belonged to a legal Masonic lodge, the Court said that legislation prohibiting membership of secret associations was insufficient to meet the foreseeability requirement.²¹⁸ In another Italian case involving the secret masonic lodge known as P2, the Court said that disciplinary provisions concerning judges were not sufficiently foreseeable. A general text imposed punishment upon a judge who 'fails to fulfil his duties'. Guidelines adopted by the National Council of the Judiciary addressed the issue of membership in masonic lodges, saying that this 'raises delicate problems'. The Court concluded that the guidelines were 'not sufficiently clear to enable the users, who, being judges, were nonetheless informed and well-versed in the law, to realise—even in the light of the preceding debate—that their membership of an official Masonic lodge could lead to sanctions being imposed on them'.²¹⁹

In a Macedonian case where a political association denied the Macedonian ethnic identity, the Court found provisions in the Constitution dealing with violent destruction of the constitutional order, or to the encouragement of or incitement to military aggression or ethnic, racial, or religious hatred or intolerance, to be sufficiently precise.²²⁰

Legitimate purpose

The second component of the analysis under article 11(2) is the existence of a legitimate purpose or aim. The inquiry involves the enumeration of purposes set out in paragraph 2, namely the interests of national security or public safety, the prevention of disorder or ²¹³ Ramazanov and Others v. Azerbaijan, no. 44363/02, § 66, 1 February 2007.

²¹⁴ Republican Party of Russia v. Russia, no. 12976/07, § 85, 12 April 2011.

²¹⁵ Jehovah's Witnesses of Moscow v. Russia, no. 302/02, § 176, 10 June 2010.

²¹⁶ Ibid., § 175; Church of Scientology Moscow v. Russia, no. 18147/02, § 91, 5 April 2007.

²¹⁷ Moscow Branch of the Salvation Army v. Russia, no. 72881/01, §§ 82–86, ECHR 2006-XI.

²¹⁸ Maestri v. Italy [GC], no. 39748/98, §§ 37–42, ECHR 2004-I.

²¹⁹ N.F. v. Italy, no. 37119/97, § 31, ECHR 2001-IX.

²²⁰ Association of Citizens Radko and Paunkovski v. 'the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia', no. 74651/01, § 59, ECHR 2009 (extracts).

crime, the protection of health or morals, and the protection of the rights and freedoms of others. The enumeration is exhaustive, and is to be interpreted narrowly.²²¹

In practice, this issue is rarely very important. It is not uncommon for the Court simply to pass over the issue entirely and move to the heart of the debate, which takes place under the rubric 'necessary in a democratic society', finding that it violates the final component of the test regardless of whether it fulfils a legitimate purpose.²²² The Grand Chamber has explained that it is the Court's practice 'to be quite succinct when it verifies the existence of a legitimate aim within the meaning of the second paragraphs of Articles 8 to 11 of the Convention'.²²³

Often several of the legitimate aims listed in article 11(2) may be relevant. In a Turkish case involving dissolution of a political party because of its threat to 'the importance of the principle of secularism for the democratic system in Turkey', the Court cited protection of national security and public safety, prevention of disorder or crime, and protection of the rights and freedoms of others.²²⁴ Italian legislation required candidates for public office to declare that they were not members of a masonic lodge. The government explained that this measure had been introduced in order to 'reassure' the public at a time when there was controversy about the role certain freemasons played in public life. The Court considered this purpose as legitimate for the protection of national security and prevention of disorder.²²⁵

The first of the listed objectives is the interests of national security or public safety. These two grounds appear in the three other limitations clauses of the Convention with the exception of freedom of religion, where national security is not a legitimate purpose for limitation of the right. Within this context, the Court has also accepted as a legitimate purpose the State's territorial integrity, a concept closely linked with the protection of national security.²²⁶ The Court has been especially strict in admitting 'national security' as a legitimate purpose for interference with freedom of peaceful assembly or association. In the context of meetings of a secessionist group, it said that '[d]emanding territorial changes in speeches and demonstrations does not automatically amount to a threat to the country's territorial integrity and national security'.²²⁷ In a Bulgarian case, the Court said that an organization's position favouring 'abolition' or 'opening' of the country's border with Macedonia could not be thought to 'jeopardise in any conceivable way those countries' territorial integrity or national security'.²²⁸ The Court rejected Turkey's claim that the imposition of a legislative requirement upon members of organizations

²²¹ Sidiropoulos and Others v. Greece, 10 July 1998, §§ 37–39, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-IV; Stankov and the United Macedonian Organisation Ilinden v. Bulgaria, nos 29221/95 and 29225/95, § 84, ECHR 2001-IX; Galstyan v. Armenia, no. 26986/03, § 114, 15 November 2007.

²²² For example, Bayatyan v. Armenia [GC], no. 23459/03, § 117, ECHR 2011; Ercep v. Turkey, no. 43965/04, § 53, 22 November 2011.

²²³ S.A.S. v. France [GC], no. 43835/11, § 114, 1 July 2014.

²²⁴ Refah Partisi (the Welfare Party) and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 41340/98, 41342/98, 41343/98, and 41344/98, § 67, ECHR 2003-II.

²²⁵ Grande Oriente d'Italia di Palazzo Giustiniani v. Italy, no. 35972/97, § 26, ECHR 2001-VIII. Also Grande Oriente d'Italia di Palazzo Giustiniani v. Italy (no. 2), no. 26740/02, § 51, 31 May 2007.

²²⁶ Republican Party of Russia v. Russia, no. 12976/07, § 101, 12 April 2011; United Communist Party of Turkey and Others v. Turkey, 30 January 1998, § 40, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-I.

²²⁷ Stankov and the United Macedonian Organisation Ilinden v. Bulgaria, nos 29221/95 and 29225/95, § 97, ECHR 2001-IX.

²²⁸ Zhechev v. Bulgaria, no. 57045/00, § 48, 21 June 2007.

seeking to travel abroad that they inform the government of their plans fulfilled a legitimate purpose of protecting national security and public safety.²²⁹

The prevention of disorder or crime also appears in the limitations clauses governing the right to private and family life and freedom of expression. Instead, article 9(2) uses the expression 'the protection of public order'. An interesting distinction has been made between the English and French versions of article 11(2). One of the justifications for restrictions in the English version is 'the prevention of disorder or crime', while in the French version the text refers to 'la défense de l'ordre et à la prévention du crime'. The Court has said that 'the protection of a State's democratic institutions and constitutional foundations relates to "the prevention of disorder", the concept of "order" within the meaning of the French version of Article 11 encompassing the "institutional order"'.²³⁰ A religious organization occupying a church, with some members conducting a hunger strike, was evacuated on the grounds of a number of public order considerations. Concluding that 'the evacuation was ordered to put an end to the continuing occupation of a place of worship by persons, including the applicant, who had broken French law', the Court said that this measure pursued the legitimate aim of the prevention of disorder.²³¹

The protection of the rights and freedoms of others was invoked in a case involving squatters who operated as part of an organization. The Swiss authorities dissolved the applicant association, a measure the Court noted was quite inadequate to deal with the circumstances, and to address the rights of the property owners.²³² In a case involving dissolution of a separatist organization, the Court referred to the Constitutional Court, holding that the real objective of the group violated 'the free expression of the national affiliation of the Macedonian people'. It said this fulfilled the legitimate aim of protection of the rights and freedoms of others.²³³

Necessary in a democratic society

Most decisions concerning the application of article 11(2) to infringements of freedom of peaceful assembly and association involve assessing whether the impugned measure is 'necessary in a democratic society'. The objective is to consider whether the authorities have struck 'a fair balance between the competing interests of the individual and of society as a whole'.²³⁴ It is the most subjective part of the application of paragraph 2, involving subtle distinctions about the proportionality of measures taken by the State that limit or restrict human rights. There is an important relationship between 'necessity' and 'democratic society', of which the hallmarks are pluralism, tolerance, and broadmindedness.²³⁵ Indeed, because democracy is 'the only political model contemplated in the Convention and the only one compatible with it... the only necessity capable of justifying an ²²⁹ İzmir Savaş Karşıtları Derneği and Others v. Turkey, no. 46257/99, §§ 36–37, 2 March 2006.

²³⁰ Republican Party of Russia v. Russia, no. 12976/07, § 101, 12 April 2011. Also Parti nationaliste basque—Organisation régionale d'Iparralde v. France, no. 71251/01, § 43, ECHR 2007-II.

²³¹ Cisse v. France, no. 51346/99, § 22, ECHR 2002-III.

²³² Association Rhino and Others v. Switzerland, no. 48848/07, § 62–63, 11 October 2011.

²³³ Association of Citizens Radko and Paunkovski v. 'the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia', no. 74651/01, § 62, ECHR 2009 (extracts).

²³⁴ Keegan v. Ireland, 26 May 1994, § 49, Series A no. 290.

²³⁵ Smith and Grady v. the United Kingdom, nos 33985/96 and 33986/96, § 87, ECHR 1999-VI; Vereinigung demokratischer Soldaten Österreichs and Gubi v. Austria, 19 December 1994, § 36, Series A no. 302; Dudgeon v. the United Kingdom, 22 October 1981, § 53, Series A no. 45.

interference with any of the rights enshrined in those Articles is one that may claim to spring from a “democratic society”.²³⁶

The term ‘necessary’ does not have the flexibility of such expressions as ‘useful’ or ‘desirable’.²³⁷ Although individual interests may sometimes be subordinated to those of a group, democracy cannot be reduced to a simplistic proposition by which the majority always prevails. There must be a balance that ensures ‘the fair and proper treatment of minorities and avoids any abuse of a dominant position’.²³⁸ Disciplinary measures imposed upon civil servants who posted announcements on the walls of their offices of an event commemorating the first of May was not necessary in a democratic society. The employees did not engage in ‘un affichage sauvage générant une pollution visuelle dans l’ensemble du lieu de travail’, the event being announced was a peaceful one, and nothing on the posters was unlawful or susceptible of shocking the public.²³⁹ The Court found that a decision transferring a civil servant from one part of the country to another on the grounds of his membership in a legally constituted trade union was not necessary in a democratic society.²⁴⁰

Punishment of individuals for being ‘present and proactive’ at a demonstration but who were not charged with doing ‘anything illegal, violent or obscene’, and where the demonstration itself was not prohibited, threatened to impair ‘the very essence of the right to freedom of peaceful assembly’ and was therefore not necessary in a democratic society.²⁴¹ According to the Court, ‘where demonstrators do not engage in acts of violence, it is important for the public authorities to show a certain degree of tolerance towards peaceful gatherings if the freedom of assembly guaranteed by Article 11 of the Convention is not to be deprived of all substance’.²⁴²

Pressing social need

The Court frequently begins its consideration of ‘necessity in a democratic society’ by questioning whether the interference responds to a ‘pressing social need’. The term seems to be little more than a gloss on the word ‘necessity’.²⁴³ For example, in determining whether a restriction of the right to organize meets a ‘pressing social need’, there must be plausible evidence that the establishment or activities of a trade union represent ‘a sufficiently imminent threat to the State or to a democratic society’.²⁴⁴

The assessment of whether there is a ‘pressing social need’ is primarily for the national authorities. They are entitled to a margin of appreciation, but this cannot displace judicial supervision by the European Court of Human Rights. The Court is concerned both with ²³⁶ Bączkowski and Others v. Poland, no. 1543/06, § 61, 3 May 2007.

²³⁷ Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen (ASLEF) v. the United Kingdom, no. 11002/05, § 42, 27 February 2007.

²³⁸ Young, James, and Webster v. the United Kingdom, 13 August 1981, § 53, Series A no. 44; Chassagnou and Others v. France [GC], nos 25088/94, 28331/95, and 28443/95, § 112, ECHR 1999-III; Gozelik and Others v. Poland [GC], no. 44158/98, § 90, ECHR 2004-I.

²³⁹ Şivan and Others v. Turkey, no. 1305/05, §§ 29–37, 27 September 2011.

²⁴⁰ Metin Turan v. Turkey, no. 20868/02, § 31, 14 November 2006.

²⁴¹ Galsyan v. Armenia, no. 26986/03, § 117, 15 November 2007.

²⁴² Oya Ataman v. Turkey, no. 74552/01, 5 December 2006, §§ 41–42; Patsyi v. Hungary, no. 35127/08, § 43, 17 January 2012.

²⁴³ Trade Union of the Police in the Slovak Republic and Others v. Slovakia, no. 11828/08, § 66, 25 September 2012; Herri Batasuna and Batasuna v. Spain, nos 25803/04 and 25817/04, § 119, ECHR 2009.

²⁴⁴ Sindicatul ‘Pastorul cel Bun’ v. Romania, no. 2330/09, § 69, 31 January 2012; Koreskyy and Others v. Ukraine, no. 40269/02, § 55, 3 April 2008.

the law and the decisions that apply it at the national level. It does not substitute its own view for that of the national authorities, who are deemed better placed to rule on matters of legislative policy and measures of implementation. As the Grand Chamber has explained,

This does not mean that it has to confine itself to ascertaining whether the respondent State exercised its discretion reasonably, carefully and in good faith; it must look at the interference complained of in the light of the case as a whole and determine whether it was 'proportionate to the legitimate aim pursued' and whether the reasons adduced by the national authorities to justify it are "relevant and sufficient". In so doing, the Court has to satisfy itself that the national authorities applied standards which were in conformity with the principles embodied in Article 11 and, moreover, that they based their decisions on an acceptable assessment of the relevant facts.²⁴⁵

The Court has accepted that where an association is permitted by law to participate in elections with the possibility of acceding to power, it may be necessary to require its registration as a political party. In this way, rules concerning financing, public control, and transparency may be brought to bear. But if the association cannot participate in elections, the Court has said there is no 'pressing social need' to require it to register as a political party, something that 'would mean forcing the association to take a legal shape which its founders did not seek'.²⁴⁶ In a Polish case concerning the refusal to allow an association to call itself an 'organisation of a national minority', because of possible consequences in terms of participation in elections, the Grand Chamber said the national authorities 'did not overstep their margin of appreciation in considering that there was a pressing social need, at the moment of registration, to regulate the free choice of associations to call themselves an "organisation of a national minority", in order to protect the existing democratic institutions and election procedures in Poland and thereby, in Convention terms, prevent disorder and protect the rights of others'.²⁴⁷

In determining whether the dissolution of a political party responds to a pressing social need, the Grand Chamber has said that the analysis should focus on three points: the imminence of a risk to democracy; the attribution of the acts of leaders to the party itself; and 'whether the acts and speeches imputable to the political party formed a whole which gave a clear picture of a model of society conceived and advocated by the party which was incompatible with the concept of a "democratic society"'.²⁴⁸ A Turkish trade union for civil servants invoked article 11 when it was dissolved by the courts on the ground that civil servants were not entitled to form trade unions. The Court said that Turkey had failed to demonstrate a 'pressing social need'. The fact that the law did not permit such unions was not sufficient to justify 'a measure as radical as the dissolution of a trade union'.²⁴⁹ The Court took into account Turkey's ratification of International Labour Organisation Convention No. 87 where the right of all workers to form trade unions without distinction between the private and public sectors is acknowledged. It also noted the interpretation of article 5 of the European Social Charter by the Committee of ²⁴⁵ Gorzeliak and Others v. Poland [GC], no. 44158/98, § 96, ECHR 2004-I.

²⁴⁶ Zhechev v. Bulgaria, no. 57045/00, § 56, 21 June 2007.

²⁴⁷ Gorzeliak and Others v. Poland [GC], no. 44158/98, § 104, ECHR 2004-I.

²⁴⁸ Refah Partisi (the Welfare Party) and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 41340/98, 41342/98, 41343/98, and 41344/98, § 104, ECHR 2003-II; Partidul Comunistilor (Nepeceeristi) and Ungureanu v. Romania, no. 46626/99, § 48, ECHR 2005-I (extracts); Linkov v. the Czech Republic, no. 10504/03, § 37, 7 December 2006.

²⁴⁹ Tüm Haber Sen and Çınar v. Turkey, no. 28602/95, § 36, ECHR 2006-II.

Independent Experts recognizing a right of public employees to form unions, saying it could 'only subscribe to this interpretation by a particularly well-qualified committee'.²⁵⁰

Prohibition of the right to form certain types of associations, notably trade unions, also raises issues under article 11. Clergy and laity working for the Orthodox Church in Romania were prohibited from forming a trade union, with the local court basing its refusal of registration upon an ecclesiastical rule that it said was necessary to protect religious tradition. The Court said that priests and lay staff who worked for the Church under individual employment contracts could not simply be excluded from the ambit of article 11.²⁵¹

Proportionality

The interference must respond to an assessment of its proportionality, something that involves balancing the right of the individual against the interest of the State and the society that it represents. Furthermore, the reasons given by the national authorities must be 'relevant and sufficient', which means that the national authorities 'applied standards which were in conformity with the principles embodied in article 11 and, moreover, that they based their decisions on an acceptable assessment of the relevant facts'.²⁵² Where the Court is considering the positive dimension of the right in question, in other words, the obligation upon the State to take measures to ensure enforcement of the right, it must usually consider the rights of others in the balance as well. If other less severe measures could have fulfilled the same objective, there will be a problem with proportionality.

In its assessment of the proportionality of measures that interfere with a public demonstration, where a requirement of authorization has not been respected, the Court will take into account the genuineness of the claim of urgency,²⁵³ the level of fine or other sanction imposed,²⁵⁴ security concerns relating to the location of the demonstration,²⁵⁵ the length of time of the demonstration before its dispersal by the authorities,²⁵⁶ the fact that despite the absence of notice the authorities were in fact well informed of the planned demonstration,²⁵⁷ and the impatience of the authorities in resorting to force.²⁵⁸

Part of the proportionality assessment involves determining whether there existed 'effective, less intrusive measures' capable of achieving the legitimate aim.²⁵⁹ In one case, the Court said that rather than suppress a demonstration because the police judged ²⁵⁰ Ibid., § 38.

²⁵¹ Sindicatul 'Păstorul cel Bun' v. Romania, no. 2330/09, §§ 60–65, 31 January 2012.

²⁵² Sidiropoulos and Others v. Greece, 10 July 1998, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-IV; United Communist Party of Turkey and Others v. Turkey, 30 January 1998, § 47, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-I; Partidul Comunistilor (Nepecești) and Ungureanu v. Romania, no. 46626/99, § 49, ECHR 2005-I (extracts).

²⁵³ Bukta and Others v. Hungary, no. 25691/04, § 35, ECHR 2007-III; Éva Molnár v. Hungary, no. 10346/05, § 38, 7 October 2008.

²⁵⁴ Ziliberberg v. Moldova, no. 61821/00, 1 February 2005; Skiba v. Poland (dec.), no. 10659/03, 7 July 2009; Rai and Evans v. the United Kingdom (dec.), nos 26258/07 and 26255/07, 17 November 2009; Hyde Park and Others v. Moldova (nos 5 and 6), nos 6991/08 and 15084/08, § 47, 14 September 2010.

²⁵⁵ Rai and Evans v. the United Kingdom (dec.), nos 26258/07 and 26255/07, 17 November 2009; Hyde Park and Others v. Moldova (nos 5 and 6), nos 6991/08 and 15084/08, § 47, 14 September 2010.

²⁵⁶ Éva Molnár v. Hungary, no. 10346/05, § 34, 7 October 2008.

²⁵⁷ Barraco v. France, no. 31684/05, § 45, 5 March 2009.

²⁵⁸ Oya Ataman v. Turkey, no. 74552/01, ECHR 2006-XIII; Balçık and Others v. Turkey, no. 25/02, 29 November 2007; Ekiş and Ocak v. Turkey, no. 44920/04, 23 February 2010; Aytaş and Others v. Turkey, no. 6758/05, 8 December 2009; Skiba v. Poland (dec.), no. 10659/03, 7 July 2009.

²⁵⁹ Schwabe and M.G. v. Germany, nos 8080/08 and 8577/08, § 118, ECHR 2011 (extracts).

the slogans on banners to be illegal, they could simply have seized the banners in question. This might have had a 'chilling effect' on the production of new banners, thereby restricting freedom of expression, but it would not have made the demonstration impossible.²⁶⁰ Where an organization of squatters was dissolved, the Court noted that given a lengthy period in which occupation of buildings had been tolerated by the authorities, as well as the association's statutory objectives, the State had failed to show that the actions taken were the only available option.²⁶¹ Even if the harm done by an infringement on freedom of association is quite minimal, this does not necessarily assist in arguing for its proportionality. Where Italian law required candidates for public office to declare they were not members of a masonic lodge, the government argued that the damage this might do to the organization by discouraging people to join was quite minimal. But the Court said freedom of association 'is of such importance that it cannot be restricted in any way, even in respect of a candidate for public office, so long as the person concerned does not himself commit any reprehensible act by reason of his membership of the association'.²⁶²

In assessing proportionality, the nature and severity of the sanction imposed are important factors to be considered.²⁶³ Dissolution of an association is a drastic measure that will often fail the proportionality test.²⁶⁴ Less severe measures, such as a fine or withdrawal of tax benefits, are alternatives that may adequately fulfil the legitimate purpose.²⁶⁵ When small fines were imposed on demonstrators after their refusal to move the venue of a protest was deemed an administrative offence, the Court said 'the decisions of the national authorities in the present case were based on an acceptable assessment of the relevant facts and contained relevant and sufficient reasons which justified the interference with the applicants' right of assembly and freedom of expression' and was therefore proportionate and necessary to prevent disorder or protect the rights and freedoms of others.²⁶⁶

Margin of appreciation

In applying the 'necessary in a democratic society' test, the Court will allow the State a margin of appreciation, recognizing that its role is not to sit as a Tribunal of fourth instance and that it is in one sense not as well positioned as the national legal institutions to assess many of the relevant factors. Often, especially in sensitive matters that concern morality, ethics, and social policy, the Court refers to the practice in European jurisdictions in determining whether or not any consensus exists. Where there is none, the margin of appreciation will almost invariably be much greater. But although the national authorities make the initial assessment of necessity, 'the final evaluation as to whether the reasons cited for the interference are relevant and sufficient remains subject to review by the Court for conformity with the requirements of the Convention'.²⁶⁷

Invoking the notion of margin of appreciation, the Court often shows considerable deference to States in how they deal with problems related to public assemblies. This is ²⁶⁰ Ibid.

²⁶¹ Association Rhino and Others v. Switzerland, no. 48848/07, § 66, 11 October 2011.

²⁶² Grande Oriente d'Italia di Palazzo Giustiniani v. Italy, no. 35972/97, § 26, ECHR 2001-VIII.

²⁶³ Tebietî Mühafize Cemiyeti and Israfilov v. Azerbaijan, no. 37083/03, § 82, ECHR 2009; Jehovah's Witnesses of Moscow v. Russia, no. 302/02, § 154, 10 June 2010.

²⁶⁴ Biblical Centre of the Chuvash Republic v. Russia, no. 33203/08, § 60, 12 June 2014.

²⁶⁵ Tebietî Mühafize Cemiyeti and Israfilov v. Azerbaijan, no. 37083/03, § 82, ECHR 2009.

²⁶⁶ Berladir and Others v. Russia, no. 34202/06, § 61, 10 July 2012.

²⁶⁷ Szuluk v. the United Kingdom, no. 36936/05, § 45, ECHR 2009.

especially true where there is evidence of incitement to violence against an individual or a public official or a sector of the population, in which case the margin of appreciation is broader. Otherwise, there is little scope under the Convention for restrictions that impact upon political activities.²⁶⁸

Typically, States rely upon the margin of appreciation as a final argument in defence against charges they have violated the Convention. Russia invoked the lack of a European consensus on issues relating to the treatment of sexual minorities in response to a complaint of interference with an advocacy organization that planned to hold a public demonstration. The Court noted that there was in fact consensus on a number of important matters concerning sexual orientation, such as the impermissibility of criminal sanctions for homosexual relations between adults, access to the armed forces, and the granting of parental rights. But in any case, the Court said, 'the absence of a European consensus on these questions is of no relevance to the present case because conferring substantive rights on homosexual persons is fundamentally different from recognising their right to campaign for such rights'. Rejecting the margin of appreciation argument, the Court said that '[t]he only factor taken into account by the Moscow authorities was the public opposition to the event, and the officials' own views on morals'.²⁶⁹

The Court has accepted that 'in certain cases, the States' margin of appreciation may include a right to interfere—subject to the condition of proportionality—with an association's internal organisation and functioning in the event of non-compliance with reasonable legal formalities applying to its establishment, functioning or internal organisational structure'.²⁷⁰ It may also be justified in intervening in the case of a serious and prolonged internal conflict of the organization.²⁷¹ However, 'the authorities should not intervene in the internal organisational functioning of associations to such a far-reaching extent as to ensure observance by an association of every single formality provided by its own charter'.²⁷² The observance of internal formalities 'should be primarily up to the association itself and its members, and not the public authorities'.²⁷³

In a Polish case concerning the refusal to allow an association to call itself an 'organisation of a national minority', because of possible consequences in terms of participation in elections, the Grand Chamber said the national authorities 'did not overstep their margin of appreciation in considering that there was a pressing social need, at the moment of registration, to regulate the free choice of associations to call themselves an "organisation of a national minority", in order to protect the existing democratic institutions and election procedures in Poland and thereby, in Convention terms, prevent disorder and protect the rights of others'.²⁷⁴

²⁶⁸ Schwabe and M.G. v. Germany, nos 8080/08 and 8577/08, § 113, ECHR 2011 (extracts); Stankov and the United Macedonian Organisation Ilinden v. Bulgaria, nos 29221/95 and 29225/95, § 88, ECHR 2001-IX.

²⁶⁹ Alekseyev v. Russia, nos 4916/07, 25924/08 and 14599/09, §§ 83–85, 21 October 2010.

²⁷⁰ Ertan and Others v. Turkey (dec.), no. 57898/00, 21 March 2006; Baisan and Liga Apararii Drepturilor Omului din Romania v. Romania (dec.), no. 28973/95, 30 October 1995; Carmuirea Spirituala a Musulmanilor din Republica Moldova v. Moldova (dec.), no. 12282/02, 14 June 2005.

²⁷¹ Holy Synod of the Bulgarian Orthodox Church (Metropolitan Inokentiy) and Others v. Bulgaria, nos 412/03 and 35677/04, § 131, 22 January 2009.

²⁷² Tebieti Mühafize Cemiyeti and Israfilov v. Azerbaijan, no. 37083/03, § 78, ECHR 2009.

²⁷³ Republican Party of Russia v. Russia, no. 12976/07, § 88, 12 April 2011.

²⁷⁴ Gorzelik and Others v. Poland [GC], no. 44158/98, § 104, ECHR 2004-1.

Militant democracy

The term 'militant democracy' was introduced by the German philosopher, Karl Loewenstein.²⁷⁵ His perspective was providing democratic societies with the means to deal with anti-democratic elements in general and fascists in particular in light of the threat that they would exploit freedoms of assembly and association in order to destroy democratic government.²⁷⁶ Judgments of the Court have referred to the term 'militant democracy', although it has never been formally endorsed.²⁷⁷ There is an inherent tension between the protection of democracy and recognition of freedom of association to the extent that political parties may advocate dramatic change to the established order. Recalling that '[f]reedom of association is not absolute', the Court has said that where an association jeopardizes the State's institutions or the rights and freedoms of others, article 11 does not deprive the State of the power to protect those institutions and persons. It has noted that this follows both from article 11(2) and from the State's positive obligations under article 1 of the Convention.²⁷⁸ In addition, of course, article 17 is a means by which the Convention can resist being exploited by groups determined to undermine its very principles. Invoking article 17, the Court held that a racist organization known as the National and Patriotic Association of Polish Victims of Bolshevism and Zionism, claiming to represent persons persecuted by Jews, could not invoke article 11 in order to contest its prohibition.²⁷⁹

According to the Court,

[O]ne of the principal characteristics of democracy [is] the possibility it offers of resolving a country's problems through dialogue, without recourse to violence, even when they are irksome. Democracy thrives on freedom of expression. From that point of view, there can be no justification for hindering a political group solely because it seeks to debate in public the situation of part of the State's population and to take part in the nation's political life in order to find, according to democratic rules, solutions capable of satisfying everyone concerned.²⁸⁰

The Court has said that a political party may promote a change in the law or the legal and constitutional structures of the State on two conditions: first, the means used to that end must be legal and democratic; second, the change proposed must itself be compatible with fundamental democratic principles. A political party 'is not excluded from the protection afforded by the Convention simply because its activities are regarded by the national authorities as undermining the constitutional structures of the State and calling for the imposition of restrictions'.²⁸¹ But where a political party incites violence or puts forward a policy that does not respect democracy or is aimed at its destruction, and that flouts the rights and freedoms recognized in a democracy, it cannot demand the protection of ²⁷⁵ K. Loewenstein, 'Militant Democracy and Fundamental Rights I,' (1995) 31 American Political Science Review 417.

²⁷⁶ P. Harvey, 'Militant Democracy and the European Convention on Human Rights', (2004) 29 European Law Review 407.

²⁷⁷ Refah Partisi (the Welfare Party) and Others v. Turkey, nos 41340/98, 41342/98, 41343/98, and 41344/98, § 62, 31 July 2001; Herri Batasuna and Batasuna v. Spain, nos 25803/04 and 25817/04, §§ 20, 21, 30, 45, ECHR 2009.

²⁷⁸ Gozelik and Others v. Poland [GC], no. 44158/98, § 94, ECHR 2004-I.

²⁷⁹ W.P. and Others v. Poland (dec.), no. 42264/98, ECHR 2004-VII (extracts).

²⁸⁰ United Communist Party of Turkey and Others v. Turkey, 30 January 1998, § 57, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-I.

²⁸¹ Ibid., § 27; Herri Batasuna and Batasuna v. Spain, nos 25803/04 and 25817/04, § 79, ECHR 2009.

the Convention.²⁸² As the Court has noted, 'it is not at all improbable that totalitarian movements, organised in the form of political parties, might do away with democracy, after prospering under the democratic regime, there being examples of this in modern European history'.²⁸³ Furthermore, a State cannot be required to wait, before intervening, until a political party has seized power and begun to take concrete steps to implement a policy incompatible with the standards of the Convention and democracy, even though the danger of that policy for democracy is sufficiently established and imminent. The Court accepts that where the presence of such a danger has been established by the national courts, after detailed scrutiny subjected to rigorous European supervision, a State may 'reasonably forestall the execution of such a policy, which is incompatible with the Convention's provisions, before an attempt is made to implement it through concrete steps that might prejudice civil peace and the country's democratic regime'.²⁸⁴

In determining the objectives and intentions of a political party as justification for restrictions on its activity, the constitution and the programme are not the only factors to be considered in evaluating whether the political party may invoke article 11. History has shown that 'political parties with aims contrary to the fundamental principles of democracy have not revealed such aims in their official publications until after taking power'.²⁸⁵ The programme of a political party 'may conceal objectives and intentions different from the ones it proclaims'.²⁸⁶ Analysis of the actions and stances of the leaders of the party must also be considered.²⁸⁷ In a case dealing with a Basque nationalist party, the Court referred to conduct that bore 'a strong resemblance to explicit support for violence and the commendation of people seemingly linked to terrorism'.²⁸⁸ In addition, a 'refusal to condemn violence against a backdrop of terrorism that had been in place for more than thirty years and condemned by all the other political parties amounted to tacit support for terrorism'.²⁸⁹

However, if the impugned decision by a State is based solely on the programme of a political party, the Court will not consider statements by its leaders in determining whether the measures were proportionate.²⁹⁰ Political parties 'animated by the moral values imposed by a religion cannot be regarded as intrinsically inimical to the ²⁸² Refah Partisi (the Welfare Party) and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 41340/98, 41342/98, 41343/98, and 41344/98, § 98, ECHR 2003-II; Yazar and Others v. Turkey, nos 22723/93, 22724/93, and 22725/93, § 49, ECHR 2002-II; Partidul Comunistilor (Nepecearisti) and Ungureanu v. Romania, no. 46626/99, § 46, ECHR 2005-I (extracts); Linkov v. the Czech Republic, no. 10504/03, § 36, 7 December 2006.

²⁸³ Refah Partisi (the Welfare Party) and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 41340/98, 41342/98, 41343/98, and 41344/98, § 99.

²⁸⁴ Herri Batasuna and Batasuna v. Spain, nos 25803/04 and 25817/04, § 81, ECHR 2009; Refah Partisi (the Welfare Party) and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 41340/98, 41342/98, 41343/98, and 41344/98, § 102, ECHR 2003-II.

²⁸⁵ Refah Partisi (the Welfare Party) and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 41340/98, 41342/98, 41343/98, and 41344/98, § 101, ECHR 2003-II.

²⁸⁶ Ibid., § 44.

²⁸⁷ United Communist Party of Turkey and Others v. Turkey, 30 January 1998, § 58, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-I; Socialist Party and Others v. Turkey, 25 May 1998, § 38, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-III.

²⁸⁸ Herri Batasuna and Batasuna v. Spain, nos 25803/04 and 25817/04, § 86, ECHR 2009.

²⁸⁹ Ibid., § 88.

²⁹⁰ Partidul Comunistilor (Nepecearisti) and Ungureanu v. Romania, no. 46626/99, §§ 51–52, ECHR 2005-I (extracts); Dicle for the Democracy Party (DEP) v. Turkey, no. 25141/94, § 50, 10 December 2002; IPSD and Others v. Turkey, no. 35832/97, § 34, 25 October 2005; Bozgan v. Romania, no. 35097/02, § 22, 11 October 2007.

fundamental principles of democracy, as set forth in the Convention'.²⁹¹ The Court has applied article 11 in recognizing the right to establish new communist parties in Central and Eastern Europe as part of the democratic debate.²⁹²

Where political parties are concerned, the exceptions set out in article 11 are to be strictly construed.²⁹³ Restrictions on the freedom of association of political parties can only be justified by 'convincing and compelling reasons'. Accordingly, a variety of sanctions 'may be imposed on those political parties that use illegal or undemocratic methods, incite to violence or put forward a policy which is aimed at the destruction of democracy and flouting of the rights and freedoms recognised in a democracy'.²⁹⁴ The most drastic forms of restriction on political parties involve their dissolution or prohibitions on the political activities of their leaders. Such measures may only be taken 'in the most serious cases'.²⁹⁵ Moreover, 'the Court must scrutinise very carefully the necessity for imposing a ban on a parliamentary political party's activities, even a ban of fairly short duration'.²⁹⁶ In determining whether restrictions are necessary, in accordance with article 11(2), States have only a limited margin of appreciation. Still, the European Court 'must exercise rigorous supervision embracing both the law and the decisions applying it, including those given by independent courts'.²⁹⁷

The Court acknowledges that national authorities may be better placed than an international court to assess of matters such as the appropriate timing for interference.²⁹⁸ An assessment needs to be made of the danger a political party may pose for democracy before irreparable damage is done. In this assessment, the Court is prepared to show considerable deference to the national courts. The Court has associated such preventive intervention with the positive obligations upon the State to control the conduct of non-State entities: 'A Contracting State may be justified under its positive obligations in imposing on political parties, which are bodies whose raison d'être is to accede to power and direct the work of a considerable portion of the State apparatus, the duty to respect and safeguard the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Convention and the obligation not to put forward a political programme in contradiction with the fundamental principles of democracy'.²⁹⁹

²⁹¹ Refah Partisi (the Welfare Party) and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 41340/98, 41342/98, 41343/98, and 41344/98, § 100, ECHR 2003-II.

²⁹² Partidul Comunistilor (Nepeckeristi) and Ungureanu v. Romania, no. 46626/99, § 55, ECHR 2005-I (extracts).

²⁹³ Refah Partisi (the Welfare Party) and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 41340/98, 41342/98, 41343/98, and 41344/98, § 100, ECHR 2003-II; Christian Democratic People's Party v. Moldova, no. 28793/02, § 68, ECHR 2006-II.

²⁹⁴ Republican Party of Russia v. Russia, no. 12976/07, § 129, 12 April 2011; Herri Batasuna and Batasuna v. Spain, nos 25803/04 and 25817/04, § 79, ECHR 2009.

²⁹⁵ Refah Partisi (the Welfare Party) and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 41340/98, 41342/98, 41343/98, and 41344/98, § 100, ECHR 2003-II; Freedom and Democracy Party (ÖZDEP) v. Turkey [GC], no. 23885/94, § 45, ECHR 1999-VIII; United Communist Party of Turkey and Others v. Turkey, 30 January 1998, § 46. Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-I; Socialist Party and Others v. Turkey, 25 May 1998, § 50, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-III; The United Macedonian Organisation Ilinden—PIRIN and Others v. Bulgaria, no. 59489/00, § 56, 20 October 2005. Also, for other associations, Association Rhino and Others v. Switzerland, no. 48848/07, § 62, 11 October 2011.

²⁹⁶ Christian Democratic People's Party v. Moldova, no. 28793/02, § 68, ECHR 2006-II.

²⁹⁷ Refah Partisi (the Welfare Party) and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 41340/98, 41342/98, 41343/98, and 41344/98, § 100, ECHR 2003-II; Christian Democratic People's Party v. Moldova, no. 28793/02, § 68, ECHR 2006-II.

²⁹⁸ Refah Partisi (the Welfare Party) and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 41340/98, 41342/98, 41343/98, and 41344/98, § 100, ECHR 2003-II; Christian Democratic People's Party v. Moldova, no. 28793/02, § 68, ECHR 2006-II.

²⁹⁹ Refah Partisi (the Welfare Party) and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 41340/98, 41342/98, 41343/98, and 41344/98, § 103, ECHR 2003-II; Herri Batasuna and Batasuna v. Spain, nos 25803/04 and 25817/04, § 82, ECHR 2009.

Lawful restrictions on public employees

The final sentence of article 11(2) states that 'the imposition of lawful restrictions on the exercise of these rights by members of the armed forces, of the police or of the administration of the State' is not prohibited. According to the Court, 'the restrictions imposed on the three groups mentioned in Article 11 are to be construed strictly and should therefore be confined to the "exercise" of the rights in question. However, these restrictions must not impair the very essence of the right to organise.'³⁰⁰ As a result, civil servants are entitled to form trade unions and to exercise their rights under article 11(1) of the Convention like any other worker.³⁰¹

Pursuant to the final sentence of article 11(2), employers are entitled, in certain circumstances, to place restrictions on freedom of association of employees in order to maintain the political neutrality of civil servants.³⁰² When civil servants are concerned, the right to strike may not be absolute, and it is possible for some categories of public employees to be prohibited from taking such industrial action.³⁰³ A prohibition on a police officer belonging to a political party was considered an acceptable restriction on freedom of association.³⁰⁴

Article 22 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights is worded in a similar manner to article 11(2) of the European Convention except that it only restricts the exercise of freedom of association to members of the armed forces and of the police and makes no reference to members of the administration of the State. There is a similar provision, applicable to the police and members of the armed forces, in the European Social Charter (revised).³⁰⁵ Other international law sources, notably International Labour Organisation Conventions No. 87 and No. 98 and the European Code of Police Ethics, provide confirmation that it has been 'generally acknowledged that the duties and responsibilities inherent in the position and role of the police justify particular arrangements as regards the exercise of their trade union rights'.³⁰⁶

If the notion of members of the armed forces and the police seems to raise no great problems of interpretation, the same cannot be said of 'the administration of the State'. Construed broadly, it has the potential to provide a huge loophole in the protection provided by article 11. In this respect, the Court has taken note of the practice of European states:

[I]n the vast majority of them, the right of civil servants to bargain collectively with the authorities has been recognised, subject to various exceptions so as to exclude certain areas regarded as sensitive or certain categories of civil servants who hold exclusive powers of the State. In particular, the right of public servants employed by local authorities and not holding State powers to engage in collective bargaining in order to determine their wages and working conditions has been recognised in the

³⁰⁰ Demir and Baykara v. Turkey [GC], no. 34503/97, § 97, ECHR 2008.

³⁰¹ See also Tüm Haber Sen and Çınar v. Turkey, no. 28602/95, § 38, ECHR 2006-II.

³⁰² Ahmed and Others v. the United Kingdom, 2 September 1998, § 63, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-VI; Redfearn v. the United Kingdom, no. 47335/06, § 44, 6 November 2012.

³⁰³ Enerji Yapı-Yol Sen v. Turkey, no. 68959/01, § 32, 21 April 2009.

³⁰⁴ Rekvényi v. Hungary [GC], no. 25390/94, § 61, ECHR 1999-III. See, however, Rekvényi v. Hungary [GC], no. 25390/94, Partly Dissenting Opinion of Judge Fischbach, ECHR 1999-III.

³⁰⁵ European Social Charter (revised), ETS 163, art. 5.

³⁰⁶ Trade Union of the Police in the Slovak Republic and Others v. Slovakia, no. 11828/08, § 67, 25 September 2012.

majority of Contracting States. The remaining exceptions can be justified only by particular circumstances.³⁰⁷

Basing itself on these and other sources, the Grand Chamber has in effect removed the words 'or of the administration of the State' from the final sentence of article 11(2).³⁰⁸

Consequently, the notion of 'administration of the State' is to be interpreted narrowly and the position of the victim of an infringement of article 11(1) scrutinized carefully in order to determine whether it falls under the exception of the final sentence of article 11(2). For example, teachers are public employees but they are not considered to be part of the 'administration of the State'.³⁰⁹ Similarly, nominations and appointments to regional organizations do not follow under the exception.³¹⁰ In the context of article 6(1) of the Convention, the Grand Chamber has adopted a functional criterion for determining the scope of 'public servants', a notion that seems cognate with 'administration of the State'. Adopting a restrictive interpretation, it has said that this applies only to persons 'whose duties typify the specific activities of the public service in so far as the latter is acting as the depositary of public authority responsible for protecting the general interests of the State or other public authorities', adding that '[a] manifest example of such activities is provided by the armed forces and the police'.³¹¹

The term 'lawful' in the second sentence of article 11(2) denotes the same concept of lawfulness found elsewhere in the Convention, where the expressions 'in accordance with the law' and 'prescribed by law' are employed, in articles 9, 10, and 11.³¹² This implies qualitative requirements, notably foreseeability and an absence of arbitrariness. The European Commission of Human Rights took the position that the word 'lawful' meant that a restriction need only have a basis in national law and need not be arbitrary, and that it did not also entail a requirement of proportionality.³¹³ The Grand Chamber adopted a more progressive position, considering that the State was required to show the legitimacy of any restrictions to the right to organize. In particular, it said that municipal civil servants who are not engaged in the administration of the State as such should not be treated as 'members of the administration of the State'.³¹⁴

Discrimination

Article 14 of the Convention sets out a protection against discrimination that is subsidiary in that it requires a relationship with the enjoyment of the rights and freedoms set out elsewhere in the Convention. Even if there is no breach of article 11 taken alone, the Strasbourg organs may consider that there is an infringement of the Convention when article 11 is associated with article 14, as if article 14 formed an integral part of article 11.³¹⁵

³⁰⁷ Demir and Baykara v. Turkey [GC], no. 34503/97, § 151, ECHR 2008.

³⁰⁸ Ibid., § 107.

³⁰⁹ Vogt v. Germany, 26 September 1995, § 67, Series A no. 323.

³¹⁰ Grande Oriente d'Italia di Palazzo Giustiniani v. Italy, no. 35972/97, § 31, ECHR 2001-VIII.

³¹¹ Pellegrin v. France [GC], no. 28541/95, § 66, ECHR 1999-VIII.

³¹² Rekvenyi v. Hungary [GC], no. 25390/94, § 59, ECHR 1999-III; Grande Oriente d'Italia di Palazzo Giustiniani v. Italy, no. 35972/97, § 30, ECHR 2001-VIII.

³¹³ Council of Civil Service Unions and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 11603/85, Commission decision of 20 January 1987, DR 50, p. 228.

³¹⁴ Demir and Baykara v. Turkey [GC], no. 34503/97, § 98, ECHR 2008.

³¹⁵ National Union of Belgian Police v. Belgium, 27 October 1975, § 44, Series A no. 19. Contra: National Union of Belgian Police v. Belgium, 27 October 1975, Separate Opinion of Sir Gerald Fitzmaurice, Series A no. 19.

The general principles for the application of article 14 include recognition that there is prohibited discrimination only if different treatment lacks a reasonable and objective justification.³¹⁶ Different treatment must not only pursue a legitimate aim or purpose but there must also be a reasonable relationship of proportionality between the means that are employed and the objective of the measures.³¹⁷ States enjoy a margin of appreciation in this respect, although the Court remains the final arbiter.³¹⁸ As a general rule, if the Court finds that there is a violation of article 11 it will not also consider the case under article 14 unless 'a clear inequality of treatment in the enjoyment of the right in question is a fundamental aspect of the case'.³¹⁹

The Court held there was a violation of article 11 and article 14 with respect to Italian legislation applicable in Friuli-Venezia Giulia that required members of an association of freemasons to declare their affiliation in applying for public positions given the absence of any similar obligation on members of other secret organizations.³²⁰ However, in Tuscany, where the requirement that membership in secret organizations be revealed only applied in a general sense, the Court did not consider this to be contrary to the Convention. Nor was there discrimination because the same rule did not apply to similar positions in other regions of Italy because the possibility that certain issues be addressed differently from one region to another was merely the natural consequence of administrative autonomy.³²¹ The Court did not rule out the possibility that prohibited discrimination might result from exceptionally strict or rigid application to certain groups of regulations that were not in themselves discriminatory,³²² but it held that in the circumstances this had not been proven satisfactorily.³²³

In a labour relations context, the Swedish Engine Drivers complained that they were victims of discrimination because the Swedish National Collective Bargaining Office (Statens Avtalsverk), which favoured larger trade union bodies in the conclusion of collective agreements, would not negotiate with them. Because of the high degree of centralization in the Swedish trade union movement, the government argued that it preferred to reach collective agreements with the most representative organizations. The Court considered this to be legitimate and said there was 'no reason to think that the Swedish State had other and ill-intentioned designs in the matter'.³²⁴ Similar conclusions were reached in a case concerning Belgium.³²⁵ In neither of these cases was one of the ³¹⁶ Zarb Adami v. Malta, no. 17209/02, § 71, ECHR 2006-VIII; Ünal Tekeli v. Turkey, no. 29865/96, § 49, ECHR 2004-X (extracts).

³¹⁷ Petrovic v. Austria, 27 March 1998, § 30, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-II; Lithgow and Others v. the United Kingdom, 8 July 1986, § 77, Series A no. 102.

³¹⁸ Rasmussen v. Denmark, 28 November 1984, § 40, Series A no. 87; Inze v. Austria, 28 October 1987, § 41, Series A no. 126.

³¹⁹ Redfearn v. the United Kingdom, no. 47335/06, § 66, 6 November 2012; Moscow Branch of the Salvation Army v. Russia, no. 72881/01, § 101, ECHR 2006-XI; Church of Scientology Moscow v. Russia, no. 18147/02, § 101, 5 April 2007; Demir and Baykara v. Turkey [GC], no. 34503/97, §§ 171–172, ECHR 2008; Chassagnou and Others v. France [GC], nos 25088/94, 28331/95, and 28443/95, § 89, ECHR 1999-III; Dudgeon v. the United Kingdom, 22 October 1981, § 67, Series A no. 45.

³²⁰ Grande Oriente d'Italia di Palazzo Giustiniani v. Italy (no. 2), no. 26740/02, §§ 51–57, 31 May 2007.

³²¹ Siveri and Chiellini v. Italy (dec.), no. 13148/04, 3 June 2008.

³²² Zarb Adami v. Malta, no. 17209/02, §§ 75–79, ECHR 2006-VIII.

³²³ Siveri and Chiellini v. Italy (dec.), no. 13148/04, 3 June 2008.

³²⁴ Swedish Engine Drivers' Union v. Sweden, 6 February 1976, § 46, Series A no. 20.

³²⁵ National Union of Belgian Police v. Belgium, 27 October 1975, § 48, Series A no. 19. Contra: National Union of Belgian Police v. Belgium, 27 October 1975, Joint Separate Opinion of Judges Wiarda, Ganshof van der Meersch, and Bindschedler-Robert, Series A no. 19.

enumerated grounds listed in article 14 invoked or discussed by the Court. The assumption seems to have been that a discussion on discrimination should proceed based upon the differential treatment of a union without the need to specify the prohibited ground.

A requirement that candidates for public office declare their membership in a masonic lodge was deemed discriminatory and a breach of article 11 in conjunction with article 14. In an earlier case, the Court had held that a prohibition on membership in a masonic lodge for holders of public office was a breach of article 11 taken alone. Italy argued that in the second case there was no prohibition and all that was required was a form of public disclosure. The Court said the measure was discriminatory because it only applied to freemasons, whereas if the justification of protection of national security advanced by the State were applied consistently, it should also be used for members of political parties and groups with racist or xenophobic ideas, and this was not the case.³²⁶

The mayor of Warsaw refused permission to hold a demonstration from the Foundation for Equality, whose aim was to alert public opinion to the issue of discrimination against minorities—sexual, national, ethnic, and religious—and also against women and disabled persons. At the same time, permits were granted for six other demonstrations on the following themes: 'For more stringent measures against persons convicted of paedophilia'; 'Against any legislative work on the law on partnerships'; 'Against propaganda for partnerships'; 'Education in Christian values, a guarantee of a moral society'; 'Christians respecting God's and nature's laws are citizens of the first rank'; 'Against adoption of children by homosexual couples'. Bearing in mind that the mayor had expressed his negative views on 'propaganda about homosexuality', the Court said 'that it may be reasonably surmised that his opinions could have affected the decision-making process in the present case and, as a result, impinged on the applicants' right to freedom of assembly in a discriminatory manner'. Consequently, there was a violation of article 14 in conjunction with article 11.³²⁷

Reservations

Andorra formulated a reservation with respect to its legislation governing professional and trade union organizations.³²⁸ San Marino made a reservation concerning the two active trade unions in the country and the requirement that they obtain registration with the Law Court.³²⁹ Spain's reservation makes article 11 subject to two provisions of the Spanish Constitution. These permit restricting the right to organize within the armed forces and prevent serving judges, law officers, and prosecutors from belonging to trade unions.³³⁰ Portugal formulated two reservations to article 11, sheltering provisions of its Constitution that prohibit lock-outs and that forbid organizations with allegiance to a fascist ideology.³³¹ Portugal's reservations were withdrawn in 1987.³³²

³²⁶ Grande Oriente d'Italia di Palazzo Giustiniani v. Italy (no. 2), no. 26740/02, §§ 55–56, 31 May 2007. But see Siveri and Chiellini v. Italy (dec.), no. 13148/04, 3 June 2008, where the facts are similar and there is no finding of a violation.

³²⁷ Bączkowski and Others v. Poland, no. 1543/06, §§ 101–102, 3 May 2007.

³²⁸ (1996) 39 YB 19.

³²⁹ (1989) 32 YB 5.

³³⁰ (1979) 22 YB 24–25.

³³¹ (1978) 21 YB 14–17.

³³² (1987) 30 YB 4–5.

Further reading

- Charles Barrow, 'Demir and Baykara v Turkey: Breathing Life into Article 11', [2010] EHRLR 419.
- Violeta Beširević, 'A Short Guide to Militant Democracy: Some Remarks on the Strasbourg Jurisprudence', in Wolfgang Benedek, Florence Benoît-Rohmer, Wolfram Karl, and Manfred Nowak, eds, European Yearbook on Human Rights, Antwerp: Intersentia and Vienna-Graz, Neuer Wissenschaftlicher Verlag, 2012, pp. 243–57.
- Antoine Buysse, 'Contested Contours: The Limits of Freedom of Expression from an Abuse of Rights Perspective—Article 10 and 17 ECHR', in Eva Brems and Janneke Gerards, eds, Shaping Rights in the ECHR, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2013, pp. 183–210.
- Council of Europe, Freedom of Association, Dordrecht/Boston/London: Martinus Nijhoff, 1994.
- Vincent Coussirat-Coustere, 'Article 11§2', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 431–2.
- Filip Dorssemont, 'The Right to Take Collective Action under Article 11 ECHR', in Filip Dorssemont, Klaus Lörcher, and Isabelle Schömann, eds, The European Convention on Human Rights and the Employment Relation, Oxford and Portland, OR: Hart, 2013, pp. 333–66.
- Andrew Drzemczewski and Frank Wooldridge, 'The Closed Shop Case in Strasbourg', (1982) 31 JCLQ 396.
- K.D. Ewing and J. Hendy, 'The Dramatic Implications of Demir and Baykara', (2010) 39 Industrial Law Journal 2.
- Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 373–85.
- Grabenwarter, European Convention, pp. 297–318.
- Harris et al., Law of the European Convention, pp. 515–48.
- P. Harvey, 'Militant Democracy and the European Convention on Human Rights', (2004) 29 European Law Review 407.
- Aalt Willem Heringa and Fried van Hoof, 'Freedom of Association and Assembly (Article 11)', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 817–40.
- Antoine Jacobs, 'Article 11 ECHR: The Right to Bargain Collectively under Article 11 ECHR', in Filip Dorssemont, Klaus Lörcher, and Isabelle Schömann, eds, The European Convention on Human Rights and the Employment Relation, Oxford and Portland, OR: Hart, 2013, pp. 309–32.
- Paul Johnson, 'Homosexuality, Freedom of Assembly and the Margin of Appreciation Doctrine of the European Court of Human Rights: Alekseyev v Russia', (2011) 11 HRLR 578.
- Mustafa Koçak and Esin Öricü, 'Dissolution of Political Parties in the Name of Democracy, Cases from Turkey and the European Court of Human Rights', (2003) 9 European Public Law 399.
- Renée Koering-Joulin, 'Public Morals', in Mireille Delmas-Marty, ed., The European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights, Dordrecht/Boston/London: Martinus Nijhoff, 1992, pp. 83–98.
- Klaus Lörcher, 'The New Social Dimension in the Jurisprudence of the European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR): The Demir and Baykara Judgment, its Methodology and Follow-up', in Filip Dorssemont, Klaus Lörcher, and Isabelle Schömann, eds, The European Convention on Human Rights and the Employment Relation, Oxford and Portland, OR: Hart, 2013, pp. 3–46.
- J.P. Marguénaud and J. Mouly, 'La Cour européenne des droits de l'homme à la conquête du droit de grève', (2009) 9 Revue de Droit du Travail 499.
- M. O'Boyle, 'Right to Speak and Associate under Strasbourg Case-Law with Reference to Eastern and Central Europe', (1993) 8 Connecticut Journal of International Law 282.
- P. O'Higgins, 'The Closed Shop and the European Convention on Human Rights', [1981] Revue des droits de l'homme 22.
- Ovey/White, Jacobs and White, European Convention, pp. 290–9.
- R. Pelloux, 'Trois affaires syndicales devant la Cour européenne des droits de l'homme', [1976] Annuaire français de droit international 122.
- Karen Reid, A Practitioner's Guide to the European Convention on Human Rights, London: Sweet & Maxwell, 2011, pp. 444–63.
- Stefan Sottiaux, 'Anti-Democratic Associations: Content and Consequences in Article 11 Adjudication', (2004) 22 Netherlands Quarterly of Human Rights 585.

- Nicolas Valticos, 'Article 11§1', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 419–35.
- Isabelle Van Hiel, 'The Right to Form and Join Trade Unions Protected by Article 11 ECHR', in Filip Dorssemont, Klaus Lörcher, and Isabelle Schömann, eds, The European Convention on Human Rights and the Employment Relation, Oxford and Portland, OR: Hart, 2013, pp. 287–308.
- Jacques Velu and Rusen Ergec, La Convention européenne des droits de l'homme, Brussels: Bruylant, 1990, pp. 643–59.
- Ferdinand von Prondzynski, 'Freedom of Association and the Closed Shop: The European Perspective', (1982) 41 Cambridge Law Journal 256.
- D. Voorhoof and J. Englebort, 'La liberté d'expression syndicale mise à mal par la Cour européenne des droits de l'homme', (2010) 83 RTDH 743.

Article 12. Right to marry/Droit au mariage

Men and women of marriageable age have the right to marry and to found a family, according to the national laws governing the exercise of this right.

A partir de l'âge nubile, l'homme et la femme ont le droit de se marier et de fonder une famille selon les lois nationales régissant l'exercice de ce droit.

Introductory comments

The right to marry was largely an invention of the Commission on Human Rights in the preparation of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. It had not figured previously in the draft human rights declarations proposed by bodies like the Institut de droit international or by prominent individuals like H.G. Wells or Hersch Lauterpacht. The original draft of the Universal Declaration, prepared by the Secretariat of the Commission on Human Rights, read: 'Everyone has the right to contract marriage in accordance with the laws of the State.'¹ The Secretariat had analysed the constitutions of United Nations Member States, several draft declarations proposed by States, and a text submitted by the American Federation of Labor, collating the various texts and then setting out draft provisions for the future declaration based upon what it found. The right to marry appeared in only a handful of domestic constitutions, essentially confined to Latin America.² From the modest proposal of the Secretariat, a much more elaborate provision eventually emerged. The changes were largely the result of work by the Commission on the Status of Women.³ It used the text to address issues of women's inequality related to the institution of marriage. For example, the words 'men and women' replaced 'everyone' in order to ensure equal treatment and not—this is the modern-day gloss based on a simplistic reading of the text rather than the intent of those who crafted the provision⁴—so as to reserve marriage to persons of opposite sex. Many of the classic inequalities relating to married women that were concerns of the Commission on the Status of Women have now declined in importance. They were also addressed in some detail in treaties negotiated under the auspices of the United Nations during the 1950s.⁵

Article 16 of the Universal Declaration consists of three paragraphs:

1. Men and women of full age, without any limitation due to race, nationality or religion, have the right to marry and to found a family. They are entitled to equal rights as to marriage, during marriage and at its dissolution.
2. Marriage shall be entered into only with the free and full consent of the intending spouses.

¹ E/CN.4/AC.1/3.

² E/CN.4/AC.1/3/Add.1, pp. 98–9.

³ Draft Report of the Commission on the Status of Women to the Economic and Social Council Lake Success, 5 to 16 January 1948, E/CN.6/74, pp. 13–14.

⁴ See, e.g., EU Network of Independent Experts on Fundamental Rights, Commentary of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, June 2006, pp. 101–2.

⁵ Convention on the Political Rights of Women, (1954) 193 UNTS 135; Convention on the Nationality of Married Women, (1958) 309 UNTS 65; Convention on Consent to Marriage, Minimum Age for Marriage and Registration of Marriages, (1964) 521 UNTS 232.

3. The family is the natural and fundamental group unit of society and is entitled to protection by society and the State.

Article 12 of the European Convention is derived from article 16 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. As a general rule, the provisions of the Declaration are more laconic than the detailed texts of the subsequent treaties whose content it has inspired, but this is not the case with article 12. From seventy-seven words in the Declaration, the right to marry generates only twenty-seven words in the Convention.

Article 23 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights is the equivalent provision to article 12 of the European Convention:

1. The family is the natural and fundamental group unit of society and is entitled to protection by society and the State.
2. The right of men and women of marriageable age to marry and to found a family shall be recognised.
3. No marriage shall be entered into without the free and full consent of the intending spouses.
4. States Parties to the present Covenant shall take appropriate steps to ensure equality of rights and responsibilities of spouses as to marriage, during marriage and at its dissolution. In the case of dissolution, provision shall be made for the necessary protection of any children.⁶

In 1985, article 5 of Protocol No. 7 to the European Convention on Human Rights added a provision based broadly on article 23(4) of the Covenant.

Other international legal instruments are also of relevance to article 12 of the Convention. The European Social Charter, adopted in 1961, contains provisions dealing with the social, legal, and economic protection of the family.⁷ The European Charter of Fundamental Rights contains a similar provision but with a wider scope:

Article 9. Right to marry and right to found a family

The right to marry and the right to found a family shall be guaranteed in accordance with the national laws governing the exercise of these rights.

Thus, the scope of article 9 of the Charter may be extended to other forms of marriage if these are established by national legislation.⁸

Drafting of the provision

The initial draft European Convention on Human Rights prepared by the International Juridical Section of the European Movement contained the following: 'Every State a party to this Convention shall guarantee to all persons within its territory the following rights: . . . g) The natural rights deriving from marriage and paternity and those pertaining to the family.'⁹

⁶ For a comparison of article 12 with the corresponding provision of the Covenant, see A.H. Robertson, 'The United Nations International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the European Convention on Human Rights', (1968-1969) 32 British Yearbook of International Law 21, at pp. 34-5.

⁷ European Social Charter, ETS 35, art. 16.

⁸ Explanation relating to the Charter of Fundamental Rights, Official Journal of the European Union, C 303/34, 14 December 2007.

⁹ Convention for the Collective Protection of Individual Rights and Democratic Liberties by the States, Members of the Council of Europe, and for the establishment of a European Court of Human Rights to ensure observance of the Convention, Doc. INF/5/E/R, I TP 296-303, at p. 296, art. I(g).

At the first session of the Consultative Assembly of the Council of Europe, in August–September 1949, Pierre-Henri Teitgen called for adoption of a convention that would include ‘the natural rights deriving from marriage and paternity...’¹⁰ Asked to prepare a text for discussion in the Assembly’s Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions, Teitgen proposed the following: ‘Right to marry with free and full consent and to found a family, in accordance with Article 16 of the United Nations Declaration.’¹¹ The proposal met with opposition within the Committee. A motion by Lord Layton to delete the entire provision was defeated, with six in favour, nine against, and one abstention. Subsequently, an amendment to remove the reference to free and full consent succeeded, with eight in favour, four against, and three abstentions.¹² The Committee proposed the following: ‘The right to marry and to found a family, in accordance with Article 16 of the United Nations Declaration.’¹³

In the plenary Consultative Assembly, Teitgen explained that the Committee had intended to ‘make use, as far as possible, of the definitions set out in the “Universal Declaration of Human Rights”’.¹⁴ The draft convention ‘did not relate to all the provisions of the article in question, but only to those specifying the content of the liberty’.¹⁵ He provided article 16 of the Declaration as an example: ‘In mentioning the particular Article of the Universal Declaration, we have used only that part of the paragraph of the Article which affirms the right to marry and to found a family, but not the subsequent provisions of the Article concerning equal rights after marriage, since we only guarantee the right to marry.’¹⁶ Teitgen also elaborated upon the inclusion of ‘family rights’ in the draft, noting that the subject had given rise to discussion in the Committee:

There were first of all those rights which I shall call ‘family rights.’ I might explain that by this I mean those rights which we had in mind when we refer in paragraph (4) of Article 2, to ‘freedom from all arbitrary interference in private and family life’; and also those which we mentioned in paragraph (10) where we ask for protection of ‘the right to marry and found a family,’ and finally those which we defined in paragraph (11) where we speak of ‘the right of parents to have prior right regarding the kind of education to be given to their children.’

No one in the Committee, I hasten to add, has denied the vital importance of these family rights. Some have said that they would prefer to see the guarantee confined for the moment to essential civic freedoms, to those which are the necessary conditions for the functioning of democratic institutions, and that it would be better for the time being to exclude all other freedoms and all other fundamental rights which would include, in spite of their importance, family rights.

¹⁰ Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 19 August 1949], I TP 38–154, at p. 46.

¹¹ Proposals by Mr P.H. Teitgen, Rapporteur, 29 August 1949, Doc. A 116, I TP 166–8. Also Report presented by Mr P.H. Teitgen, 5 September 1949, Doc. A 290, I TP 192–213, at p. 206. See also Report [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions], 5 September 1949, Doc. AS (1) 77, I TP 216–39, at p. 228.

¹² Minutes of the Sitting [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions, 30 August 1949], Doc. A 167, I TP 174–80, at p. 176.

¹³ Report [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions], 5 September 1949, Doc. AS (1) 77, I TP 216–39, at p. 230. Also Report presented by Mr P.H. Teitgen, 5 September 1949, Doc. A 290, I TP 192–213, at p. 208.

¹⁴ Report presented by Mr P.H. Teitgen, 5 September 1949, Doc. A 290, I TP 192–213, at p. 194.

¹⁵ Ibid., p. 194. Also Report [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions], 5 September 1949, Doc. AS (1) 77, I TP 216–39, at p. 218.

¹⁶ Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 7 September 1949], I TP 258–95, at p. 268. Cited in Johnston and Others v. Ireland, 18 December 1986, § 52, Series A no. 112.

The Committee recalled the time in the recent past when, in some countries, certain people were denied the right to marry on account of race or religious convictions. It also recalled the legislation, under which some countries suffered during cruel years, which subordinated the child to the benefit of the State.

On account of these memories, the majority of the Committee considered it desirable to include these fundamental rights in the list of guaranteed freedoms. It considered that the father of a family cannot be an independent citizen, cannot feel free within his own country, if he is menaced in his own home and if, every day, the State steals from his soul, or the conscience of his children.¹⁷

There was a proposal to delete the entire provision.¹⁸ Lord Layton of the United Kingdom took the lead, explaining that the proposed list of fundamental rights for the convention was 'not intended to be anything like a complete list of human rights. It is a selected list of rights which should be the subject of collective guarantee, and guaranteed now.'¹⁹ Layton insisted upon a short list that 'should be limited to the absolute minimum necessary to constitute the cardinal principles for the functioning of political democracy'.²⁰ He pointed to the much longer list in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, adding that he thought that all of the States represented in the Consultative Assembly were already 'parties to this Declaration'.²¹ In fact there are no 'parties' to the Universal Declaration, which is a resolution of the United Nations General Assembly; moreover, at the time of Layton's remarks two members of the Consultative Assembly of the Council of Europe, Ireland and Italy, were not yet members of the United Nations.

Layton's proposal was criticized by Sean MacEntee of Ireland, who said that its adoption would 'seal the triumph of the totalitarian ideologies'. For MacEntee, '[t]he outstanding feature of the totalitarian regimes was the ruthless and savage way in which they endeavoured to wipe out the concept of the family as the natural unit of society'.²² Similar statements were made by delegates from the Netherlands,²³ Italy,²⁴ and France.²⁵ Recognizing the isolation of his position, Layton agreed to its withdrawal.²⁶ The text that the Committee proposed was adopted by the Consultative Assembly.²⁷

The Committee of Ministers decided to refer the draft adopted by the Consultative Assembly to a Committee of Experts. It held two sessions, in February and March 1950. At the conclusion of its first session, the Committee of Experts adopted the following provision: 'Men and women of full age have the right to marry and to found a family'.²⁸ The text it adopted is similar to that of the first sentence of article 16 of the Declaration except that the words 'without any limitation due to race, nationality or religion' that

¹⁷ Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 7 September 1949], I TP 258-95, at p. 270.

¹⁸ Amendment proposed by Lord Layton, Doc. AS (1) 93, I TP 254.

¹⁹ Official Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 8 September 1949], II TP 14-274, at p. 50.

²⁰ Ibid., p. 52.

²¹ Ibid., p. 50.

²² Ibid., p. 90.

²³ Ibid., p. 96. See also the statement by Eamonn de Valera, ibid., p. 102.

²⁴ Ibid., p. 100.

²⁵ Ibid., p. 108.

²⁶ Ibid., p. 132.

²⁷ Recommendation No. 38 to the Committee of Ministers adopted 8 September 1949 on the conclusion of the debates, Doc. AS (1) 108, II TP 274-83, at p. 276.

²⁸ Preliminary Draft Convention for the Maintenance and Further Realisation of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 15 February 1950, Doc. A 833, III TP 236-46, at p. 238. Also Draft text of the first section of a draft Convention based on the work of the Consultative Assembly, Doc. A 809, III TP 220-31, at p. 224.

follow 'full age' are omitted. At the second session of the Committee, the United Kingdom made a proposal to dispense with the provision altogether.²⁹ A Drafting Committee charged with reviewing the United Kingdom proposal added a second sentence to the draft: 'Each State party hereto shall be entitled to establish rules governing the exercise of these rights.'³⁰ The Committee of Experts concluded its work with the submission to the Committee of Ministers of two different drafts. The first, labelled 'Alternative A', contained the text from the Drafting Committee.³¹ The second, 'Alternative B', contained the text in the report of the first session of the Committee of Experts.³² The report of the Committee to the Committee of Ministers explains that instead of enumerating rights by reference to the relevant provision in the Universal Declaration, as had been done by the Consultative Assembly, it was thought better to incorporate the text verbatim. Nevertheless, '[i]n accordance with the Assembly's intentions, only a certain part of the rights mentioned in [Article 16] of the Universal Declaration were included'.³³

The Conference of Senior Officials that convened in June 1950 assigned a Drafting Committee to attempt to reconcile the competing versions. It prepared a new formulation on the right to marry based upon that of the Drafting Committee of the Committee of Experts with the addition of a phrase concerning national laws: 'Men and women of full age have the right to marry and to found a family, according to the national laws governing the exercise of these rights.'³⁴ There were no changes in the final version adopted by the Conference of Senior Officials.³⁵ In the text adopted by the Committee of Ministers at its fifth session, in early August 1950, the words 'these rights' were changed to 'this right'.³⁶

It seems that minor changes continued to be discussed until the very last minute prior to the official adoption. On 21 October 1950, two weeks before the ceremony in Rome at which the Convention was to be signed, A.H. Robertson of the Secretariat wrote to H.J. Downing, a Foreign Office official in London, as follows:

There is one point to which I would like particularly to draw your attention—this is in Article 14 [article 12]. The French phrase 'à partir de l'âge nubile' has been translated 'of full age'. The latter, however, in my view, means 'who have attained their majority' which is quite different from 'l'âge nubile'. Consequently, I have suggested 'who may have reached the age of consent'. You may care to consider whether this is the most appropriate translation. An alternative would be 'of marriageable age', but it is less precise and would not make a good sentence.³⁷

²⁹ Amendments to Articles 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 8, and 9 of the Committee's preliminary draft proposal by the Expert of the United Kingdom, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 2, A 915, III TP 280–9, at pp. 286–8.

³⁰ Amendments to the British draft proposed by the Drafting Committee composed of Sir Oscar Dowson, MM le Quesne, Dons Moeller, and Salén, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 10, p. 3, A 919, III TP 288–95, at p. 292.

³¹ Preliminary Draft Convention, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 14, A 932, III TP 312–35, at pp. 318–20.

³² Ibid., p. 322.

³³ Report to the Committee of Ministers submitted by the Committee of Experts Instructed to Draw Up a Draft Convention of Collective Guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Doc. CM/WP 1 (5) 15, A 924, IV TP 2–55, at p. 22. Also Preliminary Draft of the Report to the Committee of Ministers, 24 February 1950, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 1, A 847, III TP 246–79, at p. 262.

³⁴ New draft alternatives B and B/2, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 9, A 1372, IV TP 182–91, at p. 190.

³⁵ Draft Convention appended to the draft report, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 16, appendix, A 1445, IV TP 218–40, at p. 224.

³⁶ Draft Convention adopted by the Sub-Committee, Doc. CM 1 (50) 52, A 1884, V TP 76–99, at p. 82; Draft Convention adopted by the Committee of Ministers, 7 August 1950, Doc. A 1937, V TP 120–45, at p. 128.

³⁷ Letter addressed 21 October 1950 by Mr Robertson (Member of the Secretariat) to Mr Downing (Official of the Western Organisations Department, Foreign Office, London), VI TP 184–7, at p. 286.

Downing answered:

[T]he phrase 'age of consent' is ambiguous in English. The word 'nubility' does exist in English but is not usual. I am unable to suggest any translation that would be entirely satisfactory. I think, however, that the solution is to omit any reference to age in both the English and French versions. These references are not necessary because the whole Article is governed by the concluding words 'according to the national laws' etc., and the age at which a person may marry with or without consent of parent or guardian will, of course, be provided for in the national laws.³⁸

These exchanges did not result in any further changes to the text of article 12, however. The heading 'Right to marry' was added by Protocol No. 11.³⁹

Analysis and interpretation

The wording of article 12 'makes it clear', a unanimous European Court of Human Rights sitting in Plenary has said, 'that Article 12 is mainly concerned to protect marriage as the basis of the family'.⁴⁰ In one of its judgments, the Court slightly rephrased article 12, stating that it 'secures the fundamental right of a man and woman to marry and to found a family'.⁴¹ Exercise of the right gives rise to social, personal, and legal consequences. Marriage 'remains an institution which is widely accepted as conferring a particular status on those who enter it'.⁴² Despite analogies with long-term relationships of unmarried couples, the Court has pointed to the distinct feature of a legally binding agreement associated with a public undertaking.⁴³

Article 12 contains no limitation clause setting out permissible grounds for interference with the right that it enshrines, in contrast with articles 8 to 11. This 'underlines the fundamental character of the right to marry and to found a family', according to an individual opinion.⁴⁴ However, it does not mean the right is absolute, 'but rather that the Court would have to determine, regard being had to the State's margin of appreciation, the impugned interference was arbitrary or disproportionate'.⁴⁵ Although subject to national laws, as the final words of article 12 make explicit, 'the limitations thereby introduced must not restrict or reduce the right in such a way or to such an extent that the very essence of the right is impaired'.⁴⁶ Limitations arise at the procedural level, for

³⁸ Response to the preceding Letter, addressed 28 October 1950 by Mr Downing to Mr Roberson (US 17311/102), VI TP 286-91, at p. 288.

³⁹ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(2).

⁴⁰ Rees v. the United Kingdom, 17 October 1986, § 49, Series A no. 106; Cossey v. the United Kingdom, 27 September 1990, § 43, Series A no. 184.

⁴¹ B. and L. v. the United Kingdom, no. 36536/02, § 34, 13 September 2005.

⁴² Serife Yiğit v. Turkey [GC], no. 3976/05, § 72, 2 November 2010; Shackell v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 45851/99, 27 April 2000; Burden v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 13378/05, § 63, ECHR 2008.

⁴³ Burden v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 13378/05, § 65, ECHR 2008.

⁴⁴ W. v. the United Kingdom, no. 11095/84, Commission report of 7 March 1989, Partially dissenting opinion of Mr Schermers.

⁴⁵ Frasik v. Poland, no. 22933/02, § 90, ECHR 2010 (extracts); Jaremwicz v. Poland, no. 24023/03, § 49, 5 January 2010; O'Donoghue and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 34848/07, § 84, ECHR 2010 (extracts).

⁴⁶ B. and L. v. the United Kingdom, no. 36536/02, § 34, 13 September 2005; Rees v. the United Kingdom, 17 October 1986, § 50, Series A no. 106; F. v. Switzerland, 18 December 1987, § 32, Series A no. 128; Muñoz Diaz v. Spain, no. 49151/07, § 78, ECHR 2009; Jaremwicz v. Poland, no. 24023/03, § 48, 5 January 2010.

example with respect to publicity and solemnization of marriage, and at the substantive level, where there are issues of capacity, consent, and certain impediments.⁴⁷

Limitations on the right are not left entirely to the margin of appreciation of States, something that 'would be tantamount to finding that the range of options open to a Contracting State included an effective bar on any exercise of the right to marry. The margin of appreciation cannot extend so far.'⁴⁸ On the other hand, 'given the sensitive moral choices concerned and the importance to be attached to the protection of children and the fostering of secure family environments, this Court must not rush to substitute its own judgment in place of the authorities who are best placed to assess and respond to the needs of society'.⁴⁹

Article 8 of the Convention, which ensures the right to respect of family life, is closely related to article 12,⁵⁰ and frequently applications to the Convention organs invoke both provisions. The Court has held that if an interference with family life is justified under article 8(2) of the Convention, it cannot then be deemed a breach of article 12.⁵¹ If the Court concludes that there is a violation of article 8 with respect to family life, it finds it unnecessary to examine separately a complaint under article 12.⁵² It has occasionally described article 12 as the lex specialis of the right to marry, thereby implying, though perhaps unintentionally, that article 12 actually limits the scope of article 8.⁵³

The Court has treated article 12 as if it recognizes one right, to marry and found a family, rather than two distinct rights, the first to marry and the second to found a family. There is a right to marry, but the right to found a family is contingent upon marriage.⁵⁴ Thus, no right of unmarried people to found a family is recognized by article 12. That does not mean that the Court denies the term 'family' to single parents or unmarried couples, but it considers their rights to be located within article 8, rather than granting them a right to 'found a family' pursuant to article 12.⁵⁵ At the same time, marriage is not dependent upon the intention to found a family. It exists even if there is no possibility or likelihood of procreation.⁵⁶ The right to found a family does not imply any right to procreate, nor does it entitle grandparents to any right to have grandchildren.⁵⁷

⁴⁷ F. v. Switzerland, 18 December 1987, § 32, Series A no. 128; O'Donoghue and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 34848/07, § 83, ECHR 2010 (extracts).

⁴⁸ Frasik v. Poland, no. 22933/02, § 88, ECHR 2010 (extracts). Also R. and F. v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 35748/05, 28 November 2006.

⁴⁹ B. and L. v. the United Kingdom, no. 36536/02, § 36, 13 September 2005.

⁵⁰ Frasik v. Poland, no. 22933/02, § 90, ECHR 2010 (extracts); V.C. v. Slovakia, no. 18968/07, § 159, ECHR 2011 (extracts).

⁵¹ Boso v. Italy (dec.), no. 50490/99, ECHR 2002 VII; Dickson v. the United Kingdom, no. 44362/04, § 41, 18 April 2006.

⁵² V.C. v. Slovakia, no. 18968/07, § 160, ECHR 2011 (extracts); Lashin v. Russia, no. 33117/02, § 124, 22 January 2013.

⁵³ Hämäläinen v. Finland [GC], no. 37359/09, § 96, 16 July 2014; H. v. Finland, no. 37359/09, § 38, 13 November 2012; De Francesco v. Italy, no. 13741/88, Commission decision of 12 March 1990; De Luca v. Italy, no. 13823/88, Commission decision of 12 March 1990; R. and F. v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 35748/05, 28 November 2006; Parry v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 42971/05, ECHR 2006-XV.

⁵⁴ Rees v. the United Kingdom, 17 October 1986, § 49, Series A no. 106; Christine Goodwin v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 28957/95, § 98, ECHR 2002-VI.

⁵⁵ Marcx v. Belgium, 13 June 1979, § 31, Series A no. 31.

⁵⁶ Hamer v. the United Kingdom, no. 7114/75, Commission decision of 13 October 1977, (1978) 21 YB 302, DR 24, p. 5; Christine Goodwin v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 28957/95, § 98, ECHR 2002-VI; I. v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 25680/94, § 78, 11 July 2002.

⁵⁷ Sijakova v. 'the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia' (dec.), no. 67914/01, 6 March 2003.

'Men and women'

Attitudes towards gender and marriage have changed dramatically in recent times, both within Europe and throughout the world, since the European Court of Human Rights, in 1986, said that 'the right to marry guaranteed by Article 12 refers to the traditional marriage between persons of opposite biological sex'.⁵⁸ For example, same-sex marriage is now authorized in several Member States of the Council of Europe as a result of legislative changes. Constitutional courts in some countries have ruled that same-sex marriage must be allowed despite legislation that does not permit this.⁵⁹

There can be little doubt that at the time of adoption of article 12 and of its direct ancestor, article 16 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the suggestion that marriage could be anything but the 'traditional' union of a man and a woman was not given very much thought. Of course, same-sex relationships similar to marriage existed, but they were generally shrouded in euphemistic expressions such as 'roommate'. In terms of marriage other than that of a woman and a man, the main concern at the time was with non-monogamous relationships.⁶⁰ Attention has focused on use of the words 'men and women' in the relevant provisions. Speaking to the point in a 2011 decision rejecting an application by a same-sex couple, the Court explained why it persisted in its view that marriage necessarily involved a man and a woman:

The Court observes that, looked at in isolation, the wording of Article 12 might be interpreted so as not to exclude the marriage between two men or two women. However, in contrast, all other substantive Articles of the Convention grant rights and freedoms to 'everyone' or state that 'no one' is to be subjected to certain types of prohibited treatment. The choice of wording in Article 12 must thus be regarded as deliberate.⁶¹

The wording of article 12 repeats the formulation in article 16 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. In that instrument, the term 'everyone' is strongly favoured in formulations of fundamental rights. It is replaced with 'men and women' in two places, in article 16 and in the Preamble, where the reference is to 'equal rights of men and women'. The drafters of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights were quite 'deliberate' in recognizing the right to marry of men and women, as the Court noted, but the reason was not to exclude marriage of same-sex couples or transsexuals. It was to ensure the equality of women in the formation of the marital bond, during marriage, and at its dissolution, and had nothing at all to do with the gender of the partners.

The Court developed its understanding of the relationship between gender and marriage in a series of cases dealing with transsexuals. The issue is not strictly identical to that of same-sex marriage, but it is similar to the extent that before the change in gender of the transsexual, the two partners are of the same sex. An issue also arises if one of the partners in a 'traditional' marriage undergoes a change in gender, with the result that the ⁵⁸ Rees v. the United Kingdom, 17 October 1986, § 49, Series A no. 106. Also Hämäläinen v. Finland [GC], no. 37359/09, § 96, 16 July 2014.

⁵⁹ Minister of Home Affairs v. Fourie (2005) and Lesbian and Gay Equality Project and Eighteen Others v. Minister of Home Affairs, (2006) 3 BCLR 355 (CC); Halpern v. Canada (Attorney General), (2003) 85 OR (3rd) 161 (CA).

⁶⁰ See, e.g., UN Doc. E/CN.6/SR.28, p. 7; UN Doc. E/CN.6/SR.29, pp. 6–7; E/CN.6/69; E/CN.6/74, p. 14.

⁶¹ Schalk and Kopf v. Austria, no. 30141/04, § 55, ECHR 2010. See also Alekseyev v. Russia, nos 4916/07, 25924/08, and 14599/09, § 83, 21 October 2010.

couple are then of the same sex. The Court has held that the regulation of the consequences of a sex change in such circumstances falls within the margin of appreciation of States.⁶²

Under the English common law, marriage is confined to a man and a woman, and this position has subsequently been codified by statute. In Rees v. The United Kingdom, the Court rather summarily dismissed a challenge by an individual who was registered as a woman at birth but who was living as a man. The Court referred to the reference to national laws in article 12, noting that although they 'must not restrict or reduce the right in such a way or to such an extent that the very essence of the right is impaired . . . the legal impediment in the United Kingdom on the marriage of persons who are not of the opposite biological sex cannot be said to have an effect of this kind'.⁶³

A few years later, a similar issue was presented to the Court but with the distinction that the transsexual applicant had a partner who was ready for marriage, something that had not been the case in Rees, where the impediment to marriage was somewhat hypothetical. The Court observed that this had not been a material issue in its earlier ruling, and saw no reason to modify the position it had taken previously, adding that 'whether a person has the right to marry depends not on the existence in the individual case of such a partner or a wish to marry, but on whether or not he or she meets the general criteria laid down by law'.⁶⁴

It would take the Court more than another decade to change its mind. In a case dealing with a 'post-operative transsexual', it said it was 'not persuaded that at the date of this case it can still be assumed that these terms must refer to a determination of gender by purely biological criteria'. The Court said there had been 'major social changes in the institution of marriage since the adoption of the Convention as well as dramatic changes brought about by developments in medicine and science in the field of transsexuality'. It also pointed to the recently adopted Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, which refers, in its provision on marriage, to a right to marry and found a family with no mention of men and women, 'no doubt deliberately'.⁶⁵

In Christine Goodwin, the Court confronted an argument, quickly dismissed in Cossey, that the right to marry was not breached because the transsexual could always marry someone of the sex opposite to his or her former gender. The Court described this suggestion as 'artificial', noting that the applicant 'lives as a woman, is in a relationship with a man and would only wish to marry a man'. Denying her the right to marry, a man thereby infringes 'the very essence of the right to marry'.⁶⁶ Speaking to the margin of appreciation issue, the Court said that while a State may determine 'the conditions under which a person claiming legal recognition as a transsexual establishes that gender re-assignment has been properly effected or under which past marriages cease to be valid and the formalities applicable to future marriages (including, for example, the ⁶² Parry v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 42971/05, ECHR 2006-XV; R. and F. v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 35748/05, 28 November 2006; Schalk and Kopf v. Austria, no. 30141/04, § 53, ECHR 2010.

⁶³ Rees v. the United Kingdom, 17 October 1986, § 50, Series A no. 106.

⁶⁴ Cossey v. the United Kingdom, 27 September 1990, § 32, Series A no. 184. Also Sheffield and Horsham v. the United Kingdom, 30 July 1998, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-V.

⁶⁵ Christine Goodwin v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 28957/95, § 100, ECHR 2002-VI. Also I. v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 25680/94, § 80, 11 July 2002.

⁶⁶ Christine Goodwin v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 28957/95, § 101, ECHR 2002-VI. Also I. v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 25680/94, § 81, 11 July 2002.

information to be furnished to intended spouses)',⁶⁷ this cannot justify 'barring the transsexual from enjoying the right to marry under any circumstances'.⁶⁸ However, in cases involving opposite-sex couples that choose to remain married after one has undergone a change of gender, the Court has said that the refusal of the State to recognize fully the new gender as long as the couple remains married remains within the margin appreciation.⁶⁹

With its new and more modern approach, it would seem a small step for the Court to recognize same-sex marriage as being protected by article 12. But this was a step too far. The idea had been mooted as early as 1989 in a dissenting opinion by a member of the European Commission:

The right to live in a family and—when of marriageable age—to found a family is of paramount importance for the individual. Denial of this right means condemnation to solitude and loneliness. There must be strong arguments to justify such a condemnation. In my opinion the fundamental human right underlying Article 12 should also be granted to homosexual and lesbian couples. They should not be denied the right to found a family without good reasons.⁷⁰

Ruling on an application in 2010, the Court said that there was no European consensus on same-sex marriage and that it was permitted in only six of forty-seven Convention States.⁷¹ The Court returned to article 9 of the European Union Charter of Fundamental Rights and said that by referring to national law the drafters had left the decision whether to allow same-sex marriage to individual States. It referred to the Commentary: '... it may be argued that there is no obstacle to recognise same-sex relationships in the context of marriage. There is however, no explicit requirement that domestic laws should facilitate such marriages.'⁷² Concluding that same-sex marriage lies within the scope of article 12, but that there was no violation of the provision because of a lack of consensus within Europe,⁷³ the Court's position on same-sex marriage must now be considered analogous to the view it takes of divorce with regard to article 12. It considers that States are not required to authorize same-sex marriage but, it seems, if they do, they must ensure that there are no unrealistic impediments or rules that might be discriminatory in nature.

Marriageable age

The term 'marriageable age' (âge nubile) does not seem to have led to any litigation. It would seem to be 18 throughout Europe, with the exception of Scotland, where it is 16. In many European countries, marriage as low as 15 or 16 is possible with parental consent.

⁶⁷ Christine Goodwin v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 28957/95, § 103, ECHR 2002-VI.

⁶⁸ Ibid. Also I. v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 25680/94, § 83, 11 July 2002.

⁶⁹ R. and F. v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 35748/05, 28 November 2006; Parry v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 42971/05, 28 November 2006.

⁷⁰ W. v. the United Kingdom, no. 11095/84, Commission report of 7 March 1989, Partially dissenting opinion of Mr Schermers.

⁷¹ Belgium, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, and Sweden: Schalk and Kopf v. Austria, no. 30141/04, § 58, ECHR 2010.

⁷² Schalk and Kopf v. Austria, no. 30141/04, § 90, ECHR 2010.

⁷³ But see Schalk and Kopf v. Austria, no. 30141/04, Concurring Opinion of Judge Malinverni, Joined by Judge Kovler, § 2, ECHR 2010.

The right to marry

The Court has said that '[t]he essence of the right to marry is the formation of a legal union of a man and a woman'.⁷⁴ Consequently, the focus is on 'legal' marriage. Couples who cohabit in marriage-like relationships are excluded from the scope of article 12. According to the Grand Chamber, '[m]arriage is characterised by a corpus of rights and obligations that differentiate it markedly from the situation of a man and woman who cohabit'.⁷⁵ For the Court, '[t]he choice of a partner and the decision to marry him or her, whether at liberty or in detention, is a strictly private and personal matter and there is no universal or commonly accepted pattern for such a choice or decision'.⁷⁶ The Court has not taken kindly to speculation by the authorities as to the motivation behind a marriage, for example the claim that it was to permit the partner to invoke spousal privilege and refuse to testify or that the relationship was 'superficial' or 'unworthy'.⁷⁷ In an early case dealing with a prisoner who sought to marry, the European Commission said it was not relevant whether the applicant could have 'consummated his marriage' while serving his sentence. Consequently, the 'essence' of the right to marry is the formation of a 'legally binding association between a man and a woman', without any requirement that they be able to or even desire to cohabit.⁷⁸ Some European legal systems may also recognize a form of de facto marriage, like the so-called common law marriage known in English law. The Court has dismissed a claim by which 'all the legal effects attaching to marriage should apply equally to situations that are in certain respects comparable to marriage', saying it falls outside the scope of article 12.⁷⁹

It is probably better to speak of the freedom not to marry rather than a right not to marry, as was alleged by the unmarried mother of a child in Marckx v. Belgium. The case concerned distinctions between 'legitimate' and 'illegitimate' children. It was contended that the mother would be forced to marry in order to confer upon her daughter 'legitimate' status. The Court said there was 'no legal obstacle confronting the first applicant in the exercise of the freedom to marry or to remain single; consequently, the Court has no need to determine whether the Convention enshrines the right not to marry'.⁸⁰

The Convention organs have not had to rule on whether article 12 includes a right to polygamous marriage. In Johnston and Others v. Ireland, the Court said that '[i]n any society espousing the principle of monogamy' it would be 'inconceivable' for marriage to take place as long as one of the partners was already married to another person.⁸¹ In another case, it noted that 'the Croatian legal system adheres to the principle of monogamy, and does not allow individuals who are already married to conclude ⁷⁴ Jaremowicz v. Poland, no. 24023/03, § 60, 5 January 2010.

⁷⁵ Şerife Yiğit v. Turkey [GC], no. 3976/05, § 72, 2 November 2010. Also Van der Heijden v. the Netherlands [GC], no. 42857/05, § 69, 3 April 2012; Nylund v. Finland (dec.), no. 27110/95, ECHR 1999-VI; D.G. and D.W. Lindsay v. the United Kingdom, no. 11089/84, Commission decision of 11 November 1986, (1986) 29 YB 102, DR 49, p. 181.

⁷⁶ Frasik v. Poland, no. 22933/02, § 95, ECHR 2010 (extracts); Jaremowicz v. Poland, no. 24023/03, § 59, 5 January 2010.

⁷⁷ Jaremowicz v. Poland, no. 24023/03, § 56, 5 January 2010.

⁷⁸ Hamer v. the United Kingdom, no. 7114/75, Commission decision of 13 October 1977, § 71, (1978) 21 YB 302, DR 10, p. 174.

⁷⁹ Marckx v. Belgium, 13 June 1979, § 67, Series A no. 31.

⁸⁰ Ibid.

⁸¹ Johnston and Others v. Ireland, 18 December 1986, § 50, Series A no. 112.

another marriage'.⁸² The implication seems to be that polygamy is not in fact contrary to the Convention, but that States are entitled to make provision prohibiting it within their national laws as allowed by article 12.⁸³

National legislation contains various obstacles to marriage among persons who are related either by blood or marriage. In one case, a man and the woman who had previously been married to his son lived together in a permanent and longstanding relationship. They were prohibited from marriage as long as the man's former wife and his son were still alive. This impediment to marriage had been criticized by a prestigious advisory committee as 'based simply on tradition' and no longer justifiable 'on any logical, rational or practical ground'. A minority report argued for retention of the prohibition because its removal 'would condone sexual rivalry between father and son, or mother and daughter, which, within the close confines of the family, would be destructive of the father and son, or mother and daughter, relationships'. Parliament agreed, and the norm was included in new legislation adopted in 1986.⁸⁴

The Court held that the prohibition violated article 12. It considered that the prohibition pursued a legitimate aim in that it was to protect the integrity of the family by preventing sexual rivalry between parents and children as well as preventing harm to children who might be affected by such changing relationships. But it noted that the prohibition on marriage did not in fact prevent the relationships from developing, as the case at bar demonstrated. The government's suggestion that exceptions might be allowed where an inquiry demonstrated that there was no risk of harm did not impress the Court, which said that 'a cumbersome and expensive vetting process of this kind would not appear to offer a practically accessible or effective mechanism for individuals to vindicate their rights. It would also view with reservation a system that would require a person of full age in possession of his or her mental faculties to submit to a potentially intrusive investigation to ascertain whether it is suitable for them to marry.'⁸⁵

Several cases involving prisoners and marriage have been addressed by the Convention organs. Early decisions of the European Commission denied the right of prisoners to marry,⁸⁶ but views evolved, and later it accepted the principle.⁸⁷ The European Commission even recognized the right to marry of a prisoner sentenced to life imprisonment with no foreseeable prospect of release on licence or parole.⁸⁸ There are many practical difficulties with prison marriages. But, as the Court has explained, '[w]hat needs to be solved in a situation where a detained person wishes to get married is not whether or not it is reasonable for him to marry in prison but the practical aspects of timing and making the necessary arrangements'.⁸⁹ In Dickson v. The United Kingdom, which concerned a prison detainee, the applicants argued that the denial of access to artificial insemination facilities breached the right to found a family found in article 12. The Chamber referred to 'the wide margin of appreciation afforded to the national authorities' and said that the refusal ⁸² V.K. v. Croatia, no. 38380/08, § 100, 27 November 2012.

⁸³ See Frasik v. Poland, no. 22933/02, § 89, ECHR 2010 (extracts).

⁸⁴ B. and L. v. the United Kingdom, no. 36536/02, §§ 17–19, 13 September 2005.

⁸⁵ Ibid., § 37.

⁸⁶ X v. Federal Republic of Germany, no. 892/60, (1961) 4 YB 240, at pp. 254–7, Collection 6, p. 17.

⁸⁷ Hamer v. the United Kingdom, no. 7114/75, Commission decision of 13 October 1977, (1978) 21 YB 302, DR 24, p. 5.

⁸⁸ Draper v. the United Kingdom, no. 8186/78, Commission decision of 1 May 1979, DR 24, p. 72.

⁸⁹ Frasik v. Poland, no. 22933/02, § 95, ECHR 2010 (extracts).

of such access was not arbitrary or unreasonable, nor did it fail to strike a fair balance between competing interests.⁹⁰

The phenomenon of the 'marriage of convenience' is well known in the field of international migration, and has even been the subject of comic cinematic treatments. States attempt to regulate through a range of measures the use of marriage that is undertaken solely for the purpose of permitting one of the partners to immigrate or to regularize a particular status.

The Court has said that States are entitled 'to prevent marriages of convenience, entered solely for the purpose of securing an immigration advantage'.⁹¹ For example, it is permissible to require that a foreign national obtain a certificate of capacity before marriage in the country of immigration is allowed, and that evidence to confirm the genuineness of the marriage be provided.⁹² Nevertheless, such legislation must meet the standards of accessibility and clarity that the Convention requires, and they may not otherwise deprive a person or a category of persons of full legal capacity to marry the partners of their choice.⁹³

The Court objected to the scheme in force in the United Kingdom, noting that approval did not seem to be based solely on the genuineness of the marriage. It also found fault with a regulatory framework that imposed a blanket ban on marriage by individuals whose authorization to reside had almost expired, apparently on the presumption that such last-minute marriages were inherently suspect.⁹⁴ Such measures restricted the right to marry to such an extent that they encroached upon its very essence, the Court held. It also considered that the application fee was set at a level that a needy applicant might not be able to afford, constituting an additional impairment of the right to marry.⁹⁵

The words 'at its dissolution' were included in article 16 of the Universal Declaration at the insistence of the Commission on the Status of Women over the opposition of some States that were concerned these words might imply a right to divorce. The drafting history of the Universal Declaration is indecisive as to whether 'at its dissolution' actually recognizes divorce or only ensures protection of the rights of the spouses at the end of marriage, where divorce is recognized by law.⁹⁶

The leading case on the subject is Johnston and Others v. Ireland. The applicants contended that the impossibility of obtaining dissolution of marriage under Irish law prevented them from remarrying, thereby denying their rights under article 12 as well as under article 8. Ireland's Constitution contained the following: 'No law shall be enacted providing for the grant of a dissolution of marriage.' The applicants urged the Court not to consider whether the Convention allowed a right to divorce, but it said that it could not separate that notion from the right to remarry, given the principle of monogamy in Irish society. Interpreting article 12, the Court said that the ordinary meaning of the words

⁹⁰ Dickson v. the United Kingdom, no. 44362/04, §§ 39, 41, 18 April 2006. Also ibid., §§ 57, 86, ECHR 2007-V.

⁹¹ O'Donoghue and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 34848/07, §§ 83, 87, ECHR 2010 (extracts); Sanders v. France, no. 31401/96, Commission decision of 16 October 1996, DR 87-B, p. 160.

⁹² Klip and Krüger v. the Netherlands (dec.), no. 33257/96, 3 December 1997; Sanders v. France (dec.), 31401/96, 16 October 1996; Frasik v. Poland, no. 22933/02, § 89, ECHR 2010 (extracts).

⁹³ O'Donoghue and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 34848/07, § 83, ECHR 2010 (extracts).

⁹⁴ Ibid., § 88.

⁹⁵ Ibid., § 90.

⁹⁶ UN Doc. E/CN.6/SR.28, p. 7; UN Doc. E/CN.6/SR.29, p. 7; UN Doc. E/CN.4/SR.58, p. 10; UN Doc. E/CN.4/SR.62, pp. 10–12; Official Records of the General Assembly, Third Session, 1948, pp. 359–79.

'right to marry' covered the formation of marital relationships, but not their dissolution. In addition, the Court noted the reference to 'national laws', stating that 'even if, as the applicants would have it, the prohibition on divorce is to be seen as a restriction on capacity to marry, the Court does not consider that, in a society adhering to the principle of monogamy, such a restriction can be regarded as injuring the substance of the right guaranteed by Article 12'.⁹⁷

Turning to the travaux préparatoires, the Court observed that article 12 was based on article 16(1) of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. It cited the remarks of the rapporteur of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions during drafting of the European Convention, who explained that paragraph 1 of article 16 had been incorporated in the draft, but not the subsequent paragraphs 'concerning equal rights after marriage, since we only guarantee the right to marry'.⁹⁸ There, 'the travaux préparatoires disclose no intention to include in Article 12 (art. 12) any guarantee of a right to have the ties of marriage dissolved by divorce'.⁹⁹ It described the omission of the right to divorce as 'deliberate'.¹⁰⁰ The Court added that no right to divorce was included in Protocol No. 7, which was opened for signature in 1984. It observed that although the Protocol guaranteed certain additional rights to spouses, notably in the event of dissolution of marriage, its drafters did not use the opportunity to recognize a right to divorce. The Court cited the Explanatory Report on the Protocol that said that the words 'in the event of its dissolution' in article 5 'do not imply any obligation on a State to provide for dissolution of marriage or to provide any special forms of dissolution'.¹⁰¹

In Johnston and Others, Judge Pinheiro Farinha made a separate declaration expressing the hope that an additional sentence would have been added to the judgment: 'The Court recognises that support and encouragement of the traditional family is in itself legitimate or even praiseworthy'.¹⁰² Judge de Meyer appended a lengthy separate, partly dissenting and partly concurring opinion in which he said the prohibition of divorce in Ireland was contrary to articles 8 and 12 of the Convention. He alluded to the fact that the rule was dictated by the Catholic majority, yet it applied to others like the applicants, who were protestant, citing article 9 of the Convention.¹⁰³

In 1995, not quite a decade after the Johnston and Others judgment, the Irish constitution was amended following a popular referendum, opening the door to legislation that allowed for divorce. In countries where divorce is permitted, there is a right to remarry without unreasonable restrictions.¹⁰⁴ Delays in such proceedings have led to complaints of a violation of article 12 because this prevented remarriage.¹⁰⁵ In the context of article 6, the Court has said that 'special diligence is required in cases relating to civil status and capacity'.¹⁰⁶ The Convention organs have insisted that there be a realistic

⁹⁷ Johnston and Others v. Ireland, 18 December 1986, § 52, Series A no. 112.

⁹⁸ Ibid.

⁹⁹ Ibid.

¹⁰⁰ Ibid., § 53.

¹⁰¹ Ibid.

¹⁰² Ibid., Declaration by Judge Pinheiro Farinha.

¹⁰³ Ibid., Separate Opinion, Partly Dissenting and Partly Concurring, of Judge de Meyer.

¹⁰⁴ F. v. Switzerland, 18 December 1987, § 38, Series A no. 128.

¹⁰⁵ V.K. v. Croatia, no. 38380/08, §§ 106–107, 27 November 2012; Aresti Charalambous v. Cyprus, no. 43151/04, § 56, 19 July 2007; S.D.P. v. Italy, no. 27962/95, Commission decision of 16 April 1996.

¹⁰⁶ Maciariello v. Italy, 27 February 1992, § 18, Series A no. 230-A. Also Bock v. Germany, 29 March 1989, § 49, Series A no. 15.

possibility of remarriage rather than some abstract desire by the applicant.¹⁰⁷ Nevertheless, a delay in divorce proceedings as such may constitute a violation of article 6.¹⁰⁸

Article 12 does not distinguish between the right to marriage and a right to remarriage.¹⁰⁹ Although the Court does not consider a right to divorce to fall within the scope of article 12, when legislation recognizes divorce the exercise of the right to marry, or rather, to remarry, may be contingent upon effective and relatively expedited divorce proceedings. According to the Court, 'a failure to conduct divorce proceedings within a reasonable time could in certain circumstances raise an issue under Article 12 of the Convention'.¹¹⁰

In many national legislative schemes, it has been common to impose a waiting period after the divorce before the former partners are in a position to remarry. This was meant as a period of reflection, premised on the idea that they might well change their mind and return to cohabitation, although in practice it rarely happened. It also seems to have been viewed as a sanction; in some legal systems, it could be imposed upon the party deemed to be at fault for the rupture of the marriage.¹¹¹ When Swiss legislation allowing the imposition upon the party deemed at fault of a three-year period between dissolution of one marriage and remarriage was contested, the Court noted that most States had done away with such measures. However, the Court said, 'the fact that, at the end of a gradual evolution, a country finds itself in an isolated position as regards one aspect of its legislation does not necessarily imply that that aspect offends the Convention, particularly in a field—matrimony—which is so closely bound up with the cultural and historical traditions of each society and its deep-rooted ideas about the family unit'.¹¹² The Court agreed that the three-year waiting period interfered with the right to marry but said it did not impair the very essence of the right. The Swiss approach was explained as intended to protect the institution of marriage as well as the rights of others, and even the person upon whom the temporary prohibition of marriage was imposed.¹¹³ Concluding that article 12 had been violated, the Court affirmed that the stability of marriage was a legitimate aim that was in the public interest but said it doubted that the means being used were appropriate.¹¹⁴

Right to found a family

The family is a notion that is not only culturally specific but also one that is being transformed as unconventional and innovative forms of social relationship similar to traditional nuclear families but with marked differences emerge. The Court takes a fairly broad approach to the notion of family when it considers the concept from the standpoint of article 8, but within the framework of article 12 its vision is rather more conservative. There, the main concern is 'to protect marriage as the basis of the family'.¹¹⁵ The right to ¹⁰⁷ Capoccia v. Italy, no. 16479/90, Commission decision of 13 October 1993; Bolignari v. Italy, no. 37175/97, Commission decision of 22 April 1998; Bacuzzi v. Italy (dec.), no. 43817/04, 24 May 2011.

¹⁰⁸ Chau v. France (dec.), no. 39144/02, 14 June 2005.

¹⁰⁹ F. v. Switzerland, 18 December 1987, § 33, Series A no. 128.

¹¹⁰ Aresti Charalambous v. Cyprus, no. 43151/04, § 56, 19 July 2007.

¹¹¹ F. v. Switzerland, 18 December 1987, § 13, Series A no. 128.

¹¹² Ibid., § 33.

¹¹³ Ibid., § 35.

¹¹⁴ Ibid., § 36.

¹¹⁵ Rees v. the United Kingdom, 17 October 1986, § 49, Series A no. 106.

found a family is not viewed as an autonomous right but rather one that is an attribute or a consequence of the right to marry. However, the intent to found a family is not necessary for the right to marry to be exercised. The Court has said that '[t]he second aspect is not however a condition of the first and the inability of any couple to conceive or parent a child cannot be regarded as per se removing their right to enjoy the first limb of this provision'.¹¹⁶ To view the matter otherwise would deprive women of the possibility of founding a family once they have reached an age when they can no longer have children. Younger women, and men too, may find themselves infertile for various reasons, or may be advised against procreation because of a predisposition to genetically transmitted illnesses and disabilities.

The classic solution in such cases is adoption. Nevertheless, the case law of the European Commission has not recognized a right of adoption as a component of article 12. According to the European Commission, article 12 'implies the existence of a couple and cannot be construed as including the right of an unmarried person to adopt'.¹¹⁷ For the Commission, adoption of a child and its integration into a family could, 'in some circumstances, be said to constitute the foundation of a family by that couple. It is quite conceivable that a "family" might be "founded" in such a way.' However, the article 'does not as such guarantee a right to adopt or otherwise integrate into a family a child which is not the natural child of the couple concerned'.¹¹⁸

A State policy preventing births through sterilization or forced abortion would almost certainly fall foul of article 12, although there are no examples in case law. An attempt to invoke the provision where infertility resulted from nuclear tests was found to be inadmissible ratione temporis.¹¹⁹ The Court rejected a claim by a man who claimed that the State, by allowing his wife to have an abortion, was violating his right to found a family on the grounds that the abortion was justified by her health. It said that in applying the Convention to such situations, the Court indicated that the rights of the woman should generally prevail over those of the man, 'as she is the person primarily concerned by the pregnancy and its continuation or termination'.¹²⁰

Discrimination

The Convention addresses issues of discrimination through article 14. However, because article 14 has no independent existence, any violation of that provision must be related to another right set out in the Convention. As it does with other provisions of the Convention, when the Court finds there is a violation of the substantive article, it may exercise discretion and decline to make a separate ruling on the application of article 14.¹²¹

The Court did not conclude that there was discrimination in relation to article 12 in a case involving a Roma marriage conducted in accordance with customs and cultural traditions and recognized by the community. For the Roma community, such marriage generates social effects, notably an obligation to live together, as well as other rights and ¹¹⁶ Christine Goodwin v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 28957/95, § 98, ECHR 2002-VI.

¹¹⁷ X v. Belgium and the Netherlands, no. 6482/74, Commission decision of 10 July 1975, DR 7, p. 76; Di Lazzaro v. Italy, no. 31924/96, Commission decision of 10 July 1997, DR 90-B, p. 134.

¹¹⁸ X and Y v. the United Kingdom, no. 7229/75, Commission decision of 15 December 1977, DR 12, p. 32.

¹¹⁹ McGinley and Egan v. the United Kingdom, nos 21825/93 and 23414/95, Commission decision of 28 November 1995.

¹²⁰ Boso v. Italy (dec.), no. 50490/99, §§ 2–3, ECHR 2002-VII.

¹²¹ See, e.g., B. and L. v. the United Kingdom, no. 36536/02, § 14, 13 September 2005.

duties that are inherent in the institution of marriage. However, Roma marriage is not recognized under Spanish law, whereas other forms of marital rites, such as those of the Catholic, Protestant, Jewish, and Muslim confessions, produce legal effects. The Court noted that Catholic, Protestant, Jewish, and Muslim marriages benefited from legal recognition as a result of special agreements with the State giving them the same status as civil marriage, something available in Spain since 1981 to all without distinction.¹²²

In Johnston and Others v. Ireland, which concerned whether a right to divorce could be found within article 12, dissenting Judge de Meyer said that the prohibition of divorce in Irish law was discriminatory, in that Irish people who obtained divorces while residing abroad could return home, where they could then remarry. He said the distinction the law made between Irish citizens depending upon whether they were domiciled in Ireland or elsewhere lacked an objective and reasonable justification.¹²³ The majority did not speak to the article 14 issue.

United Kingdom legislation dealing with so-called marriages of convenience was not applicable to marriages in the Church of England, apparently premised on the logic that such marriages were inherently sound, while those of other denominations were inherently suspect. The Court concluded that the government had failed to adduce any reasons capable of offering an objective and reasonable justification for a difference in treatment between those prepared to marry in the Church of England and those who were not.¹²⁴

A failure to apply the same rules, for example in the area of testimonial privilege of spouses, to persons who are married and to those who live in stable relationships similar to marriage such as civil partnerships, does not constitute discrimination under the Convention.¹²⁵

It is common for special rules to apply to couples who cohabit as opposed to single persons with respect to various social benefits. This may include eligibility for social welfare and state-funded housing, for example, as well as entitlements to certain transfers in pension benefits and a distinct taxation regime. Although increasingly States follow policies in this respect that minimize any distinctions in the treatment of couples that cohabit depending upon whether they are married or not, some disparities continue. Given that cohabiting couples and married couples are not 'similarly situated', the Convention organs have considered complaints based on differing regimes in these areas to be inadmissible under article 14.¹²⁶

The Court has held that measures applied to transsexuals that related to the right to marry were not discriminatory because the group was not similarly situated to cissexuals.¹²⁷

The requirement in Switzerland that married spouses and their children, as long as they are minors, bear the same name fulfils a legitimate aim of their identification vis-à-vis third parties. The European Commission considered this to be a suitable measure, proportionate to the aim it sought to realize, and therefore not contrary to article 14.¹²⁸

¹²² Muñoz Diaz v. Spain, no. 49151/07, §§ 79–81, ECHR 2009.

¹²³ Johnston and Others v. Ireland, 18 December 1986, Separate Opinion, Partly Dissenting and Partly Concurring, of Judge de Meyer, Series A no. 112.

¹²⁴ O'Donoghue and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 34848/07, § 101, ECHR 2010 (extracts).

¹²⁵ Van der Heijden v. the Netherlands [GC], no. 42857/05, § 84, 3 April 2012.

¹²⁶ D.G. and D.W. Lindsay v. the United Kingdom, no. 11089/84, Commission decision of 11 November 1986, (1986) 29 YB 102, DR 49, p. 181.

¹²⁷ Hämäläinen v. Finland [GC], no. 37359/09, § 112, 16 July 2014.

¹²⁸ Hagmann-Hüsler v. Switzerland, no. 8042/77, Commission decision of 15 December 1977, DR 12, p. 202.

Reservations

There have been no reservations or declarations with respect to article 12 of the Convention.

Further reading

Christina M. Cerna, 'Schalk & Kopf v. Austria (Eur. Ct. H.R.), Introductory Note', (2010) 49 International Legal Materials 1302.

Pieter van Dijk, 'The Right to Marry and to Found a Family (Article 12)', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 841–62.

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 386–90.

Grabenwarter, European Convention, pp. 319–26.

Harris et al., Law of the European Convention, pp. 549–56.

Loveday Hodson, 'A Marriage by Any Other Name: Schalk and Kopf v Austria', (2011) 11 HRLR 170.

Paul Johnson, '"An Essentially Private Manifestation of Human Personality": Constructions of Homosexuality in the European Court of Human Rights', (2010) 10 HRLR 67.

Paul Johnson, 'Challenging the Heteronormativity of Marriage: The Role of Judicial Interpretation and Authority', (2011) 20 Social and Legal Studies 349.

Paul Johnson, Homosexuality and the European Court of Human Rights, Abingdon, UK: Routledge, 2013.

Montserrat Enrich Mas, 'Article 12', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 437–54.

Rebekka Wiemann, 'Keine Verpflichtung der Konventionsstaaten zur Einführung gleichgeschlechtlicher Ehe / Schalk und Kopf gegen Österreich', (2010) 37 Europäische grundrechte zeitschrift 445.

Article 13. Right to an effective remedy/Droit à un recours effectif

Everyone whose rights and freedoms as set forth in this Convention are violated shall have an effective remedy before a national authority notwithstanding that the violation has been committed by persons acting in an official capacity.

Toute personne dont les droits et libertés reconnus dans la présente Convention ont été violés, a droit à l'octroi d'un recours effectif devant une instance nationale, alors même que la violation aurait été commise par des personnes agissant dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions officielles.

Introductory comments

The Universal Declaration of Human Rights guarantees, in article 8, the right to an effective remedy: 'Everyone has the right to an effective remedy by the competent national tribunals for acts violating the fundamental rights granted him by the constitution or by law.' One of the earliest drafts of the international bill of rights, proposed by the United Kingdom to the United Nations Commission on Human Rights, set this out as one of the core obligations: 'Article 2. Every state is, by international law, under an obligation to ensure: . . . (b) that any person whose rights or freedoms are violated should have an effective remedy, notwithstanding that the violation has been committed by persons acting in an official capacity.'¹ However, the proposal that the right be incorporated in the Universal Declaration only emerged rather late in the negotiations, during the debates in the Third Committee of the General Assembly.² It resulted from attempts to amend the text that became article 7, dealing with equality before the law and protection against discrimination.

Article 8 of the Universal Declaration inspired the drafters of the European Convention, as it did those who prepared the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. Article 2(3) of the latter instrument has a close affinity with article 8 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. It states:

3. Each State Party to the present Covenant undertakes:

- (a) To ensure that any person whose rights or freedoms as herein recognized are violated shall have an effective remedy, notwithstanding that the violation has been committed by persons acting in an official capacity;
- (b) To ensure that any person claiming such a remedy shall have his right thereto determined by competent judicial, administrative or legislative authorities, or by any other competent authority provided for by the legal system of the State, and to develop the possibilities of judicial remedy;
- (c) To ensure that the competent authorities shall enforce such remedies when granted.

¹ Text of Letter from Lord Dukeston, the United Kingdom Representative on the Human Rights Commission, to the Secretary General of the United Nations, UN Doc. E/CN.4/AC.1/4, p. 6.

² Mexico: Amendment to Article 6 of the Draft Declaration (E/800), UN Doc. A/C.3/308; Mexico, Chile, Venezuela: Amendment to Article 6 of the Draft Declaration (E/800), UN Doc. A/C.3/309; Cuba: Addendum to Article 6 of the Draft Declaration (E/800), UN Doc. A/C.3/310; Official Records of the General Assembly, Third Session, 1948, p. 235.

The Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union combines articles 13 and 6 of the European Convention in a provision that heads the section entitled 'Justice' and is labelled 'Right to an effective remedy and to a fair trial':

Article 47. Right to an effective remedy and to a fair trial

Everyone whose rights and freedoms guaranteed by the law of the Union are violated has the right to an effective remedy before a tribunal in compliance with the conditions laid down in this Article.

Everyone is entitled to a fair and public hearing within a reasonable time by an independent and impartial tribunal previously established by law. Everyone shall have the possibility of being advised, defended and represented.

Legal aid shall be made available to those who lack sufficient resources in so far as such aid is necessary to ensure effective access to justice.

Drafting of the provision

The initial list of rights included in a working paper prepared by the International Council of the European Movement, meeting in Brussels in February 1949, contained a reference to freedom of petition or appeal against a violation of fundamental rights.³ However, the draft convention presented by the European Movement to the Committee of Ministers in June 1949 did not contain any relevant provision.⁴

A trace of article 13 of the European Convention on Human Rights appears in the proposal by Pierre-Henri Teitgen to the Consultative Assembly of the Council of Europe, in August 1949: 'Security of person, in accordance with Articles 3, 5 and 8 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights approved by the General Assembly of the United Nations.'⁵ Article 3 concerned life, liberty, and security of person and article 5 dealt with torture and cruel, inhuman, and degrading treatment or punishment. Article 8 was the 'right to an effective remedy' provision of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. The proposal was retained in the text adopted by the Committee and, subsequently, by the plenary Consultative Assembly.⁶ The reference to article 8 did not give rise to any particular comment or to a reference in the explanatory memorandum.

The Committee of Ministers decided to refer the draft of the Consultative Assembly to a Committee of Experts. In the meantime, work in the United Nations Commission on Human Rights on the draft covenant had advanced. The Commission had agreed on the following draft:

Article 2, para. 2: Each State party hereto undertakes to ensure that any persons whose rights or freedoms as herein defined are violated shall have an effective remedy before the competent national tribunals notwithstanding that the violation has been committed by persons acting in an official capacity.⁷

³ Recommendations adopted at the meeting of the International Council of the European Movement held at Brussels in February 1949, INF/2/F, p. 3.

⁴ Convention for the Collective Protection of Individual Rights and Democratic Liberties by the States, Members of the Council of Europe, and for the establishment of a European Court of Human Rights to ensure observance of the Convention, Doc. INF/5/E/R, I TP 296-303.

⁵ Proposals by Mr P.H. Teitgen, Rapporteur, 29 August 1949, Doc. A 116, I TP 166-8.

⁶ Minutes of the Sitting [of the Committee for Legal and Administrative Affairs of the Consultative Assembly, 29 August 1949], Doc. A 142, I TP 170-3; Report presented by Mr P.H. Teitgen, 5 September 1949, Doc. A 290, I TP 192-213.

⁷ Report of the Fifth Session of the Commission on Human Rights to the Economic and Social Council, UN Doc. E/1371(Supp.), p. 18.

The United Kingdom's comments on the draft covenant were circulated in preparation for the first session of the Committee of Experts of the Council of Europe. According to the United Kingdom:

- b) The phrase 'an effective remedy before the competent national tribunal' in paragraph 2 appears to be too much compressed. The guarantee of the individual's rights against abuse comprises three distinct elements, viz.,
 - 1) The possession of a legal remedy.
 - 2) The grant of this remedy by an independent tribunal. (His Majesty's Government consider it desirable to mention specifically in the Covenant that the tribunal should be independent.)
 - 3) The enforcement of the remedy granted by the Courts by the police or executive authorities responsible.
- c) His Majesty's Government therefore consider that this paragraph should be expanded to read as follows:
 - '2. Each State party hereto undertakes to ensure:
 - a) that any person whose rights or freedom as herein defined are violated shall have an effective remedy, notwithstanding that the violation has been committed by persons acting in an official capacity,
 - b) that any person claiming such a remedy shall have his right thereto determined by national tribunals, whose independence is secured, and
 - c) *that the police and executive authorities shall enforce such remedies when granted.*⁸

Oscar Dowson, the United Kingdom delegate to the Committee of Experts, proposed an amendment to the draft European Convention along almost identical lines.⁹

A Sub-Committee of the Committee of Experts assigned to study the amendments that had been proposed reported that it 'considered it advisable to give due consideration to these proposals as being of interest even to those who adhere to the definition of Human Rights as proposed by the Assembly. This Article could, in fact, be included as an addition to Article 4 of the Assembly Draft.'¹⁰ The Italian expert said the reference to article 8 was unnecessary.¹¹ The Sub-Committee did not take up the British proposal and instead suggested something rather different, inspired by the text of article 8 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights but with significant differences:

Article 8. The High Contracting Parties must ensure that all persons within their jurisdiction shall have an effective remedy by an independent tribunal for acts violating the rights and freedoms accorded to them under this Convention.¹²

It was modified by the replacement of the words 'independent tribunal' with 'independent judicial authority'.¹³ The preliminary draft report of the Committee of Experts, prepared at the conclusion of its first session in February 1950, stated:

⁸ Comments of Governments on the Draft International Covenant on Human Rights and Measures of Implementation [UN Doc. E/CN.4/353/Add.1-3], Doc. A 770, III TP 156-79, at pp. 156-8 (emphasis added).

⁹ Amendments to Articles 4 and 7 of the Recommendation of the Consultative Assembly proposed by the Expert of the United Kingdom, Doc. A 782, III TP 188-91.

¹⁰ First part of the Report of the Sub-Committee Instructed to Make a Preliminary Study of the Amendments Proposed by the Members of the Committee, Doc. A 796, III TP 200-5, at p. 202. Article 4 laid down the principle that every member State 'shall be entitled to establish the rules by which the guaranteed rights and freedoms shall be organised and protected within its territory'.

¹¹ Ibid.

¹² Corrigendum to preceding document, Doc. A 815, III TP 226-7.

¹³ Preliminary Draft Convention for the Maintenance and Further Realisation of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 15 February 1950, Doc. A 833, III TP 236-46, at p. 240.

2. With regard to the right mentioned in Article 2, para. 1, the Committee did not copy the text of Article 8 of the Universal Declaration, to which the Assembly Draft refers, because this Article is concerned with the right of remedy through national tribunals in cases of violation of fundamental rights, a question which the Committee thought should be placed elsewhere in the Convention (cf. Article 8).

...

Article 8 is new and replaces the reference to Article 8 of the Universal Declaration contained in Article 2, paragraph 1, of the Assembly draft.¹⁴

At the second session of the Committee of Experts, in March 1950, the United Kingdom revived the proposal it had put forward the previous month.¹⁵ The Committee of Experts prepared two drafts. Alternatives A and A/2, which were broadly based upon the Consultative Assembly draft, contained the following: 'The High Contracting Parties must ensure that all persons within their jurisdiction, shall have an effective remedy by a national independent authority for acts violating the rights and freedoms accorded to them under this Convention, notwithstanding that the violation has been committed by persons acting in an official capacity.'¹⁶ Alternatives B and B/2, originating with the British proposals, included this text: 'The High Contracting Parties undertake to ensure that any person whose rights and freedoms as herein defined are violated shall have an effective remedy notwithstanding that the violation has been committed by persons acting in an official capacity.'¹⁷

The Report of the Committee of Experts to the Committee of Ministers said:

- a) Comments on Alternatives A and A/2:
- Article 2

...

With regard to the right mentioned in Article 2, paragraph 1, the Committee did not copy the text of article 8 of the Universal Declaration, to which the Assembly draft refers, because this Article is concerned with the right of remedy through national tribunals in cases of violation of fundamental rights. This is not a Human Right in itself, but a mode to secure these rights. The Committee thought this question should be placed elsewhere in the Convention (cf. Article 9).¹⁸

- Article 9

Article 9 is new and replaced the reference to Article 8 of the Universal Declaration, contained in Article 2, paragraph 1 of the Assembly draft (Cf. comments on Art. 2, para. 2).

The national authority envisaged in this Article may be an administrative or legal court. For recourse to it to be effective, it was obvious that the court concerned must be in a position to judge the case impartially.¹⁹

The draft proposed for Alternatives B and B/2 was similar in scope.²⁰ In effect, the Committee of Experts had reached agreement on a provision common to the two drafts.

¹⁴ Preliminary Draft of the Report to the Committee of Ministers, 24 February 1950, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 1, A 847, III TP 246-79, at pp. 262, 266.

¹⁵ Amendments to Articles 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 8, and 9 of the Committee's preliminary draft proposal by the Expert of the United Kingdom, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 2, A 915, III TP 280-9, at p. 280.

¹⁶ Appendix to the Report of the Committee of Experts to the Committee of Ministers—Draft Convention (16 March 1950), Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 14 revised, A 925, IV TP 50-79, at p. 56.

¹⁷ Ibid.

¹⁸ Report to the Committee of Ministers submitted by the Committee of Experts Instructed to Draw Up a Draft Convention of Collective Guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Doc. CM/WP 1 (5) 15, A 924, IV TP 2-55, at p. 22.

¹⁹ Ibid., p. 30.

²⁰ Ibid.

The Conference of Senior Officials, meeting in June 1950, made a small change, adding the words 'before a national authority' after 'effective remedy'.²¹ The Report of the Conference of Senior Officials to the Committee of Ministers explained that the new provision had become article 15 in its draft: 'This is a question of the right to bring cases before national courts in respect of the rights protected by this Convention. This Article should therefore be placed after the Articles defining these rights.'²²

At the fifth session of the Committee of Ministers, in August 1950, the text was further modified, the words 'The High Contracting Parties undertake to ensure that any person' being replaced by 'Everyone'²³ and the word 'defined' changed to 'secured': 'Article 13. Everyone whose rights and freedoms as herein secured are violated shall have an effective remedy before a national authority notwithstanding that the violation has been committed by persons acting in an official capacity.'²⁴

No comments were made on the provision at the August 1950 session of the Consultative Assembly. The text that became article 13 of the Convention underwent one further modification at Rome, in November 1950, immediately prior to adoption of the final text, where the words 'as in herein secured' became 'as set forth in this Convention'.

The heading 'Right to an effective remedy' was added by Protocol No. 11.²⁵

Analysis and interpretation

Article 13 enshrines the right to enforcement at the national level of the substance of the rights and freedoms set out in the Convention, regardless of the form in which these rights may be secured within the domestic legal order. It requires the national authorities to ensure that there is a domestic remedy that allows the competent national authority to address the substance of a complaint under the Convention and to provide appropriate relief. Thereby, article 13, 'giving direct expression to the States' obligation to protect human rights first and foremost within their own legal system, establishes an additional guarantee for an individual in order to ensure that he or she effectively enjoys those rights'.²⁶

According to the Court, 'the place of Article 13 in the scheme of human rights protection set up by the Convention would argue in favour of implied restrictions of Article 13 being kept to a minimum'.²⁷ States have some discretion in the manner in which they abide by this obligation, whose scope will vary depending upon the nature of the complaint of a violation of the Convention.²⁸ However, the remedy must be effective in practice as well as in law, 'in particular in the sense that its exercise must not be unjustifiably hindered by the acts or omissions of the authorities of the respondent State'.²⁹ For example, if no effective criminal investigation is ²¹ Draft Convention annexed to the Report [of the Conference of Senior Officials], Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19 annex, CM/WP 4 (50) 16 rev., A 1452, IV TP 274–95, at p. 282.

²² Text of the Report submitted by the Conference [of Senior Officials] to the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19, CM/WP 4 (50) 16 rev., A 1431, IV TP 242–73, at p. 260.

²³ Draft Convention adopted by the Sub-Committee, Doc. CM 1 (50) 52, A 1884, V TP 76–99, at p. 82.

²⁴ Letter dated 7 August 1950 sent by Mr MacBride, Chairman of the Committee of Ministers, to M. Spaak, President of the Consultative Assembly, Doc. No. 11, p. 600–19, V TP 144–71, at pp. 152–4.

²⁵ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(2).

²⁶ Kudła v. Poland [GC], no. 30210/96, § 152, ECHR 2000-XI.

²⁷ Ibid.

²⁸ Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints v. the United Kingdom, no. 7552/09, § 41, 4 March 2014.

²⁹ Husayn (Abu Zubaydah) v. Poland, no. 7511/13, § 540, 24 July 2014; Kaya v. Turkey, 19 February 1998, § 106, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-I; Mahmut Kaya v. Turkey, no. 22535/93, § 124, ECHR 2000-III.

carried out in a case involving issues of violence, it may foreclose the possibility of any other remedy, including damages. According to the Court, in certain circumstances '[w]hile the civil courts have the capacity to make an independent assessment of fact, in practice the weight attached to a preceding criminal inquiry is so important that even the most convincing evidence to the contrary furnished by a plaintiff would often be discarded and such a remedy would prove to be only theoretical and illusory'.³⁰

Article 13 does not, however, guarantee a remedy allowing a challenge to primary legislation before a national authority on the ground of being contrary to the Convention.³¹ The Convention does not impose any obligation that it be incorporated into domestic law. However, by virtue of article 1 the substance of the rights and freedoms that it sets out must be secured within the domestic legal order in one form or another.³² Article 13 is also related to article 35, where the rule of exhaustion of domestic remedies is enshrined.³³ There is a presumption that an effective remedy exists in order to deal with an arguable complaint under the Convention, one that is capable of providing appropriate relief.³⁴ Article 13 is also related to article 6(1), whereby a right to access to a court is ensured.³⁵ The right to trial within a reasonable time, in the determination of a criminal charge or of the rights and obligations of an individual, is 'reinforced' by article 13 'rather than being absorbed by the general obligation imposed by [article 6(1)] not to subject individuals to inordinate delays in legal proceedings'.³⁶ Finally, article 13 is bound up with the principle of subsidiarity,³⁷ now explicitly mentioned in recital 6 of the Preamble to the Convention, as amended by Protocol No. 15. The issue was first highlighted in one of the very early decisions of the Court, where reference was made to the 'subsidiary nature of the international machinery of collective enforcement established by the Convention'.³⁸ The Court has declared that '[i]t is fundamental to the machinery of protection established by the Convention that the national systems themselves provide redress for breaches of its provisions, with the Court exercising a supervisory role subject to the principle of subsidiarity'.³⁹

The right to an effective remedy arises if the applicant has an 'arguable complaint' that there has been a violation of a Convention right. Even if the Court concludes that the substantive right has not been violated, this does not preclude a complaint under article 13 from being 'arguable'. The Court has said that even notwithstanding the terms of article 13 suggesting, read literally, that an actual breach of another 'substantive' provision is necessary for the provision to be applicable, this is in fact not a prerequisite as long as the alleged violation is 'arguable'.⁴⁰ This is because article 13 guarantees 'the availability of a ³⁰ Cobzaru v. Romania, no. 48254/99, § 83, 26 July 2007; Menesheva v. Russia, no. 59261/00, § 77, ECHR 2006-III; Corsacov v. Moldova, no. 18944/02, § 82, 4 April 2006.

³¹ A. and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 3455/05, § 135, ECHR 2009.

³² Ireland v. the United Kingdom, 18 January 1978, § 239, Series A no. 25.

³³ Kudła v. Poland [GC], no. 30210/96, § 152, ECHR 2000-XI.

³⁴ Nemtsov v. Russia, no. 1774/11, § 112, 31 July 2014.

³⁵ De Geouffre de la Pradelle v. France, 16 December 1992, § 37, Series A no. 253-B.

³⁶ Kudła v. Poland [GC], no. 30210/96, § 152, ECHR 2000-XI.

³⁷ M.S.S. v. Belgium and Greece [GC], no. 30696/09, § 288, ECHR 2011; Kudła v. Poland [GC], no. 30210/96, § 152, ECHR 2000-XI; Handyside v. the United Kingdom, 7 December 1976, § 48, Series A no. 24.

³⁸ Case relating to certain aspects of the laws on the use of languages in education in Belgium (merits), 23 July 1968, p. 32, § 10, Series A no. 6.

³⁹ A. and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 3455/05, § 174, ECHR 2009; Z. and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 29392/95, § 103, ECHR 2001-V.

⁴⁰ Boyle and Rice v. the United Kingdom, 27 April 1988, § 52, Series A no. 131.

remedy at national level to enforce—and hence to allege non-compliance with—the substance of the Convention rights and freedoms in whatever form they may happen to be secured in the domestic legal order'.⁴¹ The 'arguable claim' standard means that there is no right to require a remedy with respect to any supposed grievance, regardless of how frivolous it may be.⁴²

The requirement of an 'effective remedy' means that in addition to the payment of compensation, if this is appropriate, there must also be 'a thorough and effective investigation capable of leading to the identification and punishment of those responsible and including effective access for the complainant to the investigatory procedure'.⁴³ Here there are similarities to the procedural obligation imposed by articles 2 and 3 of the Convention, but the requirements of article 13 are said to be broader.⁴⁴ The leading case involves a claim by relatives of a victim with an arguable claim that he had been unlawfully killed by agents of the State. According to the Court, 'the notion of an effective remedy for the purposes of Article 13 entails, in addition to the payment of compensation where appropriate, a thorough and effective investigation capable of leading to the identification and punishment of those responsible and including effective access for the relatives to the investigatory procedure... Seen in these terms the requirements of Article 13 are broader than a Contracting State's procedural obligation under Article 2 to conduct an effective investigation'.⁴⁵

In practice, the Court examines the effectiveness of a domestic remedy proposed by the government, often finding 'that even though review by a supervising prosecutor plays an important part in securing appropriate conditions of detention, a report or order by a prosecutor is primarily a matter between the supervising authority and the supervised body and is not geared towards providing preventive or compensatory redress to the aggrieved individual. Since the complaint to a prosecutor about unsatisfactory conditions of detention does not give the person using it a personal right to the exercise by the State of its supervisory powers, it cannot be regarded as an effective remedy'.⁴⁶

Discrimination

The protection against discrimination provided by the Convention in accordance with article 14 is a 'subsidiary right'. It must be related to a substantive right under the Convention. This includes article 13, although it too is in a sense a subsidiary right as well. In practice, the Court does not appear to have found violations of article 14 with respect to article 13 in the absence of a violation of a substantive article, such as article 3. Indeed, it is difficult to see how this could be otherwise, given the role of articles 13 and 14 in the scheme of the Convention.

⁴¹ Ibid.; James and Others v. the United Kingdom, 21 February 1986, § 84, Series A no. 98.

⁴² Leander v. Sweden, 26 March 1987, § 77, Series A no. 116.

⁴³ Husayn (Abu Zubaydah) v. Poland, no. 7511/13, § 541, 24 July 2014; Anguelova v. Bulgaria, no. 38361/07, §§ 161–162, ECHR 2002-IV; Assenov and Others v. Bulgaria, 28 October 1998, § 114, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-VIII; El Masri v. 'the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia' [GC], no. 39630/09, § 255, ECHR 2012; Süheyla Aydın v. Turkey, no. 25660/94, § 208, 24 May 2005.

⁴⁴ Husayn (Abu Zubaydah) v. Poland, no. 7511/13, § 542, 24 July 2014; El Masri v. 'the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia' [GC], no. 39630/09, § 255, ECHR 2012; Khashiyev and Akayeva v. Russia, nos 57942/00 and 57945/00, § 183, 24 February 2005; Kurt v. Turkey, 25 May 1998, § 140, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-III; Orhan v. Turkey, no. 25656/94, § 384, ECHR 2002; Kılıç v. Turkey, no. 22492/93, § 93, ECHR 2000-III.

⁴⁵ Kaya v. Turkey, 19 February 1998, § 107, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-I.

⁴⁶ Nemtsov v. Russia, no. 1774/11, § 114, 31 July 2014; Dirdizov v. Russia, no. 41461/10, § 76, 27 November 2012; Ananyev and Others v. Russia, nos 42525/07 and 60800/08, § 104, 10 January 2012.

In one of the rare findings of a violation of article 14 taken together with article 13, the applicant complained that he was deprived of an adequate remedy in a case of ill-treatment because he was of Roma origin, something that was known to the police officers. He said that while in the police station, 'his ethnic origin was openly and repeatedly referred to by the investigating authorities as a factor militating against his complaint of police abuse'. Noting that racial violence 'is a particular affront to human dignity and, in view of its perilous consequences, requires from the authorities special vigilance and a vigorous reaction', the Court said that 'when investigating violent incidents, State authorities have the additional duty to take all reasonable steps to unmask any racist motive and to establish whether or not ethnic hatred or prejudice may have played a role in the events'.⁴⁷ The Court said that the applicant did not refer to any particular facts substantiating the claim that the violence he sustained was racially motivated (although it had observed, only a few paragraphs earlier, that the applicant had indicated that his ethnic origin had in fact been regularly referred to by investigating authorities). Instead, the Court said, 'he claimed that his allegation should be evaluated within the context of documented and repeated failure by the Romanian authorities to remedy instances of anti-Roma violence and to provide redress for discrimination'.⁴⁸ The Court referred to official programmes directed at eradicating anti-Roma conduct that should have been well known to the investigating authorities. Yet, '[n]ot only was there no attempt on the part of the prosecutors to verify the behaviour of the policemen involved in the violence, ascertaining, for instance, whether they had been involved in the past in similar incidents or whether they had been accused of displaying anti-Roma sentiment, but the prosecutors made tendentious remarks in relation to the applicant's Roma origin throughout the investigation'.⁴⁹ This, it said, disclosed 'a general discriminatory attitude of the authorities, which reinforced the applicant's belief that any remedy in his case was purely illusory'.⁵⁰ The Court concluded that 'the failure of the law enforcement agents to investigate possible racial motives in the applicant's ill-treatment combined with their attitude during the investigation constitutes a discrimination with regard to the applicant's rights contrary to Article 14 taken in conjunction with Articles 3 in its procedural limb and 13 of the Convention'.⁵¹

In a similar case, the Court found there was a violation of the procedural limb of article 3 and said it did not, consequently, need to rule on the complaint based upon article 13. It went on to rule that there had been a violation of article 14 because of racism in the conduct of the investigating authorities.⁵² In yet another case, while acknowledging the systematic racism against Roma in the Bulgarian justice system, the Court said there was no evidence in the file indicating that racist attitudes had played a part in the events in question.⁵³

⁴⁷ Cobzaru v. Romania, no. 48254/99, §§ 86–89, 26 July 2007.

⁴⁸ Ibid., § 94.

⁴⁹ Ibid., § 98.

⁵⁰ Ibid.

⁵¹ Ibid., § 100.

⁵² Nachova and Others v. Bulgaria [GC], nos 43577/98 and 43579/98, §§ 120–123, ECHR 2005-VII.

⁵³ Ognyanova and Choban v. Bulgaria, no. 46317/99, §§ 146–149, 23 February 2006. See also Yaşar v. Turkey, no. 46412/99, §§ 72–74, 24 January 2006.

Reservations

Two reservations have been formulated with respect to article 13. Serbia and Montenegro made a reservation to article 13 stating that it was not applicable to the jurisdiction of the Court of Serbia and Montenegro until that Court became operational.⁵⁴ Monaco has declared that article 13 (as well as article 6(1)) does not apply to provisions of its Constitution providing for immunity of the Prince from legal proceedings and those governing his royal prerogatives in the areas of naturalization and re-instatement of nationality.⁵⁵

Further reading

Yutaki Arai, 'Right to an Effective Remedy before a National Authority (Article 13)', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 997–1026.

Andrew Drzemczewski and Christos Giakoumopoulos, 'Article 13', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 455–74.

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 391–400.

Françoise Hampson, 'The Concept of an "Arguable Claim" under Article 13 of the European Convention on Human Rights', (1990) 39 ICLQ 891.

Harris et al., Law of the European Convention, pp. 557–76.

Patricia Mallia, 'European Court of Human Rights: M.S.S. v. Belgium & Greece, Introductory Note', (2011) 50 International Legal Materials 364.

⁵⁴ (2004) 48 YB 22.

⁵⁵ (2005) 48 YB 9.

Article 14. Prohibition of discrimination/Interdiction de discrimination

The enjoyment of the rights and freedoms set forth in this Convention shall be secured without discrimination on any ground such as sex, race, colour, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, association with a national minority, property, birth or other status.

La jouissance des droits et libertés reconnus dans la présente Convention doit être assurée, sans distinction aucune, fondée notamment sur le sexe, la race, la couleur, la langue, la religion, les opinions politiques ou toutes autres opinions, l'origine nationale ou sociale, l'appartenance à une minorité nationale, la fortune, la naissance ou toute autre situation.

Introductory comments

The prohibition of discrimination based upon race, sex, language, religion, and other analogous grounds stands at the heart of the modern human rights corpus. It is the only substantive human right set out in the Charter of the United Nations. Article 1(3) of the Charter lists as one of the purposes of the United Nations the promotion and encouragement of 'respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion'. The Preamble of the Charter also speaks of 'the equal rights of men and women'. An earlier attempt at the condemnation of racial discrimination, proposed by Japan at the Paris Peace Conference of 1919, was unsuccessful, apparently vetoed by President Wilson of the United States.¹

Pursuing the logic of the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights gives equality and non-discrimination pride of place. The core provision is article 2, appearing even before the right to life and the prohibition of torture. The first sentence of article 2 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights states: 'Everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth in this Declaration, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status.' The list was expanded from that of the Charter in two ways. It was made non-exhaustive by virtue of the words 'such as' and several prohibited grounds were added to the succinct enumeration in article 1(3) of the Charter. The Universal Declaration also addresses equality and non-discrimination in article 7: 'All are equal before the law and are entitled without any discrimination to equal protection of the law. All are entitled to equal protection against any discrimination in violation of this Declaration and against any incitement to such discrimination.' Other provisions are also relevant, notably article 16 in its recognition of the right to marry to 'men and women' and article 23(2): 'Everyone, without any discrimination, has the right to equal pay for equal work.'

Subsequent human rights treaties adopted at the universal level have addressed specific facets of discrimination: the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of

¹ Paul Gordon Lauren, The Evolution of Human Rights: Visions Seen, Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 1998, pp. 90-22.

Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities. Treaties of general application or scope, such as the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights or the Convention on the Rights of the Child, incorporate general non-discrimination clauses similar to what is found in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

As one commentary has noted quite perceptively, '[n]on-discrimination does not have the same, specific, foundational designation in the Statute of the Council of Europe or Preamble to the Convention as it does in the UN Charter'² or, for that matter, in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Even the European Social Charter, adopted a decade after the European Convention, contains an equality clause in its short Preamble: 'Considering that the enjoyment of social rights should be secured without discrimination on grounds of race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion, national extraction or social origin'.³ It would seem that the drafters of the European Convention on Human Rights did not have equality at the centre of their priorities in codifying fundamental rights and freedoms. One terrible lapse was the omission of discrimination on the ground of sex in the first draft of the Convention proposed by the European Movement.⁴ Perhaps the drafters hadn't read the Charter of the United Nations, with its prominent reference to gender equality, but this is an unlikely hypothesis. It seems more likely that they didn't think the equality of men and women to be important enough.

The somewhat secondary role of equality and non-discrimination is also reflected in the European Union Charter of Fundamental Rights. Article 21 of the Charter is the counterpart of article 14(1) of the Convention: 'Any discrimination based on any ground such as sex, race, colour, ethnic or social origin, genetic features, language, religion or belief, political or any other opinion, membership of a national minority, property, birth, disability, age or sexual orientation shall be prohibited.' Some grounds have been added to this more modern instrument: disability, age, and sexual orientation. An important one, in terms of the broad interpretation that has been given by the European Court to article 14, has been removed: 'other status'.

Article 14 of the European Convention on Human Rights plays an adjectival role in that its relevance is conditioned on the application of one of the other substantive rights listed in the Convention. Thus, while discrimination on one of the prohibited grounds with respect to the right to private and family life may amount to a breach of the Convention, the same would not be the case with respect to nationality because there is no right to nationality in the Convention. A non-discrimination clause of more general application results from Protocol No. 12 of the Convention. The difficulty this raises for States Parties is manifested in the relatively modest number of ratifications of the Protocol, which only entered into force in 2005.

² Harris et al., Law of the European Convention, at p. 577.

³ European Social Charter, (1965) 529 UNTS 89, PP 4.

⁴ Convention for the Collective Protection of Individual Rights and Democratic Liberties by the States, Members of the Council of Europe, and for the establishment of a European Court of Human Rights to ensure observance of the Convention, Doc. INF/5/E/R, I TP 296–303, at p. 296.

Drafting of the provision

The International Council of the European Movement, meeting in Brussels in February 1949, adopted a list of human rights to be assured by the European Court that included '[l]'égalité devant la loi' and '[l]a protection contre toute discrimination basée sur la religion, la race, l'origine nationale, la profession d'une opinion politique ou de toute autre opinion'.⁵ The initial draft European Convention on Human Rights was prepared by the International Juridical Section of the European Movement, chaired by Pierre-Henri Teitgen, with David Maxwell Fyfe and Fernand Dehousse as rapporteurs. Both Maxwell Fyfe and Dehousse had been involved in the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights at the United Nations the previous year. The enumeration of rights in the draft contained the following: 'Every State a party to this Convention shall guarantee to all persons within its territory the following rights: . . . i) Equality before the law. j) Freedom from discrimination on account of religion, race, national origin or political or other opinion.'⁶ Quite remarkably, and inexplicably, the European Movement draft omitted discrimination based on sex, despite the references to this form of inequality in article 2 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, as well as in the Charter of the United Nations.

Many speakers at the first session of the Council of Europe's Consultative Assembly spoke about the importance of non-discrimination. Pierre-Henri Teitgen called for adoption of a convention to include 'the natural rights . . . pertaining to . . . equality before the law, protection from discrimination on account of religion, race, national origin, political or philosophical opinion . . .'⁷ Again, note the absence of 'sex' within the enumeration. Italy's Mario Cingolani condemned 'the violation of the . . . principle of equality before the law; the horrible triumph of discrimination on grounds of race or political opinions'.⁸ Rolf Edberg of Sweden said '[a]nother fundamental right is that no individual should be persecuted or discriminated against on account of his opinions'.⁹ The United Kingdom's John Foster referred to difficulties faced by some countries in negotiating the text of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, explaining that one of these came from 'certain countries where, for reasons of internal policy, certain discriminations on, we will say, race or religion, were in existence and they did not feel themselves in a position to sign the Declaration of Human Rights without considerable compromise'. Foster added that 'we in Europe do not have the same difficulties'.¹⁰ Gérard Jaquet of France said '[a]ll individuals must be free and equal before the law, whatever their race, their colour, their sex, their language, their religion, or their social position'.¹¹

⁵ Recommendations adopted at the meeting of the International Council of the European Movement held at Brussels in February 1949, INF/2/F, p. 3. Two decades later, the Council of Europe provided an unofficial English translation of these provisions: '[e]quality before the law' and '[f]reedom from discrimination on account of religion, race, national origin or political or other opinion'. Preparatory work on Article 14 of the European Convention on Human Rights, CDH (67) 3, p. 3.

⁶ Convention for the Collective Protection of Individual Rights and Democratic Liberties by the States, Members of the Council of Europe, and for the establishment of a European Court of Human Rights to ensure observance of the Convention, Doc. INF/5/E/R, I TP 296-303, at p. 296, art. I(i) and (j).

⁷ Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 19 August 1949], I TP 38-154, at p. 46.

⁸ Ibid., p. 62.

⁹ Ibid., p. 76.

¹⁰ Ibid., pp. 94-6.

¹¹ Ibid., p. 134.

Sean MacEntee of Ireland cited article 2 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, saying that the Consultative Assembly should approve it 'without reservation'.¹²

The only constructive proposal for amendment came from Hermod Lannung of Denmark, who insisted upon the importance of the status of women: 'The draft Convention which the European Movement has worked out, and which is a very remarkable piece of work, has not the word "sex" [in its freedom from discrimination provision]. I consider this to be a mistake . . .' he said.¹³ He pointed to inclusion of sex as a prohibited ground in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the draft covenant on human rights.

Be it in relation to marriage, politics, education, opportunities in trades, etc., the principle followed should be that of no discrimination on account of sex. Something is lacking in political democracy if women do not have equal rights with men. Even if some countries do not today fulfil this condition, it would be natural that they should take steps towards it as soon as possible.¹⁴

Lannung also stated that 'we should stress the very important point that human rights should also include national minority rights and their protection . . . in order that national minorities may secure the right to a free national life and protection against persecution . . .'¹⁵

A few speakers used the occasion to score political points. One of the Danish members, Ole Bjorn Kraft, said that the Danish national group living in South Schleswig 'must have secured to them the right to lead their national life and to work for their national goals without discrimination, without persecution and without injury'.¹⁶ An Irish delegate, James Everett, condemned discrimination based upon religious or political opinion, noting that it was 'practised in every walk of life. Jobs, the type of employment and even the allocation of houses are often determined on the basis of the religious views of the applicant.' He added, referring to Northern Ireland, that '[s]uch injustices as I have referred to are known to exist in certain countries in Europe, and some of them even in a portion of my own country, cut off from the Motherland'.¹⁷

As rapporteur of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions, Teitgen prepared an initial list of questions. He asked whether the convention should include 'equality before the law' and 'protection against all discrimination based on religion, race, national origin, profession or political or other opinion'.¹⁸ Teitgen's proposal to the Committee, dated 29 August 1949, included the following: 'The fundamental rights and freedoms enumerated above will be guaranteed without distinction on any ground such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion professed with violence, national or social origin, membership of a national minority, fortune or birth.'¹⁹ There were two attempts at amendment when the proposal was discussed in the Committee. The first, to insert 'physical violence or incitement to' after 'without', was rejected by twelve to three, with one abstention. The second, to delete 'professed without ¹² Ibid., p. 142.

¹³ Ibid., p. 54.

¹⁴ Ibid.

¹⁵ Ibid. See also the remarks of Kraft of Denmark, ibid., p. 68.

¹⁶ Ibid., p. 68.

¹⁷ Ibid., pp. 104-6.

¹⁸ Letter addressed 22 August 1949 by Mr P.H. Teitgen to the Chairman of the Legal Committee with a list of questions for examination by the Legal Committee as appendix, Doc. A 14, I TP 156-61, at p. 160.

¹⁹ Proposals by Mr P.H. Teitgen, Rapporteur, 29 August 1949, Doc. A 116, I TP 166-8.

violence', was adopted by fourteen to one, with one abstention. As amended, the text was adopted by seventeen votes to nil.²⁰

The Report of the Commission on Legal and Administrative Questions to the first session of the Consultative Assembly noted that the draft did not contain a prohibition of discrimination based on membership of a national minority. It explained that there had been discussion on a report by Hermod Lannung, and the Committee had 'unanimously recognised the importance of this problem'. The Report said the Committee had considered that its task was not to draw up a list of fundamental rights to be defined in a general declaration but only 'those which appeared suitable for inclusion in an immediate international guarantee'. The Committee had agreed to draw the attention of the Committee of Ministers to the need for subsequent examination and 'defining more exactly the rights of national minorities'.²¹ The draft recommendation of the Committee read as follows: 'The fundamental rights and freedoms enumerated above shall be guaranteed without any distinction based on race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, affiliation to a national minority, fortune or birth.'²² Presenting the report to the plenary Consultative Assembly, Teitgen explained:

[E]ach country will maintain the right to determine the means by which the guaranteed freedoms are exercised within its territory, but—and this is Article 5 of the draft Resolution—its legislation, in defining the measures for the achievement of these freedoms, cannot make any distinction based on race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, affiliation to a national minority, fortune or birth. Any national legislation which, under pretext of organising freedom, makes any such discrimination, falls within the scope of the international guarantee.²³

Article 5 was adopted by the Consultative Assembly without amendment or dissenting vote.²⁴

The Committee of Ministers decided to refer the draft convention prepared by the Consultative Assembly to a Committee of Experts. In the meantime, the Commission on Human Rights had adopted a draft text on equality as part of its work on the International Covenant on human rights:

Article 20

1. All are equal before the law and shall be accorded equal protection of the law.
2. Everyone shall be accorded all the rights and freedoms defined in this Covenant without discrimination on any ground such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status.
3. Everyone shall be accorded equal protection against any incitement to such discrimination.²⁵

²⁰ Minutes of the Siring [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions, Consultative Assembly, 30 August 1949], Doc. A 167, I TP 174–80, at p. 176.

²¹ Report presented by Mr P.H. Teitgen, 5 September 1949, Doc. A 290, I TP 192–213, at p. 200.

²² Report [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions], 5 September 1949, Doc. AS (1) 77, I TP 216–39, at p. 230.

²³ Report of the Siring [of the Consultative Assembly, 7 September 1949], I TP 250–95, at p. 278.

²⁴ Recommendation No. 38 to the Committee of Ministers adopted 8 September 1949 on the conclusion of the debates, Doc. AS (1) 108, II TP 274–83, at p. 278.

²⁵ Report of the Fifth Session of the Commission on Human Rights to the Economic and Social Council, UN Doc. E/1371(Supp.), p. 24.

In preparation for the Committee of Experts meeting, the Council of Europe's Secretariat General compared the draft covenant to the draft European convention:

Paragraph 1 [of article 20 of the draft Covenant] is not provided for by the Resolution [of the Consultative Assembly]. Paragraph 2 is covered by Article 5 of the Resolution except the differences relating to association with a national minority and to any other situation. Paragraph 3 is not provided for by the Resolution. In the light of article 5 of the Resolution, paragraphs 1 and 3 seem even to have been excluded intentionally.²⁶

The comments of the United Kingdom on the draft Covenant were also circulated in anticipation of the Committee of Experts' meeting:

The first paragraph of [article 20 of the draft Covenant] appears not to take account of the permissible legal disabilities to which minors and persons of unsound mind may be subject. His Majesty's Government consider therefore that the paragraph should be amended to read:

1. All are equal before the law and shall be accorded equal protection of the law *provided that this Article shall not be held to forbid the imposition of reasonable legal disabilities of minors and persons of unsound mind.*²⁷

The Committee of Experts held two sessions, the first in February and the second in March 1950. A Sub-Committee assigned to study the amendments submitted a report at the first session, noting that some rights could not be recognized to aliens without restriction and suggesting that a reference to this effect was inserted in the text of article 5.²⁸ This was not adopted, however, because of a decision to draw up a separate provision on aliens, the ancestor of article 16 of the Convention. At the conclusion of its first session, the Committee of Experts adopted the following: 'Article 6. The aforesaid rights and freedoms shall be guaranteed without discrimination on any ground such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, affiliation to a national minority, fortune or birth.'²⁹ In the final version, the Committee changed the first words of the text to 'These fundamental rights and freedoms . . .' It also changed the word 'guaranteed' to 'secured', based on the notion that 'the aim of the Convention was not to set up an international guarantee to be undertaken by the signatory States themselves'.³⁰

For the second session of the Committee of Experts, the British submitted the following text:

Article 14

1. All are equal before the law and shall be accorded equal protection of the law; provided that this Article shall not be held to forbid the imposition of reasonable legal disabilities on minors and persons of unsound mind.

²⁶ Preparatory Report by the Secretariat-General concerning a Preliminary Draft Convention to Provide a Collective Guarantee of Human Rights, Doc. B 22, III TP 2-37, at pp. 18, 21.

²⁷ Comments of Governments on the Draft International Covenant on Human Rights and Measures of Implementation [UN Doc. E/CN.4/353/Add.1-3], Doc. A 770, III TP 156-79, at p. 164 (emphasis in the original).

²⁸ First part of the Report of the Sub-Committee Instructed to Make a Preliminary Study of the Amendments Proposed by the Members of the Committee, Doc. A 796, III TP 200-5, at p. 200.

²⁹ Draft text of the first section of a draft Convention based on the work of the Consultative Assembly, Doc. A 809, III TP 220-31, at p. 224.

³⁰ Preliminary draft of the Report to the Committee of Ministers, 24 February 1950, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 1, A 847, III TP 246-79, at p. 264.

2. Everyone shall be accorded all the rights and freedoms defined in this Convention without discrimination on any grounds such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status.³¹

The Drafting Committee proposed that 'association with a national minority' be added to the second paragraph.³²

The Committee of Experts submitted two draft conventions in its Report. The first, labelled A and A/2, stated: 'These fundamental rights and freedoms shall be secured without any distinction based on race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, belonging to a national minority, fortune or birth.' The second, labelled B and B/2, derived from the United Kingdom proposal, said:

1. All are equal before the law.
2. Everyone shall be accorded all the rights and freedoms defined in this Convention without discrimination on any grounds such as sex, race, colour, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, association with a national minority, property, birth or other status.³³

The two competing drafts adopted by the Committee of Experts were subsequently studied by the Conference of Senior Officials. It was agreed to attempt to amalgamate the two texts. With respect to the non-discrimination provision, the Conference took the second draft (B and B/2) and reworked it, removing the first paragraph and making slight changes to the second: 'The rights and freedoms defined in this Convention shall be secured without discrimination on any grounds such as sex, race, colour, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, association with a national minority, property, birth or other status.'³⁴ The Committee of Ministers, meeting in August 1950, added the words 'The enjoyment of' at the beginning of the provision. It also replaced the word 'defined' with 'secured'.³⁵ No further changes were made to article 14.

The Committee's final draft was then considered by the Consultative Assembly. Hermod Lannung of Denmark, who had insisted the previous year that sex be added as one of the prohibited grounds and that the protection of national minorities be addressed, spoke with enthusiasm about the provision:

In the name of justice, let us not forget, when we study the draft Convention before us, that on two points it is still an improvement on the original draft of the European Movement, namely, as regards the additions to Article 14, according to which 'the enjoyment of the rights and freedoms secured in this Convention shall be secured without discrimination on any ground'—I quote the additions—'such as sex...' and 'association with a national minority...' I welcome this with the greatest satisfaction.³⁶

³¹ Amendments to Articles 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 8, and 9 of the Committee's preliminary draft proposal by the Expert of the United Kingdom, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 2, A 915, III TP 280-9, at p. 288.

³² Amendments to the British draft proposed by the Drafting Committee composed of Sir Oscar Dowson, MM le Quesne, Dons Moeller, and Salén, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 10, p. 3, A 919, III TP 288-95, at p. 294.

³³ Appendix to the Report of the Committee of Experts on Human Rights: Draft Convention of Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 16 March 1950, Doc. C/WP 1 (50) 15 appendix, CM/WP 1 (50) 14 revised, A 925, IV TP 50-79, at p. 64.

³⁴ New draft alternatives B and B/2, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 9, A 1372, IV TP 182-91, at p. 190.

³⁵ Draft Convention adopted by the Sub-Committee, Doc. CM 1 (50) 52, A 1884, V TP 76-99, at p. 84.

³⁶ Report of the sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 14 August 1950], V TP 216-71, at p. 240.

A more cautious statement, testifying perhaps to the difficulty associated with gender equality at the time, came from a British delegate, Gilbert Mitchison:

There are bound to be many of us in this Assembly who will feel that on this point or that we would have had matters otherwise, and that we would have gone further. Perhaps some of us, as was pointed out just now, might not have gone quite so far in some respects—I refer to the inclusion of sex and national minorities in the Article to which Mr. Lannung referred. At any rate, there is agreement in a most difficult field, reached after the fullest examination.³⁷

Emrys Roberts, also of the United Kingdom, welcomed the reference to national minorities in article 14: 'Central Governments sometimes regard national minorities purely as nuisance and like to try to level them out. As a member of the Welsh nation... I believe that the cultures and customs of the small nations enrich the pattern of European civilisation.'³⁸

Finally, Léopold Senghor, who was part of the French parliamentary delegation but who went on to be the first president of Senegal, complained that article 14 was in conflict with article 63, by which European States had the freedom to extend the protection of the Convention to their colonies. Beginning with the admonition 'Let the Assembly beware!', Senghor noted that article 14 of the Convention reproduced the first sentence of article 2 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights but not the second—'the lines which the experts of our Committee of Ministers set aside'—by which the benefits of the Declaration are applied with distinction, regardless of the political, jurisdictional, or international status of the territory to which the individual belongs.³⁹

The heading 'Prohibition of discrimination' was added according to the provisions of Protocol No. 11.⁴⁰

Analysis and interpretation

Subsidiary nature of article 14

Article 14 provides protection against discrimination in the enjoyment of rights and freedoms guaranteed by the other substantive provisions of the Convention. It is a subsidiary provision in that it complements the other substantive provisions of the Convention and its Protocols. Article 14 does not have an independent existence because it applies only to 'the enjoyment of the rights and freedoms' safeguarded by other provisions of Convention law. Nevertheless, it is autonomous to the extent that it does not require that there be a breach of one of the other substantive provisions. Article 14 is applicable when 'the facts at issue fall "within the ambit" of one or more of the latter'.⁴¹ Consequently, a measure that 'in itself is in conformity with the requirements of the ³⁷ Ibid., p. 256.

³⁸ Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 25 August 1950, morning], VI TP 74–143, at p. 86.

³⁹ Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 25 August 1950, afternoon], VI TP 142–91, at p. 174.

⁴⁰ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(2).

⁴¹ Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints v. the United Kingdom, no. 7552/09, § 39, 4 March 2014; Sejdić and Finci v. Bosnia and Herzegovina [GC], nos 27996/06 and 34836/06, § 39, ECHR 2009; Abdulaziz, Cabales, and Balkandali v. the United Kingdom, 28 May 1985, § 71, Series A no. 94; Petrovic v. Austria, 27 March 1998, § 22, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-II; Şahin v. Germany [GC], no. 30943/96, § 85, ECHR 2003-VIII; Case relating to certain aspects of the laws on the use of languages in education in Belgium'

Article enshrining the right or freedom in question may therefore infringe this Article when read in conjunction with Article 14' because of its discriminatory nature. It is, the Court has said, as if article 14 was 'an integral part of each of the Articles laying down rights and freedoms whatever their nature'.⁴² Another consequence of this broad view is that article 14 extends 'beyond the enjoyment of the rights and freedoms which the Convention and Protocols require each State to guarantee. It applies also to those additional rights, falling within the general scope of any Convention article, for which the State has voluntarily decided to provide.'⁴³

Findings of a violation of article 14 are always associated with one of the other rights set out in the Convention or the protocols. For this reason, admissibility issues concerning article 14 may be assessed separately from those concerning the substantive right concerned.⁴⁴ Sometimes the Court will conclude that the two provisions have been violated, that is, article 14 and the substantive provision with which it is related, such as article 8. On other occasions, it will satisfy itself with declaring that there has been a violation of article 14. Most often, it establishes a violation of the substantive provision in the Convention or the protocols and then says there is no need to address separately the issue of article 14.

The prohibition of discrimination in article 14 thus extends beyond the enjoyment of the rights and freedoms that the Convention and the Protocols require each State to guarantee. It applies also to those additional rights falling within the general scope of any Convention article, for which the State has voluntarily decided to provide.⁴⁵ For example, although there may be no obligation under the Convention for a State to provide a scheme for benefits or pension, if it does it must do so in a manner that is compliant with article 14 of the Convention.⁴⁶ Similarly, a State is not required by article 9 to allow religious institutions to perform marriages, but if it does it cannot discriminate between religious groups or denominations, allowing some but not others to exercise this function.⁴⁷ Nor are States required to give religious organizations any particular status, benefits, or privileges; if they do, however, it must be without discrimination.⁴⁸

Extreme forms of discrimination may go beyond article 14 and constitute ill-treatment that violates article 3 of the Convention. Both the Court and the Commission have taken the view that discrimination may also constitute inhuman treatment in breach of article 3 of the Convention where it attains a sufficient level of severity.⁴⁹ Interferences with (merits), 23 July 1968, p. 30, § 9, Series A no. 6; Van Buitenen v. the Netherlands, no. 11775/85, Commission decision of 2 March 1987; Cha'are Shalom Ve Tsedek v. France [GC], no. 27417/95, § 86, ECHR 2000-VII.

⁴² National Union of Belgian Police v. Belgium, 27 October 1975, § 44, Series A no. 19.

⁴³ Anderle v. the Czech Republic, no. 6268/08, § 28, 17 February 2011.

⁴⁴ Dordević v. Croatia, no. 41526/10, § 158, ECHR 2012.

⁴⁵ Sejdić and Finci v. Bosnia and Herzegovina [GC], nos 27996/06 and 34836/06, § 39, ECHR 2009; Andrejeva v. Latvia [GC], no. 55707/00, § 74, ECHR 2009; Case relating to certain aspects of the laws on the use of languages in education in Belgium (merits), 23 July 1968, p. 30, § 9, Series A no. 6; Stec and Others v. the United Kingdom (dec.) [GC], nos 65731/01 and 65900/01, § 40, ECHR 2005-X; E.B. v. France [GC], no. 43546/02, § 48, 22 January 2008.

⁴⁶ Stec and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], nos 65731/01 and 65900/01, § 53, ECHR 2006-VI.

⁴⁷ Savez crkava 'Rijčë života' and Others v. Croatia, no. 7798/08, § 58, 9 December 2010.

⁴⁸ Cumhuriyetçi Eğitim Ve Kültür Merkezi Vakfı v. Turkey, no. 32093/10 § 48, 2 December 2014.

⁴⁹ Abdulaziz, Cabales, and Balkandali v. the United Kingdom, 28 May 1985, §§ 90–92, Series A no. 94; East African Asians v. the United Kingdom, nos 4403/70–4419/70, 4422/70, 4423/70, 4434/70, 4443/70, 4476/70–4478/70, 4486/70, 4501/70, and 4526/70–4530/70, Commission report of 14 December 1973, § 208, DR 78-A, p. 5.

fundamental rights directed at the Karpas Greek-Cypriot 'class of persons' by the Turkish occupying government could only be explained by the 'the features which distinguish them from the Turkish-Cypriot population, namely their ethnic origin, race and religion'. They were compelled to live in conditions where they were 'isolated, restricted in their movements, controlled and with no prospect of renewing or developing their community'. These conditions were 'debas[ing] and violat[ing] the very notion of respect for the human dignity of its members'.⁵⁰ The Court said that such 'discriminatory treatment attained a level of severity which amounted to degrading treatment' and was consequently a violation of article 3.⁵¹

Meaning of 'discrimination'

Discrimination means treating persons in analogous situations differently without an objective and reasonable justification.⁵² The requirement of an 'analogous position' does not mean that the situations must be identical, but they must be 'relevantly similar'.⁵³ Thus, not every difference in treatment constitutes a violation of article 14. The justification provided to account for a distinction must be assessed with regard to principles that normally prevail in democratic societies. In addition to pursuing a legitimate aim, a difference in treatment will not be discriminatory to the extent that there is a 'reasonable relationship of proportionality between the means employed and the aim sought to be realised'.⁵⁴

The other important provision concerning discrimination in the law of the Convention is found in article 1(1) of Protocol No. 12. Article 14 of the Convention and the text in Protocol No. 12 are very similar, although the latter is broader in scope, covering rights that may not be addressed within the Convention and its Protocols. The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 12 states that '[t]he meaning of the term "discrimination" in Article 1 is intended to be identical to that in Article 14 of the Convention',⁵⁵ something confirmed in the case law.⁵⁶ The plenary European Court adopted an opinion on the draft text of Protocol No. 12 that includes a discussion of the concept of discrimination and that is therefore also germane to the interpretation of article 14 of the Convention:

As regards the substantive content of the Protocol, it notes, in relation to Article 1, that the draft Explanatory Report (see paragraph 18) refers to the notion of discrimination as consistently

⁵⁰ Cyprus v. Turkey [GC], no. 25781/94, § 309, ECHR 2001-IV.

⁵¹ Ibid., § 310.

⁵² D.H. and Others v. the Czech Republic [GC], no. 57325/00, § 75, ECHR 2007-IV; Willis v. the United Kingdom, no. 36042/97, § 48, ECHR 2002-IV; Okpiz v. Germany, no. 59140/00, § 33, 25 October 2005; National & Provincial Building Society, Leeds Permanent Building Society and Yorkshire Building Society v. the United Kingdom, 23 October 1997, § 88, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-VII; Timishev v. Russia, nos 55762/00 and 55974/00, § 56, ECHR 2005-XII; Nachova and Others v. Bulgaria [GC], nos 43577/98 and 43579/98, § 145, ECHR 2005-VII; Sejdić and Finci v. Bosnia and Herzegovina [GC], nos 27996/06 and 34836/06, § 42, ECHR 2009.

⁵³ Clift v. the United Kingdom, no. 7205/07, § 66, 13 July 2010.

⁵⁴ Petrovic v. Austria, 27 March 1998, § 30, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-II; Lithgow and Others v. the United Kingdom, 8 July 1986, § 177, Series A no. 102; Sejdić and Finci v. Bosnia and Herzegovina [GC], nos 27996/06 and 34836/06, § 42, ECHR 2009; Rejeva v. Latvia [GC], no. 55707/00, § 81, ECHR 2009; Sec and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], nos 65731/01 and 65900/01, § 51, ECHR 2006-VI.

⁵⁵ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 12, para. 18.

⁵⁶ Sejdić and Finci v. Bosnia and Herzegovina [GC], nos 27996/06 and 34836/06, § 55, ECHR 2009; Šimčić v. Bosnia and Herzegovina (dec.), no. 51552/10, § 31, 10 April 2012; Makrouf and Damjanović v. Bosnia and Herzegovina [GC], nos 2312/08 and 34179/08, § 81, ECHR 2013 (extracts).

interpreted in the case-law of the Court, namely that a difference of treatment is discriminatory if it has no objective and reasonable justification, that is if it does not pursue a legitimate aim or if there is not a reasonable relationship of proportionality between the means employed and the aim sought to be realised. As the Court put it in the Belgian Linguistic case, 'the competent national authorities are frequently confronted with situations and problems which, on account of differences inherent therein, call for different legal solutions' (judgment of 23 July 1968, Series A no. 6, p. 34, § 10). This is further reflected, consistently with the subsidiary character of the Convention system, in the margin of appreciation accorded to the national authorities in assessing whether and to what extent differences in otherwise similar situations justify a difference of treatment in law (see, among other authorities, Rasmussen v. Denmark, judgment of 28 November 1984, Series A no. 87, p. 15, § 40).⁵⁷

The French text of article 14 of the Convention employs a 'very general wording' (sans distinction aucune), but the Court has said that if interpreted literally this could generate 'absurd results' in that it appears to prohibit all distinctions. The Court warned this could lead to a violation of 'every one of the many legal or administrative provisions which do not secure to everyone complete equality of treatment in the enjoyment of the rights and freedoms recognised'. It noted that national authorities must frequently deal with situations and problems that 'call for different legal solutions; moreover, certain legal inequalities tend only to correct factual inequalities'. The Court said that the French text must be read in light of the 'more restrictive text' of the English version ('without discrimination').⁵⁸

Discrimination is present if a person or group is treated less favourably than another, without justification, even if the Convention does not require such favourable treatment.⁵⁹ Differential treatment that appears to be founded on an objective assessment of essentially different factual circumstances that strike a fair balance between protection of the interests of the community and respect for the rights and freedoms safeguarded by the Convention are not contrary to article 14.⁶⁰ The applicant must be a victim of differential treatment based upon personal features. The Court declared manifestly unfounded an allegation that a person had been sentenced for fraud more severely than others because the victims of his crime were Jewish.⁶¹

The notion of proportionality is central to the Court's analysis in evaluating whether a distinction is to be deemed discriminatory and therefore contrary to article 14. An important factor in the assessment is whether there is a possibility of alternative means for achieving the same end.⁶² In Sejdić and Finci, the Grand Chamber held that deprivation of the right to be a candidate for president to persons from ethnic groups other than the Serbs, Croats, and Bosniaks who were comprised in the power-sharing regime of the Dayton Agreement did not comply with the requirements of reasonableness

⁵⁷ Opinion of the European Court of Human Rights on draft Protocol No. 12 adopted at the plenary administrative session of the Court on 6 December 1999, para. 5.

⁵⁸ Case 'relating to certain aspects of the laws on the use of languages in education in Belgium' (merits), 23 July 1968, p. 31, § 10, Series A no. 6. See also National Union of Belgian Police v. Belgium, 27 October 1975, § 46, Series A no. 19.

⁵⁹ Abdulaziz, Cabales, and Balkandali v. the United Kingdom, 28 May 1985, § 82, Series A no. 94.

⁶⁰ Zarb Adami v. Malta, no. 17209/02, § 73, ECHR 2006-VIII; G.M.B. and K.M. v. Switzerland (dec.), no. 36797/97, 27 September 2001.

⁶¹ Gruber v. Germany (dec.), no. 45198/04, 20 November 2007.

⁶² Glor v. Switzerland, no. 13444/04, § 94, 30 April 2009. Cited with approval in Sejdić and Finci v. Bosnia and Herzegovina [GC], nos 27996/06 and 34836/06, § 48, ECHR 2009.

and proportionality. It said that although 'the time may still not be ripe for a political system which would be a simple reflection of majority rule, there exist mechanisms of power-sharing which do not automatically lead to the total exclusion of representatives of the other communities'.⁶³ For this reason, the measure lacked an 'objective and reasonable justification'.⁶⁴ In Andrejeva, where the applicant was a stateless person resident in Latvia, and where pensions for labour performed outside the country were only payable to citizens, the government's exclusion of non-citizens was deemed not proportionate.⁶⁵

It is unnecessary to establish that discrimination is intentional for there to be a breach of article 14. It may be the consequence of a general policy or a measure that has disproportionately prejudicial effects on a particular group even in the absence of evidence that the group has been targeted.⁶⁶ When the discrimination is indirect rather than intentional, and it is the result of a practice rather than a discriminatory legislative provision, the Court does not distinguish between proportionality and a legitimate aim. In a Maltese case, statistics showed that women and men were not called for jury duty in equal numbers. The government argued that a legislative provision allowed an exemption from jury duty because the person had to take care of a family, and the Court acknowledged 'more women than men could successfully rely on such a provision'. The government also said that defence lawyers would have a tendency to challenge female jurors 'for cultural reasons'.⁶⁷ These arguments did not impress the Court as they failed to indicate the disproportion of men and women in the pool of jurors.⁶⁸

Differential treatment of groups directed at correction of 'factual inequalities' between them is not prohibited discrimination.⁶⁹ In certain circumstances, 'a failure to attempt to correct inequality through different treatment may in itself give rise to a breach'.⁷⁰ Such measures are sometimes called 'positive discrimination' or 'affirmative action', although the United Nations Committee for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination has said that the term is inappropriate and urged that the phenomenon be labelled 'special measures'.⁷¹ Special measures to deal with inequalities are authorized by international conventions dealing with discrimination. The International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination permits such measures 'taken for the sole purpose of securing adequate advancement of certain racial or ethnic groups or individuals', provided

⁶³ Sejdić and Finci v. Bosnia and Herzegovina [GC], nos 27996/06 and 34836/06, § 48, ECHR 2009.

⁶⁴ Ibid., § 50.

⁶⁵ Andrejeva v. Latvia [GC], no. 55707/00, §§ 88–89, ECHR 2009.

⁶⁶ D.H. and Others v. the Czech Republic [GC], no. 57325/00, § 75, ECHR 2007-IV; Hugh Jordan v. the United Kingdom, no. 24746/94, § 154, ECHR 2001-III (extracts); Hoogendijk v. the Netherlands (dec.), no. 58461/00, 6 January 2005.

⁶⁷ Zarb Adami v. Malta, no. 17209/02, § 81, ECHR 2006-VIII.

⁶⁸ Ibid., §§ 82–83.

⁶⁹ D.H. and Others v. the Czech Republic [GC], no. 57325/00, § 175, ECHR 2007-IV; Kurić and Others v. Slovenia [GC], no. 26828/06, § 388, ECHR 2012 (extracts); Case 'relating to certain aspects of the laws on the use of languages in education in Belgium' v. Belgium (merits), 23 July 1968, p. 34, § 10, Series A no. 6; Thlimmenos v. Greece [GC], no. 34369/97, § 44, ECHR 2000-IV; Stec and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 65731/01, § 51, ECHR 2006-VI; Sejdić and Finci v. Bosnia and Herzegovina [GC], nos 27996/06 and 34836/06, § 44, ECHR 2009.

⁷⁰ Case 'relating to certain aspects of the laws on the use of languages in education in Belgium' v. Belgium (merits), 23 July 1968, p. 34, § 10, Series A no. 6; Thlimmenos v. Greece [GC], no. 34369/97, § 44, ECHR 2000-IV; Religionsgemeinschaft der Zeugen Jehovas and Others v. Austria, no. 40825/98, § 96, 31 July 2008; Thlimmenos v. Greece [GC], no. 34369/97, § 44, ECHR 2000-IV.

⁷¹ The meaning and scope of special measures in the International Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, General Recommendation No. 32, UN Doc. CERD/C/GC/32, para. 14.

they do not 'lead to the maintenance of separate rights for different racial groups and that they shall not be continued after the objectives for which they were taken have been achieved'.⁷² The Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women permits 'temporary special measures aimed at accelerating de facto equality between men and women'.⁷³ Although not explicitly permitted by article 14, special measures are undoubtedly consistent with the Convention.

Dealing with differences in pensionable ages between men and women in the United Kingdom, the Grand Chamber noted that these were introduced in 1940, and were intended to address a situation of financial inequality and hardship arising out of the situation of women who traditionally were not paid for their role in caring for the family in the home rather than remunerated employment in the workplace. 'At their origin, therefore, the differential pensionable ages were intended to correct "factual inequalities" between men and women and appear therefore to have been objectively justified under Article 14 of the Convention', said the Court.⁷⁴ Such differences continued to be justified until social conditions had evolved to the point where women were no longer victims of such prejudice because their working lives outside the home were shorter than those of men. The Court noted that '[t]his change, must, by its very nature, have been gradual, and it would be difficult or impossible to pinpoint any particular moment when the unfairness to men caused by differential pensionable ages began to outweigh the need to correct the disadvantaged position of women'.⁷⁵

A margin of appreciation is granted to States in determining whether and to what extent different treatment is justified with respect to otherwise similar circumstances. The extent of the margin of appreciation varies depending on the background, circumstances, and subject-matter.⁷⁶ This will also evolve over time because of the need to consider changing conditions and respond to an emerging consensus among the Member States of the Council of Europe.⁷⁷ The presence or absence of a common denominator within the Member States is relevant in assessing the extent of the margin of appreciation.⁷⁸

One of the important factors in determining the extent of this margin relates to the rights that are at issue. When measures involving social and economic policy are involved, the margin is described as being 'wide'.⁷⁹ The Court has explained that '[b]ecause of their

⁷² International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, (1966) 660 UNTS 195, art. 1(4).

⁷³ Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, (1980) 1249 UNTS 13, art. 4(1).

⁷⁴ Stec and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], nos 65731/01 and 65900/01, § 61, ECHR 2006-VI.

⁷⁵ Ibid., § 62, ECHR 2006-VI.

⁷⁶ Rasmussen v. Denmark, 28 November 1984, § 40, Series A no. 87; Inze v. Austria, 28 October 1987, § 41, Series A no. 126; Sejdić and Finci v. Bosnia and Herzegovina [GC], nos 27996/06 and 34836/06, § 42, ECHR 2009; Rejeva v. Latvia [GC], no. 55707/00, § 82, ECHR 2009; Stec and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], nos 65731/01 and 65900/01, §§ 51–52, ECHR 2006-VI; Van Raalte v. the Netherlands, 21 February 1997, § 39, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-I; Zarb Adami v. Malta, no. 17209/02, § 74, ECHR 2006-VIII; Gaygusuz v. Austria, 16 September 1996, § 42, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-IV; Petrovic v. Austria, 27 March 1998, § 38, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-II; Inze v. Austria, 28 October 1987, § 41, Series A no. 126.

⁷⁷ Zarb Adami v. Malta, no. 17209/02, § 74, ECHR 2006-VIII; Stafford v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 46295/99, § 68, ECHR 2002-IV; Ünal Tekeli v. Turkey, no. 29865/96, § 54, ECHR 2004-X (extracts).

⁷⁸ Glor v. Switzerland, no. 13444/04, § 75, ECHR 2009.

⁷⁹ James and Others v. the United Kingdom, 21 February 1986, § 46, Series A no. 98; National & Provincial Building Society, Leeds Permanent Building Society, and Yorkshire Building Society v. the United Kingdom, 23 October 1997, § 80, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-VII.

direct knowledge of their society and its needs, the national authorities are in principle better placed than the international judge to appreciate what is in the public interest on social or economic grounds, and the Court will generally respect the legislature's policy choice unless it is "manifestly without reasonable foundation".⁸⁰ In a case dealing with pension schemes, the Court said that 'the precise timing and means of putting right the inequality were not so manifestly unreasonable as to exceed the wide margin of appreciation allowed it in such a field'.⁸¹

Indirect discrimination

The term 'indirect discrimination' is often used to denote policies or measures that are ostensibly neutral but that have disproportionately prejudicial effects on individuals or a group protected by article 14. The European Union's Racial Equality Directive defines it as follows: '[I]ndirect discrimination shall be taken to occur where an apparently neutral provision, criterion or practice would put persons of a racial or ethnic origin at a particular disadvantage compared with other persons, unless that provision, criterion or practice is objectively justified by a legitimate aim and the means of achieving that aim are appropriate and necessary'.⁸²

Sometimes, references to 'indirect discrimination' include the notion that it is not 'targeted at the group'⁸³ or that it does not require a discriminatory intent.⁸⁴ This is also described sometimes as 'effects discrimination'. A confusion in concepts may result. In some cases, facially neutral measures with prejudicial effects on groups can well have been motivated by discriminatory intentions. Nevertheless, proof of such intent may be very difficult because the apparent neutrality of the measure or policy effectively conceals the intent. The same problem does not arise when discrimination is direct. Discrimination need not necessarily result from legislation, but may also be a consequence of a 'de facto situation'.⁸⁵

The first case of indirect discrimination considered by the Court concerned a Jehovah's Witness who was denied appointment as a chartered accountant on the ground that he had previously been convicted of insubordination in the armed forces because of his anti-militarist beliefs. The Court noted that 'such difference of treatment does not generally come within the scope of Article 14 in so far as it relates to access to a particular profession, the right to freedom of profession not being guaranteed by the Convention'.⁸⁶ But the applicant's claim was not about the distinction made by the professional body regarding persons with criminal convictions. Rather, it was because 'in the application of the relevant law no distinction is made between persons convicted of offences committed exclusively because of their religious beliefs and persons convicted of other offences'.⁸⁷

⁸⁰ James and Others v. the United Kingdom, 21 February 1986, § 46, Series A no. 98; National & Provincial Building Society, Leeds Permanent Building Society, and Yorkshire Building Society v. the United Kingdom, 23 October 1997, § 80, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-VII.

⁸¹ Stec and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], nos 65731/01 and 65900/01, § 66, ECHR 2006-VI.

⁸² Racial Equality Directive 2000/43/EC, art. 2.

⁸³ D.H. and Others v. the Czech Republic [GC], no. 57325/00, § 175, ECHR 2007-IV; Hoogendijk v. the Netherlands (dec.), no. 58461/00, 6 January 2005; Zarb Adami v. Malta, no. 17209/02, § 81, ECHR 2006-VIII; McShane v. the United Kingdom, no. 43290/98, § 135, 28 May 2002.

⁸⁴ D.H. and Others v. the Czech Republic [GC], no. 57325/00, § 194, ECHR 2007-IV.

⁸⁵ Zarb Adami v. Malta, no. 17209/02, § 76, ECHR 2006-VIII.

⁸⁶ Thlimmenos v. Greece [GC], no. 34369/97, § 41, ECHR 2000-IV. Also Bigaeva v. Greece, no. 26713/05, § 39, 28 May 2009.

⁸⁷ Thlimmenos v. Greece [GC], no. 34369/97, § 42, ECHR 2000-IV.

Finding that there had been a violation of article 14 in conjunction with article 9, the Grand Chamber said that the relevant legislation failed 'to introduce appropriate exceptions to the rule barring persons convicted of a serious crime from the profession of chartered accountants'.⁸⁸

Yet another example, this one based on the category of disability which is not explicitly enumerated in article 14, concerns a diabetic who was alleged to be a victim of indirect or effects discrimination. The applicant was not eligible for military service, despite his expressed wish to do so, because of his medical problems. At the same time, he was ineligible for alternative civil service because he was not a conscientious objector. As a result, he was subject to a tax levied upon those exempted from military service. The Court held that article 14 had been violated because the State had failed to respond to the individual circumstances of the applicant by, for example, allowing him to fill less strenuous posts within the military.⁸⁹

The Court's conclusions in these cases seems inspired by a related concept known as 'reasonable accommodation' that is often part of the discussion about indirect discrimination. Noting that 'reasonable accommodation' is a familiar notion in various national legal systems, the Court has considered the issue but declined to apply it to the Convention.⁹⁰ In a case involving religious observance, three dissenting judges held that a 'reasonable accommodation' was a way of achieving proportionality, in that 'for a measure to be proportionate, the authorities, when choosing between several possible means of achieving the legitimate aim pursued, must opt for the measure that is least restrictive of rights and freedoms'.⁹¹

An example of indirect discrimination is provided by a case where Roma children were assigned to special schools on the basis of tests that appeared objective. The Grand Chamber said there was a danger that the tests were biased. Consequently, 'the results were not analysed in the light of the particularities and special characteristics of the Roma children who sat them'. The Grand Chamber said that as a result 'the tests in question cannot serve as justification for the impugned difference in treatment'.⁹² The Grand Chamber found this to be a form of indirect discrimination. It held there was a violation of article 14 taken in conjunction with article 2 of Protocol No. 1.⁹³ The Grand Chamber's conclusion that this was 'indirect discrimination' is not entirely convincing. If the tests given to Roma children were not properly interpreted and misapplied, it is a problem of direct and not indirect discrimination. Genuine indirect discrimination would result from ostensibly fair and accurate tests that nevertheless impacted negatively on the education of Roma children.

Proof of discrimination

The general rule set out in the case law of the European Court of Human Rights is that proof must be made 'beyond reasonable doubt'.⁹⁴ However, this expression, while very ⁸⁸ Ibid., § 48.

⁸⁹ Glor v. Switzerland, no. 13444/04, §§ 77–98, ECHR 2009.

⁹⁰ Eweida and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 48420/10, §§ 48, 49, 78, ECHR 2013 (extracts).

⁹¹ Francesco Sessa v. Italy, no. 28790/08, Joint Dissenting Opinion of Judges Tulkens, Popović, and Keller, §§ 9–10, ECHR 2012 (excerpts).

⁹² D.H. and Others v. the Czech Republic [GC], no. 57325/00, § 201, ECHR 2007-IV.

⁹³ Ibid., § 210.

⁹⁴ Ayaz v. Turkey, no. 25657/94, § 282, ECHR 2001.

familiar in criminal proceedings, especially those of the common law tradition, is not used in quite the same sense by the European Court, whose role is not to rule on guilt or innocence or on civil liability, but rather on the responsibility of States Parties under the Convention.⁹⁵ In litigation concerning discrimination, there are no procedural barriers to the admissibility of evidence or predetermined formulae for its assessment. The Court adopts the conclusions that are, in its view, supported by the free evaluation of all evidence, including such inferences as may flow from the facts and the parties' submissions. According to its established case-law, proof may follow from the coexistence of sufficiently strong, clear and concordant inferences or of similar unrebutted presumptions of fact. Moreover, the level of persuasion necessary for reaching a particular conclusion and, in this connection, the distribution of the burden of proof are intrinsically linked to the specificity of the facts, the nature of the allegation made and the Convention right at stake.⁹⁶

There is a shifting burden of proof in the area of discrimination. The general principle affirmanti incumbit probatio (he or she who alleges something must prove that allegation) is therefore not applied in a rigorous manner.⁹⁷ The initial burden, of course, falls upon the applicant to establish that there is a difference in treatment. Once this has been done, the burden moves to the government, where the responsibility is to demonstrate that the measure in question was justified.⁹⁸ This approach seems straightforward enough when legislation or a judicial decision and their effects are being considered. However, discrimination cases may concern allegations of ill-treatment that result from conduct of the authorities motivated by prohibited grounds. Then, the applicant must do something more than establish 'differential treatment' and provide some prima facie demonstration of the discriminatory conduct of the authorities. If the events in contention lie wholly, or in large part, within the exclusive knowledge of the authorities, for example when a person dies in custody, the burden of proof may shift to the authorities to provide a satisfactory and convincing explanation.⁹⁹ Although the shifting of the burden of proof in this way may be more suited to violations of articles 2 and 3, the Grand Chamber has not ruled out the possibility that 'in certain cases of alleged discrimination it may require the respondent Government to disprove an arguable allegation of discrimination and—if they fail to do so—find a violation of Article 14 of the Convention on that basis'.¹⁰⁰

Nevertheless, in a case where it was alleged that the authorities had failed to carry out an effective investigation into the supposedly racist motive for a killing, the Grand Chamber reversed the findings of the Chamber and rejected the idea of a shift in the burden of proof. The applicants had explained that a law enforcement official had discharged bursts of automatic fire in a populated area, disregarding public safety. Absent any rational explanation for this, they said that 'racist hatred . . . was the only plausible explanation and ⁹⁵ Nachova and Others v. Bulgaria [GC], nos 43577/98 and 43579/98, § 147, ECHR 2005-VII.

⁹⁶ D.H. and Others v. the Czech Republic [GC], no. 57325/00, § 178, ECHR 2007-IV; Nachova and Others v. Bulgaria [GC], nos 43577/98 and 43579/98, § 147, ECHR 2005-VII.

⁹⁷ Aktaş v. Turkey, no. 24351/94, § 272, ECHR 2003-V (extracts).

⁹⁸ Oršuš and Others v. Croatia [GC], no. 15766/03, § 150, ECHR 2010; Chassagnou and Others v. France [GC], nos 25088/94, 28331/95, and 28443/95, §§ 91–92, ECHR 1999-III; Timishev v. Russia, nos 55762/00 and 55974/00, § 57, ECHR 2005-XII; D.H. and Others v. the Czech Republic [GC], no. 57325/00, § 177, ECHR 2007-IV; Rejeva v. Latvia [GC], no. 55707/00, § 84, ECHR 2009.

⁹⁹ Salman v. Turkey [GC], no. 21986/93, § 100, ECHR 2000-VII.

¹⁰⁰ Nachova and Others v. Bulgaria [GC], nos 43577/98 and 43579/98, § 157, ECHR 2005-VII.

that he would not have acted in that manner in a non-Roma neighbourhood'.¹⁰¹ The Grand Chamber did not find this to be persuasive. Nor was it convinced by the suggestion that the attitude of the military police was influenced by their knowledge of the Roma origin of the victims, something it described as speculative. In the same way, evidence of a racial slur uttered in connection with a violent act should have prompted the authorities to verify the statement but was 'in itself an insufficient basis for concluding that the respondent State is liable for a racist killing'.¹⁰² The Grand Chamber explained that reversing the burden in such a case would 'amount to requiring the respondent Government to prove the absence of a particular subjective attitude on the part of the person concerned'.¹⁰³

In what appears to be the only finding of a violation of article 14 taken together with article 13, the applicant complained that he was deprived of an adequate remedy in a case of ill-treatment because he was of Roma origin, something that was known to the police officers. He said that while in the police station, 'his ethnic origin was openly and repeatedly referred to by the investigating authorities as a factor militating against his complaint of police abuse'. Noting that racial violence 'is a particular affront to human dignity and, in view of its perilous consequences, requires from the authorities special vigilance and a vigorous reaction', the Court said that 'when investigating violent incidents, State authorities have the additional duty to take all reasonable steps to unmask any racist motive and to establish whether or not ethnic hatred or prejudice may have played a role in the events'.¹⁰⁴ The Court said that the applicant did not refer to any particular facts substantiating the claim that the violence he sustained was racially motivated (although it had observed, only a few paragraphs earlier, that the applicant had indicated that his ethnic origin had in fact been regularly referred to by investigating authorities). Instead, the Court said, 'he claimed that his allegation should be evaluated within the context of documented and repeated failure by the Romanian authorities to remedy instances of anti-Roma violence and to provide redress for discrimination'.¹⁰⁵ The Court referred to official programmes directed at eradicating anti-Roma conduct that should have been well known to the investigating authorities. Yet, '[n]ot only was there no attempt on the part of the prosecutors to verify the behaviour of the policemen involved in the violence, ascertaining, for instance, whether they had been involved in the past in similar incidents or whether they had been accused of displaying anti-Roma sentiment, but the prosecutors made tendentious remarks in relation to the applicant's Roma origin throughout the investigation'.¹⁰⁶ This, it said, disclosed 'a general discriminatory attitude of the authorities, which reinforced the applicant's belief that any remedy in his case was purely illusory'.¹⁰⁷ The Court concluded that 'the failure of the law enforcement agents to investigate possible racial motives in the applicant's ill-treatment combined with their attitude during the investigation constitutes a discrimination with regard to the applicant's rights contrary to Article 14'.¹⁰⁸

¹⁰¹ Ibid., § 149.

¹⁰² Ibid., §§ 152–153.

¹⁰³ Ibid.

¹⁰⁴ Cobzaru v. Romania, no. 48254/99, §§ 86–89, 26 July 2007.

¹⁰⁵ Ibid., § 94.

¹⁰⁶ Ibid., § 98.

¹⁰⁷ Ibid.

¹⁰⁸ Ibid., § 100.

private landlords.¹²⁸ Dealing with a prohibition on employment of former Soviet intelligence officers in both the public and private sectors, the Court said this lacked proportionality. In effect, the differential treatment depended upon whether or not the person had worked for the KGB.¹²⁹ When a French magazine complained of discrimination because it was prosecuted for publishing photos on the basis of legislation that applied to print but not audio-visual media, the Court dismissed the complaint because it said that the two types of media were not similarly situated.¹³⁰

On occasion, the case law has referred to 'suspect grounds',¹³¹ suggesting some sort of hierarchy within the grounds prohibited by article 14. In one case, the court referred to 'suspect categories', offering sex, sexual orientation, ethnic origin, and nationality as examples.¹³² In another, it spoke of 'suspect grounds of race and ethnicity'.¹³³ One judge spoke of 'national origin' as a 'suspect class'.¹³⁴ This may be more a reference to the issue of proportionality, in the sense that certain grounds such as race and sex are almost inherently disproportionate. There is isolated support for the proposition that all of the enumerated categories in article 14 are 'suspect', an observation that seems to deprive the notion of any real utility.¹³⁵ Even when the Court has not spoken of 'suspect grounds' it has sometimes, in the proportionality analysis, suggested that certain forms of distinction require 'very weighty reasons' or 'particularly serious and weighty reasons' before they may be justifiable. The Court has said this about discrimination based upon birth outside of marriage,¹³⁶ nationality,¹³⁷ sex,¹³⁸ sexual orientation,¹³⁹

¹²⁸ Larkos v. Cyprus [GC], no. 29515/95, § 58, ECHR 1999-I.

¹²⁹ Sidabras and Džiautas v. Lithuania, nos 55480/00 and 59330/00, §§ 41, 56–62, ECHR 2004-VIII. But see the objections to the application of article 14 in the three concurring or dissenting opinions in this case. Sidabras and Džiautas was followed in Rainys and Gasparavičius v. Lithuania, nos 70665/01 and 74345/01, § 40, 7 April 2005.

¹³⁰ Société de conception de presse et d'édition and Ponson v. France, no. 26935/05, § 80, 5 March 2009. Also Hachette Filipacchi Presse Automobile and Dupuy v. France, no. 13353/05, § 65, 5 March 2009.

¹³¹ Clift v. the United Kingdom, no. 7205/07, § 72, 13 July 2010.

¹³² Eveida and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 48420/10, § 71, ECHR 2013 (extracts).

¹³³ Seydić and Finci v. Bosnia and Herzegovina [GC], nos 27996/06 and 34836/06, § 37, ECHR 2009.

¹³⁴ Ždanoka v. Latvia [GC], no. 58278/00, Dissenting Opinion of Judge Zupančić, ECHR 2006-IV.

¹³⁵ Oriš and Others v. Croatia, no. 15766/03, § Joint Partly Dissenting Opinion of Judges Jungwiert, Vajić, Kovler, Gyulumyan, Jaeger, Myjer, Berro-Lefèvre, and Vučinić, 17 July 2008; Burden v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 13378/05, Dissenting Opinion of Judge Zupančić, ECHR 2008.

¹³⁶ Fabris v. France [GC], no. 16574/08, § 59, ECHR 2015 (extracts); Camp and Bourimi v. the Netherlands, no. 28369/95, § 38, ECHR 2000-X; Mazurek v. France, no. 34406/97, § 49, ECHR 2000-II; Inze v. Austria, 28 October 1987, § 41, Series A no. 126; Sahin v. Germany, no. 30943/96, § 94, 11 October 2001; Sommerfeld v. Germany [GC], no. 31871/96, § 93, ECHR 2003-VIII (extracts).

¹³⁷ Gaygusuz v. Austria, 16 September 1996, § 42, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-IV; Rejeva v. Latvia [GC], no. 55707/00, § 87, ECHR 2009; Koua Poirrez v. France, no. 40892/98, § 46, ECHR 2003-X; Bab v. the United Kingdom, no. 56328/07, § 37, ECHR 2011.

¹³⁸ Abdulaziz, Cabales, and Balkandali v. the United Kingdom, 28 May 1985, § 78, Series A no. 94; Bab v. the United Kingdom, no. 56328/07, § 84, ECHR 2011; Ünal Tekeli v. Turkey, no. 29865/96, § 53, ECHR 2004-X (extracts); See and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], nos 65731/01 and 65900/01, § 52, ECHR 2006-VI; Van Raalte v. the Netherlands, 21 February 1997, § 39, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-I; Schuler-Zraggen v. Switzerland, 24 June 1993, § 67, Series A no. 263; Burghartz v. Switzerland, 22 February 1994, § 27, Series A no. 280-B; Karlheinz Schmidt v. Germany, 18 July 1994, § 24, Series A no. 291-B; Petrovic v. Austria, 27 March 1998, § 37, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-II; Zarb Adami v. Malta, no. 17209/02, § 80, ECHR 2006-VIII; Willis v. the United Kingdom, no. 36042/97, § 39, ECHR 2002-IV; Rangelov v. Germany, no. 5123/07, § 102, 22 March 2012.

¹³⁹ Vallianatos and Others v. Greece [GC], no. 29381/09 and 32684/09, § 76, ECHR 2013; Smith and Grady v. the United Kingdom, nos 33985/96 and 33986/96, § 90, ECHR 1999-VI; Karner v. Austria, no. 40016/98, §§ 37 and 42, ECHR 2003-IX; X and Others v. Austria [GC], no. 19010/07, § 99, ECHR 2013.

and ethnic origin.¹⁴⁰ The references to 'non-suspect' or 'less-suspect' categories are very rare. But in Carson v. The United Kingdom, the Court explained that 'the individual does not require the same high level of protection against differences in treatment based on [residence] as is needed in relation to differences based on an inherent characteristic, such as gender or racial or ethnic origin'.¹⁴¹ In cases before the Court, the United Kingdom has argued that the alleged discrimination did not concern 'suspect grounds' such as sex or race, suggesting that this would justify a wide margin of appreciation.¹⁴²

It is unlikely that any distinction on racial or ethnic origin could ever be deemed proportionate. For example, the Court has said that 'no difference in treatment which is based exclusively or to a decisive extent on a person's ethnic origin is capable of being objectively justified in a contemporary democratic society built on the principles of pluralism and respect for different cultures'.¹⁴³ The Court will be very demanding with respect to a margin of appreciation, and is likely to insist on a demonstration that the impugned measure is not only pursuing a legitimate aim but also that it is necessary. On the other hand, distinctions based on age or disability are common and accepted. This does not mean, of course, that discrimination based upon these categories cannot take place, but the exercise in assessing proportionality may not be as straightforward.

Sex

The term 'sex', used in the equality rights provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and in many subsequent instruments, including article 14 of the European Convention on Human Rights, has gradually been supplanted by 'gender'. Early cases referred to 'gender' but only with respect to gender reassignment, rather than discrimination as such.¹⁴⁴ The terminology began to change in the 1990s. In recent judgments, the Court has spoken of discrimination on the basis of 'gender' when it was quite clearly referring to discrimination attributable to the sex of the applicants.¹⁴⁵

As the discussion of the travaux préparatoires at the beginning of this chapter indicates, sex did not even appear in the original list of prohibited grounds considered by the Consultative Assembly. The Court has said that 'gender equality' is one of the 'key principles underlying the Convention',¹⁴⁶ but while that may be the contemporary interpretation the drafting history shows that it was far from the minds of most of those who negotiated it. The Council of Europe in 1949 and 1950 contrasts rather markedly

¹⁴⁰ Orisud and Others v. Croatia [GC], no. 15766/03, § 149, ECHR 2010.

¹⁴¹ Carson and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 42184/05, § 80, 4 November 2008.

¹⁴² Hode and Abdi v. the United Kingdom, no. 22341/09, § 51, 6 November 2012; Clift v. The United Kingdom, no. 7205/07, § 72, 13 July 2010.

¹⁴³ D.H. and Others v. the Czech Republic [GC], no. 57325/00, § 176, ECHR 2007-IV; Timishev v. Russia, nos 55762/00 and 55974/00, § 58, ECHR 2005-XII.

¹⁴⁴ Sheffield and Horsham v. the United Kingdom, 30 July 1998, § 12, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-V; Cossey v. the United Kingdom, 27 September 1990, § 11, Series A no. 184; Rees v. the United Kingdom, no. 9532/81, Commission decision of 15 March 1983, DR 36, p. 78.

¹⁴⁵ Opuz v. Turkey, no. 33401/02, § 177, ECHR 2009; Carson and Others v. The United Kingdom, no. 42184/05, § 80, 4 November 2008; Leyla Şahin v. Turkey, no. 44774/98, § 107, 29 June 2004; Leyla Şahin v. Turkey [GC], no. 44774/98, § 115, ECHR 2005-XI; Smith and Grady v. the United Kingdom, nos 33985/96 and 33986/96, § 81, 102, ECHR 1999-VI; Van Raalte v. the Netherlands, 21 February 1997, § 40, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-I.

¹⁴⁶ Şahin v. Turkey, no. 44774/98, § 107, 29 June 2004; Leyla Şahin v. Turkey [GC], no. 44774/98, § 115, ECHR 2005-XI.

private landlords.¹²⁸ Dealing with a prohibition on employment of former Soviet intelligence officers in both the public and private sectors, the Court said this lacked proportionality. In effect, the differential treatment depended upon whether or not the person had worked for the KGB.¹²⁹ When a French magazine complained of discrimination because it was prosecuted for publishing photos on the basis of legislation that applied to print but not audio-visual media, the Court dismissed the complaint because it said that the two types of media were not similarly situated.¹³⁰

On occasion, the case law has referred to 'suspect grounds',¹³¹ suggesting some sort of hierarchy within the grounds prohibited by article 14. In one case, the court referred to 'suspect categories', offering sex, sexual orientation, ethnic origin, and nationality as examples.¹³² In another, it spoke of 'suspect grounds of race and ethnicity'.¹³³ One judge spoke of 'national origin' as a 'suspect class'.¹³⁴ This may be more a reference to the issue of proportionality, in the sense that certain grounds such as race and sex are almost inherently disproportionate. There is isolated support for the proposition that all of the enumerated categories in article 14 are 'suspect', an observation that seems to deprive the notion of any real utility.¹³⁵ Even when the Court has not spoken of 'suspect grounds' it has sometimes, in the proportionality analysis, suggested that certain forms of distinction require 'very weighty reasons' or 'particularly serious and weighty reasons' before they may be justifiable. The Court has said this about discrimination based upon birth outside of marriage,¹³⁶ nationality,¹³⁷ sex,¹³⁸ sexual orientation,¹³⁹

¹²⁸ Larkos v. Cyprus [GC], no. 29515/95, § 58, ECHR 1999-I.

¹²⁹ Sidabras and Džiautas v. Lithuania, nos 55480/00 and 59330/00, §§ 41, 56–62, ECHR 2004-VIII. But see the objections to the application of article 14 in the three concurring or dissenting opinions in this case. Sidabras and Džiautas was followed in Rainys and Gasparavičius v. Lithuania, nos 70665/01 and 74345/01, § 40, 7 April 2005.

¹³⁰ Société de conception de presse et d'édition and Ponson v. France, no. 26935/05, § 80, 5 March 2009. Also Hachette Filipacchi Presse Automobile and Dupuy v. France, no. 13353/05, § 65, 5 March 2009.

¹³¹ Clift v. the United Kingdom, no. 7205/07, § 72, 13 July 2010.

¹³² Eweida and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 48420/10, § 71, ECHR 2013 (extracts).

¹³³ Sepčić and Finci v. Bosnia and Herzegovina [GC], nos 27996/06 and 34836/06, § 37, ECHR 2009.

¹³⁴ Ždanoka v. Latvia [GC], no. 58278/00, Dissenting Opinion of Judge Zupančić, ECHR 2006-IV.

¹³⁵ Oršuš and Others v. Croatia, no. 15766/03, § Joint Partly Dissenting Opinion of Judges Jungwiert, Vajić, Kovler, Gyulumyan, Jaeger, Myjer, Berro-Lefèvre, and Vučinić, 17 July 2008; Burden v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 13378/05, Dissenting Opinion of Judge Zupančić, ECHR 2008.

¹³⁶ Fabris v. France [GC], no. 16574/08, § 59, ECHR 2015 (extracts); Camp and Bourimi v. the Netherlands, no. 28369/95, § 38, ECHR 2000-X; Mazurek v. France, no. 34406/97, § 49, ECHR 2000-II; Inze v. Austria, 28 October 1987, § 41, Series A no. 126; Sabin v. Germany, no. 30943/96, § 94, 11 October 2001; Sommerfeld v. Germany [GC], no. 31871/96, § 93, ECHR 2003-VIII (extracts).

¹³⁷ Gaygusuz v. Austria, 16 September 1996, § 42, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-IV; Rejeva v. Latvia [GC], no. 55707/00, § 87, ECHR 2009; Koua Poirrez v. France, no. 40892/98, § 46, ECHR 2003-X; Bah v. the United Kingdom, no. 56328/07, § 37, ECHR 2011.

¹³⁸ Abdulaziz, Cabales, and Balkandali v. the United Kingdom, 28 May 1985, § 78, Series A no. 94; Bah v. the United Kingdom, no. 56328/07, § 84, ECHR 2011; Ünal Tekeli v. Turkey, no. 29865/96, § 53, ECHR 2004-X (extracts); Stec and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], nos 65731/01 and 65900/01, § 52, ECHR 2006-VI; Van Raalte v. the Netherlands, 21 February 1997, § 39, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-I; Schuler-Zgraggen v. Switzerland, 24 June 1993, § 67, Series A no. 263; Burghartz v. Switzerland, 22 February 1994, § 27, Series A no. 280-B; Karlheinz Schmidt v. Germany, 18 July 1994, § 24, Series A no. 291-B; Petrovic v. Austria, 27 March 1998, § 37, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-II; Zarb Adami v. Malta, no. 17209/02, § 80, ECHR 2006-VIII; Willis v. the United Kingdom, no. 36042/97, § 39, ECHR 2002-IV; Rangelov v. Germany, no. 5123/07, § 102, 22 March 2012.

¹³⁹ Vallianatos and Others v. Greece [GC], no. 29381/09 and 32684/09, § 76, ECHR 2013; Smith and Grady v. the United Kingdom, nos 33985/96 and 33986/96, § 90, ECHR 1999-VI; Karner v. Austria, no. 40016/98, §§ 37 and 42, ECHR 2003-IX; X and Others v. Austria [GC], no. 19010/07, § 99, ECHR 2013.

and ethnic origin.¹⁴⁰ The references to 'non-suspect' or 'less-suspect' categories are very rare. But in Carson v. The United Kingdom, the Court explained that 'the individual does not require the same high level of protection against differences in treatment based on [residence] as is needed in relation to differences based on an inherent characteristic, such as gender or racial or ethnic origin'.¹⁴¹ In cases before the Court, the United Kingdom has argued that the alleged discrimination did not concern 'suspect grounds' such as sex or race, suggesting that this would justify a wide margin of appreciation.¹⁴²

It is unlikely that any distinction on racial or ethnic origin could ever be deemed proportionate. For example, the Court has said that 'no difference in treatment which is based exclusively or to a decisive extent on a person's ethnic origin is capable of being objectively justified in a contemporary democratic society built on the principles of pluralism and respect for different cultures'.¹⁴³ The Court will be very demanding with respect to a margin of appreciation, and is likely to insist on a demonstration that the impugned measure is not only pursuing a legitimate aim but also that it is necessary. On the other hand, distinctions based on age or disability are common and accepted. This does not mean, of course, that discrimination based upon these categories cannot take place, but the exercise in assessing proportionality may not be as straightforward.

Sex

The term 'sex', used in the equality rights provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and in many subsequent instruments, including article 14 of the European Convention on Human Rights, has gradually been supplanted by 'gender'. Early cases referred to 'gender' but only with respect to gender reassignment, rather than discrimination as such.¹⁴⁴ The terminology began to change in the 1990s. In recent judgments, the Court has spoken of discrimination on the basis of 'gender' when it was quite clearly referring to discrimination attributable to the sex of the applicants.¹⁴⁵

As the discussion of the travaux préparatoires at the beginning of this chapter indicates, sex did not even appear in the original list of prohibited grounds considered by the Consultative Assembly. The Court has said that 'gender equality' is one of the 'key principles underlying the Convention',¹⁴⁶ but while that may be the contemporary interpretation the drafting history shows that it was far from the minds of most of those who negotiated it. The Council of Europe in 1949 and 1950 contrasts rather markedly

¹⁴⁰ Ortuš and Others v. Croatia [GC], no. 15766/03, § 149, ECHR 2010.

¹⁴¹ Carson and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 42184/05, § 80, 4 November 2008.

¹⁴² Hode and Abdi v. the United Kingdom, no. 22341/09, § 51, 6 November 2012; Cliff v. The United Kingdom, no. 7205/07, § 72, 13 July 2010.

¹⁴³ D.H. and Others v. the Czech Republic [GC], no. 57325/00, § 176, ECHR 2007-IV; Timishev v. Russia, nos 55762/00 and 55974/00, § 58, ECHR 2005-XII.

¹⁴⁴ Sheffield and Horsham v. the United Kingdom, 30 July 1998, § 12, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-V; Cossey v. the United Kingdom, 27 September 1990, § 11, Series A no. 184; Rees v. the United Kingdom, no. 9532/81, Commission decision of 15 March 1983, DR 36, p. 78.

¹⁴⁵ Opuz v. Turkey, no. 33401/02, § 177, ECHR 2009; Carson and Others v. The United Kingdom, no. 42184/05, § 80, 4 November 2008; Leyla Şahin v. Turkey, no. 44774/98, § 107, 29 June 2004; Leyla Şahin v. Turkey [GC], no. 44774/98, § 115, ECHR 2005-XI; Smith and Grady v. the United Kingdom, nos 33985/96 and 33986/96, § 81, 102, ECHR 1999-VI; Van Raalte v. the Netherlands, 21 February 1997, § 40, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-I.

¹⁴⁶ Şahin v. Turkey, no. 44774/98, § 107, 29 June 2004; Leyla Şahin v. Turkey [GC], no. 44774/98, § 115, ECHR 2005-XI.

with the United Nations. Reference to 'the equal rights of men and women' had been inserted in the Preamble to the Charter of the United Nations only a few years earlier. One explanation for the omission of sex discrimination in the initial drafts of the European Convention may be the rather glaring absence of women in the negotiation of the European Convention on Human Rights.¹⁴⁷ This stands in sharp contrast with the standard setting within the United Nations at the time, where the Commission on Human Rights was presided by Eleanor Roosevelt, and where many distinguished and dynamic women participated in the drafting of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the early versions of the International Covenants.

In 1985, the European Court said 'that the advancement of the equality of the sexes is today a major goal in the member States of the Council of Europe'.¹⁴⁸ Reiterating this statement two decades later, the Court pointed to a 1978 resolution of the Committee of Ministers on the equality of spouses in civil law and the Committee's recommendation adopted in 1985 on legal protection against sex discrimination as 'the main examples of this'.¹⁴⁹ Much more recently, it has declared that 'the advancement of the equality of the sexes in the member States of the Council of Europe prevents the State from lending its support to views of the man's role as primordial and the woman's as secondary'.¹⁵⁰

Much of the case law concerning discrimination and women's equality involves violations in the private sphere rather than as a result of legislation, judicial decisions, or the conduct of government authorities. This raises issues of the State's positive obligations. Such matters arise, for example, in the case of violence against women. The Court has held that an inadequate legal framework for the investigation and prosecution of rape, rooted in stereotypes about the behaviour of women, may result in a violation of article 3, although without reference to article 14 and issues of women's equality.¹⁵¹ More recently, it has confronted the issue of domestic violence, referring to the international law background on this issue and especially the pronouncements of the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and the Human Rights Committee as well as the specialized treaty of the Organisation of American States known as the Belém do Pará Convention.¹⁵² These sources indicate that 'the State's failure to protect women against domestic violence breaches their right to equal protection of ¹⁴⁷ There is virtually no evidence in the travaux préparatoires of women participating actively in the negotiations. Kirsten Gloerfelt-Tarp, the only female member of the Legal Committee, was the alternate of Hermod Lannung, the Danish representative who challenged the absence of a reference to sex discrimination. The only reference to her participation is in a footnote to the Report of the Committee, where its composition is described: Report [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions], 5 September 1949, Doc. AS (I) 77, I TP 216–39, at p. 216, fn. 1. Gloerfelt-Tarp was a Danish politician and activist for women's social, political, and economic rights. The 1949 Consultative Assembly consisted of ninety-five men and six women. During the debate on the Convention in the 1950 session of the Consultative Assembly, Helene Weber of Germany intervened to call for the liberation of prisoners of war who were still detained: Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 25 August 1950, afternoon], VI TP 144–91, at pp. 144–6. Also, Alice Bacon, a British Labour Party delegate, intervened briefly on the issue of the right to property and the right to education: Report of the sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 25 August 1950, morning], VI TP 74–141, at p. 138.

¹⁴⁸ Abdulaziz, Cabales, and Balkandali v. the United Kingdom, 28 May 1985, § 78, Series A no. 94. Also Schuler-Zgraggen v. Switzerland, 24 June 1993, § 67, Series A no. 263; Burghartz v. Switzerland, 22 February 1994, § 27, Series A no. 280-B; Petrovic v. Austria, 27 March 1998, § 37, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-II; Konstantin Markin v. Russia, no. 30078/06, § 47, 7 October 2010.

¹⁴⁹ Ünal Tekeli v. Turkey, no. 29865/96, § 59, ECHR 2004-X (extracts).

¹⁵⁰ Staatkundig Gereformeerde Partij v. the Netherlands (dec.), no. 58369/10, § 73, 10 July 2012.

¹⁵¹ M.C. v. Bulgaria, no. 39272/98, §§ 151–169, ECHR 2003-XII.

¹⁵² Opuz v. Turkey, no. 33401/02, §§ 184–191, ECHR 2009.

the law and that this failure does not need to be intentional'.¹⁵³ The Court concluded that 'the general and discriminatory judicial passivity in Turkey [to domestic violence against women] created a climate that was conducive to domestic violence'.¹⁵⁴ The violence suffered by the applicants was to be regarded 'as gender-based violence which is a form of discrimination against women'.¹⁵⁵ The Court said this amounted to a violation of article 14 taken in conjunction with articles 2 and 3.¹⁵⁶

Dismissing an application by a conservative clergyman who invoked article 9 of the Convention in an objection to a new policy of the Church of England permitting the ordination of women, the Commission referred to article 14 and noted that 'one of the aims of the Church of England in permitting the ordination of women was undoubtedly to achieve greater equality between men and women in that Church's hierarchy'. It also said that 'the Synod's wish to treat women equally can be regarded as necessary for "the protection of the rights and freedoms of others"'.¹⁵⁷

Race, colour, and ethnic origin

The second and third terms in the enumeration of discriminatory grounds in article 14 of the Convention are race and colour. In practice, they belong together and overlap considerably. Moreover, neither term is used very much in modern times because most discrimination that may be associated with race or colour is generally considered under the non-enumerated category of 'ethnic origin' or 'ethnicity'. Race, in particular, has come to be viewed as an archaic and even inappropriate term that is itself rooted in racist notions.

While eschewing the notion of 'race', international human rights continues to speak of 'racism' and 'racial discrimination'. Interpreting the category of 'race' in article 14, the Court has referred to the definition of 'racial discrimination' in article 1 of the authoritative International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination:¹⁵⁸

In this Convention, the term 'racial discrimination' shall mean any distinction, exclusion, restriction or preference based on race, colour, descent, or national or ethnic origin which has the purpose or effect of nullifying or impairing the recognition, enjoyment or exercise, on an equal footing, of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the political, economic, social, cultural or any other field of public life.¹⁵⁹

The Court has also referred to General Policy Recommendation no. 7 on national legislation to combat racism and racial discrimination, adopted by the Council of Europe's European Commission against Racism and Intolerance:¹⁶⁰

1. For the purposes of this Recommendation, the following definitions shall apply:

...

- (b) 'direct racial discrimination' shall mean any differential treatment based on a ground such as race, colour, language, religion, nationality or national or ethnic origin, which has no objective and reasonable justification. . . .

¹⁵³ Ibid., § 191.

¹⁵⁴ Ibid., § 198.

¹⁵⁵ Ibid., § 200.

¹⁵⁶ Ibid., § 202.

¹⁵⁷ Williamson v. the United Kingdom, no. 27008/95, 17 May 1995.

¹⁵⁸ Timishev v. Russia, nos 55762/00 and 55974/00, § 33, ECHR 2005-XII; Sejdić and Finci v. Bosnia and Herzegovina [GC], nos 27996/06 and 34836/06, § 43, ECHR 2009.

¹⁵⁹ International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, (1966) 660 UNTS 195, art. 1.

¹⁶⁰ Timishev v. Russia, nos 55762/00 and 55974/00, § 34, ECHR 2005-XII.

- (c) 'indirect racial discrimination' shall mean cases where an apparently neutral factor such as a provision, criterion or practice cannot be as easily complied with by, or disadvantages, persons belonging to a group designated by a ground such as race, colour, language, religion, nationality or national or ethnic origin, unless this factor has an objective and reasonable justification...'

The Court has held that discrimination on the basis of 'ethnic origin'¹⁶¹ or of 'actual or perceived ethnicity'¹⁶² constitutes racial discrimination. The Court has explained that 'the notion of race is rooted in the idea of biological classification of human beings into subspecies on the basis of morphological features such as skin colour or facial characteristics', whereas 'ethnicity has its origin in the idea of societal groups marked in particular by common nationality, religious faith, shared language, or cultural and traditional origins and backgrounds'.¹⁶³

Racial discrimination has been described in the case law as 'a particularly invidious kind of discrimination and, in view of its perilous consequences, requires from the authorities special vigilance and a vigorous reaction'.¹⁶⁴ They have a positive duty to combat racism, 'thereby reinforcing democracy's vision of a society in which diversity is not perceived as a threat but as a source of enrichment'.¹⁶⁵ A large number of the recent cases before the Court dealing with racism relate to abuse directed at Roma. The Court has explained that 'as a result of their turbulent history and constant uprooting, the Roma have become a specific type of disadvantaged and vulnerable minority. They therefore require special protection'.¹⁶⁶

Race, colour, and ethnic origin are clearly 'suspect categories' where it is difficult to think of examples or distinctions ever being proportionate. Although the Court will not rule this out, it has said that '[w]here the difference in treatment is based on race, colour or ethnic origin, the notion of objective and reasonable justification must be interpreted as strictly as possible'.¹⁶⁷

As in the case of discrimination on the basis of sex, violence directed at groups identified on the basis of race, colour, or ethnic origin engages the responsibility of the State, even when this is the work of third parties. The procedural obligation that flows from articles 2 and 3 of the Convention has a special dimension in this respect, in that the authorities are required to investigate possible racist motives for acts of violence.¹⁶⁸ According to the Grand Chamber, 'the authorities' duty to investigate the existence of a possible link between racist attitudes and an act of violence is an aspect of their procedural obligations arising under Article 2 of the Convention, but may also be seen as implicit in ¹⁶¹ D.H. and Others v. the Czech Republic [GC], no. 57325/00, § 176, ECHR 2007-IV.

¹⁶² Timishev v. Russia, nos 55762/00 and 55974/00, § 56, ECHR 2005-XII; Sejdić and Finci v. Bosnia and Herzegovina [GC], nos 27996/06 and 34836/06, § 43, ECHR 2009.

¹⁶³ Sejdić and Finci v. Bosnia and Herzegovina [GC], nos 27996/06 and 34836/06, § 43, ECHR 2009.

¹⁶⁴ D.H. and Others v. the Czech Republic [GC], no. 57325/00, § 176, ECHR 2007-IV; Nachova and Others v. Bulgaria [GC], nos 43577/98 and 43579/98, § 145, ECHR 2005-VII; Timishev v. Russia, nos 55762/00 and 55974/00, § 56, ECHR 2005-XII; Sampanis and Others v. Greece, no. 32526/05, § 69, 5 June 2008.

¹⁶⁵ D.H. and Others v. the Czech Republic [GC], no. 57325/00, § 176, ECHR 2007-IV; Nachova and Others v. Bulgaria [GC], nos 43577/98 and 43579/98, § 145, ECHR 2005-VII; Timishev v. Russia, nos 55762/00 and 55974/00, § 56, ECHR 2005-XII.

¹⁶⁶ Horváth and Kiss v. Hungary, no. 11146/11, § 102, 29 January 2013.

¹⁶⁷ Orišić and Others v. Croatia [GC], no. 15766/03, § 156, ECHR 2010; D.H. and Others v. the Czech Republic [GC], no. 57325/00, § 196, ECHR 2007-IV; Sejdić and Finci v. Bosnia and Herzegovina [GC], nos 27996/06 and 34836/06, § 43, ECHR 2009.

¹⁶⁸ Nachova and Others v. Bulgaria [GC], nos 43577/98 and 43579/98, § 160, ECHR 2005-VII.

their responsibilities under Article 14 of the Convention taken in conjunction with Article 2 to secure the enjoyment of the right to life without discrimination'.¹⁶⁹

Language

The first major case considered by the European Court of Human Rights pursuant to article 14 involved discrimination on the basis of language. The Court decided that a Belgian law enacted in 1963 violated article 14, read in conjunction with article 2 of Protocol No. 1, on the right to education, because it prevented certain children from attending French-language schools in suburban Brussels solely because of the residence of their parents.¹⁷⁰ The Convention does not guarantee the right to use a language in, for example, relations with the public administration¹⁷¹ or in elected institutions.¹⁷²

Religion

Discrimination based upon religion has played an important part in the case law under article 14. Like discrimination based upon political or other opinion, it is closely related to the substantive protection of freedom of opinion, belief, and religion set out in article 9 of the Convention. Historically, the Christian religion predominated in Europe. Discrimination within that broad church, by one branch of the religion against another, accounted for much violence and abuse over the centuries and indeed through to modern times, as the many cases before the Court related to the conflict in Northern Ireland confirm. Indeed, the first case to come before the European Court of Human Rights concerned a conflict that had such sectarianism at its roots.¹⁷³ Of course, the origins of the Council of Europe are found in the Second World War and the efforts by a European government to exterminate a group identified by religion. These examples highlight the close relationship between discrimination based upon race or ethnicity and discrimination based upon religion. In practice, the line between these categories is often quite blurred, and it is not uncommon to speak of discrimination based upon religion as 'racism'.

In a case involving custody of minor children, when Austrian courts took into consideration the fact that one of the parents was a Jehovah's Witness, the European Court of Human Rights said 'a distinction based essentially on a difference in religion alone is not acceptable' and concluded that there had been a violation of article 14 in conjunction with article 8.¹⁷⁴ Similarly, French courts took the religion of one parent, a Jehovah's Witness, into account in determining custody, thereby breaching article 14 combined with article 9. The Court of Appeal had 'treated the parents differently on the basis of the applicant's religion, on the strength of a harsh analysis of the principles regarding child-rearing allegedly imposed by this religion'.¹⁷⁵ But in another case, the ¹⁶⁹ Ibid., § 161.

¹⁷⁰ Case 'relating to certain aspects of the laws on the use of languages in education in Belgium' (merits), 23 July 1968, Series A no. 6. See Marc Bossuyt, L'interdiction de la discrimination dans le droit international des droits de l'homme, Brussels: Bruylant, 1976.

¹⁷¹ Inhabitants of Leeuw-Saint-Pierre v. Belgium, no. 2333/64, Commission decision of 16 December 1968, (1968) 11 YB 228, Collection 28, p. 1; Fryske nationale partij v. the Netherlands, no. 11100/84, Commission decision of 12 December 1985, DR 45, p. 240; Samo Pabor v. Italy, no. 19927/92, Commission decision of 29 June 1994.

¹⁷² Clerfayt, Legros, and Alii v. Belgium, no. 10650/83, Commission decision of 17 May 1985, DR 42, p. 218; Birk-Lévy v. France (dec.), no. 39416/06, 21 September 2010.

¹⁷³ Lawless v. Ireland (no. 1), 14 November 1960, Series A no. 1.

¹⁷⁴ Hoffmann v. Austria, 23 June 1993, § 36, Series A no. 255-C.

¹⁷⁵ Palau-Martinez v. France, no. 64927/01, § 38, ECHR 2003-XII.

Court dismissed these precedents and upheld the national courts' custody decisions because they were based upon 'religious practices' and not religion as such.¹⁷⁶

Historically, schools in many countries in Europe were controlled or dominated by the predominant religious groups. To some extent this still continues, raising issues about discrimination when children from other religious groups or non-believers are concerned. For example, where children were expected to attend religious instruction as part of the school curriculum but had the possibility of opting out of such classes, the absence of a mark for 'religion/ethics' was deemed to be 'a form of unwarranted stigmatisation'. The Court held that article 14 was violated in conjunction with article 9, given that it was not satisfied that there was an objective and reasonable justification for the measure.¹⁷⁷

Case law concerning the application of article 14 to opinion, belief, and religion is discussed in detail in the chapter on article 9 of the Convention.

Political or other opinion

Discrimination based upon political or other opinion is closely related to the issues that arise with respect to freedom of expression under article 10 of the Convention. It is also associated with the profoundly democratic orientation of the Convention, a requirement of the pluralism, tolerance, and broadmindedness 'without which there is no "democratic society"'.¹⁷⁸ Because of the word 'other', the prohibition on discrimination applies to any form of opinion whatsoever. Indeed, it might be said that the adjective 'political' is entirely superfluous. Nevertheless, its presence confirms the special place reserved in the Convention for the protection of political opinion. It seems this was indeed the intention when the words 'political or other opinion' were first proposed during drafting of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights within the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities.¹⁷⁹

Case law concerning the application of article 14 to political or other opinion is discussed in detail in the chapters on articles 9, 10, and 11 of the Convention.

National or social origin

Only two forms of 'origin' are listed in article 14. The first, national origin, is undoubtedly related to the prohibited grounds of race and colour, listed earlier in the provision. The notion of 'social origin' is somewhat different, however. It appears that the term originated in the 1936 Constitution of the Soviet Union.¹⁸⁰ The categories of 'national or social origin' were first proposed for inclusion in article 2 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights by the Soviet representative in the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities.¹⁸¹

There does not appear to be any case law of the Court concerning discrimination based on 'social origin'. The case law of the Court has tended to confound 'nationality' with ¹⁷⁶ Ismailova v. Russia, no. 37614/02, §§ 62–63, 29 November 2007.

¹⁷⁷ Grzelak v. Poland, no. 7710/02, §§ 100–101, 15 June 2010.

¹⁷⁸ Handyside v. the United Kingdom, 7 December 1976, § 49, Series A no. 24; Lindon, Otchakovsky-Laurens, and July v. France [GC], nos 21279/02 and 36448/02, § 45, ECHR 2007-IV; Verein gegen Tierfabriken Schweiz (VgT) v. Switzerland (no. 2) [GC], no. 32772/02, § 96, ECHR 2009; Palomo Sánchez and Others v. Spain [GC], nos 28955/06, 28957/06, 28959/06, and 28964/06, § 53, ECHR 2011; Axel Springer AG v. Germany [GC], no. 39954/08, § 78, 7 February 2012.

¹⁷⁹ UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/SR.4, p. 7.

¹⁸⁰ Cited in UN Doc. E/CN.4/AC.1/3/Add.1, pp. 264, 271.

¹⁸¹ UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/21.

'national origin'. The Court has said that 'very weighty reasons would have to be put forward before the Court could regard a difference of treatment based exclusively on the ground of nationality as compatible with the Convention'.¹⁸² In Bigaeva, a case concerning a resident in Greece of Russian nationality who was denied the possibility of becoming a lawyer, the Court said that determining whether or not to let non-nationals practise law was something that fell within the margin of appreciation, absent evidence that arbitrary factors were involved.¹⁸³ Here too, the Court referred to discrimination based on 'nationality', which was quite correct. Of course 'nationality' and 'national origin' are not unrelated concepts, but they are not identical either.¹⁸⁴ An individual may change his or her nationality, in the sense of citizenship—this is expressly authorized by article 15(1) of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights—without changing the 'national origin', which presumably remains constant throughout one's lifetime.

When Slovenian citizenship legislation left some nationals of the former Yugoslav republics in a situation of statelessness, the Court found that there was a difference of treatment depending upon whether a person was a 'real' alien from a third State rather than from one of the component republics of the former Yugoslavia or a citizen of the former Yugoslavia. Court held it was discrimination based upon nationality. This was a difference in treatment based upon national origin, because former citizens of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia were treated differently to other foreigners in the absence of any legitimate purpose.¹⁸⁵

Association with a national minority

Although article 14 of the European Convention prohibits discrimination based upon 'association with a national minority', neither the Convention nor its Protocols contain a dedicated minority rights provision comparable to article 27 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.¹⁸⁶ As early as 1961, the Assembly had proposed an amendment to the Convention, adding a provision on minorities as part of Protocol No. 4.¹⁸⁷ In 1993, it submitted a draft text¹⁸⁸ but this was not pursued by the Committee of Ministers. In the early 1990s, the Council of Europe adopted the Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities and the European Charter for Minority or Regional Languages. Nearly two decades later, the Parliamentary Assembly complained that these instruments were not universally accepted by Member States, and furthermore that there were 'numerous shortcomings' in their implementation.¹⁸⁹ In 2012, the ¹⁸² Gaygusuz v. Austria, 16 September 1996, § 42, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-IV; Rejeva v. Latvia [GC], no. 55707/00, § 87, ECHR 2009; Koua Poirrez v. France, no. 40892/98, § 46, ECHR 2003-X.

¹⁸³ Bigaeva v. Greece, no. 26713/05, § 40, 28 May 2009.

¹⁸⁴ The distinction was quite intentional, as can be seen from the travaux préparatoires of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which is the model on which article 14 of the European Convention is based. See, e.g., UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/SR.5, pp. 7, 9-10; UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/SR.6, pp. 3, 5-6; UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/SR.11, p. 16-18; UN Doc. E/CN.4/52, p. 5.

¹⁸⁵ Kurić and Others v. Slovenia [GC], no. 26828/06, §§ 394-396, ECHR 2012 (extracts).

¹⁸⁶ G. and E. v. Norway, nos 9278/81 and 9415/81, Commission decision of 3 October 1983, DR 35, p. 30.

¹⁸⁷ Recommendation 285 (1961).

¹⁸⁸ Recommendation 1201 (1993).

¹⁸⁹ Minority protection in Europe: best practices and deficiencies in implementation of common standards, Resolution 1713 (2010).

rapporteur of the Assembly lamented 'the precarious situation of numerous national minority groups in Europe'.¹⁹⁰

The Court has touched on issues relating to national minorities in a number of contexts. An application filed against Poland contested the denial of registration to an association named the 'Union of People of Silesian Nationality', described by its organizers as an 'organisation of the Silesian national minority'. The government insisted that the nomenclature was misleading because the Silesians, who live near the borders of Poland, Germany, and the Czech Republic and speak a language that is a mixture of Polish, German, and Czech, were not considered to be a national minority. The Court took a cautious position, noting the difficulty in formulating a definition of 'national minority' given that 'the notion is not defined in any international treaty'. Moreover, said the Grand Chamber, 'practice regarding official recognition by States of national, ethnic or other minorities within their population varies from country to country or even within countries'. It said the matter 'must, by the nature of things, be left largely to the State concerned, as it will depend on particular national circumstances'.¹⁹¹ Moreover, continued the Court:

While it appears to be a commonly shared European view that, as laid down in the preamble to the Framework Convention, 'the upheavals of European history have shown that the protection of national minorities is essential to stability, democratic security and peace on this continent' and that respect for them is a condition sine qua non for a democratic society, it cannot be said that the Contracting States are obliged by international law to adopt a particular concept of 'national minority' in their legislation or to introduce a procedure for the official recognition of minority groups.¹⁹²

Yet the Court has also acknowledged 'an emerging international consensus among the Contracting States of the Council of Europe recognising the special needs of minorities and an obligation to protect their security, identity and lifestyle, not only for the purpose of safeguarding the interests of the minorities themselves but to preserve a cultural diversity of value to the whole community'.¹⁹³

In this respect, the Court's attention has been focused on Roma, Sinti, Gypsies, and Travellers, described as 'a specific type of disadvantaged and vulnerable minority' because of 'their turbulent history and constant uprooting'.¹⁹⁴ In a variety of contexts, but notably in the recognition of the right to education secured by article 2 of Protocol No. 1, the Court has spoken of 'the vulnerable position of Roma/Gypsies', saying this means that 'special consideration should be given to their needs and their different lifestyle both in the relevant regulatory framework and in reaching decisions in particular cases'.¹⁹⁵

Property, birth, or other status

The category of 'property, birth or other status', derived directly from article 2 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, appeared rather late in the drafting of that ¹⁹⁰ An Additional Protocol to the European Convention on Human Rights on National Minorities, Doc. 12879, 23 February 2012, para. 5.

¹⁹¹ Gorzelik and Others v. Poland [GC], no. 44158/98, § 47, ECHR 2004-I.

¹⁹² Ibid., § 48.

¹⁹³ Chapman v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 27238/95, §§ 93–94, ECHR 2001-I; D.H. and Others v. the Czech Republic [GC], no. 57325/00, § 181, ECHR 2007-IV.

¹⁹⁴ D.H. and Others v. the Czech Republic [GC], no. 57325/00, § 182, ECHR 2007-IV.

¹⁹⁵ Ibid., § 181; Chapman v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 27238/95, § 96, ECHR 2001-I; Connors v. the United Kingdom, no. 66746/01, § 84, 27 May 2004.

instrument. In the Third Committee of the General Assembly, in October 1948, Cuba proposed a reformulation of the non-discrimination text that included the phrase 'without distinction of race, birth, sex, language, religion, political opinion, or property or other status'.¹⁹⁶ In the ensuing debate, there were suggestions that 'birth' might be replaced by 'social status' or by 'caste', but these were not pursued.¹⁹⁷ The text adopted by the Third Committee used the phrase 'race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, property or other status, birth, or national or social origin'.¹⁹⁸ The text of the Drafting Committee was worded slightly differently: 'race, colour, sex, language, religion, birth, national or social origin, political or other opinion, property or other status'.¹⁹⁹ One of the very last debates about the text of the Declaration concerned these words. A compromise, proposed by the Lebanese Karim Azkoul, produced the final text.²⁰⁰

In several cases, the Court has considered the application of article 14 to distinctions based upon property.²⁰¹ Discrimination grounded on 'birth' has been the basis of cases dealing with legislation distinguishing between 'legitimate' and 'illegitimate' children.²⁰² The term 'other status' has permitted the Court to give a very broad scope to article 14. It has described the other grounds in article 14, such as sex, race, and property, as being 'illustrative and not exhaustive', pointing not only to the words 'any ground such as' that precede the enumeration but also to the words 'any other status' with which it concludes.²⁰³ Several examples of this broad approach to 'other status' are discussed earlier in this chapter. Three categories that are listed in the corresponding provision of the European Union Charter of Fundamental Rights, disability, age, and sexual orientation, have been added to article 14. The Court has also recognized marital status and gender reassignment.

A Chamber of the Court has held that disability is an analogous ground contemplated by article 16.²⁰⁴ It said there was a European and universal consensus on the need to protect disabled persons from discrimination,²⁰⁵ invoking in support a 2003 Recommendation of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe²⁰⁶ and the United Nations Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities.²⁰⁷

The European Union Charter of Fundamental Rights explicitly includes age as one of the prohibited grounds of discrimination. Age discrimination is also prohibited by the European Union Employment Equality Directive adopted in 2000.²⁰⁸ The Convention itself could be said to discriminate on the basis of age by setting an upper limit for judges, a matter considered in the chapter of this Commentary dealing with article 21. The issue

¹⁹⁶ Cuba: Amendments to the first nine Articles of the Draft Declaration (E/800), UN Doc. A/C.3/224.

¹⁹⁷ Official Records of the General Assembly, Third Session, 1948, pp. 137–8.

¹⁹⁸ UN Doc. A/C.3/320.

¹⁹⁹ UN Doc. A/C.3/SC.4/7.

²⁰⁰ Official Records of the General Assembly, Third Session, 1948, pp. 852–3.

²⁰¹ James and Others v. the United Kingdom, 21 February 1986, § 74, Series A no. 98; Chassagnou and Others v. France [GC], nos 25088/94, 28331/95, and 28443/95, §§ 90 and 95, ECHR 1999-III; Larkos v. Cyprus [GC], no. 29515/95, § 58, ECHR 1999-I.

²⁰² Marckx v. Belgium, 13 June 1979, § 34, Series A no. 31; Inze v. Austria, 28 October 1987, §§ 41–45, Series A no. 126; Mazurek v. France, no. 34406/97, §§ 44–46, ECHR 2000-II; Vermeire v. Belgium, 29 November 1991, § 28, Series A no. 214-C.

²⁰³ Clift v. the United Kingdom, no. 7205/07, § 55, 13 July 2010.

²⁰⁴ Glor v. Switzerland, no. 13444/04, § 80, ECHR 2009.

²⁰⁵ Ibid., § 53.

²⁰⁶ Towards full social inclusion of people with disabilities, Recommendation 1592 (2003).

²⁰⁷ UN Doc. A/RES/61/106, Annex I.

²⁰⁸ 2000/78/EC.

of age discrimination has only rarely come before the European Court of Human Rights. The Court appeared to recognize age as an analogous ground in a case concerning a woman of forty-seven who had been refused the possibility of adopting a child because she was deemed to be too old. It said she was being treated differently from 'a younger single woman who, in the same circumstances, would be likely to obtain authorisation to receive a second child with a view to its adoption' and that she was therefore 'a victim of a difference in treatment between persons in analogous situations'.²⁰⁹ The Court considered practice in European States with respect to age limits upon adoption and concluded that there was no 'uniform principle'.²¹⁰ It held that the impugned distinction was not disproportionate, bearing in mind a broad margin of appreciation and the significance of the best interests of the child.²¹¹ In a Latvian case based on a mandatory retirement age, the Court dismissed the complaint because the applicant failed to show that other persons who were similarly situated had been treated differently.²¹²

It is not discrimination to provide a different detention regime for adults than for children. Admittedly, the treatment of the two categories is different, but there is an objective and reasonable justification in the protective rather than punitive nature of juvenile detention.²¹³ If it were otherwise, even the Convention could be deemed discriminatory as a consequence of article 5(1)(d), allowing for detention of children for 'educational purposes', something that is not permitted in the case of adults.

The Court declared that sexual orientation as a prohibited ground was 'undoubtedly covered' by article 14 in a case involving child custody where a father had been denied parental rights because he was homosexual.²¹⁴ It has since elevated the category to one that is 'suspect', saying that '[w]here sexual orientation is in issue, there is a need for particularly convincing and weighty reasons to justify a difference in treatment regarding rights falling within Article 8'.²¹⁵ It has gone still further: '[D]iscrimination based on sexual orientation is as serious as discrimination based on "race, origin or colour"'.²¹⁶ Moreover, 'the Court would not exclude that treatment which is grounded upon a predisposed bias on the part of a heterosexual majority against a homosexual minority of the nature described above could, in principle, fall within the scope of Article 3'.²¹⁷

Reservations

Only one reservation has been formulated with respect to article 14. Monaco declared that article 14 (as well as articles 6(1) and 8) does not apply to provisions of its national law, ²⁰⁹ Schwizgebel v. Switzerland, no. 25762/07, § 85, ECHR 2010 (extracts).

²¹⁰ Ibid., § 90.

²¹¹ Ibid., § 97.

²¹² Jokšas v. Lithuania, no. 25330/07, §§ 73–74, 12 November 2013.

²¹³ Bouamar v. Belgium, 29 February 1988, § 66, Series A no. 129.

²¹⁴ Salgueiro da Silva Mouta v. Portugal, no. 33290/96, § 28, ECHR 1999-IX.

²¹⁵ E.B. v. France [GC], no. 43546/02, § 91, 22 January 2008; L. and V. v. Austria, nos 39392/98 and 39829/98, § 45, ECHR 2003-I; Eweida and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 48420/10, § 105, ECHR 2013 (extracts); Karner v. Austria, no. 40016/98, § 37, ECHR 2003-IX; Schalk and Kopf v. Austria, no. 30141/04, § 97, ECHR 2010.

²¹⁶ Vejdeland v. Sweden, no. 1813/07, § 55, 9 February 2012; Smith and Grady v. The United Kingdom, nos 33985/96 and 33986/96, § 97, ECHR 1999-VI.

²¹⁷ Smith and Grady v. the United Kingdom, nos 33985/96 and 33986/96, § 153, ECHR 1999-VI.

including the Constitution, that provide for preferential conditions of employment of Monégasque nationals.

Further reading

- Oddný Mjöll Arnadóttir, Equality and Non-discrimination under the European Convention on Human Rights, The Hague: Martinus Nijhoff, 2003.
- Oddný Mjöll Arnadóttir, 'Discrimination as a Magnifying Lens: Scope and Ambit under Article 14 and Protocol No. 12', in Eva Brems and Janneke Gerards, eds, Shaping Rights in the ECHR, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2013, pp. 330–49.
- Sam Bardutzky, 'The Strasbourg Court on the Dayton Constitution Judgment in the Case of Sejdić and Finci v. Bosnia and Herzegovina, 22 December 2009', (2010) 6 European Constitutional Law Review 309.
- Marc Bossuyt, L'interdiction de la discrimination dans le droit international des droits de l'homme, Brussels: Bruylant, 1976.
- Marc Bossuyt, 'Article 14', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 475–88.
- Kevin Boyle and Anneliese Baldaccini, 'A Critical Evaluation of International Human Rights Approaches to Racism', in Sandra Fredman, ed., Discrimination and Human Rights the Case of Racism, Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2001, pp. 135–91.
- Niklas Bruun, 'The Prohibition of Discrimination under Article 14 ECHR', in Filip Dorssemont, Klaus Lörcher, and Isabelle Schömann, eds, The European Convention on Human Rights and the Employment Relation, Oxford and Portland, OR: Hart, 2013, pp. 367–80.
- Luke Clements and Janet Read, Disabled People and European Human Rights, Bristol, UK: The Policy Press, 2003.
- E. Debout, 'Vers une protection de l'égalité "collective" par la Cour européenne des droits de l'homme?', [2006] RTDH 851.
- J.-Fr. Flauss, 'Discrimination positive et Convention européenne des droits de l'homme', in Pouvoir et liberté. Mélanges offerts à Jacques Mourgeon, Brussels, Bruylant, 1998, pp. 415–22.
- Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 401–18.
- Janneke Gerards, 'The Application of Article 14 ECHR by the European Court of Human Rights', in J. Niessen and Isabelle Chopin, eds, The Development of Legal Instruments to Combat Racism in a Diverse Europe, Leiden/Boston: Martinus Nijhoff, 2004, pp. 3–60.
- Janneke Gerards, 'Intensity of Judicial Review in Equal Treatment Cases', [2004] Netherlands International Law Review 135.
- Janneke Gerards, 'The Discrimination Grounds of Article 14 of the European Convention on Human Rights', (2013) 13 HRLR 99.
- Grabenwarter, European Convention, pp. 340–63.
- Harris et al., Law of the European Convention, pp. 577–616.
- Aalt Willem Heringa and Fried van Hoof, 'Prohibition of Discrimination (Article 14)', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 1027–51.
- Erica Howard, 'Bans on the Wearing of Religious Symbols in British Schools: A Violation of the Right to Non-Discrimination?', (2011) 6 Journal of Religion and Human Rights 127.
- Timo Koivurova, 'Jurisprudence of the European Court of Human Rights regarding Indigenous Peoples: Retrospect and Prospects', (2011) 18 International Journal on Minority and Group Rights 1.
- P. Lambert, 'Vers une évolution de l'interprétation de l'article 14 de la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme?', [1998] RTDH 497.
- Titia Loenen, 'The Headscarf Debate Approaching the Intersection of Sex, Religion and Race under the European Convention on Human Rights and EU Equality Law', in Dagmar Schiek and Victoria Chege, eds, European Non-discrimination Law Comparative Perspectives on Multi-dimensional Equality Law, London/New York: Routledge 2009, pp. 313–28.

- Jill Marshall, 'Freedom of Religious Expression and Gender Equality: Sahin v. Turkey', (2006) 69 Modern Law Review 460.
- Dominic McGoldrick, Human Rights and Religion: The Islamic Headscarf Debate in Europe, Oxford/Portland: Hart Publishing, 2006.
- Denis Martin, Egalité et non-discrimination dans la jurisprudence communautaire. Etude critique à la lumière d'une approche comparatiste, Brussels: Bruylant, 2006.
- Ovey/White, Jacobs and White, European Convention, pp. 347–60.
- Erick Acuña Pereda, 'The Institutionalization of People with Mental Disabilities: Comparative Analysis between its Treatment under the Inter-American and European System of Human Rights', (2012) 5 Inter-American and European Human Rights Journal 72.
- Ivana Radacic, 'Gender Equality Jurisprudence of the European Court of Human Rights', (2008) 19 European Journal of International Law 841.
- Luzius Wildhaber, 'Protection Against Discrimination under the European Convention on Human Rights—A Second-class Guarantee?', [2002] Baltic Yearbook of International Law 5.
- Robert Wintemute, "'Within the Ambit": How Big Is the "Gap" in Article 14 European Convention on Human Rights?', (2004) EHRLR 366.

Article 15. Derogation in time of emergency/Dérogation en cas d'état d'urgence

1. In time of war or other public emergency threatening the life of the nation any High Contracting Party may take measures derogating from its obligations under this Convention to the extent strictly required by the exigencies of the situation, provided that such measures are not inconsistent with its other obligations under international law.

2. No derogation from Article 2, except in respect of deaths resulting from lawful acts of war, or from Articles 3, 4 (paragraph 1) and 7 shall be made under this provision.

3. Any High Contracting Party availing itself of this right of derogation shall keep the Secretary General of the Council of Europe fully informed of the measures which it has taken and the reasons therefor. It shall also inform the Secretary General of the Council of Europe when such measures have ceased to operate and the provisions of the Convention are again being fully executed.

1. En cas de guerre ou en cas d'autre danger public menaçant la vie de la nation, toute Haute Partie Contractante peut prendre des mesures dérogeant aux obligations prévues par la présente Convention, dans la stricte mesure où la situation l'exige et à la condition que ces mesures ne soient pas en contradiction avec les autres obligations découlant du droit international.

2. La disposition précédente n'autorise aucune dérogation à l'article 2, sauf pour le cas de décès résultant d'actes licites de guerre, et aux articles 3, 4 (paragraphe 1) et 7.

3. Toute Haute Partie Contractante qui exerce ce droit de dérogation tient le Secrétaire Général du Conseil de l'Europe pleinement informé des mesures prises et des motifs qui les ont inspirées. Elle doit également informer le Secrétaire Général du Conseil de l'Europe de la date à laquelle ces mesures ont cessé d'être en vigueur et les dispositions de la Convention reçoivent de nouveau pleine application.

Introductory comments

Derogation clauses are a feature of some modern international human rights instruments, notably the general treaties that deal primarily with civil and political rights. In addition to article 15 of the European Convention on Human Rights, derogation clauses may be found in the European Social Charter, where the text is identical to that of article 15(1),¹ the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,² and the American Convention on Human Rights.³ Many find the whole idea that human rights may be suspended to be offensive and unacceptable. It is arguable that without allowing States the possibility of temporarily opting out of their human rights treaty obligations in time of emergency it would have been much harder to obtain their adherence to the relevant instruments. Yet with a few notable exceptions, such as the United Kingdom, States rarely comply with the formalities and resort to derogation. Moreover, most human rights treaties do not allow for derogation, suggesting that the possibility of suspending their obligations in time of crisis may not be as important as some make this out to be.

¹ European Social Charter, (1965) 529 UNTS 89, art. 30(1); Revised European Social Charter 1999, ETS 163, 529 UNTS 89, art. F(1).

² International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, (1976) 999 UNTS 171, art. 5.

³ American Convention on Human Rights, (1978) 1144 UNTS 123, art. 27.

The Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe has called upon Member States not to derogate from the Convention 'in their fight against terrorism'. In particular, it has urged States to 'refrain from using Article 15 of the European Convention on Human Rights (derogation in time of emergency) to limit the rights and liberties guaranteed under its Article 5 (right to liberty and security)'.⁴ All Member States seem to have heeded the call with one exception, the United Kingdom. In the twenty-first century, it is the only State to have invoked article 15 in order to derogate from the Convention. However, in recent years, several European states have derogated from the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights: Armenia, 6 March 2008 (for 20 days); France, 15 November 2005 (from 8 November 2005 to 4 January 2006); Georgia, 8 November 2007 (from 7 November 2007 and still in effect). Why they choose to derogate from the Covenant and not the Convention is a mystery.

Researchers have identified nearly 600 acts of derogation from the three international human rights treaties taken as a whole. The European Social Charter was not included in the study, but it has apparently never been subject to derogation. Nearly half of all derogations are attributable to Peru and about ten per cent to the United Kingdom, followed by Turkey, Colombia, Ecuador, Algeria, Russia, and Israel. Altogether, thirty-three States have derogated from the treaties.⁵ The researchers theorize that countries with weak democratic governance rarely bother with derogation because they are not concerned about domestic repercussions. On the other hand, 'derogation is resorted to by stable democracies and countries with strong judiciaries [who] derogate to buy time and reduce censure from voters, interest groups, and judges'.⁶

Derogation provisions are sometimes presented as a rationale for the importance of international humanitarian law. The latter is applicable in time of armed conflict, when States may be most likely to derogate from their human rights obligations. No derogation is permitted under international humanitarian law, however. But this may be oversimplifying the relationship between international human rights law and international humanitarian law, partly because most States do not in fact resort to derogation and partly because many of the most fundamental rights are not subject to derogation. Most derogations seem to be concerned with detention issues.

Drafting of the provision

The Universal Declaration of Human Rights does not contain a derogation clause. The issue never received any attention when the Declaration was being drafted. There is an obvious explanation: the Declaration was intended as an aspirational text rather than a source of binding conventional obligation. Nor was there anything of the sort in the draft prepared by the European Movement at the outset of the negotiations of the European Convention on Human Rights. In the work of the Consultative Assembly, questions arose concerning measures that a State was permitted to employ in order to protect itself against ⁴ Resolution 1271 (2002), para. 9.

⁵ Emilie M. Hafner-Burton, Laurence R. Helfer, and Christopher J. Fariss, 'Emergency and Escape: Explaining Derogations from Human Rights Treaties', (2011) 65 International Organization 673, at p. 679.

⁶ Ibid., p. 703.

subversive and anti-democratic groups. The answer was that this issue was adequately addressed in the general limitation clause, resembling article 29(2) of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, that had been proposed. Pierre-Henri Teitgen said the reply was 'quite simple' and was 'stated clearly' in the limitation clause.⁷

The Committee of Ministers decided to refer the draft adopted by the Consultative Assembly to a Committee of Experts. The Committee of Ministers had instructed the Committee of Ministers to take account of work then underway within the United Nations on the draft covenant on human rights.⁸ Earlier in 1949, the United Nations Commission on Human Rights had adopted the following preliminary text:

Article 4

1. In time of war or other public emergency threatening the interests of the people, a State may take measures derogating from its obligations under part II of the Covenant to the extent strictly limited by the exigencies of the situation.
2. No derogation from Articles . . . can be made under this provision.
3. Any State party hereto availing itself of this right of derogation shall inform the Secretary-General of the United Nations fully of the measures which it has thus enacted and the reasons therefor. It shall also inform him as and when such measures cease to operate and the provisions of part II of the Covenant are being fully executed.⁹

In comments on the draft, the United Kingdom suggested that paragraph 2 be changed as follows: '[N]o derogation from Article 6, except in respect of deaths resulting from lawful acts of war, or from Articles 6, 7 8 (paragraphs 1 and 2) or 14 can be made under this provision.'¹⁰

A report from the Secretariat-General of the Council of Europe to the Committee of Experts said that such a provision 'would seem unnecessary in the European system' because the Consultative Assembly draft contained a limitations clause.¹¹ A submission from the United Kingdom to the Committee of Experts proposed a provision similar to that of article 4 of the draft preliminary covenant.¹² The Committee of Experts held two sessions, in February and in March 1950. A Sub-Committee charged with analysing the various amendments that had been proposed reacted favourably to the British text:

The first Article . . . is aimed at the national protection of Human Rights. The Sub-Committee considered it advisable to give due consideration to these proposals as being of interest even to those who adhere to the definition of Human Rights as proposed by the Assembly. This Article could, in fact, be included as an addition to Article 4 of the Assembly draft.¹³

⁷ Official Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 8 September 1949], II TP 14-274, at p. 32.

⁸ Letter addressed on 18 November 1949 by the Secretary-General to the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Member States, Ref. D 26/2/49, II TP 302-5.

⁹ Report of the Fifth Session of the Commission on Human Rights to the Economic and Social Council, UN Doc. E/1371(Supp.), p. 18.

¹⁰ Comments of Governments on the draft International Covenant on Human Rights and Measures of Implementation [UN Doc. E/CN.4/353/Add.1-3], Doc. A 770, III TP 156-79, at p. 158. The provisions concern the right to life, the prohibition of torture and slavery, and the rule against retroactive criminal prosecution.

¹¹ Preparatory Report by the Secretariat-General concerning a Preliminary Draft Convention to Provide a Collective Guarantee of Human Rights, Doc. B 22, III TP 2-37, at p. 18.

¹² Amendments to Articles 4 and 7 of the Recommendation of the Consultative Assembly proposed by the Expert of the United Kingdom, Doc. A 782, III TP 188, at pp. 188-190.

¹³ First part of the Report of the Sub-Committee Instructed to Make a Preliminary Study of the Amendments Proposed by the Members of the Committee, Doc. A 796, III TP 200-5.

Article 4 of the Assembly draft reserved to States the competence to organize the protection of human rights within their territories. At the March session, the Committee concluded its work by adopting two different versions of the Convention, one based upon British proposals that provided detailed definitions of fundamental rights and the other based upon the Consultative Assembly draft that largely reflected the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. However, the Committee of Experts adopted essentially identical approaches when it came to the derogation clause. Thus, the draft that relied upon the Consultative Assembly version contained the following:

1. In time of war or other public emergency threatening the interests of the people, a State may take measures derogating from its obligations under this Convention to the extent strictly limited by the exigencies of the situation provided that such measures are not inconsistent with its other obligations under international law.
2. No derogation from Articles 3, except in respect of deaths resulting from lawful acts of war, 4, 5 (paragraph 1) or 8 can be made under this provision.
3. Any State party hereto availing itself of this right of derogation shall inform the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe fully of the measures which it has thus enacted and the reasons therefor. It shall also inform the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe when such measures have ceased to operate and the provisions of the Convention are again being fully executed.¹⁴

A similar text was proposed for the draft based upon the detailed British proposals (Alternatives B and B/2). An explanatory report prepared by the Committee of Experts for the Committee of Ministers made the following comment:

This Article was taken from the Proposals of the British Government... The French and Italian representatives stated that they were opposed to its insertion in the text of Alternatives A and A/2. They considered that this provision was contrary to the system of these Alternatives, since it provides detailed regulations concerning the kind of case already covered by the general provisions of Articles 6, 7 and 10.

Other members of the Committee considered that it was, nevertheless, important to include Article 8 in the text of Alternatives A and A/2, since it had the advantage of excluding, even in the case of war or threat to the life of the nation, any derogation of certain fundamental rights, and because the procedure laid down in paragraph 3 could prove to be useful for the protection of Human Rights in exceptional circumstances.¹⁵

The Committee of Ministers referred the drafts adopted by the Committee of Experts to the Conference of Senior Officials, which met in June. It combined the two drafts, basing itself upon the derogation clause contained in the version derived from the Consultative Assembly text. In paragraph 1, the words 'the interests of the people' were changed to 'the life of the nation' and a comma was inserted after the word 'situation'. The numbers of the articles listed in paragraph 2 were also changed to take into account other modifications to the draft.¹⁶ The Committee decided that the derogation provision belonged after the articles in which the rights were defined.¹⁷ The Committee of Ministers itself made some further amendments when it met in August. In paragraph 1, the word 'limited' became 'required', the words 'or from Articles' were added to paragraph 2, and in paragraph 3 the phrase 'shall inform the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe fully' was changed to 'shall keep the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe fully informed'.¹⁸

¹⁴ Appendix to the Report of the Committee of Experts on Human Rights: Draft Convention of Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 16 March 1950, Doc. C/WP 1 (50) 15 appendix, CM/WP 1 (50) 14 revised, A 925, IV TP 50-79, at p. 56.

¹⁵ Report to the Committee of Ministers submitted by the Committee of Experts Instructed to Draw Up a Draft Convention of Collective Guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Doc. CM/WP 1 (5) 15, A 924, IV TP 2-55, at p. 30.

¹⁶ Draft Convention annexed to the Report [of the Conference of Senior Officials], Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19 annex, CM/WP 4 (50) 16 rev., A 1452, IV TP 274-95, at pp. 280-2.

The Consultative Assembly met again in August 1950 to consider the final version of the Convention. Speaking as rapporteur of the Legal Committee, Sir David Maxwell Fyfe of the United Kingdom explained to the plenary Assembly:

There are certain rights which even in time of war or national emergency the Committee of Ministers do not suggest should be abrogated. They are the rights of safety of life, freedom from torture, and fundamental rights of that sort. Therefore, we took that as our guide, and we suggest that with regard to these rights there cannot be serious argument that the individual should not have the right to complain. If these rights are so fundamental that they must exist even in time of war, then surely they are equally fundamental from the point of view of the individual having the right to complain.¹⁹

Henri Rolin of Belgium added the following comment:

In the course of an exchange of views some Members pointed out that in times of civil strife or of a threat of civil war some exceptional measures could, by virtue of Article 15 of the draft, be decided upon to deal with doubtful elements in the population which it would be intolerable to see brought up before an international authority on the appeal of those concerned... We were obliged, in view of this, to try to provide for a restriction of the right of appeal, whilst safeguarding it in the essential cases. In order to define these cases, we relied on the definition put forward by the Committee of Ministers itself, in the text of Article 15 relative to the state of war or state of siege. It recognised that even in these hypothetical cases some rights were so essential to our self-respect as well as to the respect for other persons, that, really, under no conditions could we permit any departure therefrom.²⁰

On 21 October 1950, two weeks before the ceremony in Rome at which the Convention was to be signed, A.H. Robertson of the Secretariat wrote to H.J. Downing, a Foreign Office official in London, proposing a few changes to the text of article 15.²¹ These were implemented by the Committee of Ministers prior to signature of the text. The references to 'any State' in paragraph 1 was replaced with 'High Contracting Party', the word 'can' in paragraph 2 became 'shall', the opening words of paragraph 3 were changed to 'Any High Contracting Party availing...' and the word 'enacted' replaced with 'taken'.

The heading 'Derogation in time of emergency' was added according to the provisions of Protocol No. 11.²²

There is no evidence that any consideration was given to enlarging the list of non-derogable rights when the various Protocols to the Convention were being adopted. Article 1 of Protocol No. 4, prohibiting imprisonment for debt, was intended to enlarge

¹⁷ Text of the Report submitted by the Conference [of Senior Officials] to the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19, CM/WP 4 (50) 16 rev., A 1431, IV TP 242-73, at p. 260.

¹⁸ Draft Convention adopted by the Sub-Committee, Doc. CM 1 (50) 52, A 1884, V TP 76-99, at p. 84.

¹⁹ Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 25 August 1950, morning], VI TP 74-143, at p. 80.

²⁰ Ibid., p. 126.

²¹ Letter addressed 21 October 1950 by Mr Robertson (Member of the Secretariat) to Mr Downing (Official of the Western Organisations Department, Foreign Office, London), VI TP 184-7, at p. 286.

²² Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(2).

the scope of the Convention in order to align it better with the provisions of the draft International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. The equivalent provision in the Covenant cannot be subject to derogation.

Analysis and interpretation

In declaring that some rights may never be subject to derogation, article 15 implies a hierarchy of rights. Paragraph 2 of article 15 excludes the possibility of derogation with respect to four substantive provisions, articles 2, 3, 4(1), and 7. In the case of the right to life enshrined in article 2, this is subject to 'deaths resulting from lawful acts of war'. Two other rights introduced by the Protocols to the Convention are made non-derogable: the abolition of the death penalty²³ and the protection against double jeopardy.²⁴ The derogation clauses in the other international instruments are somewhat more extensive. Like the European Convention, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights forbids derogation with respect to the right to life and the prohibition of torture, slavery, and retroactive criminal prosecution, but it also does this for imprisonment for debt, the right to recognition as a person before the law, and freedom of religion.²⁵ The American Convention on Human Rights builds on this list, adding the right to family life, name, nationality, participation in government, and the rights of the child.²⁶ Unlike the European Convention, neither of the others excludes 'deaths resulting from lawful acts of war' from the right to life.

Invoking article 15(2) of the European Convention, it is often suggested that the non-derogable rights are especially sacrosanct and that they form a hard core or noyau dur within the broader universe of fundamental human rights.²⁷ In this sense, the European Court has sometimes pointed to the non-retroactivity of criminal prosecution enshrined in article 7 ('No derogation is allowed from that provision even in time of public emergency threatening the life of the nation'²⁸) in order to underscore its importance. It has made the same point with respect to the prohibition of torture and inhuman or degrading treatment and punishment, noting the impermissibility of derogation as evidence that '[u]nlike most of the substantive clauses of the Convention and of Protocols Nos 1 and 4, Article 3 [it] makes no provision for exceptions and no derogation from it is permissible under Article 15 § 2 notwithstanding the existence of a public emergency threatening the life of the nation'.²⁹ The non-derogable status of certain rights is ²³ Protocol No. 6 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms concerning the Abolition of the Death Penalty, ETS 114, art. 3; Protocol No. 13 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, concerning the abolition of the death penalty in all circumstances, ETS 187, art. 2.

²⁴ Protocol No. 7 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, ETS 117, art. 4(3).

²⁵ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, (1976) 999 UNTS 171, art. 5(2).

²⁶ American Convention on Human Rights, (1978) 1144 UNTS 123, art. 27(2).

²⁷ See, e.g., Gérard Cohen-Jonathan, 'Universalité et singularité des droits de l'homme', [2003] RTDH 3, at p. 7.

²⁸ K. v. Germany, no. 61827/09, § 88, 7 June 2012; G. v. Germany, no. 65210/09, § 79, 7 June 2012; Jendrowiak v. Germany, no. 30060/04, § 48, 14 April 2011; O.H. v. Germany, no. 4646/08, § 107, 24 November 2011.

²⁹ A. and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 3455/05, § 126, ECHR 2009; Ramirez Sanchez v. France [GC], no. 59450/00, § 116, ECHR 2006-IX; Labita v. Italy [GC], no. 26772/95, § 119, ECHR 2000-IV; Selmouni v. France [GC], no. 25803/94, § 95, ECHR 1999-V; Assenov and Others v. Bulgaria, 28 October 1998, § 93, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-VIII.

also offered as evidence of their position as norms of customary international law and even peremptory norms (jus cogens).

The Human Rights Committee considered whether the non-derogable status of rights is relevant to determining whether they were immune to reservation. Its position is certainly germane to the interpretation of article 15 of the European Convention, given the broad similarities between the relevant provisions. The Committee explained that although 'there is no hierarchy of importance of rights under the Covenant', the fact that certain rights may not be suspended, even in times of national emergency, 'underlines the great importance of non-derogable rights'. The Committee noted that 'not all rights of profound importance, such as articles 9 [arbitrary detention] and 27 [minority rights] of the Covenant, have in fact been made non-derogable'. Moreover, it seems that the fact some rights are non-derogable does not indicate they are of such importance. According to the Committee, '[o]ne reason for certain rights being made non-derogable is because their suspension is irrelevant to the legitimate control of the state of national emergency (for example, no imprisonment for debt, in article 11). Another reason is that derogation may indeed be impossible (as, for example, freedom of conscience).'³⁰ It is of interest, however, that although freedom of conscience is non-derogable under the International Covenant, this is not the case under the European Convention. As for the principle of legality set out in article 7 of the European Convention, its inclusion in article 15(2) would seem to be at least partially explained by the fact that its suspension is irrelevant to the state of national emergency rather than its hierarchically superior importance.

The non-derogable status of certain rights is also associated with their claim to be jus cogens or peremptory. A jus cogens rule is defined in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties as 'a norm accepted and recognized by the international community of States as a whole as a norm from which no derogation is permitted'.³¹ The United Nations Human Rights Committee has noted that some non-derogable rights, in particular the prohibition of torture and arbitrary deprivation of life, are indeed encompassed in the jus cogens category.³² Their inclusion in the non-derogable category 'is to be seen partly as recognition of the peremptory nature of some fundamental rights ensured in treaty form in the Covenant'. But further caution is dictated in attempts to equate the two, because the category of peremptory norms extends beyond the list in article 4(1) of the Covenant, as it may also do with respect to article 15 of the European Convention.³³ Claims of peremptory status possess a certain logic when the right to life and the prohibition of torture and ill-treatment are concerned, but a note of caution should be struck in generalizing about an equation between jus cogens and non-derogable norms.

The Convention makes no explicit requirement that declarations of derogation be subject to some form of effective domestic scrutiny although, as the Council of Europe Commissioner on Human Rights has pointed out, '[t]he requirement is, however, easily discerned'.³⁴ According to the Commissioner, effective domestic scrutiny by the legislature and the judiciary represents 'essential guarantees against the possibility of an arbitrary ³⁰ General Comment 23, UN Doc. CCPR/C/21/Rev.1/Add.6, para. 10.

³¹ Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, (1980) 1155 UNTS 331, art. 53.

³² General Comment 23, UN Doc. CCPR/C/21/Rev.1/Add.6, para. 10.

³³ General Comment 29, UN Doc. CCPR/C/21/Rev.1/Add.11, para. 11.

³⁴ Opinion of the Commissioner for Human Rights, Mr Alvaro Gil-Robles, on certain aspects of the United Kingdom 2001 derogation from Article 5 par. 1 of the European Convention on Human Rights, CommDH (2002)7, para. 5.

assessment by the executive and the subsequent implementation of disproportionate measures'.³⁵ Mere parliamentary approval is not sufficient because 'the effectiveness of the parliamentary scrutiny of derogations depends in large measure on the access of at least some of its members to the information on which the decision to derogate is based'.³⁶

Time of war or other emergency

Article 15(1) permits derogation from some of the rights listed in the Convention '[i]n time of war or other public emergency threatening the life of the nation'. The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights allows derogation '[i]n time of public emergency which threatens the life of the nation'.³⁷ The corresponding provision in the American Convention on Human Rights refers to 'time of war, public danger, or other emergency that threatens the independence or security of a State Party'.³⁸ In the European Convention, the words 'or other public emergency' indicate that a 'time of war' is also one of 'public emergency threatening the life of the nation'. Put otherwise, a State should not invoke article 15 during 'time of war' unless there is also a 'public emergency threatening the life of the nation'. There is no case law confirming this interpretation of article 15 because no derogation has ever been claimed to react to a 'time of war'.³⁹

The derogation provision of the European Social Charter uses the same wording as article 15(1) of the Convention except that it specifies, in the Appendix, that '[t]he term "in time of war or other public emergency" shall be so understood as to cover also the threat of war'.⁴⁰ Protocol No. 6 to the European Convention does not exclude capital punishment 'in time of war or of imminent threat of war'.⁴¹ There is no guidance on the interpretation of these provisions in the case law or the Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 6.

According to Rusen Ergec, war as it is contemplated by article 15 of the European Convention '... peut être définie comme un affrontement armé d'une certaine envergure et d'une certaine durée conduite par des armées organisées sous la responsabilité des gouvernements respectifs dont elles relèvent'.⁴² When the Convention was being drafted, the concept of 'war' under international law was still a rather meaningful one, but it has since fallen into desuetude. Today, the preferred term is 'armed conflict'.⁴³ A widely accepted definition developed by the Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia states that 'an armed conflict exists whenever there is a ³⁵ Ibid., para. 8.

³⁶ Ibid., para. 12.

³⁷ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, (1976) 999 UNTS 171, art. 5(1).

³⁸ American Convention on Human Rights, (1978) 1144 UNTS 123, art. 27(1).

³⁹ For discussion of this issue under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, see General Comment 29, UN Doc. CCPR/C/21/Rev.1/Add.11, para. 11.

⁴⁰ European Social Charter, (1965) 529 UNTS 89, Appendix, art. 30; Revised European Social Charter, ETS 163, (1999) 529 UNTS 89, Appendix, art. F(1).

⁴¹ Protocol No. 6 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms concerning the Abolition of the Death Penalty, ETS 114, art. 2.

⁴² K.J. Parsch, 'Experiences Regarding the War and Emergency Clause (art. 15) of the European Convention of Human Rights', (1971) 1 Israel Yearbook on Human Rights 327.

⁴³ See Cyprus v. Turkey, nos 6780/74 and 6950/75, Separate Opinion of Mr F. Ermacora, § 6, Commission report of 10 July 1976.

resort to armed force between States or protracted armed violence between governmental authorities and organized armed groups or between such groups within a State'.⁴⁴

The words 'public emergency threatening the life of the nation' were initially interpreted in Lawless v. Ireland, the very first case to come before the European Court of Human Rights. The Court said that 'the natural and customary meaning of the words "other public emergency threatening the life of the nation" is sufficiently clear' and that 'they refer to an exceptional situation of crisis or emergency which affects the whole population and constitutes a threat to the organised life of the community of which the State is composed'.⁴⁵ In the Greek case, the European Commission referred to this passage and noted that the French version, which was to be deemed the authentic one and 'given weight', was slightly different: 'une situation de crise ou de danger exceptionnel et imminent...' The word 'imminent' was not found in the English translation.⁴⁶ Accordingly, it was held that the emergency must be 'actual or imminent', its effects must involve the whole nation, the continuance of the organized life of the community must be threatened, and the crisis or danger should be exceptional, in that the normal measures or restrictions, permitted by the Convention for the maintenance of public safety, health, and order, must be plainly inadequate.⁴⁷

Decades later, following the terrorist attacks of 11 September 2001, the European Court specified that '[t]he requirement of imminence cannot be interpreted so narrowly as to require a State to wait for disaster to strike before taking measures to deal with it'.⁴⁸ That case involved a notice of derogation submitted in December 2001, but the Court noted that the validity of the concerns of the British authorities were confirmed by the terrorist attacks in London in July 2005. It noted that the purpose of derogation was to protect against future risks. Therefore, the existence of a threat to the life of the nation was to be assessed primarily with regard to the facts known at the time of derogation. Nevertheless, the Court said it was not precluded from considering subsequent developments.⁴⁹ It also rejected a narrow construction of the words 'threatening the life of the nation' by which this must go beyond 'a threat of serious physical damage and loss of life' so as to menace 'our institutions of government or our existence as a civil community'. According to the European Court, a much broader range of factors may be taken into consideration, noting early decisions concluding that emergency situations exist although the institutions of the State do not appear to be seriously imperilled.⁵⁰

In its General Comment on states of emergency, the United Nations Human Rights Committee said that measures derogating from rights set out in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 'must be of an exceptional and temporary nature'.⁵¹ However, the European Court has distanced itself from this proposition, noting ⁴⁴ Prosecutor v. Tadic (IT-94-1-AR72), Decision on the Defence Motion for Interlocutory Appeal on Jurisdiction, 2 October 1995, para. 70.

⁴⁵ Lawless v. Ireland (no. 3), 1 July 1961, p. 27, § 28, Series A no. 3.

⁴⁶ Denmark, Norway, Sweden, and the Netherlands v. Greece, nos 3321/67, 3322/67, 3323/67, and 3344/67, Commission report of 5 November 1969, § 112, (1969) 12 YB 'The Greek Case' 1.

⁴⁷ Ibid., § 113.

⁴⁸ A. and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 3455/05, § 177, ECHR 2009.

⁴⁹ Ibid.

⁵⁰ Ibid., § 179.

⁵¹ General Comment No. 29, UN Doc. CCPR/C/21/Rev.1/Add.11, para. 2.

the possibility that measures of derogation continue for many years and that they cannot be held to be impermissible simply because they are not temporary in nature.⁵²

Not every emergency will constitute a threat to the life of the nation. The Court considers that the assessment of such threats falls primarily to the States Parties, a matter about which there is a wide margin of appreciation. 'By reason of their direct and continuous contact with the pressing needs of the moment, the national authorities are in principle better placed than the international judge to decide both on the presence of such an emergency and on the nature and scope of the derogations necessary to avert it,' the Court has said.⁵³ Such deference to the national authorities includes Parliament and the executive, but also the national courts.⁵⁴ However, the discretion accorded to States is not absolute and the Court retains a residual role of supervision where it weighs relevant factors, notably the nature of the rights affected by the derogation, the circumstances leading to the emergency, and its duration.⁵⁵

Practice

The United Kingdom has issued several notices of derogation concerning public emergency. The Convention had barely entered into force when, on 24 May 1954, the United Kingdom informed the Council of Europe of a state of emergency in Malaysia, Singapore, Kenya, British Guiana, and the Buganda Province of Uganda. It explained that the governments had 'exercised or are exercising powers to detain persons which involve derogating in certain respects from the obligations imposed by Article 15 of the Convention... [A]ll persons now in detention have been permitted in accordance with the provisions of the relevant Regulations to have their cases reviewed by a Committee under a judicially qualified chairman.'⁵⁶ In 1955 and 1956 it made similar declarations with respect to Cyprus, and in 1957 with respect to Northern Ireland and Northern Rhodesia.⁵⁷ For many years, the United Kingdom continued to submit notices of derogation and withdrawal of derogation with respect to Aden,⁵⁸ British Guiana,⁵⁹ Cyprus,⁶⁰ Kenya,⁶¹ Mauritius,⁶² Northern Rhodesia,⁶³ Nyasaland,⁶⁴ Singapore,⁶⁵ and Zanzibar.⁶⁶ Recently, the Grand Chamber observed that with the exception of these declarations by the United Kingdom between 1954 and 1966 respecting colonial uprisings, 'derogations made by Contracting States under Article 15 of the Convention have all made reference to emergencies arising within the territory of the derogating State'.⁶⁷

⁵² A. and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 3455/05, § 178, ECHR 2009.

⁵³ Ibid., § 173.

⁵⁴ Ibid., § 180.

⁵⁵ Brannigan and McBride v. the United Kingdom, 26 May 1993, § 43, Series A no. 258-B.

⁵⁶ (1955–56–57) 1 YB 48–49.

⁵⁷ Ibid., pp. 49–51.

⁵⁸ (1960) 3 YB 68–73; (1966) 9 YB 16–21.

⁵⁹ (1958–59) 2 YB 78; (1964) 7 YB 28–31; (1965) 8 YB 10–15.

⁶⁰ (1958–59) 2 YB, pp. 78–85.

⁶¹ (1960) 3 YB 82–91.

⁶² (1965) 8 YB 14–17.

⁶³ (1962) 5 YB 8–11.

⁶⁴ (1958–59) 2 YB 84–87.

⁶⁵ (1960) 3 YB 74–81.

⁶⁶ (1961) 4 YB 44–54, withdrawn (1963) 6 YB 32.

⁶⁷ Hassan v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 29750/09, §40, 16 September 2014.

With the beginning of 'the troubles' in Northern Ireland, on 25 September 1969, the United Kingdom filed the first of several derogations.⁶⁸ The last of them was withdrawn in respect of the United Kingdom and Northern Ireland in 2001⁶⁹ and for Jersey, Guernsey, and the Isle of Man in 2006.⁷⁰ In Ireland v. the United Kingdom, the Court considered the existence of an emergency threatening the life of the nation to be 'perfectly clear',⁷¹ given the existence of 'a particularly far-reaching and acute danger for the territorial integrity of the United Kingdom, the institutions of the six counties and the lives of the province's inhabitants'.⁷² After the Brogan decision, declaring the regime of detention for a maximum of seven days without the possibility of judicial control to be contrary to article 5(3), the United Kingdom made a declaration of derogation on 23 December 1988 and yet another one on 12 December 1989.

Following the terrorist attacks in the United States of 11 September 2001, the United Kingdom made a notice of derogation declaring the existence of 'a terrorist threat to the United Kingdom from persons suspected of involvement in international terrorism', noting in particular the presence within the country of foreign nationals involved in terrorist activities who constituted 'a threat to the national security of the United Kingdom'.⁷³ This declaration of derogation was sharply criticized by the Council of Europe Commissioner on Human Rights who said 'general appeals to an increased risk of terrorist activity post September 11 2001 cannot, on their own be sufficient to justify derogating from the Convention'.⁷⁴ The Commissioner noted that several European States long faced with recurring terrorist activity had not deemed it necessary to derogate from Convention rights. He said that '[d]etailed information pointing to a real and imminent danger to public safety in the United Kingdom will, therefore, have to be shown'.⁷⁵ The Commissioner pointed to the detention scheme in the relevant legislation: 'In so far as these measures are applicable only to non-deportable foreigners, they might appear, moreover, to be ushering in a two-track justice, whereby different human rights standards apply to foreigners and nationals'.⁷⁶ After issuing his Opinion, the Commissioner visited the United Kingdom. In his report, he said that terrorist activity 'not only must but can be combated within the existing framework of human rights guarantees, which provide precisely for a balancing, in questions concerning national security, of individual rights and the public interest and allow for the use of proportionate special powers'. He also noted that 'in the Terrorist [sic] Act 2000, the United Kingdom already has amongst the toughest and most comprehensive anti-terror legislation in Europe'.⁷⁷

⁶⁸ (1969) 12 YB 72–75. Other declarations were to follow: (1971) 14 YB 32–33; (1973) 16 YB 24–29; (1975) 18 YB 18–19; (1978) 21 YB 22–23; (1988) 31 YB 15–16; (1989) 32 YB 8; (1998) 41 YB 11.

⁶⁹ (2001) 44 YB 15–18.

⁷⁰ (2006) 49 YB 9.

⁷¹ Ireland v. the United Kingdom, 18 January 1978, § 205, Series A no. 25.

⁷² Ibid., § 212.

⁷³ (2001) 44 YB 20–23. Withdrawn (2005) 48 YB 12. See A. and Others v. The United Kingdom [GC], no. 3455/05, § 11, ECHR 2009.

⁷⁴ Opinion of the Commissioner for Human Rights, Mr Alvaro Gil-Robles, on certain aspects of the United Kingdom 2001 derogation from Article 5 par. 1 of the European Convention on Human Rights, CommDH (2002)7, para. 33.

⁷⁵ Ibid.

⁷⁶ Ibid., para. 40.

⁷⁷ Report by Mr Alvaro Gil-Robles, Commission for Human Rights, on his Visit to the United Kingdom, 4–12 November 2004, CommDH(2005)6, para. 6.

Ireland made a notice of derogation on 20 July 1957 concerning the Offences Against the State (Amendment) Act, 1940.⁷⁸ On 3 April 1962 it informed the Council of Europe that the derogation was withdrawn.⁷⁹ It made another derogation in 1976 with respect to the Emergency Powers Act 1976. Ireland said it was necessary to authorize the police to hold terrorism suspects in custody for up to seven days.⁸⁰

Turkey made its first derogation on 28 February 1961, explaining that the armed forces had taken over the country as a result of a 'revolutionary movement'.⁸¹ Two years later, Turkey submitted a notice of derogation informing the Commission that a state of siege had been proclaimed following a failed coup d'état.⁸² Many others were to follow.⁸³ Turkey notified the Secretary General of derogation on 6 August 1990 with respect to disturbances in South-East Anatolia associated with Kurdish separatist activity. Subsequent notices were issued in 1991 and 1992. The Court considered 'that the particular extent and impact of PKK terrorist activity in South-East Turkey has undoubtedly created, in the region concerned, a "public emergency threatening the life of the nation"'.⁸⁴

Following the seizure of power by the Greek military regime in 1967, a notice of derogation was issued.⁸⁵ Inter-state proceedings were taken by several European governments against Greece, in which the validity of the notice was contested. After a detailed examination, the Commission concluded that the evidence did not satisfy the requirement of a public emergency threatening the life of the nation. The Commission said that a situation of political unrest in the country was not 'beyond the control of the public authorities using normal measures' nor was it 'on a scale threatening the organised life of the community'.⁸⁶

Limitations on the right of derogation

States Parties do not have an absolute right to derogate from the Convention. Paragraphs 1 and 2 of article 15 impose limitations on the right of derogation. They must be 'strictly required by the exigencies of the situation', they must not be inconsistent with other obligations under international law, and they cannot apply to certain provisions deemed to be non-derogable. In addition, the Court has determined that measures of derogation cannot be discriminatory. In exercising its supervisory role, the limits on the Court's powers are 'particularly apparent' when article 15 is concerned.⁸⁷

⁷⁸ (1955-56-57) 1 YB 47-48.

⁷⁹ (1962) 5 YB 6.

⁸⁰ (1976) 19 YB 21-25. Withdrawn (1977) 20 YB 28-31.

⁸¹ (1961) 4 YB 54-58. Withdrawn (1961) 4 YB 58-63.

⁸² (1963) 6 YB 28-31. It was later extended: (1964) 7 YB 22-27. Withdrawn (1964) 7 YB 26-27.

⁸³ (1970) 13 YB 18-23; (1971) 14 YB 24-33; (1972) 15 YB 16-23; (1973) 16 YB 16-25; (1974) 17 YB 24-29; (1975) 18 YB 8-17; (1978) 21 YB 20-21; (1979) 22 YB 26-31; (1980) 23 YB 1017; (1986) 29 YB 12-13; (1987) 39 YB 18-19; (1990) 33 YB 14-15; (1991) 34 YB 14-15; (1992) 35 YB 16; (2002) 45 YB 17-18.

⁸⁴ Aksoy v. Turkey, 18 December 1996, § 70, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-VI; Bilen v. Turkey, no. 34482/97, § 46, 21 February 2006.

⁸⁵ (1967) 10 YB 26-45. For subsequent correspondence relating to the derogation by Greece, see (1968) 11 YB 10-35; (1969) 12 YB 38-73.

⁸⁶ Denmark, Norway, Sweden and the Netherlands v. Greece, nos 3321/67, 3322/67, 3323/67, and 3344/67. Commission report of 5 November 1969, §§ 143-144, (1969) 12 YB 'The Greek Case' 1.

⁸⁷ Ireland v. the United Kingdom, 18 January 1978, § 207, Series A no. 25.

'Strictly required by the exigencies of the situation'

The measures that are taken must be 'strictly required by the exigencies of the situation'. Although the Court shows very considerable deference to States in assessing the permissibility of measures of derogation, under the margin of appreciation doctrine it nevertheless exercises a degree of judicial supervision. The United Nations Human Rights Committee gave considerable attention to this restriction on the right of derogation in General Comment No. 29. It explained that the strict requirements of the exigencies of the situation relate to the duration, geographical coverage, and material scope of the state of emergency and any measures of derogation resorted to because of the emergency. Although derogation is 'clearly distinct' from restrictions or limitations allowed under other provisions, 'the obligation to limit any derogations to those strictly required by the exigencies of the situation reflects the principle of proportionality which is common to derogation and limitation powers'.⁸⁸ Although some provisions are specifically excluded from derogation, this does not mean that derogation is permitted to any other provision more or less at will. Indeed, in practice some other provisions may be non-derogable. The Human Rights Committee has said that it should be sufficient to impose limitations on freedom of movement or freedom of association, making derogation unnecessary.⁸⁹ According to the Committee, '[t]he legal obligation to narrow down all derogations to those strictly required by the exigencies of the situation establishes both for States parties and for the Committee a duty to conduct a careful analysis under each article of the Covenant based on an objective assessment of the actual situation'.

In the Lawless case, the Court examined the provisions of Irish law governing detention without trial, noting that they were complemented by various safeguards, concluding that this was consistent with the 'exigencies of the situation'.⁹⁰ However, in the Greek case, the Commission considered that deprivation of liberty without regard for the limits imposed by article 5, maintenance of extraordinary courts martial and denial of a right of re-hearing before the Court of Appeal to offenders against national security or ordre public was not strictly required by the exigencies of the situation.⁹¹ In Ireland v. the United Kingdom, the Court observed:

Above all, one is dealing with special legislation designed to combat a public emergency threatening the life of the nation; such provisions cannot be torn out of context without leading to arbitrary results. It was hardly possible for this legislation to forecast in a rigid and inflexible manner the frontiers of the demands of an inherently fluid and changing situation; the massive scale of the outrages and the large number of the persons arrested, detained and interned prevented the provision of guarantees similar to those required by the Convention. In 1972 and 1973, the British authorities attenuated the severity of the original legislation, thereby demonstrating their concern not to go beyond the "extent strictly required by the exigencies" of the circumstances. On this, a question of fact rather than of law, the said authorities enjoyed a margin of appreciation which they do not seem to have exceeded.⁹²

⁸⁸ General Comment No. 29, para. 4.

⁸⁹ Ibid., para. 5.

⁹⁰ Lawless v. Ireland (no. 3), 1 July 1961, pp. 28-30, §§ 31-38, Series A no. 3.

⁹¹ Denmark, Norway, Sweden, and the Netherlands v. Greece, nos 3321/67, 3322/67, 3323/67, and 3344/67, Commission report of 5 November 1969, §§ 201, 234, (1969) 12 YB 'The Greek case' 1.

⁹² Ireland v. the United Kingdom, 18 January 1978, § 243, Series A no. 25.

In another case relating to the conflict in Northern Ireland, Brannigan and McBride, the Court confirmed its assessment, holding that the United Kingdom had not gone beyond the strict exigencies of the situation when it authorized detention of suspects for up to seven days without any judicial control.⁹³ The applicants had argued that the measures were introduced in order to neutralize a judgment of the European Court holding such lengthy detention without access to a court to be contrary to article 5(3).⁹⁴

Then, in a Turkish case, the Court held that detention without judicial supervision for fourteen days was not strictly required by the exigencies of the situation. It found the period to be 'exceptionally long', leaving the applicant vulnerable to torture as well as to arbitrary interference with his right to liberty. The Court said the government had not adduced 'detailed reasons . . . as to why the fight against terrorism in South-East Turkey rendered judicial intervention impracticable'.⁹⁵ Referring to the discussion of the exigencies question in one of the Turkish cases, Judge De Meyer said that this showed the 'inanity' of the 'fallacious concept' of margin of appreciation in the context of article 15: 'Where human rights are concerned, States may permit themselves only what the Court considers permissible.'⁹⁶

Non-discrimination

The derogation provision of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights contains a phrase that is not found in article 15(1) of the European Convention on Human Rights: '... provided that such measures are not inconsistent with their other obligations under international law and do not involve discrimination solely on the ground of race, colour, sex, language, religion or social origin'. Although it did not refer to article 4(1) of the Covenant, the European Court found a similar condition to be implicit within the Convention pursuant to the principle of proportionality. It said measures concerning expulsion of terrorists 'were disproportionate in that they discriminated unjustifiably between nationals and non-nationals'.⁹⁷

Consistency with other obligations under international law

The drafters of the Convention were probably not particularly concerned about the existence of other human rights treaty regimes, where the provisions might not be the same. However, the great majority of States Parties are also subject to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which has its own derogation regime, one that is arguably somewhat more restrictive than that of the European Convention. In particular, article 4 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights requires that a public emergency be 'officially proclaimed', a condition not explicitly included in article 15 of the European Convention. According to the Human Rights Committee, this requirement 'is essential for the maintenance of the principles of legality and rule of law at times when they are most needed'. The Committee has explained that if derogation may be associated ⁹³ Brannigan and McBride v. the United Kingdom, 26 May 1993, § 66, Series A no. 258-B. Also Marshall v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 41571/98, 10 July 2001.

⁹⁴ Brogan and Others v. the United Kingdom, 29 November 1988, Series A no. 145-B.

⁹⁵ Aksoy v. Turkey, 18 December 1996, §§ 77–78, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-VI. Also Bilen v. Turkey, no. 34482/97, §§ 47–50, 21 February 2006; Demir and Others v. Turkey, 23 September 1998, §§ 49–57, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-VI.

⁹⁶ Demir and Others v. Turkey, 23 September 1998, Concurring Opinion of Judge De Meyer, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-VI.

⁹⁷ A. and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 3455/05, § 190, ECHR 2009.

with proclamation of a state of emergency with consequences, States must act within their constitutional and other provisions of law that govern such proclamation and the exercise of emergency powers.⁹⁸ The Council of Europe Commissioner on Human Rights has also addressed this issue to the extent that he has insisted upon the availability of mechanisms for domestic scrutiny of the proclamation of emergency measures.⁹⁹

In Brannigan and McBride v. the United Kingdom, the applicants contended that because official proclamation was a requirement of the Covenant, it was in a sense imported into the European Convention by virtue of the requirement of consistency with other obligations imposed by international law. The Court noted that the Secretary of State for the Home Department had made a statement in the House of Commons explaining in detail the government's decision to derogate from the Convention, adding that there was 'a public emergency within the meaning of these provisions in respect of terrorism connected with the affairs of Northern Ireland in the United Kingdom'. The Court said that the statement met the requirements of article 4 of the Covenant in that 'it was formal in character and made public the Government's intentions as regards derogation, was well in keeping with the notion of an official proclamation'.¹⁰⁰

Other obligations relevant to situations of war and national emergency may arise under treaties governing the law of armed conflict, as well as from sources such as resolutions of the United Nations Security Council.

Lawful acts of war

Derogation from four provisions of the Convention is not permitted. However, there is an exception with respect to article 2 of the Convention in that deaths resulting from lawful acts of war ('d'actes licites de guerre') may be excluded. This provision has not resulted in any case law. Nothing in the drafting history of article 15 assists in its construction. Nor is there any parallel reference in the derogation clause of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights that might be of assistance for the purposes of interpretation. If nothing else, the reference to 'lawful acts of war' in article 15(2) of the Convention confirms that those who drafted the instrument turned their minds to its possible application in wartime. This is also apparent from the reference to wartime in article 2 of Protocol No. 6. If the intent had been to exclude the application of the Convention during armed conflict, these provisions would not exist.

The term 'acts of war' does not appear in any of the relevant treaties, whether they date from before or after the adoption of the European Convention on Human Rights. It was used very occasionally during the negotiations of the Geneva Conventions in August 1949.¹⁰¹ The term also appears, but rarely, in national military manuals.¹⁰² Historically, the term 'act of war' had significance in the context of the jus ad bellum. It described conduct such as an armed attack that would initiate a state of war even in the absence of a ⁹⁸ General Comment 29, UN Doc. CCPR/C/21/Rev.1/Add.11, para. 2.

⁹⁹ Opinion of the Commissioner for Human Rights, Mr Alvaro Gil-Robles, on certain aspects of the United Kingdom 2001 derogation from article 5 par. 1 of the European Convention on Human Rights, CommDH(2002)7, paras 5, 8, and 12.

¹⁰⁰ Brannigan and McBride v. the United Kingdom, 26 May 1993, § 73, Series A no. 258-B.

¹⁰¹ Final Record of the Diplomatic Conference of Geneva of 1949, Vol. II, Section A, pp. 56, 57, 492.

¹⁰² Jean-Marie Henckaerts and Louise Doswald-Beck, eds, Customary International Humanitarian Law, Vol. II: Practice, Part I, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2005, pp. 117, 676, 677, 858, 1014, 1382; Jean-Marie Henckaerts and Louise Doswald-Beck, eds, Customary International Humanitarian Law, Vol. III: Practice, Part II, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2005, pp. 2548, 3103, 3622.

declaration of war. Even prior to adoption of the European Convention, the legality of the use of force by one State against another had been confined to the exceptional circumstances laid out in the Charter of the United Nations, namely measures authorized by the Security Council in the interests of international peace and security and the inherent right of self defence. Consequently, to avail of the 'lawful acts of war' exception to killing in the course of armed conflict, the use of force itself must be consistent with international law. In other words, a declaration of derogation from the right to life by a State with respect to the use of force against another State that is not in the exercise of the inherent right of self-defence or authorized by the Security Council would be ineffective. The lawfulness of the use of force would be assessed in light of international case law, notably the judgment of the International Military Tribunal,¹⁰³ the General Assembly resolution on aggression,¹⁰⁴ and the definition of aggression in the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court.¹⁰⁵

It is also possible to consider the term 'lawful acts of war' from the standpoint of the jus in bello. In this context, it refers essentially to means and methods of warfare. There is a very large body of treaty law as well as customary law applicable in this area, the primary instruments being the Regulations annexed to the fourth Hague Convention of 1907, the Additional Protocols to the Geneva Conventions of 1977, and the definition of war crimes contained in article 8 of the Rome Statute. There is a jus in bello reference to the term 'lawful acts of war' in the British Military Manual of 1958 that may well have been inspired by article 15 of the Convention: 'Assassination, the killing or wounding of a selected individual behind the line of battle by enemy agents or partisans, and the killing or wounding by treachery of individuals belonging to the opposing nation or army, are not lawful acts of war.'¹⁰⁶

Notification of derogation

A State Party availing itself of the 'right of derogation' is required to keep the Secretary General of the Council of Europe 'fully informed of the measures which it has taken and the reasons therefor'. It is also required to notify the Secretary General when the measures have ceased to operate and the provisions of the Convention are again being fully executed. Article 15(3), together with the principle of proportionality, impose upon States 'a process of continued reflection' on the necessity of the measures that they have taken in derogation from the Convention.¹⁰⁷

There are no formal requirements for the notice of derogation. Whether a declaration is necessary at all in order for a State to avail of article 15 is a question that has never been definitively determined and that was left open explicitly by the European Commission of Human Rights in Lawless.¹⁰⁸ In Cyprus v. Turkey, the European Commission declined to ¹⁰³ France et al. v. Goering et al., (1948) 22 IMT 411.

¹⁰⁴ Definition of Aggression, GA Res. 3314 (XXIX), annex.

¹⁰⁵ The crime of aggression, RC/Res.6, Annex I.

¹⁰⁶ United Kingdom Military Manual, 1958, para. 115, cited in Jean-Marie Henckaerts and Louise Doswald-Beck, eds, Customary International Humanitarian Law, Vol. II: Practice, Part I, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2005, p. 1382. For other references to 'acts of war', see ibid., pp. 117, 676, 677, 858, 1014; Jean-Marie Henckaerts and Louise Doswald-Beck, eds, Customary International Humanitarian Law, Vol. III: Practice, Part II, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2005, pp. 2548, 3103, 3622.

¹⁰⁷ Brannigan and McBride v. the United Kingdom, 26 May 1993, § 54, Series A no. 258-B.

¹⁰⁸ Lawless v. Ireland, no. 332157, Commission report of 19 December 1959, p. 75.

rule on the necessity of a declaration deposited with the Secretary General, but it held that article 15 'requires some formal and public act of derogation, such as a declaration of martial law or state of emergency, and that, where no such act has been proclaimed by the High Contracting Party concerned, although it was not in the circumstances prevented from doing so, Art. 15 cannot apply'.¹⁰⁹ Two members of the Commission dissented on this point, holding that article 15(3) imposed 'an autonomous obligation in the sense that its violation does not affect the valid exercise of the right of derogation flowing from the same article'.¹¹⁰

In Lawless, the applicant challenged the validity of Ireland's notification because it did not adduce the existence of a time of war or public emergency, nor did it 'properly' define the nature of the measure the government had taken.¹¹¹ Dismissing the argument, the Court noted that Ireland had provided a copy of the relevant legislation and that it had explained that the measures were necessary 'to prevent the commission of offences against public peace and order and to prevent the maintaining of military or armed forces other than those authorised by the Constitution'.¹¹² Although the Convention does not impose any time limit for the deposit of a notice of derogation,¹¹³ in Lawless the Court noted that notification was submitted without delay, in that case twelve days after the entry into force of the impugned measures.¹¹⁴

However, in the Greek case, the Commission found that Greece had failed to comply with the requirements of article 15(3). In particular, it had not communicated the texts of several of the relevant legislative measures, nor had it provided full information about administrative measures, including the number of persons arrested and detained without court order. In addition, the Commission considered that a delay of more than four months from the time the measures were taken to the filing of the notification of derogation was not consistent with article 15(3).¹¹⁵

In Turkish cases, the Court rejected the claim that measures were sheltered by legislation contemplated by a declaration of derogation. The legislation Turkey had listed in its derogation did not apply to the provinces or urban centres where the alleged infringements of the Convention had occurred. The Court said it 'would be working against the object and purpose of that provision if, when assessing the territorial scope of the derogation concerned, it were to extend its effects to a part of Turkish territory not explicitly named in the notice of derogation'.¹¹⁶

In contrast with article 4(3) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, article 15 of the Convention does not formally oblige the Secretary General to inform the ¹⁰⁹ Cyprus v. Turkey, nos 6780/74 and 6950/75, § 527, Commission report of 10 July 1976.

¹¹⁰ Ibid., Dissenting Opinion of Mr G. Sperduti, joined by Mr S. Trechsel, on art. 15 of the Convention, § 3.

¹¹¹ Lawless v. Ireland (no. 3), 1 July 1961, p. 31, § 44, Series A no. 3.

¹¹² Ibid., § 47.

¹¹³ Denmark, Norway, Sweden, and the Netherlands v. Greece, nos 3321/67, 3322/67, 3323/67, and 3344/67, Commission report of 5 November 1969, § 43, (1969) 12 YB 'The Greek case' 1.

¹¹⁴ Lawless v. Ireland (no. 3), 1 July 1961, p. 32, § 47, Series A no. 3.

¹¹⁵ Denmark, Norway, Sweden, and the Netherlands v. Greece, nos 3321/67, 3322/67, 3323/67, and 3344/67, Commission report of 5 November 1969, § 45, (1969) 12 YB 'The Greek case' 1.

¹¹⁶ Sakik and Others v. Turkey, 26 November 1997, § 39, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-VII; Abdülşamet Yaman v. Turkey, no. 32446/96, § 69, 2 November 2004; Bilen v. Turkey, no. 34482/97, § 44, 21 February 2006; Şimşek v. Turkey, no. 28010/95, § 47, Commission report of 1 March 1999.

other States parties of a notice of derogation. However, the case law of the European Commission on Human Rights declares this to be a requirement.¹¹⁷

Reservations and declarations

France formulated a reservation to the Convention:

to the effect, firstly, that the circumstances specified in Article 16 of the Constitution regarding the implementation of that Article, in Section I of the Act of 3 April 1878 and the Act of 9 August 1849 regarding proclamation of a state of siege, and in Section I of Act No. 55-385 of 3 April 1955 regarding proclamation of a state of emergency, and in which it is permissible to apply the provisions of those texts, must be understood as complying with the purpose of Article 15 of the Convention and that, secondly, for the interpretation and application of Article 16 of the Constitution of the Republic, the terms 'to the extent strictly required by the exigencies of the situation' shall not restrict the power of the President of the Republic to take 'the measures required by the circumstances'.¹¹⁸

Because of the objective nature of the Convention, the Court did not consider that France was barred from making an application against Turkey in which it challenged the validity of Turkey's derogation based upon article 15.¹¹⁹

Spain made an interpretative declaration to the effect that article 15 permits adoption of measures contemplated in articles 55 and 116 of the Spanish Constitution.¹²⁰ Andorra made a reservation to article 15 by which it is to be applied within the limits provided for in its own constitution. Article 42 of the Constitution sets out the mechanism for declaring an emergency and the length of time it may remain in force.¹²¹

Further reading

- Jean Allain, 'Derogation from the European Convention of Human Rights in Light of "Other Obligations under International Law"', (2005) 10 EHRLR 480.
- Edward Cryslar, 'Brannigan and McBride v. U.K.: A New Direction on Article 15 Derogations under the European Convention on Human Rights?', (1996) 65 Nordic Journal of International Law 91.
- Joan Fitzpatrick, Human Rights in Crisis: The International System for Protecting Human Rights during States of Emergency, Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 1994.
- Cees Flinterman, 'Derogation from the Rights and Freedoms in Case of a Public Emergency (Article 15)', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 1053-75.
- Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 419-26.
- L.C. Green, 'Derogation of Human Rights in Emergency Situations', (1978) 16 Canadian Yearbook of International Law 92.
- Oren Gross, 'Once More unto the Breach: The Systemic Failure of Applying the European Convention on Human Rights to Entrenched Emergencies', (1998) 23 Yale Journal of International Law 437.

¹¹⁷ Denmark, Norway, Sweden, and the Netherlands v. Greece, nos 3321/67, 3322/67, 3323/67, and 3344/67, Commission decision of 24 January 1968, (1968) 11 YB 690, Collection 25, p. 92, § 45.

¹¹⁸ (1974) 17 YB 4-5.

¹¹⁹ France, Norway, Denmark, Sweden, and the Netherlands v. Turkey, nos 9940-9944/82, Commission decision of 6 December 1983, (1983) 26 YB COMM.EUR.JURIS. 1, DR 35, p. 143, at p. 169.

¹²⁰ (1979) 22 YB 24-25.

¹²¹ (1996) 39 YB 19.

- Oren Gross and Fionnuala Ní Aoláin, 'From Discretion to Scrutiny: Revisiting the Application of the Margin of Appreciation Doctrine in the Context of Article 15 of the European Convention on Human Rights', (2001) 23 Human Rights Quarterly 625.
- Oren Gross and Fionnuala Ní Aoláin, Law in Times of Crisis: Emergency Powers in Theory and Practice, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2006.
- Harris et al., Law of the European Convention, pp. 617–43.
- Joan F. Hartman, 'Derogation from Human Rights Treaties in Public Emergencies—A Critique of Implementation by the European Commission and Court of Human Rights and the Human Rights Committee of the United Nations', (1981) 22 Harvard International Law Journal 1.
- Virginia Helen Henning, 'Anti-Terrorism, Crime and Security Act 2001: Has the United Kingdom Made a Valid Derogation from the European Convention on Human Rights?', (2001–2) 17 American University International Law Review 1263.
- Stefan Kirchner, 'Human Rights Guarantees During States of Emergency: The European Convention on Human Rights', (2010) 3 Baltic Journal of Law and Politics 1.
- Ronald St. J. Macdonald, 'Protecting Human Rights in Emergency Situations: Making Article 15 work', in Mahoney et al., Mélanges Ryssdal, pp. 817–36.
- Susan Marks, 'Civil Liberties at the Margin: The UK Derogation and the European Court of Human Rights', (1995) 15 Oxford Journal of Legal Studies 69.
- Aly Mokhtar, 'Human Rights Obligations v. Derogations: Article 15 of the European Convention on Human Rights', (2004) 8 International Journal of Human Rights 64.
- M. O'Boyle, 'The Margin of Appreciation and Derogation under Article 15: Ritual Incantation or Principle', (1998) HRLJ 23.
- Jaime Oràà, Human Rights in States of Emergency in International Law, New York: Oxford University Press, 1992.
- K.J. Parsch, 'Experiences Regarding the War and Emergency Clause (art. 15) of the European Convention of Human Rights', (1971) 1 Israel Yearbook on Human Rights 327.
- João de Deus Pinheiro Farinha, 'L'article 15 de la Convention', in Franz Matscher and Herbert Petzold, eds, Protection des droits de l'homme: La dimension européenne. Mélanges en l'honneur de Gérard J. Wiarda, Cologne: Carl Heymanns, 1988, pp. 521–9.
- A.H. Robertson, 'The First Case before the European Court of Human Rights: Lawless v. The Government of Ireland', (1960) 36 British Year Book of International Law 343.
- Christoph Schreuer, 'Derogation of Human Rights in Situations of Public Emergency: The Experience of the European Convention on Human Rights', (1982) 9 Yale Journal of World Public Order 113.
- Paul Tavernier, 'Article 15', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 489–503.
- Mohamed M. El Zeidy, 'ECHR and States of Emergency: Article 15—A Domestic Power of Derogation from Human Rights Obligations', (2003) 4 San Diego International Law Journal 277.

Article 16. Restrictions on political activity of aliens/Restrictions à l'activité politique des étrangers

Nothing in Articles 10, 11 and 14 shall be regarded as preventing the High Contracting Parties from imposing restrictions on the political activity of aliens.

Aucune des dispositions des articles 10, 11 et 14 ne peut être considérée comme interdisant aux Hautes Parties Contractantes d'imposer des restrictions à l'activité politique des étrangers.

Introductory comments

The prohibition on political activity of 'aliens' (in French, étrangers) is unique to the European Convention within the corpus of international human rights law. In a report issued in 1994, the European Commission of Human Rights as much as described article 16 as an anachronism, a provision that reflected 'une conception prédominante à l'époque en droit international, autorisant de façon générale et illimitée des restrictions aux activités politiques des étrangers'.¹ It is not without interest that the European Union Charter of Fundamental Rights contemplates no similar limitation on political participation. Only one provision of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, concerning participation in democratic elections, expressly excludes non-nationals.²

Drafting of the provision

The notion that the Convention might not apply equally to everyone within the jurisdiction of a State Party had been contemplated by the Consultative Assembly, but in the context of the ancestor of article 1 of the Convention. There were discussions about whether it would only cover those who were resident or domiciled within the country.³

The Committee of Ministers established a Committee of Experts to study the draft of the Consultative Assembly, with the instruction that it should consider the work of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights on the human rights Covenant. But there was nothing in the draft Covenant of any relevance to the issue of excluding the political activity of aliens. The Committee of Experts, meeting in February 1950, introduced a provision by which some rights could be subject to 'particular rules' with respect to non-nationals.⁴ The proposal originated in the Sub-Committee established to assess proposed

¹ Piermont v. France, nos 15773/89 and 15774/89, § 58, Commission report of 20 January 1994.

² Universal Declaration of Human Rights, GA Res. 217 A (III), UN Doc. A/810, art. 21.

³ Proposals by Mr P.H. Teitgen, Rapporteur, 29 August 1949, Doc. A 116, I TP 166–8; Minutes of the Sitting [of the Committee for Legal and Administrative Affairs of the Consultative Assembly, 29 August 1949], Doc. A 142, I TP 170–3, at pp. 170–2; Minutes of the Sitting [of the Committee for Legal and Administrative Affairs of the Consultative Assembly, 31 August 1949], Doc. A 199, I TP 182–3.

⁴ Draft text of the first section of a draft Convention based on the work of the Consultative Assembly, Doc. A 809, III TP 220–31, at p. 224; Preliminary Draft Convention for the Maintenance and Further Realisation of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 15 February 1950, Doc. A 833, III TP 236–46, at p. 238; Preliminary Draft Convention, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 14, A 932, III TP 312–35, at pp. 322–4.

amendments. Its Report explained that 'since certain of the rights enumerated under Article 2 cannot be guaranteed to aliens without restrictions... a reference to these restrictions should be inserted'.⁵ The Committee proposed the following: 'Each state shall be competent to establish the particular rules applicable within its territory for the enurement [sic] and exercise of the rights enumerated in Article 2, para. 3, 6, 7, 8 and 9 by persons who are not its nationals, subject to the principles set out in Article 9'.⁶ The substantive provisions referred to dealt with the prohibition of slavery, servitude and the slave trade, freedom of expression, freedom of peaceful assembly and association, and the right to form and join trade unions. Article 9, which said 'the protection provided by this Convention [should] ensure that the rules issued by each State for the organisation of the exercise of these secured rights and freedoms within its territory, as well as the application of these rules, are in accordance with the general principles of law as recognised by civilised nations', did not survive to the final draft of the Convention. In its report on its first session, the Committee of Experts said that the aim of the text was 'to make provision for the fact that, in accordance with a universally admitted practice, the exercise of the fundamental rights by foreigners (non-nationals) may be subject to certain restrictions not applicable to nationals. These restrictions, however, must not violate the general principles of law as recognised by civilised nations'.⁷

A more modest form of this provision, stating that the protections of freedom of expression and freedom of peaceful assembly did not prevent imposing 'such restrictions as may be necessary to prohibit persons who are not nationals of that State from engaging in political activities', was submitted by Sweden during the second session of the Committee of Experts.⁸ The Committee decided to present two drafts of the Convention to the Committee of Ministers. The first, A and A/1, was close to the draft adopted by the Consultative Assembly that was in turn aligned with the text of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. The Committee of Experts proposed the following clause for draft A and A/1: 'The State shall be competent to establish the particular rules applicable within its territory for the enjoyment and exercise of the rights enumerated in Article 2, paragraphs 3(a) and (b), 6, 7, 8 and 9 by persons who are not its Nationals, subject to the principles set out in article 10'.⁹ The second draft Convention, labelled B and B/1, was very largely based on British proposals that were themselves a reflection of the draft covenant being prepared by the United Nations Commission on Human Rights. The draft for B and B/2 read: 'Nothing in Articles 10 [freedom of expression] and 11 [freedom

⁵ First part of the Report of the Sub-Committee Instructed to Make a Preliminary Study of the Amendments Proposed by the Members of the Committee, Doc. A 796, III TP 200-5, at p. 200.

⁶ Preliminary Draft Convention for the Maintenance and Further Realisation of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 15 February 1950, Doc. A 833, III TP 236-46, at p. 238.

⁷ Preliminary draft of the Report to the Committee of Ministers, 24 February 1950, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 1, A 847, III TP 246-79, at p. 266; Report to the Committee of Ministers submitted by the Committee of Experts Instructed to Draw Up a Draft Convention of Collective Guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Doc. CM/WP 1 (5) 15, A 924, IV TP 2-55, at p. 28; Appendix to the Report of the Committee of Experts on Human Rights: Draft Convention of Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 16 March 1950, Doc. C/WP 1 (50) 15 appendix, CM/WP 1 (50) 14 revised, A 925, IV TP 50-79, at p. 54.

⁸ Amendment to the British draft proposed by the Swedish Expert, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 12, A 921, III TP 308-9.

⁹ Appendix to the Report of the Committee of Experts on Human Rights: Draft Convention of Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 16 March 1950, Doc. C/WP 1 (50) 15 appendix, CM/WP 1 (50) 14 revised, A 925, IV TP 50-79, at p. 54.

of assembly) shall be regarded as preventing the High Contracting Parties from imposing restrictions to the political activity of aliens.¹⁰

In principle, the Conference of Senior Officials, meeting in June 1950, agreed to consolidate the two texts. In practice, the text it adopted was essentially identical to the second version adopted by the Committee of Experts: 'Nothing in Articles 10 and 11 shall be regarded as preventing the High Contracting Parties from imposing restrictions on the political activity of aliens.'¹¹ This was revised with the addition of a reference to article 13, which at the time was the non-discrimination clause.¹² No other changes were made subsequently aside from renumbering, and there does not appear to have been any further discussion of the provision by the Committee of Ministers or the Consultative Assembly.

The heading 'Restriction on political activity of aliens' was added by Protocol No. 11.¹³

Analysis and interpretation

Article 16's prohibition on political activity of 'aliens' is specifically addressed to articles 10, 11, and 14 of the Convention. It operates as an additional limitation to what is already set out in paragraph 2 of articles 10 and 11. Its formulation suggests an admissibility issue, permitting the State to object to an application on the grounds that the individual concerned is an 'alien'. The term 'alien' is also used in article 4 of Protocol No. 4 and in article 1 of Protocol No. 7. As an exception to some of the most fundamental provisions of the Convention and more generally because of its interference with participatory democracy, article 16 requires a strict construction.¹⁴

The provision of the Convention where the issue of discrimination against non-nationals is most important is probably article 3 of Protocol No. 1. 'Political activity' involves various aspects of the electoral process, including the right to stand for office, and to vote. Non-nationals are generally excluded, at least partially, from participation in democratic elections. It would have seemed logical to include a reference to article 3 of Protocol No. 1 in article 16 of the Convention, but of course there is an obvious chronological explanation why this is not the case. Article 16 was drafted and adopted first. Perhaps restrictions on the political activity of non-nationals in the electoral process seemed an obvious implied limitation for which mention was not even necessary. Possibly the drafters did not consider participation in elections to be 'political activity'.

Article 16 has been invoked only very rarely before the Convention organs. The leading case, Piermont v. France, concerned the expulsion of an environmental activist and pacifist who was also a Member of the European Parliament from the French overseas territory of New Caledonia. The Court dismissed France's attempt to rely on article 16, stating that this was not allowed because she possessed the nationality of a European Union Member

¹⁰ Ibid., p. 64.

¹¹ New draft alternatives B and B/2, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 9, A 1372, IV TP 182-91, at p. 190; Draft Convention appended to the Draft Report, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 16, appendix, A 1445, IV TP 218-40, at p. 226.

¹² Draft Convention annexed to the Report, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19 annex, CM/WP 4 (50) 16 rev., A 1452, IV TP 274-95, at p. 282.

¹³ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(2).

¹⁴ Piermont v. France, nos 15773/89 and 15774/89, Commission report of 20 January 1994, Concurring Opinion of Mr L. Loucaides Joined by Mr M. Pellonpää and Opinion partiellement dissidente de M. H. Danelius à laquelle se rallient MM. E. Busuttil, G. Jörundsson, Mme J. Liddy, et M. B. Marxer.

State. Moreover, the people of France's overseas territories participate in European Parliament elections.¹⁵ The majority of the Commission had been more explicit, finding article 16 to be inapplicable because she was not an 'alien'.¹⁶ Three judges of the Court dissented from the majority, insisting that Piermont was undoubtedly an 'alien' in the eyes of French law and that the term in article 16 was unambiguous. But they said that even if article 16 applied, it did not follow that the State had unfettered discretion to limit political expression without breaching article 10. They acknowledged 'the increased internationalisation of politics in modern circumstances' and said that article 16 should be considered within the analysis of permitted restrictions pursuant to article 10(2).¹⁷

Because article 16 has no equivalent in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, several States formulated reservations at the time of ratification so that the same legal regime would be applicable under the Covenant as under the Convention. Thus, Austria made the following reservation: 'Articles 19, 21 and 22 in connection with article 2 (1) of the Covenant will be applied provided that they are not in conflict with legal restrictions as provided for in article 16 of the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms.' Belgium, France, and Germany submitted essentially identical reservations. Similarly, Malta formulated a reservation invoking article 16: 'The Government of Malta also reserves the right not to apply article 19 to the extent that this may be fully compatible with Act 1 of 1987 entitled "An act to regulate the limitations on the political activities of aliens", and this in accordance with Article 16 of the Convention of Rome (1950) for the protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms or with Section 41 (2) (a) (ii) of the Constitution of Malta.'

Emmanuel Decaux has noted the frequent suggestions that article 16 be removed from the Convention.¹⁸ Among them is a proposal from the Parliamentary Assembly urging the Committee of Ministers '[t]o instruct the competent committee of experts to make proposals of the amendment of the European Convention for the protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms in such a way as to exclude restrictions at present authorised by Article 16 with respect to political activity on the exercise by aliens of freedoms guaranteed by Article 10 (freedom of expression) and Article 11 (freedom of association)'.¹⁹

Within the Member States of the European Union, legislation frequently allows for broad participation of non-nationals, at least those who are nationals of a European Union State, at various levels of local government. The Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union entitles 'every citizen of the Union' the right to vote and be a candidate in municipal elections to the extent that he or she is a resident 'under the same conditions as nationals of that State'. Citizens of the European Union are not to be considered as aliens in the scope of the application of Union law because of the prohibition of any discrimination on grounds of nationality in the European Charter of Fundamental Rights.

¹⁵ Piermont v. France, 27 April 1995, § 64, Series A no. 314.

¹⁶ Piermont v. France, nos 15773/89 and 15774/89, Commission report of 20 January 1994, § 69.

¹⁷ Piermont v. France, 27 April 1995, Joint Partly Dissenting Opinion of Judges Ryssdal, Matscher, Sir John Freeland, and Jungwiert, § 5, Series A no. 314. Similarly, Piermont v. France, nos 15773/89 and 15774/89, Commission report of Report 20 January 1994, Opinion concordante de M. C. A. Norgaard et de Mme G.H. Thune.

¹⁸ Emmanuel Decaux, 'Article 16', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 505-7, at p. 507.

¹⁹ Recommendation 799 (1977) on the political rights and position of aliens, 15 January 1977.

Article 16 does not therefore apply to European Union citizens in this context as regards the rights of aliens.²⁰

Perhaps there will come a time when European values have progressed to the extent that the right of non-nationals to be a full part of the democratic process is not contested, regardless of whether they are citizens of the European Union. This will be based on evidence of a commitment to be part of civil society, manifested through residence rather than nationality.

Further reading

- Juan Fernando Durán Alba, 'Restrictions on the Political Activity of Aliens under Article 16 ECHR', in Javier García Roca and Pablo Santolaya, eds, Europe of Rights: A Compendium on the European Convention of Human Rights, Leiden/Boston: Martinus Nijhoff, 2012, pp. 497–502.
- Yutaka Arai, 'Restrictions on the Political Activity of Aliens (Article 16)', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 1077–86.
- Emmanuel Decaux, 'Article 16', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 505–7.
- Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 427–9.
- Harris et al., Law of the European Convention, pp. 647–8.
- Hélène Lambert, The Position of Aliens in Relation to the European Convention on Human Rights, Strasbourg: Council of Europe Publishing, 2007.
- Richard B. Lillich, The Human Rights of Aliens in Contemporary International Law, Manchester: Manchester University Press, 1984.
- Carmen Tiburcio, The Human Rights of Aliens under International and Comparative Law, The Hague/Boston/London: Martinus Nijhoff, 2001.

²⁰ Explanation relating to the Charter of Fundamental Rights, Official Journal of the European Union, C 303/34, 14 December 2007.

Article 17. Prohibition of abuse of rights/Interdiction d'abus de droit

Nothing in this Convention may be interpreted as implying for any State, group or person any right to engage in any activity or perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms set forth herein or at their limitation to a greater extent than is provided for in the Convention.

Aucune des dispositions de la présente Convention ne peut être interprétée comme impliquant pour un État, un groupement ou un individu, un droit quelconque de se livrer à une activité ou d'accomplir un acte visant à la destruction des droits ou libertés reconnus dans la présente Convention ou à des limitations plus amples de ses droits et libertés que celles prévues à ladite Convention.

Introductory comments

The memory of the Second World War sits heavily on Europe to this day. It was the most devastating conflict in history, leaving tens of millions of Europeans dead, their towns and cities destroyed. It was the work of totalitarian regimes that had implanted themselves within some of the greatest nations of the continent. The Council of Europe was established in order to ensure there could be no repetition. As Rolv Ryssdal, a president of the European Court of Human Rights, once said the Court's role was both to provide a bulwark to totalitarian ideas and to 'sound the alarm at their resurgence'.¹ In one decision, the Court commented on the experience of Weimer Germany and the aftermath of its collapse. Adopting the Basic Law in 1949, post-war Germany 'wished to avoid a repetition of those experiences by founding its new State on the idea that it should be a "democracy capable of defending itself"'.² Or, as the French revolutionary Saint-Just put it in his legendary declaration, '[p]as de liberté pour les ennemis de la liberté'.

The European Convention's prohibition of the abuse of rights is derived from article 30 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights: 'Nothing in this Declaration may be interpreted as implying for any State, group or person any right to engage in any activity or to perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms set forth herein.' Charles Malik of Lebanon was author of the provision, first proposed during the December 1947 session of the Commission on Human Rights.³ Article 17 of the European Convention is almost identical to article 5(1) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights: 'Nothing in the present Covenant may be interpreted as implying for any State, group or person any right to engage in any activity or perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms recognised herein or at their limitation to a greater extent than is provided for in the present Covenant.' A text that is very similar to article 17 appears as the final provision of the European Union Charter of Fundamental Rights.⁴

¹ Rolv Ryssdal, 'The Expanding Role of the European Court of Human Rights', in Asbjørn Eide and Jan Helgesen, eds, The Future of Human Rights Protection in a Changing World, Oslo: Norwegian University Press, 1991.

² Vogt v. Germany, 26 September 1995, § 59, Series A no. 323.

³ Proposals submitted by the Representative of Lebanon, UN Doc. E/CN.4/74; UN Doc. E/CN.4/SR.41, p. 7.

Drafting of the provision

Nothing resembling article 17 appears in the European Movement text that constitutes the starting point of the drafting of the European Convention on Human Rights. However, the issue was certainly a live one from the first session of the Consultative Assembly. In the Assembly's Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions, David Maxwell Fyfe insisted that '[w]e do not desire by sentimentality in drafting to give evilly disposed persons the opportunity to create a totalitarian government which will destroy Human Right altogether. . .'.⁵ Leon Maccas of Greece spoke at length about the threats to democratic rule and the importance of recognizing duties as well as rights.⁶ Even Pierre-Henri Teitgen warned that '[a] certain brand of anti-communism, which claims to fight communism not with democratic methods but with dictatorial methods, sometimes puts in jeopardy the very principles of democracy'.⁷

As rapporteur of the Committee, Teitgen proposed the following: 'These rights and freedoms may in no case be exercised contrary to the aims and principles of the Council of Europe.' In addition, he moved a text patterned on article 30 of the Universal Declaration: 'Nothing in the Convention may be interpreted as implying for any State, group or person any right to engage in any activity or perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms set forth therein.'⁸ In the Committee, an amendment to replace the reference to 'Council of Europe' with 'United Nations' was defeated, eight votes to eight. A second amendment to omit the entire sentence was adopted by fourteen to two, with one abstention. A third, to delete the second sentence, was adopted by seventeen to nought.⁹ Explaining the decision to remove any such reference, the explanatory memorandum said:

M. Callias would have liked to word Article 5 of the draft Resolution in such a way that it would expressly authorise the States signatory to the proposed Convention to take special measures to deal with those who, under pretext of expressing their opinions have resort to violence, or else try to provoke it.¹⁰

The report said that the Committee considered that this point was covered by the general limitation clause, which is the ancestor of articles 8(2), 9(2), 10(2) and 11(2) and whose text resembles article 29(2) of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.¹¹

⁴ Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, 2010 OJ C 83/02, art. 54. See Explanation relating to the Charter of Fundamental Rights, Official Journal of the European Union, C 303/34, 14 December 2007.

⁵ Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 19 August 1949], I TP 38–154, at p. 118.

⁶ Ibid., p. 110.

⁷ Ibid., p. 40.

⁸ Proposals by Mr P.H. Teitgen, Rapporteur, 29 August 1949, Doc. A 116, I TP 166–8. Also Report presented by Mr P.H. Teitgen, 5 September 1949, Doc. A 290, I TP 192–213, at p. 206. See also Report [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions], 5 September 1949, Doc. AS (1) 77, I TP 216–39, at p. 228.

⁹ Minutes of the Sitting [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions, Consultative Assembly, 30 August 1949], Doc. A 167, I TP 174–80, at p. 180.

¹⁰ Report presented by Mr P.H. Teitgen, 5 September 1949, Doc. A 290, I TP 192–213, at p. 201.

¹¹ Ibid.

Lodovico Benvenuti of Italy complained:

Every time that we, in our country, modify our free institutions, in order to protect ourselves against preparatory activity on the part of the totalitarian parties, these latter raise an outcry and say that we violate Human Rights and the fundamental rights of freedom. The implementation of the proposed uniform law would also result in introducing into the constitution of every country the principles adopted by the United Nations in Article 30 of their Declaration of Human Rights... I am frankly surprised that such an important and fundamental principle, relating to the subject which we are discussing at this moment, has not been introduced into our Convention.

Last night I intended to submit an amendment to this effect, drafted as follows: 'No provision of the proposed Convention may imply the recognition of the right of a State or of an individual to undertake activity aimed at the destruction of the freedoms which are contained in it.' Unfortunately, I arrived half an hour after the expiry of the time-limit and the Bureau relentlessly rejected my draft Amendment. If the Rapporteur wished to propose it, he would perhaps be more fortunate...¹²

At Teitgen's request, Benvenuti withdrew his proposal and there was no such initiative.¹³ The Consultative Assembly draft convention contained no provision resembling article 30 of the Universal Declaration.¹⁴

The Committee of Ministers referred the Consultative Assembly draft to a Committee of Experts with the instruction that it was to take account of the work underway on the United Nations draft covenant within the Commission on Human Rights. In its 1949 draft, the Commission had included the following:

Nothing in this Covenant may be interpreted as implying for any State, group or person any right to engage in any activity or perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms defined herein or at their limitation to a greater extent than is already provided for in this Covenant.¹⁵

A report prepared by the Secretariat-General of the Council noted this discrepancy between the United Nations text and that prepared by the Consultative Assembly of the Council of Europe.¹⁶ In preparation for the first session of the Committee of Experts, in February 1950, Sir Oscar Dowson of the United Kingdom proposed a text similar to the one in the draft covenant.¹⁷ The Committee of Experts accepted the proposal, noting in the report of its February session that the aim was to protect States Parties from 'activities which threaten the preservation of the democratic rights and freedoms themselves. This provision was inserted at the request of the Turkish representative and was taken from the Draft Covenant of the United Nations.'¹⁸ It adopted the following text:

None of the preceding provisions may be interpreted as implying for any state, group or person, any right to engage in any activity or perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and ¹² Official Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 8 September 1949], II TP 14-274, at pp. 140-142.

¹³ Ibid., p. 208.

¹⁴ Recommendation No. 38 to the Committee of Ministers adopted 8 September 1949 on the conclusion of the debates, Doc. AS (1) 108, II TP 274-83.

¹⁵ Report of the Fifth Session of the Commission on Human Rights to the Economic and Social Council, UN Doc. E/1371(Supp.), p. 25.

¹⁶ Preparatory Report by the Secretariat-General concerning a Preliminary Draft Convention to Provide a Collective Guarantee of Human Rights, Doc. B 22, III TP 2-37, at p. 21.

¹⁷ Amendments to Article 2 of the Recommendation of the Consultative Assembly proposed by the Expert of the United Kingdom, Doc. A 798, III TP 204-7.

¹⁸ Preliminary Draft of the Report to the Committee of Ministers, 24 February 1950, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 1, A 847, III TP 246-79, at p. 266.

freedoms set forth herein or at their limitation to a greater extent than is already provided for in this Convention.¹⁹

At its second session, in March 1950, the Committee of Experts made only one minor change to the text, deleting the word 'already' between 'than is' and 'provided for'.²⁰ The report of the Committee contains the following comment:

The Turkish representative had mentioned the fact that there is in Turkey a law which forbids the diffusion of propaganda in favour of extremist ideas. In this connection the Committee stated that if, in any country, there exist special circumstances justifying certain exceptional restrictions of the freedom of expression, the right to apply these restrictions would be covered by Articles 4 and 6.²¹

The Conference of Senior Officials restored the words 'Nothing in this Convention' at the start of the provision, consistent with the original British proposal.²² There were no further changes of any significance to the text of article 17. In the Consultative Assembly, which met in August 1950, both Turkish and Greek representatives returned to the importance of measures directed at the protection of democracy. On 21 October 1950, two weeks before the ceremony in Rome at which the Convention was to be signed, A.H. Robertson of the Secretariat wrote to H.J. Downing, a Foreign Office official in London, proposing that the comma following 'group or person' be deleted.²³ This change was implemented by the Committee of Ministers prior to signature of the text.

The heading 'Prohibition on the abuse of rights' was added according to the provisions of Protocol No. 11.²⁴

Analysis and interpretation

There is some uncertainty as to whether article 17 operates as a principle of interpretation aimed at other provisions of the Convention or as an exception to admissibility. The opening words of article 17—'may be interpreted'—seem to indicate that the prohibition on abuse of rights is a principle of interpretation. Manfred Nowak, writing on the equivalent provision in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, has described the norm as a 'rule of interpretation'.²⁵ Thus, it is to be taken into account in the application of the substantive rights set out in the Convention. As a rule of interpretation, it is of comparable legal value or authority to other rules of interpretation that are ¹⁹ Draft text of the first section of a draft Convention based on the work of the Consultative Assembly, Doc. A 809, III TP 220–31, at p. 224.

²⁰ Appendix to the Report of the Committee of Experts to the Committee of Ministers—Draft Convention (16 March 1950), Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 14 revised, A 925, IV TP 50–79, at p. 54.

²¹ Report to the Committee of Ministers submitted by the Committee of Experts Instructed to Draw Up a Draft Convention of Collective Guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Doc. CM/WP 1 (5) 15, A 924, IV TP 2–55, at p. 18.

²² Draft Convention annexed to the Report [of the Conference of Senior Officials], Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19 annex, CM/WP 4 (50) 16 rev., A 1452, IV TP 274–95, at p. 282.

²³ Letter addressed 21 October 1950 by Mr Robertson (Member of the Secretariat) to Mr Downing (Official of the Western Organisations Department, Foreign Office, London), VI TP 184–7, at p. 286.

²⁴ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(2).

²⁵ Manfred Nowak, UN Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, CCPR Commentary, 2nd rev. edn, Kehl, Germany: N.P. Engel, 2005, pp. 112–17, on art. 5, para. 1.

considered in the application of the Convention. Possibly it benefits from some special status among rules of interpretation because it is set out explicitly in a distinct provision. Nevertheless, States often invoke article 17 as if it is an exception to admissibility. They contend that the issue of abuse of rights is a matter to be determined at a preliminary stage prior to addressing the application on the merits.

There is some basis for both approaches in the case law of the Convention organs. Although certain of the decisions do not say explicitly that abuse of rights is being considered as a principle of interpretation, they decline to consider the article 17 issue as a preliminary question and turn immediately to the merits, saying that they 'begin by considering the question of compliance with [the relevant substantive provision of the Convention], whose requirements it will however assess in the light of Article 17'.²⁶ Sometimes consideration of abuse of rights is postponed and the substantive right, generally freedom of expression or freedom of association, is addressed first because '[o]nly when that review is complete will the Court be in a position to decide, in the light of all the circumstances of the case, whether Article 17 of the Convention should be applied'.²⁷ Usually in such cases the Court will then conclude that there is no violation of the substantive provision and consequently that it is unnecessary to consider article 17.²⁸

Support for the approach whereby article 17 functions as a principle of interpretation can also be found in a dissenting opinion of three judges who stated that the applicant's expression was too remote for article 17 to apply but that 'the principle which underlies Article 17 is a factor which can properly be taken into account in the assessment of the exercise of the margin of appreciation and the existence of necessity'. The principle at stake, they said, was 'firm discouragement of the promotion of values hostile to those embodied in the Convention'.²⁹ In effect, they appeared to view article 17 as both a preliminary exception and an interpretative principle.

Some of the case law confirms an approach whereby article 17 is a preliminary issue going to the admissibility of the application in the strict sense. From this perspective, if article 17 applies, then there is no need for the Court to inquire as to whether or not the relevant substantive provisions of the Convention have been violated. Indeed, there may well be a violation, but the applicant is foreclosed from claiming a 'right to engage in any activity or perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms' in the Convention. Concern has been expressed that the application of article 17 in this way may 'disable the applicants from relying on Article 10',³⁰ implying that the article 17 determination not only precedes the examination of article 10 but obviates it entirely where article 17 applies. France successfully invoked article 17 as a preliminary issue in a case involving Holocaust denial.³¹

²⁶ Lehideux and Isorni v. France, 23 September 1998, § 38, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-VII.

²⁷ United Communist Party of Turkey and Others v. Turkey, 30 January 1998, § 32, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-I.

²⁸ Ibid., § 58.

²⁹ Lehideux and Isorni v. France, 23 September 1998, Joint Dissenting Opinion of Judges Foighel, Loizou and Sir Sir John Freeland, § 6, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-VII.

³⁰ Lehideux and Isorni v. France, 23 September 1998, Joint Dissenting Opinion of Judges Foighel, Loizou, and Sir John Freeland, § 6, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-VII.

³¹ Garaudy v. France (dec.), no. 65831/01, ECHR 2003-IX. Also Pierre Marais v. France, no. 31159/96, Commission decision of 24 June 1996, DR 86, p. 184.

The prohibition on abuse of rights applies to 'any State, group or person'. Frequently, individual litigants invoke article 17 in support of their applications to the Court, sometimes together with article 13, but always in conjunction with a reference to the article containing the substantive right that they invoke. These are dismissed at the admissibility stage, with the Court's decision simply acknowledging that article 17 was alleged without any additional comment. Possibly, some applicants who invoke article 17 also have the final words of the provision in mind, contending that the State has limited their rights to a greater extent than is provided for in the Convention.

In practice, article 17 primarily serves to shelter actions by States directed at individuals and groups that advocate terrorism, the overthrow of democracy, racism, and other forms of discrimination. Yet the words of article 17 indicate that it also applies to States that may themselves be charged with the abuse of rights. This might arise in the context of an inter-State application to the Court. Moreover, the text concerns 'any State' and not only a Contracting State to the European Convention on Human Rights. This may take on more relevance as the extraterritorial reach of the Convention continues to grow. Referring to the equivalent text in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, Christian Tomuschat described 'a provision designed to cover instances where formally rules under the Covenant seem to legitimise actions which substantially run counter to its purposes and general spirit. Thus, Governments may never use the limitation clauses supplementing the protected rights and freedoms to such an extent that the very substance of those rights and freedoms would be annihilated...'³²

The destruction of Convention rights

The provision concerning abuse of rights was considered in the first case to come before the Court. In Lawless v. Ireland, the Court said that:

the purpose of Article 17, in so far as it refers to groups or to individuals, is to make it impossible for them to derive from the Convention a right to engage in any activity or perform any act aimed at destroying any of the rights and freedoms set forth in the Convention; ... therefore, no person may be able to take advantage of the provisions of the Convention to perform acts aimed at destroying the aforesaid rights and freedoms...³³

These words have been cited repeatedly in cases concerning article 17.³⁴ The rationale for article 17 is deeply rooted in Europe's past and its experience with totalitarian and undemocratic regimes. The Court has referred to 'the very clear link between the Convention and democracy' and insisted that 'no one may be authorised to rely on the Convention's provisions in order to weaken or destroy the ideals and values of a democratic society'. It is not 'improbable that totalitarian movements might do away with democracy, after prospering under the democratic regime, there being examples of this in modern European history'.³⁵ According to the Court, 'the general purpose of ³² Delia Saldias de Lopez v. Uruguay, no. 52/1979, UN Doc. CCPR/C/OP/1, p. 88 § 12.3; Lilian Celiberti de Casariego v. Uruguay, no. 56/1979, UN Doc. CCPR/C/OP/1, p. 92, § 10.3.

³³ Lawless v. Ireland, 1 July 1961, § 7, pp. 45–6, Series A no. 3.

³⁴ Ould Dah v. France (dec.), no. 13113/03, ECHR 2009; Paksas v. Lithuania [GC], no. 34932/04, § 87, ECHR 2011 (extracts); Leroy v. France, no. 36109/03, § 26, 2 October 2008; United Communist Party of Turkey and Others v. Turkey, 30 January 1998, § 60, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-I.

³⁵ Kasymakhunov and Srybatulov v. Russia, nos 26261/05 and 26377/06, § 104, 14 March 2013; Refah Partisi (the Welfare Party) and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 41340/98, 41342/98, 41343/98, and 41344/98, § 99, ECHR 2003-II.

Article 17 is to prevent totalitarian groups from exploiting in their own interests the principles enunciated by the Convention'.³⁶

Because of its relationship to the fundamental values underlying the Convention, article 17 does not apply to reprehensible views or expressions that do not fit within this perspective.³⁷ A case filed against France concerning a satirical cartoon published in a Basque nationalist journal following the attacks on the World Trade Centre in September 2001 illustrates this. The cartoon showed the collapsed buildings with a caption, apparently inspired by a commercial advertising campaign, saying 'Nous en avions tous rêvé... Le Hamas l'a fait'. The applicant submitted that he wanted to depict the destruction of the American empire. He was prosecuted, together with the publisher, for 'apologie du terrorisme'. Declaring that article 17 was not applicable, the Court said that 'le message de fond visé par le requérant—la destruction de l'impérialisme américain—ne vise pas la négation de droits fondamentaux et n'a pas d'égal avec des propos dirigés contre les valeurs qui sous-tendent la Convention tels que le racisme, l'antisémitisme ou l'islamophobie'.³⁸ Then, examining the restriction on freedom of expression within the framework of article 10(2), the Court concluded that there was no violation of the Convention.³⁹ The provision was not applicable to a challenge to impeachment based upon article 3 of Protocol No. 1 by the former head of State of Lithuania.⁴⁰

Article 17 is obviously most relevant in cases involving articles 8, 9, 10, and 11 of the Convention. Indeed, while it may not be necessary 'to take away every one of the rights and freedoms guaranteed from groups and persons engaged in activities contrary to the text and spirit of the Convention, the Court has found that the freedoms of religion, expression and association guaranteed by Articles 9, 10 and 11 of the Convention are covered by Article 17'.⁴¹ In one decision involving restrictions on broadcasting interviews with leaders of the Sinn Fein Party in Ireland, the European Commission explicitly linked articles 10(2) and 17: 'By allowing, in Article 10 para. 2 (Art. 10-2), certain restrictions on the exercise of the freedom of expression, the Convention recognises the principle that no group or person has the right to pursue activities which aim at the destruction of any of the rights and freedom enshrined in it (cf. Article 17 (Art. 17) of the Convention)'.⁴² Article 17 is negative in scope, and cannot be invoked by a State in order to deprive a physical person of fundamental individual rights such as those in articles 5 and 6.⁴³ Article 17 'is applicable only on an exceptional basis and in extreme cases'.⁴⁴

³⁶ W.P. and Others v. Poland (dec.), no. 42264/98, ECHR 2004-VII; Norwood v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 23131/03, 16 November 2004, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 2004-VII (extracts); Witzsch v. Germany (dec.), no. 7485/03, 13 December 2005; Kasymakhunov and Saybatalov v. Russia, nos 26261/05 and 26377/06, § 103, 14 March 2013.

³⁷ Paksas v. Lithuania [GC], no. 34932/04, § 88, ECHR 2011 (extracts); Lehideux and Isorni v. France, 23 September 1998, § 53, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-VII.

³⁸ Leroy v. France, no. 36109/03, § 27, 2 October 2008.

³⁹ Ibid., § 48.

⁴⁰ Paksas v. Lithuania [GC], no. 34932/04, § 89, ECHR 2011 (extracts).

⁴¹ W.P. and Others v. Poland (dec.), no. 42264/98, ECHR 2004-VII (extracts); Garaudy v. France (dec.), no. 65831/01, ECHR 2003-IX; Pavel Ivanov v. Russia (dec.), no. 35222/04, 20 February 2007; Hiszb ut-Tahrir and Others v. Germany (dec.), no. 31098/08, §§ 72–75 and 78, 12 June 2012; Kasymakhunov and Saybatalov v. Russia, nos 26261/05 and 26377/06, § 103, 14 March 2013.

⁴² Purcell and Others v. Ireland, no. 15404/89, Commission decision of 16 April 1991, (1991) 34 YB 90.

⁴³ Ould Dah v. France (dec.), no. 13113/03, ECHR 2009; Varela Geis v. Spain, no. 61005/09, § 40, 5 March 2013.

⁴⁴ Paksas v. Lithuania [GC], no. 34932/04, § 87, ECHR 2011 (extracts).

There is a relationship between article 17 and the restrictions clauses that comprise the second paragraphs of articles 9, 10, and 11. Arguably, article 17 might be deemed unnecessary if the position that activities amounting to promotion of anti-democratic and discriminatory views may be restricted pursuant to the well-recognized principles of proportionality and necessity. Indeed, sometimes the Court will respond to article 17 by noting the close relationship with the issue of restrictions and limitations.⁴⁵ In a Belgian case involving racist propaganda, the Court said the content of the offending materials did not justify the application of article 17, but went on to hold that in prosecuting the applicants for disseminating the material Belgium had not breached article 10.⁴⁶ In that case, three members of the Chamber dissented⁴⁷ and it may well be that it was easier for the majority to address the matter under article 10, where there is more room for nuance in the proportionality analysis, than article 17.

In a Turkish case concerning dissolution of a political party, the Grand Chamber examined the matter under article 11(2). Concluding that the impugned measures were proportionate, it said there was no need for a separate discussion of the applicability of article 17.⁴⁸ Sometimes it seems artificial or awkward to separate the analysis under article 10 from that concerning article 17. In a case concerning two persons accused of the crime of 'publicly defending collaboration' by expressing sympathy for the collaborationist Vichy regime during wartime, the Grand Chamber said it would begin 'by considering the question of compliance with Article 10, whose requirements it will however assess in the light of Article 17'.⁴⁹ It proceeded by concluding that the conviction breached article 10(1) and was not justified by article 10(2); consequently, there was no need to examine the application of article 17.⁵⁰ The Court has reached similar conclusions in a case involving dissolution of a political party with anti-democratic views. The measures taken by the State were justified by article 11(2), and as a result there was no need to consider the application of article 17.⁵¹

In other cases, the Court has found insufficient evidence or an absence of evidence that the applicant had relied upon the Convention to engage in activity or perform acts aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms set forth in it.⁵² The Court refused to apply article 17 in the case of a racist organisation threatened with dissolution. It distinguished the case from decisions of the Commission and the Court concerning freedom of expression. It said that '[i]n these circumstances, the Court cannot conclude that the Association's activities were intended to justify or propagate totalitarian oppression serving "totalitarian groups"'.⁵³

⁴⁵ Féret v. Belgium, no. 15615/07, § 52, 16 July 2009.

⁴⁶ Ibid., § 82.

⁴⁷ Ibid., Opinion dissidente du Juge András Sajó laquelle declarant se rallier les Juges Vladimiro Zagrebelsky et Nona Tsotsoria.

⁴⁸ Refah Partisi (the Welfare Party) and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 41340/98, 41342/98, 41343/98, and 41344/98, § 137, ECHR 2003-II.

⁴⁹ Lehideux and Isorni v. France, 23 September 1998, § 14, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-VII.

⁵⁰ Ibid., § 58.

⁵¹ Refah Partisi (the Welfare Party) and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 41340/98, 41342/98, 41343/98, and 41344/98, §§ 136–137, ECHR 2003-II. Also Refah Partisi (the Welfare Party) and Others v. Turkey, nos 41340/98, 41342/98, 41343/98, and 41344/98, §§ 84–85, 31 July 2001.

⁵² Association of Citizens Radko and Paunkovski v. 'the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia', no. 74651/01, § 77, ECHR 2009 (extracts); United Communist Party of Turkey and Others v. Turkey, 30 January 1998, § 60, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-I.

⁵³ Vona v. Hungary, no. 35943/10, § 37, 9 July 2013.

Hungary invoked article 17 in response to a charge that it had violated freedom of expression by prosecuting a person for wearing a red star as a symbol of the international workers' movement. Hungarian law makes use of totalitarian symbols, including the hammer and sickle or red star associated with communist and socialist movements, a crime. The Court distinguished the case from decisions dealing with Nazi sympathizers. It noted that the Hungarian government had not argued that the applicant expressed contempt for the victims of a totalitarian regime or that he belonged to a group with totalitarian ambitions. According to the Court, the applicant was an official in a registered left-wing political party who wore the contested red star at one of its lawful demonstrations. In these circumstances, the Court could not conclude that its display was intended to justify or propagate totalitarian oppression serving 'totalitarian groups'. It was merely the symbol of lawful left-wing political movements. Unlike other article 17 cases, the expression that was sanctioned in the instant case was unrelated to racist propaganda.⁵⁴

The Court has applied article 17 to Islamophobic⁵⁵ or anti-Semitic⁵⁶ statements and organizations,⁵⁷ racist expression,⁵⁸ and to the advocacy of a political regime that discriminates against women.⁵⁹ It has also been invoked against an organization whose programme challenged the right of the State of Israel to exist, that called for its violent destruction and banishment and killing of its inhabitants.⁶⁰ The Court used article 17 with respect to an organization that called for establishing a regime that rejected political freedoms, proposing to ban all political parties that were not based on Islam and to introduce capital punishment for apostasy.⁶¹ Statements pursuing the unequivocal aim of justifying war crimes such as torture or summary executions likewise amounted to deflecting article 10 from its real purpose.⁶²

The Grand Chamber has spoken of a 'category of clearly established historical facts—such as the Holocaust—whose negation or revision would be removed from the protection of Article 10 by Article 17'.⁶³ Revisionist or 'denialist' writing that challenges the historic truth of the Nazi crimes has been held to run 'counter to the fundamental values of the Convention and of democracy, namely justice and peace'.⁶⁴ But the Court has resisted the proposition that when it is a feature of the historical context or the legal qualification and the responsibilities that are in dispute rather than the underlying facts, freedom of expression cannot be removed from the protection of the Convention by virtue of article 17.⁶⁵

⁵⁴ Vajnai v. Hungary, no. 33629/06, § 25, ECHR 2008.

⁵⁵ Norwood v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 23131/03, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 2004-VII.

⁵⁶ Pavel Ivanov v. Russia (dec.), no. 35222/04, 20 February 2007.

⁵⁷ Paksas v. Lithuania [GC], no. 34932/04, §§ 81–89, ECHR 2011 (extracts); W.P. and Others v. Poland (dec.), no. 42264/98, ECHR 2004-VII (extracts).

⁵⁸ J. Glimmerveen and J. Hagenbeek v. the Netherlands, nos 8348/78 and 8406/78 (joined), Commission decision of 11 October 1979, (1980) 23 YB 366, DR 18, p. 187.

⁵⁹ Kasymakhunov and Saybatalov v. Russia, nos 26261/05 and 26377/06, § 110, 14 March 2013.

⁶⁰ Hizb Ut-Tahrir and others v. Germany, no. 31098/08, § 73, 12 June 2012; Kasymakhunov and Saybatalov v. Russia, nos 26261/05 and 26377/06, §§ 106–107, 14 March 2013.

⁶¹ Kasymakhunov and Saybatalov v. Russia, nos 26261/05 and 26377/06, § 109, 14 March 2013.

⁶² Orban and Others v. France, no. 20985/05, § 35, 15 January 2005.

⁶³ Lehideux and Isorni v. France, 23 September 1998, § 47, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-VII.

⁶⁴ Garaudy v. France (dec.), no. 65831/01, ECHR 2003-IX; Witzsch v. Germany (dec.), no. 4785/03, 13 December 2005.

⁶⁵ Fatullayev v. Azerbaijan, no. 40984/07, § 82, 22 April 2010.

It seems that the actual motive of the applicant is germane to the analysis. Where cases concern freedom of expression, the Court seems concerned about what the applicants intend, rather than whether or not the impugned speech or publication is in fact properly subject to limitation or restriction in accordance with article 10(2) of the Convention. Evidence of this can be found in some judgments, where the Court speaks of activity or acts aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms set forth in the Convention.⁶⁶ In a case involving an extremist political party in Turkey, the Court said that 'it cannot be ruled out that the passages concerned may conceal a different political design from the publicly proclaimed one'. Nevertheless, 'given the absence of any concrete acts suggesting otherwise' it found no reason to doubt the genuineness of the party's programme.⁶⁷ Consequently, the State could not avail of article 17 because there was nothing to suggest the applicant 'relied on the Convention to engage in activity or perform acts aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms set forth in it'.⁶⁸

'Limitation to a greater extent'

The final words of article 17 prohibit 'any State, group or person' from engaging in an activity or performing an act aimed at limitation to a greater extent than is provided for in the Convention. In reality, and in contrast with the abuse of rights norm set out earlier in the provision, this is directed at States. It is in this context that many litigants invoke article 17, generally as an adjunct argument to a claim that one of the substantive rights has been violated. Almost invariably, the Court simply ignores such references to article 17. There are only a few examples in the case law of the interpretation and application of the final portion of article 17. They concern the claim that in spite of the absence of an explicit restriction or limitation clause, similar to what is found in articles 8, 9, 10, and 11, certain other rights enshrined in the Convention are not absolute, but are subject to implicit limitations.

In Golder v. The United Kingdom, the Court examined whether the right of access to a court was not only implied within the Convention but was also unlimited:

The Court considers, accepting the views of the Commission and the alternative submission of the Government, that the right of access to the courts is not absolute. As this is a right which the Convention sets forth (see Articles 13, 14, 17 and 25) (art. 13, art. 14, art. 17, art. 25) without, in the narrower sense of the term, defining, there is room, apart from the bounds delimiting the very content of any right, for limitations permitted by implication.⁶⁹

Judge Zekia spoke to the matter in his separate opinion:

Article 17 (art. 17) provides, inter alia, that no limitation to a greater extent than is provided for in the Convention is allowed to the rights and freedoms set forth therein. The relevance of this Article (art. 17) lies in the fact that, if right of access is to be read into Article 6 para. 1 (art. 6-1), such right of access will have to be an absolute one because no restrictions or limitations are mentioned in regard to this right. No one can seriously argue that the Convention contemplates an absolute and unfettered right of access to courts.⁷⁰

⁶⁶ Freedom and Democracy Party (ÖZDEP) v. Turkey [GC], no. 23885/94, §§ 46–47, ECHR 1999-VIII.

⁶⁷ Ibid., § 42.

⁶⁸ Ibid.

⁶⁹ Golder v. the United Kingdom, 21 February 1975, § 38, Series A no. 18.

⁷⁰ Ibid., Separate Opinion of Judge Zekia.

The Court returned to the point, with a less enigmatic discussion of article 17, in a case concerning the requirement that hearings be held in public:

It is true that the Court has recognised that to a certain extent the right of access to the courts secured by Article 6 (art. 6) may be subject to limitations permitted by implication (see the above-mentioned Golder judgment, Series A no. 18, pp. 18–19, para. 38). However, that recognition resulted from the fact that the right in question was inherent in the first sentence of Article 6 para. 1 (art. 6-1) but was not defined therein. Again, unlike the first sentence, the second sentence does already contain a detailed list of express exceptions. Bearing in mind the terms of Article 17 (art. 17) and the importance of the principle of publication (see, inter alia, the Sutter judgment of 22 February 1984, Series A no. 74, p. 12, para. 26), the Court does not consider that that principle may be regarded as subject to an implied limitation as suggested by the Government.⁷¹

With respect to article 5, the Court again considered whether there were implied limitations in Ireland v. the United Kingdom:

Paragraph 1 of Article 5 (art. 5-1) contains a list of the cases in which it is permissible under the Convention to deprive someone of his liberty. Subject to Article 15 (art. 15)—and without prejudice to Article 1 of Protocol No. 4 (P4-1) which the United Kingdom has not ratified—, that list is exhaustive: this appears from the words 'save in the following cases' and is confirmed by Article 17 (art. 17).⁷²

Case law of the Court recognizes that rights considered to be implicit may also be subject to implied restrictions or limitations. This seems merely logical. But the import of article 17 in fine is that no right set out explicitly in the Convention may be limited by implication.⁷³ The 'implied limitation' that the Court will acknowledge with respect to certain rights has another consequence. The Court does not apply the traditional notions of 'necessity' or 'pressing social need' in assessing the permissibility of such a limitation. Instead, it tends to look in a general sense at whether the limitation is arbitrary or lacks proportionality.⁷⁴

Contrasting approaches can be seen in the decision of the Commission and the judgment of the Court in Sporrong and Lönnroth. The Commission noted that it had already found that permits and prohibitions related to expropriation were lawful measures imposed in the general interest and with respect for proportionality. It said that the applicants had produced no evidence to show that the restrictions on their right to peaceful enjoyment of possessions were aimed at its 'limitation to a greater extent than is provided for in the Convention', and that consequently there was no violation of articles 17.⁷⁵ The Court adopted what has been called the 'absorption approach'.⁷⁶

⁷¹ Campbell and Fell v. the United Kingdom, 28 June 1984, § 90, Series A no. 80.

⁷² Ireland v. the United Kingdom, 18 January 1978, § 194, Series A no. 25.

⁷³ Jacques Velu and Rusen Ergec, La Convention européenne des droits de l'homme, Brussels: Bruylant, 1990, p. 155.

⁷⁴ Zdanoka v. Latvia [GC], no. 58278/00, § 115, ECHR 2006-IV; Sacomanno and Others v. Italy, no. 11583/08, § 49, 13 March 2012.

⁷⁵ Sporrong and Lönnroth v. Sweden, nos 7151/75 and 7152/75, Commission report of 8 October 1980, § 123.

⁷⁶ Yutaka Arai, 'Prohibition of Abuse of the Rights and Freedoms Set Forth in the Convention and of their Limitation to a Greater Extent than is Provided for in the Convention (Article 17)', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 1083–92, at p. 1092.

It dismissed any relevance of article 17 given that it had already ruled there was no violation of article 1 of Protocol No. 1.⁷⁷

Declarations

Spain made an interpretative declaration to the effect that article 17 permits adoption of measures contemplated in articles 55 and 116 of the Spanish Constitution.⁷⁸

Further reading

- Yutaka Arai, 'Prohibition of Abuse of the Rights and Freedoms Set Forth in the Convention and of their Limitation to a Greater Extent than is Provided for in the Convention (Article 17)', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 1083–92.
- Antoine Buyse, 'Contested Contours: The Limits of Freedom of Expression from an Abuse of Rights Perspective—Article 10 and 17 ECHR', in Eva Brems and Janneke Gerards, eds, Shaping Rights in the ECHR, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2013, pp. 183–210.
- Hannes Cannie and Dirk Voorhoof, 'The Abuse Clause and Freedom of Expression in the European Human Rights Convention: An Added Value for Democracy and Human Rights Protection?', (2011) 29 Netherlands Quarterly of Human Rights 54.
- S. van Drooghenbroek, 'L'article 17 de la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme est-il indispensable?', (2001) 46 RTDH 541.
- Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 430–3.
- David Keane, 'Attacking Hate Speech under Article 17 of the European Convention on Human Rights', (2007) 25 Netherlands Quarterly of Human Rights 641.
- Pierre Le Mire, 'Article 17', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 509–22.
- Harris et al., Law of the European Convention, pp. 648–51.
- Javier García Roca, 'Abuse of Fundamental Rights and Defence of Democracy (Art. 17 ECHR)', in Javier García Roca and Pablo Santolaya, Europe of Rights: A Compendium on the European Convention of Human Rights, Leiden/Boston: Martinus Nijhoff, 2012, pp. 503–26.
- Alphonse Spielmann, 'La Convention européenne des droits de l'homme et l'abus de droit', in G. Flécheux, ed., Mélanges en hommage à Louis Edmond Pettiti, Brussels: Bruylant, 1998, pp. 673–86.
- Jacques Velu and Rusen Ergec, La Convention européenne des droits de l'homme, Brussels: Bruylant, 1990, pp. 153–5.

⁷⁷ Sporrong and Lönnroth v. Sweden, 23 September 1982, § 76, Series A no. 52.

⁷⁸ (1979) 22 YB 24–25.

Article 18. Limitation on use of restrictions on rights/Limitation de l'usage des restrictions aux droits

The restrictions permitted under this Convention to the said rights and freedoms shall not be applied for any purpose other than those for which they have been prescribed.

Les restrictions qui, aux termes de la présente Convention, sont apportées auxdits droits et libertés ne peuvent être appliquées que dans le but pour lequel elles ont été prévues.

Introductory comments

Article 18 is one of the strangest provisions in the Convention. It has no counterpart in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights or in the human rights treaties adopted within the United Nations, nor is it reproduced in the European Union Charter of Fundamental Rights. The drafting history provides virtually no insight to assist in its interpretation. The case law is exceedingly sparse. Francis Jacobs wrote that article 18 adds little to the Convention other than confirming what is already set out explicitly or implicitly in other provisions or what is established under general principles of international law.¹ Vincent Coussirat-Coustere described it as 'une disposition apparemment inutile', although one that had served a role by influencing the interpretation of the Convention.²

Drafting of the provision

No doubt inspired by article 29(2) of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, whereby limitations are permitted in a general sense upon all rights, the European Movement draft recognized that rights were 'subject only to such limitations as are in conformity with the general principle of law recognised by civilised nations and as are prescribed by law for: (a) protecting the legal rights of others; (b) meeting the just requirements of morality public order (including the safety of the community), and the general welfare'.³ The Committee of Experts, which met in February and March 1950, began to develop specialized limitations clauses applicable to certain provisions in the draft convention. These are the ancestors of article 8(2), 9(2), 10(2), and 11(2).

Only in the Conference of Senior Officials on Human Rights, convened by the Committee of Ministers in June 1950, did the beginnings of article 18 appear. The proposal read as follows: 'The restrictions to the said rights and freedoms shall not be applied for any other purpose than those for which they have been adopted.'⁴ It was

¹ Francis Jacobs, 'To What Extent Have Restrictions on the Enjoyment of Freedoms Evolved?', in Proceedings of the 4th International Colloquy about the European Convention on Human Rights, Strasbourg: Council of Europe, 1976, pp. 187-210, at p. 199.

² Vincent Coussirat-Coustere, 'Article 18', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 523-7, at p. 527.

³ Convention for the Collective Protection of Individual Rights and Democratic Liberties by the States, Members of the Council of Europe, and for the establishment of a European Court of Human Rights to ensure observance of the Convention, Doc. INF/5/E/R, I TP 296-303, at p. 298, art. 3.

⁴ New draft alternatives B and B/2, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 9, A 1372, IV TP 182-91, at p. 190.

placed as the second paragraph of draft article 15, the first paragraph being the non-discrimination provision that eventually became article 14 in the final version. A revised version prepared by the Conference replaced 'the said' with 'these' and 'adopted' with 'prescribed'.⁵ The Report listed it as one of the 'general principles' of the Convention, describing it as 'the application of the theory of the misapplication of power'.⁶

The Committee of Ministers, meeting in August 1950, revised the text somewhat: 'The restrictions permitted under this Convention to these rights and freedoms shall not be applied for any purpose other than those for which they have been prescribed.'⁷ When the Committee of Ministers met in Rome in November 1950 to adopt the final text of the Convention, a Committee of Experts made a slight amendment to article 18, re-introducing the term 'the said rights and freedoms' in replacement of 'these rights and freedoms'.⁸

The heading 'Limitation on use of restriction on rights' was added according by Protocol No. 11.⁹

Analysis and interpretation

Article 18 imposes a limitation on the limitations, declaring that 'restrictions permitted under this Convention to the said rights and freedoms shall not be applied for any purpose other than those for which they have been prescribed'. The European Commission described article 18 as a provision dealing with 'abuse of restrictions', focusing its consideration on the purpose for which the State was imposing restrictions on a Convention right.¹⁰ Article 18 confirms a component of intention or purpose with respect to restrictions under the Convention: they may only be imposed for the purposes that are permitted under the relevant provision. For example, the Court has indicated that article 18 may inform the debate about 'lawfulness' in article 5(1) in this way.¹¹ It requires that restrictions not be 'arbitrary or effected for an ulterior purpose'.¹²

Subsidiary in nature, article 18 can only be invoked with respect to another provision of the Convention. It has no autonomous role.¹³ As the European Commission noted in an early Report,

Art. 18, like Art. 14 of the Convention, does not have an autonomous role. It can only be applied in conjunction with other Articles of the Convention. There may, however, be a violation of Art. 18 in ⁵ Draft Convention annexed to the Report [of the Conference of Senior Officials], Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19 annex, CM/WP 4 (50) 16 rev., A 1452, IV TP 274–295, at p. 282.

⁶ Text of the report submitted by the Conference [of Senior Officials] to the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19, CM/WP 4 (50) 16 rev., A 1431, IV TP 242–73, at p. 258.

⁷ Draft Convention adopted by the Sub-Committee, Doc. CM 1 (50) 52, A 1884, V TP 76–99, at p. 84; Draft Convention adopted by the Committee of Ministers, 7 August 1950, Doc. A 1937, V TP 120–45, at p. 130.

⁸ Report of the Committee of Legal Experts, 2–3 November 1950, Doc. CM/Adj. (50) 3 Rev., A 2531, VII TP 10–13.

⁹ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(2).

¹⁰ Sporrong and Lönnroth v. Sweden, nos 7151/75 and 7152/75, Commission report of 8 October 1980, § 123.

¹¹ Ashingdane v. the United Kingdom, 28 May 1985, § 45, Series A no. 93.

¹² Ibid., § 48.

¹³ Ilgar Mammadov v. Azerbaijan, no. 15172/13, § 137, 22 May 2014; Gusinskiy v. Russia, no. 70276/01, § 75, ECHR 2004-IV.

connection with another Article, although there is no violation of that Article taken alone. It follows further from the terms of Art. 18 that a violation can only arise where the right or freedom concerned is subject to 'restrictions permitted under this Convention'.¹⁴

The Convention allows rights to be restricted in a number of explicit provisions, of which the most classic are the restriction or limitations clauses in the second paragraphs of articles 8, 9, 10, and 11 of the Convention, and the equivalent provision in article 2(3) of Protocol No. 4. But there are many other ways in which Convention rights are limited. For example, the right to life, set out in article 2, is subject to the most notorious of all limitations, the possibility of capital punishment. Article 1(2) of Protocol No. 7 allows for expulsion of aliens even when procedural safeguards have not been fully complied with when this is deemed 'necessary in the interests of public order or is grounded on reasons of national security'. Moreover, implied restrictions or limitations on Convention rights have been recognized in the case law of the Convention organs with respect to many provisions, including the right to a fair trial¹⁵ and to free and fair elections.¹⁶ Finally, and perhaps most significant of all, are the restrictions and limitations contained in the provisions contiguous to article 18: the non-application of certain Convention provisions to the political activity of non-nationals in article 16 and the prohibition of abuse of rights in article 17. Arguably, derogation under article 15 might also be deemed a 'restriction' permitted under the Convention.

For example, in Kamma v. The Netherlands, the European Commission considered article 18 with regard to article 5, assessing whether detention was imposed for any reasons other than those permitted in the Convention. The applicant had been detained on remand in one criminal investigation. He claimed that this situation was exploited by the police in order to facilitate the investigation of another matter, with the result that detention was improperly protracted. After analysing the facts, and without any discussion about the interpretation and application of article 18, the Commission concluded that 'there has been no breach of Art. 18 read in conjunction with Art. 5 of the Convention'.¹⁷

There are few examples of violations of article 18 in the case law of the Court. Clearly, there is a simmering dispute among members of the Court about the evidentiary requirements. Some judgments speak of 'a very exacting standard of proof' with respect to allegations that article 18 has been breached. An applicant who charges that the State has a 'hidden agenda' or an improper reason for restricting rights 'must convincingly show that the real aim of the authorities was not the same as that proclaimed or which could be reasonably inferred from the context'.¹⁸ Mere suspicion that purposes other than those defined in the Convention lie behind an infringement are insufficient.¹⁹ The reason for ¹⁴ Kamma v. the Netherlands, no. 4774/71, Commission report of 14 July 1974, (1975) 18 YB 301, at pp. 316–22, DR 1, p. 4. Also Bozano v. France, no. 9990/82, Commission decision of 15 May 1984, (1984) 27 YB 118; Oates v. Poland (dec.), no. 35036/97, 11 May 2000; Gusinskiy v. Russia, no. 70276/01, § 73, ECHR 2004-IV; Ramishvili and Kokhleidze v. Georgia (dec.), no. 1704/06, 27 June 2007.

¹⁵ Golder v. the United Kingdom, 21 February 1975, § 38, Series A no. 18; Campbell and Fell v. the United Kingdom, 28 June 1984, § 90, Series A no. 80.

¹⁶ Zdanoka v. Latvia [GC], no. 58278/00, § 115, ECHR 2006-IV; Saccomanno and Others v. Italy, no. 11583/08, § 49, 13 March 2012.

¹⁷ Kamma v. the Netherlands, no. 4774/71, Commission report of 14 July 1974, (1975) 18 YB 300, at pp. 316–22, DR 1, p. 4.

¹⁸ Ilgar Mammadov v. Azerbaijan, no. 15172/13, § 138, 22 May 2014; Lusenko v. Ukraine, no. 6492/11, §§ 108–109, 3 July 2012.

¹⁹ Khodorkovskiy v. Russia, no. 5829/04, § 255, 31 May 2011.

this is that 'the whole structure of the Convention rests on the general assumption that public authorities in the member States act in good faith', although the presumption is certainly rebuttable.²⁰ Were the standard of proof not so high, 'the Court would have to find violations in every high-profile case where the applicant's status, wealth, reputation, etc. gives rise to a suspicion that the driving force behind his or her prosecution was improper'.²¹ On the other hand, direct knowledge of what the Court has called a 'hidden agenda' will almost invariably lie with the authorities. Evidence of improper motives necessarily relies on 'inferences drawn from the concrete circumstances and the context of the case'.²²

One of the handful of cases of a breach of article 18 concerned the criminal investigation of a Russian businessman who was in a bitter conflict with a State gas company. The Court concluded that the applicant had been arrested 'for the purpose of bringing him before the competent legal authority on reasonable suspicion of having committed an offence', as authorized by article 5(1)(c) of the Convention. In fact, he was being detained in order to pressure him to transfer shares in his business. Concluding that there was a violation of article 18 in conjunction with article 5, the Court said 'it is not the purpose of such public-law matters as criminal proceedings and detention on remand to be used as part of commercial bargaining strategies'.²³ In another finding of violation of article 18, also involving complex commercial matters, the Court considered that there was no reasonable suspicion a crime had been committed and that the arrest of the applicant was in reality directed to a lawsuit that he had filed.²⁴ But in a Russian case involving prosecution of very wealthy businessmen, the Court recognized elements of 'improper motivation' but said that this did not make the prosecution illegitimate 'from the beginning to the end'. It said the accusations against the applicants remained serious and that they had a 'healthy core', despite the 'mixed intent' of the authorities.²⁵

Some cases have involved political opponents of the government, although there has been some reluctance to ascribe the motivation of the authorities as being the targeting of their adversaries. Rather, it has focused on disputes related to the operation of the criminal justice system. The Court found that 'both the factual context and the reasoning advanced by the authorities' showed the actual purpose for the detention of the former Prime Minister of Ukraine, Yuliya Volodymyrivna Tymoshenko, to be 'to punish the applicant for a lack of respect towards the court which it was claimed she had been manifesting by her behaviour during the proceedings'.²⁶ In another Ukrainian case, the Court cited the reasoning of the prosecuting authorities as evidence they sought to punish the applicant 'for publicly disagreeing with accusations against him and for asserting his innocence, which he had the right to do'.²⁷

²⁰ Ilgar Mammadov v. Azerbaijan, no. 15172/13, § 137, 22 May 2014.

²¹ Khodorkovskiy and Lebedev v. Russia, nos 11082/06 and 13772/05, § 903, 25 July 2013.

²² Tymoshenko v. Ukraine, no. 49872/11, Joint Concurring Opinion of Judges Jungviert, Nussberger, and Porocki, 30 April 2013. Also Georgia v. Russia (I) [GC], no. 13255/07, Partly Dissenting Opinion of Judge Tsotsoria, 3 July 2014.

²³ Gusinskiy v. Russia, no. 70276/01, §§ 73–78, ECHR 2004-IV.

²⁴ Cebotari v. Moldova, no. 35615/06, § 53, 13 November 2007.

²⁵ Khodorkovskiy and Lebedev v. Russia, nos 11082/06 and 13772/05, § 908, 25 July 2013.

²⁶ Tymoshenko v. Ukraine, no. 49872/11, § 299, 30 April 2013.

²⁷ Lutsenko v. Ukraine, no. 6492/11, § 109, 3 July 2012.

In the Tymoshenko case, three judges wished to take this a step further, holding that the measures of detention resulted from 'the applicant's identity and influence as a leading opposition politician in Ukraine'.²⁸ In an application filed against Azerbaijan, a unanimous Chamber of the Court concluded that measures restricting the liberty of an individual were not applied for the purposes authorized by article 5(1)(c) of the Convention, that is, to bring him before a competent legal authority on reasonable suspicion of having committed an offence, but rather 'that the actual purpose of the impugned measures was to silence or punish the applicant for criticising the Government and attempting to disseminate what he believed was the true information that the Government were trying to hide'.²⁹

In the first Georgia v. Russia inter-State case, dissenting Judge Tsotsoria considered that article 18 had been violated with respect to the 'anti-Georgian campaign', whose real purpose was 'retaliation, employed for ulterior motives contrary to the rules of international law rather than a legitimate migration control measure as claimed by the respondent State'.³⁰ She relied upon the concurring opinion of Judges Jungwiert, Nußberger and Potocki in Tymoshenko v. Ukraine, where they said that 'in interpreting Article 18 of the Convention the direct link between human rights protection and democracy must be taken into account'.³¹

Litigants frequently invoke article 18 in support of claims that are founded in other provisions of the Convention and its Protocols. Almost invariably, the Court acknowledges the reference to article 18 but determines that it is unnecessary to address the provision separately.³² In one case, it briefly described the applicant's complaint, noted that the government had made no answer or submission on the point, and dismissed the claim.³³ In another, it observed that the Commission had found allegations based on article 18 to be 'unsubstantiated' and said only that it agreed.³⁴ The Commission had done no more than dismiss the complaint under article 18 without explanation.³⁵ In a case where an article 18 complaint was dismissed by the Commission with respect to one of two litigants, the Court said it would not consider the issue on its own motion with respect to the other applicant.³⁶

²⁸ Tymoshenko v. Ukraine, no. 49872/11, Joint Concurring Opinion of Judges Jungwiert, Nußberger, and Potocki, 30 April 2013.

²⁹ Ilgar Mammadov v. Azerbaijan, no. 15172/13, § 143, 22 May 2014.

³⁰ Georgia v. Russia (I) [GC], no. 13255/07, Partly Dissenting Opinion of Judge Tsotsoria, 3 July 2014.

³¹ Ibid., citing Tymoshenko v. Ukraine, no. 49872/11, Joint Concurring Opinion of Judges Jungwiert, Nußberger, and Potocki, 30 April 2013.

³² Navalnyy and Yashin v. Russia, no. 76204/11, § 117, 4 December 2014; Öcalan v. Turkey [GC], no. 46221/99, § 206, ECHR 2005-IV; Refah Partisi (the Welfare Party) and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 41340/98, 41342/98, 41343/98, and 41344/98, § 137, ECHR 2003-II; Orhan v. Turkey, no. 25656/94, § 402, ECHR 2002; Beyeler v. Italy [GC], no. 33202/96, §§ 127–129, ECHR 2000-I; Socialist Party and Others v. Turkey, 25 May 1998, § 55, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-III; Bozano v. France, 18 December 1986, § 61, Series A no. 111.

³³ Tahsin Acar v. Turkey [GC], no. 26307/95, § 245, ECHR 2004-III. Also Menteş and Others v. Turkey (Article 50), 24 July 1998, §§ 93–96, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-IV.

³⁴ Çakıcı v. Turkey [GC], no. 23657/94, §§ 115–117, ECHR 1999-IV. Also Akdivar and Others v. Turkey, 16 September 1996, §§ 98–99, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-IV.

³⁵ Çakıcı v. Turkey, no. 23657/94, Commission report of 12 March 1998, § 293.

³⁶ Sürek and Özdemir v. Turkey [GC], nos 23927/94 and 24277/94, §§ 65–66, 8 July 1999.

Further reading

- Yutaka Arai, 'Prohibition of Misuse of Power in Restricting the Rights and Freedoms (Article 18)', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 1093–100.
- Vincent Coussirat-Coustere, 'Article 18', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 523–7.
- Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 434–6.
- Harris et al., Law of the European Convention, pp. 652–4.
- Pablo Santolaya, 'Limiting Restrictions on Rights. Art. 18 ECHR (A Generic Limit on Limits According to Purpose)', in Javier García Roca and Pablo Santolaya, Europe of Rights: A Compendium on the European Convention of Human Rights, Leiden/Boston: Martinus Nijhoff, 2012, pp. 527–36.

SECTION II
EUROPEAN COURT OF HUMAN RIGHTS

MEMORANDUM

TO : THE PRESIDENT

FROM : THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE

SUBJECT: [Illegible]

1. [Illegible]

2. [Illegible]

3. [Illegible]

4. [Illegible]

5. [Illegible]

6. [Illegible]

7. [Illegible]

8. [Illegible]

9. [Illegible]

10. [Illegible]

11. [Illegible]

12. [Illegible]

13. [Illegible]

14. [Illegible]

Article 19. Establishment of the Court/Institution de la Cour

To ensure the observance of the engagements undertaken by the High Contracting Parties in the Convention and the Protocols thereto, there shall be set up a European Court of Human Rights, hereinafter referred to as 'the Court'. It shall function on a permanent basis.

Afin d'assurer le respect des engagements résultant pour les Hautes Parties contractantes de la présente Convention et de ses Protocoles, il est institué une Cour européenne des droits de l'homme, ci-dessous nommée « la Cour ». Elle fonctionne de façon permanente.

Introductory comments

The idea of an international court of human rights has inspired international lawyers and activists for at least a century. The Permanent Court of International Justice, created in the aftermath of the First World War, exercised jurisdiction over a limited range of human rights violations set out in treaties that had been adopted as part of the protection of national or ethnic minorities in Central and Eastern Europe. The Permanent Court's case law addressed issues such as access to schools and the use of language,¹ matters that lie within the protection of minorities, but also questions falling within the general scope of international human rights, such as the principle of legality and the prohibition of retroactive prosecution.²

As the United Nations developed its first instruments of international human rights law, proposals for a world human rights court emerged. Australia was the flag-bearer for the project.³ It submitted a proposal for an international court of human rights to the 1946 Paris Peace Conference.⁴ An early draft of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights adopted by the Commission on Human Rights included the Australian proposal, as an annex, entitled a 'Draft Statute of the International Court of Human Rights'.⁵ Ultimately, the United Nations adopted rather modest mechanisms for implementation of the treaties adopted in the wake of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. The international human rights court project remains alive, yet there seems to be little support for it.⁶

The great innovation of the European Convention on Human Rights was its machinery. Two primary organs were established by article 19 of the text adopted in November 1950, the European Commission of Human Rights and the European Court of Human Rights. There was no unanimity among the Member States of the Council of Europe on the subject. Indeed, a convincing majority was opposed to the establishment of a Court

¹ For example, Access to German Minority Schools in Upper Silesia, Series A/B, No. 40.

² Consistency of Certain Danzig Legislative Decrees with the Constitution of the Free City, Series A/B, No. 65.

³ Draft Resolution for an International Court of Human Rights submitted by the Representative from Australia, UN Doc. E/CN.4/15; UN Doc. E/CN.4/SR.16, pp. 1–5.

⁴ See UN Doc. E/CN.4/SR.15, p. 2.

⁵ Report of the Fifth Session of the Commission on Human Rights to the Economic and Social Council, UN Doc. E/1371, E/CN.4/350, pp. 63–9.

⁶ Manfred Novak, 'The Need for a World Court of Human Rights', (2007) 7 HRLR 251; Stefan Trechsel, 'A World Court for Human Rights?', (2004) 1 Northwestern Journal of International Human Rights 3.

until a compromise was worked out allowing States to recognize its jurisdiction by means of an optional clause, similar to what is found in the Statute of the International Court of Justice. There was more agreement on the establishment of the European Commission of Human Rights. Nevertheless, agreement on the right of individual petition remained in dispute until the end of the negotiations. This impasse was also resolved by means of an optional clause.

Both the Commission and the Court became operational during the 1950s. The Court was born somewhat later than the Commission. The Court's establishment was contingent on a minimum number of States Parties declaring their acceptance of its jurisdiction, whereas the Commission was created as a consequence of entry into force of the Convention itself. Under the 1950 Convention, individual applications were submitted to the Commission, and only then if the State had recognized the right of petition. The only function of the Commission in contentious cases that flowed automatically from the Convention was the inter-State application.

In the vast majority of cases, the Commission ruled the application inadmissible, a decision from which there was no appeal. If the Commission determined otherwise, it then prepared a report with its findings on the merits. If the respondent State Party had accepted the Court's jurisdiction, the Commission was empowered to refer the case to the Court. There, the Commission took charge of the proceedings on behalf of the applicant. If the Commission issued a report but did not refer the case to the Court, the matter was dealt with by the Committee of Ministers. Over the years, as the Commission and the Court prospered and became increasingly active, there were calls to reconfigure the Convention machinery. The first proposal to 'merge' the Court and the Commission was considered in 1982 at a meeting of the Committee of Experts for the Improvement of the Procedure under the European Convention on Human Rights. It was revived at the European Ministerial Conference on Human Rights, held in 1985.⁷ In 1990, Sweden and the Netherlands independently put forward similar proposals by which opinions of the Commission, issued with respect to individual applications under article 31 of the 1950 text of the Convention, would be legally binding. The Commission would thereby operate as a tribunal of first instance, with the Court sitting on appeal in appropriate cases.⁸ But despite considerable support, consensus on these proposals could not be reached.

Negotiations continued and in May 1993 the Committee of Ministers adopted ad hoc terms of reference for the Steering Committee for Human Rights, requiring it to prepare a draft protocol 'restructuring the existing supervisory mechanism' and replacing it with a single institution, the Court, 'it being understood that [the competence of the Committee of Ministers] to deal with individual applications under the present Article 32 of the Convention is abolished'.⁹ After consultation with the European Commission and the European Court, as well as with the Parliamentary Assembly, the draft protocol was adopted in April 1994 by the Ministers' Deputies.

The Explanatory Report does not provide any significant discussion of the actual drafting of the Protocol. It does, however, explain the rationale for the decision to replace the enforcement machinery of the Convention with a single Court. It refers to an

⁷ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 10.

⁸ Ibid., para. 15.

⁹ Ibid., para. 4.

'increasingly urgent' need for reform resulting from a growing number of complaints to the Commission, as well as an increase in membership of the Council of Europe. It notes that the number of applications registered annually with the Commission increased from 404 in 1981 to more than 2,000 in 1993. Moreover, it anticipated that by the year 2000 the size of the Council of Europe might increase to as many as 35 or 40 Member States (in fact, there were 41 Member States by 2000).¹⁰ The Report said that '[t]he increasing workload of the Commission has also resulted in more cases being referred to the Court in the last few years'.¹¹ Until 1988, the Court had never had more than twenty-five cases referred to it in any given year. By the early 1990s the number had doubled.

According to the Explanatory Report, '[t]he reform proposed is thus principally aimed at restructuring the system, so as to shorten the length of Strasbourg proceedings. There is need for a supervising machinery that can work efficiently and at acceptable costs even with forty member States and which can maintain the authority and quality of the case-law in the future.'¹² It cited the 'Vienna Declaration' of the Council of Europe's Heads of State and Government of 9 October 1993:

Since the Convention entered into force in 1953 the number of contracting States has almost tripled and more countries will accede after becoming members of the Council of Europe. We are of the opinion that it has become urgently necessary to adapt the present control mechanism to this development in order to be able to maintain in the future effective international protection for human rights. The purpose of this reform is to enhance the efficiency of the means of protection, to shorten procedures and to maintain the present high quality of human rights protection.¹³

The Report continued: 'The creation of a single Court is intended to prevent the overlapping of a certain amount of work and also to avoid certain delays which are inherent in the present system.'¹⁴ It also said the Protocol was aimed 'at strengthening the judicial elements of the system'.¹⁵

According to the Explanatory Report, '[t]he new single Court will replace two of the existing supervisory organs created by the European Convention on Human Rights and will perform the functions carried out by these organs. The Committee of Ministers will retain its competence under former Article 54; its competence under former Article 32 of the Convention will be abolished.'¹⁶ The 'new Court' would have jurisdiction 'in all matters concerning the interpretation and application of the Convention including inter-State cases as well as individual applications. In addition, the Court will, as at present, be able to give advisory opinions when so requested by the Committee of Ministers.'¹⁷

¹⁰ Ibid., para. 20.

¹¹ Ibid., para. 19.

¹² Ibid., para. 23.

¹³ Ibid., para. 23.

¹⁴ Ibid., para. 24.

¹⁵ Ibid., para. 25.

¹⁶ Ibid., para. 26.

¹⁷ Ibid., para. 27.

Drafting of the provision

The Draft Convention prepared by the European Movement and presented to the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe in July 1949 was accompanied by a commentary on the rationale for a European Court of Human Rights:

The success of the European Court of Human Rights, like that of the International Court of Justice at The Hague, will depend not so much upon the powers it wields as upon the overall prestige it enjoys. In most cases the pressure of public opinion will be quite sufficient to secure respect for its decisions.

Governments will be reluctant to be regarded as violators of their people's liberties and will usually prefer to comply with the judgments of the Court, even if they do not always agree with them, rather than face the loss of popularity and electoral support which refusal would probably involve. With this in mind, the framers of the Draft Convention have included in Article 11 the provision that every signatory State 'must, by all means available to it, ensure the widest possible publicity for the judgments of the Court and for any statements published by the Commission'.

States in which democracy has been completely overthrown and in which an absolute dictatorship has been established, admittedly present a much harder problem. However, it must be remembered that it is rare indeed for a democratic society to go over to a totalitarian system in a day. There is almost always a period during which liberty is being progressively curtailed. It is in this critical transition stage that the publication of the Court's judgments could exercise such an important and perhaps even decisive influence.

Germany, for example, was not suddenly transformed from a state of freedom to a state of serfdom on the thirtieth day of January 1933. The democratic institutions of the Weimar Republic were already beginning to be seriously undermined some time before the Nazis came to power. If a European Court of Human Rights had been in existence in 1932 it would without doubt have condemned many of the authoritarian acts of Herr von Papen's government. Yet the German press was at the time still free and would have given the widest publicity to any such judgments of the Court. This would have stimulated much public resentment against the Government and would undoubtedly have had the effect of winning great numbers of voters for the democratic parties of the Centre and Left. This might well have offered to President Hindenburg the possibility of forming a democratic government and have spared him the necessity of appointing Adolf Hitler as Chancellor of the Reich.

It is, of course, impossible in retrospect to assess with any degree of certainty how changed circumstances would have affected subsequent events. If, however, there is even a remote chance that the existence of a European Court of Human Rights would have prevented Hitler's rise to power, with all its dire consequences for mankind, this project surely cannot be dismissed as negligible or unrealistic.¹⁸

The draft Convention provided for the right of any natural or corporate person in the territory of a State Party to petition the Council of Europe about an infringement of fundamental rights. Such petitions were to be dealt with by a European Human Rights Commission 'and in proper cases by a European Court of Human Rights'.¹⁹ The Commission would have an investigatory function. Cases could be brought before the Court by the Commission, by an 'affected party' with the authorization of the Commission, and by a State Party.²⁰ The Court was given the following authority:

¹⁸ Convention for the Collective Protection of Individual Rights and Democratic Liberties by the States, Members of the Council of Europe, and for the establishment of a European Court of Human Rights to ensure observance of the Convention, Doc. INF/5/E/R.

¹⁹ Ibid., I TP 296-303, at p. 298, art. 7(b).

²⁰ Ibid., p. 300, art. 12.

- a) The Court shall have jurisdiction to determine all cases concerning the infringement of Part I of this Convention arising out of executive, legislative or juridical acts.
- b) The Court may either prescribe a measure of reparation or it may require that the State concerned shall take penal or administrative action in regard to the persons responsible for the infringement, or it may demand the repeal, cancellation or amendment of the act.²¹

At the same time, a very detailed Draft Statute of the European Court of Human Rights was proposed. The Statute said explicitly that it was 'based on the Statute of the International Court of Justice'.²² It provided for a Court that was to remain permanently in session.²³ The Court was to be assisted by the European Human Rights Commission, whose members it was to select.²⁴

The draft convention was first considered by the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions of the Consultative Assembly. It used the European Movement draft as a basis, together with the following motion:

The Committee notes that it must be made known at once that in order to guarantee the list of human rights:

- 1) There shall be a Court of Justice or an [sic] European Court of Human Rights;
- 2) That this Court shall be composed of nine Members. It shall not include more than one national of the same State. Members of the Court shall be elected by the Committee of Ministers and by the Consultative Assembly by an absolute majority of the votes obtained in each of these bodies;
- 3) That before the Court examines petitions submitted to it, they shall be previously submitted to a (European) Commission;
- 4) That the Court shall have power to determine all cases of violation of the rights mentioned on the list of human rights, resulting from legislative, judicial or executive acts;
- 5) That the rules for the functioning of the Court and the Commission, as regards the carrying out of their decisions, shall be studied by the Committee and submitted for discussion at the next session.²⁵

Presenting the matter to the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions of the Consultative Assembly, Pierre-Henri Teitgen said that in order to ensure the operation of the 'collective guarantee' of human rights pledged by the Council of Europe, it was necessary to envisage 'the creation of an appropriate European Court, since the Permanent Court of International Justice may only consider a complaint made by a State'.²⁶

The proposal for a court met with controversy in the Consultative Assembly.²⁷ One of the delegates, Henri Rolin of Belgium, described it as 'not only useless, but also illogical and harmful' and an institution that would find itself in competition with the International Court of Justice.²⁸ Teitgen spoke passionately in defence of the proposed court.²⁹ The amendment aimed at rejecting the court was defeated without a recorded ²¹ Ibid., pp. 300–2, art. 13.

²² Draft Statute of the European Court of Human Rights, INF/5/E/R, I TP 302–21, at p. 302, art. 1.

²³ Ibid., p. 308, art. 22(a).

²⁴ Ibid., p. 320, Part V.

²⁵ Preparatory Report by the Secretariat-General concerning a Preliminary Draft Convention to Provide a Collective Guarantee of Human Rights, Doc. B 22, III TP 2–37, at p. 4.

²⁶ Report presented by Mr P.H. Teitgen, 5 September 1949, Doc. A 290, I TP 192–213, at p. 204.

²⁷ See the account by Ed Bates, The Evolution of the European Convention on Human Rights, Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2010, pp. 70–4.

²⁸ Official Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 8 September 1949], II TP 14–274, at p. 150.

²⁹ Ibid., pp. 170–80.

vote.³⁰ The heart of the debate was not the idea of a court as such but the proposal to allow individual petitions, even if only through the indirect route of reference by the preliminary commission.³¹ Lynn Ungood-Thomas of the United Kingdom expressed concern about 'politically-inspired application... which invites action by those on the extreme right and those on the extreme left, with whom none of us here have sympathy'.³² But Lord Layton, also of the United Kingdom, pointed to the practice before the United Nations Commission on Human Rights, saying that the proposed European Commission of Human Rights would be quite capable of sifting through petitions and identifying those without merit.³³ The proposal to eliminate individual petitions was rejected.³⁴

The draft statute adopted by the Consultative Assembly contained the following:

Art. 8. To ensure the observance, in accordance with Articles 4, 5, 6 and 7 of the engagements subscribed to by the Member States in application of Articles 2 and 3, the Convention shall establish:

- 1) A European Court of Justice (hereafter referred to as the Court);
- 2) A European Commission of Human Rights (hereafter referred to as the Commission).³⁵

Several provisions followed with details about the establishment, structure, and jurisdiction of the two organs that were proposed. If the Commission held a petition to be admissible, it was to try to effect a conciliation of the opposing parties, failing which it had the discretion to refer the matter to the Court for 'a legal ruling'.³⁶

The Consultative Assembly draft was forwarded to the Committee of Ministers. The Committee of Ministers, in turn, chose to refer the draft for further study to a Committee of Experts that met in February and March 1950. An initial draft, adopted by the Committee of Experts at its February session, was similar to the text of article 8 of the Consultative Assembly draft. The major difference was that the order of the two organs was reversed, the Commission being listed in paragraph 1 and the Court in paragraph 2. It had also taken on the name 'European Court of Human Rights'.³⁷ According to the Report, all members of the Committee, with the exception of the British expert, agreed with the idea of a Commission. On the Court, however, there was considerable division, with only a minority in support. The representatives of Luxembourg, Norway, Denmark, Turkey, Greece, and the United Kingdom were opposed to a Court, while the French, Italian, Belgian, and Irish members were in favour.³⁸ The Report did not discuss the arguments for and against a Court, these having been 'fully developed in the debates of the Consultative Assembly'.³⁹ Indeed, the Committee of Experts did not take a position on ³⁰ Ibid., p. 184. See also Preparatory Report by the Secretariat-General concerning a Preliminary Draft Convention to Provide a Collective Guarantee of Human Rights, Doc. B 22, III TP 2-37, at pp. 18-20.

³¹ Official Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 8 September 1949], II TP 14-274, at p. 166.

³² Ibid., p. 188.

³³ Ibid., p. 196.

³⁴ Ibid., p. 202. See also Preparatory Report by the Secretariat-General concerning a Preliminary Draft Convention to Provide a Collective Guarantee of Human Rights, Doc. B 22, III TP 2-37, at p. 22.

³⁵ Recommendation No. 38 to the Committee of Ministers adopted 8 September 1949 on the conclusion of the debates, Doc. AS (1) 108, II TP 274-83, at p. 278.

³⁶ Ibid., pp. 278-83.

³⁷ Preliminary Draft Convention for the Maintenance and Further Realisation of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 15 February 1950, Doc. A 833, III TP 236-46, at p. 240.

³⁸ Preliminary Draft of the Report to the Committee of Ministers, 24 February 1950, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 1, A 847, III TP 246-79, at p. 268.

³⁹ Ibid.

the subject of whether or not to establish the Court 'since, in its opinion, this matter was also of a political nature'.⁴⁰

The Committee of Ministers referred the drafts adopted by the Committee of Experts to a Conference of Senior Officials that met in June 1950. It assigned a number of 'political' issues to the Conference, although the issue of establishing a Court was not one of them.⁴¹ Nevertheless, the matter could not be avoided by the Conference of Senior Officials. Views were as divided as they had been in the Consultative Assembly. A compromise solution began to emerge whereby jurisdiction of the Court would be subject to an optional clause, inspired by article 36 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice, thereby allowing States that accepted the Court to recognize its jurisdiction while at the same time sheltering from its authority those that did not.⁴² The Conference also developed the mechanism of referral by the Commission to the Committee of Ministers.⁴³

Italy proposed a text with a provision entitled 'Optional Court', by which the Committee of Ministers would not act if the Commission, the respondent State Party, or a State Party referring the application requested that the case be submitted to the Court.⁴⁴ During the debate, the chairman suggested that six ratifications would be necessary for the optional clause to come into force.⁴⁵ When a vote was taken on the proposal for a Court, the same four States that had earlier supported the proposal were the only ones in favour, and seven States were opposed. But when the compromise with an optional clause was put to a vote, there were nine States in favour and only three opposed, Norway, the Netherlands, and the United Kingdom.⁴⁶

Sweden, which was opposed to the Court as such but which favoured one if there was an optional clause, submitted a series of provisions that began with the following: 'Art. . . . Apart from the European Commission of Human Rights, there shall be set up a European Court of Human Rights, on condition however that at least six States give their adherence to this Section (IV).'⁴⁷ Italy made an elaborate proposal for a Court with competence on 'all questions concerning the interpretation of the present Convention which the High Contracting Parties shall lay before it'. It was accompanied by an optional clause that was very similar to that of the Statute of the International Court of Justice.⁴⁸

⁴⁰ Report to the Committee of Ministers submitted by the Committee of Experts Instructed to Draw Up a Draft Convention of Collective Guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Doc. CM/WP 1 (5) 15, A 924, IV TP 2-55, at p. 16.

⁴¹ Letter of 11 May 1950 from the Secretary General to the Foreign Ministers of Member States, IV TP 92-95.

⁴² Minutes of the morning sitting [of 9 June 1950 of the Conference of Senior Officials], Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 3, IV TP 110-19; Minutes of the afternoon sitting [of 9 June 1950 of the Conference of Senior Officials], unreferenced document, IV TP 120-31; Minutes of the morning sitting [of 10 June 1950], unreferenced document, IV TP 132-41.

⁴³ Proposal submitted by the French, Irish, and United Kingdom Delegations (Original text), Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 5, A 1366, IV TP 160-1; Proposal submitted by the French, Irish, and United Kingdom Delegations (Revised text), Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 5 rev., A 1369, IV TP 160-1.

⁴⁴ Proposal submitted by the Italian Delegation, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 6, A 1367, IV TP 162-3.

⁴⁵ Minutes of the afternoon setting [of 12 June 1950 of the Conference of Senior Officials], unreferenced document, IV TP 170-81, at p. 174.

⁴⁶ Ibid., p. 178.

⁴⁷ Proposal submitted by the Swedish Delegation, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 10, A 1373, IV TP 190-5.

⁴⁸ Proposal submitted by the Italian Delegation (Original text), Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 12, A 1375, IV TP 198-201; Proposal submitted by the Italian Delegation (Revised text), Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 12 rev., A 1427, IV TP 200-3.

The Report of the Conference of Senior Officials noted that 'it has not yet been agreed that the creation of a European Court of Human Rights at the present time corresponds to a real need of the Member States of the Council of Europe'. Nevertheless, it recognized that four States considered that 'only a Court, having all the characteristics of an impartial tribunal, would be able to ensure the efficient protection of human rights'. The Report pointed to the 'compromise suggestion' from the Swedish delegation and the support that had emerged for a Court based upon an optional clause. The drafting Sub-Committee had favoured a solution by which a European Court was to be created but with optional jurisdiction.⁴⁹ The draft Convention adopted by the Conference of Senior Officials contained the following provision:

To ensure the observance of the engagements undertaken by the High Contracting Parties in the present Convention, there shall be set up:

- a) a European Commission of Human Rights hereafter referred to as the 'Commission';
- b) A European Court of Human Rights, hereafter referred to as the 'Court'.⁵⁰

Jurisdiction of the Court would be based upon an optional clause and its members would not be elected until it had been accepted by nine States.⁵¹

The Report of the Conference of Senior Officials was considered a few days later at a meeting of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions of the Consultative Assembly. The compromise seemed to be favourably received, the only significant change being a proposal to reduce the number of States necessary for entry into force of the provision 'since this figure was too large and would unnecessarily delay the establishment of the Court'.⁵²

The text adopted by the Conference of Senior Officials was accepted without change by the Committee of Ministers at its fifth session⁵³ and subsequently by the Consultative Assembly.⁵⁴ The Consultative Assembly changed the threshold for establishment of the Court to eight declarations from the nine in the earlier versions.⁵⁵ Ireland had proposed that it be set as low as five.⁵⁶ In November 1950, the Committee of Legal Experts of the ⁴⁹ Text of the Report submitted by the Conference [of Senior Officials] to the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19, CM/WP 4 (50) 16 rev., A 1431, IV TP 242-73, at pp. 248-53. Also Draft Report to the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 16, A 1426, IV TP 204-17, at p. 210, at pp. 210-13.

⁵⁰ Draft Convention annexed to the Report, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19 annex, CM/WP 4 (50) rev., A 1452, IV TP 274-95, at pp. 282-3. Also Draft Convention appended to the Draft Report, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 16, appendix, A 1445, IV TP 218-40, at pp. 226-7.

⁵¹ Draft Convention annexed to the Report, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19 annex, CM/WP 4 (50) rev., A 1452, IV TP 274-95, pp. 290-2.

⁵² Minutes of the meeting [of 23 June 1950 of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions of the Consultative Assembly], Doc. AS/JA (2) PV I, A 1840, V TP 2-11, at p. 8. Also Report of the sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 14 August 1950], V TP 216-71, at p. 266; Letter of 24 June 1950 from Sir David Maxwell Fyfe, Chairman of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions, to the Chairman of the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM (50) 29, V TP 32-41, at p. 38.

⁵³ Draft Convention adopted by the Sub-Committee, Doc. CM 1 (50) 52, A 1884, V TP 76-99, at p. 84; Draft Convention adopted by the Committee of Ministers, 7 August 1950. Doc. A 1937, V TP 120-45, at p. 130; Letter dated 7 August 1950 sent by Mr MacBride, Chairman of the Committee of Ministers, to M. Spaak, President of the Consultative Assembly, Doc. No. 11, p. 600-19, V TP 144-71, at p. 154.

⁵⁴ Text of the draft amended by the Consultative Assembly including notes on the articles not yet approved by the Committee of Ministers and the adoption of which is urged by the Consultative Assembly, Doc. A 2838, VI TP 238-73, at p. 252.

⁵⁵ Ibid., p. 266.

⁵⁶ Amendments proposed by the Irish Government (4 August 1950), Doc. CM 1 (50) 2, A 1863, V TP 58-61.

Committee of Ministers agreed to the figure 'eight'.⁵⁷ The word 'hereafter' appeared in the final version of article 19 of the Convention as 'hereinafter'.

Protocol No. 11 was responsible for major changes in article 19 of the Convention. The two paragraphs referring to the European Commission and the European Court were replaced, consistent with the decision to merge the institutions into a 'new Court'. There were two other changes: the words 'and the Protocols thereto' were added after the reference to the Convention and a second sentence was added declaring that the Court would function on a permanent basis.

The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11 provides very little information about the drafting of amended article 19. Referring to the words 'and the Protocols thereto', it states that 'this addition reflects developments after the adoption of the Convention in 1950. Obviously, States will be bound only by the protocols they have ratified'.⁵⁸ The Explanatory Report also confirms that, despite appearances, the drafters intended that the single institution be a 'new Court' and not a modified version of the 'former Court': 'The same title as that of the former Court has been retained for the supervisory institution. This, however, should not disguise the fact that it is a new institution. The new Court is to be a permanent Court, whose seat is in Strasbourg'.⁵⁹

Analysis and interpretation

The Rules of Court refer to the pre-Protocol No. 11 institution as the 'former Court'.⁶⁰ The reform was intended to reduce the length of proceedings and to reinforce their judicial character.⁶¹ Nevertheless, the reform has been broadly understood as the end of the Commission and the continuation of a much-reformed Court. The reference to it operating on a 'permanent basis' demarcates it from the earlier Court, whose judges were not resident in Strasbourg and who only attended for one week per month. In addition to requiring full-time residency in Strasbourg, Protocol No. 11 made other significant changes to the Court, including reforms in the mode of election. Judgments of the 'new Court' refer to the case law of the 'former' Court without even a hint that two different institutions are involved.

Behind the seemingly modest changes to article 19 is a more important modification of the Convention. Articles 25 and 46 of the Convention as adopted in 1950, the provisions that framed the mechanisms for individual applications to the Commission and the Court, respectively, were repealed by Protocol No. 11. They provided for a system of optional declarations establishing jurisdiction in the case of individual petitions. With their removal from the Convention, the role that they played is to a large extent assumed by article 19. As the Court explained in the Loizidou v. Turkey case, referencing article 19 together with article 25 and 46 of the 1950 Convention:

The Court observes that Articles 25 and 46 of the Convention are provisions which are essential to the effectiveness of the Convention system since they delineate the responsibility of the ⁵⁷ Report of the Committee of Legal Experts held at Rome, 2 and 3 November 1950 (revised text), Doc. CM/Adj (50) 3 rev., A 2531, VII TP 10-13.

⁵⁸ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 57.

⁵⁹ Ibid., para. 58.

⁶⁰ Rules of Court, Rule 1(r).

⁶¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, para. 4.

Commission and Court 'to ensure the observance of the engagements undertaken by the High Contracting Parties' (Article 19), by determining their competence to examine complaints concerning alleged violations of the rights and freedoms set out in the Convention. In interpreting these key provisions it must have regard to the special character of the Convention as a treaty for the collective enforcement of human rights and fundamental freedoms.⁶²

At the same time, the Court noted an earlier precedent where it had stated that '[u]nlike international treaties of the classic kind, the Convention comprises more than mere reciprocal engagements between Contracting States. It creates, over and above a network of mutual, bilateral undertakings, objective obligations which, in the words of the Preamble benefit from a "collective enforcement".'⁶³ Other references to article 19 in the case law of the Court note how it 'must bear in mind the special character of the Convention as an instrument of European public order (ordre public) for the protection of individual human beings and its mission, as set out in Article 19, "to ensure the observance of the engagements undertaken by the High Contracting Parties"'.⁶⁴

Article 19 has also been cited to support a role for the Court in determining issues on public policy grounds in the common interest, and not merely as an arbiter of human rights applications filed by individuals. In so doing, it is 'thereby raising the general standards of protection of human rights and extending human rights jurisprudence throughout the community of Convention States'.⁶⁵

On several occasions, article 19 has been invoked to confirm that the Court is not a tribunal of fourth instance, established to revise the findings of the apex courts in European States in a general sense. Many decisions have affirmed that it is not the Court's function 'to deal with errors of fact or law allegedly committed by a national court, unless and in so far as they may have infringed the rights and freedoms protected by the Convention. It is primarily for the domestic courts to interpret and apply domestic law.'⁶⁶ Some of these decisions invoke article 19 as the basis for such an affirmation.⁶⁷

Article 19 has been invoked in the context of the pilot-judgment procedure, a mechanism designed to alleviate the case load of the Court by addressing applications that deal with systemic problems and that are similar and repetitive. Specifically, referring to article 19, the Court said:

A requirement to deliver, continually, individual decisions in cases where there is no longer any live Convention issue cannot be said to be compatible with this task. Nor does this judicial exercise ⁶² Loizidou v. Turkey (Preliminary objections), 23 March 1995, § 70, Series A no. 310.

⁶³ Ibid., citing Ireland v. the United Kingdom, 18 January 1978, § 239, Series A no. 25.

⁶⁴ Ibid., § 93. See also § 96.

⁶⁵ Djokaba Lambi Longa v. the Netherlands (dec.), no. 33917/12, § 58, 9 October 2012.

⁶⁶ Polednová v. Czech Republic (dec.), no. 2615/10, 21 June 2011; Streletz, Kessler, and Krenz v. Germany [GC], nos 34044/96, 35532/97, and 44801/98, § 81, ECHR 2001-II.

⁶⁷ L.H. v. Latvia, no. 52019/07, § 49, 29 April 2014; Glykantzis v. Greece, § 39, no. 40150/09, 30 October 2012; Nechiporuk and Yonkalo v. Ukraine, no. 42310/04, § 273, 21 April 2011; Ocone v. Italy (dec.), no. 48889/99, 19 February 2004; Akay v. Turkey (dec.), no. 34501/97, 19 February 2002; Garcla Ruiz v. Spain [GC], no. 30544/96, § 28, ECHR 1999-I; Lehto v. Finland, no. 31043/96, Commission decision of 4 March 1998; Lupander v. Finland, no. 28941/95, Commission decision of 3 December 1997; D.S. v. the United Kingdom, no. 14067/88, Commission decision of 6 July 1989; Schenk v. Switzerland, 12 July 1988, § 45, Series A no. 140; E. v. Sweden, no. 11453/85, Commission decision of 7 July 1986; X v. Belgium, no. 458/59, Commission decision of 29 March 1960, (1960) 3 YB 222; X v. Austria, no. 1140/61, Commission decision of 19 December 1961, Collection 8, p. 57; Andorfer Tonwerke v. Austria, no. 7987/77, Commission decision of 19 December 1978, (1980) 23 YB 190, DR 18, p. 31; Ziegler v. Switzerland, no. 19890/92, Commission decision of 3 May 1993, (1993) 36 YB 73, DR 74, p. 234.

contribute usefully or in any meaningful way to the strengthening of human rights protection under the Convention; indeed, it cannot be ruled out that in the future the Court may wish to redefine its role in this respect and decline to examine such cases.⁶⁸

The Court has also said that 'elle ne s'acquitte pas forcément au mieux de sa tâche, qui consiste selon l'article 19 de la Convention à « assurer le respect des engagements résultant pour les Hautes Parties contractantes de la (...) Convention et de ses Protocoles », en répétant les mêmes conclusions dans un grand nombre d'affaires'.⁶⁹

In the first Georgia v. Russia inter-State case, the Grand Chamber spoke of the 'specificity' of the Court's task under article 19 of the Convention, namely 'to ensure the observance by the High Contracting Parties of their engagements to secure the fundamental rights enshrined in the Convention'. The Grand Chamber said this conditioned the Court's approach. It said 'there are no procedural barriers to the admissibility of evidence or predetermined formulae for its assessment' and that it adopts 'conclusions that are, in its view, supported by the free evaluation of all evidence, including such inferences as may flow from the facts and the parties' submissions'.⁷⁰

Reference to article 19 has also been made in order to distinguish the Court and the Commission from other organs of the Council of Europe. In the inter-State application by several European States against Greece following the 1967 coup, the Commission dismissed the relevance of action and inaction by the Consultative Assembly of the Council of Europe.⁷¹

The European Convention does not provide for the seat of the Court.⁷² The Rules of Court state the following:

Rule 19—Seat of the Court

1. The seat of the Court shall be at the seat of the Council of Europe at Strasbourg. The Court may, however, if it considers it expedient, perform its functions elsewhere in the territories of the member States of the Council of Europe.
2. The Court may decide, at any stage of the examination of an application, that it is necessary that an investigation or any other function be carried out elsewhere by it or one or more of its members.

The Court's jurisdiction is confined to the interpretation and application of the European Convention on Human Rights. It cannot pronounce itself on alleged violations of other international treaties.⁷³ Despite this jurisdictional limitation, the Court frequently refers to other international treaties in its interpretation of provisions of the Convention. For example, in Hassan v. the United Kingdom, it referred to the third and fourth Geneva Conventions of 1949 in establishing the scope of article 5 of the Convention.⁷⁴ In this ⁶⁸ E.G. v. Poland and 175 Other Bug River Applications (dec.), no. 50425/99, § 27, 23 September 2008.

⁶⁹ Demiroğlu and Others v. Turkey (dec.), no. 56125/10, 4 June 2013.

⁷⁰ Georgia v. Russia (I) [GC], no. 13255/07, § 94, 3 July 2014. The evidentiary principles applied by the Court are discussed in detail in the chapter on article 38 of this Commentary.

⁷¹ Government of Denmark v. the Government of Greece; Denmark, Norway, Sweden, and the Netherlands v. Greece, nos 3321/67, 3322/67, 3323/67, and 3344/67, Commission decision of 24 January 1968, (1968) 11 YB 690, Collection 25, pp. 92.

⁷² Compare: Statute of the International Court of Justice, art. 22(1); Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, (2002) 2187 UNTS 90, art. 3.

⁷³ Occhetto v. Italy (dec.), no. 14507/07, 12 November 2013; Di Giovine v. Portugal (dec.), no. 39912/98, 31 August 1999; Hermida Paz v. Spain (dec.), no. 4160/02, 28 January 2003.

⁷⁴ Hassan v. the United Kingdom, [GC], no. 29750/09, §§ 102–103, 16 September 2014.

context, it has relied on article 31(3)(c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties by which a treaty may be interpreted in light of 'any relevant rules of international law applicable in the relations between the parties'.⁷⁵

Further reading

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 437–8.

Inete Ziemele, 'International Courts and Ultra Vires Acts', in Lucius Caflisch, Johan Callewaert, Roderick Liddell, Paul Mahoney, and Mark Villiger, eds, Liber Amicorum Luzius Wildhaber, Kehl, Germany: N.P. Engel, 2007, pp. 537–56.

⁷⁵ The role of other sources of international law in the interpretation of the Convention is discussed in detail in the introductory chapter of this Commentary.

Article 20. Number of judges/Nombre de juges

The Court shall consist of a number of judges equal to that of the High Contracting Parties. La Cour se compose d'un nombre de juges égal à celui des Hautes Parties contractantes.

Introductory comments

The number of judges on the European Court is equal to the number of States Parties. The original choice of a Court whereby the number of judges corresponded to the number of States Parties was made at a time when only ten countries were involved. Perhaps the decision would have been different if there had been forty-seven, as is the case today. No other similar international court has followed this model. The International Court of Justice has fifteen, the International Criminal Court has eighteen, the African Court on Human and Peoples' Rights has eleven, and the Inter-American Court of Human Rights has seven.

The judges of the European Court no longer sit on cases in a plenary formation, even on an exceptional basis. The largest bench currently allowed by the Convention is the seventeen-judge Grand Chamber. Much of the work of the judges of the Court involves highly routine processing of the tens of thousands of applications that make up its enormous caseload. To that extent, it is radically different from other international courts and tribunals that never consider more than a small number of cases.

Drafting of the provision

The initial draft European Convention on Human Rights prepared by the International Juridical Section of the European Movement provided for a European Court of Human Rights that was 'to be composed of nine members, no two of whom may be nationals of the same State'.¹ The Consultative Assembly adopted a proposal along these lines.²

The Committee of Experts initially agreed that the Court should consist of nine judges 'in order to make it clear that the Court was a Court of Justice and not a political council of Member States'.³ There were objections from several smaller States based upon concerns that their interests might not be properly represented. According to the Report of the Committee, '[i]t was felt that, by force of circumstances, the bigger powers would always have one of their nationals acting as judge to the Court, whereas the chances of nations [sic] from the smaller States being nominated to the Court would be slighter'. The Committee of Experts recommended that the Court be composed of a number of judges equal to the number of States Parties.⁴ The draft provision it adopted read as follows: 'The European Court of Human Rights shall consist of a number of judges equal to that of the High Contracting Parties not [sic] two of the judges may be nationals of the same State.'⁵

¹ Convention for the Collective Protection of Individual Rights and Democratic Liberties by the States, Members of the Council of Europe, and for the establishment of a European Court of Human Rights to ensure observance of the Convention, Doc. INF/5/E/R, I TP 296-303, at p. 300, art. 9(b); Draft Statute of the European Court of Human Rights, INF/5/E/R, I TP 302-21, at p. 302, art. 3.

² Report [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions], 5 September 1949, Doc. AS (1) 77, I TP 216-39, at p. 234; Official Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 8 September 1949], II TP 14-274, at p. 218.

³ Report to the Committee of Ministers Submitted by the Committee of Experts Instructed to Draw Up a Draft Convention of Collective Guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Doc. CM/WP 1 (5) 15, A 924, IV TP 2-55, at p. 42.

The Committee of Ministers referred the drafts that were adopted by the Committee of Experts to a Conference of Senior Officials that convened in June 1950. The Conference of Senior Officials reached a degree of consensus on establishing a Court but one whose jurisdiction would be based upon an optional clause similar to that of the International Court of Justice.⁶ This provoked Sweden to present an amended version of the provision on the number of judges by which this would be equal to the number of States that had accepted the jurisdiction of the Court.⁷ But its vision of a Court that was in effect reserved to those States that had accepted its jurisdiction, including control over the election of judges, was rejected. The Report of the Conference explained that '[c]onfronted with the choice between a Court which would be set up only for those States which so desire, and a Court which would be set up by all the High Contracting Parties, but the jurisdiction of which would be binding only on States which had expressly accepted it, the Conference decided in favour of the second Alternative'. It said that several delegates felt a Court set up only for some Member States 'would be contrary to the basic idea of the Statute. Such a Court would constitute a factor of division rather than of union between the Member States.'⁸ Accordingly, the words 'High Contracting Parties' were replaced with 'Member States of the Council of Europe'.⁹

The provision, as amended by the Conference of Senior Officials, was not subject to further amendment and there is no evidence of any debate in the Committee of Ministers or the Consultative Assembly prior to adoption of the Convention in November.¹⁰ Article 38 of the 1950 text of the Convention reads as follows: 'The European Court of Human Rights shall consist of a number of judges equal to that of the Members of the Council of Europe. No two judges may be nationals of the same State.'

Article 20 of the Convention replaced article 38 of the 1950 text of the Convention pursuant to Protocol No. 11 with two substantive changes: the words 'the Members of the Council of Europe' were changed for 'the High Contracting Parties' and the second sentence ('No two judges may be nationals of the same State') was eliminated. The Explanatory Report says that '[i]n this respect it was considered preferable to follow the ⁴ Ibid.

⁵ Appendix to the Report of the Committee of Experts to the Committee of Ministers—Draft Convention (16 March 1950), Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 14 revised, A 925, IV TP 50–79, at p. 70.

⁶ This is discussed in more detail in the chapter on article 19 of this Commentary.

⁷ Proposal submitted by the Swedish Delegation, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 10, A 1373, IV TP 190–5, at pp 190–2.

⁸ Text of the report submitted by the Conference [of Senior Officials] to the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19, CM/WP 4 (50) 16 rev., A 1431, IV TP 242–73, at p. 266.

⁹ Draft Convention annexed to the Report, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19 annex, CM/WP 4 (50) rev., A 1452, IV TP 274–95, at p. 288.

¹⁰ Draft Convention adopted by the Sub-Committee, Doc. CM 1 (50) 52, A 1884, V TP 76–99, at p. 90; Letter dated 7 August 1950 sent by Mr MacBride, Chairman of the Committee of Ministers, to M. Spaak, President of the Consultative Assembly, Doc. No. 11, p. 600–19, V TP 144–71, at p. 162; Text of the draft amended by the Consultative Assembly including notes on the articles not yet approved by the Committee of Ministers and the adoption of which is urged by the Consultative Assembly, Doc. A 2838, VI TP 238–73, at p. 262.

procedure relating to the appointment of members of the Commission (see Article 20 of the former text of the Convention)'.¹¹ The Explanatory Report does not indicate why this was considered preferable, although it seems clear that it was related to the understanding that no new member could join the Council of Europe without ratifying the Convention. According to the 1950 text, a State was entitled to a judge on the Court even if it had not ratified the Convention. The most striking example of this is René Cassin, who served as the French judge and even President of the Court despite the fact that at the time his country, which hosted the Court in Strasbourg, had not only failed to accept the jurisdiction of the Court, it was not even a party to the Convention.¹²

The Explanatory Report discusses the elimination of the rule by which no two judges of the Court may be nationals of the same State. It notes that '[i]n principle, there should be no more than two judges of the same nationality on the Court'. It continues: 'A State Party will have the possibility to put forward the name of a judge who is a national of another State Party rather than propose a judge from a State which has not ratified the Convention.'¹³

During the drafting of Protocol No. 14, there were proposals to increase the number of judges. The Parliamentary Assembly objected on the grounds that it might create inequalities between countries and it questioned the expediency of such a measure.¹⁴ The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14 says that the idea was dropped in light of the Parliamentary Assembly's Opinion.¹⁵

Analysis and interpretation

The number of judges of the European Court of Human Rights is set at a number equal to that of the High Contracting Parties. A somewhat archaic term, 'High Contracting Parties' was employed in 1950 but is rarely used in modern treaty language, where the preferred term today would be 'States Parties'. Indeed, 'States Parties' rather than 'High Contracting Parties' is used frequently in the Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11.¹⁶ Acceptance of the European Convention on Human Rights is not a requirement for membership set out in the Statute of the Council of Europe. Most of the founding members of the Council ratified the Convention within a few years of its adoption, although France did not take this step until 1974. In 1993, the Committee of Ministers adopted, as a condition for membership in the Council of Europe, an undertaking by a candidate State to sign the European Convention on Human Rights and accept the Convention's supervisory machinery in its entirety within a short period.¹⁷

The 1950 text of the European Convention prevented two judges of the same nationality from serving on the Court. If, for whatever reason, a State chose not to

¹¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 59.

¹² See Karel Vasak, 'Historique des problèmes de la ratification de la Convention par la France', (1970) 3 Revue des droits de l'homme 558.

¹³ Ibid.

¹⁴ Draft Protocol No. 14 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms amending the control system of the Convention, Opinion No. 251 (2004), Parliamentary Assembly, para. 7.

¹⁵ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, para. 34.

¹⁶ See the discussion of the term 'High Contracting Parties' in the chapter on article 1 of this Commentary.

¹⁷ Vienna Declaration, Vienna, 9 October 1993.

propose its own nationals for judgeship, it would then have little option but to look outside the membership in the Council of Europe. This happened only once, when Ronald St John MacDonald, a citizen of Canada, was elected to two terms at the Court, from 1980 to 1998, as judge for Liechtenstein. The sentence in article 38 of the 1950 text of the Convention prohibiting two nationals of the same State from serving on the Court was removed as a consequence of Protocol No. 11. Since the entry into force of article 20 as amended by Protocol No. 11 there have been two judges of the same nationality on four occasions: Luigi Ferrari Bravo and Benedetto Conforti of Italy served as judges for San Marino and Italy, respectively, from 1998 to 2001; Lucius Cafilish and Luzius Wildhaber of Switzerland served as judges for Liechtenstein and Switzerland, respectively from 1998 to 2006; Mark Villiger and Giorgio Malinverni of Switzerland served as judges for Liechtenstein and Switzerland, respectively from 2006 to 2011; and Mark Villiger and Helen Keller of Switzerland have served as judges for Liechtenstein and Switzerland, respectively from 2011 to the present.

Further reading

Johan Callewaert, 'Article 38', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 743–5.
Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 439–40.

Article 21. Criteria for office/Conditions d'exercice des fonctions

1. The judges shall be of high moral character and must either possess the qualifications required for appointment to high judicial office or be jurists of recognised competence.

2. Candidates shall be less than 65 years of age at the date by which the list of three candidates has been requested by the Parliamentary Assembly, further to Article 22.¹

2. The judges shall sit on the Court in their individual capacity.

3. During their term of office the judges shall not engage in any activity which is incompatible with their independence, impartiality or with the demands of a full-time office; all questions arising from the application of this paragraph shall be decided by the Court.

1. Les juges doivent jouir de la plus haute considération morale et réunir les conditions requises pour l'exercice de hautes fonctions judiciaires ou être des juristes possédant une compétence notoire.

2. Les candidats doivent être âgés de moins de 65 ans à la date à laquelle la liste de trois candidats est attendue par l'Assemblée parlementaire, en vertu de l'article 22.

2. Les juges siègent à la Cour à titre individuel.

3. Pendant la durée de leur mandat, les juges ne peuvent exercer aucune activité incompatible avec les exigences d'indépendance, d'impartialité ou de disponibilité requise par une activité exercée à plein temps; toute question soulevée en application de ce paragraphe est tranchée par la Cour.

Introductory comments

The first international judges were political figures, sometimes heads of State. Sitting as arbitrators, they addressed inter-State disputes more as diplomats than as jurists. Gradually, the requirement that international arbitrators or judges should be selected primarily for their legal expertise took hold.² The requirements were first codified in the Hague Convention on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes, adopted in 1899. It stated that arbitrators at the Permanent Court of Arbitration be persons 'of known competency in questions of international law' and 'of the highest moral reputation'. Article 2 of the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice, as amended in 1929, required that the Court 'be composed of a body of independent judges, elected regardless of their nationality from amongst persons of high moral character, who possess the qualifications required in their respective countries for appointment to the highest judicial offices, or are jurists of recognised competence in international law'.

At the international level, all judges should be expected to demonstrate independence and impartiality, but also a very high level of expertise in the relevant bodies of law. Issues of independence and impartiality are fundamentally the same as they are before domestic courts. There is a huge body of case law, much of it emanating from the European Court of Human Rights pursuant to article 6 of the Convention, that deals with these issues.

¹ This paragraph, added pursuant to article 2 of Protocol No. 15 amending the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, ETS 213, is not yet in force. When it enters into force, paragraphs 2 and 3 of the existing provision will be renumbered paragraphs 3 and 4.

² Mariano J. Aznar-Gómez, 'Article 2', in Andreas Zimmermann, Christian Tomuschat, and Karin Oellers-Frahm, eds, The Statute of the International Court of Justice, A Commentary, Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2006, pp. 205-18, at pp. 206-7.

Drafting of the provision

Paragraph 1 of article 21 can be traced to article 39 of the 1950 text of the Convention. It concerns the election of judges. What is today article 21(1) was the second paragraph of the original article 39 of the Convention.

The initial Draft Statute of the European Court of Human Rights prepared by the International Juridical Section of the European Movement provided that the Court was to be composed 'of a body of independent judges, elected regardless of their nationality from among persons of high moral character, who possess the qualifications required in their respective countries for appointment to the highest judicial offices or are juriconsults of recognised competence in international law'.³ The text replicated article 2 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice, adopted a few years previously.

The Consultative Assembly draft of the Convention adopted in September 1949 did not contain a provision concerning the criteria for judges of the Court. The Committee of Experts, meeting in February and March 1950, noted in its Report that it had not copied the provision in the Statute of the International Court of Justice forbidding members of the Court from exercising other functions. The Committee explained that it anticipated 'the possibility of only a very limited number of cases' being brought to the Court and was concerned that judges might 'find themselves condemned to idleness while drawing a fixed salary'. Its solution was to pay them an allowance for every day of service.⁴ In the draft provision governing election of judges, the Committee of Experts added that members of the Court 'shall be of high moral character and must possess the qualifications required for appointment to high judicial offices, or shall be juriconsults of recognised competence'.⁵ There was no debate on this and no subsequent modifications were made. Article 39(3) of the Convention adopted in 1950 reads: 'The candidates shall be of high moral character and must either possess the qualifications required for appointment to high judicial office or be juriconsults of recognised competence.'

Paragraph 2 of article 21 can be traced directly to Protocol No. 8 of the Convention. More indirectly, it is derived from a provision in the 1950 text of the Convention that applied to the European Commission of Human Rights but not to the Court. Article 23 of the 1950 text of the Convention stated: 'The members of the Commission shall sit on the Commission in their individual capacity. During their term of office they shall not hold any position which is incompatible with their independence and impartiality as members of the Commission or the demands of this office.'

Detailed provisions about the Commission were only first considered by the Committee of Experts that met in February and March 1950. In the provision dealing with election to the Commission, the Committee of Experts proposed the following paragraph: 'The members of the Commission shall sit on the Commission in their individual capacity.⁶ The Commentary did not address this sentence specifically, but it noted concerns about the 'somewhat political character of the Commission'. This may explain why the reference to individual capacity was included.⁷ The paragraph was retained without change or debate by the Conference of Senior Officials that met in June 1950.⁸ The Committee of Ministers, meeting in August, moved the paragraph from the provision dealing with election to the Commission and made it a distinct article, subsequently numbered as article 23.⁹

³ Draft Statute of the European Court of Human Rights, INF/5/E/R, I TP 302-21, at p. 302, art. 2.

⁴ Report to the Committee of Ministers submitted by the Committee of Experts Instructed to Draw Up a Draft Convention of Collective Guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Doc. CM/WP 1 (5) 15, A 924, IV TP 2-55, at pp. 42-4.

⁵ Ibid., p. 72.

Protocol No. 8, adopted in 1985 and in force in 1990, added the following paragraph to article 40(7) of the Convention: 'The members of the Court shall sit on the Court in their individual capacity. During their term of office they shall not hold any position which is incompatible with their independence and impartiality as members of the Court or the demands of this office.'¹⁰ According to the Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 8, the purpose was simply to make the provision dealing with the Court consistent with article 23, which applied to the Commission.¹¹ It continued:

With regard to the first sentence of this provision, that judges sit in an individual capacity is inherent in the very concept of a court. Nevertheless, the authors of the Protocol thought it appropriate to mention this requirement in the Convention, in particular as the latter already contained such a provision in relation to members of the Commission. Reasons of textual consistency also spoke in favour of including the second sentence following the insertion in the Convention of such a provision for Commission members. The Court has previously, through its Rules, laid down that a judge may not exercise his functions while he holds a post or exercises a profession which is incompatible with his independence and impartiality; the new paragraph 7 of Article 40 strengthens this rule by placing an obligation on a judge holding such a position to resign from the Court.¹²

Protocol No. 11 consolidated these provisions and somewhat reconfigured them. Thus, article 39(2) became article 21(1), with the word 'judges' replacing 'candidates'. The first sentence of article 40(7) became article 21(2), with the word 'judges' replacing 'members of the Court'. The second sentence of article 40(7) formed the basis of article 39(3), although changes were made. A proposal from the Parliamentary Assembly to add the words 'as well as the length of their term of office' at the end of paragraph 3 was not adopted.¹³ The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11 provides little information about the drafting of article 21. It states:

Paragraphs 1 and 2 of Article 21 follow closely paragraph 3 of former Article 39 and paragraph 7 of former Article 40 of the Convention. The provision in paragraph 3 concerns incompatibility 'with ⁶ Appendix to the Report of the Committee of Experts to the Committee of Ministers—Draft Convention (16 March 1950), Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 14 revised, A 925, IV TP 50–79, at p. 70.

⁷ Report to the Committee of Ministers submitted by the Committee of Experts Instructed to Draw Up a Draft Convention of Collective Guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Doc. CM/WP 1 (5) 15, A 924, IV TP 2–55, at p. 36.

⁸ Draft Convention annexed to the Report, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19 annex, CM/WP 4 (50) rev., A 1452, IV TP 274–95, at p. 284.

⁹ Draft Convention adopted by the Sub-Committee, Doc. CM 1 (50) 52, A 1884, V TP 76–99, at p. 86.

¹⁰ Protocol No. 8 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, ETS 118, art. 9.

¹¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 8, para. 11.

¹² Ibid., para. 43.

¹³ Draft Protocol No. 14 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms amending the control system of the Convention, Opinion No. 251 (2004), Parliamentary Assembly, para. 14.1.

the demands' of this office and means that judges must be able fully to assume all the duties inherent in membership of the new permanent Court; this is an indispensable requirement for the efficient working of the Court. During their term of office judges may not engage in any activity incompatible with the full-time character of their office.¹⁴

The heading 'Criteria for office' was also introduced by Protocol No. 11.

Protocol No. 15, which is not yet in force, introduces a new paragraph 2 to article 21 dealing with the maximum age of candidates for election to the Court and, by ricochet, the maximum age of a judge of the Court.¹⁵ The origins of the Protocol can be traced to the Brighton High Level Conference on the Future of the Court of April 2012. The Conference Declaration noted that '[a] stable judiciary promotes the consistency of the Court. It is therefore in principle undesirable for any judge to serve less than the full term of office provided for in the Convention',¹⁶ The Conference resolved that 'article 23(2) of the Convention should be amended to replace the age limit for judges by a requirement that judges must be no older than 65 years of age at the date on which their term of office commences'.¹⁷ According to the Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 15, the modification is aimed at enabling 'highly qualified judges to serve the full nine-year term of office and thereby reinforce the consistency of the membership of the Court'. It notes that '[t]he age limit applied under Article 23, paragraph 2 of the Convention, as drafted prior to the entry into force of this Protocol, had the effect of preventing certain experienced judges from completing their term of office. It was considered no longer essential to impose an age limit, given the fact that judges' terms of office are no longer renewable'.¹⁸ The Court itself welcomed the amendment, stating that the former age limit of 70 'no longer seems imperative in the present day'.¹⁹

As the Explanatory Report notes, because the process of election of a judge can be long, it was felt necessary to foresee a date that was sufficiently certain for the purpose of determining the age of the candidate. The concern was that a candidate might initially qualify but then exceed the date because of the length of the election proceedings. 'For this practical reason, the text of the Protocol departs from the exact wording of the Brighton Declaration, whilst pursuing the same end. It was thus decided that the age of the candidate should be determined at the date by which the list of three candidates has been requested by the Parliamentary Assembly', the Explanatory Report states.²⁰ Instead of amending article 23, the Protocol deletes paragraph 23(2), as it is superseded by the amendment to article 21.²¹

¹⁴ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 60.

¹⁵ Protocol No. 15 amending the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, ETS 213, art 2.

¹⁶ High Level Conference on the Future of the European Court of Human Rights, Brighton Declaration, para. 24.

¹⁷ Ibid., para. 25.f.

¹⁸ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 15, para. 12.

¹⁹ Opinion of the European Court of Human Rights on Draft Protocol No. 15 to the European Convention on Human Rights, para. 6.

²⁰ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 15, para. 13.

²¹ Ibid., para. 14.

Analysis and interpretation

The 1950 Convention dealt with election of judges and their criteria for office in a single provision, article 39. The revision of the Convention effected by Protocol No. 11 divided these two notions into two distinct provisions. Article 21 governs criteria for office and article 22 addresses election of judges. The first two paragraphs of article 21 'follow closely' articles 39(3) and 40(7) of the 1950 text of the Convention, respectively.²²

The Brighton Declaration, adopted in 2012 at the High Level Conference on the Future of the European Court of Human Rights, affirmed: 'The high calibre of judges elected to the Court depends on the quality of the candidates that are proposed to the Parliamentary Assembly for election. The States Parties' role in proposing candidates of the highest possible quality is therefore of fundamental importance to the continued success of the Court...'²³

High moral character and qualifications for appointment to high judicial office

According to the Grand Chamber, 'Article 21 § 1 and Article 22 of the Convention are intended to ensure the election, as members of the Court, of judges who are of high moral character and possess the qualifications required for appointment to high judicial office'.²⁴ In assessing candidates for election as judges of the Court, the Parliamentary Assembly will not consider lists containing candidates who 'do not appear to be of the stature to meet the criteria in Article 21, paragraph 1, of the European Convention on Human Rights'.²⁵

The requirement that 'candidates shall be of high moral character and must either possess the qualifications required for appointment to high judicial office or be jurists of recognised competence' is derived from article 2 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice. Article 21(1) closely resembles the provision that one commentator has described as having attained customary status.²⁶ The Guidelines of the Committee of Ministers say this means that 'behaviour and personal status must be compatible with holding judicial office'.²⁷

The Statute of the International Court of Justice requires that judges possess qualifications for appointment to 'the highest judicial offices', whereas the European Convention speaks of 'high judicial office'. The Statute of the International Court also specifies that 'recognised competence' be in 'international law'. That seems logical at a court that applies international law but less obvious at a specialized human rights court.

²² Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 60.

²³ High Level Conference on the Future of the European Court of Human Rights, Brighton Declaration, para. 22.

²⁴ Advisory Opinion on certain legal questions concerning the lists of candidates submitted with a view to the election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights (no. 2) [GC], §38, 22 January 2010.

²⁵ Candidates for the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Resolution 1366 (2004), para. 3(b).

²⁶ Mariano J. Aznar-Gómez, 'Article 2', in Andreas Zimmermann, Christian Tomuschat, and Karin Oellers-Frahm, eds, The Statute of the International Court of Justice, A Commentary, Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2006, pp. 205–18, at p. 218.

²⁷ Guidelines of the Committee of Ministers on the Selection of Candidates for the Post of Judge at the European Court of Human Rights, CM(2012)40 addendum final, para. 20.

The dictionary meaning of the term 'jurisconsult' is 'expert in law'. In an advertisement for candidates for the position of judge at the European Court, the United Kingdom explained that the term meant 'academic lawyers and practitioners'.

The Guidelines of the Committee of Ministers suggest as examples of good practice in this regard that judges 'have at least a Master's degree in law and practical experience in legal affairs', and that they 'show a high level of achievement and experience'.²⁸

When it advertised for candidates for the position of judge at the European Court, the United Kingdom included as criteria '[a] proven and consistently high level of achievement in the areas of law in which candidates have been engaged, and experience relevant to the post', '[t]he capacity to learn and understand quickly other legal, constitutional and political systems', and '[t]he ability to communicate effectively both orally and on paper, particularly in the role of judge rapporteur, and to work well in a chamber of international judges'. It also insisted upon '[c]ommitment to the principles of the European Convention on Human Rights'.

Legal knowledge

The European Convention requires 'recognised competence' but does not say in what. The Interlaken Declaration, adopted by the High Level Conference of the Council of Europe in 2010, refers to 'full satisfaction of the Convention's criteria for office as a judge of the Court, including knowledge of public international law and of the national legal systems'.²⁹ A call for applications by the Government of Ireland said that '[c]andidates need to have knowledge of the national legal system(s) and of public international law. Practical legal experience is also desirable'.³⁰

The Guidelines prepared by the Committee of Ministers provide some indications in this area:

Although this criterion does not supersede Article 21 of the Convention, a high level of knowledge in these fields should be taken as an implicit requirement for candidates for judge at the Court and relative levels of knowledge could be taken into account when choosing between applicants of otherwise equal merits. As the judges sit on an international court playing a subsidiary role in supervising national implementation of the Convention, it is important for them to have knowledge of both public international law and the national legal system(s). Although the Court's composition benefits from a range of legal expertise, it is generally advantageous that applicants have expertise in human rights, notably the Convention and the Court's case-law.³¹

Fluency in official languages

The working languages of the Court are English and French and it is inconceivable that a judge could serve effectively without adequate fluency in at least one of these. Nevertheless, with the expansion in membership in the Court in the 1990s concerns were expressed that some of the judges were deficient in this respect. A Recommendation on the subject ²⁸ Ibid., para. 23.

²⁹ High Level Conference on the Future of the European Court of Human Rights, Interlaken Declaration, 19 February 2010, para. 8(a).

³⁰ Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade, Judge of the European Court of Human Rights with Respect to Ireland, Information Sheet, September 2014.

³¹ Guidelines of the Committee of Ministers on the Selection of Candidates for the Post of Judge at the European Court of Human Rights, CM(2012)40 addendum final, para. 27.

from the Parliamentary Assembly in 1999 noted that the candidates put forward by States Parties for election to the Court 'did not always meet the criteria established by the Convention' and that in particular some of them 'were not sufficiently fluent in at least one of the Council of Europe's two official languages'.³²

There is no formal requirement in this respect within the Convention itself, nor does it seem one has ever been seriously proposed. However, to the extent that the Parliamentary Assembly is the gatekeeper to the Court because it elects the judges, it is in a position to impose requirements that may only be implicit in the Convention. That is precisely what it has done with respect to linguistic competence. As the Grand Chamber of the Court noted in its first Advisory Opinion, 'a sufficient knowledge of at least one of the official languages is necessary in order to make a useful contribution to the Court's work, given that the Court uses only those two languages'.³³ In 1999, the Parliamentary Assembly recommended that the Committee of Ministers invite governments to apply criteria additional to those listed in article 21, notably that they 'ensure that the candidates are in fact fluent in either French or English and are capable of working in one of these two languages'.³⁴ In 2004, it made a similar recommendation, although in perhaps a less peremptory manner, requesting 'that the candidates have a sufficient knowledge of at least one of the two official languages'.³⁵ This was accompanied by a Resolution stating that the Assembly would not consider lists of candidates that 'do not appear to have sufficient knowledge of at least one of the two official languages'.³⁶ It made this slightly more demanding in 2009 with the criterion that 'candidates should possess an active knowledge of one official language of the Council of Europe and a passive knowledge of the other'.³⁷ Yet the model curriculum vitae that it asks candidates to complete, as revised in 2009, suggests a less stringent approach: 'In the event that you do not meet the level of language proficiency required for the post of judge in an official language, please confirm your intention to follow intensive language classes of the language concerned prior to, and if need be also at the beginning of, your term of duty if elected a judge on the Court'.³⁸

The Guidelines of the Committee of Ministers also consider this requirement:

The Court's working methods involve many documents in either English or French only and relatively few in both. This requires that judges be able to read and assimilate technical, complex and nuanced documents in both languages. They must be able to direct and supervise the drafting of such documents in one of the official languages. Their language abilities must be such as to inspire confidence on the part of other courts, lawyers, applicants to the Court and the general public.

³² National procedures for nominating candidates for election to the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Recommendation 1429 (1999), para. 5.

³³ Advisory Opinion on certain legal questions concerning the lists of candidates submitted with a view to the election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights [GC], § 47, 12 February 2008.

³⁴ National procedures for nominating candidates for election to the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Recommendation 1429 (1999).

³⁵ Candidates for the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Recommendation 1649 (2004), para. 19(4).

³⁶ Candidates for the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Resolution 1366 (2004), para. 3.

³⁷ Nomination of candidates and election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Resolution 1646 (2009), para. 4.4.

³⁸ Ibid., Appendix.

Between otherwise equivalent candidates, States should therefore prefer those with the relevant levels of ability in both languages.³⁹

The United Kingdom's advertisement for candidates for the position of judge at the European Court required '[a]n operational working knowledge of French'. It seems that the United Kingdom presumed an 'operational working knowledge' of English was so obvious as not to require mention!

Experience in the field of human rights

The Convention does not impose any requirement that candidates for judicial office possess relevant experience or knowledge in the field of human rights. Nevertheless, this criterion has been added by the Parliamentary Assembly. In 1999, the Parliamentary Assembly invited governments to ensure that candidates 'have experience in the field of human rights, either as practitioners or as activists in non-governmental organisations working in this area'.⁴⁰ The model curriculum vitae annexed to the 1999 Resolution referred to '[a]ctivities and experience in the field of human rights'.⁴¹ This requirement was stated more generally in another Recommendation adopted in 2004, requiring that 'candidates have experience in the field of human rights'.⁴² At the same time, the Parliamentary Assembly adopted a Resolution stating that it would not consider lists of candidates where 'the areas of competence of the candidates appear to be unduly restricted'.⁴³ In 2009, the Assembly returned to the question, proposing a list of criteria additional to those in article 21 similar to what it had provided earlier but without any reference to 'experience in the field of human rights'.⁴⁴

The Committee of Ministers Guidelines designed to assist States in selecting and vetting candidates for the Court devote considerable attention to such matters as legal knowledge, language skills, and age, while virtually ignoring the issue of activities and experience in the field of human rights.⁴⁵

Age

The 1950 Convention did not impose any minimum or maximum age limit for members of the judiciary. Protocol No. 11 introduced a requirement that judges be required to retire at age 70.⁴⁶ The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11 said that '[s]ince the Court

³⁹ Guidelines of the Committee of Ministers on the Selection of Candidates for the Post of Judge at the European Court of Human Rights, CM(2012)40 addendum final, para. 25.

⁴⁰ National procedures for nominating candidates for election to the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Recommendation 1429 (1999), para. 6.ii.

⁴¹ Election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Resolution 1200 (1999), Appendix I, Model curriculum vitae for candidates seeking election to the European Court of Human Rights.

⁴² Candidates for the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Recommendation 1649 (2004), para. 19(2).

⁴³ Candidates for the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Resolution 1366 (2004), para. 3.

⁴⁴ Nomination of candidates and election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Resolution 1646 (2009), para. 4.

⁴⁵ Guidelines of the Committee of Ministers on the Selection of Candidates for the Post of Judge at the European Court of Human Rights, CM(2012)40 addendum final, para. 25.

⁴⁶ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 1 (new article 23(6)). The provision was will function on a permanent basis, it was deemed appropriate to introduce an age limit, as exists in most domestic legal systems'.⁴⁷ While this may be true, it is also the case that international tribunals do not, as a general rule, establish any such criterion. There is no age limit at the International Court of Justice, the International Criminal Court, and Inter-American Court of Human Rights, for example. At the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, Mohamed Shahabuddeen was re-elected a judge by the United Nations General Assembly at the age of 78. Theodor Meron was re-elected president of the Tribunal at the age of 83. At the European Court of Human Rights itself, René Cassin served as president until the age of 81. The age limit in national tribunals is often a relic of the past, at a time when life expectancy was considerably lower than it is today. Arguably, the discriminatory age limit for judges is itself incompatible with article 14 of the Convention and Protocol No. 12.

Historically, the average age of judges at the European Court of Human Rights has been about 65. This began to change as membership in the Council of Europe expanded during the 1990s. By 2012, the average age had dropped to 55, with several judges aged less than 40. According to a study, '[o]ne driver for this change was the appointment of several very young judges from Eastern Europe, as states preferred to put forward candidates who had received their education in the years after the break-up of the Soviet Union'. However, a similar phenomenon was observable in States that had joined the Council of Europe prior to 1992, 'suggesting that the trend toward nominating much younger judges was a wider phenomenon'.⁴⁸

Protocol No. 15, not yet in force, in effect raises the maximum age for judges by requiring that at the age the Parliamentary Assembly requests a list of candidates they be less than 65 years of age. In practice, this will mean that a judge could be about a year over the age of 65 at the time of taking office and therefore serve until the age of 75. There is a transitional provision by which the new rule does not apply to pending elections, and to judges who are in office or who have been elected at the time of entry into force of the amendment.⁴⁹

There is no minimum age for election as a judge to the European Court of Human Rights or, for that matter, to any other international court or tribunal. The idea has been mooted by the Rapporteur of the Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights of the Parliamentary Assembly. He has suggested that rather than impose a minimum starting age, something that 'may not in itself be a firm indicator of judicial capacity', it might be appropriate to impose a requirement of 12 to 15 years of relevant experience of candidates for election to the European Court of Human Rights.⁵⁰ renumbered as article 23(2) by Protocol No. 14 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, amending the control system of the Convention, ETS 194.

⁴⁷ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 63.

⁴⁸ Leigh Swigart and Daniel Terris, 'Who are International Judges?', in Cesare P.R. Romano, Karen J. Alter, and Yuval Shany, eds, The Oxford Handbook of International Adjudication, Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2014, pp. 619–38, at p. 631.

⁴⁹ Protocol No. 15 amending the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, ETS 213, art. 8. See also Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 15, para. 15.

⁵⁰ Draft Protocol No. 15 amending the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Report, Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights, Doc. 13154, para. 11. Also Nomination of candidates and election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights, Report, Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights, Doc. 11767, paras. 5, 32.

Individual capacity

Judges sit in their 'individual capacity'. The text is rather more elaborate than its predecessors in the 1950 version of the Convention. That the two were linked in article 40 of the 1950 Convention suggests that the requirement judges serve in their individual capacity is related to the prohibition on 'incompatible activities'. The notion of 'individual capacity' confirms that judges do not represent a State or act on its behalf. In this respect, attention must be given to the rule set out in article 26(4) of the Convention whereby the judge elected from the respondent State sits in cases before the Court.

Incompatible activities

The final paragraph of article 21 'concerns incompatibility "with the demands" of this office and means that judges must be able fully to assume all the duties inherent in membership of the new permanent Court; this is an indispensable requirement for the efficient working of the Court. During their term of office judges may not engage in any activity incompatible with the full-time character of their office.'⁵¹ The provision is a somewhat expanded version of the second sentence of article 40(7) in the 1950 text of the Convention.

'Incompatible activities' are set out in Rule 4 of the Rules of Court. It is probably not an exhaustive description. According to Rule 4:

1. In accordance with Article 21 § 3 of the Convention, the judges shall not during their term of office engage in any political or administrative activity or any professional activity which is incompatible with their independence or impartiality or with the demands of a full-time office. Each judge shall declare to the President of the Court any additional activity. In the event of a disagreement between the President and the judge concerned, any question arising shall be decided by the plenary Court.
2. A former judge shall not represent a party or third party in any capacity in proceedings before the Court relating to an application lodged before the date on which he or she ceased to hold office. As regards applications lodged subsequently, a former judge may not represent a party or third party in any capacity in proceedings before the Court until a period of two years from the date on which he or she ceased to hold office has elapsed.

The requirement that 'all questions arising from the application of this paragraph shall be decided by the Court' was not part of the predecessor texts in the 1950 version of the Convention. Added by Protocol No. 11, it seems intended to strengthen the independence of the Court by discouraging any other body from attempting to intervene, although no guidance to its interpretation is offered by the explanatory report.

Oath of office

Judges are required to take the following oath or solemn declaration either at the first session of the plenary Court that they attend or before the President: 'I swear'—or 'I solemnly declare'—'that I will exercise my functions as a judge honourably, independently and impartially and that I will keep secret all deliberations.'⁵²

⁵¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 60.

⁵² Rules of Court, Rule 3.

Further reading

- Johan Callewaert, 'Article 39', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 747–8.
- Johan Callewaert, 'Article 40', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 749–50.
- J.A. Carrillo-Salcedo, 'Quels juges pour la nouvelle Cour européenne des droits de l'homme?', (1997) 9 Revue universelle des droits de l'homme 1–3.
- Andrew Drzemczewski, 'Election of Judges to the Strasbourg Court: An Overview', [2010] EHRLR 377.
- Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 441–2.
- N. Vajić, 'Some Remarks Linked to the Independence of International Judges and the Observance of Ethics Rules in the European Court of Human Rights', in C. Hohmann-Dennhardt, P. Masuch and M. Villiger, eds, Grundrechte und Solidarität: Festschrift für Renate Jaeger, Kehl, Germany: N.P. Engel, 2011, pp. 179–93.
- Nicolas Valticos, 'Quels juges pour la prochaine Cour européenne des droits de l'homme', in Liber Amicorum Marc-André Eissen, Brussels: Bruylant, 1995, pp. 415–34.
- Erik Voeten, 'The Impartiality of International Judges: Evidence from the European Court of Human Rights', (2008) 102 American Political Science Review 417.

Article 22. Election of judges/Election des juges

The judges shall be elected by the Parliamentary Assembly with respect to each High Contracting Party by a majority of votes cast from a list of three candidates nominated by the High Contracting Party.

Les juges sont élus par l'Assemblée parlementaire au titre de chaque Haute Partie contractante, à la majorité des voix exprimées, sur une liste de trois candidats présentés par la Haute Partie contractante.

Introductory comments

Judges of international courts and tribunals are, by and large, elected to office, although there are exceptions. The judges of the International Military Tribunal were appointed by each of the four powers that had created the Tribunal. Judges at two United Nations criminal tribunals, the Special Court for Sierra Leone and the Special Tribunal for Lebanon, are subject to a complex appointment procedure but there is no election. Judges at the ad hoc tribunals for the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda created by the United Nations Security Council have, once elected, had their terms extended by resolution of the Security Council.

Where international judges are elected, the process is often accompanied by unseemly campaigning and bartering of votes. This situation is especially acute when the election is conducted in a body like the United Nations General Assembly. That each State Party to the European Convention on Human Rights is entitled to one judge eliminates some of this unpleasantness. The Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe continues to reflect on techniques intended to enhance the quality, independence, and impartiality of the judges of the Court.

Drafting of the provision

The initial draft European Convention on Human Rights prepared by the International Juridical Section of the European Movement provided that judges of the European Court of Human Rights would 'be elected by the Committee of Ministers and the Consultative Assembly, by an absolute majority of votes in each body'.¹ The model for this was the Statute of the International Court of Justice whereby judges are elected in both the Security Council and the General Assembly, acting independently of each other.² The Draft Statute of the European Court of Human Rights, proposed at the same time, set out very detailed rules for the election of judges.³ The Consultative Assembly adopted the following proposal: 'Art. 23. Members of the Court shall be elected by the Committee of Ministers and by the Consultative Assembly of the Council of Europe by a simple majority cast in each of these bodies.⁴ The initial proposal was for elections to take place in both the Consultative Assembly and the Committee of Ministers, with separate votes in each forum.⁵

¹ Convention for the Collective Protection of Individual Rights and Democratic Liberties by the States, Members of the Council of Europe, and for the establishment of a European Court of Human Rights to ensure observance of the Convention, Doc. INF/5/E/R, I TP 296-303, at p. 300, art. 9(b).

² Statute of the International Court of Justice, arts 4(1), 8.

³ Draft Statute of the European Court of Human Rights, INF/5/E/R, I TP 302-21, at pp. 302-7, arts 4-13.

The Committee of Experts, meeting in February and March 1950, agreed upon the following: 'The members of the Court shall be elected by the Consultative Assembly and by the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe from a list of persons nominated by the High Contracting Parties; each Party shall nominate three candidates.'⁶ The accompanying commentary said '[t]his system is essentially the same as that contained in the Assembly draft'.⁷ The provision was subsequently modified by the Conference of Senior Officials by appending, at the very end, the words 'of whom two at least shall be its nationals'.⁸ The reason was 'to prevent a group of representatives submitting the name of a single candidate of their nationality, and thus limiting the choice of the Committee of Ministers to that one candidate'.⁹

The major modification to the provision, by which the Committee of Ministers was removed and the election of judges made the sole prerogative of the Consultative Assembly, took place at the fifth session of the Committee of Ministers in August 1950. The text then read: 'The members of the Court shall be elected by the Consultative Assembly by a majority of the votes cast from a list of persons nominated by the Members of the Council of Europe; each Member shall nominate three candidates, of whom two at least shall be its nationals.'¹⁰

Meeting in Rome immediately before adoption of the Convention, the Committee of Legal Experts agreed on the addition of a paragraph specifying that '[a]s far as applicable, the same procedure shall be followed to complete the Court in the event of the admission of new members of the Council of Europe, and in filling casual vacancies'.¹¹ Article 39, as adopted in 1950, read as follows:

1. The members of the Court shall be elected by the Consultative Assembly by a majority of the votes cast from a list of persons nominated by the Members of the Council of Europe; each Member shall nominate three candidates, of whom two at least shall be its nationals.

⁴ Report presented by Mr P.H. Teitgen, 5 September 1949, Doc. A 290, I TP 192-213, at p. 198. Also Report [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions], 5 September 1949, Doc. AS (1) 77, I TP 216-39, at p. 234; Official Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 8 September 1949], II TP 14-274, at p. 218.

⁵ Ibid., p. 210.

⁶ Appendix to the Report of the Committee of Experts on Human Rights: Draft Convention of Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 16 March 1950, Doc. C/WP 1 (50) 15 appendix, CM/WP 1 (50) 14 revised, A 925, IV TP 50-79, at p. 71.

⁷ Report to the Committee of Ministers submitted by the Committee of Experts Instructed to Draw Up a Draft Convention of Collective Guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Doc. CM/WP 1 (5) 15, A 924, IV TP 2-55, p. 42.

⁸ Draft Convention annexed to the Report, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19 annex, CM/WP 4 (50) rev., A 1452, IV TP 274-95, at p. 288.

⁹ Text of the report submitted by the Conference [of Senior Officials] to the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19, CM/WP 4 (50) 16 rev., A 1431, IV TP 242-73, at pp. 262, 266.

¹⁰ Draft Convention adopted by the Sub-Committee, Doc. CM 1 (50) 52, A 1884, V TP 76-99, at p. 90; Draft Convention adopted by the Committee of Ministers, 7 August 1950, Doc. A 1937, V TP 120-45, at pp. 120-36; Letter dated 7 August 1950 sent by Mr MacBride, Chairman of the Committee of Ministers, to M. Spaak, President of the Consultative Assembly, Doc. No. 11, p. 600-19, V TP 144-71, at p. 162.

¹¹ Report of the Committee [of Legal Experts, 2-3 November 1950], Doc. CM/Adj (50) 3 revised, A 2531, VII TP 10-13, p. 12.

2. As far as applicable, the same procedure shall be followed to complete the Court in the event of the admission of new Members of the Council of Europe, and in filling casual vacancies.
3. The candidates shall be of high moral character and must either possess the qualifications required for appointment to high judicial office or be jurists of recognized competence.

A week after adoption of the Convention, A.H. Robertson of the Secretariat General circulated a note observing that there were two possible interpretations on paragraph 2, one by which the new Member State would propose a list of three candidates and the other by which all Members of the Council, including the new Member State, would each nominate three candidates. Robertson did not indicate how he thought the interpretative difficulty should be resolved.¹²

The provision was renumbered article 22 by Protocol No. 11 and given the title 'Election of judges'. In the words of the Explanatory Report, the new article 22 is 'virtually identical' to article 39 of the 1950 text. The reference to 'Consultative Assembly' in the 1950 version was changed to 'Parliamentary Assembly', reflecting the new terminology adopted by the Council of Europe in 1974. The Explanatory Report also states with respect to article 22: 'The judges of the new permanent Court will be elected in respect of each State Party in the same manner as those of the Court, prior to the Convention's amendment by this Protocol, namely by the Parliamentary Assembly.'¹³

Both the 1950 text of the Convention and the subsequent provision in Protocol No. 11 on the election of judges made special provision for the election of judges from new States Parties and the filling of casual vacancies. This was removed by Protocol No. 14, given changes that were made to article 23, which in effect eliminated the notion of casual vacancies. Pursuant to Protocol No. 14, when a judge does not complete a full term, an election is held according to the general procedure described in the sole remaining paragraph of article 22.¹⁴ A proposal from the Parliamentary Assembly to add the words 'containing at least one candidature from a person of each gender' after 'Contracting Party' was not adopted.¹⁵

Analysis and interpretation

An important dimension of the credibility of the European Court of Human Rights depends upon the integrity of the election process. It involves the interaction of two bodies, the State Party, which is responsible for nominating candidates, and the Parliamentary Assembly, which elects them. The Grand Chamber of the Court has spoken of a 'balance and division of powers' between the States Parties and the Parliamentary Assembly in the appointment process.¹⁶ The system 'seeks to ensure that the entities involved—the State concerned and the Assembly—enjoy a certain autonomy, within the limits of their respective powers, allowing them to determine how the procedural rules laid ¹² Note of Mr Robertson dated 14 November 1950, VII TP 12–23, at pp. 14–19.

¹³ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 61.

¹⁴ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, para. 48.

¹⁵ Draft Protocol No. 14 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, amending the control system of the Convention, Opinion No. 251 (2004), Parliamentary Assembly, para. 14.ii.

¹⁶ Advisory Opinion on certain legal questions concerning the lists of candidates submitted with a view to the election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights (no. 2) [GC], §39, 22 January 2010.

down in Article 22 are to be applied'.¹⁷ However, 'none of the entities involved in the procedure for electing judges—the High Contracting Parties and the Parliamentary Assembly—may exercise the powers they enjoy in this matter to the detriment of the others' powers'.¹⁸ A tension necessarily results to the extent that States may attempt to neutralize the role of the Parliamentary Assembly by using the nomination process to make the outcome of the election rather predictable by, for example, including two evidently incompetent candidates on their list. For some time, Ukraine attempted to emasculate the Parliamentary Assembly by simply refusing to nominate a three-judge slate and instead relying upon ad hoc judges designated in accordance with article 26(4). The Parliamentary Assembly has taken the view that '[i]n the absence of a real choice among the candidates submitted by a state party to the Convention, the Assembly shall reject lists submitted to it. In addition, in the absence of a fair, transparent and consistent national selection procedure, the Assembly may reject such lists'.¹⁹

The Parliamentary Assembly has insisted that 'the process of appointment must reflect the principles of democratic procedure, the rule of law, non-discrimination, accountability and transparency'.²⁰ In 1999, following the first elections to the 'new Court', the Parliamentary Assembly expressed dissatisfaction with certain aspects of the nomination process. It found that the method of selection of candidates varied considerably from one country to another and that 'in the majority of cases there are no rules governing the selection of candidates'. Moreover, 'the candidates put forward did not always meet the criteria established by the Convention: either they lacked experience in human rights, had never held judicial office, or were not sufficiently fluent in at least one of the Council of Europe's two official languages'.²¹

Reviewing experience a decade later, the Parliamentary Assembly said that 'despite a marked improvement in national selection procedures in several countries, there is still significant variance as concerns fairness, transparency and consistency'.²² A harsher critique came from a former judge of the Court: 'Lawyers who had no training or even a background acquaintance with human rights and/or did not have essential or adequate knowledge of one, and on some occasions of both, official working languages of the Court, namely English and French, became members of the Court with self-evident negative consequences'.²³

The Grand Chamber has stated that 'the provisions of the Convention—including those relating to the organisation and functioning of the Court—must be interpreted in such a way as to ensure their effectiveness and, in the context of Articles 21 and 22, to ¹⁷ Ibid. Also Advisory Opinion on certain legal questions concerning the lists of candidates submitted with a view to the election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights [GC], §§ 43–44, 12 February 2008.

¹⁸ Advisory Opinion on certain legal questions concerning the lists of candidates submitted with a view to the election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights (no. 2) [GC], §44, 22 January 2010.

¹⁹ Nomination of candidates and election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Resolution 1646 (2009), para. 2.

²⁰ Candidates for the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Recommendation 1649 (2004).

²¹ National procedures for nominating candidates for election to the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Recommendation 1429 (1999), para. 5.

²² Nomination of candidates and election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Resolution 1646 (2009), para. 2.

²³ Loukis Loukaides, 'Reflections of a Former European Court of Human Rights Judge on his Experiences as a Judge', (2010) 1 Roma Rights Quarterly 61.

ensure the prompt filling of all vacancies in the composition of the Court'.²⁴ Furthermore, 'Article 21 § 1 and Article 22 of the Convention are intended to ensure the election, as members of the Court, of judges who are of high moral character and possess the qualifications required for appointment to high judicial office'.²⁵

Procedure

The Parliamentary Assembly has urged governments to have appropriate national selection procedures 'to ensure that the authority and credibility of the Court are not put at risk by ad hoc and politicised processes in the nomination of candidates'.²⁶ It has indicated that States should 'issue a call for candidatures through the specialised press, so as to obtain candidates who are indeed eminent jurists satisfying the criteria' of the Convention.²⁷ The Assembly has also invited governments to ensure the selection panels or bodies and those advising on selection are 'as gender-balanced as possible'.²⁸

The Parliamentary Assembly has developed guidelines for States with respect to the nomination of candidates for the Court. The starting point for the engagement of the Parliamentary Assembly is the list of three candidates proposed by the State for whom a vacancy must be filled. One simple requirement is that the list be in alphabetical order, a mechanism to discourage the State from ranking the candidates or expressing a preference.²⁹ The list is to be accompanied by a curriculum vitae following a model adopted by the Assembly.³⁰ It has said that '[i]n principle, the list of candidates for the election of judges, once submitted to the Parliamentary Assembly, should not be modified'.³¹ Only exceptionally will the Assembly accept partial or complete modification of the list on the initiative of the government concerned.³²

²⁴ Advisory Opinion on certain legal questions concerning the lists of candidates submitted with a view to the election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights (no. 2) [GC], §37, 22 January 2010.

²⁵ Ibid., §38.

²⁶ Nomination of candidates and election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Resolution 1646 (2009).

²⁷ National procedures for nominating candidates for election to the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Recommendation 1429 (1999), para. 6.i. Also Candidates for the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Recommendation 1649 (2004), para. 19.i.

²⁸ Nomination of candidates and election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Resolution 1646 (2009).

²⁹ National procedures for nominating candidates for election to the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Recommendation 1429 (1999), para. 6.v; Candidates for the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Recommendation 1649 (2004), para. 19.v; Modalities for the election procedure of judges to the European Court of Human Rights and the Council of Europe Commissioner for Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Appendix to Resolution 1432 (2005), para. 3.

³⁰ Nomination of candidates and election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Resolution 1646, Appendix, Model curriculum vitae for candidates seeking election to the European Court of Human Rights. This replaces an earlier version: Election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Resolution 1200 (1999), Appendix I, Model curriculum vitae for candidates seeking election to the European Court of Human Rights.

³¹ Modalities for the election procedure of judges to the European Court of Human Rights and the Council of Europe Commissioner for Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Appendix to Resolution 1432 (2005), para. 1.

³² Procedure for elections held by the Parliamentary Assembly other than those of its President and Vice-Presidents, Parliamentary Assembly, Resolution 1432 (2005); Modalities for the election procedure of judges to the European Court of Human Rights and the Council of Europe Commissioner for Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Appendix to Resolution 1432 (2005).

As early as 1996, in the election of judges for the 'new Court' established pursuant to Protocol No. 11, the Parliamentary Assembly began to interview the three judges on the list submitted by a State Party. Interviews are now conducted by the Sub-Committee on the Election of Judges to the European Court of Human Rights of the Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights. According to the Assembly, the interviews are 'most helpful in order to obtain a better insight into the qualities of the candidates and thus facilitate a better-informed choice'.³³ The Sub-Committee considers the candidates 'not only as individuals but also with an eye to a harmonious composition of the Court, taking into account, for example, their professional backgrounds and a gender balance'.³⁴

In a report on its work, the Sub-Committee indicated that the interview enabled an assessment of the following characteristics: knowledge and awareness of European Convention jurisprudence; general legal knowledge and experience; intellectual and analytical ability; maturity and soundness of judgment; decisiveness and authority; communication and listening skills; integrity and independence; fairness and impartiality; understanding of people and society; courtesy and humanity; commitment to public service; conscientiousness and diligence.³⁵ The Sub-Committee submits a recommendation to the Bureau of the Assembly. The Bureau forwards to the Assembly members and may decide to make it public.³⁶

The Assembly elects the judges to the European Court of Human Rights during its part-sessions. It interrupts the procedure if one of the candidates withdraws before the first ballot. Should that happen, it asks the government to complete the list of candidates.³⁷ However, once the process is underway the State concerned cannot arbitrarily withdraw a candidate from those it has nominated.³⁸ If a candidate withdraws for reasons outside the control of the nominating State, the latter cannot then prepare a new list, but is confined to replacing the absent candidate.³⁹ To be elected, the candidate must obtain an absolute majority of votes cast. If no candidate obtains an absolute majority, a second ballot is held, after which the candidate who has obtained a relative majority of votes cast is declared elected. Election results are publicly announced by the President of the Assembly.⁴⁰ The Committee of Ministers has published a document entitled 'Guidelines of the Committee of Ministers on the Selection of Candidates for the Post of Judge at the European Court of ³³ Election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Resolution 1200 (1999), para. 3. Also Candidates for the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Resolution 1366 (2004), para. 4.

³⁴ Procedure for electing judges to the European Court of Human Rights, Sub-Committee on the election of Judges to the European Court of Human Rights, Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights AS/Jur (2010) 12, para. 6.

³⁵ Report of the Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights concerning Resolution 1366, Doc. 9963 (2003).

³⁶ Procedure for electing judges to the European Court of Human Rights, Sub-Committee on the election of Judges to the European Court of Human Rights, Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights AS/Jur (2010) 12, para. 6.

³⁷ Modalities for the election procedure of judges to the European Court of Human Rights and the Council of Europe Commissioner for Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Appendix to Resolution 1432 (2005), para. 2.

³⁸ Advisory Opinion on certain legal questions concerning the lists of candidates submitted with a view to the election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights (no. 2) [GC], §§ 47–49, 22 January 2010.

³⁹ Ibid., § 57.

⁴⁰ Procedure for electing judges to the European Court of Human Rights, Sub-Committee on the election of Judges to the European Court of Human Rights, Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights AS/Jur (2010) 12, para. 7.

Human Rights' setting out its interpretation of the relevant provisions of the Convention concerning the election of judges.⁴¹

In 2010, pursuant to the Interlaken Declaration, the Committee of Ministers established an 'Advisory Panel of Experts on Candidates for Election as Judge to the European Court of Human Rights'. The mandate of the Panel is 'to advise the High Contracting Parties whether candidates for election as judges of the European Court of Human Rights meet the criteria stipulated in Article 21 § 1 of the European Convention on Human Rights'. Its seven members include judges of the highest national courts, former judges of international courts, including the European Court of Human Rights, and lawyers. Before the list of three candidates is submitted to the Parliamentary Assembly in accordance with article 22, each State is to provide the panel with the names and curricula vitae of the candidates it intends to propose. The panel assesses the candidates in order to ensure that they are suitable. If it concludes that one or more of the candidates is not suitable, it informs the State. Its opinion on the list of candidates is subsequently communicated to the Parliamentary Assembly.⁴² According to the Plenary Court, the Advisory Panel has 'enhanced the procedure for the election of judges, to the benefit of States and the Parliamentary Assembly as they exercise their respective powers under Article 22 of the Convention'.⁴³

Gender balance

Like other international courts, the European Court of Human Rights has struggled with the issue of gender balance. According to the Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, a proposal to amend article 22 so as to require that the lists of three candidates contain representatives of both sexes was rejected, 'since that might have interfered with the primary consideration to be given to the merits of potential candidates. However, Parties should do everything possible to ensure that their lists contain both male and female candidates.'⁴⁴ At present, approximately one-third of the judges of the Court are women. This compares somewhat poorly with the International Criminal Court, which has had a feminine majority for some years, but favourably with the International Court of Justice, which has never had more than three women in a cohort of fifteen. At the 'former' European Court of Human Rights, which closed its doors in 1998 when it was replaced by the 'new Court', only two women had ever been elected as judges: Denise Bindschedler-Robert of Switzerland (1975–1991) and Elizabeth Palm of Sweden (1988–2003).

The Parliamentary Assembly began to address the challenge of gender balance at the Court during the 1990s. By its Order No. 519, the Assembly instructed the Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights to examine the question of the qualifications and manner of appointment of judges to the European Court of Human Rights, with a view to achieving a balanced representation of the sexes. Noting that a 'substantial number of ⁴¹ CM(2012)40 addendum final.

⁴² Resolution CM/Res(2010)26 on the establishment of an Advisory Panel of Experts on Candidates for Election as Judge to the European Court of Human Rights.

⁴³ Opinion on the CDDH report on the Advisory Panel, 15 April 2014, para. 5.

⁴⁴ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, para. 49.

governments' did not include a woman on their list,⁴⁵ the Parliamentary Assembly recommended that the Committee of Ministers invite States, when drawing up lists of candidates, to 'select candidates of both sexes in every case'.⁴⁶

In 2004, it proposed that the Committee of Ministers amend article 22 so as to require that the three-judge list submitted by States Parties contain at least one candidate of each sex.⁴⁷ However, no action was taken on this initiative. The Committee of Ministers took the view that 'circumstances may exceptionally arise in which, as a result of the correct application of the other five criteria, a Contracting Party may find itself obliged to submit a list containing candidates of only one sex in derogation from that rule, and that it would therefore be undesirable to give such a rule binding force under the Convention'. The Committee drew attention 'to the danger that such an obligation could under certain circumstances give rise to difficulties in satisfying the requirements of Article 21 of the Convention'.⁴⁸

Nevertheless, without amendment of the Convention, the Parliamentary Assembly can have a serious impact by rejecting lists that do not contain at least one woman. The Assembly determined that in assessing the three candidates, in the case of equal merit the Sub-Committee should give precedence 'to a candidate of the sex under-represented at the Court'.⁴⁹ It also decided not to consider lists of candidates that did not include at least one candidate of each sex.⁵⁰ This rather mechanistic approach had a serious shortcoming in that it did not permit a list of three women, 'even if this would obviously contribute to furthering the Assembly's purpose of achieving a more balanced representation of both sexes in the Court', as was noted subsequently.⁵¹ Therefore, the Assembly amended the rule to allow a same-sex list if 'the candidates belong to the sex which is under-represented in the Court, that is the sex to which under 40% of the total number of judges belong'.⁵²

The requirement did not in practice pose any difficulty for the vast majority of States. The possibility that a State could include a non-national on the list meant there could be no valid reason for a failure to identify a suitable female candidate. When Malta's list consisting of three male candidates was rejected as being inconsistent with the requirement of the Parliamentary Assembly, an advisory opinion of the Court was sought as to whether the Parliamentary Assembly had such authority under the Convention. After a thorough review of the applicable law and the development of the debate within the ⁴⁵ National procedures for nominating candidates for election to the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Recommendation 1429 (1999), para. 5.

⁴⁶ Ibid. Also Candidates for the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Recommendation 1649 (2004), para. 19.iii.

⁴⁷ Candidates for the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Recommendation 1649 (2004).

⁴⁸ Candidates for the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly Recommendation 1649 (2004) (Reply adopted by the Committee of Ministers on 20 April 2005 at the 924th meeting of the Ministers' Deputies), CM/AS(2005)Rec1649, para. 8.

⁴⁹ Candidates for the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Resolution 1366 (2004), para. 4(vi).

⁵⁰ Ibid., para. 3(ii).

⁵¹ Candidates for the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Resolution 1426 (2005), para. 4.

⁵² Ibid., para. 5.

Council of Europe, the Court ruled that the Assembly was required to contemplate exceptions and that it could not impose the strict rule that it had adopted. According to the Court:

In any event it is clear that, in not allowing any exceptions to the rule that the under-represented sex must be represented, the current practice of the Parliamentary Assembly is not compatible with the Convention: where a Contracting Party has taken all the necessary and appropriate steps with a view to ensuring that the list contains a candidate of the under-represented sex, but without success, and especially where it has followed the Assembly's recommendations advocating an open and transparent procedure involving a call for candidatures . . . , the Assembly may not reject the list in question on the sole ground that no such candidate features on it.⁵³

The Court indicated that 'exceptions to the principle that lists must contain a candidate of the under-represented sex should be defined as soon as possible'.⁵⁴ The Assembly acted promptly to allow derogation from the general rule in exceptional circumstances if a State has taken 'all the necessary and appropriate steps to ensure that the list contains a candidate of the under-represented sex, but has not been able to find a candidate of that sex who satisfies the requirements' of the Convention.⁵⁵

Further reading

- Johan Callewaert, 'Article 39', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 747–8.
- J.A. Carrillo-Salcedo, 'Quels juges pour la nouvelle Cour européenne des droits de l'homme?', (1997) 9 Revue universelle des droits de l'homme 1.
- Andrea Coomber, 'Judicial Independence: Law and Practice of Appointments to the European Court of Human Rights' [2003] European Human Rights Law Review 486.
- Andrew Drzemczewski, 'Election of Judges to the Strasbourg Court: An Overview', [2010] EHRLR 377.
- Andrew Drzemczewski, 'L'élection du juge de l'Union européenne à la Cour européenne des droits de l'homme', (2013) 24 RTDH 551.
- Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 443–5.
- Hans Christian Krüger, 'Procédure de selection des juges de la nouvelle Cour européenne des droits de l'homme', (1991) 8 Revue universelle des droits de l'homme 113.
- M. Kuijjer, 'Voting Behaviour and National Bias in the European Court of Human Rights and the International Court of Justice', (1997) 10 Leiden Journal of International Law 49.
- P. Lambert, 'Les Juges ad hoc à la Cour européenne des Droits de l'Homme', [1999] RTDH 479.
- Jutta Limbach, Pedro Cruz Villalón, Roger Errera, Anthony Lester, Tamara Morshchakova, Steven Sedley, and Andrzej Zoll, Judicial Independence: Law and Practice of Appointments to the European Court of Human Rights, London: Interights, 2003.
- H.G. Schermers, 'Election of Judges to the European Court of Human Rights', [1998] European Law Review 575.
- N. Vajic, 'Some Remarks Linked to the Independence of International Judges and the Observance of Ethical Rules in the ECHR', in Christine Hohmann-Dennhardt, Peter Masuch, and Mark

⁵³ Advisory Opinion on certain legal questions concerning the lists of candidates submitted with a view to the election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights [GC], § 54, 12 February 2008.

⁵⁴ Ibid.

⁵⁵ Candidates for the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Resolution 1627 (2008).

- Villiger, eds, Grundrechte und Solidarität. Durchsetzung und Verfahren: Festschrift für Renate Jaeger, Kehl, Germany: N.P. Engel, 2011, pp. 179–93.
- E. Voeten, 'The Politics of International Judicial Appointments: Evidence from the European Court of Human Rights', (2007) 61 International Organization 669.
- E. Voeten, 'The Impartiality of International Judges: Evidence from the European Court of Human Rights', (2008) 102 American Political Science Review 417.

Article 23. Terms of office and dismissal/Durée du mandat et révocation

1. The judges shall be elected for a period of nine years. They may not be re-elected.
 2. The terms of office of judges shall expire when they reach the age of 70.¹
 3. The judges shall hold office until replaced. They shall, however, continue to deal with such cases as they already have under consideration.
 4. No judge may be dismissed from office unless the other judges decide by a majority of two-thirds that that judge has ceased to fulfil the required conditions.
1. Les juges sont élus pour une durée de neuf ans. Ils ne sont pas rééligibles.
 2. Le mandat des juges s'achève dès qu'ils atteignent l'âge de 70 ans.
 3. Les juges restent en fonction jusqu'à leur remplacement. Ils continuent toutefois de connaître des affaires dont ils sont déjà saisis.
 4. Un juge ne peut être relevé de ses fonctions que si les autres juges décident, à la majorité des deux tiers, que ce juge a cessé de répondre aux conditions requises.

Introductory comments

Unlike national justice systems, where judges are frequently appointed for life or until some specified retirement age, international courts and tribunals usually specify a fixed term of a number of years with provision for a short extension in order to complete pending cases. Nine-year terms are prescribed for judges at the International Court of Justice and the International Criminal Court. At temporary or ad hoc institutions the terms may be much shorter; judges at the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia and the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda were elected to terms of four years and judges at the Special Court for Sierra Leone and the Special Tribunal for Lebanon to terms of three years. As a general proposition, the longer the term, the better the protection of the independence and impartiality of the judge. The restriction to a single term is also a valuable feature that contributes to independence and impartiality. If judges can be re-elected, there is a concern that their views may be influenced by inappropriate concerns, especially as the renewal date approaches.

Dismissal is a very rare event and there are only a few examples of this even being considered by international courts and tribunals. In May 2012, the plenary of the judges of the Special Court for Sierra Leone declared a judge 'unfit to sit' and recommended that the case be dealt with further by the appointing authority.² In another case, at the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, a judge was disqualified from a case, in effect ending his term because he had been appointed at litem.³

¹ Paragraph 2 is deleted pursuant to article 2 of Protocol No. 15 amending the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, ETS 213, not yet in force. When Protocol No. 15 enters into force, paragraphs 3 and 4 will become paragraphs 2 and 3.

² Resolution on Complaint by Trial Chamber II against Justice Malick Sow, cited in Prosecutor v. Taylor (SCSL-03-01-A), Separate Opinion of Justice George Gelaga King on Decision on Charles Ghankay Taylor's Motion for Partial Voluntary Withdrawal or Disqualification of Appeals Chamber Judges, 13 September 2012.

³ Prosecutor v. Šešelj (IT-03-67-T), Decision on Defence Motion for Disqualification of Judge Frederik Harhoff and Report to Vice President, 28 August 2013; UN Doc. S/2013/678, para. 14.

Drafting of the provision

The initial Draft Statute of the European Court of Human Rights prepared by the International Juridical Section of the European Movement provided for election to nine-year terms, with the possibility of re-election.⁴ A member of the Court could only be dismissed if 'in the unanimous opinion of the other members, he has ceased to fulfil the required conditions'.⁵

Although the draft Convention adopted by the Consultative Assembly in September 1949 contained provisions governing establishment of the Court and the election of its judges, the term of office was nowhere specified, nor did any provision contemplate removal from office.⁶ The Committee of Experts, meeting in February and March 1950, introduced a provision that provided for a nine-year term of office with the possibility of re-election. As an exception, the terms of four of the first judges to be elected would expire after three years and the terms of another four after three years. In this way, a system whereby approximately one-third of the judges would be elected every three years would be put in place.⁷ The Conference of Senior Officials added yet another paragraph to the text: 'A member of the Court shall hold office until replaced. After having been replaced, he shall continue to deal with such cases as he already had under consideration.'⁸

As the text of the Convention was being finalized, H.J. Downing of the United Kingdom's Foreign Office drew the attention of the Secretariat General to a discrepancy in the Convention. He noted that the provision dealing with terms of office of members of the European Commission was essentially identical to that for the Court except that there was an additional paragraph in the former specifying that a member elected to replace a member whose term of office had not expired was to hold office for the remainder of the term (and not, presumably, begin a new three-year term). 'Was it intended that the terms of office should be parallel?', Downing inquired.⁹ Meeting in Rome immediately before adoption of the Convention, the Committee of Legal Experts agreed on the addition of a paragraph equivalent to the one applicable to the Commission.¹⁰

The antecedent of article 23 adopted as part of the 1950 Convention read as follows:

Article 40

1. The members of the Court shall be elected for a period of nine years. They may be re-elected. However, of the members elected at the first election the terms of four members shall expire at the end of three years, and the terms of four more members shall expire at the end of six years.
2. The members whose terms are to expire at the end of the initial periods of three and six years shall be chosen by lot by the Secretary-General immediately after the first election has been completed.

⁴ Draft Statute of the European Court of Human Rights, INF/5/E/R, I TP 302-21, at p. 304, art. 12(a).

⁵ Ibid., p. 306, art. 17.

⁶ Recommendation No. 38 to the Committee of Ministers adopted 8 September 1949 on the conclusion of the debates, Doc. AS (1) 108, II TP 274-83.

⁷ Appendix to the Report of the Committee of Experts to the Committee of Ministers—Draft Convention (16 March 1950), Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 14 revised, A 925, IV TP 50-79, at p. 72.

⁸ Draft Convention appended to the Draft Report, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 16, appendix, A 1445, IV TP 218-40, at p. 234.

⁹ Letter addressed 28 October 1950 by Mr Downing (United Kingdom) to Mr Robertson (Secretariat), CDH (70) 30, VI TP 286-91, at p. 290.

¹⁰ Report of the Committee [of Legal Experts, 2-3 November 1950], Doc. CM/Adj (50) 3 revised, A 2531, VII TP 10-13, p. 12.

3. A member of the Court elected to replace a member whose terms of office has not expired shall hold office for the remainder of his predecessor's term.
4. The members of the Court shall hold office until replaced. After having been replaced, they shall continue to deal with such cases as they already have under consideration.

A week after adoption of the Convention, A.H. Robertson of the Secretariat General circulated a note concerning the term of office of judges elected from new Member States. He said the Committee of Legal Experts contemplated two possible solutions, one whereby after a new Member State is admitted no new judge should be elected until the next triennial election, the other by which there would be a judicial election immediately following admission of a new Member State but the term would be less than the full nine years so as to expire at the time of a triennial election. Robertson noted the suggestion that this might be addressed in the Rules of Court.¹¹

Article 40 was amended in 1966 by Protocol No. 5. The following paragraphs were added:

1. In order to ensure that, as far as possible, one third of the membership of the Court shall be renewed every three years, the Consultative Assembly may decide, before proceeding to any subsequent election, that the term or terms of office of one or more members to be elected shall be for a period other than nine years but not more than twelve and not less than six years.
2. In cases where more than one term of office is involved and the Consultative Assembly applies the preceding paragraph, the allocation of the terms of office shall be effected by the drawing of lots by the Secretary General immediately after the election.

These paragraphs were inserted after paragraph 2, and paragraphs 3 and 4 of the original text were renumbered as paragraph 5 and 6. The provision was similar to one adopted at the same time with respect to the European Commission of Human Rights. According to the Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 5:

In the case of the Court, it is the Consultative Assembly which may fix terms of office between six and twelve years for judges in order to ensure that, as far as possible, one-third of the membership of the Court shall be renewed every three years. The new provision also applies to elections of judges on the accession of a new Member State to the Council of Europe, in order that they may fit into the new pattern.¹²

Article 23 in its present form results from Protocol No. 11. It introduced a term of six years for members of the 'new Court'. The Explanatory Report did not provide any information on the rationale for this change.¹³ Six years had been the term for members of the European Commission of Human Rights pursuant to article 22(1) of the 1950 text of the Convention. As in the 'former Court', judges remained eligible for re-election. The new article introduced by Protocol No. 11 also contained transitional provisions, necessary in order to establish a rotation of judges so that all of their terms did not expire at the same time. These provisions are no longer relevant and were removed by Protocol No. 14. Finally, Protocol No. 11 introduced an age limit, requiring judges to retire at the age of 70.

The term of judges was again changed by Protocol No. 14, returning to the nine-year term of the original 1950 Convention but without the possibility of renewal. According to the Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, '[t]hese changes are intended to reinforce ¹¹ Note of Mr Robertson dated 14 November 1950, VII TP 12–23, at pp. 18–21.

¹² Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 5, para. 16.

¹³ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, paras 29, 62.

their independence and impartiality, as desired notably by the Parliamentary Assembly in its Recommendation 1649 (2004).¹⁴ Under the 1950 Convention and Protocol No. 11, a judge elected to replace an incumbent who did not complete the term would only sit for the remainder of the term. That system was abolished by Protocol No. 14, by rewording paragraph 1 of article 23 and removing paragraphs 2 to 5 (and the consequential renumbering of paragraphs 6 and 7 as paragraphs 2 and 3, respectively). Henceforth, a new judge begins a full nine-year term, even in the case of a casual vacancy. The Explanatory Report says that this is 'to ensure that the introduction of a non-renewable term of office does not threaten the continuity of the Court'.¹⁵

The age limit of 70 imposed by Protocol No. 11 was retained. According to the Explanatory Report, paragraphs 1 and 2, when read together, 'may not be understood as excluding candidates who, on the date of election, would be older than 61'.¹⁶ It notes that such an interpretation 'would be tantamount to unnecessarily depriving the Court of the possibility of benefiting from experienced persons, if elected'.¹⁷ Nevertheless, 'it is generally recommended that High Contracting Parties avoid proposing candidates who, in view of their age, would not be able to hold office for at least half the nine-year term before reaching the age of 70'.¹⁸ Finally, Protocol No. 14 incorporated the former article 24, dealing with dismissal, within article 23. The reason was purely technical: to avoid renumbering a large number of provisions as a result of the insertion of a new article 27.¹⁹

Pursuant to Protocol No. 15, which is not yet in force, the age limit of 70 is replaced by a requirement that candidates for the Court be under 65. The relevant provision will become paragraph 2 of article 22. With the entry into force of Protocol No. 15 and the elimination of paragraph 2, paragraphs 3 and 4 will be renumbered as paragraphs 2 and 3.

Analysis and interpretation

Terms of office

Judges of the European Court of Human Rights are elected for a term of nine years. They may not be re-elected. If the seat is vacant on the date of the election of the judge, or if it takes place less than three months before the vacancy, the term of office begins from the date of taking up office. This shall not be later than three months after the date of election. On the other hand, if it takes place more than three months before the seat becomes vacant, the term begins on the date the seat becomes vacant.²⁰ The incumbent judge remains in office until the successor has taken the oath or made the solemn declaration.²¹

Even if the term has expired, or if the judge has resigned, he or she continues to sit in pending cases.²² Resignation of a judge is to be notified to the President of the Court, who must transmit this to the Secretary General of the Council of Europe.²³

¹⁴ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, para. 50.

¹⁵ Ibid.

¹⁶ Ibid., para. 53.

¹⁷ Ibid.

¹⁸ Ibid.

¹⁹ Ibid., para. 56.

²⁰ Rules of Court, Rule 2.

²¹ Ibid., Rule 2(3).

²² Ibid., Rules 6, 24(4), 26(3).

²³ Ibid., Rule 6.

The term of a judge comes to an end if the State withdraws from the Council of Europe. This was the case of the Greek judge, Georges Maridakis, when his country denounced the European Convention and quit the Council of Europe in 1970. The Court held that 'as the withdrawal of Greece from the Council of Europe becomes effective on 31 December 1970, the office for which Mr. Maridakis was elected by the Consultative Assembly on the nomination of the Greek Government cannot continue to operate beyond that date'.²⁴ When Czechoslovakia broke into two, on 31 December 1992, B. Repik ceased being the judge elected for that country. He was re-elected to the Court the following September as the judge for Slovakia.

The Grand Chamber has stated that 'the provisions of the Convention—including those relating to the organisation and functioning of the Court—must be interpreted in such a way as to ensure their effectiveness and, in the context of Articles 21 and 22, to ensure the prompt filling of all vacancies in the composition of the Court'.²⁵

Age

Judges are required to retire from office when they reach the age of 70. Protocol No. 15 repeals this rule, replacing it with a requirement that they be aged less than 65 at the time of the call for nominations by the Parliamentary Assembly, a provision that will be article 22(2) when the Protocol enters into force. The new rule will enable judges to serve until about the age of 75. This issue of age limits is discussed in more detail in the chapter on article 21 in this Commentary.

Dismissal

The 1950 text of the Convention did not have a provision governing dismissal. This was introduced by Protocol No. 11 with a text modelled upon article 18(1) of the Statute of the International Court of Justice. Unlike article 18(1), however, which postulates unanimity, article 23 of the Convention requires a majority of two-thirds of the judges of the Court. Rule 7 of the Rules of Court specifies that in dismissal proceedings, the judge 'must first be heard by the plenary Court'. Furthermore, proceedings for dismissal may be 'set in motion' by any judge, suggesting that this is the only way for this to take place. The procedure itself is not specified anywhere in the Convention or the Rules of Court. Although rare in practice—it seems that no such proceedings have ever been initiated—in the unusual circumstances where they might arise greater precision about the procedure would be desirable. The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11 states that the provision was added 'in order to ensure the independence of the Court'.²⁶ But the rights of a judge threatened with dismissal must also be ensured in order to avoid a situation where personal rivalries and prejudices might contribute to an attempt at removal.

Status and working conditions of judges

The status and conditions of service of judges of the European Court of Human Rights are set by the Committee of Ministers, acting pursuant to article 16 of the Statute of the ²⁴ Resolution of the Court, 29 September 1970, (1970) 13 YB 43.

²⁵ Advisory Opinion on certain legal questions concerning the lists of candidates submitted with a view to the election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights (no. 2) [GC], §37, 22 January 2010.

²⁶ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 64.

Council of Europe.²⁷ Salaries of judges were raised in 2009 to a net amount of approximately €163,160 per annum, with additional sums payable for relocation and a small premium for the President and the Vice-presidents. In 2009, the Committee of Ministers also introduced an annual pension for judges of the Court, varying from about €22,151 to €44,301 depending upon a minimum of six and a maximum of twelve years of service.²⁸ The Committee of Ministers requires that judges reside 'at or near the seat of the Court'.²⁹ The Committee has also addressed what it calls 'Recognition of service as a judge of the European Court of Human Rights' by calling upon States 'to address appropriately the situation of judges of the Court, once their term of office has expired, by seeking to ensure, to the extent possible within the applicable national legislation, that former judges have the opportunity to maintain their career prospects at a level consistent with the office that they have exercised'.³⁰ This becomes more important to the extent that judges are younger. In the past, when the average age of judges was about 65, most of them were not particularly concerned with employment prospects upon the completion of their terms.

The Parliamentary Assembly also takes an interest in the employment conditions of judges. In particular, it has insisted on the need to: ensure that the status and remuneration of judges is commensurate with the dignity of their profession and burden of responsibilities; provide adequate support staff and equipment to ensure that judges can act efficiently and without undue delay; take all necessary measures to ensure the safety of judges, including the presence of security guards on Court premises or providing police protection for judges who are, or may become, victims of serious threats; ensure that judges of the Court are entitled to freedom of expression and association, providing that they exercise these rights in a manner that preserves the dignity of their office, impartiality, and independence.³¹

Precedence

Nothing in the Convention suggests any relevance to the issue of 'precedence' of members of the Court. However, Rule 5 of the Rules of Court provides a mechanism for determining this issue. It is a combination of the position they hold within the Court, the date of taking up office, and chronological age. The President comes first, followed by the Vice-Presidents of the Court and the Presidents of the Sections. If the Vice-Presidents and the President of the Sections have been elected on the same date, then the length of time since they took office determines their position. If this is the same, chronological age resolves the issue. If they were born on the same day, the Rules provide no answer. Elected ²⁷ Resolution CM/Res(2013)4 amending Resolution CM/Res(2009)5 on the status and conditions of service of judges of the European Court of Human Rights and of the Commissioner for Human Rights; Resolution CM/Res(2009)5 on the status and conditions of service of judges of the European Court of Human Rights and of the Commissioner for Human Rights, Committee of Ministers, 23 September 2009; Resolution Res(2004)50 on the status and conditions of service of judges of the European Court of Human Rights, Committee of Ministers, 15 December 2004.

²⁸ Resolution CM/RES(2009)5 on the status and conditions of service of judges of the European Court of Human Rights and of the Commissioner for Human Rights, Committee of Ministers, 23 September 2009, art. 10.

²⁹ Ibid., art. 5.

³⁰ Recognition of service as a judge of the European Court of Human Rights, DD(2013)1321 and DD(2014)302.

³¹ Candidates for the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Recommendation 1649 (2004).

judges take precedence according to the date of their taking up office in accordance with Rule 2. Judges who have served the same length of time shall take precedence according to age. Ad hoc judges take precedence after the elected judges according to their date of birth.

Further reading

Johan Callewaert, 'Article 40', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 749–50.
Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 446–7.

Article 24. Registry and rapporteurs/Greffe et rapporteurs

1. The Court shall have a Registry, the functions and organisation of which shall be laid down in the rules of the Court.

2. When sitting in a single-judge formation, the Court shall be assisted by rapporteurs who shall function under the authority of the President of the Court. They shall form part of the Court's Registry.

1. La Cour dispose d'un greffe dont les tâches et l'organisation sont fixées par le règlement de la Cour.

2. Lorsqu'elle siège en formation de juge unique, la Cour est assistée de rapporteurs qui exercent leurs fonctions sous l'autorité du président de la Cour. Ils font partie du greffe de la Cour.

Introductory comments

The Registry is the administrative pillar of the Court. This is a feature of the structure of virtually all international courts and tribunals.

Drafting of the provision

There was no provision concerning the Registry and legal secretaries in the 1950 text of the Convention. Protocol No. 11 introduced the ancestor of article 24. It was numbered article 25, and consisted of one paragraph containing two sentences. The first sentence was derived from Rules 11 and 12 of the former Rules of Court.¹ The second sentence read: 'The Court shall be assisted by legal secretaries.' According to the Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, it was inserted 'in order to ensure that members of the Court can, if they so wish, be assisted by legal secretaries (law clerks). Such assistants, who may be appointed upon the proposal of the judges, must have the required qualifications and practical experience to carry out the duties assigned to them by the judges.'²

The provision became article 24 when articles 22 and 23 were combined, an amendment dictated by Protocol No. 14. The second sentence of the original provision was deleted. The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14 noted that 'the legal secretaries, created by Protocol No. 11, have in practice never had an existence of their own, independent from the registry, as is the case at the Court of Justice of the European Communities'.³

Paragraph 2 was added by Protocol No. 14 'so as to introduce the function of rapporteur as a means of assisting the new single-judge formation provided for in the new Article 27'.⁴ The Explanatory Report continues:

58. ... While it is not strictly necessary from a legal point of view to mention rapporteurs in the Convention text, it was none the less considered important to do so because of the novelty of rapporteur work being carried out by persons other than judges and because it will be indispensable

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 65.

² Ibid., para. 67.

³ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, para. 58.

⁴ Ibid., para. 58.

to create these rapporteur functions in order to achieve the significant potential increase in filtering capacity which the institution of single-judge formations aims at. The members of the registry exercising rapporteur functions will assist the new single-judge formations. In principle, the single judge should be assisted by a rapporteur with knowledge of the language and the legal system of the respondent Party. The function of rapporteur will never be carried out by a judge in this context.

59. It will be for the Court to implement the new paragraph 2 by deciding, in particular, the number of rapporteurs needed and the manner and duration of appointment. On this point, it should be stressed that it would be advisable to diversify the recruitment channels for registry lawyers and rapporteurs. Without prejudice to the possibility to entrust existing registry lawyers with the rapporteur function, it would be desirable to reinforce the registry, for fixed periods, with lawyers having an appropriate practical experience in the functioning of their respective domestic legal systems. Since rapporteurs will form part of the Court's registry, the usual appointment procedures and relevant staff regulations will apply. This would make it possible to increase the work capacity of the registry while allowing it to benefit from the domestic experience of these lawyers. Moreover, it is understood that the new function of rapporteur should be conferred on persons with a solid legal experience, expertise in the Convention and its case-law and a very good knowledge of at least one of the two official languages of the Council of Europe and who, like the other staff of the registry, meet the requirements of independence and impartiality.

Analysis and interpretation

The Registry

The Registry provides the Court with legal and administrative support so that it can conduct its judicial functions. The Registry processes and prepares applications for adjudication by Court. It has a staff of more than 600, including nearly 300 legal professionals. Members of the staff of the Registry correspond with applicants, States, and other participants in the litigation process. The activities of the Registry are governed by General Instructions. These are drawn up by the Registrar and approved by the President of the Court.⁵

The Registry consists of Section Registries for each of the Sections set up by the Court, as well as of administrative units necessary for the legal and administrative services of the Court.⁶ A Section Registrar and a Deputy Section Registrar assist each of the Court's five judicial Sections. Case-processing divisions within the Registry prepare the files and analytical notes to assist the judges. Besides the case-processing divisions, the Registry also has administrative units responsible for such matters as information technology; case-law information and publications; research and the library; just satisfaction; press and public relations; language department; and internal administration.

The Registrar is the head of the Registry.⁷ The functions of the Registrar are set out in Rule 17. The Registrar is to 'assist the Court in the performance of its functions and shall be responsible for the organisation and activities of the Registry under the authority of the President of the Court'. The Registrar has custody of the archives of the Court and is 'the channel for all communications and notifications made by, or addressed to, the Court in connection with the cases brought or to be brought before it'.⁸ Subject to the duty of

⁵ Rules of Court, Rule 17(4).

⁶ Ibid., Rule 18(1).

⁷ Ibid., Rule 15(1).

⁸ Ibid., Rule 17(2).

discretion, the Registrar has the responsibility to reply to requests for information concerning the work of the Court, particularly enquiries from the press.⁹ The Registrar 'shall be of high moral character and must possess the legal, managerial and linguistic knowledge and experience necessary to carry out the functions attaching to the post'.¹⁰

The Registrar is elected for a term of five years, which may be renewed. Elections for the position are held by secret ballot and only elected judges who are present may take part. If no candidate receives an absolute majority of the elected judges present, a second ballot is held for the two candidates who have received the most votes. If there is a tie, preference is to be given to a female candidate and, secondly, to the older candidate.¹¹ Before taking office, the Registrar takes an oath or solemn declaration to exercise his or her functions 'loyally, discreetly and conscientiously'.¹² The Registrar may only be dismissed on the basis of a vote in which a majority of two-thirds of the elected judges decides, meeting in plenary session, 'that the person concerned has ceased to fulfil the required conditions'. The procedure may be set in motion by any judge. The Registry 'must be heard by the plenary Court'.¹³

The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11 states that 'one or more Deputy Registrars are elected by the Court'.¹⁴ The Rules of Court state that two Deputy Registrars are elected in similar fashion.¹⁵ In practice, there is only one Deputy Registrar.

Rapporteurs

Non-judicial rapporteurs assist the Court when it sits in a single-judge formation. They are appointed by the President of the Court on the proposal of the Registrar. Section Registrars and Deputy Section Registrars act ex officio as non-judicial rapporteurs.¹⁶ The rapporteur provided for by article 24 should not be confused with Judge rapporteurs who are assigned to oversee the preparation of a case in accordance with Rules 48 to 50 of the Rules of Court.

Further reading

- Norbert Paul Engel, 'Status, Ausstattung und Personalhoheit des Inter-Amerikanischen und des Europäischen Gerichtshofs für Menschenrechte', (2003) 30 EuGRZ 122.
- Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, p. 448.
- Erik Fribergh, 'The Authority over the Court's Registry within the Council of Europe', in Lucius Caflisch, Johan Callewaert, Roderick Liddell, Paul Mahoney, and Mark Villiger, eds, Liber Amicorum Luzius Wildhaber, Kehl, Germany: N.P. Engel, 2007, pp. 145–58.
- Paul Mahoney, 'The Status of the Registry of the European Court of Human Rights: Past, Present and Future', in Mahoney et al., Melanges Ryssdal, pp. 845–62.
- Paul Mahoney, 'Separation of Powers in the Council of Europe: The Status of the European Court of Human Rights vis-à-vis the Authorities of the Council of Europe', (2003) 24 HRLJ 152.

⁹ Ibid., Rule 17(3).

¹⁰ Ibid., Rule 15(1).

¹¹ Ibid., Rule 15(3).

¹² Ibid., Rule 15(4).

¹³ Ibid., Rule 15(2).

¹⁴ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 66.

¹⁵ Ibid., Rule 16.

¹⁶ Ibid., Rule 18A.

Article 25. Plenary Court/Assemblée plénière

The plenary Court shall

- (a) elect its President and one or two Vice-Presidents for a period of three years; they may be re-elected;
- (b) set up Chambers, constituted for a fixed period of time;
- (c) elect the Presidents of the Chambers of the Court; they may be re-elected;
- (d) adopt the rules of the Court;
- (e) elect the Registrar and one or more Deputy Registrars;
- (f) make any request under Article 26, paragraph 2.

La Cour réunie en Assemblée plénière

- a) élit, pour une durée de trois ans, son président et un ou deux vice-présidents; ils sont rééligibles;
- b) constitue des chambres pour une période déterminée;
- c) élit les présidents des chambres de la Cour, qui sont rééligibles;
- d) adopte le règlement de la Cour;
- e) élit le greffier et un ou plusieurs greffiers adjoints;
- f) fait toute demande au titre de l'article 26, paragraphe 2.

Introductory comments

The Plenary Court, consisting of all forty-seven judges, does not sit as a judicial body. This was the case previously, when the Court was smaller, prior to the adoption of Protocol No. 11. Since that time, the largest judicial formation is the Grand Chamber, made up of seventeen judges. The competence of the Plenary Court is now confined to the matters set out in article 25.

Drafting of the provision

A provision in the 1949 draft statute of the European Court of Human Rights prepared by the European Movement said that 'the full Court shall sit except when it is expressly provided otherwise'. The term 'full Court' was rendered in French as 'séance plénière'.¹ During its 1949 session, the Consultative Assembly does not appear to have considered the possibility that the European Court would sit in plenary session. Indeed, it was not particularly concerned with the detailed operations of the Court at all. That discussion really began in the Committee of Experts that met in February and March 1950. It proposed that the Court 'shall consist of one Chamber composed of 7 judges, to consider cases brought before it'.² The draft referred to three functions of 'the Court', namely electing the President and Vice-President, the development of rules, and the determination of the procedure.³ Subsequently these provisions, subject to a few minor changes, became articles 41 and 55 of the final version of the Convention.⁴

¹ Draft Statute of the European Court of Human Rights, INF/5/E/R, I TP 302–21, at p. 308, art. 24.

² Appendix to the Report of the Committee of Experts on human rights: Draft Convention of protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms, 16 March 1950, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 15 appendix, CM/WP 1 (50) 14 revised, A 925, IV TP 50–79, at p. 72, art. 34. Also: Preliminary draft convention for the maintenance and further realisation of human rights and fundamental freedoms, 15 February 1950, Doc. A 833, III TP 236–46, at p. 244, art. 31; Preliminary Draft Convention, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 14, A 932, III TP 312–35, at p. 330, art. 38.

Article 41

The Court shall elect its President and one or two Vice-Presidents for a period of three years. They may be re-elected.

Article 55

The Court shall draw up its own rules and shall determine its own procedure.

It seems obvious from the context of articles 41 and 55 of the 1950 text of the Convention that what is meant by 'the Court' is the 'plenary Court' in the sense of all elected judges. Nevertheless, elsewhere in the Convention the term 'the Court' is used in a context indicating a reference to the relevant Chamber dealing with a particular case. For example, article 49 states that if there is a dispute about 'whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decisions of the Court'. It is clear from the context that this is not the plenary Court, but rather the Chamber in question.

The expression 'plenary Court' was employed in the first version of the Rules of Court, adopted in 1959. Rule 1(b) said that 'the expression "plenary Court" means the European Court of Human Rights sitting in plenary session'. The Rules specified that the elections of the President and the Vice-President, in accordance with article 41, were to be conducted by the 'plenary Court'.⁵ Indeed, the Rules referred to the office as 'Presidency of the Plenary Court'. The Rules required that a session of the plenary Court be convened at least once annually and that there be a quorum of nine of the elected judges.⁶

The original Rules of Court gave the plenary Court an adjudicative role in three situations: '[i]n the case of doubt or dispute as to whether a Contracting Party has the right... to bring a case before the Court';⁷ dispute about the existence of a common interest justifying designation of a single common-interest judge;⁸ cases where the Chamber had relinquished jurisdiction because of the existence of a 'serious question affecting the interpretation of the Convention' and those 'where the resolution of such question might have a result inconsistent with a judgment previously delivered by a Chamber or by the plenary Court'.⁹

The 1950 text of the Convention authorized only one Vice-President. The possibility of a second Vice-President was introduced by Protocol No. 8.¹⁰ According to the Explanatory Report, the relevant provision 'has been rendered more flexible so as to allow for a second vice-presidency. This is justified by both the increase over recent years in the number of the Court's members and the build-up in its workload'.¹¹

³ Appendix to the Report of the Committee of Experts on human rights: Draft Convention of protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms, 16 March 1950, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 15 appendix, CM/WP 1 (50) 14 revised, A 925, IV TP 50-79, at p. 72, arts. 31, 33.

⁴ Note that article 55 of the 1950 text was amended by Protocol No. 2, art. 4. In this respect, see the Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 69.

⁵ Rules of Court (adopted 18 September 1959), Rule 7(2).

⁶ Ibid., Rules 16, 17.

⁷ Ibid., Rule 21(4).

⁸ Ibid., Rule 25(2).

⁹ Ibid., Rule 48.

¹⁰ Protocol No. 8 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, ETS 118, art. 9.

¹¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 8, para. 44.

Article 25 was introduced by Protocol No. 11, although at the time of entry into force it bore the number 26.¹² The provision was renumbered as article 25 by Protocol No. 14, consequent upon the combining of articles 22 and 23 in a single provision. It was also given the heading 'Plenary Court'. Protocol No. 11 determined that the plenary Court would deal only with matters of organization and that judicial functions like those that it had exercised in the 'former Court' would henceforth be the realm of the Grand Chamber.¹³

According to the Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14:

It is understood that the term "Chambers" appearing in paragraphs b and c refers to administrative entities of the Court (which in practice are referred to as "Sections" of the Court) as opposed to the judicial formations envisaged by the term "Chambers" in new Article 26, paragraph 1, first sentence. It was not considered necessary to amend the Convention in order to clarify this distinction.¹⁴

Paragraph (f) was added to article 25 by Protocol No. 14 'in order to reflect the new function attributed to the plenary Court by this protocol'.¹⁵

Analysis and interpretation

The Court sits in plenary session in order to exercise a variety of functions, most of them of an administrative rather than a judicial nature. For example, the plenary Court is responsible for the election of the President, the Vice-Presidents, the Registrar, and the Deputy-Registrars. Removal of the Registrar, the Deputy-Registrars, and the judges themselves also falls under the authority of the plenary Court.

The list of functions of the plenary Court in article 25 is not exhaustive. For example, the plenary Court has issued opinions on the adoption of new protocols to the Convention.¹⁶ The Court has also expressed opinions in response to requests from the Committee of Ministers and the Steering Committee on Human Rights dealing with execution of judgments, reducing the caseload of the Court and the election of judges.¹⁷ The plenary Court is charged by the Sixth Protocol to the General Agreement on Privileges and Immunities of the Council of Europe with responsibility respecting the waiver of immunity:

The plenary Court alone shall be competent to waive the immunity of judges; it has not only the right, but is under a duty, to waive the immunity of a judge in any case where, in its opinion, the immunity would impede the course of justice, and where it can be waived without prejudice to the purpose for which the immunity is accorded.¹⁸

¹² See Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, paras 68–69.

¹³ Ibid., para. 80.

¹⁴ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, para. 60.

¹⁵ Ibid., para. 60.

¹⁶ Opinion of the Court on Draft Protocol No. 15 to the European Convention on Human Rights, 6 February 2013; Opinion of the Court on Draft Protocol No. 16 to the Convention extending its competence to give advisory opinions on the interpretation of the Convention, 6 May 2013.

¹⁷ Opinion on the CDDH report on the Advisory Panel, 15 April 2014; Reply to Committee of Ministers request for comments on the CDDH Report on Execution, 9 May 2014; Response of the Court to the 'CDDH report containing conclusions and possible proposals for action on ways to resolve the large numbers of applications arising from systemic issues identified by the Court', 20 October 2014.

¹⁸ Sixth Protocol to the General Agreement on Privileges and Immunities of the Council of Europe, ETS 162, art. 4.

In 2011, the plenary Court issued a decision on a request by Romania for waiver of immunity. The Court partially granted the application with respect to the judge's spouse and denied it with respect to the judge himself.¹⁹

Sessions of the plenary Court are convened by the President at least once a year, either on his or her initiative or, if so requested, by at least one-third of the judges.²⁰ A quorum of the plenary Court consists of two-thirds of the elected judges in office.²¹ Some decisions of the plenary Court must be taken by a two-thirds majority of the elected judges and not simply a majority of those present at the meeting of the plenary Court. This is the case with dismissal of a judge, in accordance with article 23(4),²² and with removal of the Registrar or a Deputy-Registrar.²³ In other cases, decisions are taken by a majority of the elected judges who are present.²⁴

'[A] point of procedure or any other question' may be decided outside of a scheduled meeting of the plenary Court by tacit agreement. The President circulates a draft decision and, if there is no objection after a certain lapse of time, it will be deemed adopted.²⁵

President and Vice-Presidents of the Court

According to article 41 of the 1950 text of the Convention, the Court is to elect its President and one or two Vice-Presidents for a period of three years. This became article 25(a) pursuant to Protocol No. 11, with the explicit requirement that the election be by the 'plenary Court' rather than 'the Court'. Article 25(a) sets the term of office of the President and the Vice-Presidents at three years. Rule 8(5) of the Rules of Court sets out the procedure for the election of President and Vice-Presidents:

The elections referred to in paragraph 1 of this Rule shall be by secret ballot. Only the elected judges who are present shall take part. If no candidate receives an absolute majority of the elected judges present, an additional round or rounds shall take place until one candidate has achieved an absolute majority. At each round, any candidate receiving less than five votes shall be eliminated. Of the remaining candidates, the one who has received the least number of votes shall also be eliminated. If there is more than one candidate in this position, only the candidate who is lowest in the order of precedence in accordance with Rule 5 shall be eliminated. In the event of a tie between two candidates in the final round, preference shall be given to the judge having precedence in accordance with Rule 5.

In electing judges to the Presidency, the Rules of Court direct the Court to 'pursue a policy aimed as securing a balanced representation of the sexes'.²⁶ Pursuant to an amendment to the Rules adopted in 2005, a judge who is elected President or Vice-President may be re-elected, but only once to the same level of office.²⁷ The President and Vice-Presidents shall continue to hold office until their successors are elected.²⁸ Rule 8(1)

¹⁹ Press release, ECHR 265 (2011), 29 November 2011.

²⁰ Rules of Court, Rule 20(1).

²¹ Ibid., Rule 20(2).

²² Ibid., Rule 7.

²³ Ibid., Rule 15(2).

²⁴ Ibid., Rule 8(5), for the election of the President and the Vice-Presidents.

²⁵ Ibid., Rule 23A.

²⁶ Ibid., Rule 14.

²⁷ Ibid., Rule 8(3).

²⁸ Ibid., Rule 8(4).

of the Rules of Court adds the proviso that the members of the Presidency 'shall not exceed the duration of their terms of office as judges'.

There have been 12 Presidents of the Court: Arnold McNair (1959–1965), René Cassin (1965–1968), Henri Rolin (1968–1971), Humphrey Waldock (1971–1974), Giorgio Balladore Pallieri (1974–1980), Gérard Wiarda (1981–1985), Rolv Ryssdal (1985–1998), Rudolf Bernhardt (1998), Luzius Wildhaber (1998–2007), Jean-Paul Costa (2007–2011), Nicolas Bratza (2011–2012), and Dean Spielmann (2012–). No woman has served as president of the Court. Three of the Presidents were nationals of the United Kingdom, two of France, and one each of Belgium, Germany, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, and Switzerland. Under the 'former Court' there was only one Vice-President at any given time. Since Protocol No. 11 entered into force in 1998, there have always been two Vice-Presidents. Altogether, there have been nineteen Vice-Presidents of the Court, of whom two were women: René Cassin (1959–1965), Henri Rolin (1965–1968), Humphrey Waldock (1968–1971), Giorgio Balladore Pallieri (1971–1974), Hermann Mosler (1974–1977), Gérard J. Wiarda (1977–1980), Rolv Ryssdal (1981–1985), Walter-Jean Ganshof van der Meersch (1985–1986), Jean Cremona (1986–1992), Rudolf Bernhardt (1992–1998), Thór Vilhjálmsson (1998), Elisabeth Palm (1998–2001), Christos Rozakis (1998–2011), Jean-Paul Costa (2001–2006), Nicolas Bratza (2007–2011), Françoise Tulkens (2011–2012), Josep Casadevall (2011–), Dean Spielmann (2012), and Guido Raimondi (2012–). Three Vice-Presidents have been nationals of Belgium, two have been nationals of France, Italy, Germany, and the United Kingdom, and one each has been a national of Andorra, Greece, Iceland, Luxembourg, Malta, the Netherlands, Norway, and Sweden.

The President directs the work and administration of the Court. The President represents the Court and, in particular, is responsible for its relations with the authorities of the Council of Europe.²⁹ The President presides over the plenary meetings of the Court, the meetings of the Grand Chamber, and the meetings of the panel of five judges.³⁰ The President does not take part in consideration of cases being heard by the Chambers unless he or she is the judge elected with respect to a State Party concerned with the case.³¹

The Vice-Presidents assist the President, taking the place of the President if he or she cannot carry out the duties of the office or if the position of President is vacant. They also act as presidents of Sections.³² If the President or the Vice-Presidents of the Court are unable to carry out their duties or if their offices are vacant, the office of President is assumed by a President of a Section or, if none is available, by another elected judge, in accordance with the order of precedence.³³

Chambers (Sections)

The 'Sections' are not contemplated by the Convention itself. They are an administrative unit constituted pursuant to the Rules of Court, although their composition largely overlaps with that of the Chambers. The term 'Section' is used with respect to a Chamber

²⁹ Ibid., Rule 9(1).

³⁰ Ibid., Rule 9(2).

³¹ Ibid., Rule 9(3).

³² Ibid., Rule 10.

³³ Ibid., Rule 11.

set up by the plenary Court for a fixed period in accordance with article 25(b).³⁴ As noted in the Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, the term 'Chambers' in paragraphs (b) and (c) of article 25 'refers to administrative entities of the Court (which in practice are referred to as "Sections" of the Court) as opposed to the judicial formations envisaged by the term "Chambers" in new Article 26, paragraph 1, first sentence. It was not considered necessary to amend the Convention in order to clarify this distinction.'³⁵

The plenary Court has the responsibility to 'set up' the Chambers (Sections). The plenary Court is also responsible for electing the Presidents of the Chambers (Sections). There are five Sections of the Court (a minimum of four is required by the Rules³⁶), each made up of seven judges as well as a President and a Vice-President. They are required to be 'geographically and gender balanced and shall reflect the different legal systems among the Contracting Parties'.³⁷

The plenary Court elects the Section President for a three-year term.³⁸ A Section Vice-President is elected by the Section itself.³⁹ The President of the Section is responsible for directing the work of the Section.⁴⁰ The President presides at the sittings of the Section.⁴¹ Each Section also has a Section Registry that is directed by a Section Registrar, who may be assisted by a Deputy Section Registrar.⁴²

Bureau

There is no reference to the Bureau in the Convention itself. The Bureau is provided for by the Rules of Court, pursuant to an amendment adopted in 2003. It is composed of the President of the Court, the Vice-Presidents, and the Section Presidents. Where a Vice-President or a Section President is unable to attend a Bureau meeting, he or she is replaced by the Section Vice-President or, failing that, by the next most senior member of the Section according to the order of precedence.⁴³ The Bureau may request the attendance of any other member of the Court or any other person whose presence it considers necessary.⁴⁴ It is assisted by the Registrar and the Deputy Registrars.⁴⁵

The task of the Bureau is to assist the President in carrying out the functions of the office with respect to the Court's work and administration. The President may submit to the Bureau 'any administrative or extra-judicial matter which falls within his or her competence'.⁴⁶ The Bureau is also charged with facilitating coordination between the Court's Sections.⁴⁷ The President may consult the Bureau before issuing practice

³⁴ Ibid., Rules 1(d), 25.

³⁵ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, para. 60.

³⁶ Rules of Court, Rule 25(2).

³⁷ Ibid., Rule 25(2).

³⁸ Ibid., Rule 8(1).

³⁹ Ibid., Rule 8(2).

⁴⁰ Ibid., Rule 12.

⁴¹ Ibid.

⁴² Ibid., Rule 18.

⁴³ Ibid., Rule 9A(1)(a).

⁴⁴ Ibid., Rule 9A(1)(b).

⁴⁵ Ibid., Rule 9A(2).

⁴⁶ Ibid., Rule 9A(3).

⁴⁷ Ibid., Rule 9A(4).

decisions and before approving general instructions drawn up by the Registrar.⁴⁸ The Bureau may report on any matter and make proposals to the plenary Court.⁴⁹

Rules of Court

The plenary Court is responsible for drafting the Rules of Court. The 1950 text of the Convention included a distinct article authorizing adoption of the Rules of Court: 'Article 55. The Court shall draw up its own rules and shall determine its own procedure.' The provision was removed by Protocol No. 11. The first version of the Rules of Court was adopted in 1959. The judges were inspired by similar instruments from other international tribunals, notably the International Court of Justice, as well as by the Rules of the Commission that had already been adopted pursuant to article 36 of the 1950 text of the Convention.⁵⁰ The Rules have since been frequently amended.

The Rules of Court are subordinate legislation and must, of course, be consistent with the Convention itself. Because they are adopted by the judges sitting in plenary it is unlikely that the judges sitting in judicial formations will contest their validity. Nevertheless, challenges to the legality of the Rules of Court cannot be excluded entirely. In the first judgment of the Court, the Greek judge, Georges Maridakis, insisted that Rule 76, by which the Commission appeared to maintain a residual role even after a case had been referred to the Court, was incompatible with provisions of the Convention. Perhaps he was merely reviving an argument that he had lost in the plenary when the Rules were being adopted. Judge Maridakis agreed that the Court was without authority to declare the impugned Rule null and void, but it said 'there is no doubt that the Court has the right, and is in duty bound, to refuse to apply any of these rules which it regards as contrary to the terms of the Convention, in accordance with the principle of domestic law, whereby it is a judge's duty to refrain from applying any legal provision which contravenes the Constitution or any regulation which is contrary to law'.⁵¹

The Rules of Court are not 'a mere "act of an internal nature" but they emanate from the Court's treaty-given power set forth in Article 25(d) of the Convention to adopt its own rules regarding the conduct of the judicial proceedings before it'.⁵² They deal with a range of matters mainly of an administrative and organizational nature. There are only a few references to the content of the Rules within the Convention itself. Article 24(1) says that the functions and organization of the Registry are to be laid down in the Rules. Article 26(5) requires that judges are to be designated to sit in the Grand Chamber 'in accordance with the rules'. Several Practice Directions, issued by the President, supplement and complete the Rules on the following subjects: requests for interim measures; institution of proceedings; written pleadings; just satisfaction claims; secured electronic filing; and requests for anonymity.

⁴⁸ Ibid., Rule 9A(5).

⁴⁹ Ibid., Rule 9A(6).

⁵⁰ Preparatory working paper drafted by the Directorate of Human Rights, 16 February 1959, CDH (59) 1.

⁵¹ Lawless v. Ireland (no. 1), 14 November 1960, Dissenting Opinion of Mr G. Maridakis, p. 17, Series A no. 1.

⁵² Husayn (Abu Zubaydah) v. Poland, no. 7511/13, § 364, 24 July 2014; Al Nashiri v. Poland, no. 28761/11, § 371, 24 July 2014.

Suggestions with respect to the Rules of Court appeared in the Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11:

70. The rules of Court will have to be adapted to the new structure and, in particular, to be supplemented on the following points: the role of the registry; the functions of the plenary Court; the constitution and the composition of the Grand Chamber, Chambers and committees; procedure on questions of admissibility and procedure concerning friendly settlement negotiations. The Rules of Procedure of the Commission will be of assistance in this connection.

71. Another matter for the rules of the new Court will be the question of publicity. The Court's proceedings (unlike those of the Commission; see former Article 33 of the Convention) will, save in exceptional circumstances, be public (see Article 40). Material relating to the friendly settlement negotiations will remain confidential (see Article 38, paragraph 2; see also Article 40, paragraph 2).

The failure by a State to observe a provision of the Rules may result in a finding that the Convention has been breached, provided that this can be related to a provision of the Convention itself.⁵³ Absent such a link, the Rules themselves cannot give rise to an independent binding obligation.⁵⁴

Further reading

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, p. 449.

⁵³ Mamatkulov and Askarov v. Turkey [GC], nos 46827/99 and 46951/99, § 129, ECHR 2005-I.

⁵⁴ Cruz Varas and Others v. Sweden, 20 March 1991, § 98, Series A no. 201.

Article 26. Single-judge formation, Committees, Chambers, and Grand Chamber/Formations de juge unique, comités, chambres et Grande Chambre

1. To consider cases brought before it, the Court shall sit in a single-judge formation, in committees of three judges, in Chambers of seven judges and in a Grand Chamber of seventeen judges. The Court's Chambers shall set up committees for a fixed period of time.

2. At the request of the plenary Court, the Committee of Ministers may, by a unanimous decision and for a fixed period, reduce to five the number of judges of the Chambers.

3. When sitting as a single judge, a judge shall not examine any application against the High Contracting Party in respect of which that judge has been elected.

4. There shall sit as an ex-officio member of the Chamber and the Grand Chamber the judge elected in respect of the High Contracting Party concerned. If there is none or if that judge is unable to sit, a person chosen by the President of the Court from a list submitted in advance by that Party shall sit in the capacity of judge.

5. The Grand Chamber shall also include the President of the Court, the Vice-Presidents, the Presidents of the Chambers and other judges chosen in accordance with the rules of the Court. When a case is referred to the Grand Chamber under Article 43, no judge from the Chamber which rendered the judgment shall sit in the Grand Chamber, with the exception of the President of the Chamber and the judge who sat in respect of the High Contracting Party concerned.

1. Pour l'examen des affaires portées devant elle, la Cour siège en formations de juge unique, en comités de trois juges, en chambres de sept juges et en une Grande Chambre de dix-sept juges. Les chambres de la Cour constituent les comités pour une période déterminée.

2. A la demande de l'Assemblée plénière de la Cour, le Comité des Ministres peut, par une décision unanime et pour une période déterminée, réduire à cinq le nombre de juges des chambres.

3. Un juge siégeant en tant que juge unique n'examine aucune requête introduite contre la Haute Partie contractante au titre de laquelle ce juge a été élu.

4. Le juge élu au titre d'une Haute Partie contractante partie au litige est membre de droit de la chambre et de la Grande Chambre. En cas d'absence de ce juge, ou lorsqu'il n'est pas en mesure de siéger, une personne choisie par le président de la Cour sur une liste soumise au préalable par cette partie siège en qualité de juge.

5. Font aussi partie de la Grande Chambre, le président de la Cour, les vice-présidents, les présidents des chambres et d'autres juges désignés conformément au règlement de la Cour. Quand l'affaire est déférée à la Grande Chambre en vertu de l'article 43, aucun juge de la chambre qui a rendu l'arrêt ne peut y siéger, à l'exception du président de la chambre et du juge ayant siégé au titre de la Haute Partie contractante intéressée.

Introductory comments

Since it began operations, the Court has experimented with a variety of judicial formations. Over the years, as the volume of cases increased, choices about the composition and size of chambers were increasingly driven by the need for efficient case management. At the same time, it has always been important to ensure an adequate level of consistency in the case law.

Drafting of the provision

Using a summary procedure before a chamber of reduced size is an idea that has been considered since the earliest stages of drafting of the European Convention on Human Rights. The initial Draft Statute of the European Court of Human Rights prepared by the International Juridical Section of the European Movement authorized the Court '[w]ith a view to the speedy despatch of business' to establish chambers composed of two or more judges, although this required the consent of the parties.¹ Participation of the national judge ex officio was also contemplated in this early draft.²

During its 1949 session, the Consultative Assembly does not appear to have examined the subject. Indeed, it was not particularly concerned with the detailed operations of the Court. That discussion really began in the Committee of Experts that met in February and March 1950. At its February session, the Committee of Experts adopted a provision by which the Court 'shall consist of one Chamber composed of 7 judges, to consider cases brought before it'. The Chamber was to be composed by drawing lots. Judges of the nationality of the parties were automatically members of the Chamber.³ If there was no judge of the nationality of one of the parties, it could designate an ad hoc judge for the case.⁴ The following month, the Committee revised the text, eliminating the mechanism for appointment of ad hoc judges and specifying instead that '[j]udges, nationals of the States parties to the dispute, shall take ex officio their seats in the Court; the names of the other judges shall be decided before the opening of the case'.⁵

At the June 1950 session of the Conference of Senior Officials Sweden submitted an amendment that contemplated a chamber of five rather than seven judges.⁶ The Conference revised the text adopted by the Committee of Experts, reviving the concept of ad hoc judges. It said it was 'desirable' to complete the text with a provision 'allowing a judge to be appointed ad hoc in cases where any State implicated does not have a judge who is one of its nationals among the members of the Court'. The Report of the Conference added that the Danish delegate reserved the position of his Government on this question.⁷ The Conference adopted the following text:

The Court shall consist of one Chamber composed of 7 judges, to consider cases brought before it. Any State party concerned shall be represented by the Member of the Court who is its national, or,

¹ Draft Statute of the European Court of Human Rights, INF/5/E/R, I TP 302-21, at p. 308, arts 25, 26.

² Ibid., p. 310, art. 28.

³ See Amendment to Articles 21 and 28 of the Recommendation of the Consultative Assembly proposed by the Greek Expert, Doc. A 811, III TP 226-29.

⁴ Preliminary Draft Convention for the Maintenance and Further Realisation of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 15 February 1950, Doc. A 833, III TP 236-46, at p. 244, art. 31. Also Preliminary Draft Convention, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 14, A 932, III TP 312-35, at p. 330, art. 38.

⁵ New text suggested for Sections II, III, and IV, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 4, A 917, III TP 294-302, at p. 300; Preliminary Draft Convention, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 14, A 932, III TP 312-35, at p. 330, art. 38; Report to the Committee of Ministers submitted by the Committee of Experts Instructed to Draw Up a Draft Convention of Collective Guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Doc. CM/WP 1 (5) 15, A 924, IV TP 2-55, at p. 42; Appendix to the Report of the Committee of Experts on Human Rights: Draft Convention of Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 16 March 1950, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 15 appendix, CM/WP 1 (50) 14 revised, A 925, IV TP 50-79, at p. 72, art. 34.

⁶ Proposal submitted by the Swedish Delegation, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 10, A 1373, IV TP 190-95, at p. 192.

⁷ Text of the report submitted by the Conference [of Senior Officials] to the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19, CM/WP 4 (50) 16 rev., A 1431, IV TP 242-73, at p. 266.

failing such a person of its choice who shall act as a judge; the names of the other judges shall be drawn by lot by the President before the opening of the case.⁸

This text was modified by the Committee of Ministers at its August 1950 meeting.

For the consideration of each case brought before it the Court shall consist of a Chamber composed of seven judges. There shall sit as an ex officio member of the Chamber the judge who is a national of any State party concerned, or, if there is none, a person of its choice who shall sit in the capacity of judge; the names of the other judges shall be chosen by lot by the President before the opening of the case.⁹

According to the travaux there was no further debate on the subject. The text adopted by the Committee of Ministers became article 43 of the 1950 final text of the Convention.

In 1990, with the entry into force of Protocol No. 8, the Chambers were enlarged from seven to nine judges.¹⁰ According to the Explanatory Report, the gradual increase in the number of members of the Court had made the seven-judge Chamber 'progressively less representative of the Court as a whole'. A consequence of this had been an increase in the frequency of relinquishment of jurisdiction in favour of the plenary Court. 'To counter this, the number of members of Chambers has been increased to nine', the Report said.¹¹ Shortly after the entry into force of Protocol No. 8, the provision of the Rules of Court providing for relinquishment to the plenary Court was changed to allow for relinquishment to a 'Grand Chamber' consisting of the President, the Vice-President, the judges of the Chamber that had relinquished jurisdiction, and additional judges, so that it would comprise nineteen members.¹² The amendment entered into force on 27 October 1993 and the first hearings before a Grand Chamber took place in 1994.¹³

Article 26 of the Convention was introduced by Protocol No. 11. At the time, it was numbered article 27:

Committees, Chambers and Grand Chamber

1. To consider cases brought before it, the Court shall sit in committees of three judges, in Chambers of seven judges and in a Grand Chamber of seventeen judges. The Court's Chambers shall set up committees for a fixed period of time.
2. There shall sit as an ex officio member of the Chamber and the Grand Chamber the judge elected in respect of the State Party concerned or, if there is none or if he is unable to sit, a person of its choice who shall sit in the capacity of judge.
3. The Grand Chamber shall also include the President of the Court, the Vice-Presidents, the Presidents of the Chambers and other judges chosen in accordance with the rules of the Court. When a case is referred to the Grand Chamber under Article 43, no judge from the Chamber

⁸ Draft Convention annexed to the Report, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19 annex, CM/WP 4 (50) rev., A 1452, IV TP 274-95, at p. 290, art. 43.

⁹ Draft Convention adopted by the Sub-Committee, Doc. CM 1 (50) 52, A 1884, V TP 76-99, at p. 92; Draft Convention adopted by the Committee of Ministers, 7 August 1950, Doc. A 1937, V TP 120-45, at p. 138.

¹⁰ Protocol No. 8 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, ETS 118, art. 11.

¹¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 8, para. 45.

¹² Rules of Court A (as in force at 1 February 1994), Rule 51 (Relinquishment of jurisdiction by the Chamber in favour of the Grand Chamber and by the Grand Chamber in favour of the plenary Court).

¹³ Murray v. the United Kingdom, 28 October 1994, § 6, Series A no. 300-A; Jersild v. Denmark, 23 September 1994, § 6, Series A no. 298.

which rendered the judgment shall sit in the Grand Chamber, with the exception of the President of the Chamber and the judge who sat in respect of the State Party concerned.

The Chambers and the Grand Chamber had existed under the 'former Court', although their size was adjusted: from nine to seven for the Chambers and from nineteen to seventeen for the Grand Chamber. The Committee was an innovation. According to the new article 28, this three-judge formation was empowered to declare cases inadmissible or strike them from the list.

The text of article 26 was substantially amended by Protocol No. 14. To the judicial formations of the Court, it introduced the single-judge formation. Flexibility concerning the size of the Chambers was established by article 26(2). The Explanatory Report says this 'will reduce, for a fixed period, the size of Chambers generally; it should not allow, however, for the setting up of a system of Chambers of different sizes which would operate simultaneously for different types of cases'.¹⁴

The system of appointment of ad hoc judges was also changed by Protocol No. 14. By virtue of the new rule, contained in article 26(4), each State Party provides a reserve list of ad hoc judges from which the President of the Court appoints an ad hoc judge when this is required. The Explanatory Report states that '[t]his new system is a response to criticism of the old system, which allowed a High Contracting Party to choose an ad hoc judge after the beginning of proceedings'.¹⁵ It notes that '[c]oncerns about this had also been expressed by the Parliamentary Assembly',¹⁶ although the amendment does not fully respond to them. The Parliamentary Assembly had wanted to add, after the words 'by that party' in the final phrase of paragraph 4, the following: 'containing at least one candidature from a person of each gender, and approved by the Parliamentary Assembly'.¹⁷ The Parliamentary Assembly said it 'welcomes the proposals as an improvement on the present practice regarding the category of persons "chosen by the President of the Court from a list submitted in advance" by the High Contracting Party, where the judge sitting in respect of this party is unavoidably detained. But the Assembly still considers such ad hoc judges as lacking legitimacy unless approved by the Assembly'.¹⁸ The Explanatory Report says that it 'is understood that the list of potential ad hoc judges may include names of judges elected in respect of other High Contracting Parties'.¹⁹

Temporary provisions governing the single judge and the three-judge formation were applied pursuant to Protocol No. 14*bis* until the entry into force of Protocol No. 14 in 2010.

Analysis and interpretation

Article 26 concerns the judicial formations of the Court. Its provisions identify the bodies within the Court that are involved in the process of adjudication. For each formation, one

¹⁴ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, para. 63.

¹⁵ Ibid., para. 64.

¹⁶ Ibid.

¹⁷ Draft Protocol No. 14 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms amending the control system of the Convention, Opinion No. 251 (2004), Parliamentary Assembly, para. 14.iv.

¹⁸ Ibid., para. 10.

¹⁹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, para. 64.

or more articles of the Convention complement and develop the description of the judicial functions. These provisions are completed by the Rules of Court.

The Grand Chamber, the Chambers and the Committees sit 'full time', although the Court may fix session periods each year. Outside of those periods, the Grand Chamber and the Chambers may be convened by their Presidents in cases of urgency.²⁰

Single-judge formation

The single-judge formation was introduced by Protocol No. 14 and has only been in operation since 2010. The functions of the single-judge formation are described in article 27 of the Convention and Rule 27A of the Rules of Court. An exception to the general rule by which a judge from a State concerned in the case participates is made by paragraph 3 of article 26.

After consulting the Bureau, the President of the Court decides upon the number of single judges and appoints them. They sit for a term of twelve months,²¹ during which they also exercise their other functions as members of a Section. Several members of the Court act as single judges ex officio: the Presidents of the Section, when exercising certain functions under Rule 54 and Vice-Presidents of the Section appointed to decide on requests for interim measures.²² The President prepares a list of States Parties in respect of which the single judge is authorized to examine applications.²³ Single judges are assisted by a non-judicial rapporteur, appointed pursuant to article 24(2) of the Convention.²⁴ In cases where the material submitted by the applicant 'is on its own sufficient to disclose that the application is inadmissible or should be struck out of the list', the application should be considered by a single-judge formation 'unless there is some special reason to the contrary'.²⁵

Committees

The three-judge Committee was introduced by Protocol No. 11. The Committees are set up within the Sections of the Court. They are constituted for a period of twelve months, with the members of the Section, excepting the President of the Section, each taking a turn.²⁶ The President of the Court decides on the number of Committees after consulting the Presidents of the Sections.²⁷ The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11 notes that although the judge elected in respect to a State involved in a particular case is present ex officio in the Chamber and the Grand Chamber, this does not apply to Committees.²⁸

Chambers

The Chambers are the main judicial unit of the Court. As noted in the Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, subject to powers attributed to other judicial formations, ²⁰ Rules of Court, Rule 29.

²¹ Ibid., Rule 27A(1), (3).

²² Ibid., Rule 27A(2).

²³ Ibid., Rule 27A(1).

²⁴ Ibid., Rule 27A(4). See also Rule 18A(1).

²⁵ Ibid., Rule 49(1).

²⁶ Ibid., Rule 27(2), (3).

²⁷ Ibid., Rule 27(1).

²⁸ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, paras 32, 72.

'Chambers will have inherent competence to examine the admissibility and the merits of all individual and inter-State applications.'²⁹ The term 'Chambers' is also used in article 25, but in a different sense. There it refers to the administrative unit that is more commonly described by the term 'Section'. When Protocol No. 14 was being adopted, '[i]t was not considered necessary to amend the Convention in order to clarify this distinction'.³⁰ Composed of seven judges (with a possibility that the number be reduced to five), they rule on the merits of the vast bulk of admissible applications.

In any particular case, the seven judges of the Chamber are drawn from the members of the Section constituted pursuant to article 25. The Chamber constituted under article 26 consists of the President of the Section and the judge of the nationality of the State Party concerned in the litigation. Normally, the 'national judge' will be a member of the Section, although exceptionally the judge may belong to another Chamber.³¹ This issue is even more likely to arise if there are two States Parties with an interest in the case. The other members of the Chamber are designated by the President of the Section following a rotation. Those members of the Section who are not judges of the Chamber sit in the case as substitute judges.³²

Grand Chamber

The Grand Chamber considers approximately twenty to twenty-five cases each year. It sits when a Chamber decides to relinquish jurisdiction because the case raises 'a serious question affecting the interpretation of the Convention or the Protocols' or where there is the possibility that the result may be inconsistent with an earlier judgment of the Court (art. 30), when following a judgment by the Chamber one of the parties refers the case to it (art. 43), when the Committee of Ministers refers a situation of non-compliance with a judgment of the Court (art. 46(4)), and in the case of a request for an advisory opinion (art. 47).

The Grand Chamber is composed of seventeen judges and at least three substitute judges.³³ Several of its members sit ex officio: the President and the Vice-Presidents of the Court and the Presidents of the Sections constituted in accordance with article 25. The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11 says that the Presidents of the Sections sit in the Grand Chamber so as to 'ensure the consistency of the Court's case-law'.³⁴ A Vice-President of the Court who cannot sit is replaced by the Vice-President of the relevant Section.³⁵ The 'national judge' is also automatically a member of the Grand Chamber,³⁶ a measure that the Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11 says was intended to avoid ad hoc judges sitting in the Grand Chamber.³⁷ In cases where a Chamber has relinquished jurisdiction, in accordance with article 30, the members of that Chamber also sit as members of the Grand Chamber. The President of the Court completes the required complement of seventeen judges by a drawing of lots from among the remaining judges of ²⁹ Ibid., para. 42.

³⁰ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, para. 60.

³¹ Rules of Court, Rule 26(1)(a).

³² Ibid., Rule 26(1).

³³ Ibid., Rule 24(1).

³⁴ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 74.

³⁵ Rules of Court, Rule 24(2)(a).

³⁶ Ibid., Rule 24(2)(b).

³⁷ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 74.

the Court. The Rules of Court specify that 'modalities for the drawing of lots shall be laid down by the Plenary Court, having due regard to the need for a geographically balanced composition reflecting the different legal systems among the Contracting Parties'.³⁸ The judgments of the Grand Chamber indicate those who have been drawn by lots but give no information about how the composition was 'balanced'.

If the case is referred to the Grand Chamber by one of the parties following judgment by a Chamber, the Grand Chamber does not include the judges who sat as members of the Chamber or those who may have ruled on the admissibility of the application, with the exception of the President of that Chamber and the 'national judge'.³⁹ The rationale, according to the Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, is '[t]o make sure that the Grand Chamber looks into the matter afresh when examining a case referred to it under Article 43'.⁴⁰ If the case results from a referral by the Committee of Ministers concerning failure to implement a judgment, pursuant to article 46(4), the Grand Chamber includes the members of the Chamber that issued the original judgment or, if the case had already been heard by the Grand Chamber, the members of the Grand Chamber in the original judgment.⁴¹ Thus, although the Rules of Court seek to avoid judges sitting in the same case in the Chamber and in the Grand Chamber, where they participate ex officio this is unavoidable, placing those judges in a 'disconcerting position'.⁴² It is not inconceivable that they change their position.⁴³ In the case of a request for an advisory opinion, pursuant to article 47, the Grand Chamber consists of the Presidents and the Vice-Presidents, with the remaining judges drawn by lots.⁴⁴

Referral of a case to the Grand Chamber by one of the parties is subject to authorization of a five-judge panel of the Grand Chamber, in accordance with article 43. This panel consists of the President, two Presidents of Sections designated by rotation, and two judges designated by rotation from among the judges elected by the remaining Sections.⁴⁵ Nevertheless, a judge who previously participated in the determination of the admissibility of the case or the merits is excluded.⁴⁶ The 'national judge' is also excluded from the five-judge panel.⁴⁷

Ex officio or 'national' judges (art. 26(4))

The elected judge of a State concerned with the proceedings sits ex officio as a member of the Chamber or the Grand Chamber. Various justifications have been offered to explain the approach of the European Convention. It is said that the presence of the 'national judge' ensures that the Chamber benefits from expertise as to the law and practice in the respondent State.⁴⁸ Prior to the entry into force of Protocol No. 11, the jurisdiction of the ³⁸ Rules of Court, Rule 24(2)(f).

³⁹ Ibid., Rule 24(2)(d).

⁴⁰ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 73.

⁴¹ Rules of Court, Rule 24(2)(g).

⁴² Kyprianou v. Cyprus [GC], no. 73797/01, Partly Dissenting Opinion of Judge Costa, § 2, ECHR 2005-XIII.

⁴³ Ibid., §§ 4, 9; Dickson v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 44362/04, Concurring Opinion of Judge Bratza, ECHR 2007-XV; Sanoma Uitgevers B.V. v. the Netherlands [GC], no. 38224/03, Concurring Opinion of Judge Myjer, 14 September 2010.

⁴⁴ Rules of Court, Rule 24(2)(f).

⁴⁵ Ibid., Rule 24(5)(a).

⁴⁶ Ibid., Rule 24(5)(b).

⁴⁷ Ibid., Rule 24(5)(c).

⁴⁸ See, e.g., Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, para. 71.

Court was not mandatory, and the presence of a 'national judge' may have reassured some States that were hesitant about making the relevant declaration of acceptance of jurisdiction. It may also enhance the willingness of States to comply with the judgment.⁴⁹

The institution of the ex officio judge seems to have been 'conceived in international law for the resolution of classic disputes between States' rather than human rights litigation usually involving an individual applicant and a respondent State.⁵⁰ It is 'intended to preserve the procedural equity between the parties, constituted by two or more sovereign States equal under the law and whose relations are governed by the principle of reciprocity'.⁵¹ Notably, it is the norm at the International Court of Justice, where a State that is a party to proceedings may designate a judge ad hoc if there is no judge of its nationality on the Court.⁵² Similar provisions to those of the European Convention can be found in the American Convention on Human Rights. However, they have been interpreted by the Inter-American Court as being applicable only to inter-State complaints and not to apply when applications originate from individuals.⁵³

The presence of the 'national judge' may raise concerns about independence and impartiality in a Court where, unlike the situation at the International Court of Justice, the State is always the respondent with the exception of the rare inter-State application. At the International Court of Justice, litigation in contentious cases takes place between two or more States, and each is on the same footing in terms of the right to the presence of a judge of their nationality. So-called 'national judges' do not necessarily vote in favour of their own State, and the likelihood of this is probably reduced to the extent that judges may sit for only one term and need not, therefore, fear that they will not be nominated for re-election. According to one study, when a ruling of the European Court was favourable to the respondent State, 95 per cent of 'national judges' (and 100 per cent of ad hoc judges appointed to replace the 'national judge') voted with the majority, compared with 81 per cent of other judges. Where the State was found to be in violation of the Convention, 16 per cent of 'national judges' (and 33 per cent of ad hoc judges) were in dissent, compared with only 8 per cent of other judges.⁵⁴

The approach of the European Convention is in striking contrast with practice at the United Nations Human Rights Committee and other bodies, where the national representative is excused from sitting if the State of his or her nationality is the respondent in a contentious case.⁵⁵ The Inter-American Court has also concluded that the 'national judge' should not sit in cases where his or her State is respondent.⁵⁶

⁴⁹ M. Kuijer, 'Voting Behaviour and National Bias in the ECHR and the ICJ', (1997) 10 Leiden Journal of International Law 49, at p. 52.

⁵⁰ I/A Court H.R., 'Article 55 of the American Convention on Human Rights', Advisory Opinion OC-20/09 of 29 September 2009. Series A, No. 20, para. 34.

⁵¹ Ibid., para. 36.

⁵² Statute of the International Court of Justice, art. 31.

⁵³ I/A Court H.R., 'Article 55 of the American Convention on Human Rights', Advisory Opinion OC-20/09 of 29 September 2009. Series A No. 20, para. 45.

⁵⁴ E. Voeten, 'The Impartiality of International Judges: Evidence from the European Court of Human Rights', (2008) 102 American Political Science Review 417, at p. 422.

⁵⁵ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, (1976) 999 UNTS 171, art. 42(2). Also International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, (1966) 660 UNTS 195, art. 12(2); Protocol to the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights on the Establishment of an African Court on Human and Peoples' Rights, OAU Doc. OAU/LEG/EXP/AFCHPR/PROT (III), art. 22.

⁵⁶ I/A Court H.R., 'Article 55 of the American Convention on Human Rights', Advisory Opinion OC-20/09 of 29 September 2009, Series A No. 20, para. 86.

Rule 13 of the Rules of Court prohibits a judge from presiding in cases in which he or she has been appointed an ex officio judge.

Where two or more States are entitled to the participation of their national judge ex officio, the President of the Chamber may invite them to agree on the appointment of a single judge elected in respect to one of them. If the parties cannot agree, the President chooses the common-interest judge by lot from the judges proposed by the parties.⁵⁷ This provision is only used on very rare occasions.⁵⁸

Ad hoc judges (art. 26(4))

If the elected judge of a State concerned with the proceedings is unable to sit ex officio as a member of the Chamber or the Grand Chamber, for example because of a conflict of interest or on account of illness, an ad hoc judge may be designated.⁵⁹ Similarly, a judge may leave office permanently before a replacement is elected, creating an absence for a period of time that will be filled by an ad hoc judge. States are encouraged to nominate candidates for elected office who are not likely to require the designation of ad hoc judges.⁶⁰

In accordance with article 26(4), in cases where the judge of a particular State should sit ex officio, the President of the Court is to select the ad hoc judge from a list submitted in advance by the State in question. The requirement of a prior list of candidates was imposed as a result of Protocol No. 14. Previously, if the need arose the State had the freedom to designate an ad hoc judge,⁶¹ an unsatisfactory situation that resulted in delayed proceedings and that had in some situations raised issues concerning independence and impartiality.⁶² According to Rule 29 of the Rules of Court, the list is to consist of three to five persons deemed eligible. The list is to include candidates of both sexes. Persons on the list may not represent a party or a third party in any capacity in proceedings before the Court. Where the State has not submitted a list, or where the list is inadequate because it does not contain a minimum of three candidates who are genuinely eligible, the President may appoint another elected judge to set as an ad hoc judge.

Rule 13 of the Rules of Court prohibits a judge from presiding in cases in which he or she has been appointed an ad hoc judge.

⁵⁷ Rules of Court, Rule 30(1).

⁵⁸ Artemi and Gregory v. Cyprus, Austria, Belgium, the Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, France, Germany, Hungary, Ireland, Italy, Latvia, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malta, the Netherlands, Poland, Portugal, Slovakia, Slovenia, and Sweden (dec.), no. 35524/06, 30 November 2010; Behrami and Behrami v. France [GC] (dec.), no. 71412/01; and Savramati v. France, Germany, and Norway [GC] (dec.), no. 78166/01, 2 May 2007.

⁵⁹ Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, Provisional Measures, Order of 13 September 1993, I.C.J. Reports 1993, p. 325, Separate Opinion of Judge Lauterpacht, paras 4–6; I/A Court H.R., 'Article 55 of the American Convention on Human Rights', Advisory Opinion OC-20/09 of 29 September 2009, Series A No. 20.

⁶⁰ Candidates for the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Recommendation 1649 (2004), para. 19(vi); Nomination of candidates and election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights, Parliamentary Assembly, Resolution 1646 (2009), para. 4.5.

⁶¹ Pursuant to article 43 of the 1950 text of the Convention and article 27(2) of the Convention as amended by Protocol No. 11.

⁶² Ad hoc judges at the European Court of Human Rights: an overview, Parliamentary Assembly, Doc. 12827, para. 10.

Excusal and recusal

A judge may not sit in cases where he or she has a personal interest in the case, where he or she has previously acted in the case, and where he or she has expressed opinions publicly that 'are objectively capable of adversely affecting his or her impartiality'. In the case of ad hoc judges or judges who have completed their terms but remain to complete a case, they must not sit if they are engaged in incompatible professional activities. More generally, judges must not sit if 'for any other reason, his or her independence or impartiality may legitimately be called into doubt'.⁶³ The Rules specify that '[i]n the event of any doubt on the part of the judge concerned or the President', the matter is decided by the Chamber.⁶⁴

Evidence of excusal and recusal in the case law of the Court is rather rare. It is very unusual for a challenge to independence and impartiality to be reported. The reasons are not given. For example, in the Cyprus v. Turkey inter-State case, the judgment reports that the elected judge for Cyprus was challenged by Turkey. The Grand Chamber 'requested' that the elected judge withdraw and an ad hoc judge was then designated to replace him.⁶⁵ In the same case, the elected judge for Turkey withdrew without explanation. The ad hoc judge appointed as a replacement was challenged by Cyprus, but he had already indicated 'his intention to withdraw from the case'. When objections were raised about his replacement, 'the Grand Chamber decided that Mrs Ferdi was prevented from taking part in the consideration of the case'.⁶⁶

Further reading

Johan Callewaert, 'Article 43', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 755–8.
Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, p. 450.

⁶³ Rules of Court, Rule 15(2).

⁶⁴ Ibid., Rule 15(3).

⁶⁵ Cyprus v. Turkey [GC], no. 25781/94, § 8, ECHR 2001-IV.

⁶⁶ Ibid.

Article 27. Competence of single judges/Compétence des juges uniques

1. A single judge may declare inadmissible or strike out of the Court's list of cases an application submitted under Article 34, where such a decision can be taken without further examination.

2. The decision shall be final.

3. If the single judge does not declare an application inadmissible or strike it out, that judge shall forward it to a committee or to a Chamber for further examination.

1. Un juge unique peut déclarer une requête introduite en vertu de l'article 34 irrecevable ou la rayer du rôle lorsqu'une telle décision peut être prise sans examen complémentaire.

2. La décision est définitive.

3. Si le juge unique ne déclare pas une requête irrecevable ou ne la raze pas du rôle, ce juge la transmet à un comité ou à une chambre pour examen complémentaire.

Introductory comments

'Spectacular' was the word used by the President of the European Court of Human Rights, Nicolas Bratza, to describe the impact of the single-judge procedure on the filtering of non-meritorious cases in a speech he delivered in January 2012 on the occasion of the opening of the judicial year.¹ Since their introduction, the single judges account for about half of the Court's caseload. An indication of the impact can be seen from statistics on the number of cases declared inadmissible or struck out of the list by single judge. In 2010, for which Protocol No. 14 only applied during seven months, 22,260 applications were eliminated by the single judges.² In 2011, the number increased to 46,928,³ and in 2012 to 81,700.⁴ Much of this involved clearing a backlog of cases. At the end of 2010, 88,407 cases were pending before the single-judge formation.⁵ That number increased to 92,050 the following year,⁶ but had dropped to 59,850 by the end of 2012.⁷

Single judges may be particularly effective in repetitive cases where the Court has issued a pilot judgment pursuant to article 46 of the Convention. Once the applicant State has developed satisfactory mechanisms to address the systemic problem, the single judge may then rule on similar applications, usually declaring them inadmissible for failure to exhaust domestic remedies. In an opinion addressed to the Steering Committee on Human Rights of the Council of Europe, the Court referred to measures taken by Romania in response to such a pilot judgment concerning compensation for property confiscated under the previous regime.⁸ In a subsequent judgment, the Court concluded

¹ Speech given by Sir Nicolas Bratza, President of the European Court of Human Rights, on the occasion of the opening of the judicial year, 27 January 2012, Annual Report 2012, pp. 31–8, at p. 33.

² Annual Report 2010, p. 67.

³ Annual Report 2011, p. 67.

⁴ Annual Report 2012, p. 60.

⁵ Annual Report 2010, p. 67.

⁶ Annual Report 2011, p. 67.

⁷ Annual Report 2012, p. 60.

⁸ Maria Atanasiu and Others v. Romania, nos 30767/05 and 33800/06, 12 October 2010.

that legislation enacted in 2013 in response to what it had indicated in the pilot judgment were satisfactory.⁹ As a result, some 2,600 similar applications that had been held in abeyance were rejected, mainly by decision of the single judge.¹⁰

Drafting of the provision

There was no authority given by the 1950 Convention to a single judge, sitting alone, nor for that matter was any such power given to a single member of the Commission either. The function of a single judge, described in article 27, was introduced by Protocol No. 14, which came into force in 2010.¹¹ The Preamble to Protocol No. 14 notes 'the urgent need to amend certain provisions of the Convention in order to maintain and improve the efficiency of the control system for the long term, mainly in the light of the continuing increase in the workload of the European Court of Human Rights and the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe'. In order to achieve this objective, amendments were introduced to reinforce 'the Court's filtering capacity in respect of the mass of unmeritorious applications'.¹²

According to the Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14,

The filtering capacity is increased by making a single judge competent to declare inadmissible or strike out an individual application. This new mechanism retains the judicial character of the decision-making on admissibility. The single judges will be assisted by non-judicial rapporteurs, who will be part of the registry.¹³

The Explanatory Report further develops the vision of the drafters:

Adequate assistance to single judges requires additional resources. The establishment of this system will thus lead to a significant increase in the Court's filtering capacity, on the one hand, on account of the reduction, compared to the old committee practice, of the number of actors involved in the preparation and adoption of decisions (one judge instead of three; the new rapporteurs who could combine the functions of case-lawyer and rapporteur), and, on the other hand, because judges will be relieved of their rapporteur role when sitting in a single-judge formation and, finally, as a result of the multiplication of filtering formations operating simultaneously.¹⁴

Analysis and interpretation

The single judge may declare a case inadmissible or strike it out of the Court's list where such a decision can be taken 'without further examination'. This decision is final, subject to the possibility of reopening an examination of admissibility where the Court itself has committed an error.¹⁵ These summary decisions are not reported on the Court's on-line

⁹ Preda and Others v. Romania, nos 9584/02, 33514/02, 38052/02, 25821/03, 29652/03, 3736/03, 17750/03, and 28688/04, § 142, 29 April 2014.

¹⁰ Response of the Court to the 'CDDH report containing conclusions and possible proposals for action on ways to resolve the large numbers of applications arising from systemic issues identified by the Court', para. 4.

¹¹ Protocol No. 14 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, amending the control system of the Convention, ETS 194, art. 8.

¹² Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, para. 36.

¹³ Ibid., para. 38.

¹⁴ Ibid., para. 62.

¹⁵ Storck v. Germany, no. 61603/00, § 67, ECHR 2005-V; Storck v. Germany (dec.), no. 61603, 26 October 2004; Ölmez v. Turkey (dec.), no. 39464/98, 5 July 2005; Des Fours Walderode v. Czech Republic (dec.), no. 40057/98, ECHR 2004-V; Harrach v. Czech Republic (dec.), no. 77532/01, 18 May 2004; Le Syndicat des database. The applicant is to receive a letter explaining that the application has been judged inadmissible.¹⁶ In accordance with article 26(3) of the Convention, the single judge may not sit in a case involving the State for which he or she has been elected.¹⁷ The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14 draws attention to the limitation on the authority of the single judge to taking decisions of inadmissibility or decisions to strike the case out of the list 'where such a decision can be taken without further examination'.¹⁸ Consequently, 'the judge will take such decisions only in clear-cut cases, where the inadmissibility of the application is manifest from the outset'.¹⁹

Protocol No. 14 also introduced a new admissibility criterion for cases where 'the applicant has not suffered a significant disadvantage'.²⁰ This necessitated a transitional solution, given that single judges could not be expected to determine manifest inadmissibility in the absence of guidance from the case law of the Chambers and the Grand Chamber on the scope of this new concept. For this reason, a two-year grace period was provided following entry into force of Protocol No. 14 during which the single judge was not empowered to declare an application inadmissible solely on the basis of the ground.²¹ As the Explanatory Report confirms, referring to article 35(3)(b) of the Convention, '[i]n case of doubt as to the admissibility, the judge will refer the application to a committee or a Chamber'.²²

At the time of signature and ratification of Protocol No. 14, several States formulated declarations concerning the application of the new admissibility criterion and the role of the single-judge formation. This is discussed in the chapter of this Commentary concerning article 35, under the heading 'Declarations'.

It seems that in declining to rule a case inadmissible, the single judge is also required to make an assessment as to whether the case concerns an underlying issue that is the subject of well-established case law, in which case the three-judge Committee should receive the case. Otherwise, the single judge should send the case to the seven-judge Chamber.

Further reading

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 451–2.

copropriétaires du 20 bd de la Mer à Dinard v. France (dec.), no. 47339/99, 22 May 2003; Wortmann v. Germany (dec.), no. 70929/01, 18 November 2003; Appietto v. France (dec.), no. 56927/00, § 8, 26 February 2002.

¹⁶ Rules of Court, Rule 52A(1).

¹⁷ Also Rules of Court, Rule 52(A)(2).

¹⁸ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, para. 67.

¹⁹ Ibid., para. 67.

²⁰ European Convention on Human Rights, art. 35(3)(b).

²¹ Protocol No. 14 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, amending the control system of the Convention, ETS 194, art. 20(2).

²² Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, para. 67.

Article 28. Competence of Committees/Compétence des comités

1. In respect of an application submitted under Article 34, a committee may, by a unanimous vote,
 - (a) declare it inadmissible or strike it out of its list of cases, where such decision can be taken without further examination; or
 - (b) declare it admissible and render at the same time a judgment on the merits, if the underlying question in the case, concerning the interpretation or the application of the Convention or the Protocols thereto, is already the subject of well-established case-law of the Court.
 2. Decisions and judgments under paragraph 1 shall be final.
 3. If the judge elected in respect of the High Contracting Party concerned is not a member of the committee, the committee may at any stage of the proceedings invite that judge to take the place of one of the members of the committee, having regard to all relevant factors, including whether that Party has contested the application of the procedure under paragraph 1.b.
1. Un comité saisi d'une requête individuelle introduite en vertu de l'article 34 peut, par vote unanime,
 - a) la déclarer irrecevable ou la rayer du rôle lorsqu'une telle décision peut être prise sans examen complémentaire; ou
 - b) la déclarer recevable et rendre conjointement un arrêt sur le fond lorsque la question relative à l'interprétation ou à l'application de la Convention ou de ses Protocoles qui est à l'origine de l'affaire fait l'objet d'une jurisprudence bien établie de la Cour.
 2. Les décisions et arrêts prévus au paragraphe 1 sont définitifs.
 3. Si le juge élu au titre de la Haute Partie contractante partie au litige n'est pas membre du comité, ce dernier peut, à tout moment de la procédure, l'inviter à siéger en son sein en lieu et place de l'un de ses membres, en prenant en compte tous facteurs pertinents, y compris la question de savoir si cette partie a contesté l'application de la procédure du paragraphe 1.b.

Introductory comments

From the beginning of its operations, the function of filtering applications for the Court had been performed mainly by the European Commission of Human Rights. Until the entry into force of Protocol No. 9, in 1994, cases could only come before the Court if the Commission had not declared them to be inadmissible. Protocol No. 9 introduced the right of individual application to the Court. But even then, a case could only be brought to the Court by an individual if it had already been declared admissible by the Commission.

With the abolition of the Commission in accordance with Protocol No. 11, which entered into force in 1998, the filtering function had to be assumed by the Court itself. The intent of the drafters of Protocol No. 11 was that the summary elimination of cases that were obviously inadmissible would largely be the work of three-judge Committees. This mechanism did not prove to be entirely satisfactory. Within only a few years Protocol No. 14 was adopted in order to assign this filtering function to single judges. Article 27 was introduced for this purpose by Protocol No. 14, which entered into force in 2010.

Drafting of the provision

Under article 20(3) of the 1950 text of the Convention, the Commission was entitled to sit in a committee 'composed of at least three members, with the power, exercisable by a unanimous vote, to declare inadmissible or strike from its list of cases a petition... when such a decision can be taken without further examination'. According to the Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, this is the basis of the committee mechanism for the Court set out in article 28.¹

The original draft Convention proposed by the Consultative Assembly contemplated a Commission but it did not specify whether it would sit in plenary or in some smaller unit.² The Conference of Senior Officials was concerned that the plenary Commission would be 'an unduly cumbersome body for the purpose of fact-finding and for making the efforts necessary to obtain a friendly solution'. Its proposal to establish a seven-member Sub-Commission³ became article 29 of the 1950 text of the Convention. The Committees described in former article 20(3) were introduced by Protocol No. 8.⁴ The principal reform of Protocol No. 8 was its authorization for the Commission to sit in Chambers, but the establishment of Committees was described as '[a]nother significant change'. According to the Explanatory Report, the Committees 'offer a double advantage: the plenary Commission and Chambers will be freed from the task of dealing with such petitions, thereby allowing them more time for the consideration of serious cases, and the waiting-time for a decision on manifestly inadmissible petitions will be considerably reduced, in particular as the committees will be able to meet at frequent intervals'.⁵

The judicial function of the three-judge Committee was introduced by Protocol No. 11 as a component of the 'new Court' that began operations in 1998. Article 28, as introduced by Protocol No. 11, read as follows:

Declarations of inadmissibility by committees

A committee may, by a unanimous vote, declare inadmissible or strike out of its list of cases an individual application submitted under Article 34 where such a decision can be taken without further examination. The decision shall be final.⁶

The Report noted that the Rules the Court might provide for the immediate transfer of applications to the Chamber, when appropriate.⁷

This provision was substantially modified by Protocol No. 14. As amended, it enabled the Committees to rule on the merits as well as admissibility in repetitive cases where the

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 76.

² Recommendation No. 38 to the Committee of Ministers adopted 8 September 1949 on the conclusion of the debates, Doc. AS (1) 108, II TP 274-83, at pp. 278-80, arts 9-17.

³ Text of the report submitted by the Conference to the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19, CM/WP 4 (50) 16 rev., A 1431, IV TP 242-73, at p. 264; Draft Convention annexed to the Report [of the Conference of Senior Officials], Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19 annex, CM/WP 4 (50) 16 rev., A 1452, IV TP 274-95, at p. 286, art. 28.

⁴ Protocol No. 8 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, ETS 118, art. 1.

⁵ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 8, para. 9. On the operation of the Committees established by the Commission, see Caroline Ravaud, 'Article 20', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, at pp. 551-3.

⁶ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 1.

⁷ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 40. But no such rule appears to have been adopted.

case law of the Court is well established.⁸ Even the title was changed, reflecting the assignment of other functions to the Committees and at the same time the transfer of the primary filtering responsibility to the single judge formation pursuant to article 27. The Explanatory Report said that the Rules of Court should deal with practical questions concerning composition of the committee and 'plan its working methods in a way that optimises the new procedure's effectiveness'.⁹ The Explanatory Report promised that '[t]he implementation of the new procedure will increase substantially the Court's decision-making capacity and effectiveness, since many cases can be decided by three judges, instead of the seven currently required when judgments or decisions are given by a Chamber'.¹⁰

Paragraph 3 allows an exception to the rule by which the 'national judge' does not participate in the Committee. The rationale for the provision is described in the Explanatory Report:

[I]t was considered important to have at least some reference in the Convention itself to the possibility for respondent Parties to contest the application of the simplified procedure... For example, a respondent Party may contest the new procedure on the basis that the case in question differs in some material respect from the established case-law cited. It is likely that the expertise of the 'national judge' in domestic law and practice will be relevant to this issue and therefore helpful to the committee. Should this judge be absent or unable to sit, the procedure provided for in the new Article 26, paragraph 4 in fine applies.¹¹

The Parliamentary Assembly had requested that the words 'including whether that Party has contested the application of the procedure under paragraph 1.b' at the end of article 28(3) be deleted.¹²

Analysis and interpretation

The Committees were initially introduced as part of the 'new Court' by Protocol No. 11 in order to operate the filtering function that had previously been undertaken by the European Commission. This role largely changed as a result of Protocol No. 14. It transferred the main burden of the filtering function to the single-judge formation provided by article 17, but at the same time enlarged the powers of the three-judge chamber to enable it to declare cases admissible as well as inadmissible, and then proceed to examine the merits of those applications deemed admissible. The competence of the three-judge Committees to rule on the merits is limited to repetitive cases where the case law of the Court is well established.

According to article 28(2), the decision of the Committee is final,¹³ subject to the possibility of reopening an examination of admissibility where the Court itself has

⁸ Protocol No. 14 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, amending the control system of the Convention, ETS 194, art. 8.

⁹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, para. 72.

¹⁰ Ibid., para. 70.

¹¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, para. 71.

¹² Draft Protocol No. 14 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms amending the control system of the Convention, Opinion No. 251 (2004), Parliamentary Assembly, para. 14.v.

¹³ Also Rules of Court, Rule 53(4).

committed an error.¹⁴ Consequently, only if the Committee declines to take a decision is the case even eligible to be considered by a Grand Chamber.

Ruling on inadmissibility

The Committee has the authority to declare a case inadmissible or to strike it out of its list of cases if it can decide on this 'without further examination'. The Committee may do this 'by a unanimous vote and at any stage of the proceedings'.¹⁵ The jurisdiction in this regard is identical to that of the single-judge formation provided for by article 27. Since introduction of the single-judge formation in 2010, with the entry into force of Protocol No. 14, this aspect of the work of the Committees has become much less significant. In 2008, the final year before the new mechanisms of Protocol No. 14 began to become operational, the Committees declared inadmissible or struck out of the list some 28,202 cases.¹⁶ By 2011, when Protocol No. 14 had become fully operational, that number had dropped to 1,187.¹⁷ The applicant, as well as the Contracting Parties concerned where these have previously been involved in the application in accordance with the present Rules, shall be informed of the decision by letter 'unless the Committee decides otherwise'.¹⁸

Joint decision on admissibility and merits

Since the entry into force of Protocol No. 14, Committees have issued decisions on both the admissibility and the merits in several hundred cases. For example, in 2012, seven-judge Chambers delivered 861 judgments (concerning 1,119 applications) while three-judge Committees delivered 206 judgments (concerning 509 applications).¹⁹ Applications that did not result in judgments were declared inadmissible. Thus, the Committees account for about 31 per cent of the total number of applications that are not already inadmissible by the single-judge formation.

The inadmissibility decisions of the Committees look no different compared to those of seven-judge Chambers in the sense that they do not provide any explanation or justification for the exercise of jurisdiction by the Committee. There is no systematic attempt to explain why the matter is a repetitive one involving well-established case law. Sometimes, a Committee judgment will note that its ruling is consistent with 'well-established case-law',²⁰ but this seems to be the exception rather than the rule. According to the Explanatory Report, the expression 'well-established case-law' should be construed to ¹⁴ Storck v. Germany, no. 61603/00, § 67, ECHR 2005-V; Storck v. Germany (dec.), no. 61603, 26 October 2004; Ölmez v. Turkey (dec.), no. 39464/98, 5 July 2005; Des Fours Walderode v. Czech Republic (dec.), no. 40057/98, ECHR 2004-V; Harrach v. Czech Republic (dec.), no. 77532/01, 18 May 2004; Le Syndicat des copropriétaires du 20 bd de la Mer à Dinard v. France (dec.), no. 47339/99, 22 May 2003; Wortmann v. Germany (dec.), no. 70929/01, 18 November 2003; Appietto v. France (dec.), no. 56927/00, § 8, 26 February 2002.

¹⁵ Rules of Court, Rule 53(1).

¹⁶ Annual Report 2008, pp. 55–7.

¹⁷ Annual Report 2011, pp. 65–6.

¹⁸ Rules of Court, Rule 53(5).

¹⁹ Annual Report 2012, p. 60.

²⁰ Vinnik and Others v. Ukraine, no. 13977/05 and 45 other applications, § 65, 7 November 2013; Rooney v. Ireland, no. 32614/10, § 2, 31 October 2013; Kiselyov v. Ukraine, no. 42953/04, § 21, 13 June 2013; FEYA, MPP and Others v. Ukraine, no. 27617/06 and 126 other applications, 21 February 2013; Themeli v. Albania, no. 63756/09, §§ 24, 31, 15 January 2013; Tushaj v. Albania, no. 13620/10, §§ 30, 37, 15 January 2013; Hasdemir v. Turkey, no. 44027/09, § 4, 22 May 2012.

contemplate case law that has been consistently applied by a Chamber. However, exceptionally 'it is conceivable that a single judgment on a question of principle may constitute "well-established case-law", particularly when the Grand Chamber has rendered it'.²¹ The Explanatory Report considered that the parties might debate whether case law was in fact 'well established' before the Committee.²² But they cannot 'veto the use of this procedure which lies within the committee's sole competence'.²³

This new procedure is 'both simplified and accelerated, although it preserves the adversarial character of proceedings and the principle of judicial and collegiate decision-making on the merits'.²⁴ The judges of the Committee must be unanimous on each aspect. If they do not agree, no decision is taken and the case is dealt with under the general procedure before a Chamber set out in article 29.²⁵ The decision by the Committee to proceed under article 28(1)(b) does not preclude a subsequent finding that the case is inadmissible. This could arise when the State demonstrates a failure to exhaust domestic remedies, for example.²⁶

The 'national judge' does not participate in the Committee. This constitutes a significant new exception to the general rule that has existed since the Court began its work by which the judge of the nationality of the concerned State Party is included in the bench. The Explanatory Report justified this by observing that '[t]he presence of this judge would not appear necessary, since committees will deal with cases on which well-established case-law exists'.²⁷ There is an exception to the exception, as the Explanatory Report notes:

However, a committee may invite the judge elected in respect of the High Contracting Party concerned to replace one of its members as, in some cases, the presence of this judge may prove useful. For example, it may be felt that this judge, who is familiar with the legal system of the respondent Party, should join in taking the decision, particularly when such questions as exhaustion of domestic remedies need to be clarified.²⁸

The Committee may decide to proceed in this way. A unanimous vote is required. It invites the national judge to take the place of one of its members, 'having regard to all relevant factors, including whether that Party has contested the application of the procedure under Article 28 § 1 (b) of the Convention'.²⁹

Declarations

Upon signature of Protocol No. 14, Russia made the following declaration: 'the application of Article 28, paragraph 3, of the Convention as amended by Article 8 of the Protocol does not exclude the right of a High Contracting Party concerned, if the judge elected in ²¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, para. 68.

²² Ibid., para. 68.

²³ Ibid., para. 69.

²⁴ Ibid.

²⁵ Ibid.

²⁶ Ibid.

²⁷ Ibid., para. 71.

²⁸ Ibid.

²⁹ Rules of Court, Rule 53(3).

its respect is not a member of the committee, to request that he or she be given the possibility to take the place of one of the members of the Committee'.³⁰

Further reading

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, p. 453.

Caroline Ravaud, 'Article 20', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, at pp. 551–3.

³⁰ (2006) 49 YB 11. The statement was renewed upon ratification: (2010) 53 YB 28.

Article 29. Decisions by Chambers on admissibility and merits/ Décisions des chambres sur la recevabilité et le fond

1. If no decision is taken under Article 27 or Article 28, or no judgment rendered under Article 28, a Chamber shall decide on the admissibility and merits of individual applications submitted under Article 34. The decision on admissibility may be taken separately.

1. Si aucune décision n'a été prise en vertu des articles 27 ou 28, ni aucun arrêt rendu en vertu de l'article 28, une chambre se prononce sur la recevabilité et le fond des requêtes individuelles introduites en vertu de l'article 34. La décision sur la recevabilité peut être prise de façon séparée.

2. A Chamber shall decide on the admissibility and merits of inter-State applications submitted under Article 33. The decision on admissibility shall be taken separately unless the Court, in exceptional cases, decides otherwise.

2. Une chambre se prononce sur la recevabilité et le fond des requêtes étatiques introduites en vertu de l'article 33. Sauf décision contraire de la Cour dans des cas exceptionnels, la décision sur la recevabilité est prise séparément.

Introductory comments

Although most, if not all tribunals, be they national or international, grapple with the distinction between the admissibility of an application and its assessment on the merits, the matter is of particular importance at the international level. It is very common for international tribunals to address these issues separately, making formal rulings on admissibility before even beginning to examine the substance of a claim. In some cases, the procedural stage of determining admissibility is set out in the foundational instrument of the institution.¹ At the International Court of Justice, it is quite normal for there to be a hearing followed by a ruling on jurisdiction and admissibility. Then, depending upon the result, the case may proceed to a second hearing and a judgment on the merits of the case. The distinction is recognized in the Rules of Court.²

The Convention organs have not generally distinguished between jurisdiction and admissibility. The two concepts operate in a similar manner in that they require an initial determination before the substance of an application can be determined. In a general sense, jurisdiction indicates a sine qua non, without which a tribunal cannot proceed, whereas admissibility implies a degree of discretion available to a judicial institution that already properly exercises jurisdiction. The European Court addresses both jurisdiction and admissibility when it makes a ruling that it calls an 'admissibility decision'.³ It also delves rather deeply into the merits at this stage, exercising its authority under article 35(3) to declare inadmissible any application that it deems to be 'manifestly ill-founded'.

¹ Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, (2002) 2187 UNTS 90, art. 17.

² Rules of Court [of the International Court of Justice], Rule 79(1).

³ Among many examples, see Galid v. the Netherlands (dec.), no. 22617/07, § 44, 9 June 2009.

Drafting of the provision

The 1950 text of the Convention made the distinction between admissibility and merits with respect to the procedure of the European Commission of Human Rights. Under article 27, the Commission was to make an initial assessment of admissibility. Only then would it assess the merits of the application and, assuming it had not managed to effect a friendly settlement, prepare a report on the merits of the application. It then had the discretion to refer the case to the Court. The Court was entitled to rule on the issue of jurisdiction pursuant to article 49 of the Convention. Arguably it was not to assess issues of admissibility that were not jurisdictional in nature, this being reserved to the Commission by the Convention.⁴ But in an early decision it ruled otherwise and held that it was competent to reconsider the decision of the Commission on admissibility.⁵

There was no equivalent of article 29 in the 1950 text of the Convention with respect to the Court. The provision, which codifies a practice established by the Court from its earliest cases, was introduced to the Convention by Protocol No. 11. The original version of article 29 read as follows:

Decisions by Chambers on admissibility and merits

1. If no decision is taken under Article 28, a Chamber shall decide on the admissibility and merits of individual applications submitted under Article 34.
2. A Chamber shall decide on the admissibility and merits of inter-State applications submitted under Article 33.
3. The decision on admissibility shall be taken separately unless the Court, in exceptional cases, decides otherwise.⁶

The reference to article 28 concerned the provision introduced by Protocol No. 11 by which the Committee filtered cases, eliminating those that were inadmissible or striking them from the list, but without the ability to rule a case admissible and consider the merits.⁷

This text was amended pursuant to Protocol 14.⁸ The third paragraph of the provision that had been introduced by Protocol No. 11, making a combined admissibility and merits ruling the exception, was removed. In its place is a phrase at the end of paragraph 1 implying that such combined decisions are in fact encouraged.⁹ The reverse applies to inter-State cases, where the admissibility and merits stages require distinct rulings except in exceptional circumstances.¹⁰ For this purpose, a second sentence was added to paragraph 2.

⁴ Francis G. Jacobs and Robin C.A. White, The European Convention on Human Rights, 2nd edn, Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1996, p. 384.

⁵ De Wilde, Ooms, and Versyp v. Belgium, 18 June 1971, §§ 47–52, Series A no. 12.

⁶ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 1.

⁷ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 77.

⁸ Protocol No. 14 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, amending the control system of the Convention, ETS 194, art. 9.

⁹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, paras 41, 73.

¹⁰ Ibid., para. 74.

Analysis and interpretation

Article 29 confirms the role of the seven-judge Chamber as the central adjudicative body of the Court. It has general jurisdiction to rule on both the admissibility and the merits of all applications submitted to the Court. The other judicial organs—the single judge, the Committee, and the Grand Chamber—are all subject to special conditions that limit their jurisdiction.

The two paragraphs of article 29 distinguish between individual applications and inter-State applications. Since the amendments introduced in 2010 by Protocol No. 14, it is clear that the Chambers are encouraged to rule on both the admissibility and the merits at the same time when individual applications are concerned. When the Court informs the parties that it intends to proceed in this way, they are invited to include in their observations any submissions concerning just satisfaction and any proposals for a friendly settlement.¹¹ If no friendly settlement is reached and if the Chamber is satisfied the case is admissible and ready to be determined on the merits, it then adopts a judgment that includes its admissibility decision.¹² Although the separation of these two stages is the exception in individual applications, the Chambers remain free to proceed otherwise, should they prefer to take a separate decision on admissibility.¹³ The Rules of Court specify that the Court may decide 'at any stage, if necessary, to take a separate decision on admissibility'.¹⁴

Initially, article 29 created a presumption in favour of separate decisions for both individual and inter-State cases. The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11 suggested this was desirable because it could assist the parties in friendly settlement negotiations.¹⁵ Nevertheless, even before the entry into force of Protocol No. 14, a practice of taking joint decisions on the admissibility and the merits of individual applications had already taken hold within the Court.¹⁶ It was not at all uncommon for it to reserve its ruling on the admissibility issue of failure to exhaust domestic remedies to the merits stage, especially in cases dealing with procedural matters and the procedural obligation of articles 2 and 3.¹⁷

The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14 does not indicate why the rule was changed for individual applications yet retained for inter-State applications. In the only inter-State cases submitted to the Court since the entry into force of Protocol No. 11 in 1998, the Chamber decided to join the issue of admissibility with the merits: '[I]n the instant case the question of the application of the rule of exhaustion of domestic remedies and compliance with it are so closely related to that of the existence of an administrative practice that they must be considered jointly during an examination of the merits of the case.'¹⁸

¹¹ Rules of Court, Rule 54A(1).

¹² Ibid., Rule 54A(2).

¹³ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, paras 41, 73.

¹⁴ Rules of Court, Rule 54A(1).

¹⁵ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 78.

¹⁶ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, para. 73. See in this respect Perişan and Others v. Turkey, no. 12336/03, §§ 68–72, 20 May 2010.

¹⁷ Dink v. Turkey, nos 2668/07, 6102/08, 30079/08, 7072/09, and 7124/09, §§ 56–58, 14 September 2010; Scoppola v. Italy (no. 2) [GC], no. 10249/03, § 126, 17 September 2009; A, B and C v. Ireland [GC], no. 25579/05, § 155, ECHR 2010; M.S.S. v. Belgium and Greece [GC], no. 30696/09, § 336, ECHR 2011.

¹⁸ Georgia v. Russia (dec.), no. 13255/07, § 50, 30 June 2009. Also Georgia v. Russia (dec.), no. 38263/08, §§ 68, 75, 94, 13 December 2011.

The decision of the Chamber that a case is inadmissible is final, subject to the possibility of reopening an examination of admissibility where the Court itself has committed an error.¹⁹

Further reading

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, p. 454.

Leo Zwaak, 'The Procedure before the European Court of Human Rights', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 95–290.

¹⁹ Storck v. Germany, no. 61603/00, § 67, ECHR 2005-V; Storck v. Germany (dec.), no. 61603, 26 October 2004; Ölmez v. Turkey (dec.), no. 39464/98, 5 July 2005; Des Fours Walderode v. Czech Republic (dec.), no. 40057/98, ECHR 2004-V; Harrach v. Czech Republic (dec.), no. 77532/01, 18 May 2004; Le Syndicat des copropriétaires du 20 bd de la Mer à Dinard v. France (dec.), no. 47339/99, 22 May 2003; Wortmann v. Germany (dec.), no. 70929/01, 18 November 2003; Appietto v. France (dec.), no. 56927/00, § 8, 26 February 2002.

Article 30. Relinquishment of jurisdiction to the Grand Chamber/Dessaisissement en faveur de la Grande Chambre

Where a case pending before a Chamber raises a serious question affecting the interpretation of the Convention or the Protocols thereto, or where the resolution of a question before the Chamber might have a result inconsistent with a judgment previously delivered by the Court, the Chamber may, at any time before it has rendered its judgment, relinquish jurisdiction in favour of the Grand Chamber, unless one of the parties to the case objects.¹

Si l'affaire pendante devant une chambre soulève une question grave relative à l'interprétation de la Convention ou de ses Protocoles, ou si la solution d'une question peut conduire à une contradiction avec un arrêt rendu antérieurement par la Cour, la chambre peut, tant qu'elle n'a pas rendu son arrêt, se dessaisir au profit de la Grande Chambre, à moins que l'une des parties ne s'y oppose.

Introductory comments

The largest judicial formation of the European Court of Human Rights is the Grand Chamber. Its judgments are especially authoritative. Cases may come before the Grand Chamber following a decision by a seven-judge Chamber upon the request of one of the parties. Known as referral, it is governed by article 43. However, they may also be submitted to the Grand Chamber by the Chamber itself, on its own initiative, before it has issued a judgment. This is the purpose of article 30.

Drafting of the provision

The ancestor of article 30 was in the original Rules of Court adopted in 1959. It authorized the Chamber to relinquish jurisdiction in favour of the plenary Court where a case 'raised serious questions affecting the interpretation of the Convention'.² The Belgian Linguistic case was the first occasion when the Court sat on this basis in plenary, which at the time consisted of fourteen judges.³

Many years later, the provision of the Rules of Court providing for relinquishment to the plenary Court was changed to allow for relinquishment to a 'Grand Chamber' consisting of the President, the Vice-President, the judges of the Chamber that had relinquished jurisdiction, and additional judges so that it would comprise ¹ The words 'unless one of the parties to the case objects' are deleted pursuant to article 3 of Protocol No. 15 amending the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, ETS 213, which is not yet in force.

² Rules of Court, (adopted 18 September 1959), Rule 48 (Relinquishment of jurisdiction by the Chamber in favour of the plenary Court). This became Rule 50 pursuant to Revised Rules of Court (adopted on 24 November 1982) and then Rule 51 pursuant to Rules of Court (adopted on 24 November 1982 and amended on 26 January 1989).

³ Case 'relating to certain aspects of the laws on the use of languages in education in Belgium' (merits), 23 July 1968, Series A no. 6.

nineteen members.⁴ The amendment entered into force on 27 October 1993 and the first hearings before a Grand Chamber were held in 1994.⁵ Relinquishment by a Chamber in favour of the Grand Chamber was mandatory where the resolution of 'one or more serious questions affecting the interpretation of the Convention . . . might have a result inconsistent with a judgment previously delivered by the Court'. Reasons were not required for the decision to relinquish jurisdiction. The Grand Chamber could then rule on the case, or return it to the Chamber for judgment, or relinquish jurisdiction to the plenary Court 'exceptionally, when the issues raised are particularly serious or involve a significant change of existing case-law'.

Protocol No. 11 transferred the relinquishment procedure from the Rules of Court to the Convention. The new article 30 is clearly derived from the provision in the Rules of Court. However, contrary to the situation under the Rules, article 30 does not oblige the Chamber to relinquish jurisdiction.⁶ The Explanatory Report also includes the following explanation:

The reason for making relinquishment subject to the approval of the parties should be seen in the light of the introduction of the concept of 're-hearing', in accordance with the decision of the Committee of Ministers on 28 May 1993 . . . The provision is designed so as to secure the possibility that such a 're-hearing' not be adversely affected. This procedure of relinquishment, the use of which can be made any time prior to judgment, must thus be distinguished from that of a re-hearing as provided for in Article 43.⁷

Protocol No. 15, not yet in force, amends article 30 by eliminating the final words: 'unless one of the parties to the case objects'.⁸ The Explanatory Report says this measure is 'intended to contribute to consistency in the case-law of the Court, which had indicated that it intended to modify its Rules of Court (Rule 72) so as to make it obligatory for a Chamber to relinquish jurisdiction where it envisages departing from settled case-law'.⁹ The Report says that '[r]emoval of the parties' right to object to relinquishment will reinforce this development'.¹⁰ The Explanatory Report also said that 'removal of this right would also aim at accelerating proceedings before the Court in cases which raise a serious question affecting the interpretation of the Convention or the Protocols thereto or a potential departure from existing case-law'.¹¹ Furthermore, the Report says 'it would be expected that the Chamber will consult the parties on its intentions and it would be preferable for the Chamber to narrow down the case as far as possible, including by finding inadmissible any relevant parts of the case before relinquishing it'.¹² The amendment is made 'in the expectation that the Grand Chamber will in future give more specific ⁴ Rules of Court A (as in force at 1 February 1994), Rule 51 (Relinquishment of jurisdiction by the Chamber in favour of the Grand Chamber and by the Grand Chamber in favour of the plenary Court).

⁵ Murray v. the United Kingdom, 28 October 1994, § 6, Series A no. 300-A; Jersild v. Denmark, 23 September 1994, § 6, Series A no. 298.

⁶ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 79.

⁷ Ibid.

⁸ Protocol No. 15 amending the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, ETS 213, art. 3.

⁹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 15, para. 16.

¹⁰ Ibid., para. 16.

¹¹ Ibid., para. 17.

¹² Ibid., para. 18.

indication to the parties of the potential departure from existing case-law or serious question of interpretation of the Convention or the Protocols thereto'.¹³

The Court itself issued an Opinion addressing the comments in the Explanatory Report. With respect to the desire that before relinquishing the case it consult the parties, the Court said '[t]his can be accommodated'. As for narrowing the case by rejecting inadmissible aspects of the complaint before relinquishing jurisdiction, the Court agreed this was desirable, pointing to existing practice. It also noted amended Rule 27A whereby when a case is communicated to the respondent State, the President of the Section may strike out manifestly ill-founded or plainly inadmissible complaints. 'This will be in the interests of a more focussed procedure before the Chamber and, in case of relinquishment, before the Grand Chamber', the Court said. On the third issue raised in the Explanatory Report, concerning the need for specific indications to the parties about the possible change in case law or the serious question of interpretation involved, the Court said '[i]t is in the interests of the procedure that it be clear to the parties what issues they should address in depth before the Grand Chamber. In most cases, these issues should be clear enough. Where a party has a doubt, it may raise the matter with the Court's Registry, which can provide assistance.'¹⁴

Analysis and interpretation

Perhaps slightly less than half of the cases that come to the Grand Chamber result from relinquishment by a Chamber, in accordance with article 30 of the Convention. The number of cases relinquished each year does not reach ten. Relinquishment must be distinguished from referral, the other door to the Grand Chamber. Under article 43, referral may be granted upon the application by one of the parties on grounds that are similar, but not identical, to those for relinquishment.

Two grounds justify relinquishment of jurisdiction: 'a serious question affecting the interpretation of the Convention or the Protocols', and 'where the resolution of a question before the Chamber might have a result inconsistent with a judgment previously delivered by the Court'. The Chamber need not relinquish jurisdiction in the first situation, whereas in the second relinquishment is mandatory. Serious questions of interpretation are addressed constantly by the Chambers and it would be absurd for them to defer to the Grand Chamber systematically. Numerous dissenting and separate opinions within the Chambers confirm that serious questions of interpretation often arise, yet there is no relinquishment of jurisdiction. There does not seem to be any method or principle that can enable an observer to predict when a case will be relinquished on this basis and when it will not.

With respect to the possibility of a result inconsistent with previous authority, there is thereby established a principle akin to stare decisis in that a Chamber is formally prohibited from reversing precedent. By relinquishing jurisdiction the members of the Chamber may appear already to have taken a position favouring reversal of an earlier precedent. Nevertheless, to the extent that they may be inclined to depart from previously decided authority, they have no choice but to relinquish jurisdiction to the Grand Chamber.

¹³ Ibid., para. 19.

¹⁴ Opinion of the Court on Draft Protocol No. 15 to the European Convention on Human Rights, 6 February 2013, paras 9–11.

Reasons are not required by the Rules of Court and generally they are not given.¹⁵ Nor do the judgments on the Grand Chamber indicate whether the case came to it because of an issue of interpretation or the possibility of a result inconsistent with previous authority. In a case involving consideration of a controversial ruling by the Grand Chamber on immunities issued thirteen years previously, with a narrow majority and where there had been important subsequent legal developments, a Chamber has said that '[w]here the precedent in question is a relatively recent and comprehensive judgment of the Grand Chamber, as in the present case, a Chamber which is not prepared to follow the established precedent should propose relinquishment of the case before it to the Grand Chamber'.¹⁶ One member of the Chamber clearly disagreed, contending in a separate opinion that the jurisdiction should have been relinquished to the Grand Chamber 'in order to give it the opportunity to consider whether Al-Adsani still remains good law'.¹⁷

It is open to the parties to contest relinquishment by the Chamber. The Registrar is to notify the parties of the Chamber's intention. They have one month in which to provide a 'duly reasoned objection',¹⁸ a requirement that suggests the objection does not function as a veto and that the Chamber is then to consider the arguments of the parties in taking a final decision. Nevertheless, it seems that the Court treats the objection to relinquishment as an absolute right of the parties and it does not appear to consider the merits of the objection.¹⁹ Once the relinquishment decision has been taken, an objection cannot subsequently be raised in the proceedings before the Grand Chamber.²⁰ These provisions are slated for removal when Protocol No. 15 enters into force.

Although the Court's practice is to consider issues of admissibility and merits at the same time, in accordance with article 29(1), it is possible for a Chamber to declare part of an application inadmissible and then relinquish jurisdiction in favour of the Grand Chamber.²¹

Further reading

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, p. 455.

Leo Zwaak, 'The Procedure before the European Court of Human Rights', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 238–9.

¹⁵ Rules of Court, Rule 72(3). For example, '[t]he Court does not see any reason to relinquish jurisdiction in favour of the Grand Chamber': Lordos and Others v. Turkey (just satisfaction), no. 15973/90, § 9, 10 January 2012; 'the Chamber rejected the applicant's request that it relinquish jurisdiction in favour of the Grand Chamber': Mateescu v. Romania, no. 1944/10, § 5, 14 January 2014.

¹⁶ Jones and Others v. the United Kingdom, nos 34356/06 and 40528/06, § 104, 14 January 2014.

¹⁷ Ibid., Concurring Opinion of Judge Bianku, 14 January 2014. Also Bayatyan v. Armenia, no. 23459/03, Concurring Opinion of Judge Fura, 27 October 2009.

¹⁸ Rules of Court, Rule 72(4).

¹⁹ Al-Dulimi and Montana Management Inc. v. Switzerland, no. 5809/08, § 9, 26 November 2013; Ivanjoc and Others v. Moldova and Russia, no. 23687/05, § 4, 15 November 2011; Herri Batasuna and Batasuna v. Spain, nos 25803/04 and 25817/04, § 6, ECHR 2009.

²⁰ Scoppola v. Italy (no. 2) [GC], no. 10249/03, §§ 58–59, 17 September 2009.

²¹ Catan and Others v. Moldova and Russia (dec.), nos 43370/04, 8252/05, and 18454/06, 15 June 2010 and Catan and Others v. the Republic of Moldova and Russia [GC], nos 43370/04, 8252/05, and 18454/06, § 3, ECHR 2012 (extracts); Scoppola v. Italy (no. 2) (dec.), no. 10249/03, §§ 1–4, 8 September 2005 and Scoppola v. Italy (no. 2) [GC], no. 10249/03, § 4, 17 September 2009.

Article 31. Powers of the Grand Chamber/Attributions de la Grande Chambre

The Grand Chamber shall

- (a) determine applications submitted either under Article 33 or Article 34 when a Chamber has relinquished jurisdiction under Article 30 or when the case has been referred to it under Article 43;
- (b) decide on issues referred to the Court by the Committee of Ministers in accordance with Article 46, paragraph 4; and
- (c) consider requests for advisory opinions submitted under Article 47.

La Grande Chambre

- a) se prononce sur les requêtes introduites en vertu de l'article 33 ou de l'article 34 lorsque l'affaire lui a été déférée par la chambre en vertu de l'article 30 ou lorsque l'affaire lui a été déférée en vertu de l'article 43;
- b) se prononce sur les questions dont la Cour est saisie par le Comité des Ministres en vertu de l'article 46, paragraphe 4; et
- c) examine les demandes d'avis consultatifs introduites en vertu de l'article 47.

Introductory comments

There is a certain redundancy about article 31 in that it appears to do no more than confirm the jurisdiction of the Grand Chamber that is set out in other provisions of the Convention. In effect, the Grand Chamber has jurisdiction with respect to individual applications and inter-State applications, whether these come to it through relinquishment or by application of one of the parties. It also has competence to deal with matters referred by the Committee of Ministers in accordance with article 46(4). Finally, it is competent to deliver advisory opinions, as set out in article 47.

Drafting of the provision

The Grand Chamber did not exist under the 1950 text of the Convention. The 'Grand Chamber' was initially created by the Rules of Court, essentially to replace the function of the plenary Court as an apex bench hearing cases when the Chamber had relinquished jurisdiction.¹ Article 31 was introduced by Protocol No. 11:

Powers of the Grand Chamber

The Grand Chamber shall

- (a) determine applications submitted either under Article 33 or Article 34 when a Chamber has relinquished jurisdiction under Article 30 or when the case has been referred to it under Article 43; and
- (b) consider requests for advisory opinions submitted under Article 47.

Noting that the plenary would consist of more than thirty judges, the Report said this 'could work only with difficulty' and that a Grand Chamber composed of seventeen judges would be 'sufficiently representative'. The Grand Chamber would, 'as far as possible, provide a balanced representation of judges from each Chamber as well as a diversity of legal systems'.²

¹ Rules of Court A (as in force at 1 February 1994), Rule 51.

Paragraph (b) was added to article 31 by Protocol No. 14, with the consequential renumbering of the former paragraph (b) and paragraph (c).³ It confirms the jurisdiction of the Grand Chamber when the Committee of Ministers votes to bring proceedings against a State Party that refuses to comply with a judgment of the Court.⁴

Analysis and interpretation

There is no matter before the Court over which the Grand Chamber may not exercise jurisdiction, with one exception. It is bound by the admissibility decision of the Chamber to the extent that it may not consider issues already judged inadmissible. It may only examine the case that has been declared admissible.⁵ Thus, '[w]ithin the compass thus delimited, the Grand Chamber may deal with any issue of fact or law that arises during the proceedings before it'.⁶

Further reading

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, p. 456.

Katharina Pabel, 'Die Rolle des Großen Kammer des EGMR bei Überprüfung von Kammer-Urteilen im Lichte der bisherigen Praxis / Kopftuch-Fall Leyla Şahin', (2006) 33 Europäische Grundrechte Zeitschrift 3.

Leo Zwaak, 'The Procedure before the European Court of Human Rights', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 237–40.

² Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 80.

³ Protocol No. 14 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, amending the control system of the Convention, ETS 194, art. 10.

⁴ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, paras 42, 75.

⁵ Gillberg v. Sweden [GC], no. 41723/06, § 53, 3 April 2012; K. and T. v. Finland [GC], no. 25702/94, §§ 140–141, ECHR 2001-VII; Göç v. Turkey [GC], no. 36590/97, §§ 35–37, ECHR 2002-V; Perna v. Italy [GC], no. 48898/99, §§ 23–24, ECHR 2003-V; D.H. and Others v. the Czech Republic [GC], no. 57325/00, § 109, ECHR-2007-IV.

⁶ Scoppola v. Italy (no. 2) [GC], no. 10249/03, § 48, 17 September 2009; Philis v. Greece (no. 1), 27 August 1991, § 56, Series A no. 209; Guerra and Others v. Italy, 19 February 1998, § 44 in fine, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-I.

Article 32. Jurisdiction of the Court/Compétence de la Cour

1. The jurisdiction of the Court shall extend to all matters concerning the interpretation and application of the Convention and the Protocols thereto which are referred to it as provided in Articles 33, 34, 46 and 47.

2. In the event of dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the Court shall decide.

1. La compétence de la Cour s'étend à toutes les questions concernant l'interprétation et l'application de la Convention et de ses Protocoles qui lui seront soumises dans les conditions prévues par les articles 33, 34, 46 et 47.

2. En cas de contestation sur le point de savoir si la Cour est compétente, la Cour décide.

Introductory comments

The concept of jurisdiction refers to the power of a court 'to decide a matter in controversy and presupposes the existence of a duly constituted court with control over the subject matter and the parties'.¹

Drafting of the provision

The 1949 draft of the European Movement contained the following: 'La Cour sera compétente pour juger de toute violation des droits précités, résultant d'un acte législatif, administratif ou juridictionnel, ou d'une voie de fait...'² The draft adopted for submission to the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe read: 'The Court shall have jurisdiction to determine all cases concerning the infringement of this Convention arising out of executive, legislative or juridical acts.'³ The European Movement also prepared a draft statute for a European Court of Human Rights. It contained the following:

Part II. Competence

Article 31

a) The jurisdiction of the Court is defined in the Convention on Human Rights.

b) In the event of a dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction the matter shall be settled by decision of the Court.

¹ Prosecutor v. Tadić (IT-94-1-AR72), Decision on the Defence Motion for Interlocutory Appeal on Jurisdiction, 2 October 1995, para. 10, citing Black's Law Dictionary, 712 (6th edn, 1990).

² Recommendations adopted at the meeting of the International Council of the European Movement held at Brussels in February 1949, INF/2/F, p. 3. This is reproduced in CDH (67) 5, at pp. 2-3, with the indication that the original English version no longer exists.

³ Convention for the Collective Protection of Individual Rights and Democratic Liberties by the States, Members of the Council of Europe, and for the establishment of a European Court of Human Rights to ensure observance of the Convention, Doc. INF/5/E/R, I TP 296-303, at p. 300, art. 13(a).

Article 32

- a) The Court, whose function is to decide in accordance with international law (subject to the qualification contained in Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention on Human Rights) such questions or issues as are submitted to it, shall apply:
- (i) the provisions of the Convention on Human Rights;
 - (ii) the general principles of law recognised by civilised nations;
 - (iii) judicial decisions and the teachings of the most highly qualified publicists of the various nations as subsidiary means for the determination of rules of law;
 - (iv) international conventions, whether general or particular, establishing rules expressly recognised by any State concerned.
- b) This provision shall not prejudice the power of the Court to decide a case ex aequo et bono.⁴

Articles 36 and 38 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice were the inspiration for these provisions.

The Legal Committee of the Consultative Assembly proposed that the following provision be included in the Convention:

The jurisdiction of the Court shall extend to all violations of the obligations defined by the Convention, whether they result from legislative, executive or judicial acts. Nevertheless, where objection is taken to a judicial decision, that decision cannot be impugned unless it was given in disregard of the fundamental rights defined in Article 2 by reference to Articles 9, 10 and 11 of the United Nations Declaration.⁵

Presenting this text to the plenary Consultative Assembly, Pierre-Henri Teitgen explained that the Committee:

proposes that the guarantee exercised either by the Commission or, later, by the jurisdiction of the European Court of Human Rights, shall extend to all violations of the obligations defined in the Convention, whether they are the result of legislative, executive or judicial acts. But in this connection, and especially as regards judicial acts, [your] Committee takes care to point out that the Court will not in any way operate as a Supreme Court of Appeal having jurisdiction to review any errors of laws or of fact which are alleged against a national Court.⁶

Teitgen went to considerable pains to insist that the proposed Court would not interfere with the decisions of domestic courts except in the case of what he called a 'pseudo-judgment', that is, 'when there has been a travesty of justice or a verdict given in disregard of all fundamental individual rights, or all elementary guarantees of procedure...'⁷ An amendment was submitted to insert the word 'finally' after the words 'unless it was'. The proposers said this was 'to avoid any possibility of conflict between supra-national jurisdiction and national jurisdiction', adding that it prevented a matter being brought before the Court unless all instances of national jurisdiction were exhausted. 'This amendment should help to reassure those who fear an infringement of national sovereignty', they said.⁸ The amendment was accepted and the draft article adopted by the Consultative Assembly.⁹

⁴ Draft Statute of the European Court of Human Rights, INF/5/E/R, I TP 302-21, at p. 312.

⁵ Report presented by Mr P.H. Teitgen, 5 September 1949, Doc. A 290, I TP 192-213, at p. 198. Also Report [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions], 5 September 1949, Doc. AS (1) 77, I TP 216-39, at p. 234, art. 24.

⁶ Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 7 September 1949], I TP 258-95, p. 288.

⁷ Ibid., p. 290.

⁸ Amendment proposed by Mr Dominedo and Mr Benvenuti (Italy) (8 September 1949), Doc. 105, II TP 12-13.

⁹ Official Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 8 September 1949], II TP 14-274, at p. 218-20.

The Committee of Ministers referred the Consultative Assembly draft to a Committee of Experts for further consideration. Prior to its meetings, the Secretariat General of the Council of Europe prepared a detailed study on the notion of 'denial of justice' to assist in the discussions on the jurisdictional provision.¹⁰ In the first session of the Committee of Experts, in February 1950, a proposal emerged that begins to resemble the final result:

Article A

The competence of the Court shall cover the following matters:

- 1) Any disputes arising out of the interpretation and application of the present Convention which is brought before the Court by one of the Contracting Parties;
- 2) Any questions concerning the application, by the parties to the present Convention, of the provisions of Article 2 to . . . of this Convention, which is referred to the Court by the Commission of Human Rights.

In the event of dispute as to whether or not the Court possesses competence, it is for the Court to decide.¹¹

After noting that the concern of the Consultative Assembly with the relationship between national jurisdictions and the European court had been resolved by formulation of a rule of exhaustion of domestic remedies, the Committee of Experts adopted the following provisions in the report on its first session, held in February 1950:

Article 32

The competence of the Court shall cover all cases of violation of individual rights protected by the application of Articles 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 of this Convention.

Article 35

In the event of dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court.¹²

With respect to article 35, the accompanying commentary said no explanation was required. As for article 32, the following was provided:

This Article gives rulings on the competence of the Court.

Contrary to the Assembly draft, the Committee of Experts considered that in no case should the Court be competent to give a ruling on cases of violation of article 3, relating to the safeguarding of democratic institutions. Such cases were not the kind which it was suitable to settle by judgment of a court. The measures to be taken for remedying them came exclusively with the political sphere. According to the Committee of Experts' system, moreover, the Court should only be permitted to give a ruling on cases of violation of the individual rights protected by the Convention, and not of cases of violation of the Convention by legislative acts as such.¹³

¹⁰ Documentation of the Secretary General on the denial of justice such as it is understood by general international public law in the framework of the responsibility of the State for acts of its judicial organs (undated), cited in CDH (70) 32, p. 23. Also Preparatory Report by the Secretariat-General concerning a Preliminary Draft Convention to Provide a Collective Guarantee of Human Rights, Doc. B 22, III TP 2-37, at p. 34.

¹¹ Amendments to various articles of the Recommendation of the Consultative Assembly proposed by the Italian Expert, Doc. A 812, III TP 228-31.

¹² Preliminary Draft Convention for the Maintenance and Further Realisation of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 15 February 1950, Doc. A 833, III TP 236-46, at p. 246.

¹³ Preliminary Draft of the Report to the Committee of Ministers, 24 February 1950, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 1, A 847, III TP 246-79, at pp. 274-6 (emphasis in the original).

At its second session, the Committee of Experts made slight changes to the report:

This Article defines the competence of the Court.

Contrary to the Assembly draft, the Committee of Experts considered that in no case should the Court be competent to give a ruling on cases of violation of article 3, relating to the safeguarding of democratic institutions. Such cases were not the kind which it was suitable to settle by judgment of a court. The measures to be taken for remedying them are political measures and therefore should fall within the exclusive competence of the Commission of Human Rights and the Committee of Ministers.

According to the Committee of Experts' system, moreover, the Court should only be permitted to give a ruling on cases of violation of the individual rights protected by the Convention, and not of cases of violation of the Convention simply by promulgation of legislative acts.¹⁴

The draft prepared by the Committee of Experts was then studied by the Conference of Senior Officials on Human Rights, in June 1950. Articles 32 and 35 of the draft were considered in the context of concern about the proliferation of international courts and tribunals. Members of the Committee stressed the importance of confining the remit of the Court to matters arising from the Convention.¹⁵ The Conference adopted an initial draft containing the following provisions:

Article 46

The jurisdiction comprises all cases concerning the interpretation and application of the present Convention which the High Contracting Parties shall refer to it, in accordance with the provisions hereafter...

Article 50

In the event of dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court.¹⁶

There were no further changes to article 50, which became article 49 in the final text of the Convention. Article 46 of the earlier draft (it had become article 45) was revised by the Conference of Senior Officials: 'The jurisdiction of the Court comprises all cases concerning the interpretation and application of the present Convention which the High Contracting Parties or the Commission shall refer to it in accordance with article 48.'¹⁷ Article 48, to which reference was made, was in draft form very similar to the final version of article 48. It set out the sources of referrals to the Court. The text of article 46, as adopted by the Conference, was identical to that of article 45 in the final version of the Convention except that the words 'comprises all cases' were changed to 'shall extend to all cases' on a proposal of the British delegate.¹⁸

A theme throughout the debates in all of the bodies engaged in drafting the Convention was whether to include a provision derived from the original article 32 of the

¹⁴ Appendix to the Report of the Committee of Experts on Human Rights: Draft Convention of Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 16 March 1950, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 15 appendix, CM/WP 1 (50) 14 revised, A 925, IV TP 50-79, at p. 44 (emphasis in the original).

¹⁵ Non-official report of the sessions, cited in CDH (70) 32, pp. 34-7.

¹⁶ Draft Convention appended to the draft report, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 16, appendix, A 1445, IV TP 218-40, at pp. 234-6.

¹⁷ Draft Convention annexed to the Report [of the Conference of Senior Officials], Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19 annex, CM/WP 4 (50) 16 rev., A 1452, IV TP 274-95, at p. 290.

¹⁸ Draft Convention adopted by the Sub-Committee, Doc. CM 1 (50) 52, A 1884, V TP 76-99, at p. 92.

European Movement text.¹⁹ This would have invited the Court to apply 'general principles of law recognised by civilised nations', an expression taken from article 38 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice. It was really an applicable law provision rather than a provision on jurisdiction as such. The line between the two concepts may not always be entirely clear. In practice, the European Court of Human Rights has applied 'general principles of law recognised by civilised nations' (note the reference in article 7(2) of the Convention) as well as other relevant sources of international law but only as guidance for the interpretation of the Convention, in accordance with article 31(3)(c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a matter discussed in the introductory chapter of this book.

In its report to the Consultative Assembly, in August 1950, the Legal Committee wrote the following:

The Committee, while recognising the importance of the proposal that the European Commission and Court should apply the general principles of law recognised among civilised States, as referred to in Article 38 of the Statute of the International Court, were of the opinion that the insertion of a specific clause to this effect was unnecessary, but wished to recommend to the Assembly that in transmitting the draft Convention to the Committee of Ministers the attention of the latter might be drawn to this point. It is anticipated that the Commission and the Court must necessarily apply such principles in coming to a decision.²⁰

In the plenary Assembly, David Maxwell Fyfe of the United Kingdom explained that the Legal Committee had not insisted on requiring the Court to apply general principles of law because it 'could not contemplate the organs or the machinery doing anything else. If they are going to work they must apply these principles, and it is in that spirit that we have made no suggestion for a specific inclusion.'²¹

Article 32 of the Convention results from Protocol No. 11. The first paragraph of article 32 closely resembles article 45 of the 1950 text. The mention of the Commission disappeared, and the reference to article 48 in the concluding words was modified so as to list the provisions in the revised Convention governing referral of cases to the Court. The second sentence of article 32 is identical to article 49 of the 1950 Convention.²² The provision was amended by Protocol No. 14 with the addition of article 46 to the enumeration of provisions in the concluding words of paragraph 1 so as to take into account the new procedure introduced in that text.²³

Analysis and interpretation

'[I]t follows from [article 32] that the Court may exercise its jurisdiction only in regard to cases which have been duly brought before it', the Plenary Court has said.²⁴ The ¹⁹ See, for example, the speech by P.-H. Teirgen in the 1950 session of the Consultative Assembly, Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 7 September 1949], I TP 250-95, at p. 280.

²⁰ First Report [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions], Doc. AS/JA (2) 15, A 2298, VI TP 46-52, at p. 50; Second Report [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions], Doc. AS/JA (2) rev., A 2493, VI TP 52-58, at p. 56; Text of the Report [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions], Doc. AS (2) 93, VI TP 58-72, at p. 62.

²¹ Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 25 August 1950, morning], VI TP 74-143, at p. 78.

²² Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 82.

²³ Protocol No. 14 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, amending the control system of the Convention, ETS 194, art. 11.

²⁴ De Wilde, Ooms, and Versyp v. Belgium, 18 June 1971, § 49, Series A no. 12.

consequence is that the Court 'cannot interpret the Convention in an abstract manner, but only in relation to such specific cases as are referred to it'.²⁵ But '[o]nce a case is duly referred to it, however, the Court is endowed with full jurisdiction and may thus take cognisance of all questions of fact and of law which may arise in the course of the consideration of the case'.²⁶

Issues of jurisdiction, in particular temporal, territorial, and personal jurisdiction, are also addressed in the context of article 1 of the Convention. Article 32 is concerned primarily with the subject-matter jurisdiction of the Court.

The Court invoked article 32 in a case dealing with succession to the European Convention on Human Rights. After Montenegro seceded from Serbia and Montenegro, in June 2006, an application raised the issue of attribution of responsibility for observance of the Convention within Montenegro prior to that date. When it invited Montenegro to join the Council of Europe, the Committee of Ministers adopted a resolution stating that Montenegro was to be regarded as a Party to the European Convention on Human Rights and its Protocols No. 1, 4, 6, 7, 12, 13, and 14 thereto with effect from 6 June 2006.²⁷ In its judgment, the Court noted that the Committee of Ministers had accepted, 'apparently because of the earlier ratification of the Convention by the State Union of Serbia and Montenegro, that it was not necessary for Montenegro to deposit its own formal ratification of the Convention'.²⁸ Holding Montenegro responsible for a breach of article 1 of Protocol No. 1 prior to 6 June 2006, the Court said that notwithstanding article 54 of the Convention, it has 'the sole competence under Article 32 thereof to determine all issues concerning "the interpretation and application of the Convention", including those involving its temporal jurisdiction and/or the compatibility of the applicants' complaints ratione personae'.²⁹

Jurisdiction of the Court (para. 1)

In its very first decision, the Court explained that 'the exact meaning' of article 32 (then article 45) was defined in other articles of the Convention, specifically referring to the former article 47, which required the failure of efforts by the Commission to reach a friendly settlement, and article 46(1) (then article 53) by which States Parties 'undertake to abide by the decision of the Court in any case to which they are parties'.³⁰

The presence of article 32 in the Convention is the result of a very substantial debate around the inclusion of a more elaborate provision governing applicable law analogous to article 38 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice. Article 32 (articles 45 and 49 in the 1950 text of the Convention) is what remained when the detailed text on applicable law, with its reference to 'general principles of law recognised by civilised nations', was not retained. When the Convention was revised by Protocol No. 11 and Protocol No. 14, the provision underwent amendment, but only of the most perfunctory nature. It did not attract any attention in a substantive sense.

²⁵ Lawless v. Ireland (no. 1), 14 November 1960, p. 8, Series A no. 1.

²⁶ De Wilde, Ooms, and Versyp v. Belgium, 18 June 1971, § 49, Series A no. 12.

²⁷ Resolution CM/Res(2007)7 inviting the Republic of Montenegro to become a member of the Council of Europe.

²⁸ Bijelić v. Montenegro and Serbia, no. 11890/05, § 68, 28 April 2009.

²⁹ Ibid., § 67.

³⁰ Lawless v. Ireland (no. 1), 14 November 1960, p. 8, Series A no. 1.

In one case, a Chamber of the Court said that it 'would reiterate, as clearly as possible, that it alone is competent to decide on its jurisdiction to interpret and apply the Convention and its Protocols (Article 32 of the Convention), in particular with regard to the issue of whether the person in question is an applicant within the meaning of Article 34 of the Convention and whether the application fulfils the requirements of that provision'.³¹ In another, where Latvia contested the authority of the Court to consider measures taken by the State in order to implement a treaty concluded prior to entry into force of the Convention, the Court said it 'must therefore first address the question of its own jurisdiction (Article 32 § 2 of the Convention)'.³² The Court said:

Under the terms of Article 32 § 1 its jurisdiction extends to all matters concerning the interpretation and application of the Convention and Protocols which are referred to it, inter alia by way of an individual application lodged under Article 34. In accordance with its established case-law, the Court's power of interpretation is not limited to the text itself of the Convention and Protocols, but also embraces the interpretation of reservations and other unilateral declarations made by a Contracting Party in relation thereto.³³

Article 32 has also been invoked in the context of the jura novit curiae doctrine, by which the Court may address substantive provisions of the Convention even if these have not been raised by the parties. The Court 'is master of the characterisation to be given in law to the facts of the case' and 'it does not consider itself bound by the characterisation given by an applicant, a government or the Commission'.³⁴

Disputes about jurisdiction (para. 2)

Paragraph 2 of article 32, reproducing article 49 of the 1950 text of the Convention, specifies that 'In the event of dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the Court shall decide.' This does not mean that the Court must await a challenge to its jurisdiction before considering the matter. If there are doubts about the jurisdiction, the Court may raise the issue proprio motu. Otherwise, it would be possible for parties to consent to the intervention of the Court even when it did not in fact have jurisdiction. The Court must 'satisfy itself that it has jurisdiction in any case brought before it, and is therefore obliged to examine the question of its jurisdiction at every stage of the proceedings'.³⁵

Preliminary objections by governments that a provision is outside the jurisdiction ratione materiae have occasionally been dismissed by the Court, invoking article 32 as authority for dealing with the merits of disputes about the interpretation and application of the Convention.³⁶ In the Ireland v. the United Kingdom case, the Court referred to article 32 (then article 49) as a basis for the need to interpret the admissibility decision of ³¹ Shamayev and Others v. Georgia and Russia, no. 36378/02, § 293, ECHR 2005-III.

³² Ibid., §§ 53, 56.

³³ Ibid., § 57 (extracts).

³⁴ Akdeniz v. Turkey, no. 25165/94, §§ 87–88, 31 May 2005. Jura novit curia is discussed in detail in the chapter on article 38 of this Commentary.

³⁵ Blečić v. Croatia [GC], no. 59532/00, § 67, ECHR 2006-III; Šilih v. Slovenia [GC], no. 71463/01, § 139, 9 April 2009; Shamayev and Others v. Georgia and Russia, no. 36378/02, § 293, ECHR 2005-III. Also Nielsen v. Denmark, no. 343/57, Commission decision of 2 September 1959, (1958–59) YB 412, at p. 454.

³⁶ Bozano v. France, 18 December 1986, § 42, Series A no. 111; Glaserapp v. Germany, 28 August 1986, § 41, Series A no. 104; Kosiek v. Germany, 28 August 1986, § 32, Series A no. 105.

the Commission, given that the Court could only exercise jurisdiction over those parts of the application that had been declared admissible by the Commission.³⁷

Further reading

Johan Callewaert, 'Article 45', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 767–75.

Johan Callewaert, 'Article 49', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 805–7.

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, p. 457.

³⁷ Ireland v. the United Kingdom, 18 January 1978, § 157, Series A no. 25.

Article 33. Inter-State cases/Affaires interétatiques

Any High Contracting Party may refer to the Court any alleged breach of the provisions of the Convention and the Protocols thereto by another High Contracting Party.

Toute Haute Partie contractante peut saisir la Cour de tout manquement aux dispositions de la Convention et de ses Protocoles qu'elle croira pouvoir être imputé à une autre Haute Partie contractante.

Introductory comments

When the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court was being negotiated, the very limited recourse to inter-State applications before the European Court of Human Rights was frequently invoked as an argument favouring an autonomous power of an independent prosecutor to launch investigations. Early drafts of the Statute had confined the power to trigger a prosecution to the United Nations Security Council and to States Parties. It was argued that one State would almost never refer another State to the Court, the experience of the European human rights system being given as evidence to support such a claim. Indeed, more than a decade into the operation of the International Criminal Court, that observation is indeed valid.¹

Some of the architects of the European system may well have thought that the inter-State petition mechanism would constitute the main act before the Convention organs. They manifested considerable anxiety about the possibility of overlapping jurisdiction with the International Court of Justice. Article 55 of the Convention testifies to that concern. In the 1950 Convention, jurisdiction of the European Commission of Human Rights to consider inter-State applications was the automatic consequence of ratification of the Convention. A right of individual petition required the State party to make a separate declaration. That distinction eventually disappeared with the reforms implemented by Protocol No. 11 in the 1990s. Perhaps this stands as confirmation of the change in vision, by which the individual application became far and away the major activity of the Court. In practice, the inter-State petition, on the other hand, has always sat on the margins of the system. Its use is idiosyncratic and recourse to it remains unpredictable.

Drafting of the provision

The initial draft European Convention on Human Rights prepared by the International Juridical Section of the European Movement provided that applications could be initiated by any State Party to the Convention, thereby implying that such proceedings would be directed against another State party.² The Draft Statute of the Court that was annexed to the Convention was clearly inspired by the Statute of the International Court of Justice. Thus, there were several provisions that seemed to contemplate inter-State cases. For example, the parties were to be represented by 'agents' and there was the possibility of a case being brought before the Court by 'special agreement', implying some form of compromis between two States Parties.³ It was also specified that nothing in the Convention was to be understood as preventing States Parties from referring any matter to the International Court of Justice.⁴ It is also important to bear in mind that the negotiations that took place in 1950 were strongly influenced by the parallel work of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights with respect to the draft Covenant. It did not contemplate an individual petition mechanism at all and was solely concerned with inter-State complaints.⁵

¹ There has only been one referral by a State Party against a third State, that of Comoros concerning the obstruction of the Gaza flotilla by Israeli forces: Statement of the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court, Fatou Bensouda, on concluding the preliminary examination of the situation referred by the Union of Comoros: 'Rome Statute legal requirements have not been met', 6 November 2014. Several States have invoked the Statute in order to confer jurisdiction on the Court, but this has been directed at their own territory and has been generally intended to focus on rebel or opposition movements or groups.

The draft Convention adopted by the Consultative Assembly in September 1949 recognized the right of a State Party to 'appeal to the [European] Commission [of Human Rights] on any supposed breach of the provisions of the Convention by another Member State'.⁶ A similar provision was adopted by the Committee of Experts at its February and March 1950 sessions: 'Any High Contracting Party may refer to the Commission through the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe the matter of any alleged breach of the provisions of the Convention by another High Contracting Party'.⁷ It was slightly modified by the Conference of Senior Officials, where it took a form very close to the final version.⁸ Article 24 of the Convention, adopted in November 1950, reads: 'Any High Contracting Party may refer to the Commission, through the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe, any alleged breach of the provisions of the Convention by another High Contracting Party.'

Under the 1950 text of the Convention, no supplementary declaration or acceptance of the mechanism was required with respect to inter-State petitions. All States Parties were subject to the possibility of an application from another State, although very few were actually filed. After issuance of the Commission's report, an inter-State case could then be brought before the European Court either by the Commission or by one of the parties

² Convention for the Collective Protection of Individual Rights and Democratic Liberties by the States, Members of the Council of Europe, and for the establishment of a European Court of Human Rights to ensure observance of the Convention, Doc. INF/5/E/R, I TP 296-303, at p. 298, art. 7(a).

³ Draft Statute of the European Court of Human Rights, INF/5/E/R, I TP 302-21, at p. 314, art. 34(a).

⁴ Convention for the Collective Protection of Individual Rights and Democratic Liberties by the States, Members of the Council of Europe, and for the establishment of a European Court of Human Rights to ensure observance of the Convention, Doc. INF/5/E/R, I TP 296-303, at p. 302, art. 15.

⁵ See, e.g., Minutes of the afternoon sitting [of 9 June 1950 of the Conference of Senior Officials], IV TP 120-31, at pp. 124-8.

⁶ Recommendation No. 38 to the Committee of Ministers adopted 8 September 1949 on the conclusion of the debates, Doc. AS (1) 108, II TP 274-83, at p. 278, art. 11.

⁷ Appendix to the Report of the Committee of Experts on Human Rights: Draft Convention of Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 16 March 1950, Doc. C/WP 1 (50) 15 appendix, CM/WP 1 (50) 14 revised, A 925, IV TP 50-79, at p. 68, art. 16(20). See also Preliminary Draft Convention for the Maintenance and Further Realisation of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 15 February 1950, Doc. A 833, III TP 236-46, at pp. 240-3, art. 14; Preliminary Draft of the Report to the Committee of Ministers, 24 February 1950, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50), A 847, III TP 246-79, at p. 270; Report to the Committee of Ministers submitted by the Committee of Experts Instructed to Draw Up a Draft Convention of Collective Guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Doc. CM/WP 1 (5) 15, A 924, IV TP 2-55, at p. 36.

⁸ Draft Convention annexed to the Report, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19 annex, CM/WP 4 (50) rev., A 1452, IV TP 274-95, at p. 284, art. 22.

pursuant to article 48 of the Convention to the extent that the States concerned had accepted the jurisdiction of the Court over such matters in accordance with article 46. In the first forty years of the Court, until the reform effected by Protocol No. 11, this happened only twice.⁹

Article 33 was introduced by Protocol No. 11. The Explanatory Report noted: 'This Article on inter-State cases reflects the former system whereby proceedings could be instituted before the Commission by one or more States against another State that had ratified the Convention, without the necessity for any additional acceptance of competence on the latter's part. States are, of course, bound only by the protocols they have ratified.'¹⁰

Analysis and interpretation

The inter-State complaint mechanism established by the Convention is a 'vehicle' for the 'collective enforcement' of rights contemplated by the Convention.¹¹ The existence of the inter-State application procedure—indeed, its obligatory nature was binding within the Convention system long before the individual petition mechanism became mandatory—confirms that the rights and obligations set out are erga omnes. In one of the first inter-State applications, the European Commission on Human Rights stated that:

the purpose of the High Contracting parties in concluding the Convention was not to concede to each other reciprocal rights and obligations in pursuance of their individual national interests but to realise the aims and ideals of the Council of Europe, as expressed in its Statute, and to establish a common public order of the free democracies of Europe with the object of safeguarding their common heritage of political traditions, ideals, freedom and the rule of law...¹²

In that case, however, Austria's application against Italy was concerned with the rights of German speakers in a portion of pre-First-World-War Austria that was annexed by Italy. Austria was not acting on behalf of its nationals in the strict sense, but nor can it be said that this was a neutral and disinterested attempt to apply the Convention in order to enforce Europe's common public order. A similar observation can be made about the inter-State applications filed by Greece against the United Kingdom concerning violations related to the independence movement of Greek speaking Cypriots during the 1950s.¹³ These cases, and others that followed, are similar in philosophy to the phenomenon of diplomatic protection by which a State invokes international law on behalf of its nationals in another State. One of the first cases before the Permanent Court of International Justice, filed in the early 1920s, involved diplomatic protection in a commercial matter.¹⁴ But there are also some very recent examples of international human rights treaties being invoked on behalf of a State's nationals before the International Court of Justice.¹⁵

⁹ Ireland v. the United Kingdom, 18 January 1978, § 2, Series A no. 25; Cyprus v. Turkey [GC], no. 25781/94, § 1, ECHR 2001-IV.

¹⁰ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 83.

¹¹ Austria v. Italy, no. 788/60, p. 138, Commission decision of 11 January 1961, (1961) 4 YB 116; Cyprus v. Turkey, no. 25781/94, § 70, Commission report of 4 June 1999.

¹² Austria v. Italy, no. 788/60, Commission decision of 11 January 1961, (1961) 4 YB 116, at p. 138.

¹³ Greece v. the United Kingdom, no. 176/56, Commission decision of 2 June 1956, (1958-59) 2 YB 182; Greece v. the United Kingdom, no. 299/57, Commission decision of 12 October 1957, (1958-59) 2 YB 186.

¹⁴ Mavrommatis Palestine Concessions, Series A, No. 2.

¹⁵ Ahmadou Sadio Diallo (Republic of Guinea v. Democratic Republic of the Congo), Compensation, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 2012, p. 324.

The early Strasbourg cases filed by Greece and Austria were not diplomatic protection in the strict sense because the alleged victims were subjects of the respondent State, not the applicant State. Only one case really resembles a classic matter of diplomatic protection. Denmark filed an application on behalf of one of its nationals alleging ill-treatment at the hands of the Turkish authorities. The case resulted in a friendly settlement.¹⁶ Such cases have many similarities with individual applications. Under the 1950 text of the Convention, an inter-State application might have been the only available remedy if a State had not accepted the individual petition mechanism before the Commission and the Court. However, since Protocol No. 11 there seems to be little practical difference between an individual application taken under article 34 and an inter-State one filed under article 33.

A few inter-State cases are more genuinely examples of States acting without any direct interest, in a bi-lateral sense, but rather in the enforcement of European public order. The Greek case is probably the best example, an application by several Council of Europe members dealing with a range of human rights violations attributable to the fascist junta that took power in Athens in 1967.¹⁷ Similarly, several European States took proceedings against Turkey in the 1980s.¹⁸

Attempts to classify inter-State cases into precise categories, mainly for the purpose of determining whether or not the applicant State may claim just satisfaction under article 41, do not lead to entirely satisfactory results.¹⁹ As Judge Pinto de Albuquerque explained, 'Article 33 claims are not exclusively aimed at upholding the European public order, but may also simultaneously seek to protect and satisfy the interests of one or more nationals of the applicant State.'²⁰

One confirmation of the erga omnes nature of the inter-State application is the absence of any requirement that a State demonstrate any particular interest, such as claiming that the impugned measure has prejudiced one of its nationals.²¹ Legal interest arises in an inter-State case only 'insofar as the same matters may also be the subject of individual applications'.²² The inter-State application does not need to seek redress for any particular individual, but rather it serves to address the protection of 'the public order of Europe'.²³ It need not be made on behalf of an individual. In contrast with the individual applicant, who must show a legal interest as a victim, be it direct, indirect, or potential, a State is not required to demonstrate any particular legal interest when it files an application against another State. The application is admissible because of 'the general interest attaching to the observance of the Convention'.²⁴

¹⁶ Denmark v. Turkey (friendly settlement), no. 34382/97, ECHR 2000-IV.

¹⁷ Denmark, Norway, Sweden, and the Netherlands v. Greece, nos 3321/67, 3322/67, 3323/67, and 3344/67, Commission report of 5 November 1969, (1969) 12 YB 'The Greek case' 1. Also Denmark, Norway, and Sweden v. Greece, no. 4448/70, Commission decision of 16 July 1970, (1970) 13 YB 122, Collection 34, p. 70.

¹⁸ France, Norway, Denmark, Sweden, and the Netherlands v. Turkey, nos 9940-9944/82, Commission decision of 6 December 1983, (1983) 26 YB COMM.EUR.JURIS. 1, DR 35, p. 143.

¹⁹ Cyprus v. Turkey (just satisfaction) [GC], no. 25781/94, §§ 44-45, 12 May 2014; ibid., Partly Concurring and Partly Dissenting Opinion of Judge Casadevall.

²⁰ Ibid., Concurring Opinion of Judge Pinto de Albuquerque, Joined by Judge Vučinić, § 4.

²¹ Ireland v. the United Kingdom, 18 January 1978, § 239, Series A no. 25.

²² Cyprus v. Turkey, no. 25781/94, § 77, Commission report of 4 June 1999.

²³ Austria v. Italy, no. 788/60, p. 138, Commission decision of 11 January 1961, (1961) 4 YB 116.

²⁴ Karner v. Austria, no. 40016/98, § 24, ECHR 2003-IX.

Citing the purpose of article 33 (formerly article 24), the Commission dismissed an objection by Turkey that the Government of Cyprus was not legitimate under the country's Constitution. It said that 'the protection of the rights and freedoms of the people of Cyprus under the Convention should not be impaired by any constitutional defect of its Government'.²⁵ In another case, the Commission said that 'to accept that a Government may avoid "collective enforcement" of the Convention under Article 24, by asserting that they do not recognise the Government of the applicant State, would defeat the purpose of the Convention'.²⁶

The scope of an inter-State application is larger than that of an individual application. The Court 'has the power to examine the conformity with the Convention of legislative measures and administrative practices as such', and even if there is no identifiable individual victim.²⁷ Nevertheless, the Court has said, 'the institutions established by the Convention may find a breach of this kind only if the law challenged pursuant to [article 33] is couched in terms sufficiently clear and precise to make the breach immediately apparent; otherwise, the decision of the Convention institutions must be arrived at by reference to the manner in which the respondent State interprets and applies in concreto the impugned text or texts'.²⁸

Although there is an admissibility phase to the determination of inter-State complaints, it is more limited in scope than is the case for individual applications. The distinction can be seen in article 35 of the Convention; paragraphs 1 and 4 apply to all applications, whereas paragraphs 2 and 3 only apply to individual applications. In other words, several of the admissibility criteria that are relevant to individual applications are not examined in the case of inter-State complaints.²⁹ Specifically, the Court has no authority to declare an inter-State application to be 'manifestly ill-founded'.³⁰ However, the text of article 35 'cannot prevent the Court from establishing already at this preliminary stage, under general principles governing the exercise of jurisdiction by international tribunals, whether it has any competence at all to deal with the matter laid before it'.³¹

It seems that there is a very limited authority to assess whether there exists prima facie evidence capable of sustaining the application.³² The Court would then be required to ascertain whether the allegations in the application are 'wholly unsubstantiated' (pas du tout étayées) or are 'lacking the requirements of a genuine allegation in the sense of Article 33

²⁵ Cyprus v. Turkey, no. 25781/94, § 71, Commission report of 4 June 1999. Also Cyprus v. Turkey, nos 6780/74 and 6950/75, Commission decision of 26 May 1975, (1975) 18 YB 84, DR 2, p. 125.

²⁶ Cyprus v. Turkey, no. 8007/77, Commission decision of 10 July 1978, (1978) 21 YB 101, DR 13, p. 85.

²⁷ Cyprus v. Turkey, no. 25781/94, § 313, Commission report of 4 June 1999.

²⁸ Ireland v. the United Kingdom, 18 January 1978, § 240, Series A no. 25.

²⁹ Georgia v. Russia (I) (dec.), no. 13255/07, § 44, 30 June 2009. Also France, Norway, Denmark, Sweden, and the Netherlands v. Turkey, nos 9940–9944/82, Commission decision of 6 December 1983, (1983) 26 YB COMM.EUR.JURIS. 1, DR 35, p. 143; Cyprus v. Turkey, no. 25781/94, Commission decision of 28 June 1996, (1996) 39 YB 130, DR 86, p. 104; Denmark v. Turkey (dec.), no. 34382/97, 8 June 1999; Denmark, Norway, Sweden, and the Netherlands v. Greece, nos 3321/67, 3322/67, 3323/67, and 3344/67, Commission decision of 24 January 1968, (1968) 11 YB 690, Collection 25, p. 92; Denmark, Norway, Sweden, and the Netherlands v. Greece, nos 3321/67, 3322/67, 3323/67, and 3344/67, § 113, Commission report of 5 November 1969, (1969) 12 YB 'The Greek case' 1.

³⁰ Ireland v. the United Kingdom, nos 5310/71 and 5451/72, Commission decision of 1 October 1972, (1972) 15 YB 80; Georgia v. Russia (II) (dec.), no. 38263/08, § 64, 13 December 2011.

³¹ Georgia v. Russia (II) (dec.), no. 38263/08, § 64, 13 December 2011.

³² France, Norway, Denmark, Sweden, and the Netherlands v. Turkey, nos 9940–9944/82, Commission decision of 6 December 1983, (1983) 26 YB COMM.EUR.JURIS. 1, DR 35, p. 143.

of the Convention' (feraient défaut les éléments constitutifs d'une véritable allégation au sens de l'article 33 de la Convention).³³ An early decision of the European Commission held that an allegation of a breach of the Convention is sufficient for the purposes of determining admissibility.³⁴

The requirement of exhaustion of domestic remedies applies, in principle, to inter-State applications as well as to individual cases. In the Ireland v. The United Kingdom case, the European Commission granted an exception to admissibility raised by the respondent State with respect to an allegation of a violation of article 2 of the Convention for which domestic remedies had not been exhausted.³⁵ However, the rule of exhaustion does not always operate in the same way in inter-State proceedings as it does with individual petitions. It does not apply to the extent that 'the applicant State complains of a practice as such, with the aim of preventing its continuation or recurrence, but does not ask the Court to give a decision on each of the cases put forward as proof or illustrations of that practice'.³⁶ On the other hand, 'when the applicant State does no more than denounce a violation or violations allegedly suffered by individuals whose place is taken by the State', the exhaustion requirement applies in exactly the same way as it does with respect to an individual petition.³⁷

For the purposes of the exception to the general rule, an administrative practice is said to have two distinct elements: a repetition of acts and official tolerance.³⁸ A repetition of acts is 'an accumulation of identical or analogous breaches which are sufficiently numerous and inter-connected not to amount to merely isolated incidents or exceptions but to a pattern or system'.³⁹ An official tolerance means that:

illegal acts are tolerated in that the superiors of those immediately responsible, though cognisant of such acts, take no action to punish them or to prevent their repetition; or that a higher authority, in face of numerous allegations, manifests indifference by refusing any adequate investigation of their truth or falsity, or that in judicial proceedings a fair hearing of such complaints is denied.⁴⁰

³³ Georgia v. Russia (I) (dec.), no. 13255/07, § 43, 30 June 2009; Georgia v. Russia (II) (dec.), no. 38263/08, § 88, 13 December 2011.

³⁴ France, Norway, Denmark, Sweden, and the Netherlands v. Turkey, nos 9940–9944/82, Commission decision of 6 December 1983, (1983) 26 YB COMM.EUR.JURIS. 1, DR 35, p. 143.

³⁵ Ireland v. the United Kingdom, nos 5310/71 and 5451/72, Commission decision of 1 October 1972, (1972) 15 YB 80; Ireland v. the United Kingdom, 18 January 1978, § 159, Series A no. 25.

³⁶ Georgia v. Russia (I) (dec.), no. 13255/07, § 40, 30 June 2009; Ireland v. the United Kingdom, 18 January 1978, § 159, Series A no. 25; Cyprus v. Turkey, no. 25781/94, Commission decision of 28 June 1996, (1996) 39 YB 130, DR 86, p. 104; Denmark v. Turkey (dec.), no. 34382/97, 8 June 1999; Greece v. the United Kingdom, no. 176/56, Commission decision of 2 June 1956, (1958-59) 2 YB 182; Denmark, Norway, Sweden, and the Netherlands v. Greece, nos 3321/67, 3322/67, 3323/67, and 3344/67, Commission decision of 24 January 1968, (1968) 11 YB 690, at pp. 726, 730, 768–70, Collection 25, p. 92; Denmark, Norway, and Sweden v. Greece, no. 4448/70, Commission decision of 16 July 1970, (1970) 13 YB 122, Collection 34, p. 70, at p. 73.

³⁷ Denmark v. Turkey (dec.), no. 34382/97, 8 June 1999.

³⁸ Georgia v. Russia (I) (dec.), no. 13255/07, § 40, 30 June 2009; France, Norway, Denmark, Sweden, and the Netherlands v. Turkey, nos 9940–9944/82, Commission decision of 6 December 1983, (1983) 26 YB COMM.EUR.JURIS. 1, DR 35, p. 143.

³⁹ Georgia v. Russia (I) [GC], no. 13255/07, § 123, 4 July 2014; Ireland v. the United Kingdom, 18 January 1978, § 122, Series A no. 25; Cyprus v. Turkey [GC], no. 25781/94, § 99, ECHR 2001-IV.

⁴⁰ Georgia v. Russia (I) [GC], no. 13255/07, § 123, 4 July 2014; Ireland v. the United Kingdom, 18 January 1978, § 124, 4 July 2014.

Furthermore, 'any action taken by the higher authority must be on a scale which is sufficient to put an end to the repetition of acts or to interrupt the pattern or system'.⁴¹ According to the Court, it is inconceivable that the higher authorities of a State should be, or at least should be entitled to be, unaware of the existence of such a practice. Furthermore, under the Convention those authorities are strictly liable for the conduct of their subordinates; they are under a duty to impose their will on subordinates and cannot shelter behind their inability to ensure that it is respected.⁴²

In order to exclude application of the rule concerning exhaustion of domestic remedies, the applicant State must do more than simply allege an administrative practice. It must show the existence of such a practice by means of 'substantial evidence'.⁴³ This does not, however, mean 'full proof'. That is because:

whether the existence of an administrative practice is established or not can only be determined after an examination of the merits. At the stage of admissibility prima facie evidence, while required, must also be considered as sufficient... There is prima facie evidence of an alleged administrative practice where the allegations concerning individual cases are sufficiently substantiated, considered as a whole and in the light of the submissions of both the applicant and the respondent Party. It is in this sense that the term 'substantial evidence' is to be understood.⁴⁴

In Georgia v. Russia, the respondent State complained that the application did not fulfil the requirements of Rule 46 of the Rules of Court, governing the contents of an inter-State application, because it was 'abstract (largely based on anonymous witness statements), [and] essentially private'.⁴⁵ The Court concluded that 'the content and scope of the application and the written and oral submission by the applicant Government are sufficiently clear to allow a judicial examination under the Convention'.⁴⁶ Specific regulations on the contents of an inter-State application are set out in the Rules of Court.⁴⁷ When there is an application under article 33, the Chamber assigned to the case designates one or more of its judges as Judge Rapporteur charged with preparing a report on admissibility once the written observations of the concerned States have been received.⁴⁸

It is possible to obtain a request for interim measures in an inter-State case. In March and June 2014, the Court issued interim measures with respect to applications filed by Ukraine against Russia.⁴⁹ The second order, which concerned the abduction of children, was lifted once the children were returned to safety.

⁴¹ Ibid.; France, Norway, Denmark, Sweden, and the Netherlands v. Turkey, nos. 9940–9944/82, Commission decision of 6 December 1983, (1983) 26 YB COMM.EUR.JURIS. 1, DR 35, p. 143.

⁴² Georgia v. Russia (I) [GC], no. 13255/07, § 123, 4 July 2014; Ireland v. the United Kingdom, 18 January 1978, § 159, Series A no. 25.

⁴³ Denmark, Norway, Sweden, and the Netherlands v. Greece, nos. 3321/67, 3322/67, 3323/67, and 3344/67, Commission decision of 24 January 1968, (1968) 11 YB 690, at p. 770, Collection 25, p. 92; Ireland v. the United Kingdom, nos. 5310/71 and 5451/72, Commission decision of 1 October 1972, (1972) 15 YB 80.

⁴⁴ France, Norway, Denmark, Sweden, and the Netherlands v. Turkey, nos. 9940–9944/82, Commission decision of 6 December 1983, (1983) 26 YB COMM.EUR.JURIS. 1, DR 35, p. 143, cited in Georgia v. Russia (I) (dec.), no. 13255/07, § 41, 30 June 2009.

⁴⁵ Georgia v. Russia (I) (dec.), no. 13255/07, §§ 15, 32, 30 June 2009.

⁴⁶ Ibid. § 34.

⁴⁷ Rules of Court, Rule 46.

⁴⁸ Ibid., Rule 48.

⁴⁹ Ukraine v. Russia (I) (interim measures), no. 20958/14, not yet reported; Ukraine v. Russia (II) (interim measures), no. 43800/14, not yet reported.

Further reading

Emmanuel Decaux, 'L'avenir du règlement des différends interétatiques au sein du Conseil de l'Europe', in Mahoney et al., Melanges Ryssdal, pp. 387–96.

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 458–66.

Menno Kamminga, Inter-State Accountability for Violations of Human Rights, Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 1992.

Henri Labayle, 'Article 24', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 571–8.

Aisling O'Sullivan and William Schabas, 'Of Politics and Poor Weather: How Ireland Decided to Sue the United Kingdom Under the European Convention on Human Rights', (2007) 2 Irish Yearbook of International Law 3.

Article 34. Individual applications/Requêtes individuelles

The Court may receive applications from any person, non-governmental organisation or group of individuals claiming to be the victim of a violation by one of the High Contracting Parties of the rights set forth in the Convention or the Protocols thereto. The High Contracting Parties undertake not to hinder in any way the effective exercise of this right.

La Cour peut être saisie d'une requête par toute personne physique, toute organisation non gouvernementale ou tout groupe de particuliers qui se prétend victime d'une violation par l'une des Hautes Parties contractantes des droits reconnus dans la Convention ou ses Protocoles. Les Hautes Parties contractantes s'engagent à n'entraver par aucune mesure l'exercice efficace de ce droit.

Introductory comments

Traditionally, individuals were not viewed as subjects of international law. International law governed the rights and obligations of States. The rights of the individual might be addressed in terms of international law but only to the extent that the State was acting to protect its own national from a violation perpetrated by a third State under what is usually known as 'diplomatic protection'.¹ For example, in one of the earliest cases at the Permanent Court of International Justice, Greece sued the United Kingdom because of the alleged refusal by the government of Palestine, then a League of Nations mandate of the United Kingdom, to recognize property rights of a Greek subject under agreements he had reached with the Ottoman authorities.² Today, if such a dispute were to arise in Europe it would probably lead to litigation before the European Court of Human Rights based upon articles 6 and 13 of the Convention and article 1 of Protocol No. 1. To a limited extent, there was a more direct recourse by individuals to the Permanent Court of International Justice with respect to enforcement of the minorities treaties. Individuals would complain to the Council of the League of Nations alleging a violation of their rights. The Council might then request an advisory opinion of the Permanent Court.³

The possibility of individual application was originally intended as an optional part of the system of protection, but has 'over the years become of high importance and is now a key component of the machinery for protecting the rights and freedoms set forth in the Convention'.⁴

Drafting of the provision

The initial draft European Convention on Human Rights prepared by the International Juridical Section of the European Movement was premised on the existence of two ¹ For a recent example, see Ahmadou Sadio Diallo (Republic of Guinea v. Democratic Republic of the Congo), Merits, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 2010, p. 639.

² The Mavromattis Palestine Concessions, PCIJ Series A, No. 2.

³ Minority Schools in Albania, PCIJ, Series A/B No. 64; Rights of Minorities in Upper Silesia (Minority Schools), PCIJ, Series A No. 15.

⁴ Mamatkulov and Abdurasulovic v. Turkey, nos 46827/99 and 46951/99, § 122, 6 February 2003.

institutions, a Commission, and a Court. According to article 7, '[a]ny State a party to this Convention and any natural or corporate person in the territory of any such State, shall have the right to petition the Council of Europe in respect of any infringement of Part I of this Convention'.⁵ Petitions were initially to be dealt with by the European Human Rights Commission 'and in proper cases by a European Court of Human Rights'. Access to the Court was available to the Commission, as well as to '[a]ny affected party, with the authorisation of the Commission which shall be entitled to withhold such authorisation without stating any reason'.⁶ The Draft Statute empowered the human rights court to indicate provisional measures if it considered that circumstances so required.⁷

The draft Convention adopted by the Consultative Assembly in September 1949 provided that 'any person, or corporate body, which claims to have been the victim of a violation of the Convention by one of the signatory States, may petition the [European] Commission [of Human Rights] in a request presented through legal channels'.⁸ Access to the Court was available to the Commission and to any State Party, but there was no such right for individuals.⁹

The Committee of Ministers referred the Consultative Assembly draft to a Committee of Experts. It met in February and March 1950. Provisions that were similar to those of the Assembly were adopted by a drafting sub-committee¹⁰ and included in the Report of the Committee. In addition to individuals and non-governmental organizations, the Committee added 'or any group of individuals'.¹¹ The Report noted that '[t]he Committee insisted that it was never proper for an individual to refer to the Court. The interests of individuals would always be defended either by the Commission . . . or by a State'.¹²

The Committee of Ministers decided to convene a Conference of Senior Officials, primarily in order to take decisions about the political issues that had been left unresolved by the Committee of Experts. Writing to the Foreign Ministers of Member States on 11 May 1950, the Secretary General noted that among the issues the Conference of Senior Officials should consider was the access of individuals to the Commission, something on which it pointed out the United Kingdom had reserved its position.¹³ The issue of the

⁵ Convention for the Collective Protection of Individual Rights and Democratic Liberties by the States, Members of the Council of Europe, and for the establishment of a European Court of Human Rights to ensure observance of the Convention, Doc. INF/5/E/R, I TP 296–303, at p. 298, art. 7(a).

⁶ Ibid., p. 300, art. 12(c).

⁷ Draft Statute of the European Court of Human Rights, INF/5/E/R, I TP 302–21, at p. 314.

⁸ Recommendation No. 38 to the Committee of Ministers adopted 8 September 1949 on the conclusion of the debates, Doc. AS (1) 108, II TP 274–83, at p. 278, art. 11.

⁹ Ibid., p. 280, arts 18, 19.

¹⁰ First part of the proposals of the Drafting Sub-Committee concerning Sections II and III put forward by MM. Perassi, Salen and Chaumont, Doc. A 806, III TP 212–17, at p. 214, arts. 11, 12.

¹¹ Preliminary Draft Convention for the Maintenance and Further Realisation of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 15 February 1950, Doc. A 833, III TP 236–46, arts 14, 15, 34; Appendix to the Report of the Committee of Experts on Human Rights: Draft Convention of Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 16 March 1950, Doc. C/WP 1 (50) 15 appendix, CM/WP 1 (50) 14 revised, A 925, IV TP 50–79, at pp. 68, 74, arts 16(2), 17(21), 37(41). See also Preliminary Draft of the Report to the Committee of Ministers, 24 February 1950, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50), A 847, III TP 246–79, at p. 270.

¹² Report to the Committee of Ministers submitted by the Committee of Experts Instructed to Draw Up a Draft Convention of Collective Guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Doc. CM/WP 1 (5) 15, A 924, IV TP 2–55, at p. 44. See also Preliminary Draft of the Report to the Committee of Ministers, 24 February 1950, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50), A 847, III TP 246–79, at p. 276.

¹³ Letter of 11 May 1950 from the Secretary General to the Foreign Ministers of Member States, Ref. D 281/6/50, IV TP 92–5.

'right of petition' of individuals was discussed in depth by the Conference of Senior Officials.¹⁴ Only Greece, the Netherlands, and the United Kingdom maintained any reservations on the point, 'fearing that the right of petition might easily lead to abuse, particularly in the interests of subversive propaganda'.¹⁵ The Conference of Senior Officials added a sentence to the provision governing access to the Commission: 'The High Contracting Parties undertake not to hinder in any way the effective exercise of this right.'¹⁶ It also introduced a new article stating explicitly that only States Parties and the Commission could bring a case before the Court.¹⁷

The Consultative Assembly's Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions convened in June to consider the report of the Conference of Senior Officials. It affirmed its attachment to granting individuals the right to seek a remedy. It indicated its dislike of the term 'right of petition', saying it was incorrect and noting that it was 'in reality, the right of individuals to seek remedy directly, in certain cases'.¹⁸ The Committee renewed its attachment to the draft proposed the previous year by the Assembly, underscoring the importance of the idea that the petition or application be a 'request presented through legal channels'.¹⁹

The 'right of petition' remained a controversial issue when the Committee of Ministers met in August 1950 with a view to adopting a final version of the text. Belgium proposed that the relevant provision simply be deleted from the Convention.²⁰ Greece was of a similar view, explaining that '[t]he possession of this right by ill-intentioned persons could rapidly degenerate into a dangerous arm that could be used against the freedoms which we seek to guarantee and against our established democratic systems'.²¹ The Netherlands reiterated its view that 'the right of petition might easily lead to abuse, particularly in the interest of subversive propaganda'.²² The United Kingdom announced that it had instructions to reconsider the provision on individual petition,²³ noting the 'grave danger, in the present state of the world, in the inclusion of such an Article'.²⁴ Instead of proposing deletion of the article, the United Kingdom suggested an optional clause

¹⁴ Minutes of the morning sitting [of 10 June 1950] (unreferenced document), IV TP 132-41, at pp. 132-7.

¹⁵ Text of the Report submitted by the Conference [of Senior Officials] to the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19, CM/WP 4 (50) 16 rev., A 1431, IV TP 242-73, at p. 252; Draft Report to the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 16, A 1426, IV TP 204-17, at p. 214; Minutes of the morning sitting [of 10 June 1950] (unreferenced document), IV TP 132-41, at pp. 132-7, at p. 136; Minutes of the afternoon sitting [of 12 June 1950], unreferenced document, IV TP 170-81, at p. 180.

¹⁶ Draft Convention annexed to the Report, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19 annex, CM/WP 4 (50) rev., A 1452, IV TP 274-95, at p. 284, art. 23.

¹⁷ Ibid., p. 290, art. 44; Text of the Report submitted by the Conference to the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19, CM/WP 4 (50) 16 rev., A 1431, IV TP 242-73, at p. 266.

¹⁸ Letter of 24 June 1950 from Sir David Maxwell Fyfe, Chairman of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions, to the Chairman of the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM (50) 29, V TP 32-41, at p. 36; Draft of a letter to the Chairman of the Committee of Ministers, Doc. AS/JA (2) 2, A 1579, V TP 10-15, at p. 12.

¹⁹ Minutes of the meeting [of 23 June 1950 of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions of the Consultative Assembly], Doc. AS/JA (2) PV I, A 1840, V TP 2-11, at p. 8.

²⁰ Revised text, Doc. CM 1 (50) 3 rev., A 1872, V TP 62-3.

²¹ Amendments proposed by the Greek Delegation, Doc. CM 1 (50) 4, A 1865, V TP 62-5.

²² Amendments proposed by the Netherlands Delegation, Doc. CM 1 (50) 5, A 1866, V TP 64-5.

²³ Report of the meeting [of 3 August 1950 of the Committee of Ministers], V TP 52-7, at p. 54.

²⁴ Amendments proposed by the United Kingdom Delegation, Doc. CM 1 (50) 6, A 1867, V TP 66-70, at p. 68.

similar to what had already been agreed to as a solution for including the European Court of Human Rights within the framework of the Convention.²⁵

In an attempt at rallying support for a right of petition that was not subject to an optional clause, Robert Schuman of France suggested adding the words 'being nationals of the High Contracting Parties'. He explained that the amendment would 'limit the right of petition to nationals of those states which actually signed the Convention'.²⁶ Seán MacBride, Ireland's Foreign Minister, said that '[a] Convention on Human Rights which did not grant any right of redress to individuals was not worth the paper it was written on. It was obvious that no Government would come before the Commission to accuse itself.' MacBride said he would accept Schuman's proposal and would appeal to the minority among his colleagues to do the same.²⁷ The proposal obtained nine votes in favour to four against.²⁸ The Ministers then considered the compromise suggested by the United Kingdom of a right of individual petition to the Commission but with an optional clause. Twelve ministers were in favour, with Ireland opposed. MacBride said he was prepared for his vote to be recorded as an abstention.²⁹

There was much dissatisfaction with this result when the Consultative Assembly convened later in August 1950 to consider the draft of the Committee of Ministers. David Maxwell Fyfe noted 'considerable and natural pessimism as to whether any State will make such a declaration and lay up trouble for itself'. He said it was felt the optional clause was 'a retrogressive step in that the general modern tendency of international law has been to emphasise the rights and duties of an individual as a subject of international law'.³⁰ Hermod Lannung described the optional clause as a 'most serious retrograde step'.³¹ Various amendments were proposed on the subject, notably the idea of an 'opt-out' clause.³² Eventually, the Consultative Assembly adopted a revised provision that recognized a right of petition but made it subject to a declaration by which States could withdraw jurisdiction for certain provisions of the Convention. The rights set out in articles 2, 3, 4, and 7 could never be excluded, however.³³

The Committee of Ministers ignored the recommendation of the Consultative Assembly. With a few minor modifications, the text adopted by the Committee of Ministers became article 25 of the Convention. It allowed a person, a non-governmental organization, or group of individuals claiming to be a victim of a violation to petition the European Commission. This was conditional upon a State Party making a declaration recognizing the right of petition. The right would become operational only when six States Parties had made the declaration.

²⁵ Ibid.

²⁶ Report of the meeting [of 7 August 1950 of the Committee of Ministers], V TP 110–21, at p. 112.

²⁷ Ibid.

²⁸ Ibid., p. 114.

²⁹ Ibid. Also Minutes of the meeting [of 7 August 1950 of the Committee of Ministers], V TP 108–11, at p. 110.

³⁰ Official report of the sixth sitting [of 14 August 1950 of the Consultative Assembly], VI TP 216–70, at p. 226.

³¹ Ibid., p. 236.

³² Draft Motion submitted by M. Teitgen, Revised Draft, Doc. AS/JA (2) 6 rev., A 2238, VI TP 10–15, at p. 12; Proposed by Mr Pernot, Doc. AS/JA (2) 8, Doc. A 2252, VI TP 20–1; Revised Draft [Proposed by M. Lannung], Doc. AS/JA (2) 11 rev., A 2367, VI TP 20–3; Doc. A 2290, VI TP 34–5; Doc. A 2299, VI TP 34–7.

³³ Text published in the Collected Documents of the Consultative Assembly, Doc. AS (2) 104, VI TP 198–229, at p. 214.

Some States made the declaration at the time of ratification of the Convention, in the early 1950s, while others waited decades. In the 1950 text, there was no corresponding right of access to the European Court of Human Rights. In the first place, another declaration recognizing the jurisdiction of the Court was required, in accordance with article 46. In the second place, cases could only be taken to the Court by the Commission itself or by a State Party and not by the individual applicant. If neither opted to bring the case to the Court, the enforcement of the Commission's findings was left to the Committee of Ministers.

By the 1990s, declarations accepting the individual petition mechanism before the Commission in accordance with article 25 had become a de facto condition for membership in the Council of Europe. Protocol No. 9 to the Convention revised the Convention so as to allow a right of individual application to the Court after the matter had been adjudicated by the European Commission of Human Rights.³⁴ The stage was set for the biggest reform of all. Protocol No. 11 abolished the Commission and with it the individual petition to that body. When Protocol No. 11 entered into force in 1998, individuals, non-governmental organizations, and groups of individuals were given direct recourse to the European Court of Human Rights in accordance with the new article 34.

Compared with article 25 of the 1950 text of the Convention, article 34 of the current text applies without the need for any additional or supplementary declaration by a State Party. Aside from this substantive change in the individual petition mechanism, there are some minor technical and linguistic adjustments. The individual, non-governmental organization, or group presents an 'application' rather than a 'petition', as was the case in the former system. The application is submitted to the Court and not the Secretary General of the Council of Europe. Finally, the provision refers to the 'Protocols' as well as the Convention itself, it being understood that States are bound only by the Protocols that they have ratified.³⁵

Analysis and interpretation

Article 34 is one of the 'the keystones in the machinery for the enforcement of the rights and freedoms set forth in the Convention'.³⁶ It provides 'one of the fundamental guarantees of the effectiveness of the Convention system of human rights protection'.³⁷ According to the Grand Chamber, '[i]n interpreting such a key provision, the Court must have regard to the special character of the Convention as a treaty for the collective enforcement of human rights and fundamental freedoms'.³⁸ The Court has explained that unlike 'international treaties of the classic kind', the Convention comprises more than mere reciprocal engagements between Contracting States. It creates, over and above a network of mutual, bilateral undertakings, objective obligations that, in the words of the Preamble, benefit from a 'collective enforcement'.³⁹

³⁴ Protocol No. 9 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, ETS 140.

³⁵ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 75.

³⁶ Klass and Others v. Germany, 6 September 1978, § 34, Series A no. 28.

³⁷ Mamatkulov and Askarov v. Turkey [GC], nos 46827/99 and 46951/99, § 100, ECHR 2005-I.

³⁸ Ibid.; Paladi v. Moldova [GC], no. 39806/05, § 84, 10 March 2009.

³⁹ Mamatkulov and Askarov v. Turkey [GC], nos 46827/99 and 46951/99, § 100, ECHR 2005-I; Ireland v. The United Kingdom, 18 January 1978, § 239, Series A no. 25. See also, with respect to the 1950 text of the Convention, Loizidou v. Turkey (Preliminary objections), 23 March 1995, § 70, Series A no. 310.

Individual, organization, or group

In order to avail of article 34 of the Convention, two conditions must be met: the applicant must be a 'person, non-governmental organisation or group of individuals' and must 'make out a case that he or she is the victim of a violation of the Convention'.⁴⁰ Recourse to the Court is not restricted in any way by such factors as nationality, residency, civil status, or legal capacity. For example, minors and persons deprived of legal capacity, who may be subject to special rules before the national courts in terms of their capacity to take legal proceedings, are in no way prevented from making an application to the European Court of Human Rights. The Court has not ruled out allowing a person who lacks legal capacity under domestic law to file an application pursuant to article 34. Noting that article 34 applies to 'any person', the Court has said that '[t]here is no obligation in general, or for persons lacking legal capacity in particular, to be represented at the initial stage of the proceedings'.⁴¹ An individual who alleges arbitrary detention but who later absconds and leaves the country is still entitled to pursue an application.⁴²

The notion of 'non-governmental organisations' is broad and flexible and is not subject to any formalities of registration. The Court has held that the removal of legal registration and of corporate status to a non-governmental organization has no consequence in terms of its ability to invoke article 34.⁴³

The Convention does not expressly refer to corporate bodies; these are subsumed under the rubric of 'non-governmental organisations'. On this basis, a corporation or similar entity has locus standi before the Court in accordance with article 34.⁴⁴ The Court is not particularly strict about the formalities of representation either, although the individual acting on behalf of a corporation will have to show some form of legal authorization.⁴⁵ Disregarding the legal personality of a company is only allowed exceptionally, for example when it cannot act through the organs set up by its own instruments of incorporation or through a bankruptcy trustee.⁴⁶ The Court will only lift the corporate veil in exceptional circumstances.⁴⁷ Luxembourg contested the locus standi of a shell company without assets or activities, insisting it did not fulfil the requirements of article 34. The Court noted that the company's existence had not been contested in the national proceedings and that it had been subject to a search in the lawyer's office where it had its head office.⁴⁸

⁴⁰ Vallianatos and Others v. Greece [GC], no. 29381/09, § 47, ECHR 2013.

⁴¹ Zehentner v. Austria, no. 20082/02, § 39, 16 July 2009.

⁴² Van der Tang v. Spain, 13 July 1995, § 53, Series A no. 321.

⁴³ Hyde Park and Others v. Moldova (no. 4), no. 18491/07, § 33, 7 April 2009; Hyde Park and Others v. Moldova (nos 5 and 6), nos 6991/08 and 15084/08, § 31, 14 September 2010; Christians against Racism and Fascism v. the United Kingdom, no. 8440/78, Commission decision of 16 July 1980, (1981) 24 YB 178, DR 21, p. 138.

⁴⁴ Agrotexim and Others v. Greece, 24 October 1995, § 66, Series A no. 330-A; Société Faugry Finance S.A. v. Luxembourg (dec.), no. 38788/97, 23 March 2000; Unédic v. France, no. 20153/04, §§ 48–59, 18 December 2008; Radio France and Others v. France (dec.), no. 53984/00, § 26, 23 September 2003.

⁴⁵ Nosov v. Russia (dec.), no. 30877/02, 20 October 2005.

⁴⁶ Capital Bank AD v. Bulgaria (dec.), no. 49429/99, 9 September 2004; Camberrow MMS AD v. Bulgaria (dec.), no. 50357/99, 1 April 2004; G.J. v. Luxembourg, no. 21156/93, § 23, 26 October 2000; Meltex Ltd and Movseyan v. Armenia, no. 32283/04, § 66, 17 June 2008; CDI Holding Aktiengesellschaft and Others v. Slovakia (dec.), no. 37398/97, 18 October 2001; Amat-G Ltd and Mebaghishvili v. Georgia, no. 2507/03, § 33, ECHR 2005-VIII).

⁴⁷ Agrotexim and Others v. Greece, 24 October 1995, § 66, Series A no. 330-A, citing Barcelona Traction, Light and Power Company, Limited, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1970, p. 3, at pp. 39 and 41, paras 56–58 and 66; Matrot S.A. and Others v. France (dec.), no. 43798/98, 3 February 2000.

⁴⁸ Société Faugry Finance S.A. v. Luxembourg (dec.), no. 38788/97, 23 March 2000.

Governmental bodies or public corporations under the strict control of a State are not entitled to bring an application under article 34 of the Convention.⁴⁹ The Court has explained that 'the idea behind this principle is to prevent a Contracting Party acting as both an applicant and a respondent party before the Court'.⁵⁰ Commercial corporations without public service mandates fall within the scope of non-governmental organizations as the term is meant by article 34, even if they are wholly owned by the State.⁵¹ In addition to the central organs of the State, governmental organizations, as opposed to non-governmental organizations, include decentralized authorities that exercise public functions, regardless of their degree of autonomy.⁵² Among such bodies are various municipal and territorial institutions,⁵³ as well as professional corporations that exercise 'des fonctions officielles... attribuées par la Constitution et par la loi'⁵⁴ and national railway companies under State control in a monopolistic situation.⁵⁵

Greece contested the locus standi of the Holy Monasteries. These are ancient institutions belonging generally within the sphere of the Orthodox Church, which itself has long-standing and profound connections, both legal and financial, with the government of the country. But the Court noted that the Holy Monasteries are 'ascetic religious institutions' that 'do not exercise governmental powers', holding them to be non-governmental organizations.⁵⁶ France challenged the non-governmental status of Radio France, the national television company, distinguishing the case from that of the Holy Monasteries. It noted that the existence of the company was governed by public law, that its mission was to broadcast 'dans l'intérêt général, des missions de service public', and that it was financed by public funds.⁵⁷ But the Court noted the independence of the institution, something expressly guaranteed in the enabling legislation as evidenced by the fact that only four of its twelve directors were government officials, and the lack of a monopoly over television broadcasting.⁵⁸

Victim status

A person, non-governmental organization, or group of individuals that files an application under article 34 must claim to be 'a victim' of a violation of the rights set forth in the Convention or its Protocols. To be a victim, the applicant must be directly affected by the impugned measure.⁵⁹ An individual applicant cannot undertake an ⁴⁹ Islamic Republic of Iran Shipping Lines v. Turkey, no. 40998/98, § 81, ECHR 2007-V.

⁵⁰ Ibid.

⁵¹ Österreichischer Rundfunk v. Austria, no. 35841/02, § 53, 7 December 2006; Islamic Republic of Iran Shipping Lines v. Turkey, no. 40998/98, §§ 80–81, ECHR 2007-V.

⁵² Radio France and Others v. France (dec.), no. 53984/00, § 26, 23 September 2009.

⁵³ Commune de Rothenthurm v. Switzerland, no. 13252/87, Commission decision of 14 December 1988, DR 59, p. 251; Section de commune d'Antilly v. France (dec.), no. 42129/98, 23 November 1999; The Province of Bari, Sorrentino, and Messini Nemagna v. Italy (dec.), no. 41877/98, 22 March 2001; Ayuntamiento de Mula v. Spain (dec.), no. 55346/00, 1 February 2001; Danderyds Kommun v. Sweden (dec.), no. 52559/99, 7 June 2001; Döjemealtı Belediyesi v. Turkey (dec.), no. 50108/06, 23 March 2010.

⁵⁴ Consejo General de Colejos Oficiales de Economista de España v. Spain, nos 26114/95 and 26455/95, Commission decision of 28 June 1995, DR 82-B, p. 150.

⁵⁵ RENFE v. Spain, no. 35216/97, Commission decision of 8 September 1997, DR 90-B, p. 179.

⁵⁶ The Holy Monasteries v. Greece, 9 December 1994, § 49, Series A no. 301-A.

⁵⁷ Radio France and Others v. France (dec.), no. 53984/00, § 24, 23 September 2009.

⁵⁸ Ibid., § 26.

⁵⁹ Vallianatos and Others v. Greece [GC], no. 29381/09, § 47, ECHR 2013; Micallef v. Malta [GC], no. 17056/06, § 44, ECHR 2009; Burden v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 13378/05, § 33, ECHR 2008;

actio popularis.⁶⁰ This is in distinction with the inter-State application authorized by article 33, whereby the State may act in order to enforce the European public order and not because it has any particular interest. The victim criterion 'is not to be applied in a rigid, mechanical and inflexible way'⁶¹ or with excessive formalism.⁶² The notion of 'victim' within the meaning of article 34 has an autonomous and independent meaning that does not depend upon concepts of national law such as the legal interest and the locus standi or standing.⁶³ In effect, 'the conditions governing individual applications are not necessarily the same as national criteria relating to locus standi. National rules in this respect may serve purposes different from those contemplated by Article 34 of the Convention and, whilst those purposes may sometimes be analogous, they need not always be so.'⁶⁴ According to the established case law of the Court, the existence of a violation of the Convention is sufficient for the applicant to be a victim without the need to demonstrate a prejudice.⁶⁵ Prejudice arises only in the context of article 41 concerning the determination of just satisfaction.

A dead person cannot file an application even through a legally authorized representative.⁶⁶ Exceptionally, the Court will allow the next-of-kin of persons who have died in certain circumstances to submit applications where issues under article 2 arise, but 'this is a particular situation governed by the nature of the violation alleged and considerations of the effective implementation of one of the most fundamental provisions in the Convention system'.⁶⁷ In authorizing next-of-kin applications, the Court has recognized spouses, children, and nephews, as well as unmarried partners.⁶⁸ Whether the applicant is the legal heir of the deceased person is without relevance.⁶⁹ In such cases, the application is Gorraiz Lizarraga and Others v. Spain, no. 62543/00, § 35, ECHR 2004-III; SARL du Parc d'Activités de Blotzheim v. France, no. 72377/01, § 20, 11 July 2006.

⁶⁰ Sejdić and Finci v. Bosnia and Herzegovina [GC], nos 27996/06 and 34836/06, § 28, ECHR 2009; La Ligue des Musulmans de Suisse v. Switzerland (dec.), no. 66274/09, 28 June 2011; Norris v. Ireland, 26 October 1988, § 31, Series A no. 142; Klass and Others v. Germany, 6 September 1978, § 33, Series A no. 28; The Georgian Labour Party v. Georgia (dec.), no. 9103/04, 22 May 2007; Burden v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 13378/05, § 33, ECHR 2008.

⁶¹ Micallef v. Malta [GC], no. 17056/06, § 45, ECHR 2009; Karner v. Austria, no. 40016/98, § 25, ECHR 2003-IX.

⁶² Gorraiz Lizarraga and Others v. Spain, no. 62543/00, § 38, ECHR 2004-III; Monnat v. Switzerland, no. 73604/01, §§ 30–33, ECHR 2006-X; Stukus and Others v. Poland, no. 12534/03, § 35, 1 April 2008; Zietal v. Poland, no. 64972/01, §§ 54–59, 12 May 2009.

⁶³ Sanles Sanles v. Spain (dec.), no. 48335/99, ECHR 2000-XI; Gorraiz Lizarraga and Others v. Spain, no. 62543/00, § 35, ECHR 2004-III; Tourkiki Enosi Xanthis and Others v. Greece, no. 26698/05, § 38, 27 March 2008.

⁶⁴ Scozzari and Giunta v. Italy [GC], nos 39221/98 and 41963/98, § 139, ECHR 2000-VIII; A.V. [Velikova] v. Bulgaria (dec.), no. 41488/98, 18 May 1999; Norris v. Ireland, 26 October 1988, § 31, Series A no. 142.

⁶⁵ Nada v. Switzerland [GC], no. 10593/08, § 128, ECHR 2012.

⁶⁶ Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, § 111, ECHR 2009; Fairfield and Others v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 24790/04, ECHR 2005-VI.

⁶⁷ Fairfield and Others v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 24790/04, ECHR 2005-VI.

⁶⁸ A.V. [Velikova] v. Bulgaria (dec.), no. 41488/98, 18 May 1999.

⁶⁹ Yaça v. Turkey, 2 September 1998, § 66, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-VI; Andreas and Pareskevoulou Andronicou and Yiolanda Constantinou v. Cyprus, no. 25052/94, Commission decision of 5 July 1995, (1995) 38 YB 120, DR 82, p. 102; Wolfgang v. Federal Republic of Germany, no. 11257/84, Commission decision of 6 October 1986, DR 49, p. 213; H. v. United Kingdom and Ireland, no. 9833/82, Commission decision of 7 March 1985, DR 42, p. 53. But see McCann, Farrell, and Savage v. the United Kingdom, no. 18984/91, Commission decision of 3 September 1993 and McCann and Others v. the United Kingdom, registered in the name of the living applicant,⁷⁰ although the Court will sometimes refer to the original victim as the applicant.⁷¹ In a case involving the killing of a Kurdish newspaper vendor, the Court admitted an application filed by his nephew, who had himself also been the victim of attacks that formed part of the case. Turkey contested the standing of the nephew to submit an application on behalf of his deceased uncle, claiming there was no proof that they were in fact related but that even if they were they were not 'direct relatives'. The delegate of the European Commission had said before the Court that 'if a relative wished to complain about a question as serious as the murder of one of his close relations, that ought to suffice to show that he felt personally concerned by the incident', a view that the Court endorsed.⁷² Because Turkey had not disputed whether the applicant was the victim's nephew before the Commission, the Court considered it was estopped from raising the issue.⁷³ In one very exceptional case involving a severely disabled victim of Roma ethnicity with no next-of-kin, the Court recognized the locus standi of a non-governmental organization to pursue a wrongful death application.⁷⁴

In disappearance cases, the Court may apply a presumption of death where there is no reliable information about the person over a period of several years.⁷⁵ It may also recognize close relatives of the disappeared person as victims of breaches of article 3 because of the anguish and distress that they suffer,⁷⁶ although there is no 'general principle that a family member of a "disappeared person" is thereby a victim of treatment contrary to Article 3'.⁷⁷ For a family member to be a victim of a disappearance, there must be special factors that give the suffering of the applicant 'a dimension and character distinct from the emotional distress which may be regarded as inevitably caused to relatives of a victim of a serious human rights violation'.⁷⁸ These will include the closeness of the relationship ('a certain weight will attach to the parent-child bond'), the extent to which the family member witnessed the abduction, and the involvement of the family member in attempts to learn about the whereabouts of the disappeared person. The Court has said that 'the essence of such a violation does not so much lie in the fact of the "disappearance" of the family member but rather concerns the authorities' reactions and 27 September 1995, § 1, Series A no. 324, where the applicants are identified as representatives of the estate of the deceased person.

⁷⁰ Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, § 111, ECHR 2009; Fairfield v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 24790/04, ECHR 2005-VI.

⁷¹ Asadbeyli and Others v. Azerbaijan, nos 3653/05, 14729/05, 20908/05, 26242/05, 36083/05, and 16519/06, § 106, 11 December 2012.

⁷² Yaşa v. Turkey, 2 September 1998, §§ 61-65, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-VI.

⁷³ Ibid., § 65.

⁷⁴ Centre for Legal Resources on behalf of Valentin Câmpeanu v. Romania [GC], no. 47848/08, § 114, 17 July 2014.

⁷⁵ Janowiec and Others v. Russia [GC], nos 55508/07 and 29520/09, § 154, ECHR 2013; Aslakhanova and Others v. Russia, nos 2944/06, 8300/07, 50184/07, 332/08, and 42509/10, §§ 103-115, 18 December 2012; Imakayeva v. Russia, no. 7615/02, § 155, ECHR 2006-XIII (extracts).

⁷⁶ Kurt v. Turkey, 25 May 1998, §§ 130-134, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-III; Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, § 112, ECHR 2009; Imakayeva v. Russia, no. 7615/02, ECHR 2006-XIII (extracts).

⁷⁷ Çakıcı v. Turkey [GC], no. 23657/94, § 98, ECHR 1999-IV.

⁷⁸ Sabançiyeva and Others v. Russia, no. 38450/05, § 113, ECHR 2013 (extracts); Tahsin Acar v. Turkey [GC], no. 26307/95, § 238, ECHR 2004-III.

attitudes to the situation when it is brought to their attention. It is especially in respect of the latter that a relative may claim directly to be a victim of the authorities' conduct.⁷⁹

As it does with right-to-life cases, in disappearance cases the Court will generally list the case as being in the name of the next of kin who is the actual applicant.⁸⁰ This has been criticized as being inconsistent with its view that enforced disappearance is a continuing violation of the Convention and thereby distinct from right-to-life cases where the death is admitted. Thus, 'for as long as the fate of the missing men is not known it would be contrary to the very nature of a particular continuing obligation if the Court were to accept that they could be presumed dead, in which case the relevant legal consequences would include their lack of standing before the Court'.⁸¹ The significance of recognizing the disappeared person as a full victim has been related to the right to be recognized as a person before the law, something set out explicitly in article 6 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and that is arguably implicit in the European Convention.⁸²

The death of an applicant during proceedings before the Court is treated differently to a case in which the applicant is dead before the filing of the application at the Court. In principle, the relatives of the applicant are generally entitled to pursue the matter.⁸³ The Court takes into account the statements of the applicant's heirs or close family members expressing the wish to continue the proceedings.⁸⁴ In article 6 cases, the Court has acknowledged the legitimate interest of the heirs in pursuing the application⁸⁵ 'or on the basis of the direct effect on the applicant's patrimonial rights'.⁸⁶ If there is no close relative or heir interested in continuing the case, the Court will usually strike it from the list.⁸⁷ However, article 37(1) of the Convention allows the Court to decline to strike out an application 'if respect for human rights . . . so requires'. It will continue with a case even in the absence of heirs or family members interested in the subject where there is some broader interest in a judgment being issued.

In deportation and expulsion cases, where an application may be based upon a real risk of a violation of articles 2 and 3 of the Convention, the fact that the actual threat is no longer present does not mean that the applicant is no longer a victim of a violation of the ⁷⁹ Çakıcı v. Turkey [GC], no. 23657/94, § 98, ECHR 1999-IV.

⁸⁰ Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, § 111, ECHR 2009.

⁸¹ Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, Concurring Opinion of Judge Ziemele, § 3, ECHR 2009.

⁸² Ibid., § 4.

⁸³ Dalban v. Romania [GC], no. 28114/95, § 39, ECHR 1999-VI; Raimondo v. Italy, 22 February 1994, § 2, Series A no. 281-A; Malhous v. the Czech Republic (dec.) [GC], no. 33071/96, ECHR 2000-XII; Stasileo v. Croatia, no. 12027/10, §§ 88–90, 10 July 2014.

⁸⁴ Janowiec and Others v. Russia, nos 55508/07 and 29520/09, §§ 57–58, 16 April 2012; Janowiec and Others v. Russia [GC], nos 55508/07 and 29520/09, §§ 98–101, ECHR 2013; Karner v. Austria, no. 40016/98, § 25, ECHR 2003-IX; Dalban v. Romania [GC], no. 28114/95, § 39, ECHR 1999-VI; Toteva v. Bulgaria, no. 42027/98, § 45, 19 May 2004; Muslu v. Turkey, no. 8006/02, §§ 13–14, 10 October 2006; Yakovenko v. Ukraine, no. 15825/06, § 65, 25 October 2007; Getiren v. Turkey, no. 10301/03, §§ 60–62, 22 July 2008.

⁸⁵ Micallef v. Malta [GC], no. 17056/06, § 48, ECHR 2009; Loyen and Others v. France, no. 55926/00, § 29, 29 April 2003.

⁸⁶ Micallef v. Malta [GC], no. 17056/06, § 48, ECHR 2009; Ressegatti v. Switzerland, no. 17671/02, § 29, 13 July 2006.

⁸⁷ Malhous v. the Czech Republic (dec.) [GC], no. 33071/96, ECHR 2000-XII; Scherer v. Switzerland, 25 March 1994, § 31, Series A no. 287; Öhlinger v. Austria, no. 21444/93, § 15, Commission report of 14 January 1997.

right to a remedy. Even if the substantive claim has become inadmissible, a grievance under article 13 cannot be excluded.⁸⁸

Although corporate bodies and non-governmental organizations are entitled to make applications under article 34, there are some circumstances where they cannot be victims because of the nature of the right. For example, it is difficult to conceive of a corporation being denied the right to marry, something that applies to 'men and women' pursuant to article 12. Nor can a corporation or association be a victim of a violation of article 3 of Protocol No. 1 to the extent that it is ineligible to stand for elected office.⁸⁹ On the other hand, corporations can obviously be victims of deprivation of property contrary to article 1 of Protocol No. 1, or of freedom of expression as enshrined in article 10 of the Convention. The Court has rejected the argument of some governments that an association or organization cannot be a victim of freedom of association.⁹⁰ Even if a corporation may be a victim of a violation, this does not automatically mean that its shareholders have the same status. For example, if the alleged violation concerns the length of judicial proceedings involving a corporation, one of its shareholders cannot also be a victim.⁹¹ Explaining the distinction between interests of the shareholder and those of the corporation, the Court noted that a wrong done to the latter may cause prejudice to the former but that this does not imply both are entitled to claim compensation. Citing the International Court of Justice in Barcelona Traction, the Court said:

Whenever a shareholder's interests are harmed by a measure directed at the company, it is up to the latter to take appropriate action. An act infringing only the company's rights does not involve responsibility towards the shareholders, even if their interests are affected. Such responsibility arises only if the act complained of is aimed at the rights of the shareholder as such . . . or if the company has been wound up.⁹²

Nevertheless, the sole owner of a company can claim to be a victim of damage suffered by the company because 'there is no risk of differences of opinion among shareholders or between shareholders and a board of directors as to the reality of infringements of the Convention rights or the most appropriate way of reacting to such infringements'.⁹³

An advocacy organization or association cannot itself be a victim under the Convention simply because the individuals on whose behalf it acts are direct victims.⁹⁴ An organization whose chief aim was to provide psychological and moral support to gays and lesbians

⁸⁸ M.A. v. Cyprus, no. 41872/10, §§ 118–119, 23 July 2013; I.M. v. France, no. 9152/09, §§ 94–95, 2 February 2012; Gebremedhin (Gaberamadhien) v. France, no. 25389/05, § 56, ECHR 2007-II. Similarly, with respect to article 8: De Souza Ribeiro v. France [GC], no. 22689/07, §§84–100, 13 December 2012; De Souza Ribeiro v. France, no. 22689/07, §§ 22–26, 30 June 2011.

⁸⁹ The Georgian Labour Party v. Georgia (dec.), no. 9103/04, 22 May 2007.

⁹⁰ Hyde Park and Others v. Moldova (nos 5 and 6), nos 6991/08 and 15084/08, § 32, 14 September 2010; Gypsy Council and Others v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 66336/01, 14 May 2002; Plattform 'Ärzte für das Leben' v. Austria, 21 June 1988, Series A no. 139; Christians against Racism and Fascism v. the United Kingdom, no. 8440/78, Commission decision of 16 July 1980, (1981) 24 YB 178, DR 21, p. 138.

⁹¹ F. Santos, Lda. and Fachadas v. Portugal (dec.), no. 49020/99, ECHR 2000-X.

⁹² Olczak v. Poland, no. 30417/96, § 59, 7 November 2002, citing Barcelona Traction, Light and Power Company, Limited, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1970, p. 3, at pp. 39 and 41, paras 56–58 and 66.

⁹³ Groppera Radio AG and Others v. Switzerland, 28 March 1990, § 49, Series A no. 173; Ankarçrona v. Sweden (dec.), no. 35178/97, 27 June 2000; Dyrwold v. Sweden, no. 12259/86, Commission decision of 7 September 1990; Glas Nadezhda EOOD and Anatoliy Elenkov v. Bulgaria, no. 14134/02, § 40, 11 October 2007; Nosov v. Russia (dec.), no. 30877/02, 20 October 2005.

⁹⁴ Conka and Others, la ligue des droits de l'homme v. Belgium (dec.), no. 51564/99, 13 March 2001; Grande Oriente d'Italia di Palazzo Giustiniani v. Italy (dec.), no. 35972/97, 21 October 1999.

could not claim to be a victim of denial of a right of same-sex couples to enter into civil union.⁹⁵ However, an association can be a victim if the violation of the Convention to which its members are subjected results in the departure of a significant number of them or a loss of its standing and prestige.⁹⁶ An association may also be a victim if the impugned measure can prevent the achievement of its objectives. There must be clear evidence of this, and more than mere conjecture. When a religious group argued that it would be victimized if a parliamentary report were tabled, the Court claimed this was speculative and denied victim status to the organization.⁹⁷ For the same reason, an Islamic organization in Switzerland was denied victim status to contest a constitutional amendment preventing the construction of minarets.⁹⁸ A member of an ethnic group who complains about racist remarks and expressions that allegedly debase the community to which he or she belongs may not have been targeted personally but is entitled to claim to be a victim because 'he could, however, have felt offended by the remarks concerning the ethnic group to which he belonged'.⁹⁹

There is a certain hierarchy in the way the Court assesses the status of victims. First and foremost are direct victims, that is, persons who are directly affected by the alleged infringement of rights protected by the Convention.¹⁰⁰ The organizer of a demonstration that does not take place may claim to be denied the right freedom of assembly.¹⁰¹ But a person who 'would have gone' to a demonstration if it had taken place cannot claim to be a victim of a breach of freedom of assembly. This would stretch the concept of a victim too far in that it would 'allow an indeterminate number of people to complain that their Article 11 rights had been violated'.¹⁰²

Exceptionally, a person who is indirectly affected by the violation may be an applicant under article 34.¹⁰³ For example, the Court has recognized victim status to the spouse of a woman who was forced to submit to a gynaecological examination¹⁰⁴ and to the nephew of a person who died in suspicious circumstances.¹⁰⁵ In right-to-life cases, close family members, such as parents, may be applicants before the Court because they are themselves 'indirect victims' of the breach of article 2. It is irrelevant whether legally they are deemed the heirs of the deceased person.¹⁰⁶ As a general rule, a corporate body cannot be an indirect victim of an infringement of the Convention.¹⁰⁷

⁹⁵ Vallianatos and Others v. Greece [GC], no. 29381/09, § 48, ECHR 2013.

⁹⁶ Grande Oriente d'Italia di Palazzo Giustiniani v. Italy, no. 35972/97, § 15, ECHR 2001-VIII.

⁹⁷ Fédération chrétienne des témoins de Jéhovah de France v. France (dec.), no. 53430/99, 6 November 2011.

⁹⁸ La Ligue des Musulmans de Suisse v. Switzerland (dec.), no. 66274/09, 28 June 2011.

⁹⁹ Aksu v. Turkey [GC], nos 4149/04 and 41029/04, §§ 50–54, ECHR 2012.

¹⁰⁰ Norris v. Ireland, 26 October 1988, § 31, Series A no. 142; Open Door and Dublin Well Woman v. Ireland, 29 October 1992, § 43, Series A no. 246-A; Otto-Preminger-Institut v. Austria, 20 September 1994, §§ 39–41, Series A no. 295-A; Tanrikulu and Others v. Turkey (dec.), no. 40150/98, 6 November 2001; SARL du Parc d'Activités de Blozheim v. France, no. 72377/01, § 20, 11 July 2006.

¹⁰¹ Patyi and Others v. Hungary, no. 5529/05, §§ 25–28, 7 October 2008.

¹⁰² Hyde Park and Others v. Moldova (nos 5 and 6), nos 6991/08 and 15084/08, § 32, 14 September 2010.

¹⁰³ Vatan v. Russia, no. 47978/99, § 48, 7 October 2004.

¹⁰⁴ Fidan v. Turkey (dec.), no. 24209/94, 29 February 2000.

¹⁰⁵ Yasa v. Turkey, 2 September 1998, §§ 61–66, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-VI.

¹⁰⁶ Ibid., § 66; A.V. v. Bulgaria (dec.), no. 41488/98, 18 May 1999; Keenan v. the United Kingdom, no. 27229/95, ECHR 2001-III; Paul and Audrey Edwards v. the United Kingdom, no. 46477/99, ECHR 2002-II; Koku v. Turkey, no. 27305/95, 31 May 2005; Opuz v. Turkey, no. 33401/02, ECHR 2009.

¹⁰⁷ La Ligue des Musulmans de Suisse v. Switzerland (dec.), no. 66274/09, 28 June 2011.

Finally, the Court has, 'very exceptionally', recognized a 'potential victim' status to persons likely to be affected by an alleged infringement of fundamental rights. It is reticent in this respect because:

the exercise of the right of individual petition could not be used to prevent a potential violation of the Convention: in theory the organs designated by Article 19 to ensure the observance of the engagements undertaken by the Contracting Parties in the Convention could not examine—or, if applicable, find—a violation other than a posteriori, once that violation had occurred. . . . It was only in highly exceptional circumstances that an applicant could nevertheless claim to be a victim of a violation of the Convention owing to the risk of a future violation.¹⁰⁸

An applicant who claims to be a 'potential victim' is required to provide 'reasonable and convincing evidence of the likelihood that a violation affecting him personally will occur; mere suspicion or conjecture is insufficient'.¹⁰⁹ For example, if a potential breach of the Convention would take place as a consequence of expulsion or deportation, the proceedings must have reached a stage where there is a real threat to the applicant, or when the expulsion or deportation has already taken place. This will normally be reached once a formal expulsion order has been issued.¹¹⁰

Potential victimization has been recognized in situations where an individual is obliged to change behaviour because of a threat of criminal prosecution based upon legislation that breaches the right to private life or that is discriminatory.¹¹¹ A potential applicant may also be someone belonging to a category of persons at risk of being directly subject to legislation alleged to be contrary to the Convention.¹¹² For example, French legislation prohibiting the wearing of a full-face veil in public presented individuals wishing to do so for religious reasons with a dilemma: 'either they comply with the ban and thus refrain from dressing in accordance with their approach to religion; or they refuse to comply and face prosecution'.¹¹³ As Judge Pinto de Albuquerque has explained, 'when a law or regulation confers a Convention right solely on one group of people based on an identifiable characteristic of that group, by implication depriving another group of people in the same or similar situation of the enjoyment of the said right without any objective justification, the Convention compliance of that law or regulation may be reviewed in ¹⁰⁸ Fédération chrétienne des témoins de Jéhovah de France v. France (dec.), no. 53430/99, 6 November 2011; Ada Rossi and Others v. Italy (dec.), nos 55185/08, 55483/08, 55516/08, 55519/08, 56010/08, 56278/08, 58420/08, and 58424/08, 16 December 2008; Noël Narvii Tauria and 18 Others v. France, no. 28204/95, Commission decision of 4 December 1995, (1995) 38 YB 155, DR 83, p. 112.

¹⁰⁹ Senator Lines GmbH v. Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, and the United Kingdom (dec.) [GC], no. 56672/00, ECHR 2004-IV; Segi and Gestoras Pro-Amnistia and Others v. Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, and the United Kingdom (dec.), nos 6422/02 and 9916/02, ECHR 2002-V.

¹¹⁰ Vijayanathan and Puspajah v. France, nos 17550/90 and 17825/91, § 46, 27 August 1992.

¹¹¹ Dudgeon v. the United Kingdom, 22 October 1981, §§ 40–41, Series A no. 45; Norris v. Ireland, 26 October 1988, § 29, Series A no. 142; Bowman v. the United Kingdom, 19 February 1998, § 29, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-I; Alviņ Taner Akçam v. Turkey, no. 27520/07, § 66, 25 October 2011; S.A.S. v. France [GC], no. 43835/11, § 57, 1 July 2014.

¹¹² Sejdić and Finci v. Bosnia and Herzegovina [GC], nos 27996/06 and 34836/06, § 29, ECHR 2009; Marckx v. Belgium, 13 June 1979, § 27, Series A no. 31; Johnston and Others v. Ireland, 18 December 1986, § 42, Series A no. 112; Open Door and Dublin Well Woman v. Ireland, 29 October 1992, §§ 43–44, Series A no. 246-A; S.L. v. Austria (dec.), no. 45330/99, 22 November 2001; Burden v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 13378/05, § 35, ECHR 2008.

¹¹³ S.A.S. v. France [GC], no. 43835/11, § 57, 1 July 2014.

abstracto by the Court on the basis of a complaint lodged by any member of the deprived group of people'.¹¹⁴ In some cases, owing to the secrecy of measures that are the object of an application, an individual may be unable to point to any specific or concrete measure affecting him or her.¹¹⁵ The Court has said that 'the effectiveness (l'effet utile) of the Convention implies in such circumstances some possibility of having access' to the Convention organs. If this were not so, the efficiency of the Convention's enforcement machinery would be materially weakened.¹¹⁶

The victim issue is relevant at all stages of the proceedings before the Court and may change in the course of the litigation.¹¹⁷ The fact that a decision or measure has been taken that is favourable to the applicant does not deprive him or her of victim status unless the authorities have acknowledged the violation and then provided redress.¹¹⁸ The issue of 'appropriate' and 'sufficient' redress will depend upon the circumstances.¹¹⁹ The amount of compensation that is offered is an important factor,¹²⁰ notably in cases of unreasonable delay during judicial proceedings.¹²¹ A person may no longer claim to be a victim of a violation of the right to a fair trial if the proceedings have resulted in an acquittal or were discontinued.¹²² However, if the sentence has begun before the acquittal and time was served in detention, the applicant may remain a victim.¹²³ A decision to acquit a person convicted after an allegedly unfair trial, where the final ruling was based on an issue quite distinct from the violation during the proceedings and did not even mention the earlier rulings, was deemed to be insufficient acknowledgment and unable to deprive the applicant of victim status.¹²⁴ In cases dealing with deportation or ¹¹⁴ Vallianatos and Others v. Greece [GC], nos 29381/09 and 32684/09, Partly Concurring, Partly Dissenting Opinion of Judge Pinto de Albuquerque, ECHR 2013.

¹¹⁵ Klass and Others v. Germany, 6 September 1978, § 35, Series A no. 28; Weber and Saravia v. Germany (dec.), no. 54934/00, § 78, ECHR 2006-XI; Association for European Integration and Human Rights and Ekimdzhiiev v. Bulgaria, no. 62540/00, §§ 58 to 60, 28 June 2007; Iliya Stefanov v. Bulgaria, no. 65755/01, § 49, 22 May 2008; Liberty and Others v. The United Kingdom, no. 58243/00, §§ 56–57, 1 July 2008; Iordachi and Others v. Moldova, no. 25198/02, §§ 30 to 35, 10 February 2009.

¹¹⁶ Klass and Others v. Germany, 6 September 1978, § 35, Series A no. 28.

¹¹⁷ Burdov v. Russia, no. 59498/00, § 30, ECHR 2002-III; Burdov v. Russia (no. 2), no. 33509/04, § 55, ECHR 2009.

¹¹⁸ Brumărescu v. Romania [GC], no. 28342/95, § 50, ECHR 1999-VII; Nada v. Switzerland [GC], no. 10593/08, § 129, ECHR 2012; Gäfgen v. Germany [GC], no. 22978/05, § 115, ECHR 2010; Association Ekin v. France (dec.), no. 39288/98, 18 January 2000; Amuur v. France, 25 June 1996, § 36, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-III; Eckle v. Germany, 15 July 1982, § 66, Series A no. 51; Dalban v. Romania [GC], no. 28114/95, § 44, ECHR 1999-VI; Scordino v. Italy (no. 1) [GC], no. 36813/97, §§ 179–180, ECHR 2006-V; Kurić and Others v. Slovenia [GC], no. 26828/06, § 259, ECHR 2012 (extracts); Kopylov v. Russia, no. 3933/04, § 150, 29 July 2010.

¹¹⁹ Gäfgen v. Germany [GC], no. 22978/05, § 116, ECHR 2010.

¹²⁰ Kurić and Others v. Slovenia [GC], no. 26828/06, § 261, ECHR 2012 (extracts); Normann v. Denmark (dec.), no. 44704/98, 14 June 2001; Scordino v. Italy (no. 1) [GC], no. 36813/97, § 202, ECHR 2006-V; Jensen and Rasmussen v. Denmark (dec.), no. 52620/99, 20 March 2003.

¹²¹ Stokić v. Serbia (dec.), no. 54689/12, 12 February 2013; Vidaković v. Serbia (dec.), 16231/07, § 29, 24 May 2011; Dubjakova v. Slovakia (dec.), no. 67299/01, 19 October 2004; Gäfgen v. Germany [GC], no. 22978/05, § 116, ECHR 2010.

¹²² Oleky v. Poland (dec.), no. 1379/06, 16 May 2009; Ustün v. Turkey, no. 37685/02, § 24, 10 May 2007; Sharomov v. Russia, no. 8927/02, § 36, 15 January 2009; Komyakov v. Russia (dec.), no. 7100/02, 8 January 2009; X v. the United Kingdom, no. 8083/77, Commission decision of 13 March 1980, DR 19, p. 223; Eğinlioğlu v. Turkey, no. 31312/96, Commission decision of 21 October 1998; Osmanov and Yuseinov v. Bulgaria (dec.), nos 54178/00 and 59901/00, 4 September 2003; Witkowski v. Poland (dec.), no. 53804/00, 3 February 2003; Bouglame v. Belgium (dec.), no. 16147/08, 2 March 2010.

¹²³ Arat v. Turkey, no. 10309/03, § 47, 10 November 2009.

¹²⁴ Constantinescu v. Romania, no. 28871/95, § 42, ECHR 2000-VIII.

extradition of non-nationals, regularization of an applicant's stay or removal of the threat of deportation or extradition has been deemed to be enough to bring victim status to an end.¹²⁵ Where a Romanian court deprived a minor of the right to leave the country, thereby infringing article 2 of Protocol No. 4, the European Court of Human Rights considered the subsequent reversal of the ruling to provide adequate redress and acknowledgement.¹²⁶ In double jeopardy cases, where article 4 of Protocol No. 7 is invoked, if there are two sets of proceedings but the authorities terminate or cancel one set of them and remove its effects, the Court may consider the applicant to have lost the status of a victim: 'Were it otherwise it would be impossible for the national authorities to remedy alleged violations of Article 4 of Protocol No. 7 at the domestic level and the concept of subsidiarity would lose much of its usefulness.'¹²⁷

Content of the application

An application must be submitted in writing and be signed by the applicant or the applicant's representative.¹²⁸ It must be submitted by mail, the postmark providing the submission date.¹²⁹ It appears that if it is submitted otherwise, by facsimile for example, the Registry will request that the applicant resubmit an application using the post, although the date the fax is received will be sufficient to interrupt the six-month time limit for the filing of an application that is imposed by article 35(1).¹³⁰

An application from a non-governmental organization must be signed by the authorized representative.¹³¹ If the applicant is represented, a power of attorney or similar written authorization must be provided,¹³² signed by the applicant.¹³³ Formalities are not too important here; what is at issue is clarifying the genuine intention of the alleged victim to submit the application.¹³⁴ The Court considers that it is 'essential for representatives to demonstrate that they have received specific and explicit instructions from the alleged victim(s) within the meaning of Article 34 of the Convention on whose behalf they purport to act'.¹³⁵ The date that this is received by the Court is not decisive for the purposes of the six-month delay. In other words, the legal representative can submit an application without the signed authorization, although it must be provided subsequently.¹³⁶

¹²⁵ Kurić and Others v. Slovenia [GC], no. 26828/06, § 261, ECHR 2012 (extracts); Pančenko v. Latvia (dec.), no. 40772/98, 28 October 1999; Yang Chun Jin alias Yang Xiaolin v. Hungary (striking out), no. 58073/00, §§ 20–23, 8 March 2001; Mikheyeva v. Latvia (dec.), no. 50029/99, 12 September 2002; Fjodorova and Others v. Latvia (dec.), no. 69405/01, 6 April 2006; Sisojeva and Others v. Latvia (striking out) [GC], no. 60654/00, §§ 102–104, ECHR 2007-I; Shevanava v. Latvia (striking out) [GC], no. 58822/00, §§ 48–50, 7 December 2007; Kafailova v. Latvia (striking out) [GC], no. 59643/00, §§ 52–54, 7 December 2007.

¹²⁶ D.J. and A.-K. R. v. Romania (dec.), no. 34175/05, § 74, 20 October 2009.

¹²⁷ Sergey Zolotukhin v. Russia [GC], no. 14939/03, § 115, ECHR 2009.

¹²⁸ Rules of Court, Rule 45(1). See also Practice Direction, Institution of Proceedings (Individual applications under article 34 of the Convention), 1 November 2003 and amended on 22 September 2008 and on 24 June 2009.

¹²⁹ Rules of Court, Rule 47(6).

¹³⁰ Post v. the Netherlands (dec.), no. 21727/08, 20 January 2009.

¹³¹ Rules of Court, Rule 45(2).

¹³² Ibid., Rule 45(3).

¹³³ For a contestation of the applicant's signature, see Aliiev v. Georgia, no. 522/04, §§ 44–50, 13 January 2009.

¹³⁴ Velikova v. Bulgaria, no. 41488/98, § 52, ECHR 2000-VI.

¹³⁵ Post v. the Netherlands (dec.), no. 21727/08, 20 January 2009.

¹³⁶ Fitzmartin and Others v. the United Kingdom (dec.), 34953/97, 21 January 2003; Post v. the Netherlands (dec.), no. 21727/08, 20 January 2009.

The application must provide a succinct statement of the alleged violation and the relevant arguments, as well as a brief explanation of the applicant's compliance with the admissibility criteria. Relevant documents are to be included with the application.¹³⁷ A form provided by the Court is to be used by individual applicants.¹³⁸ The application should be in one of the official languages of the Member States of the Council of Europe.¹³⁹

It has been clear from the outset of the Court's work that in the application process too much 'strictness would lead to unjust consequences' because 'the vast majority of "individual" petitions are received from laymen' who apply without the assistance of a lawyer.¹⁴⁰ Individual applicants must claim to be victim of 'a violation of the rights set forth in the Convention' but they are not required to specify the relevant provisions of the Convention or even the right that they are invoking. In any case, the Court can make its own determination of the relevant provisions. The complaint is characterized primarily by the facts that it alleges rather than by the legal grounds or arguments invoked by the applicant.¹⁴¹

At the time the application is made, the applicant may indicate a desire that his or her identity not be disclosed. Reasons must be provided justifying this departure from the normal rule of public access to information in proceedings before the Court. The President of the Chamber is empowered to authorize anonymity or grant it of his or her own motion.¹⁴²

Effective exercise of the right of application

The final words of article 34 refer to 'this right' in a manner that can only mean the submission of an application. There is a legal obligation upon States to respect the right of application to the Court, and 'not to hinder' its exercise 'in any way'. According to the Grand Chamber, this 'obligation set out in Article 34 in fine requires the Contracting States to refrain not only from exerting pressure on applicants, but also from any act or omission which, by destroying or removing the subject matter of an application, would make it pointless or otherwise prevent the Court from considering it under its normal procedure'.¹⁴³ The Court has described the purpose of the rule as being 'to ensure the effectiveness of the right of individual petition'.¹⁴⁴ Consequently, 'the intentions or reasons underlying the acts or omissions in question are of little relevance when assessing whether Article 34 of the Convention was complied with... What matters is whether the situation created as a result of the authorities' act or omission conforms to Article 34'.¹⁴⁵

¹³⁷ Rules of Court, Rule 47.

¹³⁸ Ibid., Rule 48.

¹³⁹ Ibid., Rule 34(2).

¹⁴⁰ Guzzardi v. Italy, 6 November 1980, § 61, Series A no. 39. Also Ringeisen v. Austria, 16 July 1971, § 92, Series A no. 13.

¹⁴¹ Guerra and Others v. Italy, 19 February 1998, § 44, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-I; Powell and Rayner v. the United Kingdom, 21 February 1990, § 29, Series A no. 172; Scoppola v. Italy (no. 2) [GC], no. 10249/03, § 54, 17 September 2009.

¹⁴² Rules of Court, Rule 47(3); Practice Direction, Requests for Anonymity (Rules 33 and 47 of the Rules of Court), 14 January 2010.

¹⁴³ Mamatkulov and Askarov v. Turkey [GC], nos 46827/99 and 46951/99, § 102, ECHR 2005-I.

¹⁴⁴ Paladi v. Moldova [GC], no. 39806/05, § 87, 10 March 2009.

¹⁴⁵ Ibid.

The right conferred by article 34 is procedural in nature and thereby distinguishable from the substantive rights set out under Section I of the Convention.¹⁴⁶ As a result, issues of admissibility are not engaged.¹⁴⁷ Probably for this reason, the Court usually describes an infringement of article 34 as 'a failure to comply with obligations',¹⁴⁸ although on occasion it speaks of 'violation'.¹⁴⁹ Some complaints about obstruction of communication with the Convention organs by a State party with respect to prisoners have been examined under article 8 rather than article 34.¹⁵⁰

The obligation set out in article 34 is completed by a distinct treaty, the European Agreement relating to Persons Participating in Proceedings of the European Court of Human Rights.¹⁵¹ It provides for such matters as immunity from suit with respect to the contents of applications and for unimpeded travel to and from the seat of the Court in Strasbourg. The Committee of Ministers has called upon all Member States to ratify the Convention.¹⁵²

According to the Court, applicants or potential applicants should be able to communicate freely with the Convention organs 'without being subjected to any form of pressure from the authorities to withdraw or modify their complaints'.¹⁵³ The expression 'any form of pressure' covers 'direct coercion and flagrant acts of intimidation of applicants or potential applicants or their families or legal representatives' as well as 'other improper indirect acts or contacts designed to dissuade or discourage them from pursuing a Convention remedy'.¹⁵⁴ Relevant circumstances in assessing this include 'the vulnerability of the complainant and his or her susceptibility to influence exerted by the authorities'.¹⁵⁵ In one case, the Court referred to the 'chilling effect' of a letter from the authorities to a lawyer engaged in an application.¹⁵⁶ Criminal or disciplinary proceedings and other forms of inquiry directed against lawyers have also been found not to comply ¹⁴⁶ Shamayev and Others v. Georgia and Russia, no. 36378/02, § 470, ECHR 2005-III; Paladi v. Moldova [GC], no. 39806/05, § 85, 10 March 2009.

¹⁴⁷ Ryabov v. Russia, no. 3896/04, § 56, 31 January 2008; Cooke v. Austria, no. 25878/94, § 46, 8 February 2000; Ergi v. Turkey, 28 July 1998, § 105, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-IV; Enukidze and Girguliani v. Georgia, no. 25091/07, § 295, 26 April 2011.

¹⁴⁸ McShane v. the United Kingdom, no. 43290/98, § 152, 28 May 2002; Colibaba v. Moldova, no. 29089/06, § 69, 23 October 2007; Ryabov v. Russia, no. 3896/04, § 65, 31 January 2008; Fedotova v. Russia, no. 73225/01, § 52, 13 April 2006.

¹⁴⁹ Iambor v. Romania (no. 1), no. 64536/01, § 217, 24 June 2008; Coteleş v. Romania, no. 38565/97, § 72, 3 June 2003; Oferia Plus SRL v. Moldova, no. 14385/04, § 156, 19 December 2006; Boicenco v. Moldova, no. 41088/05, § 158, 11 July 2006; Al-Saadoon and Mufdhi v. the United Kingdom, no. 61498/08, § 166, ECHR 2010 (extracts).

¹⁵⁰ Peers v. Greece, no. 28524/95, § 84, ECHR 2001-III; Kornakov v. Latvia, no. 61005/00, § 157, 15 June 2006.

¹⁵¹ ETS 161.

¹⁵² Resolution CM/Res(2010)25 on member States' duty to respect and protect the right of individual application to the Court.

¹⁵³ Petra v. Romania, 23 September 1998, § 43, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-VII.

¹⁵⁴ Ibid.

¹⁵⁵ Kurtz v. Turkey, 25 May 1998, §§ 159–160, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-III; Iambor v. Romania (no. 1), no. 64536/01, § 217, 24 June 2008; Aksoy v. Turkey, 18 December 1996, § 105, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-VI; Akdivar and Others v. Turkey, 16 September 1996, § 105, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-IV.

¹⁵⁶ Colibaba v. Moldova, no. 29089/06, § 68, 23 October 2007.

with article 34 of the Convention.¹⁵⁷ A denial of confidentiality of solicitor–client meetings was deemed contrary to article 34,¹⁵⁸ as was access to a lawyer.¹⁵⁹

The obligation is positive as well as negative, a dimension that is of particular importance to applicants who are in particularly vulnerable situations.¹⁶⁰ With respect to persons detained seeking to make a submission to the Court, the authorities are required to assist in obtaining relevant documents,¹⁶¹ to facilitate necessary medical examinations,¹⁶² and not to obstruct the actual filing of the submission.¹⁶³ Article 34 operates as a lex generalis with respect to article 38 whereby States are required to furnish ‘all necessary facilities’ for the investigation of a case.¹⁶⁴ Linking the two provisions, the Court has said that ‘it is of the utmost importance for the effective operation of the system of individual petition instituted under Article 34 of the Convention that States should furnish all necessary facilities to make possible a proper and effective examination of applications’.¹⁶⁵

Prisoners are in a special situation, dependent upon the cooperation of the authorities in order not only to communicate with the Court but also to obtain the relevant documents in support of their applications. In this respect, the Court has recalled Rule 47(1)(h) requiring that an application be supported by ‘copies of any relevant documents and in particular the decisions, whether judicial or not, relating to the object of the application’, noting that a failure to do so may result in its rejection. Consequently, ‘l’examen de la requête par la Cour pourrait être sérieusement entravé si, par manque de moyens, un requérant détenu n’était pas en mesure de fournir les copies susvisées’.¹⁶⁶ Nevertheless, The Court rejected a petition based on article 34 by an inmate of a Bulgarian penitentiary who could not post his petition to Strasbourg because he had no money for stamps and the authorities refused to assist. Despite this, however, the Court said he was able to file his application and obtain the necessary documents with the assistance of a non-governmental organization.¹⁶⁷

Legal aid

Legal aid for persons who submit applications to the Court in accordance with article 34 is available at the discretion of the President of the Chamber.¹⁶⁸ It is only granted if the President of the Chamber is satisfied that legal aid is necessary for the proper conduct of the case and that the applicant has insufficient means to cover all or part of the costs that are involved.¹⁶⁹

¹⁵⁷ McShane v. the United Kingdom, no. 43290/98, § 152, 28 May 2002; Kurt v. Turkey, 25 May 1998, §§ 159–165, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-III; Şarli v. Turkey, no. 24490/94, §§ 85–86, 22 May 2001; Ryabov v. Russia, no. 3896/04, §§ 53–65, 31 January 2008; Fedorova v. Russia, no. 73225/01, §§ 45–52, 13 April 2006.

¹⁵⁸ Oferta Plus SRL v. Moldova, no. 14385/04, § 156, 19 December 2006.

¹⁵⁹ Shukaturov v. Russia, no. 44009/05, §§ 138 et seq., ECHR 2008.

¹⁶⁰ Amirov v. Russia, no. 51857/13, § 65, 27 November 2014; Iulian Popescu v. Romania, no. 24999/04, § 33, 4 June 2013.

¹⁶¹ Naydyon v. Ukraine, no. 16474/03, § 68, 14 October 2010.

¹⁶² Boicenco v. Moldova, no. 41088/05, § 158, 11 July 2006.

¹⁶³ Nurmagomedov v. Russia, no. 30138/02, § 61, 7 June 2007.

¹⁶⁴ Bazorkina v. Russia, no. 69481/01, § 175, 27 July 2006.

¹⁶⁵ Ibid., § 171; Tanrikulu v. Turkey [GC], no. 23763/94, § 70, ECHR 1999-IV.

¹⁶⁶ Gagiu v. Romania, no. 63258/00, § 96, 24 February 2009.

¹⁶⁷ Dimcho Dimov v. Bulgaria, no. 57123/08, §§ 92–103, 16 December 2014.

¹⁶⁸ Rules of Court, Rule 100.

¹⁶⁹ Ibid., Rule 101.

Interim measures

Although the Convention and its Protocols do not make explicit provision for the issuance of interim measures, the Court is authorized to issue them in accordance with Rule 39 of the Rules of Court.¹⁷⁰ Interim measures 'play a vital role in avoiding irreversible situations that would prevent the Court from properly examining the application and, where appropriate, securing to the applicant the practical and effective benefit of the Convention rights asserted'.¹⁷¹ As the Court has explained,

The crucial significance of interim measures is further highlighted by the fact that the Court issues them, as a matter of principle, only in truly exceptional cases and on the basis of a rigorous examination of all the relevant circumstances. In most of these cases, the applicants face a genuine threat to life and limb, with the ensuing real risk of grave, irreversible harm in breach of the core provisions of the Convention. The vital role played by interim measures in the Convention system not only underpins their binding legal effect on the States concerned, as upheld by the established case-law, but also commands that the utmost importance be attached to the question of the States Parties' compliance with the Court's indications in that regard.¹⁷²

Interim measures allow the Court 'to carry out an effective examination of the application but also to ensure that the protection afforded to the applicant by the Convention is effective'.¹⁷³ They thereby facilitate supervision of the execution of a final judgment and enable the State to discharge its obligations.¹⁷⁴ They may be issued by the Chamber or, where appropriate, the President of the Section or a duty judge, either at the request of a party or 'other person concerned' or on their own motion.¹⁷⁵ An interim order may consist of any measure 'in the interests of the parties or of the proper conduct of the proceedings'.¹⁷⁶

For many years the issue was controversial, with a very close vote of the plenary Court in 1991 (ten judges to nine) holding that the authority of the European Commission of Human Rights to order binding interim measures could not be inferred from the text of the Convention.¹⁷⁷ Largely inspired by a judgment of the International Court of Justice determining interim measures to be inherent in the authority of a judicial body,¹⁷⁸ the European Court changed its position in 2003. In Mamatkulov and Askarov v. Turkey, it quite explicitly took into account 'general principles of international law and the view expressed on this subject by other international bodies since Cruz Varas and Others'.¹⁷⁹ There is today no doubt that interim measures are binding upon States and that a failure

¹⁷⁰ See also Practice Direction, Requests for Interim Measures (Rule 39 of the Rules of Court), 5 March 2003 and amended on 16 October 2009 and on 7 July 2011.

¹⁷¹ Al-Saadon and Mufdhi v. the United Kingdom, no. 61498/08, § 160, ECHR 2010 (extracts); Mamatkulov and Askarov v. Turkey [GC], nos 46827/99 and 46951/99, § 125, ECHR 2005-I; Paladi v. Moldova [GC], no. 39806/05, § 86, 10 March 2009; Savridin Dzburayev v. Russia, no. 71386/10, §§ 211–213, ECHR 2013 (extracts); Trabelsi v. Belgium, no. 140/10, §§ 144–150, 4 September 2014.

¹⁷² Kasymakhunov v. Russia, no. 296041/12, § 181, 14 November 2013.

¹⁷³ Mamatkulov and Askarov v. Turkey [GC], nos 46827/99 and 46951/99, § 125, ECHR 2005-I; Paladi v. Moldova [GC], no. 39806/05, § 86, 10 March 2009.

¹⁷⁴ Mamatkulov and Askarov v. Turkey [GC], nos 46827/99 and 46951/99, § 125, ECHR 2005-I; Paladi v. Moldova [GC], no. 39806/05, § 86, 10 March 2009.

¹⁷⁵ Rules of Court, Rule 39(1).

¹⁷⁶ Ibid.

¹⁷⁷ Cruz Varas and Others v. Sweden, 20 March 1991, §§ 102–103, Series A no. 201.

¹⁷⁸ LaGrand (Germany v. United States of America), Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 2001, p. 466, para. 109.

¹⁷⁹ Mamatkulov and Abdurasulovic v. Turkey, nos 46827/99 and 46951/99, § 110, 6 February 2003.

to implement them may result in a breach of article 34.¹⁸⁰ The Final Declaration of the High Level Conference on the Future of the Court, held in İzmir on 26–27 April 2011, reaffirmed the requirement that States Parties comply with interim measures indications:

[The Conference] stresses the importance of States Parties providing national remedies, where necessary with suspensive effect, which operate effectively and fairly and provide a proper and timely examination of the issue of risk in accordance with the Convention and in light of the Court's case law; and, while noting that they may challenge interim measures before the Court, reiterates the requirement for States Parties to comply with them.

Nevertheless, some governments continue to defy the Court's indication of interim measures. In 2013, Russia contended that 'the legally binding force of the interim measure issued under Rule 39 of the Rules of Court may not be drawn from Article 34 of the Convention or "from any other source"'. Moreover, it said that the Rules of Court and accordingly the interim measure applied did not have a binding force on the State Party.¹⁸¹ Also in 2013, Belgium extradited an alleged terrorist to the United States despite an interim measure from the Court. Four times Belgium had attempted to convince the Court to lift the measure, with no success. In defence of its actions it claimed that the Court ought to have realized that the application was not well founded. In addition, Belgium said it felt obliged to honour its treaty obligations with the United States.¹⁸² In 2008, the United Kingdom did not comply with interim measures of the Court when it transferred two detainees to the Iraqi authorities, although there was a threat that they would be subject to capital punishment. 'An indication under Rule 39 could not require a Contracting State to violate the law and sovereignty of a non-Contracting State', the United Kingdom claimed, insisting that it was required to make the transfer under Iraqi law. It said the case was 'exceptional' because the facts arose outside of its own territory, noting that the United Kingdom government 'were proud of their long history of cooperation with the Court and their compliance with previous Rule 39 indications. They had failed to comply with the indication in this case only because there was an objective impediment preventing compliance.'¹⁸³

The Court may find that article 34 is infringed if a State fails 'to take all steps which could reasonably have been taken in order to comply with the interim measure indicated by the Court'.¹⁸⁴ In its examination of an alleged breach of article 34, the Court does not reconsider the correctness of its decision on interim measures.¹⁸⁵ In the practice of the Court, interim measures are indicated only in limited spheres. An order will be made only if there is an imminent risk of irreparable damage. Interim measures usually concern the right to life, the right not to be subjected to torture or inhuman treatment and, more exceptionally, the right to respect for private and family life.¹⁸⁶ By their very nature, ¹⁸⁰ Paladi v. Moldova [GC], no. 39806/05, § 85, 10 March 2009.

¹⁸¹ Amirov v. Russia, no. 51857/13, § 62, 27 November 2014.

¹⁸² Trabelsi v. Belgium, no. 140/10, §§ 142–143, 4 September 2014.

¹⁸³ Al-Saadoon and Mufdhi v. the United Kingdom, no. 61498/08, § 155, ECHR 2010 (extracts).

¹⁸⁴ Paladi v. Moldova [GC], no. 39806/05, § 88, 10 March 2009; Al-Saadoon and Mufdhi v. the United Kingdom, no. 61498/08, § 161, ECHR 2010 (extracts).

¹⁸⁵ Paladi v. Moldova [GC], no. 39806/05, § 92, 10 March 2009; Al-Saadoon and Mufdhi v. the United Kingdom, no. 61498/08, § 161, ECHR 2010 (extracts).

¹⁸⁶ Al-Saadoon and Mufdhi v. the United Kingdom, no. 61498/08, § 160, ECHR 2010 (extracts); Mamatkulov and Askarov v. Turkey [GC], nos 46827/99 and 46951/99, § 104, ECHR 2005-I; Paladi v. Moldova [GC], no. 39806/05, § 86, 10 March 2009.

interim measures are ordered on the basis of a plausible assertion of a risk of irreparable damage. Later, as evidence is produced in the course of the proceedings, this may prove not to correspond to the reality. But '[i]t is precisely for the purpose of preserving the Court's ability to render such a judgment after an effective examination of the complaint that such measures are indicated'.¹⁸⁷ If subsequently it becomes evident that the interim measure may not have been required, this fact does not absolve the State for its failure to respect the order and thereby fulfil its obligations under article 34.¹⁸⁸ The respondent State has the onus to show compliance with the interim measures order or to explain 'that there was an objective impediment which prevented compliance and that the Government took all reasonable steps to remove the impediment and to keep the Court informed about the situation'.¹⁸⁹ The State is certainly not entitled to substitute its own judgment for that of the Court as to the legitimacy of the measures, or to decide on how and when they are to be complied with. A State that considers it has materials that justify cancelling the interim measure is to inform the Court accordingly.¹⁹⁰

Declarations

When it ratified the Convention, Monaco made a declaration stating that it 'rules out any implication of its international responsibility with regard to Article 34 of the Convention, concerning any act or any decision, any fact or event prior to the entry into force of the Convention and its Protocols in respect of the Principality'.¹⁹¹

Further reading

Ronny Abraham, 'Article 25', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 579–90.

Ledi Bianku, 'For Whom the Alarm Bells Ring?', (2012) 1 Cyprus Human Rights Law Review 42.

Clara Burbano-Herrera and Yves Haeck, 'Letting States off the Hook? The Paradox of the Legal Consequences following State Non-compliance with Provisional Measures in the Inter-American and European Human Rights Systems', [2010] Netherlands Quarterly of Human Rights 332.

Gérard Cohen-Jonathan, 'De l'effet juridique des "mesures provisoires" dans certaines circonstances et de l'efficacité du droit de recours individuels', [1991] Revue universelle des droits de l'homme 205.

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 467–94.

Yves Haeck, Clara Burbano Herrera and Leo Zwaak, 'Strasbourg Takes Away any Remaining Doubts and Broadens its Pan-European Protection: Non-compliance with a Provisional Measure Automatically Leads to a Violation of the Right of Individual Application... or Doesn't It?', (2008) 4 European Constitutional Law Review 41.

Yves Haeck, Clara Burbano-Herrera, and Leo Zwaak, 'Strasbourg's Interim Measures Under Fire: Does the Rising Number of State Incompliances with Interim Measures Pose a Threat to the European Court of Human Rights?', (2008) 4 European Constitutional Law Review 41.

¹⁸⁷ Paladi v. Moldova [GC], no. 39806/05, § 89, 10 March 2009.

¹⁸⁸ Salakhov and Islyamova v. Ukraine, no. 28005/08, § 223, 14 March 2013; Paladi v. Moldova [GC], no. 39806/05, § 89, 10 March 2009.

¹⁸⁹ Paladi v. Moldova [GC], no. 39806/05, § 92, 10 March 2009.

¹⁹⁰ Ibid., § 90; Olaechea Cabuas v. Spain, no. 24668/03, § 70, ECHR 2006-X; Tanrıku v. Turkey [GC], no. 23763/94, § 131, ECHR 1999-IV; Orhan v. Turkey, no. 25656/94, § 409, ECHR 2002; Kasymakhunov v. Russia, no. 29604/12, § 182, 14 November 2013.

¹⁹¹ (2005) 38 YB 8.

- Yves Haeck, Clara Burbano-Herrera, and Leo Zwaak, 'Strasbourg's Interim Measures Under Fire: Does the Rising Number of State Incompliances with Interim Measures Pose a Threat to the European Court of Human Rights?', (2011) 11 European Yearbook on Human Rights 1.
- V. Harby, 'The Changing Nature of Interim Measures before the European Court of Human Rights', (2010) 16 EHRLR 80.
- Henrik Jorem, 'Protecting Human Rights in Cases of Urgency: Interim Measures and the Right of Individual Application under Article 34 ECHR', (2012) 30 Nordic Journal of Human Rights 404.
- Helen Keller and C. Marti, 'Interim Measures Compared: Use of Interim Measures by the UN Human Rights Committee and the European Court of Human Rights', (2013) 73 Heidelberg Journal of International Law 2013.
- Astrid Kjeldgaard-Pedersen, 'The Evolution of the Right of Individuals to Seise the European Court of Human Rights', (2010) 12 Journal of the History of International Law 267.
- Philip Leach, Taking a Case to the European Court of Human Rights, London: Blackstone, 2001.
- George Letsas, 'International Human Rights and the Binding Force of Interim Measures', (2003) 5 EHRLR 527.
- R. St J. MacDonald, 'Interim Measures in International Law, with Special Reference to the European System for the Protection of Human Rights', (1992) 52 Zeitschrift für ausländisches öffentliches Recht und Völkerrecht 703.
- Alastair Mowbray, 'A New Strasbourg Approach to the Legal Consequences of Interim Measures', (2005) 5 HRLR 377.
- Christian J. Tams, 'Interim Orders by the European Court of Human Rights: Comments on Mamatkulov and Abdurasulovic v. Turkey', (2003) 63 Zeitschrift für ausländisches öffentliches Recht und Völkerrecht 681.
- N. Vajić, 'Interim Measures and the Mamatkulov Judgement of the European Court of Human Rights', in M. Kohen, ed., Liber Amicorum Lucius Caflisch, Leiden: Brill, 2007, pp. 601–22.
- Leo Zwaak, 'The Procedure before the European Court of Human Rights', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 110–20.

Article 35. Admissibility criteria/Conditions de recevabilité

1. The Court may only deal with the matter after all domestic remedies have been exhausted, according to the generally recognised rules of international law, and within a period of six months¹ from the date on which the final decision was taken.
 2. The Court shall not deal with any application submitted under Article 34 that
 - a) is anonymous; or
 - b) is substantially the same as a matter that has already been examined by the Court or has already been submitted to another procedure of international investigation or settlement and contains no relevant new information.
 3. The Court shall declare inadmissible any individual application submitted under Article 34 if it considers that:
 - a) the application is incompatible with the provisions of the Convention or the Protocols thereto, manifestly ill-founded, or an abuse of the right of individual application; or
 - b) the applicant has not suffered a significant disadvantage, unless respect for human rights as defined in the Convention and the Protocols thereto requires an examination of the application on the merits and provided that no case may be rejected on this ground which has not been duly considered by a domestic tribunal.²
 4. The Court shall reject any application which it considers inadmissible under this Article. It may do so at any stage of the proceedings.
1. La Cour ne peut être saisie qu'après l'épuisement des voies de recours internes, tel qu'il est entendu selon les principes de droit international généralement reconnus, et dans un délai de six mois à partir de la date de la décision interne définitive.
 2. La Cour ne retient aucune requête individuelle introduite en application de l'article 34, lorsque
 - a) elle est anonyme; ou
 - b) elle est essentiellement la même qu'une requête précédemment examinée par la Cour ou déjà soumise à une autre instance internationale d'enquête ou de règlement, et si elle ne contient pas de faits nouveaux.
 3. La Cour déclare irrecevable toute requête individuelle introduite en application de l'article 34 lorsqu'elle estime:
 - a) que la requête est incompatible avec les dispositions de la Convention ou de ses Protocoles, manifestement mal fondée ou abusive; ou
 - b) que le requérant n'a subi aucun préjudice important, sauf si le respect des droits de l'homme garantis par la Convention et ses Protocoles exige un examen de la requête au fond et à condition de ne rejeter pour ce motif aucune affaire qui n'a pas été dûment examinée par un tribunal interne.
 4. La Cour rejette toute requête qu'elle considère comme irrecevable par application du présent article. Elle peut procéder ainsi à tout stade de la procédure.

¹ The words 'within a period of six months' are changed to 'within a period of four months', pursuant to article 4 of Protocol No. 15 amending the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, ETS 213, not yet in force.

² The words 'and provided that no case may be rejected on this ground which has not been duly considered by a domestic tribunal' are deleted pursuant to article 5 of Protocol No. 15, ibid., not yet in force.

Introductory comments

When the Convention organs were being first conceived, in the Consultative Assembly of the Council of Europe in August 1949, one of the architects of the European Convention on Human Rights, Pierre-Henri Teitgen, signalled the need for the enforcement mechanisms to have 'a kind of barrier—a practical necessity well known to all jurists—which would weed out frivolous or mischievous petitions'.³ David Maxwell Fyfe spoke of the proposed European Commission of Human Rights acting as 'a sieve or filter to stop the Court from being flooded out by numerous petitions for vexatious reference to the Court. It will be for the Commission to say whether a case shall go to the Court. There is, therefore, a good answer to the criticism that the Court will be inundated with frivolous litigation'.⁴ It is perhaps a little harsh to characterize the applications under the Convention with such words, even if many of them may be wide of the mark in a legal sense, perhaps because they have been prepared by victims who were well intentioned and genuinely aggrieved but not fully informed about the law. The lack of formalism in the requirements for formulation of an individual petition under article 34 has been explained by the Court's desire to encourage applications. At the same time, the requirement of exhaustion of domestic remedies in article 35 makes it highly probable that professionals have been involved in the case as it proceeds through the national courts prior to any submission to Strasbourg.

The vast majority of applications to the Convention organs have been and continue to be declared inadmissible. Some of the criteria reflect general principles of law such as the requirement that an application not be substantially the same as a matter that has already been examined by the Court or one that is also pending before another adjudicative body, and that domestic remedies have been exhausted. Others are more particular to the European human rights system, such as the rule by which the application must be filed within six months of the decision by which the victim has exhausted the domestic remedies.

Drafting of the provision

The initial draft European Convention on Human Rights was prepared by the International Juridical Section of the European Movement provided for the right of any natural or corporate person in the territory of a State party to petition the Council of Europe in respect of an infringement of fundamental rights. Such petitions were not to be considered 'until the internal juridical processes of the State concerned have been exhausted, provided that these function without unreasonable delay'.⁵ The Draft Statute that was annexed to the Convention did not contemplate any particular admissibility phase as part of the proceedings.

The draft report of the Legal Committee, prepared by Pierre-Henri Teitgen, contained the following proposal for inclusion in the Convention: 'After all other means of redress

³ Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 19 August 1949], I TP 38–154, at p. 48.

⁴ Ibid., p. 112.

⁵ Convention for the Collective Protection of Individual Rights and Democratic Liberties by the States, Members of the Council of Europe, and for the establishment of a European Court of Human Rights to ensure observance of the Convention, Doc. INF/5/E/R, I TP 296–303, at p. 298, art. 7(c).

within a State have been tried, any person, or corporate body, which claims to have been a victim of a violation of the Convention by one of the signatory States may petition the Commission in a request presented through legal channels.⁶ The accompanying explanatory memorandum said:

The Commission shall not deal with an individual complaint until after the plaintiff has exhausted 'all other means of redress within a State'. Long practice in international procedure has defined the meaning of this expression as being resort to the ordinary legal channels to the exclusion, for example, of a request for retrial of the case.⁷

The draft provision and the explanatory memorandum he proposed were adopted by the Committee.⁸ Presenting the Committee's Report to the plenary Consultative Assembly, Teitgen explained:

The Commission would have set aside all complaints which it considered to be irreceivable [sic] and obviously ill-founded, and would investigate the serious complaints. If it did not, by its own means, manage to solve the case, it would transmit the dossier to a court which, acting as a court of second instance, would pronounce judgment according to judicial procedure... We have added that the Commission, which is responsible in the first place for the procedure of guarantee, could not deal with a complaint by the victim until the plaintiff has exhausted all other means of redress within a State. This goes without saying.⁹

After some debate, the Consultative Assembly adopted the following provisions:

Article 12

After all other means of redress within a State have been tried, any person or corporate body, which claims to have been the victim of a violation of the Convention by one of the signatory States, may petition the Commission in a request presented through legal channels.

Article 14

The Commission shall reject petitions which are irregular or manifestly ill-founded.¹⁰

The Committee of Ministers referred the draft convention adopted by the Consultative Assembly to a Committee of Experts. In preparation for that body, the Secretariat of the Council of Europe assembled a review of the notion of exhaustion of domestic remedies.¹¹ The United Kingdom submitted a document it had prepared in the context of the drafting of the international covenant by the United Nations Commission on Human Rights:

The provision regarding the enforcement of the Covenant should be confined to complaints laid by Contracting States. His Majesty's Government do not consider that due attention has been paid to the practical difficulties to which the admission of individual petition would give rise. Thus it would be necessary to elaborate rules regarding the form and content of such petitions; to determine what would happen with regard to petitions submitted anonymously or under a nom de plume; to make ⁶ Report presented by Mr P.H. Teitgen, 5 September 1949, Doc. A 290, I TP 192-213, at p. 210, art. 12.

⁷ Ibid., p. 204.

⁸ Ibid., p. 198. Also Report [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions], 5 September 1949, Doc. AS (1) 77, I TP 216-39.

⁹ Report of the Sirting [of the Consultative Assembly, 7 September 1949], I TP 250-95, at pp. 284, 288.

¹⁰ Recommendation No. 38 to the Committee of Ministers adopted 8 September 1949 on the conclusion of the debates, Doc. AS (1) 108, II TP 274-83.

¹¹ Documents assembled by the Secretary General relating to the rule on the exhaustion of domestic remedies as known in general public international law in the context of the procedure known as diplomatic protection of nationals abroad, Doc. B 27, III TP 38-74.

clear that no immunity could be claimed by petitioners who disclosed State secrets, encouraged the overthrow of a government by force or uttered a malicious libel about an individual; and to prevent the submission of frivolous or malicious complaints. Constitutional problems of some complexity would be raised by petitions which appealed from the decision of the highest tribunal of a State. And above all, it would be likely to overburden the machinery established for the enforcement of the Covenant with trivial matters to the prejudice of important issues.¹²

The Committee of Experts was also presented with an amendment by the Norwegian representative: 'Before appealing to the Commission, all normal forms of redress must have been tried, in accordance with the general principles of international law. The Commission will itself decide whether it has competence to consider the case.'¹³ The French representative proposed an amendment: 'The Commission will reject petitions which it considers to be irregular, under the provisions of Articles 11 and 12 and those which it considers to be manifestly unfounded.'¹⁴ The two amendments were combined by the Drafting Sub-Committee of the Committee of Experts during its February meeting.¹⁵ At the conclusion of the February meeting, the Committee of Experts adopted the following texts:

Article 16

The Commission may only be petitioned after all legal remedies within a State have been exhausted.

Article 17

The Commission shall reject any application which it considers irregular under the provisions of Articles 14 [inter-State petition], 15 [individual petition] and 16, and those which it considers to be manifestly ill-founded.¹⁶

The accompanying commentary noted:

With regard to the fear expressed by the Assembly concerning the large number of petitions which would be referred to the Commission, the Committee was of the opinion that the majority of these petitions would be irregular or manifestly ill-founded and that the Commission might easily make provision on its Rules of procedure to dispose of such affaires without needless less [sic] of time.¹⁷

When it met for its second session in March 1950, the Committee of Experts made minor changes to the two provisions. Article 16 was completed with the phrase 'according to the generally recognised rules of international law'. In article 17, the word 'irregular' was replaced by 'inadmissible'.¹⁸ This was explained in the commentary:

The Committee has added to the text of the Assembly draft the words 'according to the generally recognised rules of international law' to indicate that, in order to decide whether all domestic legal ¹² Comments of Governments on the draft International Covenant on Human Rights and Measures of Implementation [UN Doc. E/CN.4/353/Add.1-3], Doc. A 770, III TP 156-79, at p. 172.

¹³ Amendments to Article 12 of the Recommendation No. 38 of the Consultative Assembly presented by Mr Roed (Norway), 4 February 1950, Doc. A 789.

¹⁴ Amendment to Article 14 of Recommendation No. 38 of the Consultative Assembly proposed by Mr Chaumont (France), 4 February 1950, Doc. A 793.

¹⁵ Proposals of the Drafting Sub-Committee concerning Sections II and III, 6 February 1950, Doc. A 866.

¹⁶ Preliminary Draft Convention for the Maintenance and Further Realisation of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 15 February 1950, Doc. A 833, III TP 236-46, at p. 242.

¹⁷ Preliminary draft of the Report to the Committee of Ministers, 24 February 1950, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 1, A 847, III TP 246-79, at pp. 272-4.

¹⁸ New text suggested for Sections II, III, and IV, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 4, A 917, III TP 294-302, at pp. 296-8.

remedies had been exhausted, it would be necessary to take into account the jurisprudence established in this respect, according to which cases where national tribunals improperly delay taking their decisions are considered as an exhaustion of legal remedies.¹⁹

It then developed a much more elaborate version of the second of the two articles:

1. The Commission shall not consider any application submitted under Article 21 (17) which
 - (a) is anonymous;
 - (b) is substantially the same as a previous application and contains no important new information.
2. The Commission shall reject any application which it considers inadmissible under article 22 (18) [for failure to exhaust domestic remedies].
3. The Commission shall reject any application submitted under Article 21 (17) [individual petitions], which it considers
 - (a) incompatible with the provisions of the present Convention;
 - (b) manifestly ill-founded.²⁰

This subsequently underwent some minor revisions: in paragraph 1(b), 'important' was changed to 'relevant'; in paragraph 2, 'reject any application which it considers inadmissible' became 'consider inadmissible'.²¹ In the commentary, the Committee said that it had replaced the shorter provision in the Assembly draft with 'a more detailed regulation of the methods of procedure which should enable the Commission to deal with the requests which were inadmissible or manifestly ill-founded without enquiry'. It explained that '[c]ertain members of the Committee had expressed doubt as to the possibility, from the legal point of view, of allowing the Commission the right to regulate these details in its rules of procedure'. The commentary also noted that the Committee had considered it desirable to distinguish between inter-State petitions and individual applications, 'in as much as the Commission should not be able to reject a petition from one of the High Contracting Parties without preliminary enquiry'.²²

In June 1950, the Conference of Senior Officials of Human Rights developed a new draft in which the first of the two provisions, dealing with exhaustion, included a six-month time limit: 'The Commission may only deal with the matter after all domestic legal remedies have been exhausted according to the generally recognised rules of international law and only if the petition is made after six months from the final domestic decision.'²³ The text was subsequently revised: 'The Commission may only deal with the matter after all domestic legal remedies have been exhausted according to the generally recognised rules of international law and only if the petition is made after six months from the final domestic decision.'²⁴ The Report of the Conference explained the addition: 'The Conference considered it useful to fix a time-limit during which recourse to the Commission

¹⁹ Amendments to the Report of the Committee, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 6, A 907, III TP 304-5.

²⁰ Preliminary Draft Convention, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 14, A 932, III TP 312-35, at p. 328.

²¹ Draft Convention of Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 16 March 1950, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 15 appendix, CM/WP 1 (50) 14 revised, A 925, IV TP 50-79, at p. 68.

²² Report to the Committee of Ministers submitted by the Committee of Experts Instructed to Draw up a Draft Convention of Collective Guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 16 March 1950, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 15, A 924, IV TP 2-51, at p. 38.

²³ New draft Section III prepared by the Drafting Sub-Committee, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 11, A 1374, IV TP 194-9, at p. 196, art. f.

²⁴ Draft Convention appended to the draft report, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 16, appendix, A 1445, IV TP 218-40, at p. 230.

should be formulated, in accordance with the provision to this effect in Article 31, para. 2, of the General Act of Geneva.²⁵ This was a reference to the General Act for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes where a one-year time limit was set out.²⁶ The second provision, with the detailed rules on rejection of applications, was modified slightly by the addition of the words 'or an abuse of the right of application' after 'manifestly ill-founded'.²⁷

On 24 June 1950, the Legal Committee of the Consultative Assembly wrote to the Committee of Ministers about the provision:

The rule that all domestic remedies must first have been exhausted, and the power which the Commission of Human Rights is recognised to possess to reject de plano applications which it considers inadmissible, are sufficient to protect States against any risks of abuse. The Committee has, however, insisted on the maintenance of the proposal contained in Article 12 of the Recommendation of the Assembly, namely that applications must be made through legal channels, in its opinion, a necessary precaution to prevent the Committee [sic] of Human Rights from being inundated by a flood of irregular requests.²⁸

The Committee of Ministers revised the second of the two provisions by adding a requirement concerning pending applications before other international dispute settlement mechanisms. The United Kingdom proposed a text that is the ancestor of article 55 of the Convention; it prevents States Parties from availing of other mechanisms than those set out in the Convention. The United Kingdom had signalled the need for a provision 'providing against the possibility of the submission of two complaints arising out of one incident to two systems of international settlement'. But since individuals and groups were not bound by such a provision, as it applies only to States Parties, 'it would be necessary to add a further provision preventing the Commission from entertaining any question which has already been submitted to another international mode of settlement'.²⁹ The Sub-Committee of Human Rights of the Committee of Ministers settled on the following provisions:

Article 26

The Commission may only deal with the matter after all domestic remedies have been exhausted according to the generally recognised rules of international law and within a period of six months from the date on which the final decision was taken.

Article 27

1. The Commission shall not deal with any petition submitted under Article 25 which:

- (a) is anonymous;
- (b) is substantially the same as a matter which has already been examined by the Commission or has already been submitted to another procedure of international investigation or settlement and if it contains no relevant new information.

²⁵ Text of the report submitted by the Conference to the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19, CM/WP 4 (50) 16 rev., A 1431, IV TP 242-73, at p. 264.

²⁶ (1929) 93 LNTS 344, art. 31(2).

²⁷ New draft Section III prepared by the Drafting Sub-Committee, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 11, A 1374, IV TP 194-9, at p. 196, art. f; Draft Convention appended to the draft report, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 16, appendix, A 1445, IV TP 218-40, at p. 230.

²⁸ Letter of 24 June 1950 from Sir David Maxwell Fyfe, Chairman of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions, to the Chairman of the Committee of Ministers, Ref. D 280/3/50, Doc. CM (50) 29, V TP 32-41, at p. 346. Also Draft of a letter to the Chairman of the Committee of Ministers, Doc. AS/JA (50) 2, A 1579, V TP 10-15, at p. 10.

²⁹ Amendments proposed by the United Kingdom Delegation, Doc. CM 1 (50) 6, A 1867, V TP 66-71, at p. 70.

2. The Commission shall consider inadmissible any petition submitted under Article 25 which it considers incompatible with the provisions of the present Convention, manifestly ill-founded, or an abuse of the right of application.
3. The Commission shall reject any matter referred to it which it considers inadmissible under Article 26.³⁰

In the Consultative Assembly, which convened in August 1950, a proposal to allow the Committee of Ministers to overrule an inadmissibility decision by the Commission³¹ was not adopted. No changes were subsequently introduced to article 26 in the final version of the Convention adopted in Rome in November 1950. There were a few minor modifications to article 27 following a British proposal:³² the word 'or' was added to paragraph 1(a) and the word 'petition' replaced 'application' in paragraphs 2 and 3.

Protocol No. 11 reformulated the admissibility criteria in articles 26 and 27 into a single provision, article 35. The Explanatory Report said that '[t]he admissibility criteria remain unchanged', and that the Court would henceforth exercise the 'effective filter function, as presently performed by the Commission'.³³ The new text read as follows:

Article 35—Admissibility criteria

1. The Court may only deal with the matter after all domestic remedies have been exhausted, according to the generally recognised rules of international law, and within a period of six months from the date on which the final decision was taken.
2. The Court shall not deal with any individual application submitted under Article 34 that:
 - a. is anonymous; or
 - b. is substantially the same as a matter that has already been examined by the Court or has already been submitted to another procedure of international investigation or settlement and contains no relevant new information.
3. The Court shall declare inadmissible any individual application submitted under Article 34 which it considers incompatible with the provisions of the Convention or the protocols thereto, manifestly ill-founded, or an abuse of the right of application.
4. The Court shall reject any application which it considers inadmissible under this Article. It may do so at any stage of the proceedings.³⁴

According to the Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11:

87. Paragraph 1 of Article 35 is derived from former Article 26 of the Convention and paragraphs 2 to 4 from former Article 27. The intention here is to continue practice based on the former Commission's Rules of Procedure. Grounds of inadmissibility, as they existed under the former system, have been left unchanged in order to provide the new Court with an effective filter mechanism. An application which is patently inadmissible can be so declared at the initial stage of the proceedings by a committee, as provided for in Article 28. The decision declaring an application inadmissible will be final. The decision on admissibility will, in most cases, be taken separately (see Article 29, second sentence).

³⁰ Draft Convention adopted by the Sub-Committee, Doc. CM 1 (50) 52, A 1884, V TP 76–99, at p. 86–8.

³¹ Proposed by M. Lanning, Doc. AS/JA (2) 11, A 2320, VI TP 20–23 and Doc. AS/JA (2) 11 rev., A 2367, VI TP 22–25.

³² Letter addressed 28 October 1950 by Mr Downing (United Kingdom) to Mr Robertson (Secretariat), CDH (70) 30, VI TP 286–91, at p. 290.

³³ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 41.

³⁴ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 1.

88. Paragraph 4 of Article 35 does not signify that a State is able to raise an admissibility question at any stage of the proceedings, if it could have been raised earlier. It is nevertheless important to stress that the Court will be able to reject an application at any stage of the proceedings—even without an oral hearing—if it finds the existence of one of the grounds of non-acceptance provided in Article 35 (see Article 29 of the Convention's former text).

89. Copies of all decisions declaring applications inadmissible should be transmitted to the States concerned for information.

Paragraph 3 of article 35 was amended by Protocol No. 14. It added the new admissibility requirement of 'significant damage' to sub-paragraph (b).³⁵ Introduction of the new criterion was not without controversy. The Parliamentary Assembly objected, arguing that the proposal was 'vague, subjective and liable to do the applicant a serious injustice, and would exclude only 1.6% of existing cases'. Moreover, 'it may have the unintentional effect of discriminating against female applicants to the Court, by, for example, putting a premium on financial disadvantages suffered'.³⁶ The Parliamentary Assembly said that if the Committee of Ministers insisted on the new provision, 'it would recommend that the Court be empowered to declare an application inadmissible if it is satisfied that the application has been duly examined by a domestic tribunal in accordance with the provisions of the Convention and the protocols thereto'.³⁷ This concern is reflected in the final phrase of the new provision. The Assembly noted that this element would encourage States to incorporate the Convention and its Protocols into their domestic legislation.

The Explanatory Report describes the scope of the amendment:

39. A new admissibility requirement is inserted in Article 35 of the Convention. The new requirement provides the Court with an additional tool which should assist it in concentrating on cases which warrant an examination on the merits, by empowering it to declare inadmissible applications where the applicant has not suffered a significant disadvantage and which, in terms of respect for human rights, do not otherwise require an examination on the merits by the Court. Furthermore, the new requirement contains an explicit condition to ensure that it does not lead to rejection of cases which have not been duly considered by a domestic tribunal. It should be stressed that the new requirement does not restrict the right of individuals to apply to the Court or alter the principle that all individual applications are examined on their admissibility. While the Court alone is competent to interpret the new admissibility requirement and decide on its application, its terms should ensure that rejection of cases requiring an examination on the merits is avoided. The latter will notably include cases which, notwithstanding their trivial nature, raise serious questions affecting the application or the interpretation of the Convention or important questions concerning national law.

According to the Explanatory Report, the purpose of this amendment is to provide the Court with an additional tool which should assist it in its filtering work and allow it to devote more time to cases which warrant examination on the merits, whether seen from the perspective of the legal interest of the individual applicant or considered from the broader perspective of the law of the Convention and the European public ³⁵ Protocol No. 14 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, amending the control system of the Convention, ETS 194, art. 12.

³⁶ Draft Protocol No. 14 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms amending the control system of the Convention, Opinion No. 251 (2004), Parliamentary Assembly, para. 11.

³⁷ Ibid., paras 11–12.

order to which it contributes. The new criterion therefore pursues the same aim as some other key changes introduced by this protocol and is complementary to them.³⁸

The Explanatory Report explains that the introduction of the new criterion 'was considered necessary in view of the ever-increasing caseload of the Court. In particular, it is necessary to give the Court some degree of flexibility in addition to that already provided by the existing admissibility criteria, whose interpretation has become established in the case-law that has developed over several decades and is therefore difficult to change.'³⁹ The Report continues:

78. This is so because it is very likely that the numbers of individual applications to the Court will continue to increase, up to a point where the other measures set out in this protocol may well prove insufficient to prevent the Convention system from becoming totally paralysed, unable to fulfil its central mission of providing legal protection of human rights at the European level, rendering the right of individual application illusory in practice.

79. The new criterion may lead to certain cases being declared inadmissible which might have resulted in a judgment without it. Its main effect, however, is likely to be that it will in the longer term enable more rapid disposal of unmeritorious cases. Once the Court's Chambers have developed clear-cut jurisprudential criteria of an objective character capable of straightforward application, the new criterion will be easier for the Court to apply than some other admissibility criteria, including in cases which would at all events have to be declared inadmissible on another ground.

80. The main element contained in the new criterion is the question whether the applicant has suffered a significant disadvantage. These terms are open to interpretation (this is the additional element of flexibility introduced); the same is true of many other terms used in the Convention, including some other admissibility criteria. Like those other terms, they are legal terms capable of, and requiring, interpretation establishing objective criteria through the gradual development of the case-law of the Court.

81. The second element is a safeguard clause to the effect that, even where the applicant has not suffered a significant disadvantage, the application will not be declared inadmissible if respect for human rights as defined in the Convention or the protocols thereto requires an examination on the merits. The wording of this element is drawn from the second sentence of Article 37, paragraph 1, of the Convention where it fulfils a similar function in the context of decisions to strike applications out of the Court's list of cases.

82. A second safeguard clause is added to this first one. It will never be possible for the Court to reject an application on account of its trivial nature if the case has not been duly considered by a domestic tribunal. This clause, which reflects the principle of subsidiarity, ensures that, for the purposes of the application of the new admissibility criterion, every case will receive a judicial examination whether at the national level or at the European level.

83. The wording of the new criterion is thus designed to avoid rejection of cases warranting an examination on the merits. As was explained in paragraph 39 above, the latter will notably include cases which, notwithstanding their trivial nature, raise serious questions affecting the application or interpretation of the Convention or important questions concerning national law.

84. As explained in paragraph 67 above, it will take time for the Court's Chambers or Grand Chamber to establish clear case-law principles for the operation of the new criterion in concrete contexts. It is clear, having regard to the wording of Articles 27 and 28, that single-judge formations and committees will not be able to apply the new criterion in the absence of such guidance. In accordance with Article 20, paragraph 2, second sentence, of this protocol, single-judge formations and committees will be prevented from applying the new criterion during a period of two years following the entry into force of this protocol.

³⁸ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, para. 77.

³⁹ Ibid., para. 78.

Two changes to article 35 were introduced by Protocol No. 15, which is not yet in force. The time limit for submitting applications that was set at six months following the final domestic decision by the original 1950 version of the Convention is reduced to four months.⁴⁰ According to the Explanatory Report, '[t]he development of swifter communications technology, along with the time limits of similar length in force in the member States, argue for the reduction of the time limit'.⁴¹ This provision will enter into force six months after the entry into force of the Protocol⁴² 'in order to allow potential applicants to become fully aware of the new deadline'.⁴³ The amendment will not apply to applications in respect of which the final domestic decision was taken prior to entry into force of the Protocol.⁴⁴ Protocol No. 15 also amends article 35(3)(b)—containing the 'significant disadvantage' criterion introduced by Protocol No. 14—so as to remove the proviso that the case first be considered by a domestic tribunal.⁴⁵ According to the Explanatory Report, '[t]he requirement remains of examination of an application on the merits where required by respect for human rights. This amendment is intended to give greater effect to the maxim de minimis non curat praetor'.⁴⁶ Unlike the other amendment to article 35, there is no delay in the entry into force of this amendment 'in order not to delay the impact of the expected enhancement of the effectiveness of the system. It will therefore apply also to applications on which the admissibility decision is pending at the date of entry into force of the Protocol'.⁴⁷

Analysis and interpretation

Admissibility must be determined as a preliminary condition for examination of the case on the merits. Most applications to the European Court of Human Rights are declared inadmissible based upon one or more of the grounds listed in article 35. The first paragraph of article 35 governs all applications to the Court, whether they are formulated by one State against another according to article 33 or by an individual pursuant to article 34. Paragraphs 2 and 3 only apply to individual applications.

Procedure concerning admissibility

The procedure for determination of admissibility is somewhat different, depending upon whether the Court is dealing with an inter-State application or an individual application. This is reflected not only in the relevant provisions of the Convention itself but also in the Rules of Court.

⁴⁰ Protocol No. 15 amending the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, art. 4.

⁴¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 15, para. 22.

⁴² Protocol No. 15 amending the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, art. 8(3).

⁴³ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 15, para. 21.

⁴⁴ Protocol No. 15 amending the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, art. 8(4).

⁴⁵ Ibid., art. 5.

⁴⁶ Ibid., para. 23.

⁴⁷ Ibid., para. 24.

An inter-State application must contain a statement on compliance with the admissibility criteria set out in article 35(1), that is, the exhaustion of domestic remedies and the six-month rule.⁴⁸ Upon receipt of the application, the President of the Court notifies the respondent State and assigns the case to one of the Sections.⁴⁹ The President of the Section constitutes a Chamber to hear the case and at the same time invites the respondent State to make submissions on the admissibility of the application.⁵⁰ Before ruling on admissibility, the Chamber or its President may request that the parties make additional written observations.⁵¹ Once the written observations have been submitted, the Judge Rapporteur of the Chamber is to prepare a written report on admissibility.⁵² A hearing will be held upon the request of one of the parties or by decision of the Chamber acting on its own motion.⁵³

An individual application to the Court submitted in accordance with article 34 must contain a concise and legible statement on compliance with the first two of the listed admissibility criteria, namely exhaustion of domestic remedies and the six-month rule that is set out in article 35(1).⁵⁴ The application must also be accompanied by relevant information, and notably documents and decisions, relevant to the exhaustion of domestic remedies and the six-month rule.⁵⁵ The applicant must also provide copies of documents relating to any procedure of international investigation or settlement where appropriate.⁵⁶ An individual application is first considered by a single judge, who may rule on its admissibility if this can be done 'without further examination', in accordance with article 27(1) of the Convention, 'unless there is some special reason to the contrary'.⁵⁷ A very large number of applications are dismissed in this manner. If the single judge does not take such a decision, the judge is to forward the case either to a three-judge Committee for a determination of admissibility pursuant to article 28(1) or to a seven-judge Chamber acting pursuant to article 29.⁵⁸ If the committee takes no decision, article 29 dictates that the matter of admissibility be adjudicated by a seven-judge Chamber.⁵⁹ The Chamber may decide to take a distinct decision on admissibility, although there is a presumption in favour of joint rulings on both admissibility and merits. Should the Chamber agree on the bifurcated approach, it may also decide to hold a hearing, either at the request of a party or on its own motion, 'if it considers that the discharge of its functions under the Convention so requires'.⁶⁰

Eventually, the issue of admissibility may come before the Grand Chamber pursuant to article 31, but only with respect to matters that have not been declared inadmissible by the Chamber.⁶¹ The Grand Chamber has no authority to re-activate elements of an ⁴⁸ Rules of Court, Rule 46(d).

⁴⁹ Ibid., Rule 51(1).

⁵⁰ Ibid., Rule 51(3).

⁵¹ Ibid., Rule 51(4).

⁵² Ibid., Rule 48(1).

⁵³ Ibid., Rule 51(5).

⁵⁴ Ibid., Rule 47(1)(f).

⁵⁵ Ibid., Rule 47(3.1)(b).

⁵⁶ Ibid., Rule 47(3.1)(c).

⁵⁷ Ibid., Rules 49(1), 52A(1).

⁵⁸ Ibid., Rule 52A(3).

⁵⁹ Also ibid., Rule 53(6).

⁶⁰ Ibid., Rule 53(5).

⁶¹ Sisojeva and Others v. Latvia (striking out) [GC], no. 60654/00, §§ 61–62, ECHR 2007-I.

application that have already been found to be inadmissible at an earlier stage in the proceedings. On the other hand, in accordance with article 35(4) the Grand Chamber may find a case inadmissible even at the merits stage, and thereby reconsider a ruling by the Chamber favouring admissibility.⁶²

Rule 55 of the Rules of Court states that '[a]ny plea of inadmissibility must, in so far as its character and the circumstances permit, be raised by the respondent Contracting Party in its written or oral observations on the admissibility of the application...' The government that fails to do this may be estopped from challenging admissibility subsequently.⁶³ However, there are exceptional circumstances where this can be dispensed with, notably when the reason leading to the objection to admissibility only became known at a later stage.⁶⁴

Exhaustion of domestic remedies (art. 35(1))

The first of the admissibility criteria listed in article 35 is the requirement that domestic remedies be exhausted. It is a rule that is to be applied with 'some degree of flexibility and without excessive formalism'.⁶⁵ The Grand Chamber has explained that:

the rule of exhaustion is neither absolute nor capable of being applied automatically; for the purposes of reviewing whether it has been observed, it is essential to have regard to the circumstances of the individual case. This means, in particular, that the Court must take realistic account not only of the existence of formal remedies in the legal system of the Contracting State concerned but also of the general context in which they operate, as well as the personal circumstances of the applicant. It must then examine whether, in all the circumstances of the case, the applicant did everything that could reasonably be expected of him or her to exhaust domestic remedies.⁶⁶

The flexibility is justified by the fact that the rule of exhaustion of domestic remedies 'is being applied in the context of machinery for the protection of human rights'.⁶⁷

In substance, the rule 'obliges applicants to use first the remedies that are available and sufficient in the domestic legal system to afford redress for the violation complained of'.⁶⁸ The purpose of the rule is to provide States with the opportunity to prevent or 'put right' the alleged violations before the matter is submitted to the international court.⁶⁹ As the ⁶² Gillberg v. Sweden [GC], no. 41723/06, § 54, 3 April 2012; Azinas v. Cyprus [GC], no. 56679/00, § 32, ECHR 2004-III.

⁶³ Andrejeva v. Latvia [GC], no. 55707/00, §§ 49, 55, ECHR 2009; Sergey Zolotukhin v. Russia [GC], no. 14939/03, § 46, ECHR 2009; Prokopovitch v. Russia, no. 58255/00, § 29, ECHR 2004-XI; K. and T. v. Finland [GC], no. 25702/94, § 145, ECHR 2001-VII; N.C. v. Italy [GC], no. 24952/94, § 44, ECHR 2002-X.

⁶⁴ Mooren v. Germany [GC], no. 11364/03, § 57, 9 July 2009; N.C. v. Italy [GC], no. 24952/94, § 44, ECHR 2002-X; Sejdovic v. Italy [GC], no. 56581/00, § 41, ECHR 2006-II; Lebedev v. Russia, no. 4493/04, §§ 39-40, 25 October 2007.

⁶⁵ Eberhard and M. v. Slovenia, no. 8673/05 and 9733/05, § 104, 1 December 2009; Scoppola v. Italy (no. 2) [GC], no. 10249/03, § 69, 17 September 2009; Fressoz and Roire v. France [GC], no. 29183/95, § 37, ECHR 1999-I; Azinas v. Cyprus [GC], no. 56679/00, § 38, ECHR 2004-III; Ankerl v. Switzerland, 23 October 1996, § 34, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-V.

⁶⁶ D.H. and Others v. the Czech Republic [GC], no. 57325/00, § 116, ECHR 2007-IV.

⁶⁷ Aksoy v. Turkey, 18 December 1996, § 53, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-VI.

⁶⁸ Mooren v. Germany [GC], no. 11364/03, § 118, 9 July 2009; Airey v. Ireland, 9 October 1979, § 19, Series A no. 32; Iatridis v. Greece [GC], no. 31107/96, § 47, ECHR 1999-II; Ilhan v. Turkey [GC], no. 22277/93, § 58, ECHR 2000-VII.

⁶⁹ Micallef v. Malta [GC], no. 17056/06, § 55, ECHR 2009; Ananyev and Others v. Russia, nos 42525/07 and 60800/08, § 93, 10 January 2012; Selmouni v. France [GC], no. 25803/94, § 74, ECHR 1999-V; E.S. v.

European Commission explained in a very early case, '[t]he respondent State must first have an opportunity to redress by its own means within the framework of its own domestic legal system the wrong alleged to have been done to the individual'.⁷⁰ According to the Grand Chamber, '[t]he object of the rule on exhaustion of domestic remedies is to allow the national authorities (primarily the judicial authorities) to address the allegation made of violation of a Convention right and where appropriate, to afford redress before that allegation is submitted to the Court'.⁷¹

The requirement of article 35(1) has 'a close affinity' with article 13 in that both are based on the assumption 'that there is an effective remedy available to deal with the substance of an "arguable complaint" under the Convention and to grant appropriate relief'.⁷² This is related to the principle that the Convention machinery is subsidiary to that of the national legal systems for the protection of human rights.⁷³ One practical reason for this is to enable the European Court to 'have the benefit of the views of the national courts, as being in direct and continuous contact with the forces of their countries'.⁷⁴

The existence of the remedies must be sufficiently certain both in theory and in practice, failing which they will lack the requisite accessibility and effectiveness.⁷⁵ There is no obligation to have recourse to remedies that are inadequate or ineffective. It is incumbent on the respondent Government claiming non-exhaustion to indicate to the Court with sufficient clarity the remedies to which the applicants have not had recourse and to satisfy the Court that the remedies were effective and available in theory and in practice at the relevant time, that is to say that they were accessible, capable of providing redress in respect of the applicants' complaints, and offered reasonable prospects of success.⁷⁶ If a proposed remedy does not offer reasonable prospects of success, taking into account the domestic case law, then there is no need to exhaust this for a case to be admissible.⁷⁷ But although an Sweden, no. 5786/08, § 43, 21 June 2012; Remli v. France, 23 April 1996, § 33, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-II; Scoppola v. Italy (no. 2) [GC], no. 10249/03, § 69, 17 September 2009; Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, § 164, ECHR 2009.

⁷⁰ Nielsen v. Denmark, no. 343/57, Commission decision of 2 September 1959, (1958–59) 2 YB 412, at p. 438.

⁷¹ Azinas v. Cyprus [GC], no. 56679/00, § 38, ECHR 2004-III.

⁷² Ananyev and Others v. Russia, nos 42525/07 and 60800/08, § 93, 10 January 2012; Vallianatos and Others v. Greece [GC], no. 29381/09 and 32684/09, § 51, ECHR 2013; Kudła v. Poland [GC], no. 30210/96, § 152, ECHR 2000-XI; Hasan and Chaush v. Bulgaria [GC], no. 30985/96, §§ 96–98, ECHR 2000-XI.

⁷³ Ananyev and Others v. Russia, nos 42525/07 and 60800/08, § 93, 10 January 2012; Kudła v. Poland [GC], no. 30210/96, § 152, ECHR 2000-XI; Handyside v. the United Kingdom, 7 December 1976, § 48, Series A no. 24; Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, § 164, ECHR 2009; Scoppola v. Italy (no. 2) [GC], no. 10249/03, § 68, 17 September 2009; Akdivar and Others v. Turkey, 16 September 1996, § 65, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-IV.

⁷⁴ Burden v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 13378/05, § 42, ECHR 2008.

⁷⁵ Scoppola v. Italy (no. 2) [GC], no. 10249/03, § 70, 17 September 2009; Sofri and Others v. Italy (dec.), no. 37235/97, ECHR 2003-VIII; Dalia v. France, 19 February 1998, § 38, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-I.

⁷⁶ Mooren v. Germany [GC], no. 11364/03, § 118, 9 July 2009; McFarlane v. Ireland [GC], § 107, 10 September 2010; Akdivar and Others v. Turkey, 16 September 1996, § 68, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-IV; Kleyn and Others v. the Netherlands [GC], nos 39343/98, 39651/98, 43147/98, and 46664/99, § 156, ECHR 2003-VI; Aksoy v. Turkey, 18 December 1996, §§ 51–52, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-VI; Cenner Ayhan and Mehmet Salih Ayhan v. Turkey, no. 41964/98, § 64–65, 27 June 2006; Scoppola v. Italy (no. 2) [GC], no. 10249/03, § 71, 17 September 2009; Sejdovic v. Italy [GC], no. 56581/00, § 46, ECHR 2006-II.

⁷⁷ Pressos Compania Naviera S.A. and Others v. Belgium, 20 November 1995, § 27, Series A no. 332; Carson and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 42184/05, § 58, ECHR 2010.

applicant need not pursue an evidently unproductive remedy, 'the existence of mere doubts as to the prospects of success of a particular remedy which is not obviously futile is not a valid reason for failing to exhaust domestic remedies'.⁷⁸

The requirement of exhaustion is inapplicable 'where an administrative practice consisting of a repetition of acts incompatible with the Convention and official tolerance by the State authorities has been shown to exist, and is of such a nature as to make proceedings futile or ineffective'.⁷⁹ In some cases, the Court has found the remedies proposed by the government to be unreasonable or disproportionate, such as the suggestion that a special procedure be undertaken in reaction to administrative delays that had taken more than eighteen years.⁸⁰ In an inter-State case, the requirement of exhaustion of domestic remedies does not apply if it is a legislative or administrative practice that is being challenged by the applicant State. The latter cannot be expected to undertake its own litigation before the national courts of the respondent State.⁸¹ This issue does not arise with individual applications because of the refusal to allow the actio popularis.

There is a certain sharing of the burden of proof in the exhaustion determination. Once the State has established the existence of a feasible remedy,⁸² the burden of proof shifts to the applicant to show that the remedy proposed by the State was exhausted or was inadequate and ineffective or that there were special circumstances making it unnecessary to meet this requirement.⁸³ Of course, the applicant must first have submitted the complaint, at least in substance, to the appropriate national tribunal in respecting all of the formalities, including time limits.⁸⁴ Even when the domestic tribunals dismiss the case for failure to observe certain technical rules, if they have considered the substance of the complaint then the exhaustion requirement will be satisfied.⁸⁵ Domestic law may provide two or more potentially effective remedies to deal with the issue. An applicant need make ⁷⁸ Scoppola v. Italy (no. 2) [GC], no. 10249/03, § 70, 17 September 2009; Brusco v. Italy (dec.), no. 69789/01, ECHR 2001-IX; Sardinas Albo v. Italy (dec.), no. 56271/00, ECHR 2004-I; Epözdemir v. Turkey (dec.), no. 57039/00, 31 January 2002; Milošević v. the Netherlands (dec.), no. 77631/01, 19 March 2002; Whiteside v. the United Kingdom, no. 20357/92, Commission decision of 7 March 1994, DR 76, p. 80.

⁷⁹ Aksoy v. Turkey, 18 December 1996, § 52, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-VI; Akdivar and Others v. Turkey, 16 September 1996, §§ 66–67, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-IV.

⁸⁰ Veriter v. France, no. 31508/07, § 59, 14 October 2010. Also Vaney v. France, no. 53946/00, § 53, 30 November 2004.

⁸¹ Greece v. the United Kingdom, no. 176156, Commission decision of 2 June 1956, (1958–59) 2 YB 182; Ireland v. the United Kingdom, nos 5310/71 and 5451/72, Commission decision of 1 October 1972, 15 YB 80, at p. 242.

⁸² Dalia v. France, 19 February 1998, § 38, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-I; McFarlane v. Ireland [GC], no. 31333/06, § 107, 10 September 2010.

⁸³ Mooren v. Germany [GC], no. 11364/03, § 118, 9 July 2009; Akdivar and Others v. Turkey, 16 September 1996, § 68, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-IV; Kleyan and Others v. the Netherlands [GC], nos 39343/98, 39651/98, 43147/98, and 46664/99, § 156, ECHR 2003-VI.

⁸⁴ Zarb Adami v. Malta (dec.), no. 17209/02, 24 May 2005; Merger and Cros v. France (dec.), no. 68864/01, 11 March 2004; Cardot v. France, 19 March 1991, § 36, Series A no. 200; Le Compie v. Belgium, no. 6878/75, Commission decision of 6 October 1976, (1977) 20 YB 254, DR 6, p. 79; T. v. Switzerland, no. 18079/91, Commission decision of 4 December 1991, DR 72, p. 263.

⁸⁵ Voggenreiter v. Germany (dec.), no. 47169/99, 28 November 2002; Verein gegen Tierfabriken Schweiz (VgT) v. Switzerland (no. 2) [GC], no. 32772/02, §§ 43–45, ECHR 2009; Huber v. Switzerland, no. 12794/87, Commission decision of 9 July 1988, DR 57, p. 259; Chammas v. Switzerland, no. 35438/97, Commission decision of 30 May 1997; Jamal-Aldin v. Switzerland, no. 19959/92, Commission decision of 23 May 1996; Thaler v. Austria (dec.), no. 58141/00, 15 September 2003; Atik v. Germany (dec.), no. 67500/01, 13 May 2004.

use of only one of them.⁸⁶ The applicant cannot be required to exercise a legal remedy that would have been directed to essentially the same end as the one he or she pursued and that had no better chance of success.⁸⁷

Article 35(1) specifies that the domestic remedies be exhausted 'according to the generally recognised rules of international law'. This is one of only four references to international law in the Convention and its Protocols.⁸⁸ The reference to 'generally recognised rules of international law' may have seemed useful to the drafters of the Convention, who obviously thought it important to add some precision to the general notion of exhaustion of domestic remedies. Similar rules can be found in the other international human rights treaties.⁸⁹ In one of its very early rulings, the European Commission noted, but without citing any authority, that 'the generally recognised rules of international law required the Applicant to exhaust not merely the remedies in the ordinary Courts but the whole system of legal remedies available in the Republic'.⁹⁰ In one of its very early rulings, the Court noted 'a long established international practice from which the Convention has definitely not departed' of admitting waiver by the State of the exhaustion rule. In that decision, the Court specifically referred to the reference to 'generally recognised rules of international law' in the Convention.⁹¹ In another, it noted with respect to the exhaustion rule and the reference to rules of international law that 'international courts have on various occasions held that international law cannot be applied with the same regard for matters of form as is sometimes necessary in the application of national law'.⁹² In some of the early case law there were rare and essentially perfunctory references to rulings on the issue of exhaustion from the International Court of Justice,⁹³ the Permanent Court of ⁸⁶ Aquilina v. Malta [GC], no. 25642/94, § 39, ECHR 1999-III; Moreira Barbosa v. Portugal (dec.), no. 65681/01, 29 April 2004; Jeličić v. Bosnia and Herzegovina (dec.), no. 41183/02, 15 November 2005; Wójcik v. Poland, no. 26757/95, Commission decision of 7 July 1997, DR 90, p. 24; Günaydin v. Turkey (dec.), no. 27526/95, 25 April 2002.

⁸⁷ Mooren v. Germany [GC], no. 11364/03, § 118, 9 July 2009; Iatridis v. Greece [GC], no. 31107/96, § 47, ECHR 1999-II; Miailhe v. France (no. 1), 25 February 1993, § 27, Series A no. 256-C; Micallef v. Malta [GC], no. 17056/06, § 58, ECHR 2009; Kozacıoğlu v. Turkey [GC], no. 2334/03, § 40, 19 February 2009; Riad and Idiab v. Belgium, nos 29787/03 and 29810/03, § 84, 24 January 2008; Jasinskis v. Latvia, no. 45744/08, §§ 50–54, 21 December 2010.

⁸⁸ International law is also referred to in articles 7(1) and 15(1) of the European Convention and article 1 of Protocol No. 1.

⁸⁹ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, (1976) 999 UNTS 171, art. 41(1)(c); Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, (1976) 999 UNTS 171, arts. 2, 5(2)(b); American Convention on Human Rights, (1978) 1144 UNTS 123, art. 46; African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights, arts 50, 56(5). See also Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, (2002) 2187 UNTS 90, art. 17.

⁹⁰ Lawless v. Ireland, no. 332/57, Commission report of 19 December 1959, p. 37; Lawless v. Ireland, no. 332/57, Commission decision of 30 August 1958, (1958–59) 2 YB 308.

⁹¹ De Wilde, Ooms, and Versyp v. Belgium, 18 June 1971, § 55, Series A no. 12.

⁹² Ringelsen v. Austria, 16 July 1971, § 89, Series A no. 13.

⁹³ Interhandel Case (Switzerland v. the United States), Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1959, p. 6, at p. 29. See Austria v. Italy, no. 7881/60, Commission decision of 11 January 1961, (1961) 4 YB 116, at p. 148; Retimag SA v. Federal Republic of Germany, no. 712/60, Commission decision of 16 December 1961, (1961) 4 YB 384, at p. 400; Ringelsen v. Austria, no. 2614/65, Commission decision of 18 July 1968, (1968) 11 YB 268; Fifty-five inhabitants of Louvain and Environs v. Belgium, no. 1994/63, Commission decision of 5 March 1964, (1964) 7 YB 252, at p. 260. More recent decisions of the International Court of Justice dealing with exhaustion of domestic remedies (Barcelona Traction, Light and Power Company, Limited, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1970, p. 3, at p. 26; Electronica Sicula S.P.A. (ELSI), Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1989, p. 15, paras 56–63) have not been cited by the European Court of Human Rights.

International Justice⁹⁴ and arbitral tribunals,⁹⁵ as well as to resolutions of the Institut de droit international.⁹⁶ Such references to international authorities has long been without any particular relevance, given that the international tribunal with the richest case law on the subject is without any doubt the European Court of Human Rights itself.

There is a formulaic phrase in some of the judgments stating that 'according to the "generally recognised rules of international law", there may be special circumstances which absolve applicants from the obligation to exhaust the domestic remedies at their disposal'.⁹⁷ In fact, the Court does not draw upon international law in this context. An example of such special circumstances would be the situation where the national authorities fail to act on serious allegations of misconduct by State agents. Then, 'the burden of proof shifts once again, so that it becomes incumbent on the respondent Government to show what they have done in response to the scale and seriousness of the matters complained of'.⁹⁸

The remedies referred to in paragraph 1 are domestic, as opposed to international. International remedies are addressed under paragraph 2 of article 35, where admissibility is contingent on an option for the European Court should the applicant have two or more possibilities to choose from. Within the context of both provisions, disputes may arise as to whether a remedy is in fact domestic or international. The Court will make its determination in light of the legal character of the instrument founding the body, but also the body's composition, its competence, its place (if any) in an existing legal system, and its funding. It held that the Human Rights Chamber in Bosnia and Herzegovina, which was a creation of the 1995 Dayton Agreement and was comprised of several 'international' judges, was nevertheless part of the national legal order and therefore a 'domestic remedy' contemplated by article 35(1) rather than a 'procedure of international investigation or settlement' within the meaning of article 35(2)(b).⁹⁹

Most European States provide for the constitutional protection of human rights. In those circumstances, the applicant is required to test the extent of that protection. In a common law system, rights are often developed by the domestic court through ⁹⁴ The Panevezys-Saldutiskis Railway, Series A/B no. 75 (cited in Austria v. Italy, no. 788/60, Commission decision of 11 January 1961, (1961) 4 YB 116, at pp. 148, 172 and Retimag SA v. Federal Republic of Germany, no. 712/60, Commission decision of 16 December 1961, (1961) 4 YB 384, at p. 400).

⁹⁵ The Ambatielos Claim (Greece, United Kingdom of Great Britain, and Northern Ireland), (1956) 12 Reports of International Arbitral Awards 83, at p. 118 (cited in Retimag SA v. Federal Republic of Germany, no. 712/60, Commission decision of 16 December 1961, (1961) 4 YB 384, at p. 400; Cardot v. France, 19 March 1991, § 34, Series A no. 200); Finnish Ships case (Finland v. the United Kingdom), (1934) 3 Reports of International Arbitral Awards 1479 (cited in Retimag SA v. Federal Republic of Germany, no. 712/60, Commission decision of 16 December 1961, (1961) 4 YB 384, at p. 400).

⁹⁶ Resolution adopted by the Institut de droit international at Grenada, 1956 (cited in Austria v. Italy, no. 788/60, Commission decision of 11 January 1961, (1961) 4 YB 116, at p. 172; Retimag SA v. Federal Republic of Germany, no. 712/60, Commission decision of 16 December 1961, (1961) 4 YB 384, at p. 400; and Fifty-five inhabitants of Louvain and Environs v. Belgium, no. 1994/63, Commission decision of 5 March 1964, (1964) 7 YB 252, at p. 260). Generally on this subject, see John Dugard, 'Diplomatic Protection', in Rüdiger Wolfrum, ed., the Max Planck Encyclopedia of Public International Law, Vol. III, Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2012, pp. 114–34, at pp. 125–7.

⁹⁷ Scoppola v. Italy (no. 2) [GC], no. 10249/03, § 70, 17 September 2009; Aksoy v. Turkey, 18 December 1996, § 52, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-VI; Ocalan v. Turkey [GC], no. 46221/99, § 67, ECHR 2005-IV; Van Oosterwijck v. Belgium, 6 November 1980, §§ 36–41, Series A no. 40.

⁹⁸ Selmouni v. France [GC], no. 25803/94, § 76, ECHR 1999-V.

⁹⁹ Jeličić v. Bosnia and Herzegovina (dec.), no. 41183/02, 15 November 2005.

interpretation, notably by declaratory action.¹⁰⁰ The role of constitutional remedies depends on the law of the national jurisdiction, where it is difficult to make too many generalizations. In Italy, there is no direct access to the Constitutional Court by an individual litigant. The latter must raise constitutional issues before the regular courts, failing which the application to the European Court may be deemed inadmissible on the exhaustion ground.¹⁰¹ Exceptionally, a constitutional remedy might be deemed effective where the impugned decision of the domestic courts was one that directly applied an unconstitutional provision of the national law.¹⁰² As a general rule, resort to discretionary or extraordinary remedies as part of the exhaustion of domestic remedies is not expected of applicants.¹⁰³

What is important is that the complaint be raised 'at least in substance',¹⁰⁴ although the Convention itself need not necessarily be invoked at the domestic level. In cases filed by Greek Cypriots against Turkey regarding property in the occupied zone of the island, the Court rejected an argument from Cyprus, which intervened in the proceedings pursuant to article 36. Cyprus contended that 'property owners who had not voluntarily submitted to the jurisdiction of Turkey could not be required to use Turkish remedies in respect of acts which were in violation of their rights outside Turkey's lawful jurisdiction'. It argued that to do otherwise would suggest that 'the aggressor would be treated as if it had the power to abrogate private rights and create new legal procedures; it was thus contrary to principle to insist that victims of an illegal armed invasion must first exhaust procedures imposed on them by the invader'.¹⁰⁵ The Grand Chamber held that 'there is no direct, or automatic correlation of the issue of recognition of the "[Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus]" and its purported assumption of sovereignty over northern Cyprus on an international plane and the application of Article 35 § 1 of the Convention'.¹⁰⁶

Where the procedural law imposed a fine upon the losing party in an application to revise a judgment, even where no misconduct or abuse was alleged or present, the European Court considered this to be incompatible with article 35(1).¹⁰⁷

Normally, the Court will assess the issue of exhaustion as of the date when the application is filed with the Court, but this rule is subject to exceptions if new remedies are created.¹⁰⁸

¹⁰⁰ A, B, and C v. Ireland [GC], no. 25579/05, § 142, ECHR 2010; Patrick Holland v. Ireland, no. 24827/94, Commission decision of 14 April 1998, (1998) 41 YB 90, DR 93, p. 15; Independent News and Media and Independent Newspapers Ireland Limited v. Ireland (dec.), no. 55120/00, 19 June 2003; D v. Ireland (dec.), no. 26499/02, 28 June 2006.

¹⁰¹ Scoppola v. Italy (no. 2) [GC], no. 10249/03, § 75, 17 September 2009; Brozicek v. Italy, 19 December 1989, § 34, Series A no. 167; C.I.G.L. and Cofferati v. Italy, no. 46967/07, § 48, 24 February 2009.

¹⁰² Szot-Medyńska v. Poland (dec.), no. 47414/99, 9 October 2003; Pachla v. Poland (dec.), no. 8812/02, 8 November 2005.

¹⁰³ Kiskinen v. Finland (dec.) no. 26323/95, ECHR 1999-V; Prystavka v. Ukraine, no. 21287/02, 17 December 2002.

¹⁰⁴ Castells v. Spain, 23 April 1992, § 32, Series A no. 236; Ahmet Sadık v. Greece, 15 November 1996, § 33, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-V; Fresoz and Roire v. France [GC], no. 29183/95, §§ 40–41, ECHR 1999–I; Azinas v. Cyprus [GC], no. 56679/00, §§ 40–41, ECHR 2004–III.

¹⁰⁵ Demopoulos and Others v. Turkey (dec.) [GC], nos 46113/99, 3843/02, 13751/02, 13466/03, 10200/04, 14163/04, 19993/04, and 21819/04, § 101, ECHR 2010.

¹⁰⁶ Ibid., § 100.

¹⁰⁷ Prencipe v. Monaco, no. 43376/06, § 96, 16 July 2009.

¹⁰⁸ Demiroğlu and Others v. Turkey (dec.), no. 56125/10, 4 June 2013; Demopoulos and Others v. Turkey (dec.) [GC], nos 46113/99, 3843/02, 13751/02, 13466/03, 10200/04, 14163/04, 19993/04, and 21819/04, § 87, ECHR 2010; Baumann v. France, no. 33592/96, § 47, ECHR 2001–V; Brusco v. Italy (dec.), no. 69789/

Six-month rule (art. 35(1))

The Court may only deal with a case 'within a period of six months from the date on which the final decision was taken'. Protocol No. 15, not yet in force, amends article 35(1), reducing the time limit from six months to four.¹⁰⁹ As legal time limits go with respect to challenging adverse decisions in the course of litigation, even four months is rather generous. The object of the Convention's time limit is to promote legal certainty and security of the law, thereby ensuring 'that cases raising issues under the Convention are dealt with in a reasonable time and that past decisions are not continually open to challenge'.¹¹⁰ Because the six-month time limit serves such interests, it cannot be waived by the State. The Court will enforce the rule even if the State has not made a preliminary objection on the point.¹¹¹ It also 'protect[s] the authorities and other persons concerned from being under uncertainty for a prolonged period of time'.¹¹² Furthermore, '[t]he rule also affords the prospective applicant time to consider whether to lodge an application and, if so, to decide on the specific complaints and arguments to be raised'.¹¹³ The six-month time limit 'marks out the temporal limits of supervision carried out by the organs of the Convention and signals to both individuals and State authorities the period beyond which such supervision is no longer possible'.¹¹⁴ According to the Court, 'the purpose of limitations ratione temporis is to preclude the possibility of submitting to the Court, by means of an application, facts dating from a period when the respondent State was not in a position to foresee the international responsibility or legal proceedings to which these facts might give rise'.¹¹⁵ Judgments of the Court have also said that the six-month rule 'ensures that, insofar as possible, matters are examined while they are still fresh, before the passage of time makes it difficult to ascertain the pertinent facts and renders a fair examination of the question at issue almost impossible'.¹¹⁶ In cases 'where time is of the essence', there is a burden on the applicant to ensure that his or her claims are raised 01, ECHR 2001-IX; Andrdšik and Others v. Slovakia (dec.), nos 57984/00, 60226/00, 60237/00, 60242/00, 60679/00, 60680/00, and 68563/01, ECHR 2002-IX; İçyer v. Turkey (dec.) no. 18888/02, ECHR 2006-I.

¹⁰⁹ Protocol No. 15 amending the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, art. 4.

¹¹⁰ Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, § 156, ECHR 2009; Walker v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 34979/97, ECHR 2000-I.

¹¹¹ Blečić v. Croatia [GC], no. 59532/00, § 67, ECHR 2006-III; Belaousof and Others v. Greece, no. 66296/01, § 38, 27 May 2004; Walker v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 34979/97, ECHR 2000-I; Šilih v. Slovenia [GC], no. 71463/01, § 139, 9 April 2009; Benet Praha, Spol.S.R.O. v. Czech Republic (dec.), no. 38354/06, 28 September 2010.

¹¹² P.M. v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 6638/03, 24 August 2004.

¹¹³ O'Loughlin and Others v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 23274/04, 25 August 2005. Also Worm v. Austria, 29 August 1997, § 32, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-V; Edwards v. the United Kingdom (dec.), 46477/99, 7 June 2001.

¹¹⁴ Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, § 156, ECHR 2009; Walker v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 34979/97, ECHR 2000-I; Di Giorgio and Others v. Italy (dec.), no. 35808/03, 29 September 2009; Cheilas v. Greece (dec.), no. 9693/03, 12 May 2005.

¹¹⁵ Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, § 157, ECHR 2009; Dennis and Others v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 76573/01, 2 July 2002; Blečić v. Croatia [GC], no. 59532/00, § 68, ECHR 2006-III.

¹¹⁶ Williams v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 32567/06, 17 February 2009; Baybora and Others v. Cyprus (dec.), no. 77116/01, 22 October 2002; Denisov v. Russia (dec.), no. 33408/03, 6 May 2004; Kelly v. the United Kingdom, no. 10626/83, Commission decision of 7 May 1985.

before the Court with the necessary expedition to ensure that they may be properly, and fairly, resolved'.¹¹⁷

The six-month period begins when the domestic remedies have been exhausted.¹¹⁸ The operative date (the dies a quo) should be when the parties are in a position to know the full content of the decision and not just the conclusions or the result.¹¹⁹ In establishing the date of the final decision in order to determine when the six-month period starts, the Court relies upon national procedural law. For example, where the domestic law clearly and expressly provides that a litigant is entitled to be served with a written copy of a final judgment as a condition for its validity, the six-month period to file an application will only begin when this has taken place.¹²⁰ The applicant cannot contend that he or she was not specifically informed if the lawyer had been made aware of the contents of the judgment.¹²¹ The legal representative, and the applicant, must show due diligence in obtaining the judgment.¹²²

The applicant is only required to undertake remedies that are likely to be effective and sufficient, a matter discussed above in this chapter with respect to the requirement of exhaustion of domestic remedies. The applicant cannot prolong or delay the six-month time limit by filing appeals or similar proceedings that have no hope of success.¹²³ In a case against the United Kingdom, after losing an appeal to the Court of Appeal the applicant then filed yet another appeal to the House of Lords. However, the House of Lords was without jurisdiction and this final appeal was futile and to no avail. The Court held that the six months began to run with the judgment of Court of Appeal rather than the final dismissal by the House of Lords. '[A]n applicant cannot extend the strict time-limit imposed under the Convention by seeking to make inappropriate or misconceived applications to bodies or institutions which have no power or competence to offer effective redress for the complaint in issue under the Convention', said the Court.¹²⁴ Similar principles apply with respect to extraordinary remedies, retrial, and other procedural mechanisms,¹²⁵ as well as remedies that depend upon administrative discretion.¹²⁶ These are not required by the rule of exhaustion of domestic remedies and therefore do

¹¹⁷ El Masri v. 'the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia' [GC], no. 39630/09, § 134, ECHR 2012; Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, § 160, ECHR 2009.

¹¹⁸ Kadiyis v. Latvia (no. 2) (dec.), no. 62393/00, 25 September 2003.

¹¹⁹ Perry v. Latvia (dec.), no. 30273/03, 18 January 2007; Papachelas v. Greece [GC], no. 31423/96, § 30, ECHR 1999-II; Z.Y. v. Turkey (dec.), no. 27532/95, 19 June 2001; Haralambidis and Others v. Greece, no. 36706/97, § 38, 29 March 2001; Kāns and Others v. Latvia (dec.), no. 57823/00, 9 October 2003. But see Koç and Tosun v. Turkey (dec.), no. 23852/04, §§ 6–9, 13 November 2008.

¹²⁰ Worm v. Austria, 29 August 1997, §§ 32–34, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-V.

¹²¹ Çelik v. Turkey (dec.), no. 52991/99, 23 September 2004; Keskin and Others v. Turkey (dec.), no. 36091/97, 7 September 1999; Böyükbaş and Others v. Turkey (dec.), no. 37793/97, 12 October 1999; Pejić v. Croatia (dec.), no. 66894/01, 19 December 2002; Marrinus Godefridus Aarts v. the Netherlands, no. 14056/88, Commission decision of 28 May 1991, DR 70, p. 208.

¹²² Ölmez v. Turkey (dec.), no. 39464/98, 1 February 2005 (revised by Ölmez v. Turkey (dec.), no. 39464/98, 5 July 2005).

¹²³ Şahmo v. Turkey (dec.), no. 37415/97, 1 April 2003; Moyo Alvarez v. Spain (dec.), no. 44677/98, 23 November 1999.

¹²⁴ Fernie v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 14881/04, 5 January 2006.

¹²⁵ Williams v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 32567/06, 17 February 2009; Galstyan v. Armenia, no. 26986/03, § 39, 15 November 2007; Denisov v. Russia (dec.), no. 33408/03, 6 May 2004.

¹²⁶ Tamilovich v. Russia (dec.), no. 47033/99, 2 June 1999; Gurepka v. Ukraine, no. 61406/00, § 60, 6 September 2005.

not interrupt the six-month time limit.¹²⁷ The Court is not impressed by the claim of a self-represented litigant alleging ignorance of the scope and modalities of available domestic remedies.¹²⁸

In some circumstances, it will be clear from the outset that there is no effective remedy available to the applicant. In such cases, the six-month period starts to run from the date of the acts or measures complained of, or from the date of knowledge of that act or its effect on, or prejudice to, the applicant.¹²⁹ An applicant may proceed to exhaust domestic remedies only to become aware subsequently that the mechanism is ineffective. Under such circumstances, it may be appropriate to take the start of the six-month period from the date when the applicant first became or ought to have become aware of those circumstances.¹³⁰

The Court considers that the time limit is interrupted when the applicant sends an initial letter indicating an intention to lodge an application that provides some indication of the nature of the application.¹³¹ Nevertheless, the applicant must then proceed with diligence in providing further information about the application and in submitting the application form.¹³² As the Court has noted, '[i]t would be contrary to the spirit and aim of the six-month rule if, by any initial communication, an application could set into motion the proceedings under the Convention and then remain inactive for an unexplained and unlimited length of time'.¹³³ The Court will therefore 'examine the particular circumstances of the case to determine what date should be regarded as the date of introduction with a view to calculating the running of the six month period imposed by Article 35 of the Convention'.¹³⁴ Among the factors that it will consider are the originality of the complaint and the need for legal research to be conducted, the overall complexity of the case, and the number of parties involved.¹³⁵ The time limit is calculated in calendar months. It starts to run the day following the final decision, and expires on the same day of the month six months later. Unlike the situation in some domestic systems, there is no rule at the Court whereby if the final day falls on a weekend or a holiday this is not counted and the time limit expires on the next working day.¹³⁶

¹²⁷ Williams v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 32567/06, 17 February 2009; Galstyan v. Armenia, no. 26986/03, § 39, 15 November 2007.

¹²⁸ Fernie v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 14881/04, 5 January 2006.

¹²⁹ Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, § 157, ECHR 2009; Dennis and Others v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 76573/01, 2 July 2002; O'Loughlin and Others v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 23274/04, 25 August 2005.

¹³⁰ Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, § 157, ECHR 2009; Edwards v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 46477/99, 4 June 2001; Keenan v. the United Kingdom, no. 27229/95, Commission decision of 22 May 1998.

¹³¹ P.M. v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 6638/03, 24 August 2004; Kemevutaku v. the Netherlands (dec.), no. 65938/09, § 19, 1 June 2010; Barankevich v. Russia (dec.), no. 10519/03, 20 October 2005; Chalkley v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 63831/00, 26 September 2002; Sergey Kuznetsov v. Russia, no. 10877/04, § 27, 23 October 2008.

¹³² Olivier Gaillard v. France (dec.), no. 47337/99, 11 July 2000; Franz Hofstädter v. Austria (dec.), no. 25407/94, 12 September 2000; Bulut and Yavuz v. Turkey (dec.), no. 73065/01, 28 May 2002.

¹³³ P.M. v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 6638/03, 24 August 2004.

¹³⁴ Ibid.

¹³⁵ Nee v. Ireland (dec.), no. 52787/99, 30 January 2003.

¹³⁶ Orto v. Germany (dec.), no. 21425/06, 10 November 2009; Benet Praha, Spol.S.R.O. v. Czech Republic (dec.), no. 38354/06, 28 September 2010; Poslu and Others v. Turkey, nos 6162/04, 6297/04, 6304/04, 6305/04, 6149/04, 9724/04, and 9733/04, § 5, 8 June 2010.

Where there is a continuing violation, the six-month time limit does not apply.¹³⁷ Because there is an on-going breach, 'the time-limit in effect starts afresh each day and it is only once the situation ceases that the final period of six months will run to its end'.¹³⁸

Cases involving the procedural obligations associated with articles 2 and 3 of the Convention raise special issues. Given that the complaint is based on the failure to pursue an adequate investigation, the date at which it became clear that the State was not taking the appropriate steps falls to be determined. In a case involving the procedural obligation associated with the right to life, where relatives of the victim invoke the duty on the State to investigate the circumstances of a death in suspicious circumstances, the applicants must 'take steps to keep track of the investigation's progress, or lack thereof, and to lodge their applications with due expedition once they are, or should have become, aware of the lack of any effective criminal investigation'.¹³⁹ A similar approach applies in disappearance cases,¹⁴⁰ where applicants 'cannot wait indefinitely before coming to Strasbourg'.¹⁴¹ According to the Grand Chamber, applications concerning disappearances can be rejected as out of time where there has been excessive or unexplained delay by the applications. As long as there are initiatives being pursued, or some 'meaningful contact between families and authorities concerning complaints and requests for information', the issue of undue delay will not arise. But there will come a moment when it is apparent that there will be no effective investigation. If the applicants fail to react at this point by filing their application with the Court, they risk losing their rights under the Convention.¹⁴² Dissenting on this point, Judge Ziemele wrote: 'Non-application of the six months rule to breaches of international obligations having a continuing character, especially when we deal with such crimes as enforced disappearance, serves the important purpose of preventing the perpetrators from enjoying impunity for such acts.'¹⁴³

Anonymous applications (art. 35(2)(a))

An anonymous application is not to be dealt with by the Court. This condition, which should not in principle raise any particular problems, has nevertheless given rise to some judicial decisions. The Rules of Court permit an applicant to request anonymity.¹⁴⁴ This seems to be granted upon request without much difficulty.¹⁴⁵ Although the applicant is ¹³⁷ Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, § 159, ECHR 2009; Agrotexim Hellos S.A., Biotex S.A., Hymofix Hellas S.A., Kykladiki S.A., Mepex S.A., and Texema S.A. v. Greece, no. 14807/89, Commission decision of 12 February 1991, (1992) 35 YB 39, DR 71, p. 148; Cone v. Romania, no. 35935/02, § 22, 24 June 2008.

¹³⁸ Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, § 159, ECHR 2009.

¹³⁹ Ibid., § 158; Bulus and Yavuz v. Turkey (dec.), no. 73065/01, 28 May 2002; also Bayram and Yıldırım v. Turkey (dec.), no. 38587/97, ECHR 2002-III.

¹⁴⁰ Eren and Others v. Turkey (dec.), no. 42428/98, 4 July 2002; Uçak and Kargılı and Others v. Turkey (dec.), nos 75527/01 and 11837/02, 28 March 2006.

¹⁴¹ Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, § 158, ECHR 2009.

¹⁴² Ibid., § 165. See also Gutiérrez Dorado and Dorado Ortiz v. Spain (dec.), no 30141/09, §§ 37–42, 27 March 2012.

¹⁴³ Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, Concurring Opinion of Judge Ziemele, § 10, ECHR 2009. But see Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, Concurring Opinion of Judge Villiger, ECHR 2009.

¹⁴⁴ Rules of Court, Rule 47(4).

¹⁴⁵ A v. Croatia, no. 55164/08, § 1, 14 October 2010; A, B, and C v. Ireland [GC], no. 25579/05, § 1, ECHR 2010.

required to sign the application form, if this has been omitted it does not lead to inadmissibility as long as the materials submitted to the Court contain personal details sufficient for the person to be identified.¹⁴⁶ An application introduced by an organization claiming to act on behalf of its members, who were not named or otherwise identified, but that invoked no violation against itself amounted to an anonymous application.¹⁴⁷

In 'Blondje' v. the Netherlands, the Court issued a decision declaring the case inadmissible because the applicant's identity was not disclosed. It noted that in the forms and documents submitted, the applicant—whom the Court called 'he', possibly implying that it knew something about 'him'—was referred to only as 'Blondje', 'NN cel 07', and 'Nn. P109.m.20081101.1100'. The authority to act that was submitted was signed 'X'.¹⁴⁸ A very early decision of the European Commission declared inadmissible an application that was signed 'lover of tranquility', but only because there was nothing in the materials to permit proper identification of the applicant.¹⁴⁹

Russia challenged several applications that had been submitted by allegedly authorized representatives who used simulated signatures on the grounds that they were anonymous. The State contended that applications introduced by persons using multiple identities or pseudonyms were in fact anonymous. In fact, much information had been provided about the applicants, who were quite open about the fact that their initial submission employed pseudonyms. The Court rejected Russia's objection, noting that '[à] l'exception de leurs vrais noms, les requérants fournirent un grand nombre d'éléments factuels et juridiques permettant à la Cour de les identifier par rapport aux faits litigieux et aux griefs invoqués'.¹⁵⁰ Acknowledging that pseudonyms were used in the application, and that real names were only provided subsequently, the Court said that 'derrière les tactiques de dissimulation des vraies identités pour des raisons que l'on peut comprendre, se trouvent des personnes réelles, concrètes et identifiables par un nombre suffisant d'indices, autres que leurs noms'.¹⁵¹

Substantially the same (art. 35(2)(b))

The Court will not consider an application that is 'substantially the same as a matter that has already been examined by the Court'. In applying this rule concerning redundant cases, the Court is required to ascertain whether two applications brought before it 'relate essentially to the same person, the same facts and the same complaints'.¹⁵² In order to be 'substantially the same', the application must be introduced by the same persons.¹⁵³

¹⁴⁶ Kusnetsova v. Russia (dec.), no. 67579/01, 19 January 2006.

¹⁴⁷ Federation of French Medical Trade Unions and the National Federation of Nurses v. France, no. 10983/84, Commission decision of 12 May 1986.

¹⁴⁸ 'Blondje' v. the Netherlands (dec.), no. 7245/09, 15 September 2009.

¹⁴⁹ X v. Ireland, no. 361/58, Commission decision of 1 September 1958.

¹⁵⁰ Shamayev and Others v. Georgia and Russia (dec.), no. 36378/02, 16 September 2002. Also Shamayev and Others v. Georgia and Russia, no. 36378/02, § 275, ECHR 2005-III.

¹⁵¹ Shamayev and Others v. Georgia and Russia (dec.), no. 36378/02, 16 September 2002.

¹⁵² Verein gegen Tierfabriken Schweiz (VgT) v. Switzerland (no. 2) [GC], no. 32772/02, § 63, ECHR 2009; Pauger v. Austria, no. 24872/94, Commission decision of 9 January 1995, DR 80-A, p. 170; Folgero and Others v. Norway (dec.), no. 15472/02, 14 February 2006.

¹⁵³ Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, § 118, ECHR 2009; Folgero and Others v. Norway (dec.), no. 15472/02, 14 February 2006; Malsagova and Others v. Russia (dec.), no. 27244/03, 6 March 2008.

Consequently, an inter-State application cannot form an obstacle to an individual application, even if the subject matter is quite similar.¹⁵⁴

In considering whether a complaint is substantially the same, it should be borne in mind that the Court is not bound by the characterization given by the applicant. It can raise legal issues that arise from the facts, even if these have not been invoked by the parties.¹⁵⁵ The Court can address the issue on its own initiative even before the respondent State has been informed of the application to the extent that part or all of a complaint is substantially similar to an earlier filing.¹⁵⁶ In an application dealing with provisional detention, an objection by Turkey based upon redundancy was dismissed. The applicant was the same in three cases, but the subject matter was quite different.¹⁵⁷

The owner of an apartment building in Berlin filed successive applications to the European Commission concerning essentially the same complaint about taxation, but after the first application was declared inadmissible he submitted a second concerning a different tenant. The Commission noted that 'le fond de la cause étant essentiellement le même, celle-ci a donné lieu à une procédure identique devant les Tribunaux berlinois' and that the applicant 'réitère les griefs, dirigés notamment contre la législation des loyers, régissant son immeuble, qu'il a déjà formulés dans la requête No. 1169/61, que l'argumentation du requérant n'apporte aucun élément de nature à modifier essentiellement les données de base de la situation légale à la vue de laquelle la Commission avait décliné sa compétence quant à la requête'.¹⁵⁸

If new information is submitted with the subsequent filing, the application will not be viewed as 'essentially the same'. In Chappex v. Switzerland, the European Commission accepted a second application concerning violations of article 6 in the dismissal of an employee. The applicant complained about different judicial proceedings than those addressed in the first submission.¹⁵⁹ In another case where new information was submitted, the Commission said it found 'nothing in this information which could alter the basis on which its previous decisions, in particular the decision on Application No. 16964/90, were taken and does not see any reason to reopen the case'.¹⁶⁰ On the other hand, the Commission declined to declare inadmissible individual applications concerning missing persons in occupied Cyprus, despite the existence of an inter-State application dealing with the same issue, because new information had been submitted.¹⁶¹

¹⁵⁴ Ibid.

¹⁵⁵ Guerra and Others v. Italy, 19 February 1998, § 44, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-I; Powell and Rayner v. the United Kingdom, 21 February 1990, § 29, Series A no. 172; Scoppola v. Italy (no. 2) [GC], no. 10249/03, § 54, 17 September 2009.

¹⁵⁶ Dinç v. Turkey (dec.), no. 42437/98, 22 November 2001; Clinique Mozart SARL v. France (dec.), no. 46098/99, 1 July 2003; Rupa v. Romania (dec.), no. 37971/02, 23 February 2010; Coscodar v. Romania (dec.), no. 36020/06, § 27, 9 March 2010; Serue v. France (dec.), no. 38642/97, 4 May 2000.

¹⁵⁷ Sadak v. Turkey, nos 251421/94 and 27099/95, §§ 30–33, 8 April 2004 (regarding Sadak and Others v. Turkey (no. 1), nos 29900/96, 29901/96, 29902/96, and 29903/96, ECHR 2001-VIII and Sadak and Others v. Turkey (no. 2), nos 25144/94, 26149/95 to 26154/95, 27100/95, and 27101/95, ECHR 2002-IV.) Also Yurttas v. Turkey, nos 25143/94 and 27098/95, §§ 36–37, 27 May 2004 (regarding Sadak and Others v. Turkey (no. 2), nos 25144/94, 26149/95 to 26154/95, 27100/95, and 27101/95, ECHR 2002-IV.)

¹⁵⁸ X v. Federal Republic of Germany, no. 2606/65, Commission decision of 1 April 1968.

¹⁵⁹ Chappex v. Switzerland, no. 20338/92, Commission decision of 12 October 1994.

¹⁶⁰ Adesina v. France, no. 31398/96, Commission decision of 13 September 1996.

¹⁶¹ Varnava and Others v. Turkey, nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, Commission decision of 14 April 1998.

Submission to another international body (art. 35(2)(b))

When the European Convention was adopted in 1950 it was difficult to speak of international procedures for the enforcement of human rights. The United Nations Commission on Human Rights had already stumbled on the point as it was negotiating the International Bill of Rights. A number of proposals existed, including one for the establishment of a world human rights court,¹⁶² but while the United Nations organs were able to adopt rather quickly a concise declaration of rights without any implementation mechanism, the issue of enforcement was postponed for almost two decades. The drafters of the European Convention were mainly concerned with recourse to the International Court of Justice as well as to international arbitration. Moreover, they were thinking essentially of inter-State complaints rather than individual petitions. They could not have imagined the proliferation of human rights mechanisms that would be created over the decades that followed. Nevertheless, they anticipated something that was barely an issue in 1950 but that is today a very real challenge when they declared that the Convention organs could not deal with any application that had already been investigated or was being investigated by an international body. According to the case law, the purpose of the provision is to avoid a multiplicity of international procedures concerning the same case.¹⁶³

The rule does not apply if the applicant before the Court and the complainant before the other international body are not the same,¹⁶⁴ or if one of the petitions was formulated by a non-governmental organization without clear authorization by the actual victim.¹⁶⁵ In establishing whether the complaint is the same, the factors considered by the Court in application of the first part of article 35(2)(b) are very relevant.¹⁶⁶ These include the time frame of the complaint.¹⁶⁷ In a case where an organization representing the interests of employers challenged legislation and measures before the European Committee of Social Rights, individual petitions from workers dealing with the same issue were not held to be inadmissible because the organization did not represent their interests.¹⁶⁸ Where trade unions have applied to the International Labour Organisation, the case law is inconsistent with respect to individual applications to the Convention organs filed by individual workers.¹⁶⁹

The provision is only applicable if another 'international body' has been involved in a complaint concerning the right. In establishing this, the Court has said that the legal ¹⁶² An unfulfilled idea that is still alive: Manfred Nowak, 'It's Time for a World Court of Human Rights', in Cherif Bassiouni and William Schabas, eds, New Challenges for the UN Human Rights Machinery, What Future for the UN Treaty Body System and the Human Rights Council Procedures?, Antwerp: Intersentia, 2011, pp. 17–34.

¹⁶³ Celniku v. Greece, no. 21449/04, § 39, 5 July 2007; Calcerrada Fornieles et Cabeza Mato v. Spain, no. 17512/90, Commission decision of 6 July 1992, (1992) 35 YB 63, DR 73, p. 214; Cereceda Martin v. Spain, no. 16358/90, Commission decision of 12 October 1992, DR 73, p. 120; Smirnova and Smirnova v. Russia (dec.), nos 46133/99 and 48183/99, 3 October 2002.

¹⁶⁴ Celniku v. Greece, no. 21449/04, § 40, 5 July 2007; Folgero and Others v. Norway (dec.), no. 15472/02, 14 February 2006.

¹⁶⁵ Malsagova and Others v. Russia (dec.), no. 27244/03, 6 March 2008. Also Illiu and Others v. Belgium (dec.), no. 14301/08, 19 May 2009.

¹⁶⁶ QAO Neftyanaya Kompaniya Yukos v. Russia, no. 14902/04, §§ 519–526, 20 September 2011.

¹⁶⁷ Patara v. Czech Republic (dec.), no. 25326/03, § 2.2, 10 January 2006.

¹⁶⁸ Evaldsson and Others v. Sweden (dec.), no. 75252/01, 28 March 2006.

¹⁶⁹ Cereceda Martin v. Spain, no. 16358/90, Commission decision of 12 October 1992, DR 73, p. 120; Council of Civil Service Unions and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 11603/85, Commission decision of 20 December 1987, DR 50, p. 228.

character of the instrument founding the body is the logical starting-point for its assessment. It will take into account the body's composition, its competence, its place (if any) in an existing legal system, and its funding. The purpose of the exercise is to identify 'the essential nature of the body', something the Court says is 'determinative of the issue'.¹⁷⁰ For example, the Human Rights Chamber of Bosnia and Herzegovina did not constitute an international body contemplated by article 35(2)(b), although it was created as a consequence of an international treaty, had an international composition involving foreign judges, and received international funding.¹⁷¹ A complaint to a non-governmental organization does not fall within the scope of the provision of the Convention. Admissibility objections concerning bodies like the Inter-Parliamentary Union have been rejected.¹⁷²

The procedure itself must be judicial or quasi-judicial and similar to what is offered under the Convention.¹⁷³ The Court must determine 'si la nature de l'organe de contrôle, la procédure suivie par celui-ci et l'effet de ses décisions sont tels que l'article 35 § 2 b) exclut la compétence de la Cour'.¹⁷⁴ They must be 'procedures in which a matter is submitted by way of "a petition" lodged formally or substantively by the applicant'.¹⁷⁵ The Convention organs have recognized that the United Nations Human Rights Committee,¹⁷⁶ the Committee on Freedom of Association of the International Labour Organisation¹⁷⁷ and the United Nations Working Group on Arbitrary Detention¹⁷⁸ provide such a procedure. However, the so-called '1503 Procedure', an early mechanism for monitoring gross violations of human rights by the United Nations Commission on Human Rights and the Human Rights Council set up by the Economic and Social Council in 1970,¹⁷⁹ has been considered to deal with situations rather than individual

¹⁷⁰ Jeličić v. Bosnia and Herzegovina (dec.), no. 41183/02, 15 November 2005.

¹⁷¹ Ibid.

¹⁷² Andrei Karlov Lukanov v. Bulgaria, no. 21915/93, Commission decision of 12 January 1995, (1995) 38 YB 55, DR 80-B, p. 108.

¹⁷³ Mikolenko v. Estonia (dec.), no. 16944/03, 5 January 2006; Zagaria v. Italy (dec.), no. 24408/03, 3 June 2008; Andrei Karlov Lukanov v. Bulgaria, no. 21915/93, Commission decision of 12 January 1995, (1995) 38 YB 55, DR 80-B, p. 108.

¹⁷⁴ Peraldi v. France (dec.), no. 2096/05, 7 April 2009.

¹⁷⁵ Varnava and Others v. Turkey, nos 16064–66/90 and 16068–73/90, Commission decision of 14 April 1998, DR 93-A, p. 5; Malsagova and Others v. Russia (dec.), no. 27244/03, 6 March 2008.

¹⁷⁶ Patera v. Czech Republic (dec.), no. 25326/03, § 2.1, 10 January 2006; Calcerrada Fornieles et Cabeza Mato v. Spain, no. 17512/90, Commission decision of 6 July 1992, (1992) 35 YB 63, DR 73, p. 214; Pauger v. Austria, no. 24872/94, Commission decision of 9 January 1995, DR 80-A, p. 170; C. W. v. Finland, no. 17230/90, Commission decision of 9 October 1991. In Yağmurdereli v. Turkey (dec.), no. 29590/96, 13 February 2001, the Court noted that the State had not ratified the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. Consequently, the applicant before the Court could not have availed himself of the right of individual petition provided to the Human Rights Committee by the Protocol. Several decisions by the Human Rights Committee have dealt with related applications to the European Convention organs: Kollar v. Austria, no. 989/2001, UN Doc. CCPR/C/78/D/989/2001; Peterson v. Germany, no. 1115/2002, UN Doc. CCPR/C/80/D/1115/2002; Mahabir v. Austria, no. 944/2000, UN Doc. CCPR/C/82/D/944/2000; Loth v. Germany, no. 1754/2008, UN Doc. CCPR/C/98/D/1754/2008.

¹⁷⁷ Council of Civil Service Unions and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 11603/85, Commission decision of 20 January 1987, DR 50, p. 228; Cereceda Martin and Others v. Spain, no. 16358/90, Commission decision of 12 October 1992, DR 73, p. 120.

¹⁷⁸ Peraldi v. France (dec.), no. 2096/05, 7 April 2009; Illiu and Others v. Belgium (dec.), no. 14301/08, 19 May 2009.

¹⁷⁹ UN Doc. E/RES/1504 (XLVIII). In 2006, the Human Rights Council replaced the Commission on Human Rights. The Council introduced a new complaint procedure to address consistent patterns of gross and reliably attested violations of all human rights and all fundamental freedoms occurring in any part of the world

complaints and therefore falls outside the scope of article 35(2)(b). The European Court characterized the United Nations Commission on Human Rights as an inter-governmental organ composed of State representatives rather than an independent body comprised of experts or judges.¹⁸⁰ Similarly, the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances set up by the United Nations Commission on Human Rights fails to fulfil the requirements of article 35(2)(b). It does not investigate disappearances or provide relatives with legal means of redress, and cannot attribute responsibility.¹⁸¹ Nor is the European Committee for the Prevention of Torture and Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, a Council of Europe organ with a preventive mission, a body falling under article 35(2)(b). Individual complainants have no right to participate in the procedure before the European Committee, nor are they entitled to be informed of recommendations that it makes unless a decision is taken to the contrary.¹⁸² Similarly, a complaint to the European Commission, which is the executive organ of the European Union, is not a mechanism contemplated by article 35(2)(b).¹⁸³ The fact that a special rapporteur established by a United Nations body may interview and report on the case of an individual does not suffice to obstruct admissibility under article 35(2)(b).¹⁸⁴

If there has been no final decision from the other international body to which an application has been made, the application to the Court will survive to the extent that the competing petition is discontinued. According to the Court, 'it is not the date of such a step that is decisive, but whether a decision on the merits has already been taken by the time the Court examines the case'.¹⁸⁵

Incompatible with provisions of the Convention (art. 35(3)(a))

Sub-paragraph 3(a) of article 35 lists three grounds of inadmissibility that apply to individual applications, of which the first is incompatibility with the provisions of the Convention. This refers to jurisdictional matters rather than the merits of the application, something considered under the 'manifestly ill-founded' heading. The main dimensions of jurisdiction—personal (ratione personae), territorial (ratione loci) and temporal (ratione temporis)—are considered in detail in the chapter on article 1 of the Convention in this Commentary. Subject-matter (ratione materiae) jurisdiction, which is governed by article 32 of the Convention, is addressed in the individual chapters of this Commentary dealing and under any circumstances: Institution-building of the United Nations Human Rights Council, UN Doc. A/CHR/RES/5/1, Annex, paras. 85–87.

¹⁸⁰ Mikolenko v. Estonia (dec.), no. 16944/03, 5 January 2006; Celniku v. Greece, no. 21449/04, § 40, 5 July 2007.

¹⁸¹ Malsagova and Others v. Russia (dec.), no. 27244/03, 6 March 2008.

¹⁸² De Pace v. Italy, no. 22728/03, §§ 24–29, 17 July 2008; Gallo v. Italy (dec.), no. 24406/03, 7 July 2009; Zagaría v. Italy (dec.), no. 24408/03, 3 June 2008; Annunziata v. Italy (dec.), no. 24423/03, 7 July 2009; Genovese v. Italy (dec.), no. 24407/03, 10 November 2009; Stolder v. Italy, no. 24418/03, §§ 16–19, 1 December 2009.

¹⁸³ Karoussiotis v. Portugal, no. 23205/08, §§ 65–76, ECHR 2011 (extracts).

¹⁸⁴ Yağmurdereli v. Turkey (dec.), no. 29590/96, 13 February 2001; Illiu and Others v. Belgium (dec.), no. 14301/08, 19 May 2009.

¹⁸⁵ National Union of Rail, Maritime, and Transport Workers v. the United Kingdom, no. 31045/10, § 48, 8 April 2014; Peraldi v. France (dec.), no. 2096/05, 7 April 2009; Professional Trades Union for Prison, Correctional, and Secure Psychiatric Workers and Others v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 59253/11, 21 May 2013.

with substantive rights. When jurisdiction is concerned, the Court must address the question even if the parties do not.¹⁸⁶

Manifestly ill-founded application (art. 35(3)(a))

The second criterion of inadmissibility listed in article 35(3)(a) is the manifestly ill-founded nature of the application. This provision has provided the Convention organs with broad authority to dismiss applications that did not disclose any likelihood of a violation of a protected right. In that sense, when the Court examines whether an application is manifestly ill-founded, in reality it is making a preliminary ruling on the merits of the application. The essence of this stage of the proceedings can only be fully understood with reference to the drafting history of the Convention. It is quite clear that the manifestly ill-founded criterion of inadmissibility was intricately bound up with the role ascribed to the European Commission of Human Rights in filtering or 'sifting' cases that did not deserve the attention of the European Court. The decision of the Commission was final. If it declared part of an application inadmissible, the Court could not revive that part of the petition; it was bound by the inadmissibility ruling of the Commission. When the Convention organs were reformed by Protocol No. 11 and the Commission abolished, the filtering function pursuant to the manifestly ill-founded criterion passed to the Chambers and committees of the Court itself. The Court has continued to struggle with the application of the criterion, torn between the requirements of an increasingly burdensome caseload and the imperative of providing individualized justice to a huge number of applicants.

The vast majority of applications are found to be inadmissible on the ground that they are manifestly ill-founded, primarily by single judges or three-judge committees. Nevertheless, such a finding can also be made by a seven-judge Chamber and even, but only occasionally, by the Grand Chamber.¹⁸⁷ In some cases, there is a detailed examination of the entire case that makes a ruling on inadmissibility virtually indistinguishable from a full judgment on the merits.¹⁸⁸ It is only in the final words of such decisions, where the Court declares the application inadmissible rather than declaring that there is no violation of the Convention, that the distinction becomes apparent. The Court may declare some but not other parts of an application to be manifestly ill-founded.

Rejection of an application or a portion of an application on the grounds that it is ill-founded may be premised on the view that it is a 'fourth-instance' complaint. The Court is an institution that applies and enforces the Convention; it is not a court of appeal from decisions of the highest level of national courts. In other words, 'it is not the Court's role to assess itself the facts which have led a national court to adopt one decision rather than another. If it were otherwise, the Court would be acting as a court of third or fourth instance, which would be to disregard the limits imposed on its action.'¹⁸⁹ This is often misunderstood by litigants.

¹⁸⁶ Sejdić and Finci v. Bosnia and Herzegovina [GC], nos 27996/06 and 34836/06, § 27, ECHR 2009.

¹⁸⁷ Demopoulos and Others v. Turkey (dec.) [GC], nos 46113/99, 3843/02, 13751/02, 13466/03, 10200/04, 14163/04, 19993/04, and 21819/04, § 101, ECHR 2010; Von Malczan and Others v. Germany (dec.) [GC], nos 71916/01, 71917/01, and 10260/02, ECHR 2005-V; Gratzinger and Gratzingerova v. the Czech Republic (dec.) [GC], no. 39794/98, ECHR 2002-VII.

¹⁸⁸ For example, Mentzen alias Mencena v. Latvia (dec.), no. 71041/01, 7 December 2004.

¹⁸⁹ Kemmache v. France (no. 3), 24 November 1994, § 44, Series A no. 296-C; Mkrtychyan v. Armenia, no. 6562/03, § 43, 11 January 2007.

Applications that cite one or more provisions of the Convention but that do not explain the nature of the breach, unless this is obvious from the facts, will usually be regarded as manifestly ill-founded.¹⁹⁰ The Court considered a petition to be manifestly ill-founded when the applicant had been detained 'for only a few days' and where there was no evidence 'that during that time he suffered any hardship beyond that inherent in detention'.¹⁹¹

Abuse of the right of individual application (art. 35(3)(a))

Dismissal of a petition for abuse of the right of application is an 'exceptional procedural measure' that the Court will use with caution.¹⁹² If there is any hesitation, the option is to declare an application inadmissible on the ground that it is manifestly ill-founded.¹⁹³ The concept of abuse is to be taken in its ordinary meaning, namely, the harmful exercise of a right by its holder in a manner that is inconsistent with the purpose for which such right is granted.¹⁹⁴ A conclusion that the applicant has acted abusively 'requires not only manifest inconsistency with the purpose of the right of application but also some hindrance to the proper functioning of the Court or to the smooth conduct of the proceedings before it'.¹⁹⁵

Four categories of situation have been identified in the case law concerning abuse of the right of application. The first are applications involving outright dishonesty, or at the very least serious negligence in relations with the Court. A conclusion that the applicant has intentionally misled the Court must be established with sufficient certainty.¹⁹⁶ Examples include applications knowingly based upon untrue facts,¹⁹⁷ applications submitted under a false identity,¹⁹⁸ falsification of documents,¹⁹⁹ and a failure by the applicant to inform the Court of essential evidence²⁰⁰ or of major developments of significance in the course of the proceedings.²⁰¹ The Rules of Court require the applicant to provide notification of relevant developments.²⁰²

In the second category, an applicant will have used 'particularly vexatious, contemptuous, threatening or provocative expressions in his correspondence with the Court'.²⁰³

¹⁹⁰ Trofimchuk v. Ukraine (dec.), no. 4241/03, 31 May 2005.

¹⁹¹ A. and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 3455/05, § 123, ECHR 2009.

¹⁹² S.A.S. v. France [GC], no. 43835/11, § 66, 1 July 2014; Mirojubovs and Others v. Latvia, no. 798/05, § 62, 15 September 2009.

¹⁹³ Baillard v. France (dec.), no. 6032/04, 25 September 2008.

¹⁹⁴ S.A.S. v. France [GC], no. 43835/11, § 66, 1 July 2014; Mirojubovs and Others v. Latvia, no. 798/05, § 62, 15 September 2009.

¹⁹⁵ S.A.S. v. France [GC], no. 43835/11, § 66, 1 July 2014; Mirojubovs and Others v. Latvia, no. 798/05, § 65, 15 September 2009.

¹⁹⁶ Melnik v. Ukraine, no. 72286/01, §§ 58–60, 28 March 2006; Nold v. Germany, no. 27250/02, § 87, 29 June 2006; Miszczynski v. Poland (dec.), no. 23672/07, 8 February 2011.

¹⁹⁷ Varbanov v. Bulgaria, no. 31365/96, § 36, ECHR 2000-X.

¹⁹⁸ Drijfhout v. the Netherlands (dec.), no. 51721/09, §§ 27–29, 22 February 2011.

¹⁹⁹ Jian v. Romania (dec.), no. 46640/99, 30 March 2004; Bagheri and Maliki v. the Netherlands (dec.), no. 30164/06, 15 May 2007; Poznanski and Others v. Germany (dec.), no. 25101/05, 3 July 2007.

²⁰⁰ Komatinić v. Serbia (dec.), no. 75381/10, 29 January 2013; Al-Nashif v. Bulgaria, no. 50963/99, § 89, 20 June 2002; Kerechashvili v. Georgia (dec.), no. 5667/02, 2 May 2006; Grande Stevens and Others v. Italy, nos 18640/10, 18647/10, 18663/10, 18668/10, and 18698/10, § 66, 4 March 2014; Hüstner v. Germany (dec.), no. 23130/04, 19 June 2006; Basileo and Others v. Italy (dec.), no. 11303/02, 23 August 2011.

²⁰¹ Predescu v. Romania, no. 21447/03, §§ 25–27, 2 December 2008.

²⁰² Rules of Court, Rule 47(6).

²⁰³ S.A.S. v. France [GC], no. 43835/11, § 66, 1 July 2014. For examples, Rehák v. Czech Republic (dec.), no. 67208/01, 18 May 2004; Düringer and Grunze v. France (dec.), nos 61164/00 and 18589/02, ECHR 2003-II; Stamoulakatos v. Greece, no. 27567/95, Commission decision of 9 April 1997.

This must involve language that goes well beyond 'the bounds of normal civil and legitimate criticism' and not merely talk that is polemical, sarcastic, or ironic.²⁰⁴ An applicant warned by the Court about the use of inappropriate language may correct the situation by withdrawing offensive remarks or by an apology to the Court.²⁰⁵

Third, the applicant will have deliberately breached the confidentiality of friendly settlement negotiations.²⁰⁶ Rule 38(2) of the Rules of Court as well as article 39(2) of the Convention itself impose an obligation to respect the confidential nature of such exchanges. The breach must, of course, be an intentional one. It is important to bear in mind the purpose of the confidentiality rule, which is to facilitate negotiations between the parties. The rule is not applied too strictly. A 'technical' breach will not necessarily be deemed abusive. Mainly, the principle applies to a situation where the applicant publicizes the contents of friendly settlement discussions.²⁰⁷

Applications in the fourth category consist of petty, vexatious, quibbling, and manifestly ill-founded applications that are similar to earlier submissions already declared inadmissible.²⁰⁸

The Court has also held that 'even though an application motivated by publicity or propaganda is not, by that very fact alone, an abuse of the right of application, the situation is different where the applicant, driven by political interests, gives an interview to the press or television showing an irresponsible and frivolous attitude towards proceedings that are pending before the Court'.²⁰⁹

De minimis non curat praetor (art. 35(3)(b))

The lack of a de minimis rule, enabling the dismissal of applications dealing with petty or trivial issues, had been lamented in dissenting opinions dating to the time of the European Commission.²¹⁰ For example, in a case dealing with a 'trivial dispute' about laundry hanging over a neighbour's courtyard, several dissenting judges said they would have refused to consider the case on grounds of an abuse of the right of application.²¹¹ 'The ²⁰⁴ Di Salvo v. Italy (dec.), no. 16098/05, 11 January 2007; Aleksanyan v. Russia, no. 46468/06, §§ 116–118, 22 December 2008.

²⁰⁵ Chernitsyn v. Russia, no. 5964/02, §§ 25–28, 6 April 2006.

²⁰⁶ Hadrabová and Others (dec.), nos 42165/02 and 466/03, 25 September 2007; Popov v. Moldova (no. 1), no. 74153/01, § 48, 18 January 2005; Andrejeva v. Latvia [GC], no 55707/00, § 99, ECHR 2009; Pérez de Rada Cavanilles v. Spain, 28 October 1998, § 45, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-VIII; Malige v. France, no. 26135/95, Commission decision of 5 March 1996.

²⁰⁷ Mirojubovs and Others v. Latvia, no. 798/05, § 68, 15 September 2009.

²⁰⁸ Anibal Vieira & Filhos LDA and Maria Rosa Ferreira da Costa LDA v. Portugal (dec.), nos 980/12 and 18385/12, 13 November 2012; M. v. the United Kingdom, no. 13284/87, Commission decision of 15 October 1987; Philis v. Greece, no. 28970/95, Commission decision of 17 October 1996; X v. Austria and Federal Republic of Germany, no. 3479/68, Commission decision of 14 December 1968.

²⁰⁹ S.A.S. v. France [GC], no. 43835/11, § 67, 1 July 2014; Mirojubovs and Others v. Latvia, no. 798/05, § 62, 15 September 2009; McFeeley and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 8317/78, Commission decision of 15 May 1980, (1980) 23 YB 256, DR 20, p. 44; Georgian Labour Party v. Georgia (dec.), no. 9103/04, 22 May 2007.

²¹⁰ Dudgeon v. the United Kingdom, 22 October 1981, Dissenting Opinion of Judge Matscher, Series A no. 45; O'Halloran and Francis v. the United Kingdom [GC], nos 15809/02 and 25624/02, Dissenting Opinion of Judge Myjer, ECHR 2007-III.

²¹¹ Micallef v. Malta [GC], no. 17056/06, Joint Dissenting Opinion of Judges Costa, Jungwiert, Kovler and Fura, § 1, ECHR 2009.

disproportion between the triviality of the facts and the extensive use—or rather over-use—of court proceedings is an affront to good sense, especially as serious human-rights violations subsist in a number of States Parties. Is it really the role of our Court to determine cases such as this?’ they wrote.²¹² Nevertheless, the Court has quite clearly refused to apply the de minimis principle in cases where it was explicitly invoked by the respondent State.²¹³

The issue has finally been addressed with the new admissibility criterion of ‘significant disadvantage’, introduced by Protocol No. 14. Shortly before it entered into force on 1 June 2010, the Action Plan adopted by States Parties at the Interlaken Conference invited the Court to give full effect to the new criterion, as well as to consider other possibilities of applying the principle de minimis non curat praetor.²¹⁴ The new provision is applicable to all pending applications except those already declared admissible. The Court may consider this admissibility ground even if it has not been raised by the respondent State.²¹⁵ Its purpose is ‘in the long run, to enable more rapid disposal of unmeritorious cases and thus to allow it to concentrate on the Court’s central mission of providing legal protection of human rights at the European level’.²¹⁶

Pursuant to the provision, the Court may declare inadmissible an individual application if the applicant has not suffered a significant disadvantage. Two provisos are associated with the rule. First, the Court may not apply the provision if respect for human rights requires an examination of the application on the merits. Second, the new criterion does not apply to cases that have not been duly considered by a domestic authority. For the first two years following entry into force of the amendment, its application was reserved to Chambers and to the Grand Chamber.²¹⁷ Judgments have noted that although there is no formal hierarchy among the three elements of article 35(3)(b), ‘the question of whether the applicant has suffered a “significant disadvantage” is at the core of this admissibility criterion’.²¹⁸

Sometimes the Court will conclude that an issue of admissibility is intricately linked to the merits and decide to proceed, reserving its opinion on admissibility. It seems contrary to the very purpose of the admissibility criterion, which is to reduce the caseload by eliminating undeserving applications. But in a case concerning the de minimis rule, the Court said ‘cette exception du Gouvernement est étroitement liée à la substance du grief énoncé sur le terrain de l’article 6 § 1 de la Convention dans la mesure où elle porte précisément sur la question de savoir si l’absence de communication du rapport médical a porté atteinte au droit du requérant à un procès équitable. Elle décide donc de la joindre au fond’.²¹⁹ The case concerned an allegation that a fair hearing had been denied. In other

²¹² Ibid.

²¹³ Koumoutsea and Others v. Greece (dec.), no. 56625/00, 13 December 2011.

²¹⁴ Action Plan adopted by the High Level Conference on the Future of the European Court of Human Rights, Interlaken, 19 February 2010, para. 9(c), cited in Korolev v. Russia (dec.), no. 25551/05, ECHR 2010.

²¹⁵ Adrian Mihai Ionescu v. Romania (dec.), no. 36659/04, § 30, 1 June 2010; Rinck v. France (dec.), no. 18774/09, 19 October 2010.

²¹⁶ Korolev v. Russia (dec.), no. 25551/05, 1 July 2010.

²¹⁷ Protocol No. 14 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, amending the control system of the Convention, ETS 194, art. 20(2).

²¹⁸ Shefer v. Russia (dec.), no. 45175/04, 13 March 2012. Also Ladygin v. Russia (dec.), no. 35365/05, 30 August 2011.

²¹⁹ Martins Silva v. Portugal, no. 12959/10, § 32, 28 May 2014.

cases concerning judicial remedies, the Court said it was unable to determine the 'duly considered' issue without proceeding to the merits.²²⁰

The notion of 'significant disadvantage' is said to be 'open to interpretation'.²²¹ It is a criterion that gives the Court 'some degree of flexibility' and that is 'not susceptible to exhaustive definition'.²²² The new criterion 'hinges on the idea that a violation of a right, however real from a purely legal point of view, should attain a minimum level of severity to warrant consideration by an international court'.²²³ The Court should take into account 'both the applicant's subjective perceptions and what is objectively at stake in a particular case'.²²⁴ It may be that the applicant considers the matter to be of the utmost significance, but this factor alone is obviously insufficient to rebut application of the criterion.²²⁵

The concept of 'significant disadvantage' has been considered in several cases with respect to the amount of money in dispute. The Court declared an application inadmissible proprio motu where the amount of financial loss was estimated at €90.²²⁶ In another, a €150 fine and loss of one penalty point, for driving very slightly over the speed limit, was deemed de minimis.²²⁷ But the Court has cautioned that 'even modest pecuniary damage may be significant in the light of the person's specific condition and the economic situation of the country or region in which he or she lives'.²²⁸ In a case involving €129,000, the Court said this was 'tout sauf modique', rejecting the exception raised by the respondent State.²²⁹ An expropriation involving sums in the range of €30,000 to €76,000 led the Court to conclude that the prejudice was significant.²³⁰ In an Italian case involving imposition of fines ranging from €500,000 to €3,000,000, as well as a possibility of detention and a prohibition on managing or directing companies listed on the stock exchange for a period of months, the Court considered there was a significant disadvantage and rejected the admissibility challenge.²³¹

Significant disadvantage cannot be assessed purely in monetary terms. There are cases where the amount at stake is insignificant, yet other factors must also be taken into account in applying the admissibility criterion. The Court has said there are two main aspects to this, the subjective importance of the case to the applicant and what is objectively at stake. Moreover, 'a violation of the Convention may concern important questions of principle and thus cause a significant disadvantage without affecting ²²⁰ Bannikov v. Latvia, no. 19279/03, § 59, 11 June 2013; Maravić Markeš v. Croatia, no. 70923/11, § 43, 9 January 2014.

²²¹ Korolev v. Russia (dec.), no. 25551/05, ECHR 2010.

²²² Ibid.; Rinck v. France (dec.), no. 18774/09, 19 October 2010.

²²³ Korolev v. Russia (dec.), no. 25551/05, 1 July 2010; Rinck v. France (dec.), no. 18774/09, 19 October 2010.

²²⁴ Korolev v. Russia (dec.), no. 25551/05, 1 July 2010; Stefanescu v. Roumanie (déc.), no. 11774/04, § 35, 12 April 2011; Gagliano Giorgi v. Italy, no. 23563/07, § 54, ECHR 2012 (extracts).

²²⁵ Rinck v. France (dec.), no. 18774/09, 19 October 2010.

²²⁶ Adrian Mihai Ionescu v. Romania (dec.), no. 36659/04, § 36, 1 June 2010.

²²⁷ Rinck v. France (dec.), no. 18774/09, 19 October 2010.

²²⁸ Korolev v. Russia (dec.), no. 25551/05, ECHR 2010.

²²⁹ Avotiņš v. Latvia, no. 17502/07, § 36, 25 February 2014.

²³⁰ Sancho Cruz and 14 other 'Agrarian Reform' cases v. Portugal, nos 8851/07, 8854/07, 8856/07, 8865/07, 10142/07, 10144/07, 24622/07, 32733/07, 32744/07, 41645/07, 19150/08, 22885/08, 22887/08, 26612/08, and 202/09, § 35, 18 January 2011.

²³¹ Grande Stevens and Others v. Italy, nos 18640/10, 18647/10, 18663/10, 18668/10, and 18698/10, § 74, 4 March 2014.

pecuniary interest'.²³² It has signalled the importance of 'honorabilité professionnelle' as a non-monetary factor relevant to the assessment.²³³ In a case where the financial implications were minimal, the Court took into account the importance of the issue to the applicant, who had pursued the proceedings to their conclusion, even after being refused legal aid.²³⁴ Where an applicant does not act diligently, however, the Court may conclude that 'conduct demonstrates apparent absence of significant interest in the outcome of the proceedings'.²³⁵ In terms of the objective dimension, the Court has noted widespread media attention given to a case involving whether insulting the head of State should remain a criminal offence, a matter that was regularly raised in Parliament.²³⁶

The respect for human rights exception is expressed in language that is drawn from article 37(1) of the Convention. There, it fulfils a similar function in the context of decisions to strike applications from the list. The same criterion is also used in article 39(1) as a basis for a friendly settlement between the parties. Consequently, there is much case law on which to rely in the interpretation of the new provision.²³⁷ The European Commission considered that the concept would apply to an application raising questions of a general character affecting the observance of the Convention.²³⁸ The human rights exception will apply 'where there is a need to clarify the States' obligations under the Convention or to induce the respondent State to resolve a structural deficiency affecting other persons in the same position as the applicant'.²³⁹ For example, in one of the first cases under the new criterion, this proviso was held to be not applicable where the impugned legislation had been repealed, given that the issue was then of only 'historical interest'.²⁴⁰ Where a novel question is raised, for example with respect to a new procedural mechanism in the domestic system, the Court will be inclined to apply the human rights exception because its ruling on a question of principle will provide guidance to national courts and tribunals.²⁴¹

The second proviso is the fact that the issue was already submitted to the domestic courts. The purpose of the provision, according to the Court, 'is to ensure that every case receives a judicial examination whether at the national level or at the European level, in other words, to avoid a denial of justice'.²⁴² It is closely related to the notion of subsidiarity, something implied by article 13 and set out explicitly in recital 6 of the Convention's Preamble. Article 35(3)(b) speaks of a 'case', rather than an 'application' (in ²³² Korolev v. Russia (dec.), no. 25551/05, ECHR 2010. Also Giuran v. Romania, no. 24360/04, § 32, ECHR 2011 (extracts).

²³³ Grande Stevens and Others v. Italy, nos 18640/10, 18647/10, 18663/10, 18668/10, and 18698/10, § 74, 4 March 2014.

²³⁴ Eon v. France, no. 26118/10, § 34, 14 March 2013.

²³⁵ Shefer v. Russia (dec.), no. 45175/04, 13 March 2012.

²³⁶ Eon v. France, no. 26118/10, § 34, 14 March 2013.

²³⁷ For example, Can v. Austria, 30 September 1985, §§ 15–18, Series A no. 96; Léger v. France (striking out) [GC], no. 19324/02, § 51, 30 March 2009; Van Houten v. the Netherlands (striking out), no. 25149/03, § 33, ECHR 2005-IX; Kavak v. Turkey (dec.), no. 34719/04 et 37472/05, 19 May 2009.

²³⁸ Tyler v. the United Kingdom, no. 5856/72, Commission report of 14 December 1976.

²³⁹ Korolev v. Russia (dec.), no. 25551/05, ECHR 2010.

²⁴⁰ Adrian Mihai Ionescu v. Romania (dec.), no. 36659/04, § 39, 1 June 2010.

²⁴¹ Grande Stevens and Others v. Italy, nos 18640/10, 18647/10, 18663/10, 18668/10, and 18698/10, 4 March 2014. Similarly Vlad and Others v. Romania, nos 40756/06, 41508/07, and 50806/07, § 99, 16 November 2013; Finger v. Bulgaria, no. 37346/05, §§ 75–77, 10 May 2011; Nicoleta Gheorghie v. Romania, no. 23470/05, § 24, 3 April 2012.

²⁴² Korolev v. Russia (dec.), no. 25551/05, ECHR 2010.

French, l'affaire and la requête). Noting this distinction, the Court has held that it is to determine whether the claims of the applicant were considered by a domestic tribunal rather than the actual content of the petition filed in Strasbourg. The difficulty arises because normally the applicant will undertake more than one proceeding at the national level, if for no other reason than to exhaust domestic remedies. Article 35(3)(b) only requires that there be an examination at one level. According to the Court,

En effet, s'il fallait entendre ici la notion de 'l'affaire' comme synonyme de 'la requête', on aboutirait à une situation où il existerait des griefs se rapportant aux agissements des instances internes ultimes (comme en l'espèce la Cour constitutionnelle mais aussi d'autres tribunaux dans les pays qui n'ont pas mis en place les juridictions, accessibles aux particuliers, chargées de vérifier le respect de la constitution, voire de la Convention), qui ne pouvaient plus être examinés au niveau national et à l'égard desquels la Cour ne pourrait donc plus décliner sa compétence en raison de la banalité de la requête. Or, la Cour n'est pas convaincue qu'elle devrait être dotée d'une telle compétence générale de super-révision.²⁴³

As the Court explained, were it to adopt the alternative approach, this would mean that it would be unable to apply the de minimis criterion in any case where a violation of fundamental rights by the highest court in the country was alleged.

At the time of signature and ratification of Protocol No. 14, several States made declarations concerning the interpretation and application of the new criterion. This is discussed below under the heading 'Declarations'.

Rejection 'at any stage of the proceedings' (art. 35(4))

Issues of admissibility may present themselves at any stage of the proceedings.²⁴⁴ Article 35(4) allows the Court, even when it is judging the merits, 'to reconsider a decision to declare an application admissible where it concludes that it should have been declared inadmissible for one of the reasons given in the first three paragraphs of Article 35, including that of incompatibility with the provisions of the Convention (Article 35 § 3 taken together with Article 34)'.²⁴⁵ Even the Grand Chamber may reconsider the admissibility issue, ruling a case inadmissible that had previously been examined on the merits by the Chamber.²⁴⁶ The provision results from Protocol No. 11 but it was inspired by article 29 of the 1950 text of the Convention. The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11 stressed that 'the Court will be able to reject an application at any stage of the proceedings—even without an oral hearing—if it finds the existence of one of the grounds of non-acceptance provided in Article 35 (see Article 29 of the Convention's former text)'.²⁴⁷

For example, article 35(4) may apply if the applicant cannot or can no longer assert status as a victim under the Convention.²⁴⁸ Article 35(4) does not mean that a State can ²⁴³ Holub v. Czech Republic (dec.), no. 24880/05, 14 December 2010.

²⁴⁴ Scoppola v. Italy (no. 2) [GC], no. 10249/03, § 56, 17 September 2009; K. and T. v. Finland [GC], no. 25702/94, §§ 140–141, ECHR 2001-VII; Perna v. Italy [GC], no. 48898/99, §§ 23–24, ECHR 2003-V.

²⁴⁵ Pisano v. Italy (striking out) [GC], no. 36732/97, § 34, 24 October 2002.

²⁴⁶ Scoppola v. Italy (no. 2) [GC], no. 10249/03, § 56, 17 September 2009; Azinas v. Cyprus [GC], no. 56679/00, § 32, ECHR 2004-III; Blečić v. Croatia, no. 59532/00 [GC], § 65, ECHR 2006-III; Odièvre v. France [GC], no. 42326/98, § 22, ECHR 2003-III; Mooren v. Germany [GC], no. 11364/03, § 57, 9 July 2009.

²⁴⁷ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 88. Cited in Pisano v. Italy (striking out) [GC], no. 36732/97, § 34, 24 October 2002.

²⁴⁸ Ilhan v. Turkey [GC], no. 22277/93, § 52, ECHR 2000-VII.

raise an objection to admissibility at any point in the proceedings.²⁴⁹ The State may be stopped from raising the issue if it has not done so early in the proceedings, absent exceptional circumstances,²⁵⁰ although there is nothing to prevent the Court from doing this on its own motion.

Declarations

At the time of signature of Protocol No. 14, Belgium made a declaration indicating that with respect to the amendment to article 35, adding a new admissibility criterion, it understands this provision within the meaning specified in particular in paragraphs 79, 80, 83 and 84 of the Explanatory Report, from which it results that:

- the Court shall apply the new admissibility criterion by establishing a case-law allowing to define the legal terms which state this criterion on the basis of an interpretation establishing objective criteria of definition (paragraphs 79 and 80);
- the new criterion is designed to avoid rejection of cases warranting an examination on the merits (paragraph 83);
- the single-judge formations and committees will not be able to apply the new criteria in the absence of a clear and well-established case-law of the Court's Chambers and Grand Chamber (paragraph 64).²⁵¹

Poland also made a declaration at the time of signature stating that it interprets the amendments in accordance with article 59(3) of the Convention, 'following the general principle of non-retroactivity of treaties, contained in Article 28 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties of 23 May 1969'.²⁵² Russia made a similar declaration, although it relied upon article 19 of the Convention as the basis of the principle of non-retroactivity of treaties.²⁵³

In its instrument of ratification of Protocol No. 14, by which article 35 was amended, Latvia made the following declaration:

1. The new admissibility criterion may not be applied to reject such applications, which examination would otherwise be important for the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms as defined in the Convention and the Protocols thereto, as well as to reject such applications, which have not been duly considered by a domestic tribunal.
2. The single-judge formations and committees will be able to apply the new admissibility criterion only after the Court's Chamber and Grand Chamber develop their case-law on this subject.
3. The new admissibility criterion will not be applied to the applications declared admissible before the entry into force of this Protocol in accordance with the general principle of non-retroactivity of treaties, contained in Article 28 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties of 23 May 1969.²⁵⁴

²⁴⁹ Velikova v. Bulgaria, no. 41488/98, § 57, ECHR 2000-VI.

²⁵⁰ Mooren v. Germany [GC], no. 11364/03, § 57, 9 July 2009; N.C. v. Italy [GC], no. 24952/94, § 44, ECHR 2002-X; Sejdovic v. Italy [GC], no. 56581/00, § 41, ECHR 2006-II; Lebedev v. Russia, no. 4493/04, §§ 39–40, 25 October 2007.

²⁵¹ (2005) 48 YB 13–14.

²⁵² (2004) 47 YB 26.

²⁵³ (2006) 49 YB 12. The statement was renewed upon ratification: (2010) 53 YB 28.

²⁵⁴ (2006) 49 YB 10.

Further reading

- A.A. Cançado Trindade, The Application of the Rule of Exhaustion of Local Remedies in International Law. Its Rationale in the International Protection of Individual Rights, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1983.
- Jean-François Flauss, 'La condition de l'épuisement des griefs au sens de l'article 26 CEDH: les enseignements de l'arrêt Cardot', (1991) 3 Revue universelle des droits de l'homme 529.
- Jean-François Flauss, 'De l'abus de droit dans le cadre de la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme', (1992) 4 Revue universelle des droits de l'homme 461.
- Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 495–520.
- Michael O'Boyle, 'Ne bis in idem for the Benefit of States?', in Lucius Caflisch, Johan Callewaert, Roderick Liddell, Paul Mahoney, and Mark Villiger, eds, Liber Amicorum Luzius Wildhaber, Kehl, Germany: N.P. Engel, 2007, pp. 285–308.
- Etienne Picard, 'Article 26', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 591–620.
- Stefan Trechsel, 'Article 27', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 621–47.
- Harmen van der Wilt and Sandra Lyngdorf, 'Procedural Obligations Under the European Convention on Human Rights: Useful Guidelines for the Assessment of 'Unwillingness' and 'Inability' in the Context of the Complementarity Principle', (2009) 9 International Criminal Law Review 39.
- Leo Zwaak, 'The Procedure before the European Court of Human Rights', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 98–203.

Article 36. Third-party intervention/Tierce intervention

1. In all cases before a Chamber or the Grand Chamber, a High Contracting Party one of whose nationals is an applicant shall have the right to submit written comments and to take part in hearings.

2. The President of the Court may, in the interest of the proper administration of justice, invite any High Contracting Party which is not a party to the proceedings or any person concerned who is not the applicant to submit written comments or take part in hearings.

3. In all cases before a Chamber or the Grand Chamber, the Council of Europe Commissioner for Human Rights may submit written comments and take part in hearings.

1. Dans toute affaire devant une chambre ou la Grande Chambre, une Haute Partie contractante dont un ressortissant est requérant a le droit de présenter des observations écrites et de prendre part aux audiences.

2. Dans l'intérêt d'une bonne administration de la justice, le président de la Cour peut inviter toute Haute Partie contractante qui n'est pas partie à l'instance ou toute personne intéressée autre que le requérant à présenter des observations écrites ou à prendre part aux audiences.

3. Dans toute affaire devant une chambre ou la Grande Chambre, le Commissaire aux droits de l'homme du Conseil de l'Europe peut présenter des observations écrites et prendre part aux audiences.

Introductory comments

Paragraph 1 of article 36 has been described as a 'vestige de la traditionnelle protection diplomatique ou judiciaire des nationaux'¹ by which a State is given the opportunity 'to protect its nationals in a situation where they suffer an injury as a result of a breach of public international law by another Member State'.² Under article 48(b) of the 1950 text of the Convention, 'a High Contracting Party whose national is alleged to be a victim' had the right to bring a case before the European Court of Human Rights. This could only happen if the case had already been considered by the Commission and had been found to be admissible. In practice, this happened only twice.³ The State of nationality of a victim could also initiate an application before the Commission under the general provision dealing with inter-State cases. It, too, has hardly ever been invoked (see the chapter on article 33 in this Commentary).

The Court began admitting amici curiae in 1979, initially allowing a State Party other than the respondent to make written submissions.⁴ Two years later, in the 'closed shop case', the Court 'decided proprio motu, in pursuance of Rule 38 par. 1 of the Rules of Court, that during the oral proceedings it would hear, on certain questions of fact (including English law and practice) and for the purpose of information, a representative

¹ Ireneu Cabral Barreto, 'Article 48', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 793–803, at p. 796.

² I v. Sweden, no. 61204/09, § 42, 5 September 2013.

³ Soering v. the United Kingdom, 7 July 1989, § 1, Series A no. 161; Loizidou v. Turkey (Preliminary objections), 23 March 1995, § 1, Series A no. 310.

⁴ Winterwerp v. the Netherlands, 24 October 1979, § 7, Series A no. 33.

of the British Trades Union Congress'.⁵ The Court now routinely authorizes qualified interveners to submit briefs on specific questions.

Drafting of the provision

The Draft Statute that was annexed to the initial of the text European Convention on Human Rights prepared by the International Juridical Section of the European Movement empowered the proposed Court to 'entrust any individual, body, bureau, commission, or other organisation that it may select, with the task of carrying out an inquiry or giving an expert opinion'.⁶ Another provision authorized a State to 'submit a request to the Court to be permitted to intervene' if the State considered 'it has an interest of a legal nature which may be affected by the decision in the case'. The Court was to rule upon the request.⁷ The Consultative Assembly did not consider the issue and its final draft had no such provision.

The Committee of Ministers assigned a Committee of Experts to study the Consultative Assembly draft, noting that it should in particular address the '[l]egal scope of judgments: grounds, revision, appeal, effect on third parties and intervening parties'.⁸ What became article 48(b) appeared in an early draft adopted by the Committee of Experts in March 1950.⁹ The Report noted that '[t]he Committee insisted that it was never proper for an individual to refer to the Court. The interests of individuals would always be defended either by the Commission... or by a State...'¹⁰ There appears to have been no subsequent debate on this provision and no changes were made.

Other than this right of referral by the States of nationality, the 1950 text of the Convention did not explicitly authorize intervention or participation in the proceedings before the Court. Rule 38 of the original Rules of Court, adopted in 1959, was entitled 'Enquiry, expert opinion and other measures for obtaining information'. Paragraph 1 allowed that a Chamber 'at the request of a Party or of delegates of the Commission or proprio motu, decide to hear as a witness or expert or in any other capacity any person whose evidence or statements seem likely to assist it in the carrying out of its task'. The Rule appears to have been used first in 1981 when the Chamber, acting proprio motu, decided that during the oral proceedings it would hear 'on certain questions of fact (including English law and practice) and for the purpose of information' a representative of the British Trades Union Congress.¹¹ The Rules of Court were amended in 1982 to authorize the President, 'in the interest of the proper administration of justice', to 'invite or grant leave to any Contracting State which is not a Party to the proceedings to submit written comments within a time-limit and on issues which he shall specify. He may ⁵ Young, James, and Webster v. the United Kingdom, 13 August 1981, § 8, Series A no. 44.

⁶ Draft Statute of the European Court of Human Rights, INF/5/E/R, I TP 302-21, at p. 316, art. 44.

⁷ Ibid., p. 318, art. 55.

⁸ Preparatory Report by the Secretariat-General concerning a Preliminary Draft Convention to Provide a Collective Guarantee of Human Rights, Doc. B 22, III TP 2-37, at p. 36.

⁹ New text suggested for Sections II, III, and IV, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 4, A 917, III TP 294-302, at p. 300, art 34(b).

¹⁰ Report to the Committee of Ministers submitted by the Committee of Experts Instructed to Draw Up a Draft Convention of Collective Guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Doc. CM/WP 1 (5) 15, A 924, IV TP 2-55, at p. 44. See also Preliminary Draft of the Report to the Committee of Ministers, 24 February 1950, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50), A 847, III TP 246-79, at p. 276.

¹¹ Young, James, and Webster v. the United Kingdom, 13 August 1981, § 8, Series A no. 44.

extend such an invitation or grant such leave to any person concerned other than the applicant.¹² The new Rule was applied in another trade union case when the Post Office Engineering Union was granted permission to make submissions, albeit of a narrower scope than what it had requested.¹³ The Rule does not appear to have been invoked by a State Party. It was used in the years that followed by such organizations as Amnesty International,¹⁴ Liberty,¹⁵ Human Rights Watch,¹⁶ the Federation of Italian Lawyers' Unions,¹⁷ the Confederazione Generale Italiana del Lavoro,¹⁸ JUSTICE (the British section of the International Commission of Jurists),¹⁹ the Italian Association of Young Barristers,²⁰ the Campaign for Freedom of Information,²¹ the Conseil d'État and Court of Cassation Bar,²² the Rome Lawyers' Association,²³ the International Press Institute,²⁴ and the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights of Northern Ireland.²⁵

These two features of the Court's practice were both modified and codified in the first two paragraphs of article 36, which were added to the Convention by Protocol No. 11. The Explanatory Report noted that paragraph 1 had been based on article 48(b) of the former Convention,²⁶ and that paragraph 2 'follows closely' Rule 37(2) of the Rules of Court. The Explanatory Report clarified that '[t]he person concerned may be a natural or a legal person'. It added that 'States and persons taking part in such proceedings are not parties to the proceedings'.²⁷

It was the Commissioner of Human Rights himself who proposed that the Convention be amended to recognize expressly the right of intervention in the proceedings,²⁸ an idea that was supported by the Parliamentary Assembly.²⁹ Paragraph 3 was added by Protocol 14.³⁰ The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14 noted that article 36, as adopted by Protocol No. 11, already permitted the Commissioner to intervene with the authorization of the President of the Court. The Explanatory Report states:

¹² Rules of Court, Rule 37(2) (as amended, 24 November 1982).

¹³ Malone v. the United Kingdom, 2 August 1984, § 8, Series A no. 82.

¹⁴ Soering v. the United Kingdom, 7 July 1989, § 8, Series A no. 161; Aydın v. Turkey, 25 September 1997, § 6, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-VI; Kurt v. Turkey, 25 May 1998, § 5, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-III.

¹⁵ McGinley and Egan v. the United Kingdom, 9 June 1998, § 5, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-III; Abmed and Others v. the United Kingdom, 2 September 1998, § 5, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-VI.

¹⁶ Jersild v. Denmark, 23 September 1994, § 5, Series A no. 298.

¹⁷ Capuano v. Italy, 25 June 1987, § 6, Series A no. 119.

¹⁸ Caleffi v. Italy, 24 May 1991, § 6, Series A no. 206-B.

¹⁹ Monnell and Morris v. the United Kingdom, 2 March 1987, § 6, Series A no. 115.

²⁰ Capuano v. Italy, 25 June 1987, § 6, Series A no. 119.

²¹ McGinley and Egan v. the United Kingdom, 9 June 1998, § 5, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-III.

²² Pham Hoang v. France, 25 September 1992, § 5, Series A no. 243.

²³ Capuano v. Italy, 25 June 1987, § 6, Series A no. 119. An earlier application by the Council of the Rome Bar Association was denied because it was made too late: Goddi v. Italy, 9 April 1984, § 7, Series A no. 76.

²⁴ Lingens v. Austria, 8 July 1986, § 5, Series A no. 103.

²⁵ Tinnelly & Sons Ltd and Others and McElduff and Others v. the United Kingdom, 10 July 1998, § 6, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-IV.

²⁶ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 90.

²⁷ Ibid., para. 91.

²⁸ 3rd Annual Report on the Activities of the Council of Europe Commissioner for Human Rights (1 January–31 December 2002), adopted on 26 January 2004.

²⁹ Parliamentary Assembly in its Recommendation 1640 (2004).

³⁰ Protocol No. 14 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, amending the control system of the Convention, ETS 194, art. 13.

With a view to protecting the general interest more effectively, the third paragraph added to Article 36 for the first time mentions the Commissioner for Human Rights in the Convention text by formally providing that the Commissioner has the right to intervene as third party. The Commissioner's experience may help enlighten the Court on certain questions, particularly in cases which highlight structural or systemic weaknesses in the respondent or other High Contracting Parties.³¹

According to the Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, other amendments to article 36 were not considered necessary: 'In particular, it was decided not to provide for a possibility of third party intervention in the new committee procedure under the new Article 28, paragraph 1.b, given the straightforward nature of cases to be decided under that procedure.'³²

Analysis and interpretation

Intervention as of right (art. 36(1))

The right of the State of nationality to request referral to the Court if the Commission found a case involving one of its citizens to be admissible, set out in article 48(b) of the 1950 text of the Convention, obviously disappeared with the abolition of the European Commission in accordance with Protocol No. 11. The provision was only invoked for the first time in 1989, in Soering v. the United Kingdom,³³ and once more prior to its repeal in 1998.³⁴ Otherwise, States were systematically informed of the possibility and more or less systematically declined to get involved.³⁵ Article 36(1) stands in its place, permitting the State of nationality to intervene in proceedings at the Court. However, in contrast with the situation under the former Convention, the State of nationality does not become a party to the proceedings. There have been several cases of such intervention,³⁶ but States

³¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, para. 87.

³² Ibid., para. 89.

³³ Soering v. the United Kingdom, 7 July 1989, § 1, Series A no. 161. Prior to Soering, States had been informed of the possibility but did not show any interest: Bozano v. France, 18 December 1986, § 2, Series A no. 111; Johnston and Others v. Ireland, 18 December 1986, § 2, Series A no. 112; O. v. the United Kingdom, 8 July 1987, § 3, Series A no. 120.

³⁴ Loizidou v. Turkey (Preliminary objections), 23 March 1995, § 1, Series A no. 310.

³⁵ John Murray v. the United Kingdom, 8 February 1996, § 2, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-I; Hornby v. Greece, 19 March 1997, § 2, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-II; Bizzotto v. Greece, 15 November 1996, § 2, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-V; Gül v. Switzerland, 19 February 1996, § 2, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-I; Piermont v. France, 27 April 1995, § 2, Series A no. 314; Gasus Dosier- und Fördertechnik GmbH v. the Netherlands, 23 February 1995, § 2, Series A no. 306-B; Brannigan and McBride v. the United Kingdom, 26 May 1993, § 2, Series A no. 258-B; Paskhalidis and Others v. Greece, 19 March 1997, § 2, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-II; Helmers v. Sweden, 29 October 1991, § 2, Series A no. 212-A; Scott v. Spain, 18 December 1996, § 2, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-VI; Hamer v. France, 7 August 1996, § 2, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-III; Bulus v. Austria, 22 February 1996, § 2, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-II; British-American Tobacco Company Ltd v. the Netherlands, 20 November 1995, § 2, Series A no. 331; Van der Tang v. Spain, 13 July 1995, § 2, Series A no. 321; Brincat v. Italy, 26 November 1992, § 2, Series A no. 249-A; Rieme v. Sweden, 22 April 1992, § 2, Series A no. 226-B; Imbrosia v. Switzerland, 24 November 1993, § 2, Series A no. 275; Quaranta v. Switzerland, 24 May 1991, § 2, Series A no. 205; Dobbertin v. France, 25 February 1993, § 2, Series A no. 256-D; Fey v. Austria, 24 February 1993, § 2, Series A no. 255-A; Vernillo v. France, 20 February 1991, § 2, Series A no. 198.

³⁶ E.g., Varnava and Others v. Turkey, nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, § 7, 10 January 2008; Kononov v. Latvia, no. 36376/04, § 2, 24 July 2008; Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, §§ 7, 16, ECHR 2009; Kononov v. Latvia [GC], no. 36376/04, § 2, ECHR 2010; Demopoulos and Others v. Turkey (dec.) [GC], nos 46113/99, 3843/02, 13751/02, 13466/03,

do not intervene systematically in cases where their nationals are involved.³⁷ The Rules of Court provide that the Registrar is to notify any State other than the respondent State if one of its nationals is a party.³⁸ The Registrar is also required to notify such a State if there is to be an oral hearing in the case.³⁹

Although it was probably never contemplated by those who conceived of the right to intervene, situations have arisen where an individual alleges a real risk of violation of fundamental rights, notably those enshrined in articles 2 and 3, if that person is returned to the State of nationality. This is certainly not a situation that at all resembles the notion of diplomatic protection, from which article 36(1) was derived. According to the Court, in such cases the State of nationality 'does not appear objectively in a position to support its nationals. Moreover, Article 36 § 1 does not encompass a Member State's right to defend itself before the Court unless the applicants in their application claim to be victims of a violation of their rights by that Member State as well.'⁴⁰ It is, of course, open to an applicant to sue two States in the same proceeding, and to the extent that one of them is the State of nationality then it has no need to intervene because it is already a party.⁴¹ Thus, it has been held that article 36(1) does not apply 'in cases where the applicants' reason for applying to the Court is fear of being returned to the relevant Member State, which allegedly will subject them to a treatment contrary to Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Consequently, in such circumstances, applications are not transmitted to the applicants' State of origin inviting their Government to intervene.'⁴²

Intervention with leave (art. 36(2))

According to article 36(2), the President of the Court may, 'in the interest of the proper administration of justice', invite a State Party that is not a party to the proceedings or any person concerned who is not the applicant to submit written comments or take part in hearings.⁴³ On occasion, the Court has referred to this as a 'right to intervene',⁴⁴ but it seems clear from the Convention that this is overstating the situation. The contrast with article 36(1), where a genuine right is set out, is evident. Article 36(2) requires that the President of the Court authorize the intervention. The Rules of Court permit a Chamber to 'ask any person or institution of its choice to express an opinion or make a written report on any matter considered by it to be relevant to the case'.⁴⁵

Rule 44(3)(b) of the Rules of Court states that requests for leave to intervene be 'duly reasoned' and submitted no later than twelve weeks after the notice of application has been given to the respondent State. It appears that authorization is routinely granted. It is 10200/04, 14163/04, 19993/04, and 21819/04, § 3, ECHR 2010; Janowiec and Others v. Russia, nos 55508/07 and 29520/09, § 4, 16 April 2012; Janowiec and Others v. Russia [GC], nos 55508/07 and 29520/09, § 4, ECHR 2013.

³⁷ Krombach v. France, no. 29731/96, § 7, ECHR 2001-II; Hutten-Czapaska v. Poland, no. 35014/97, § 10, 22 February 2005.

³⁸ Rules of Court, Rule 44(1)(a).

³⁹ Ibid.

⁴⁰ I. v. Sweden, no. 61204/09, § 41, 5 September 2013.

⁴¹ E.g., Rantsev v. Cyprus and Russia, no. 25965/04, ECHR 2010 (extracts); M.S.S. v. Belgium and Greece [GC], no. 30696/09, § ECHR 2011.

⁴² I. v. Sweden, no. 61204/09, §§ 45–46, 5 September 2013.

⁴³ E.g., Sejdovic v. Italy [GC], no. 56581/00, § 8, ECHR 2006-II.

⁴⁴ Saadi v. Italy [GC], no. 37201/06, § 7, ECHR 2008.

⁴⁵ Rules of Court, Annex to the Rules (concerning investigations), Rule A 1(2).

not at all uncommon for several non-governmental organizations to intervene in a particular case, sometimes individually and sometimes collectively.⁴⁶ Much more unusual is an intervention by individuals.⁴⁷ Even governmental⁴⁸ and intergovernmental organizations⁴⁹ have been known to intervene in proceedings. In the case concerning CIA detention sites in Poland, the Chamber invited the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism to participate in the hearing.⁵⁰ The European Commission for Democracy through Law (Venice Commission) produced an opinion⁵¹ at the request of a Chamber in a case concerning funding of a political party.⁵² It has submitted amicus curiae briefs in a number of other cases.⁵³

States intervene less frequently, generally when there is an issue that may concern them in other pending cases.⁵⁴ During the drafting of Protocol No. 14, there was 'wide agreement' about 'the need to encourage more frequent third party interventions by other states in cases pending before the Court which raise important general issues . . .'⁵⁵ Although actual participation in the hearing is rarely, if ever, accorded to individuals and ⁴⁶ See, e.g., D.H. and Others v. the Czech Republic [GC], no. 57325/00, § 9, ECHR 2007-IV; Pini and Others v. Romania, nos 78028/01 and 78030/01, § 7, ECHR 2004-V (extracts); Al-Skeini and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 55721/07, § 6, ECHR 2011.

⁴⁷ PY v. France, no. 66289/01, § 7, ECHR 2005-1 (extracts); Z and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 29392/95, § 7, ECHR 2001-V; T.P. and K.M. v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 28945/95, § 7, ECHR 2001-V (extracts); Koua Poirrez v. France, no. 40892/98, § 7, ECHR 2003-X; Feldek v. Slovakia, no. 29032/95, § 7, ECHR 2001-VIII.

⁴⁸ E.g., the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission: McKerr v. the United Kingdom, no. 28883/95, § 7, ECHR 2001-III; Hugh Jordan v. the United Kingdom, no. 24746/94, § 7, ECHR 2001-III (extracts); Shanaghan v. the United Kingdom, no. 37715/97, § 7, 4 May 2001.

⁴⁹ E.g., the Organisation for Security and Cooperation in Europe: Bletić v. Croatia, no. 59532/00, § 6, 29 July 2004; the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees: M.S.S. v. Belgium and Greece [GC], no. 30696/09, § 7, ECHR 2011 and Ahmed Ali v. the Netherlands (dec.), no. 26494, § 7, 24 January 2012; the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights: M.S.S. v. Belgium and Greece [GC], no. 30696/09, § 7, ECHR 2011.

⁵⁰ Husayn Abu Zubaydah v. Poland, no. 7511/13, § 8, 24 July 2014.

⁵¹ Opinion on the Prohibition of Financial Contributions to Political Parties from Foreign Sources (amicus curiae opinion for the European Court of Human Rights) adopted by the Venice Commission at its 66th Plenary Session (Venice, 17–18 March 2006), CDL-AD(2006)014.

⁵² Parti nationaliste basque—Organisation régionale d'Iparralde v. France, no. 71251/01, § 3, ECHR 2007-II.

⁵³ Amicus curiae brief in the case of Rywin v. Poland (Application nos 6091/06, 4047/07, and 4070/07) pending before the European Court of Human Rights (on Parliamentary Committees of inquiry) adopted by the Venice Commission at its 98th plenary session (Venice, 21–22 March 2014), CDL-AD(2014)013; Amicus curiae brief in the cases of Sejdić and Finci v. Bosnia and Herzegovina (Application nos 27996/06 and 34836/06) pending before The European Court of Human Rights adopted by the Venice Commission at its 76th Plenary Session (Venice, 17–18 October 2008), CDL-AD(2008)027; Amicus curiae brief in the case of Bijelić v. Montenegro and Serbia (Application N°11890/05) pending before the European Court of Human Rights adopted by the Venice Commission at its 76th Plenary Session (Venice, 17–18 October 2008), CDL-AD(2008)021; Amicus curiae Opinion (Proceedings before the European Court of Human Rights) on the nature of proceedings before the Human Rights Chamber and the Constitutional Court of Bosnia and Herzegovina adopted by the Commission at its 63rd plenary session (Venice, 10–11 June 2005), CDL-AD(2005)020 (in Jelčić v. Bosnia and Herzegovina, no. 41183/02, ECHR 2006-XII).

⁵⁴ See, e.g., Taxquet v. Belgium [GC], no. 926/05, § 7, ECHR 2010; Nada v. Switzerland [GC], no. 10593/08, § 5, ECHR 2012; S.A.S. v. France [GC], no. 43835/11, §§ 8, 36–38, 1 July 2014; Hirst v. the United Kingdom (no. 2) [GC], no. 74025/01, § 9, ECHR 2005-IX.

⁵⁵ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, para. 19.

non-governmental organizations, this has been allowed to States Parties in some cases.⁵⁶ Both the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees participated in the oral hearing after making written submissions in one case.⁵⁷

The submissions of interveners, especially non-governmental organizations, have been cited approvingly by the Court on some occasions. In Soering, the Court explicitly borrowed words from the Amnesty International submission to the effect that the 'virtual consensus in Western European legal systems that the death penalty is, under current circumstances, no longer consistent with regional standards of justice'.⁵⁸ It has also cited the submissions of Liberty, a London-based non-governmental organization, in assessing the existence of a European or international consensus on specific issues.⁵⁹ In one case, the Court noted the intervention by several non-governmental organizations in proceedings as something that 'highlights the general importance of the issue'.⁶⁰

Intervention of the Commissioner for Human Rights (art. 36(3))

The Council of Europe Commissioner for Human Rights was established by the Committee of Ministers on 7 May 1999.⁶¹ The Commissioner may intervene in proceedings as of right pursuant to article 36(3). The Commissioner is to advise the Registrar of the Court no later than twelve weeks after transmission of the application to the respondent State or notification to it of the decision to hold an oral hearing. The President of the Court may fix another time limit 'for exceptional reasons'. The Commissioner is also entitled to participate in the proceedings before the Court, either in person or, if unable to do so, by a person or persons so designated. The Commissioner may be assisted by an advocate.⁶²

The Commissioner has only exercised this right to intervene in proceedings on one occasion. Of course, the Court has often cited reports of the Commissioner for Human Rights,⁶³ although it does not always heed the views of the Commissioner.⁶⁴ In a case concerning treatment of persons with disability, on the basis of article 36(3) the Commissioner submitted written observations to the Court and subsequently participated in the hearing with oral submissions.⁶⁵ The intervention by the Commissioner was confined to an admissibility issue, the standing of a non-governmental organization to submit an application on behalf of a severely disabled man who was already dead at the time of the application, and who did not apparently have any close relatives. The Commissioner

⁵⁶ S.A.S. v. France [GC], no. 43835/11, § 8, 1 July 2014; M.S.S. v. Belgium and Greece [GC], no. 30696/09, § 8, ECHR 2011. But not Taxquet v. Belgium [GC], no. 926/05, §§ 7–8, ECHR 2010; Nada v. Switzerland [GC], no. 10593/08, § 5, ECHR 2012.

⁵⁷ M.S.S. v. Belgium and Greece [GC], no. 30696/09, §§ 7–88, ECHR 2011.

⁵⁸ Soering v. the United Kingdom, 7 July 1989, § 102, Series A no. 161. Also Chahal v. the United Kingdom, 15 November 1996, §§ 99, 102, 145, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-V; Brannigan and McBride v. the United Kingdom, 26 May 1993, Concurring Opinion of Judge Martens, § 1, Series A no. 258-B.

⁵⁹ I. v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 25680/94, §§ 64, 83, 11 July 2002; Sheffield and Horsham v. the United Kingdom, 30 July 1998, § 57, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-V.

⁶⁰ Karner v. Austria, no. 40016/98, § 28, ECHR 2003-IX.

⁶¹ Resolution (99) 50.

⁶² Rules of Court, Rule 44(2). See also Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, para. 88.

⁶³ E.g., Oleksandr Volkov v. Ukraine, no. 21722/11, § 80, 9 January 2013.

⁶⁴ S.A.S. v. France [GC], no. 43835/11, §§ 37, 147, 149, 1 July 2014.

⁶⁵ CommDH(2011)37, in Centre for Legal Resources on behalf of Valentin Câmpeanu v. Romania [GC], no. 47848/08, §§ 5, 6, 17 July 2014.

argued in favour of expanding the Court's approach to legal standing, 'recognising the invaluable contribution made by NGOs in the field of human rights for people with disabilities'.⁶⁶

The Commissioner has also intervened in cases at the invitation of the Court. In a case involving expulsion of asylum seekers, the Commissioner made written submissions and participated in the oral hearing.⁶⁷ Information on the length of proceedings submitted by the Commissioner was accepted by the Court as evidence.⁶⁸ In a dissenting opinion, Judge Nicolas Bratza spoke of the 'powerful submissions' of the Commissioner for Human Rights.⁶⁹

Further reading

Hervé Ascensio, 'L'amicus curiae devant les juridictions internationales', [2001] Revue générale de droit international public 897.

Ireneu Cabral Barreto, 'Article 48', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 793–803.

Nicole Bürlü, 'Amicus curiae as a Means to Reinforce the Legitimacy of the European Court of Human Rights', in Spyridon Flogaitis, Tom Zwart, and Julie Fraser, eds, The European Court of Human Rights and its Discontents, Turning Criticism into Strength, Cheltenham, UK/Northampton, MA: Edward Elgar, 2013, pp. 135–46.

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 521–2.

Janneke Gerards and Ashley Terlouw, 'Solutions for the European Court of Human Rights: The Amicus Curiae Project', in Spyridon Flogaitis, Tom Zwart, and Julie Fraser, eds, The European Court of Human Rights and its Discontents, Turning Criticism into Strength, Cheltenham, UK / Northampton, MA: Edward Elgar, 2013, pp. 158–82.

Antony Lester, 'Amici curiae. Third Party Interventions before the European Court of Human Rights', in F. Matscher and H. Petzold, eds, Protecting Human Rights: The European Dimension, Cologne: Carl Heymanns, 1988, pp. 341–9.

J.H. Gerards and A. Terlouw, eds, Amici curiae. Adviezen aan het Europees Hof voor de Rechten van de Mens, Nijmegen: Wolf Legal Publishers, 2012.

Leo Zwaak, 'The Procedure before the European Court of Human Rights', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 204–6.

⁶⁶ Centre for Legal Resources on behalf of Valentin Câmpeanu v. Romania [GC], no. 47848/08, §§ 92–93, 17 July 2014.

⁶⁷ CommDH(2010)22, in M.S.S. v. Belgium and Greece [GC], no. 30696/09, §§ 7–8, ECHR 2011. See also Ahmed Ali v. the Netherlands and Greece (dec.), no. 26494/09, § 7, 24 January 2012; Djelani Sufi, Hassan Gudud, and Others v. the Netherlands and Greece (dec.), no. 28631/09, § 7, 20 September 2011.

⁶⁸ M.S.S. v. Belgium and Greece [GC], no. 30696/09, § 320, ECHR 2011.

⁶⁹ M.S.S. v. Belgium and Greece [GC], no. 30696/09, Partly Dissenting Opinion of Judge Bratza, § 9, ECHR 2011.

Article 37. Striking out applications/Radiation

1. The Court may at any stage of the proceedings decide to strike an application out of its list of cases where the circumstances lead to the conclusion that

- (a) the applicant does not intend to pursue his application; or
- (b) the matter has been resolved; or
- (c) for any other reason established by the Court, it is no longer justified to continue the examination of the application.

However, the Court shall continue the examination of the application if respect for human rights as defined in the Convention and the Protocols thereto so requires.

2. The Court may decide to restore an application to its list of cases if it considers that the circumstances justify such a course.

1. A tout moment de la procédure, la Cour peut décider de rayer une requête du rôle lorsque les circonstances permettent de conclure

- a) que le requérant n'entend plus la maintenir; ou
- b) que le litige a été résolu; ou
- c) que, pour tout autre motif dont la Cour constate l'existence, il ne se justifie plus de poursuivre l'examen de la requête.

Toutefois, la Cour poursuit l'examen de la requête si le respect des droits de l'homme garantis par la Convention et ses Protocoles l'exige.

2. La Cour peut décider la réinscription au rôle d'une requête lorsqu'elle estime que les circonstances le justifient.

Introductory comments

All courts require some mechanism enabling them to dispose of cases when the parties no longer wish to proceed, or when the dispute has been settled, or when the facts have changed rendering the continuation of proceedings to be of no practical use. Because human rights issues may be of significance that goes well beyond the interests and wishes of the parties, the Convention circumscribes this power somewhat, authorizing the Court to proceed with cases under specific circumstances even if this is not the wish of the parties.

Drafting of the provision

Nothing resembling article 37 is found in the 1950 text of the Convention. A provision authorizing the European Commission of Human Rights to strike out an application was introduced as article 30 by Protocol No. 8, which entered into force in 1990.¹ The provision was described as 'thereby confirming what is already a long-established practice'.² Indeed, the only substantive change to the practice then followed by the Commission was the introduction of paragraph 1(c). The Explanatory Report notes that the Commission had assumed the power to do this from its creation. It said that 'it was felt ¹ Protocol No. 8 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, ETS 118, art. 6.

² Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 8, para. 10.

appropriate' to regulate the power of the Commission in this area, although detailed rules concerning the striking out of applications would be left to the Commission's rules of procedure. The Explanatory Report says that it was not considered necessary to adopt a similar provision for the Court, noting that the power had also been introduced into the Rules of Court.³

Protocol No. 11 made only very minor changes to the text. The second paragraph of article 30, which dealt with the procedure of the European Commission, was removed. Otherwise, the first and third paragraphs were altered by replacing the word 'Commission' with 'Court'. The word 'petition' in the first sentence of former article 30 was replaced with 'application' wherever it occurred. Finally, the term 'Convention' was changed to 'Convention and its Protocols'. The title of the provision, 'Striking-out applications', was also added by Protocol No. 11, and it was renumbered as article 37. According to the Explanatory Report:

As was the case under former Article 30 of the Convention, the power to strike out is extended to applications submitted by a State under Article 33 as well as applications submitted by an individual under Article 34. Although it could be argued that an inherent power to strike out cases is vested in any court, this article has been included to avoid any doubts on the matter.⁴

Thus, there was no significant modification in the provision introduced by Protocol No. 11 that would suggest a change in interpretation.

Analysis and interpretation

At any stage of the proceedings, the Court may decide to strike an application out of its list of cases in accordance with article 37 of the Convention.⁵ Striking out of a case from the list may take place when an applicant has lost the status of a victim within the meaning of article 34, when the matter has been resolved, and for any other reason deemed appropriate by the Court. Sub-paragraph (a) of paragraph 1 is dependent upon the will of the applicant, whereas sub-paragraphs (b) and (c) may apply regardless of the applicant's intention and even if he or she is still a victim within the meaning of article 34 of the Convention.⁶ In inter-State cases, when an applicant State Party notifies the Registrar of its intention not to proceed with the case, the Chamber is empowered to strike the application out of the Court's list pursuant to article 37 of the Convention if the other State Party or Parties concerned in the case agree to such discontinuance.⁷

If there is a friendly settlement pursuant to article 39, the application is struck out of the Court's list by means of a decision. Article 39(4) of the Convention declares that the decision is transmitted to the Committee of Ministers for the supervision of its execution. In other cases contemplated by article 37, if the application has already been declared admissible it is struck out by a judgment. If it has not yet been declared admissible, it is struck out by a decision. In the case of a judgment, the President of the Chamber forwards

³ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 8, para. 34.

⁴ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 92.

⁵ Rules of Court, Rule 43(1).

⁶ Pisano v. Italy (striking out) [GC], no. 36732/97, § 34, 24 October 2002; Akman v. Turkey (striking out), no. 37453/97, ECHR 2001-VI; Tanda-Muzinga v. France, no. 2260/10, § 57, 10 July 2014.

⁷ Rules of Court, Rule 43(2). See Denmark, Norway, and Sweden v. Greece, no. 4448/70, Commission report of 4 October 1976.

the judgment, once it has become final, to the Committee of Ministers for supervision, pursuant to article 46(2), the execution of any undertakings that were made as part of the settlement of the case.⁸

Failure to pursue an application (art. 37(1)(a))

Neither the Convention nor the Rules contemplate expressly the possibility of a discontinuance. Indeed, use of the word 'may' in the opening sentence of article 37(1) as well as the final sentence in paragraph 37(1) confirms that the Court is not bound to strike out a case simply because the applicant has indicated a desire to stop the proceedings. Nevertheless, in practice the Court will often strike out a case if the applicant had made clear an intent not to pursue the case.⁹ This may be indicated implicitly, by a failure to respond to communications from the Court.¹⁰ Sometimes the Court will conclude that an applicant has 'lost interest' in pursuing the case and strike it from the list.¹¹ If the applicant dies during the proceedings, it may be possible for next of kin to continue the case. But if no relative wishes to do this, article 37(1)(a) will apply.¹²

Matter resolved (art. 37(1)(b))

The Court may strike a case from the list if 'the matter has been resolved'. This requires the Court to address two issues. First, it must determine that the circumstances that form the basis of the application no longer obtain. Second, it must confirm that the effects of a possible violation of the Convention resulting from such circumstances have been redressed.¹³ The fact that a decision or measure favourable to the applicant has been taken by the government does not in itself remove the 'victim status' unless it is shown that the national authorities both acknowledged the violation of the Convention and provided some form of redress.¹⁴ Developments subsequent to the submission of the application may be taken into account. For example, where an asylum seeker was separated from his family for several years, the decision to enable family reunification did not sufficiently address the violation of the Convention that had taken place.¹⁵

⁸ Ibid., Rule 43(3).

⁹ D.D. v. France (striking out), no. 3/02, §§ 28–29, 8 November 2005; Zanguropol v. Romania (striking out), no. 29959/96, §§ 31–32, 8 April 2003; Duveau v. France (striking out), no. 77403/01, § 20, 26 April 2005; Teret v. Belgium (striking out), no. 49497/99, §§ 13–14, 15 November 2002.

¹⁰ Witczak v. Poland (striking out), no. 47404/99, §§ 15–18, 6 May 2003.

¹¹ Berdji v. France (striking out), no. 74184/01, §§ 19–29, 7 March 2006; Baldi v. Italy (striking out), no. 32584/96, §§ 19–21, 11 December 2003; Mróz v. Poland (striking out), no. 35192/97, §§ 51–53, 9 December 2003; Istituto Nazionale Case Srl v. Italy (striking out), nos 41479/78, §§ 16–19, 6 November 2003.

¹² Bitsinas v. Greece (striking out), no. 33076/02, § 12, 15 November 2005.

¹³ Pisano v. Italy (striking out) [GC], no. 36732/97, § 42, 24 October 2002; Sisojeva and Others v. Latvia (striking out) [GC], no. 60654/00, § 97, ECHR 2007-I; El Majjaoui and Stichting Touba Moskee v. the Netherlands (striking out) [GC], no. 25525/03, § 30, 20 December 2007; Shevanova v. Latvia (striking out) [GC], no. 58822/00, § 45, 7 December 2007.

¹⁴ Amuur v. France, 25 June 1996, § 36, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-III; Dalban v. Romania [GC], no. 28114/95, § 44, ECHR 1999-VI; Ilaşcu and Others v. Moldova and Russia (dec.) [GC], no. 48787/99, 4 July 2001.

¹⁵ Tanda-Muzinga v. France, no. 2260/10, § 58, 10 July 2014.

No longer justified (art. 37(1)(c))

A case may be struck out from the list where the State has made a unilateral declaration that the Court deems to be an acceptable offer of settlement, even if it is not considered adequate by the applicant.¹⁶ Nevertheless, the Grand Chamber may reverse a decision taken by a Chamber to strike out a case because of a unilateral declaration by a State. According to the Grand Chamber, the application of article 37(1)(c) in a situation of unilateral declaration depends upon whether it offers a sufficient basis for finding that respect for human rights does not require it to continue an examination of the case. The Grand Chamber said:

Relevant factors in this respect include the nature of the complaints made, whether the issues raised are comparable to issues already determined by the Court in previous cases, the nature and scope of any measures taken by the respondent Government in the context of the execution of judgments delivered by the Court in any such previous cases, and the impact of these measures on the case at issue. It may also be material whether the facts are in dispute between the parties, and, if so, to what extent, and what prima facie evidentiary value is to be attributed to the parties' submissions on the facts. In that connection it will be of significance whether the Court itself has already taken evidence in the case for the purposes of establishing disputed facts. Other relevant factors may include the question of whether in their unilateral declaration the respondent Government have made any admission(s) in relation to the alleged violations of the Convention and, if so, the scope of such admissions and the manner in which they intend to provide redress to the applicant. As to the last-mentioned point, in cases in which it is possible to eliminate the effects of an alleged violation (as, for example, in some property cases) and the respondent Government declare their readiness to do so, the intended redress is more likely to be regarded as appropriate for the purposes of striking out the application, the Court, as always, retaining its power to restore the application to its list as provided in Article 37 § 2 of the Convention and Rule 44 § 5 of the Rules of Court.¹⁷

The Grand Chamber noted that the list it was proposing was not meant to be exhaustive and that further considerations might come into play in the future.¹⁸

The Court has wide discretion to identify grounds that fall within article 37(1)(c).¹⁹ Such grounds must 'reside in the particular circumstances of each case'.²⁰ When the provision was first introduced into the Convention, in Protocol No. 8, the Explanatory Report said that '[t]he authors of the Protocol considered that the scope of this subparagraph should be limited to cases which are comparable to those mentioned in subparagraphs a and b, for example, where the applicant has died and his heirs do not have a sufficient legal interest to justify the further examination of the petition on their behalf'.²¹

It is not unusual for an applicant to wish to withdraw the case because the source of the complaint has been resolved. The Court applies article 37(1)(c) in granting such a ¹⁶ T.A. v. Turkey, no. 26307/95, § 64, 9 April 2002; Haran v. Turkey (striking out), no. 25754/94, § 23, 26 March 2002; Tahsin Acar v. Turkey (preliminary issue) [GC], no. 26307/95, § 75, ECHR 2003-VI; Meriakri v. Moldova (striking out), no. 53487/99, § 31, 1 March 2005. See also Tahsin Acar v. Turkey (preliminary issue) [GC], no. 26307/95, Joint Concurring Opinion of Judges Sir Nicolas Bratza, Tulkens, and Vajić, ECHR 2003-VI; Tahsin Acar v. Turkey (preliminary issue) [GC], no. 26307/95, Concurring Opinion of Judge Ress, ECHR 2003-VI.

¹⁷ Tahsin Acar v. Turkey (preliminary issue) [GC], no. 26307/95, § 76, ECHR 2003-VI.

¹⁸ Ibid., § 77.

¹⁹ Sergey Zoloturkhin v. Russia [GC], no. 14939/03, § 115, ECHR 2009.

²⁰ Association SOS Attenuats and de Boery v. France [GC] (dec.), no. 76642/01, § 37, 2006-XIV; M.H. and A.S. v. the United Kingdom (dec.), nos 38267/07 and 14293/07, 16 December 2008.

²¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 8, para. 35.

request.²² In such cases, it may be that subparagraphs (a) and (c) both apply.²³ The Court accepted a unilateral declaration by the United Kingdom in a case concerning nearly 200 Somali asylum seekers.²⁴

Respect for human rights (art. 37(1) in fine)

Even if the other conditions are fulfilled, the Court will not strike out a case 'if respect for human rights as defined in the Convention and the Protocols thereto so requires'. The same expression is used in article 35(3)(b), whereby the Court may apply the de minimis principle and find an application to be inadmissible, and in article 39, governing a friendly settlement. In effect, once an application has been filed, even the consent of the parties is not enough, as a matter of law, to ensure that there is no assessment by the Court. The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 8, from which this provision originated, states that in assessing the issue of respect for human rights, 'the views of the respondent state as to the general interest in continuing with the examination of a petition should be given due weight'.²⁵

The raison d'être of this exception is that 'human rights cases before the Court generally also have a moral dimension, which must be taken into account when considering whether the examination of an application after the applicant's death should be continued. All the more so if the main issue raised by the case transcends the person and the interests of the applicant.'²⁶ Thus, '[a]lthough the primary purpose of the Convention system is to provide individual relief, its mission is also to determine issues on public-policy grounds in the common interest, thereby raising the general standards of protection of human rights and extending human rights jurisprudence throughout the community of Convention States'.²⁷

Before the human rights exception had been codified by Protocol No. 8 to the Convention, the European Commission of Human Rights had already recognized something similar. In Tyrer, a leading case dealing with corporal punishment, the Commission decided 'not to accede to the applicant's purported withdrawal of the application . . . since the case raised questions of a general character affecting the observance of the Convention which necessitated a further examination of the issues involved'.²⁸ In a case concerning differential treatment of homosexuals with respect to succession to tenancies, the Court considered that the application raised 'an important question of general interest not only for Austria but also for other States Parties to the Convention'. Rejecting the government's application to strike the case, the Court said that 'continued examination of the present application would contribute to elucidate, safeguard and develop the standards of protection under the Convention'.²⁹ Usually, however, the Court will make a perfunctory ²² Asadov and Others v. Azerbaijan (striking out), no. 138/03, §§ 14–15, 26 October 2006; Fazilet Partisi and Kutan v. Turkey (striking out), no. 1444/02, §§ 9–10, 27 April 2006.

²³ Koroniotis v. Germany (striking out), no. 66046/01, § 21, 21 April 2005.

²⁴ Musa and Others v. the United Kingdom (striking out), no. 8276/07, 26 June 2012.

²⁵ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 8, para. 36.

²⁶ Karner v. Austria, no. 40016/98, § 25, ECHR 2003-IX; Micallef v. Malta [GC], no. 17056/06, § 45, ECHR 2009; Malhous v. the Czech Republic [GC] (dec.), no. 33071/96, ECHR 2000-XII.

²⁷ Karner v. Austria, no. 40016/98, § 26, ECHR 2003-IX; Marie-Louise Loyer and Bruneel v. France, no. 55929/00, § 29, 5 July 2005.

²⁸ Tyrer v. the United Kingdom, no. 5856/72, Commission report of 14 December 1976, Appendix I, p. 25, referring to a Commission decision of 9 March 1976.

²⁹ Karner v. Austria, no. 40016/98, §§ 24–25, ECHR 2003-IX.

statement to the effect that 'no particular reason relating to respect for human rights as defined in the Convention requires it to continue the examination of the application'.³⁰

Restoration to the list (art. 37(2))

Exceptional circumstances allow the Court to restore a case to its list if it has previously been struck out.³¹ It may do this with respect to part of an application and not all of it.³² Although the Convention provides no specifics on the legal consequences, it would seem that the applicant is thereby restored to the position that he or she was in at the time the case was struck out. The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 8, in which the ancestor of this provision was first introduced to the Convention, says that 'bearing in mind the general requirement of legal certainty, it is to be expected that this power will be exercised very rarely'.³³ Indeed, there are very few examples in the case law of the provision being considered.

The Court will restore a case that was struck out because there was a friendly settlement whose terms and conditions were not then respected by the State.³⁴ The Court applied the provision where the State transferred the settlement sum to the account of two disabled applicants. However, the applicants could not themselves access the account and the money was not being spent on their welfare by those responsible for their care.³⁵ A case was also restored where a detainee dropped his application because it was a condition for a plea bargain with the prosecution that was to result in release. He claimed to have been misled by the authorities, renewing his allegations about the absence of appropriate medical care in prison. The Court agreed to restore the portion of the original application that was based upon violations of article 3 of the Convention.

In a case dealing with entitlement to social insurance that was submitted by several applicants, the representative of one of them informed the Court that for personal reasons she did not wish to continue. This was confirmed in a second letter and the Court agreed to grant the request, acknowledging her desire and considering that respect for human rights did not compel it to continue. Some weeks later, the applicant's representative said she had changed her mind. Noting that the original request to withdraw from the case was clear and unequivocal and that there was nothing to suggest the decision of the applicant had not been made freely, and considering that the issues were in any event being pursued by the other applicants, the Court said there was no reason to restore the application to the list.³⁶

The Court has taken into consideration the passage of a considerable lapse of time—several years—between the consent that a case be struck out and a request that it be restored in dismissing such an application.³⁷

³⁰ Sisojeva and Others v. Latvia (striking out) [GC], no. 60654/00, § 103, ECHR 2007-I; El Majjaoui and Stichting Touba Moskee v. the Netherlands (striking out) [GC], no. 25525/03, § 35, 20 December 2007; Pisano v. Italy (striking out) [GC], no. 36732/97, § 49, 24 October 2002.

³¹ Rules of Court, Rule 45.

³² Jashi v. Georgia, no. 10799/06, 9 December 2008.

³³ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 8, para. 39.

³⁴ Aleksentseva and 28 Others v. Russia (dec.), no. 75025/01, ECHR, 23 March 2006.

³⁵ Katić and Katić v. Serbia, no. 13920/04, 7 July 2009.

³⁶ Stec and Others v. the United Kingdom (dec.) [GC], nos 65731/01 and 65900/01, §§ 29–32, ECHR 2005-X.

³⁷ Matyar v. Turkey, no. 23423/94, §§ 134–135, 21 February 2002.

Costs

If an application is struck out from the list pursuant to article 37, any award of costs to the applicant is at the discretion of the Court.³⁸ If costs are awarded in a decision striking out an application that was not previously declared admissible, the President of the Chamber is required to forward the decision to the Committee of Ministers.³⁹

Further reading

Fiona Ang and Eva Berghmans, 'Friendly Settlements and Striking Out of Applications', in Paul Lemmens and Wouter Vandenhole, eds, Protocol No. 14 and the Reform of the European Court of Human Rights, Antwerp: Intersentia, 2005, pp. 89–104.

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 523–6.

Stefan Trechsel, 'Article 30', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 687–90.

Leo Zwaak, 'The Procedure before the European Court of Human Rights', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 207–13.

³⁸ Rules of Court, Rule 44(3).

³⁹ Ibid., Rule 43(4).

Article 38. Examination of the case/Examen contradictoire de l'affaire

The Court shall examine the case together with the representatives of the parties and, if need be, undertake an investigation, for the effective conduct of which the High Contracting Parties concerned shall furnish all necessary facilities.

La Cour examine l'affaire de façon contradictoire avec les représentants des parties et, s'il y a lieu, procède à une enquête pour la conduite efficace de laquelle les Hautes Parties contractantes intéressées fourniront toutes facilités nécessaires.

Introductory comments

There is no detailed provision in the Convention for the procedure to be followed and the evidentiary rules that are to be applied. It is relatively simple in nature and therefore well suited to an institution that receives litigants from scores of different legal systems, many of them without experience before the Convention organs and even, in some cases, without legal training or qualification. To some extent, the procedural regime has been developed within the Rules of Court. As for the rules of evidence, they are largely the result of evolving practice as developed in the case law.

Drafting of the provision

The ancestor of article 38 is article 28 of the 1950 Convention. It concerned the European Commission, not the European Court, however. It was the former that had the primary responsibility for fact-finding under the former Convention, although the possibility of the Court not only hearing evidence but even soliciting it, proprio motu, could not be excluded.¹

The Draft Statute that was annexed to the initial draft European Convention on Human Rights prepared by the International Juridical Section of the European Movement made detailed provision for the conduct of proceedings, including the presentation of evidence.² In Section III of its draft Convention, dealing with the functions of the European Commission, the Consultative Assembly adopted the following provision:

The Commission shall then undertake:

- 1) An investigation of the application with the assistance of the representatives of either party;
- 2) If necessary, an enquiry.³

The Consultative Assembly text was referred by the Committee of Ministers to a Committee of Experts that met in February and March 1950. The French expert, Charles ¹ See, for example, Ireland v. the United Kingdom, 18 January 1978, § 184, Series A no. 25.

² Draft Statute of the European Court of Human Rights, INF/5/E/R, I TP 302-321, at pp. 314-16, arts. 36-49.

³ Recommendation No. 38 to the Committee of Ministers adopted 8 September 1949 on the conclusion of the debates, Doc. AS (1) 108, II TP 274-83, at p. 280, art. 13.

Chaumont, proposed that paragraph 2 be replaced with: 'If need be, an enquiry; the State concerned shall furnish all facilities necessary for the efficient conduct of this enquiry.'⁴ It was incorporated in the draft adopted by the Committee of Experts.

In the event of the Commission accepting the application, it shall then undertake:

- a) an investigation of the application with the assistance of the representative of either party;
- b) if need be, an enquiry; the State concerned shall furnish all facilities necessary for the efficient conduct of this enquiry, after an exchange of views with the Commission.⁵

The Committee of Ministers referred the draft to a Conference of Senior Officials, Its drafting Sub-Committee made a number of changes to the provision.⁶ The final version adopted by the Conference stated:

In the event of the Commission accepting the application, it shall then undertake:

- a) an examination of the application with the representatives of the parties of the application;
- b) if need be, an investigation, for the effective conduct of which, the States concerned shall furnish all facilities after an exchange of views with the Commission.⁷

The Committee of Ministers consolidated the two paragraphs:

In the event of the Commission accepting a matter referred to it:

- a) it shall, with a view to ascertaining the facts, undertake an examination, together with the representatives of the parties, of the matter and, if need be, an investigation, for the effective conduct of which the States concerned shall furnish all facilities after an exchange of views with the Commission.⁸

The final version of article 28(a), adopted in November 1950, reads as follows:

1. In the event of the Commission accepting a petition referred to it:
 - (a) it shall, with a view to ascertaining the facts, undertake together with the representatives of the parties an examination of the petition and, if need be, an investigation, for the effective conduct of which the States concerned shall furnish all necessary facilities, after an exchange of views with the Commission;

As a consequence of Protocol No. 11, article 28 was replaced by article 38:

Examination of the case and friendly settlement proceedings

1. If the Court declares the application admissible, it shall:
 - a. pursue the examination of the case, together with the representatives of the parties, and if need be, undertake an investigation, for the effective conduct of which the States concerned shall furnish all necessary facilities;

⁴ Amendments to Articles 20 and 27 of the Recommendation of the Consultative Assembly proposed by the French Expert, Doc. A 794, III TP 198–201.

⁵ Appendix to the Report of the Committee of Experts on Human Rights: Draft Convention of Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 16 March 1950, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 15 appendix, CM/WP 1 (50) 14 revised, A 925, IV TP 50–79, at p. 68, art. 20(24). Also Preliminary Draft Convention for the Maintenance and Further Realisation of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 15 February 1950, Doc. A 833, III TP 236–46, at p. 242, art. 18; First part of the proposals of the Drafting Sub-Committee concerning Sections II and III put forward by MM. Perassi, Salen, and Chaumont, Doc. A 806, III TP 212–17, at p. 214, art. 14.

⁶ New draft Section III prepared by the Drafting Sub-Committee, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 11, A 1374, IV TP 194–9, at p. 196, art. H.

⁷ Draft Convention annexed to the Report, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19 annex, CM/WP 4 (50) rev., A 1452, IV TP 274–95, at p. 286, art. 26.

⁸ Draft Convention adopted by the Committee of Ministers, 7 August 1950, Doc. A 1937, V TP 120–45, at p. 134, art. 28; Draft Convention adopted by the Sub-Committee, Doc. CM 1 (50) 52, A 1884, V TP 76–99, at p. 88, art. 28.

Paragraph 1 of article 38 is based on paragraph 1 of article 28 of the 1950 text of the Convention, as the Explanatory Report to Protocol No. 11 makes clear. It adds that the paragraph has been 'somewhat shortened'. According to the Report, '[t]he Court is responsible for the establishment of the facts and may conduct an investigation on the understanding that the parties furnish the Court with all the relevant information'.⁹

Article 38 was modified by Protocol No. 14. The second paragraph of article 38, dealing with friendly settlement proceedings, became a distinct provision, article 39. According to the Explanatory Report, Article 38 incorporates the provisions of paragraph 1.a of former Article 38. The changes are intended to allow the Court to examine cases together with the Parties' representatives, and to undertake an investigation, not only when the decision on admissibility has been taken, but at any stage in the proceedings. They are a logical consequence of the changes made in Articles 28 and 29, which encourage the taking of joint decisions on the admissibility and merits of individual applications. Since this provision applies even before the decision on admissibility has been taken, High Contracting Parties are required to provide the Court with all necessary facilities prior to that decision. The Parties' obligations in this area are thus reinforced. It was not considered necessary to amend Article 38 (or Article 34, last sentence) in other respects, notably as regards possible non-compliance with these provisions. These provisions already provide strong legal obligations for the High Contracting Parties and, in line with current practice, any problems which the Court might encounter in securing compliance can be brought to the attention of the Committee of Ministers so that the latter take any steps it deems necessary.¹⁰

Analysis and interpretation

Article 38 sets out several principles concerning the examination of the case by the European Court of Human Rights. First, it establishes that the Court is to examine the case 'together with the representatives of the parties'. The French version is slightly more detailed in this respect: 'de façon contradictoire avec les représentants des parties', although it seems that the two versions state 'en substance la même idée'.¹¹ The details on how this examination is to be conducted are left to the Rules of Court.

The possibility that the Court may undertake an investigation is recognized. Finally, the obligation on the parties to 'furnish all necessary facilities' to facilitate 'the effective conduct' of any investigation is affirmed. Investigations by the Court are quite unusual. Detailed provision for their conduct is found in the Rules of Court.

Conduct of the examination

With respect to individual applications, upon receipt of an application, a number is assigned and a legal officer of the Court makes a preliminary review of the petition. At this pre-judicial stage, a large number of applications appear to be 'disposed of administratively', according to statistical information published by the Court. Each case is then assigned to a single judge, a three-judge Committee, or a seven-judge Chamber. Each one of these judicial formations may reject the application summarily based upon an initial assessment.¹² Those that pass this initial filtering are 'communicated' to the respondent State. The Court may request the parties to provide factual information, documents, and other

⁹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 93.

¹⁰ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, para. 90.

¹¹ Stefan Trechsel, 'Article 28§1-a', in Petiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 649-59, at p. 652.

¹² Rules of Court, Rules 52A(1), 53(1), 54(1).

materials considered relevant.¹³ It will also give notice of the application, or that part that it does not consider to be evidently inadmissible, inviting the respondent State to submit written observations. These are then transmitted to the applicant, who is invited to submit observations in reply.¹⁴ The Court may then seek additional submissions from the parties.¹⁵ Upon the request of one of the parties or on its own motion, the Chamber may decide to hold an oral hearing.¹⁶

With respect to inter-State cases, there is no initial screening. Notice of the application is given immediately to the respondent State.¹⁷ The respondent State is invited to submit its observations on the issue of admissibility. The applicant State may make written observations in reply.¹⁸ Further submissions on the issue of admissibility may be requested by the Court.¹⁹ If the Court decides to admit the application, it sets down time limits for filing of written submissions on the merits and the production of additional evidence.²⁰ An oral hearing on both admissibility and the merits may be held if requested by one of the parties or if the Chamber so decides.²¹

In the vast majority of cases, the submissions are entirely written and no hearing is conducted.²² Pleadings may be filed with the Court in hard copy, by fax, or electronically.²³ When a hearing takes place, it is in principle open to the public, although in exceptional circumstances some or all of it may be held in camera.²⁴ The President of the Chamber organizes and directs the hearings, prescribing the order in which the parties address the Court.²⁵ Typically, each of the parties is given 30 minutes in which to make submissions. This is followed by questions from members of the Chamber.²⁶ After a brief pause, the parties have a short period of time in which to reply to the submissions of the other party and to respond to the questions from the bench, if any. Very exceptionally, the hearing may also involve testimony of material or expert witnesses.²⁷ At the hearing, any judge may put questions to a person appearing before the Chamber.²⁸ If a party or any other person due to appear fails to do so or declines to appear, the Chamber may nevertheless proceed with the hearing 'provided that it is satisfied that such a course is consistent with the proper administration of justice'.²⁹ The President may require that a verbatim record of the hearing be prepared, the contents of which are prescribed in the Rules of Court.³⁰

¹³ Ibid., Rules 53(2), 54(2)(a).

¹⁴ Ibid., Rule 54(2)(b).

¹⁵ Ibid., Rules 54(2)(c), 59(1).

¹⁶ Ibid., Rules 54(5), 59(3).

¹⁷ Ibid., Rule 51(1).

¹⁸ Ibid., Rule 51(3).

¹⁹ Ibid., Rule 51(4).

²⁰ Ibid., Rule 58(1).

²¹ Ibid., Rules 51(5), 58(2).

²² See Practice Direction, Written Pleadings, 10 December 2007.

²³ See Practice Direction, Secured Electronic Filing, 22 September 2008.

²⁴ Rules of Court, Rule 63. See Husayn (Abu Zubaydah) v. Poland, no. 7511/13, § 8, 24 July 2014.

²⁵ Rules of Court, Rule 64.

²⁶ Ibid., Rule 64(2).

²⁷ E.g., Husayn (Abu Zubaydah) v. Poland, no. 7511/13, § 8, 24 July 2014.

²⁸ Rules of Court, Rule 64(2).

²⁹ Ibid., Rule 65.

³⁰ Ibid., Rule 70.

Pursuant to the Rules of Court, a Chamber may 'ask any person or institution of its choice to express an opinion or make a written report on any matter considered by it to be relevant to the case'.³¹ For example, the European Commission for Democracy through Law (Venice Commission) produced an opinion³² at the request of a Chamber in a case concerning funding of a political party.³³ This seems essentially the same as the amicus curiae function provided for in article 36(2) of the Convention.

Investigations and fact-finding

The vast majority of cases that come before the Court raise issues concerning the application of national legislation, its consistency with the Convention, and the operation of the judicial system. Because of the requirement of exhaustion of domestic remedies, which is itself rooted in the principle of subsidiarity, the factual underpinning of cases has usually been well established at the domestic level before it gets to the European Court. Not only does the European Court of Human Rights not sit as a tribunal of fourth instance, it also 'has consistently recognised that it must be cautious in taking on the role of a first-instance tribunal of fact, where this is not rendered unavoidable by the circumstances of a particular case'.³⁴ There is great deference for the findings of fact by domestic courts.³⁵ Although the Court is not bound by such conclusions at the national level and remains free to reach its own view of the facts, 'in normal circumstances it requires cogent elements to lead it to depart from the findings of fact reached by the domestic courts'.³⁶ In some circumstances, the Court has found it necessary to undertake fact-finding, notably, although not exclusively, in inter-State cases. This function of the Court is expressly provided by article 38 in the reference to its authority to 'undertake an investigation'.

The investigative function of the Court is framed in the Annex to the Rules (concerning investigations). This document provides that a Chamber may, at the request of a party or proprio motu, 'adopt any investigative measure which it considers capable of clarifying the facts of the case'. Specifically, it says such measures may include 'inviting' the parties to produce documentary evidence and the hearing of witnesses or experts.³⁷ The Annex to the Rules refers to conducting an inquiry, carrying out an on-site visit, and 'tak[ing] evidence in some other manner'.³⁸

The investigation may be conducted by the Chamber itself³⁹ or by a 'delegate' or 'delegates' who compose a 'delegation'. These are judges of the Court, normally members ³¹ Ibid., Annex to the Rules (concerning investigations), Rule A 1(2).

³² Opinion on the Prohibition of Financial Contributions to Political Parties from Foreign Sources (amicus curiae opinion for the European Court of Human Rights) adopted by the Venice Commission at its 66th Plenary Session (Venice, 17–18 March 2006), CDL-AD(2006)014.

³³ Parti nationaliste basque—Organisation régionale d'Iparralde v. France, no. 71251/01, § 3, ECHR 2007-II.

³⁴ Husayn (Abu Zubaydah) v. Poland, no. 7511/13, § 393, 24 July 2014; Imakayeva v. Russia, no. 7615/02, § 113, ECHR 2006-XIII (extracts); Aslakhanova and Others v. Russia, nos 2944/06, 8300/07, 50184/07, 332/08, and 42509/10, § 96, 18 December 2012; El-Masri v. the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia [GC], no. 39630/09, § 154, ECHR 2012; McKerr v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 28883/95, 4 April 2000.

³⁵ Edwards v. the United Kingdom, 16 December 1992, § 34, Series A no. 247-B; Klaas v. Germany, 22 September 1993, § 29, Series A no. 269.

³⁶ Giuliani and Gaggio v. Italy, no. 23458/02, § 180, 24 March 2011; Avsar v. Turkey, no. 25657/94, § 283, ECHR 2001-VII (extracts); Barbu Anghelescu v. Romania, no. 46430/99, § 52, 5 October 2004.

³⁷ Rules of Court, Annex to the Rules (concerning investigations), Rule A1(1).

³⁸ Ibid., Rule A1(3).

³⁹ Ibid., Rule A1(4).

of the Chamber assigned to the case, but the Chamber is also entitled to 'appoint any person or institution of its choice to assist the delegation in such manner as it sees fit'.⁴⁰ In principle, proceedings that make up the investigation by a Chamber or its delegation are held in camera, although the President of the Chamber or the head of the delegation may decide otherwise.⁴¹

The Annex to the Rules imposes an obligation on the applicant and any States that are 'concerned' in the case to 'assist the Court as necessary in implementing any investigative measures'.⁴² In the case of an on-site visit to a State Party, the latter is required to 'extend to the delegation the facilities and cooperation necessary for the proper conduct of the proceedings'.⁴³ The binding nature of such an obligation has not been tested before the Court, although it would seem likely it will view this by analogy with orders of interim measures. Both mechanisms are set out in the Rules and not the Convention itself, but they are a necessary corollary of the operation of the Court and implied or inherent in its authority.⁴⁴

In contrast with the imperative language used to describe the obligation to assist an investigation by the Court, the Rules are rather modest with respect to the conduct of hearings and the appearance of witnesses. For example, the Annex to the Rules speaks of a witness who fails to appear or 'declines to do so',⁴⁵ implying that there is nothing mandatory about a summons to testify before the Court. The State Party where the witness resides is 'responsible for servicing any summons sent to it by the Chamber for service'.⁴⁶

An on-site investigation was conducted in one of the very earliest cases to come before the Convention organs. In 1957, the European Commission of Human Rights decided to send a six-member 'Investigation Party' to visit Cyprus in order to inquire into the curfew then in force.⁴⁷ The Investigation Party conducted an inquiry over two weeks in January 1958, hearing witnesses from the Greek and Turkish communities, as well as British witnesses.⁴⁸ The Commission returned to Cyprus in 1975 and again in 1997 and 1998. The 1975 visit was described as being conducted both for the purpose of gathering information and also to put themselves at the disposal of the parties with a view to reaching a friendly settlement.⁴⁹ In 1997 and 1998, delegates of the Commission heard witnesses on the situation of Greek Cypriots and Maronites in the occupied portion of northern Cyprus.⁵⁰ Hearings were conducted in Strasbourg, London, and Cyprus.⁵¹ The Commission travelled to the occupied territory, visiting schools and churches.⁵² When it assessed the evidence gathered by the delegates of the Commission, the European Court

⁴⁰ Ibid., Rule A1(3).

⁴¹ Ibid., Rule A1(5).

⁴² Ibid., Rule A2(1).

⁴³ Ibid., Rule A2(2).

⁴⁴ Bazorkina v. Russia, no. 69481/01, § 179, 27 July 2006. On interim measures, see: Paladi v. Moldova [GC], no. 39806/05, § 85, 10 March 2009.

⁴⁵ Rules of Court, Annex to the Rules (concerning investigations), Rule A3.

⁴⁶ Ibid., Rule A5(4).

⁴⁷ Greece v. the United Kingdom, no. 176/56, § 284, Commission report of 26 September 1958.

⁴⁸ Ibid., §§ 242–245, 285–288, 315–317.

⁴⁹ Cyprus v. Turkey, nos 67801/74 and 69501/75, §§ 4, 30–40, Commission report of 10 July 1976.

⁵⁰ Cyprus v. Turkey, no. 25781/94, §§ 391–406, 542–55, Commission report of 4 June 1999; Cyprus v. Turkey [GC], no. 25781/94, §§ 37, 107–110, ECHR 2001-IV.

⁵¹ Cyprus v. Turkey, no. 25781/94, § 542, Commission report of 4 June 1999.

⁵² Ibid., §§ 407–409.

noted that when they took evidence they complied with the fairness requirements of article 6 of the Convention.⁵³

The Commission also heard evidence in the Ireland v. The United Kingdom case. A total of 119 witnesses testified before delegates of the Commission. Three witnesses proposed by the United Kingdom were heard in London in the absence of representatives of the parties and without being cross-examined.⁵⁴ Witnesses from the British armed forces and the Royal Ulster Constabulary were heard at the Stavanger Military Base in Norway. A delegation was also dispatched to Turkey in the case filed by several European States. It met with a number of senior government officials and visited detention centres.⁵⁵ Much more recently, the European Court has appointed delegates to hear evidence in the inter-State case between Georgia and Russia. This consisted of witness testimony in Strasbourg; there was no on site visit.⁵⁶

Investigation in individual petition cases is relatively rare.⁵⁷ In a case concerning prisoners in Northern Ireland, the delegates of the Commission first heard evidence in Strasbourg, then travelled to Northern Ireland, where they took the testimony of detainees in the Maze prison.⁵⁸ The Commission also conducted in situ investigations with respect to allegations of torture in Turkey.⁵⁹ As long as the European Commission of Human Rights was operating, the European Court was generally deferential towards it as the designated fact-finding body.⁶⁰ There were exceptions, however, when the Court decided to hear witnesses. Two judges were delegated to take the evidence; one witness who had difficulty attending in Strasbourg was permitted to submit a written statement. A handwriting expert was also consulted by the Court.⁶¹

Since the abolition of the Commission, the Court has conducted investigations in several individual cases.⁶² In the case concerning detention sites in Poland, the Court heard several witnesses in Strasbourg.⁶³ The Grand Chamber conducted an on site visit to Transnistria in another case, hearing scores of witnesses. In its judgment, the Grand Chamber said it 'deplore[d] the fact' that a government witness had failed to appear, finding it 'hard to believe, in view of his high profile, that it was impossible to contact him in order to summon him to give evidence'. The Court reserved the right to draw 'the ⁵³ Cyprus v. Turkey [GC], no. 25781/94, § 6, ECHR 2001-IV.

⁵⁴ Ireland v. the United Kingdom, 18 January 1978, § 146, Series A no. 25.

⁵⁵ France, Norway, Denmark, Sweden, and the Netherlands v. Turkey, nos 9940-9944/82, §§ 27-28, Commission report of 7 December 1985, DR 35, p. 143.

⁵⁶ Georgia v. Russia (I) [GC], no. 13255/07, §§ 13-17, 86-92, 3 July 2014.

⁵⁷ Arthur Hilton v. the United Kingdom, no. 5613/72, pp. 1-2, Commission report of 6 March 1978; Simon Herold v. Austria, no. 4340/69, p. 6, Commission report of 19 December 1972.

⁵⁸ Donnelly and Others v. the United Kingdom, nos 5577-5583/72, Commission decision of 15 December 1975, (1976) 19 YB 84, DR 4, p. 4.

⁵⁹ Aksoy v. Turkey, 18 December 1996, § 23, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-VI; Aksoy v. Turkey, no. 21987/93, §§ 12, 16, 73-116, Commission report of 23 October 1995; Kurt v. Turkey, 25 May 1998, §§ 13, 45, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-III; Kurt v. Turkey, no. 24276/94, §§ 30-50, Commission report of 5 December 1996; Çakıcı v. Turkey [GC], no. 23657/94, §§ 13, 43-55, ECHR 1999-IV; Çakıcı v. Turkey, no. 23657/94, §§ 11-32, Commission report of 12 March 1998.

⁶⁰ Stoček v. Germany, 19 March 1991, § 53, Series A no. 199.

⁶¹ Brozicek v. Italy, 19 December 1989, §§ 5-7, Series A no. 167.

⁶² For example, Ipek v. Turkey, no. 25760/94, § 8, ECHR 2004-II (extracts); Davydov and Others v. Ukraine, nos 17674/02 and 39081/02, §§ 6-9, 1 July 2010.

⁶³ Husayn (Abu Zubaydah) v. Poland, no. 7511/13, §§ 8, 12, 24 July 2014.

necessary inferences'.⁶⁴ The Court, sitting as a Chamber and not as a delegation, heard several witnesses in the cases concerning secret detention sites in Poland.⁶⁵

When witnesses testify before the Court, they are required to take an oath or solemn declaration.⁶⁶ Rules that are customary to the examination of witnesses in judicial proceedings apply.⁶⁷

Evidence

Although in most cases before the Court the facts themselves are not in dispute, when the parties advance conflicting accounts of the events, the Court 'is inevitably confronted when establishing the facts with the same difficulties as those faced by any first-instance court'.⁶⁸ The Court has 'complete freedom in assessing not only the admissibility and relevance but also the probative value of each item of evidence before it'.⁶⁹ The Court has often stated that it adopts the 'beyond reasonable doubt' standard, an expression borrowed from the common law. Nevertheless it has couched this in caveats, insisting that 'it has never been its purpose to borrow the approach of the national legal systems that use that standard' because it is not ruling on criminal guilt or civil liability.⁷⁰ Its task is to assess the responsibility of States under the European Convention. It insists that there are 'no procedural barriers to the admissibility of evidence or pre-determined formulae for its assessment'.⁷¹ Rather, '[i]t adopts the conclusions that are, in its view, supported by the free evaluation of all evidence, including such inferences as may flow from the facts and the parties' submissions'.⁷² The Court has said that 'proof may follow from the coexistence of sufficiently strong, clear and concordant inferences or of similar unrebutted presumptions of fact'.⁷³ The Court has said it is 'attentive to the seriousness that attaches to a ruling that a Contracting State has violated fundamental rights'.⁷⁴

It is probably a general principle of international law that affirmanti incumbit probatio: the burden of proof rests on the party making the claim. But the Court has said that Convention proceedings do not in all cases lend them to a strict application of this principle. In cases concerning the right to life and the prohibition of torture, 'where the events in issue lie wholly, or in large part, within the exclusive knowledge of the authorities, for instance as in the case of persons under their control in custody, strong presumptions of fact will arise in respect of injuries and death occurring during that ⁶⁴ Ilaşcu and Others v. Moldova and Russia [GC], no. 48787/99, §§ 12–14, ECHR 2004-VII.

⁶⁵ Husayn (Abu Zubaydah) v. Poland, no. 7511/13, § 8, 14, 24 July 2014; Al Nashiri v. Poland, no. 28761/11, § 344, 24 July 2014.

⁶⁶ Rules of Court, Annex to the Rules (concerning investigations), Rule A.6.

⁶⁷ Ibid., Rules A7, A8.

⁶⁸ Georgia v. Russia (I) [GC], no. 13255/07, § 104, 3 July 2014.

⁶⁹ Ibid., § 138; Ireland v. the United Kingdom, 18 January 1978, § 210, Series A no. 25.

⁷⁰ Husayn (Abu Zubaydah) v. Poland, no. 7511/13, § 394, 24 July 2014; Georgia v. Russia (no. I) [GC], no. 31255/07, § 93, 3 July 2014.

⁷¹ Husayn (Abu Zubaydah) v. Poland, no. 7511/13, § 394, 24 July 2014.

⁷² Ibid.

⁷³ Ibid.

⁷⁴ Ireland v. the United Kingdom, 18 January 1978, § 161, Series A no. 25; Nachova and Others v. Bulgaria [GC], nos 43577/98 and 43579/98, § 147, ECHR 2005-VII; Creangă v. Romania [GC], no. 29226/03, § 88, 23 February 2012; El-Masri v. the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia [GC], no. 39630/09, § 151, ECHR 2012; Giuliani and Gaggio v. Italy, no. 23458/02, § 181, 24 March 2011; Ribitsch v. Austria, 4 December 1995, § 32, Series A no. 336; Nachova and Others v. Bulgaria [GC], nos 43577/98 and 43579/98, § 147, ECHR 2005-VII.

detention'.⁷⁵ There is a reversal of the burden of proof: 'Lorsqu'il se trouve établi ou lorsqu'il n'est pas contesté qu'un décès dénoncé au regard de l'article 2 § 2 a résulté d'un usage délibéré de la force meurtrière par des agents de l'Etat, la charge de la preuve incombe au gouvernement défendeur, auquel il appartient de réfuter les allégations de la partie requérante par des moyens appropriés et convaincants'.⁷⁶

When considering the existence of an administrative practice in an inter-State case, the Court does not consider that either of the two States involved bears a burden of proof; rather, it will 'study all the material before it, from whatever source it originates'.⁷⁷ In both inter-State and individual cases, satisfactory proof may result from 'the coexistence of sufficiently strong, clear and concordant inferences or of similar unrebutted presumptions of fact'.⁷⁸ This is especially true in disappearance cases, where the applicant is generally in possession of little evidence. The Court has said that 'strong presumptions of fact will arise in respect of injuries, death or disappearances' when persons have been detained and they are not accounted for.⁷⁹ In such circumstances, it is sufficient for applicants to make a prima facie case of abduction by officials under the control of the authorities 'and it would then be for the Government to discharge their burden of proof either by disclosing the documents in their exclusive possession or by providing a satisfactory and convincing explanation of how the events in question occurred'.⁸⁰ In some cases, the Court has also drawn the presumption that a missing person is actually dead if an individual has been detained by unidentified State agents without any subsequent acknowledgement of the detention.⁸¹ In discrimination cases, if the applicant has established the existence of a differential treatment, the State has the burden to prove that this is justified.⁸²

The Court may draw inferences that are unfavourable to the respondent State in the absence of an explanation, even if the latter does not in the strict sense have any burden of proof.⁸³ More generally, the conduct of the parties with respect to any efforts of the Court

⁷⁵ Husayn (Abu Zubaydah) v. Poland, no. 7511/13, § 396, 24 July 2014; Çakıcı v. Turkey [GC], no. 23657/94, § 85, ECHR 1999-IV; Salman v. Turkey [GC], no. 21986/93, § 100, ECHR 2000-VII; Imakayeva v. Russia, no. 7615/02, §§ 114–115, ECHR 2006-XIII (extracts).

⁷⁶ Mansuroğlu v. Turkey, no. 43443/98, § 77, 26 February 2008.

⁷⁷ Georgia v. Russia (no. 1) [GC], no. 31255/07, § 95, 3 July 2014; Ireland v. the United Kingdom, 18 January 1978, § 160, Series A no. 25; Cyprus v. Turkey [GC], no. 25781/94, § 113, ECHR 2001-IV.

⁷⁸ Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, § 148, ECHR 2009; Salman v. Turkey [GC], no. 21896/93, § 100, ECHR 2000-VII; Akdeniz and Others v. Turkey, no. 23954/94, §§ 85–89, 31 May 2000.

⁷⁹ Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, § 148, ECHR 2009; Salman v. Turkey [GC], no. 21896/93, § 100, ECHR 2000-VII; Akdeniz and Others v. Turkey, no. 23954/94, §§ 85–89, 31 May 2000.

⁸⁰ Akhmatov and Others v. Russia, nos 38828/10, 2543/11, 2650/11, 2685/11, 7409/11, 14321/11, and 26277/11, § 202, 16 January 2014; Bopayeva and Others v. Russia, no. 40799/06, § 70, 7 November 2013; Aziyev v. Russia, no. 7626/01, § 74, 20 March 2008; Ustayeva and Others v. Russia, no. 29133/03, § 160, 29 May 2008; Khutsayev and Others v. Russia, no. 16622/05, § 104, 27 May 2010.

⁸¹ Bopayeva and Others v. Russia, no. 40799/06, §§ 71–75, 7 November 2013; Bazorkina v. Russia, no. 69481/01, 27 July 2006; Imakayeva v. Russia, no. 7615/02, ECHR 2006-XIII (extracts); Luluyev and Others v. Russia, no. 69480/01, ECHR 2006-XIII (extracts); Akhmatova and Sadulayeva v. Russia, no. 40464/02, 10 May 2007; Velkhiyev and Others v. Russia, no. 34085/06, 5 July 2011; Akhmatov and Others v. Russia, nos. 38828/10, 2543/11, 2650/11, 2685/11, 7409/11, 14321/11, and 26277/11, § 203, 16 January 2014.

⁸² Chassagnou and Others v. France [GC], nos 25088/94, 28331/95, and 28443/95, § 70, ECHR 1999-III; Timishev v. Russia, nos. 55762/00 and 55974/00, § 57, ECHR 2005-XII.

⁸³ Husayn (Abu Zubaydah) v. Poland, no. 7511/13, § 396, 24 July 2014; El-Masri v. the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia [GC], no. 39630/09, § 152, ECHR 2012; Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, § 184, ECHR 2009; Kadirova and Others v. Russia, no. 5432/07, § 94, 27 March 2012; Aslakhanova and Others v. Russia, nos 2944/06, 8300/07, 50184/07, 332/08, and 42509/10, § 97, 18 December 2012.

to obtain evidence will be taken into account.⁸⁴ If the respondent State has exclusive information capable of corroborating or refuting the allegations of the applicant, the Court may draw inferences as to their validity if there is a lack of cooperation by the Government without a satisfactory explanation.⁸⁵

The Court has often attached importance to information found in reports of international human rights organizations as well as government sources.⁸⁶ In determining the reliability of such materials, 'the relevant criteria are the authority and reputation of their authors, the seriousness of the investigations by means of which they were compiled, the consistency of their conclusions and whether they are corroborated by other sources'.⁸⁷

Obligation to cooperate

Although not stated explicitly in article 38, the Court has considered that States have a general obligation to furnish documents to the Court. The duty to cooperate is spelled out in the Rules of Court:

The parties have a duty to cooperate fully in the conduct of the proceedings and, in particular, to take such action within their power as the Court considers necessary for the proper administration of justice. This duty shall also apply to a Contracting Party not party to the proceedings where such cooperation is necessary.⁸⁸

This obligation is also 'a corollary of the undertaking not to hinder the effective exercise of the right of individual application under Article 34 of the Convention'. Effective exercise of this right 'may be thwarted by a Contracting Party's failure to assist the Court in conducting an examination of all circumstances relating to the case, including in particular by not producing evidence which the Court considers crucial for its task'. The two provisions, article 34 and article 38, 'work together to guarantee the efficient conduct of the judicial proceedings and they relate to matters of procedure rather than to the merits of the applicants' grievances under the substantive provisions of the Convention or its Protocols'.⁸⁹ The Court may establish that there has been a failure by the respondent State to comply with its procedural obligations even in the absence of any admissible complaint about a violation of a substantive Convention right.⁹⁰ The procedural obligations resulting from articles 34 and 38 'must be enforced irrespective of the eventual outcome of the ⁸⁴ Ireland v. the United Kingdom, 18 January 1978, § 161, Series A no. 25; Ilaşcu and Others v. Moldova and Russia [GC], no. 48787/99, §§ 26, ECHR 2004-VII; Davydov and Others v. Ukraine, nos 17674/02 and 39081/02, § 158, 1 July 2010.

⁸⁵ Georgia v. Russia (I) [GC], no. 13255/07, § 104, 3 July 2014; Imakayeva v. Russia, no. 7615/02, § 111, ECHR 2006-XIII (extracts); Taniş and Others v. Turkey, no. 65899/01, § 160, ECHR 2005-VIII; Nolan and K. v. Russia, no. 2512/04, § 69, 12 February 2009; Makhmudov v. Russia, no. 35082/04, § 68, 26 July 2007; Fadeyeva v. Russia, no. 55723/00, § 79, ECHR 2005-IV; Ahmet Ozkan and Others v. Turkey, no. 21689/93, § 426, 6 April 2004.

⁸⁶ Georgia v. Russia (I) [GC], no. 13255/07, § 138, 3 July 2014, 4 July 2014; Saadi v. Italy [GC], no. 37201/06, § 131, ECHR 2008; NA. v. the United Kingdom, no. 25904/07, § 119, 17 July 2008; M.S.S. v. Belgium and Greece [GC], no. 30696/09, §§ 227 and 255, ECHR 2011; Hirsi Jamaa and Others v. Italy [GC], no. 27765/09, § 118, ECHR 2012.

⁸⁷ Georgia v. Russia (I) [GC], no. 13255/07, § 138, 3 July 2014; Saadi v. Italy [GC], no. 37201/06, § 143, ECHR 2008; NA. v. the United Kingdom, no. 25904/07, § 120, 17 July 2008; Sufi and Elmi v. the United Kingdom, nos 8319/07 and 11449/07, § 230, 28 June 2011.

⁸⁸ Rules of Court, Rule 44A.

⁸⁹ Janowiec and Others v. Russia [GC], nos 55508/07 and 29520/09, § 209, ECHR 2013.

⁹⁰ Ibid.; Poleshchuk v. Russia, no. 60776/00, 7 October 2004.

proceedings and in such a manner as to avoid any actual or potential chilling effect on the applicants or their representatives'.⁹¹

The Grand Chamber has explained:

[I]t is of the utmost importance for the effective operation of the system of individual petition instituted under Article 34 of the Convention that States should furnish all necessary facilities to make possible a proper and effective examination of applications. This obligation requires the Contracting States to furnish all necessary facilities to the Court, whether it is conducting a fact-finding investigation or performing its general duties as regards the examination of applications.⁹²

The obligation to provide evidence if requested by the Court binds the State from the moment it is formulated, regardless of the stage of the proceedings.⁹³ The State must furnish the requested material in its entirety. It must properly account for any missing elements.⁹⁴ For example, 'the Government's failure to respond diligently to the Court's requests for the evidence it considered necessary for the examination of the application, such as an unexpurgated copy of the investigation file, and the fact that it was unable to take evidence from Levent Ersöz, the commanding officer of the Şırnak gendarmerie regiment at the material time, or from the person, whose name has been withheld, who telephoned Serdar Tanış on 25 January 2001 ... cannot be reconciled with the Government's obligations under Article 38 § 1 (a) of the Convention'.⁹⁵ The Court has found violations of article 38 where the respondent State did not explain a refusal to submit documents it had requested⁹⁶ or submitted an incomplete or distorted copy while refusing to produce the original document for the Court's inspection.⁹⁷ Failure to provide documents or to obtain the attendance of witnesses 'prejudices the establishment of facts in a case, both before and after the decision on admissibility'.⁹⁸

In addition to a finding that the State has breached article 38, the Court may also draw adverse evidentiary inferences from a failure to comply with its requests for cooperation. According to the Rules of Court, '[w]here a party fails to comply with an order of the Court concerning the conduct of the proceedings, the President of the Chamber may take any steps which he or she considers appropriate'.⁹⁹ If there is 'a substantial and unexplained delay' in producing evidentiary materials, this may lead the Court 'to find the ⁹¹ Janowiec and Others v. Russia [GC], nos 55508/07 and 29520/09, § 209, ECHR 2013.

⁹² Ibid., § 202.

⁹³ Janowiec and Others v. Russia [GC], nos 55508/07 and 29520/09, § 209, ECHR 2013., § 203; Enukidze and Girgvlani v. Georgia, no. 25091/07, § 295, 26 April 2011; Bekirski v. Bulgaria, no. 71420/01, §§ 111–113, 2 September 2010.

⁹⁴ Janowiec and Others v. Russia [GC], nos 55508/07 and 29520/09, § 209, ECHR 2013; Damir Sibgarullin v. Russia, no. 1413/05, §§ 65–68, 24 April 2012; Enukidze and Girgvlani v. Georgia, no. 25091/07, §§ 299–300, 26 April 2011; Davydov and Others v. Ukraine, nos 17674/02 and 39081/02, §§ 167 et seq., 1 July 2010.

⁹⁵ Tanış and Others v. Turkey, no. 65899/01, § 164, ECHR 2005–VIII. Also Benzer and Others v. Turkey, no. 23502/06, 12 November 2013; Yasin Ateş v. Turkey, no. 30949/96, §§ 84–7, 31 May 2005; Kışmır v. Turkey, no. 27306/95, §§ 77–80, 31 May 2005; Koku v. Turkey, no. 27305/95, §§ 103–109, 31 May 2005; Süheyla Aydın v. Turkey, no. 25660/94, §§ 137–143, 24 May 2005; Akkum and Others v. Turkey, no. 21894/93, §§ 185–190, ECHR 2005-II (extracts).

⁹⁶ Bekirski v. Bulgaria, no. 71420/01, § 115, 2 September 2010; Tigran Ayrapetyan v. Russia, no. 75472/01, § 64, 16 September 2010; Maslova and Naibandov v. Russia, no. 839/02, §§ 128–129, 24 January 2008.

⁹⁷ Trubnikov v. Russia, no. 49790/99, §§ 50–57, 5 July 2005.

⁹⁸ Bazorkina v. Russia, no. 69481/01, § 171, 27 July 2006; Timurtaş v. Turkey, no. 23531/94, §§ 66, 70, ECHR 2000-VI; Orhan v. Turkey, no. 25656/94, § 266, ECHR 2002.

⁹⁹ Rules of Court, Rule 44B. For application of the Rule, see Benzer and Others v. Turkey, no. 23502/06, 12 November 2013.

respondent State's explanations unconvincing'.¹⁰⁰ In the inter-State case between Georgia and Russia, following a finding of a breach of article 38 by the respondent State the Court held that there was 'a strong presumption that the applicant Government's allegations regarding the content of the circulars ordering the expulsion specifically of Georgian nationals are credible'.¹⁰¹

Governments have advanced confidentiality or security considerations to explain a failure to produce materials requested by the Court. In such cases, the Court must satisfy itself of the existence of 'reasonable and solid grounds for treating the documents in question as secret or confidential'.¹⁰² In examining the validity of the State's position, the Court will consider whether the document was in fact known to persons outside the secret intelligence services and the highest State officials. If this is the case, doubt is cast on the claim that the material in question is highly sensitive.¹⁰³ The Court has said that 'a mere reference to the structural deficiency of the domestic law which rendered impossible communication of sensitive documents to international bodies is an insufficient explanation to justify the withholding of information requested by the Court'.¹⁰⁴ States are reminded of the principle pacta sunt servanda, codified in article 26 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, by which they must perform their conventional obligations in good faith, and of article 27 of the Convention by which provisions of internal law may not be invoked to justify the failure to comply with such obligations.¹⁰⁵

The Court will show considerable deference to a domestic judicial process by which documents are deemed to be sensitive and confidential. It does not consider that it is 'well equipped to challenge' such judgments.¹⁰⁶ Nevertheless, 'even where national security is at stake, the concepts of lawfulness and the rule of law in a democratic society require that measures affecting fundamental human rights must be subject to some form of adversarial proceedings before an independent body competent to review the reasons for the decision and the relevant evidence'.¹⁰⁷ The Court will not be satisfied with a perfunctory or incomplete assessment by national authorities. It has also offered to accommodate the concerns of States by, for example, ensuring restricted access to documents and even holding in camera hearings.¹⁰⁸

Estoppel

The requirement of the exhaustion of domestic remedies has the consequence of compelling the applicant to raise challenges based upon Convention rights before the national ¹⁰⁰ Janowiec and Others v. Russia [GC], nos 55508/07 and 29520/09, § 203, ECHR 2013; Damir Sibgatullin v. Russia, no.1413/05, § 68, 24 April 2012; Enukidze and Girguliiani v. Georgia, no. 25091/07, §§ 297, 301, 26 April 2011.

¹⁰¹ Georgia v. Russia (I) [GC], no. 13255/07, § 140, 3 July 2014.

¹⁰² Janowiec and Others v. Russia [GC], nos 55508/07 and 29520/09, § 205, ECHR 2013.

¹⁰³ Ibid., § 206.

¹⁰⁴ Janowiec and Others v. Russia [GC], nos 55508/07 and 29520/09, § 211, ECHR 2013; Nolan and K. v. Russia, no. 2512/04, § 56, 12 February 2009.

¹⁰⁵ Janowiec and Others v. Russia [GC], nos 55508/07 and 29520/09, § 211, ECHR 2013; Davydov and Others v. Ukraine, nos 17674/02 and 39081/02, § 170, 1 July 2010; Nolan and K. v. Russia, no. 2512/04, § 56, 12 February 2009; Georgia v. Russia (no. 1) [GC], no. 31255/07, § 105, 3 July 2014; Shakhgiriyeva and Others v. Russia, no. 27251/03, §§ 136–140, 8 January 2009; Al Nashiri v. Poland, no. 28761/11, § 366, 24 July 2014; Husayn (Abu Zubaydah) v. Poland, no. 7511/13, § 358, 24 July 2014.

¹⁰⁶ Janowiec and Others v. Russia [GC], nos 55508/07 and 29520/09, § 213, ECHR 2013.

¹⁰⁷ Ibid.

¹⁰⁸ Ibid., § 215; Nolan and K. v. Russia, no. 2512/04, § 51, 12 February 2009; Al Nashiri v. Poland, no. 28761/11, § 365, 24 July 2014; Husayn (Abu Zubaydah) v. Poland, no. 7511/13, § 357, 24 July 2014.

courts. Although obviously a condition of admissibility in the strict sense, the respondent State should also raise its objections to the challenge in the course of the national litigation. The arguments put by the State in proceedings before the European Court should be consistent with the position it adopted before the national courts.¹⁰⁹ Although unusual, there is no rule against a government disagreeing with the conclusions of its highest court in its submissions before the European Court.¹¹⁰ Where the highest courts in Britain found a notice of derogation from the Convention to be invalid, the European Court did not consider this to be an obstacle when the United Kingdom attempted to rely upon the notice in the Strasbourg proceedings.¹¹¹

Jura novit curiae

The Court is the master of the legal debate. It is entitled, by virtue of the jura novit curia principle, to consider provisions of the Convention that have not been invoked by the parties. 'A complaint is characterised by the facts alleged in it and not merely by the legal grounds or arguments relied on', it has said.¹¹² For example, on its own motion the Court raised a complaint under article 8 of the Convention, namely whether the facts of the case disclosed a breach of the State's positive obligation to ensure effective respect for the applicants' private life within the meaning of that provision.¹¹³ In a case of police violence, an applicant relied upon article 6 of the Convention but, invoking jura novit curia, the Court said that it would examine the case under article 3.¹¹⁴ In a wrongful death case, the Court took the perspective of article 2, although the applicant's submission had been based upon articles 6 and 8.¹¹⁵

Bibliography

- Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 527–32.
 Stefan Trechsel, 'Article 28§1-a', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 649–59.
 Leo Zwaak, 'The Procedure before the European Court of Human Rights', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 213–21.

¹⁰⁹ A. and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 3455/05, § 154, ECHR 2009; Pine Valley Developments Ltd and Others v. Ireland, 29 November 1991, § 47, Series A no. 222; Kolompar v. Belgium, 24 September 1992, §§ 31–32, Series A no. 235-C.

¹¹⁰ A. and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 3455/05, § 157, ECHR 2009.

¹¹¹ Ibid., §§ 156–157.

¹¹² Scoppola v. Italy (no. 2) [GC], no. 10249/03, § 54, 17 September 2009; Powell and Rayner v. the United Kingdom, 21 February 1990, § 29, Series A no. 172; Guerra and Others v. Italy, 19 February 1998, § 44, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-I; Bouchacourt v. France, no. 5335/06, § 56, 17 December 2009; Şerife Yiğit v. Turkey [GC], no. 3976/05, §§ 52–53, 2 November 2010; M.M. v. the United Kingdom, no. 24029/07, § 150, 13 November 2012.

¹¹³ Grzelak v. Poland, no. 7710/02, § 49, 15 June 2010.

¹¹⁴ Grămadă v. Romania, no. 14974/09, § 51, 11 February 2014.

¹¹⁵ Pleşca v. Romania, no. 2158/08, § 34, 18 June 2013.

Article 39. Friendly settlements/Règlements amiables

1. At any stage of the proceedings, the Court may place itself at the disposal of the parties concerned with a view to securing a friendly settlement of the matter on the basis of respect for human rights as defined in the Convention and the Protocols thereto.

2. Proceedings conducted under paragraph 1 shall be confidential.

3. If a friendly settlement is effected, the Court shall strike the case out of its list by means of a decision which shall be confined to a brief statement of the facts and of the solution reached.

4. This decision shall be transmitted to the Committee of Ministers, which shall supervise the execution of the terms of the friendly settlement as set out in the decision.

1. A tout moment de la procédure, la Cour peut se mettre à la disposition des intéressés en vue de parvenir à un règlement amiable de l'affaire s'inspirant du respect des droits de l'homme tels que les reconnaissent la Convention et ses Protocoles.

2. La procédure décrite au paragraphe 1 est confidentielle.

3. En cas de règlement amiable, la Cour raye l'affaire du rôle par une décision qui se limite à un bref exposé des faits et de la solution adoptée.

4. Cette décision est transmise au Comité des Ministres qui surveille l'exécution des termes du règlement amiable tels qu'ils figurent dans la décision.

Introductory comments

The European Convention encourages the applicant and the respondent State to reach a 'friendly settlement'. In a sense, this is merely an extension of the philosophy of subsidiarity underpinning the entire Convention, highlighted particularly in the rule of exhaustion of domestic remedies. If a victim of a violation of the Convention reaches a friendly settlement with the State prior to an application being made to the European Court, the Court obviously has no involvement at all. Once the threshold of an application to the Court is crossed, however, the Convention organs have a role in ensuring the legitimacy of the friendly settlement as well as ensuring that it is actually carried out. According to the Parliamentary Assembly, the friendly settlement, 'while remaining a matter left entirely to the discretion of the parties to the case, may constitute a means of alleviating the workload of the Court, as well as a means of providing a rapid and satisfactory solution for the parties'.¹

Drafting of the provision

That an application might be resolved through a 'friendly settlement' was contemplated in article 28 of the 1950 text of the Convention:

1. In the event of the Commission accepting a petition referred to it:

- (a) it shall, with a view to ascertaining the facts, undertake together with the representatives of the parties an examination of the petition and, if need be, an investigation, for the effective conduct of which the States concerned shall furnish all necessary facilities, after an exchange of views with the Commission;

¹ Resolution Res(2002)59 concerning the practice in respect of friendly settlements.

- (b) it shall at the same time place itself at the disposal of the parties concerned with a view to securing a friendly settlement of the matter on the basis of respect for Human Rights as defined in this Convention.
2. If the Commission succeeds in effecting a friendly settlement, it shall draw up a Report which shall be sent to the States concerned, to the Committee of Ministers and to the Secretary General of the Council of Europe for publication. This Report shall be confined to a brief statement of the facts and of the solution reached.

The notion that petitions or applications to the Convention organs should ideally result in a settlement or reconciliation had been present from the first drafts in the Consultative Assembly. The Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions of the Consultative Assembly proposed the following text: 'If it does not reject the petition, the Commission shall try to effect a reconciliation of the opposing parties.' Then, if reconciliation was not successful, the Commission could publish a report on the facts of the case.² There was some debate about this in the plenary Assembly. A motion to delete the provision on reconciliation was rejected.³ The Committee's text was included in the Assembly's final draft.⁴

The Committee of Experts was undecided on whether the Convention should contain a provision on friendly settlement. Its final draft provided a text, but it was in square brackets indicating a lack of agreement: 'If it does not reject the application, the Commission shall try to effect a settlement of the matter.'⁵ Norway, the Netherlands, and the United Kingdom had taken the view that if there was to be no Court, then it should not be the task of the Commission to encourage a friendly settlement. According to the experts from these three countries,

[t]he Convention provides for a minimum standard of protection of human rights. If the protection accorded by a State is found by the Commission to be below that standard, there is clearly a violation of the Convention. It seemed to them that, in such circumstances, it is inappropriate to introduce the notion of conciliation. A denial of the enjoyments of human rights could not be rectified by a process of compromise.⁶

Other experts thought it useful to retain the provision because friendly settlement might involve determining the amount of compensation due to a victim.⁷ The Report also noted that the Committee preferred replacing the French term 'conciliation' with 'règlement amiable' because 'this first term is used primarily in the case of disputes between States,

² Report presented by Mr P.H. Teitgen, 5 September 1949, Doc. A 290, I TP 192-213, at p. 198. Also Report [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions], 5 September 1949, Doc. AS (1) 77, I TP 216-39, at p. 232, arts 14, 15.

³ Official Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 8 September 1949], II TP 14-274, at p. 208.

⁴ Recommendation No. 38 to the Committee of Ministers adopted 8 September 1949 on the conclusion of the debates, Doc. AS (1) 108, II TP 274-83, at p. 280, art. 15.

⁵ Appendix to the Report of the Committee of Experts on Human Rights: Draft Convention of Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 16 March 1950, Doc. C/WP 1 (50) 15 appendix, CM/WP 1 (50) 14 revised, A 925, IV TP 50-79, at p. 68, art. 21(25).

⁶ Report to the Committee of Ministers submitted by the Committee of Experts Instructed to Draw Up a Draft Convention of Collective Guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Doc. CM/WP 1 (5) 15, A 924, IV TP 2-55, at p. 40.

⁷ Ibid.

whereas the Commission is equally concerned with disputes between States and individuals'.⁸

At the Conference of Senior Officials, the United Kingdom supported the idea that 'conciliation' be among the functions of the Commission. 'In the case of a "technical" violation or of negligence or inadvertence a friendly settlement could prove useful', said Samuel Hoare.⁹ But to make conciliation its essential function was not acceptable. 'Conciliation should be a secondary, ancillary, matter', he said.¹⁰ Charles Chaumont of France considered the meaning of the term 'friendly settlement'. For Chaumont, this was 'a form of settlement that stopped short of a decision finding a violation and consisted in the State at fault voluntarily making amends'.¹¹ France, Ireland, and the United Kingdom proposed the following text: 'If it succeeds in effecting a friendly settlement of the case in accordance with Article 21 the Commission shall draw up a report . . .'.¹² A revised version dropped the word 'friendly'.¹³ The Conference of Senior Officials adopted the following text: 'If it does not reject the application, the Commission shall ascertain the facts and place itself at the disposal of the parties concerned with a view to securing a friendly solution of the matter on the basis of respect for human rights as defined in this Convention'.¹⁴ The Report drew attention to the change whereby friendly settlement was encouraged, although it 'should in all cases be on the basis of respect for human rights as defined in this Convention'.¹⁵ This was incorporated in the draft Convention adopted by the Conference of Senior Officials.¹⁶

Meeting in August 1950, the Committee of Ministers modified the provision:

Art. 28. In the event of the Commission accepting a matter referred to it . . .

b) it shall place itself at the disposal of the parties concerned with a view to securing a friendly solution of the matter on the basis of respect for human rights as defined in this Convention.¹⁷

If it 'succeed[ed] in effecting a settlement', the Commission was to prepare a summary Report.¹⁸ The word 'solution' was changed to 'settlement' in the final text of article 28(b) adopted in November.

⁸ Ibid. Also Preliminary Draft of the Report to the Committee of Ministers, 24 February 1950, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50), A 847, III TP 246-79, at pp. 270-2.

⁹ Minutes of the morning sitting [of 9 June 1950 of the Conference of Senior Officials], Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 3, IV TP 110-19, at pp. 114-16.

¹⁰ Ibid., p. 116.

¹¹ Ibid.

¹² Proposal submitted by the French, Irish, and United Kingdom Delegations (Original text), Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 5, A 1366, IV TP 160-1.

¹³ Proposal submitted by the French, Irish, and United Kingdom Delegations (Revised text), Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 5 rev., A 1369, IV TP 160-1.

¹⁴ Draft Convention annexed to the Report, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19 annex, CM/WP 4 (50) rev., A 1452, IV TP 274-95, at p. 286, art. 29.

¹⁵ Draft Report to the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 16, A 1426, IV TP 204-16, at p. 216; Text of the report submitted by the Conference to the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19, CM/WP 4 (50) 16 rev., A 1431, IV TP 242-57, at p. 264.

¹⁶ Draft Convention annexed to the Report, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19 annex, CM/WP 4 (50) rev., A 1452, IV TP 274-95, at p. 286, art. 29.

¹⁷ Draft Convention adopted by the Committee of Ministers, 7 August 1950, Doc. A 1937, V TP 120-45, at p. 134; Draft Convention adopted by the Sub-Committee, Doc. CM 1 (50) 52, A 1884, V TP 76-99, at p. 88.

¹⁸ Draft Convention adopted by the Committee of Ministers, 7 August 1950, Doc. A 1937, V TP 120-45, at p. 134, art. 30.

The Rules of Court of the former Court also considered the issue of friendly settlement in a provision entitled 'discontinuance': 'When the Commission, after having brought a case before the Court, informs the Court that a friendly settlement which satisfies the conditions of Article 28 of the Convention has subsequently been reached, the Chamber may, after having obtained the opinion, if necessary, of the delegates of the Commission, strike the case out of its list.'¹⁹ This provision was later amended: 'When the Chamber is informed of a friendly settlement, arrangement or other fact of a kind to provide a solution of the matter, it may, after consulting, if necessary, the Parties, the Delegates of the Commission and the applicant, strike the case out of the list.'²⁰

Protocol No. 11 introduced two new provisions on the subject of friendly settlement:

Article 38—Examination of the case and friendly settlement proceedings

1. If the Court declares the application admissible, it shall
 - a) pursue the examination of the case, together with the representatives of the parties, and if need be, undertake an investigation, for the effective conduct of which the States concerned shall furnish all necessary facilities;
 - b) place itself at the disposal of the parties concerned with a view to securing a friendly settlement of the matter on the basis of respect for human rights as defined in the Convention and the protocols thereto.
2. Proceedings conducted under paragraph 1.b shall be confidential.

Article 39—Finding of a friendly settlement

If a friendly settlement is effected, the Court shall strike the case out of its list by means of a decision which shall be confined to a brief statement of the facts and of the solution reached.

Article 38(1) was based on the former article 28(1), although it had been somewhat shortened. The Explanatory Report said that the text of article 39 was modelled on Rule 49(2) of the former Rules of Court. The Report said that '[t]he second part of this Article is virtually identical to the last sentence of paragraph 2 of former Article 28 of the Convention'.²¹

The Explanatory Report noted that experience had shown 'the great utility of the conciliation element in Convention proceedings'. It considered that '[f]riendly settlement negotiations could be "guided", or even encouraged, by a judge (with the help of the registry of the Court). Also, during friendly settlement negotiations, parties may call upon the services of the Court's registry to help them in these negotiations.' The Report said a Chamber might at any stage assist the parties in settling their case.²² According to the Explanatory Report, '[p]arties to friendly settlement proceedings will not be at liberty to disclose to anyone the nature and content of any communication made with a view to and in connection with a friendly settlement'.²³

The current text of article 39 results from Protocol No. 14. According to the Explanatory Report, it was decided to address the friendly settlement procedure in a specific article in order '[t]o make the Convention easier to read'.²⁴ Article 39 was an amalgam of the ¹⁹ Rules of Court (adopted 18 September 1959), Rule 47(3).

²⁰ Rules of Court (adopted 27 August 1974), Rule 47(2). Later, this became Rules of Court 'A' (in force 1 February 1994), Rule 49(2).

²¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 95.

²² Ibid., para. 94.

²³ Ibid., para. 93.

²⁴ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, para. 91.

relevant provisions of articles 38 and 39 of the previous version of the Convention, which itself was a result of Protocol No. 11. The Report said that the amendments should result in fewer separate admissibility decisions because the friendly settlement had been made more flexible, allowing the Court to promote settlement discussions at any stage in the proceedings.²⁵ As a result, '[f]riendly settlements are therefore encouraged, and may prove particularly useful in repetitive cases, and other cases where questions of principle or changes in domestic law are not involved'.²⁶

Analysis and interpretation

The Court may strike out a case from its list if a friendly settlement has been reached between the parties. Although the friendly settlement negotiations are confidential, if a case has already been declared admissible and an agreement is reached subsequently, the Court must issue a decision that is public. The friendly settlement agreements provide satisfaction for the application in terms of personal interests but often they also involve policy commitments by governments.

For example, as part of a friendly settlement agreement the Irish Government confirmed that its programme contained a commitment 'to modernise and reform outdated elements of family law', adding that new legislation 'will respect the public policy objective of treating children equally, regardless of the marital status of their parents'.²⁷ In a case directed against Cyprus concerning the unavailability of civil marriage for Turkish Cypriots, a friendly settlement was reached with the applicant that involved payment of a sum of money. But Cyprus also informed the Court of legislative measures being taken to rectify the situation. In deciding to strike out the case from the list on the basis of the friendly settlement, the Court took into account the reforms that Cyprus had undertaken to make, although the relevant legislation had not yet been adopted.²⁸ In a case directed against Andorra where the applicant complained about being denied access to a constitutional appeal, the Court confirmed the friendly settlement, noting amendments to the relevant legislation to correct the situation, including a provision giving them retroactive effect.²⁹

Even an inter-State case may conclude with a friendly settlement. Denmark and Turkey agreed to resolve a dispute concerning the torture of a Danish national by the Turkish authorities. In approving the settlement, the Court 'emphasise[d], with reference to Turkey's continued participation in the Council of Europe's police-training project, the importance of the training of Turkish police officers and in addition provides for the establishment of a new bilateral project in this area'. The Court noted the commitment of the parties, as part of the friendly settlement, of a continuous political dialogue focusing on human rights issues within which individual cases could be raised.³⁰ The Court also considered changes to Turkey's legal and administrative framework, introduced in response to issues of torture and ill treatment, and the government's undertaking to ²⁵ Ibid., para. 92.

²⁶ Ibid., para. 93.

²⁷ E. v. Ireland (friendly settlement), no. 42734/09, § 4, 1 October 2013.

²⁸ Selim v. Cyprus (friendly settlement), no. 47293/99, § 16, 16 July 2002.

²⁹ Millan I Tornos v. Andorra (friendly settlement), no. 35052/97, § 21, ECHR 1999-IV.

³⁰ Denmark v. Turkey (friendly settlement), no. 34382/97, § 23, ECHR 2000-IV.

make further improvements. Finally, it noted the commitment of the Turkish authorities 'to continue their co-operation with international human rights bodies, in particular the Committee for the Prevention of Torture'.³¹

Role of the Court in encouraging settlement

As the opening words of article 39(1) explain, the Court may place itself at the disposal of the parties '[a]t any stage of the proceedings'. This is a change introduced by Protocol No. 14. Previously, the Convention provision governing friendly settlement was only operative if a case had been declared admissible. The dramatic change that this provision has brought about can be seen in the statistics of the Court's activity. These show that the number of friendly settlements has declined dramatically. In fact there are probably many more friendly settlements than in the past, but they are not recorded as such because this takes place prior to the admissibility stage and therefore no decision is issued. According to the Annual Report of the Court for 2012, there were only nine friendly settlements out of 1,093 cases that were adjudicated over the course of the year, less than 0.1 per cent of the total.³² Over the entire life of the Court, there have been 1,063 friendly settlements out of a total of 15,947 cases adjudicated, or about 6.6 per cent of the total.³³

Even before a case is declared admissible, when the Chamber decides to give notice of the application to the respondent State the parties are 'invited to include in their observations any submissions concerning just satisfaction and any proposals for a friendly settlement'.³⁴ Once an application is declared admissible, the Registrar is to contact the parties 'with a view to securing a friendly settlement'. The Registrar is to be 'acting on the instructions of the Chamber or its President'.³⁵ The Rules state that '[t]he Chamber shall take any steps that appear appropriate to facilitate such a settlement'.³⁶

Striking out by means of a decision (art. 39(3))

Rule 43(3) states that 'the application shall be struck out of the Court's list of cases by means of a decision'. Prior to the entry into force of Protocol No. 14, the Rules of Court required the Court to strike out the case by means of a 'judgment'.³⁷ The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14 justifies the change in terminology:

The new Article 39 provides for supervision of the execution of friendly settlements by the Committee of Ministers. This new provision was inserted to reflect a practice which the Court had already developed. In the light of the text of former Article 46, paragraph 2, the Court used to endorse friendly settlements through judgments and not—as provided for in former Article 39 of the Convention—through decisions, whose execution was not subject to supervision by the Committee of Ministers. The practice of the Court was thus in response to the fact that only the execution of judgments was supervised by the Committee of Ministers (former Article 39). It was recognised,

³¹ Ibid., § 24.

³² Annual Report 2012, p. 155.

³³ Ibid., p. 159.

³⁴ Rules of Court, Rule 54A.

³⁵ Ibid., Rule 62(1).

³⁶ Ibid.

³⁷ The earlier version of the Rules of Court said: 'The striking of a case shall be effected by means of a judgment...' (Rules of Court (as in force at 1 February 1994), Rule 49(3)). This was amended: 'the decision to strike out an application which has been declared admissible shall be given in the form of a judgment' (Rules of Court (amended by the Court on 17 June and 8 July 2002), Rule 44(3)).

however, that adopting a judgment, instead of a decision, might have negative connotations for respondent Parties, and make it harder to secure a friendly settlement. The new procedure should make this easier and thus reduce the Court's workload. For this reason, the new Article 39 gives the Committee of Ministers authority to supervise the execution of decisions endorsing the terms of friendly settlements. This amendment is in no way intended to reduce the Committee's present supervisory powers, particularly concerning the strike-out decisions covered by Article 37. It would be advisable for the Committee of Ministers to distinguish more clearly, in its practice, between its supervision function by virtue of the new Article 39, paragraph 4 (friendly settlements), on the one hand and that under Article 46, paragraph 2 (execution of judgments), on the other.³⁸

The observation that a 'decision' rather than a 'judgment' may attach less stigma to the respondent State may be correct, although it is not clear that this promotes settlement. As one textbook has observed, '[w]hile this may be true as regards certain governments, the fact that a settlement can be adopted by way of a judgment can also be an incentive for applicants to settle on the basis that a judgment is more likely to attract media interest'.³⁹

Nevertheless, the authority conferred by article 39 is not solely dependent on the will of the parties. Echoing the words of article 37(1) of the Convention, the Rules of Court require that if the Chamber is informed that a settlement has been reached it shall only strike out the case from the list 'after verifying that the settlement has been reached on the basis of respect for human rights as defined in the Convention and the Protocols thereto'.⁴⁰ As a consequence, the Grand Chamber has insisted that 'the Court may strike an application out of its list only if it is satisfied that the solution of the matter embodied in the settlement arrived at between the parties is based on "respect for human rights as defined in the Convention and the Protocols thereto"'.⁴¹ This is discussed in more depth in the chapter on article 37 of this Commentary. The settlement must be 'equitable' within the meaning of Rule 75 of the Rules of Court.⁴²

Confidentiality (art. 39(2))

Friendly settlement proceedings are 'confidential', subject to the possibility of a unilateral declaration by the respondent State. The Rules note that the principle of confidentiality is without prejudice to the parties' arguments in the contentious proceedings. No written or oral communication and no offer or concession made in the framework of the attempt to secure a friendly settlement may be referred to or relied on in the contentious proceedings.⁴³ The rule of confidentiality 'is absolute and does not allow for an individual assessment of how much detail was disclosed'.⁴⁴ According to the Court, 'la règle de confidentialité des négociations du règlement amiable revêt une importance particulière dans la mesure où elle vise à préserver les parties et la Cour elle-même de toute tentative de pression politique ou de quelque autre ordre que ce soit'.⁴⁵ If an applicant does not respect ³⁸ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, para. 94 (emphasis in the original).

³⁹ Harris et al., Law of the European Convention, p. 833.

⁴⁰ Rules of Court, Rule 62(3).

⁴¹ Broniowski v. Poland (friendly settlement) [GC], no. 31443/96, § 33, ECHR 2005-IX.

⁴² Fabris v. France (just satisfaction - striking out) [GC], no. 16574/08, § 7, 28 June 2013.

⁴³ Rules of Court, Rules 33(1).

⁴⁴ Balenović v. Croatia (dec.), no. 28369/07, 30 September 2010; Lesnina Veletrgovina d.o.o. v. the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (dec.), no. 37619/04, 2 March 2010; Mandil v. France (dec.), no. 67037/09, 13 December 2011.

⁴⁵ Mirošubovs and Others v. Latvia, no. 798/05, § 66, 15 September 2009; Mandil v. France (dec.), no. 67037/09, 13 December 2011.

the rule, the Court may declare the application to be admissible as an abuse of the right of application.⁴⁶ Before sanctioning the applicant for violating the norm, liability must be established with 'suffisamment de certitude, une simple suspicion ne suffisant pas pour déclarer la requête abusive au sens de l'article 35 § 3 de la Convention'.⁴⁷

Unilateral declaration

If a proposal by the respondent State for a friendly settlement is refused by an applicant, the State may then file with the Court a request to strike the application out of the list.⁴⁸ Such a 'unilateral declaration' by a State must 'be accompanied by a declaration clearly acknowledging that there has been a violation of the Convention in the applicant's case together with an undertaking to provide adequate redress and, as appropriate, to take necessary remedial measures'.⁴⁹ If justified by 'exceptional circumstances', the request may be filed even if there has been no prior attempt to reach a friendly settlement.⁵⁰ With the filing of such a declaration, the friendly settlement proceedings that have hitherto been confidential take on a degree of publicity. The unilateral declaration by a State 'must be made in public and adversarial proceedings', although with 'due respect for the confidentiality of any friendly-settlement proceedings'.⁵¹ If the applicant does not accept the State's offer, the Court may then strike out the case from the list, in accordance with article 37(1)(c), either in whole or in part, '[i]f it is satisfied that the declaration offers a sufficient basis for finding that respect for human rights as defined in the Convention and the Protocols thereto does not require it to continue its examination of the application'.⁵²

Sometimes, the applicant accepts the unilateral declaration by the State as an appropriate offer. In such cases, providing the Court is itself satisfied, the matter is treated as a friendly settlement.⁵³ However, the applicant may also contest the State's request that the unilateral declaration be accepted by the Court and the case struck from the list. If the unilateral declaration is contested, the Court will disregard statements made within the 'strictly confidential' context of friendly settlement negotiations.⁵⁴

Further reading

Fiona Ang and Eva Berghmans, 'Friendly Settlements and Striking Out of Applications', in Paul Lemmens and Wouter Vandenhoele, eds, Protocol No. 14 and the Reform of the European Court of Human Rights, Antwerp: Intersentia, 2005, pp. 89–104.

⁴⁶ Mandil v. France (dec.), no. 67037/09, 13 December 2011; Mirošubovs and Others v. Latvia, no. 798/05, § 66, 15 September 2009; Hadrabová and Hadrabová v. Czech Republic (dec.), no. 42165/02, 25 September 2007; Popov v. Moldova, no. 74153/01, § 48, 18 January 2005; Balenović v. Croatia (dec.), no. 28369/07, 30 September 2010.

⁴⁷ Mirošubovs and Others v. Latvia, no. 798/05, § 66, 15 September 2009; Mandil v. France (dec.), no. 67037/09, 13 December 2011.

⁴⁸ Rules of Court, Rule 62A(1)(a). See also the discussion of unilateral declaration in the chapter in this Commentary on article 37.

⁴⁹ Ibid., Rule 62A(1)(b).

⁵⁰ Ibid., Rule 62A(2).

⁵¹ Ibid., Rule 62A(1)(c).

⁵² Ibid., Rule 62A(3).

⁵³ Huseynov v. Azerbaijan (friendly settlement), no. 36666/11, 22 October 2013; H. v. the United Kingdom (friendly settlement), no. 22241/08, 18 September 2012.

⁵⁴ Tahsin Acar v. Turkey (preliminary issue) [GC], no. 26307/95, § 74, ECHR 2003-VI.

- Vincent Berger, 'Le règlement amiable devant la Cour', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 783–92.
- Sally Dollé, 'Friendly Settlement 14 Years on in the European Commission of Human Rights', in Michele de Salvia and Mark E. Villiger, eds, The Birth of European Human Rights Law—Liber Amicorum Carl Aage Nørgaard, Baden-Baden: Nomos, 1998, pp. 243–4.
- Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, p. 533.
- Helen Keller, Magdalena Forowicz, and Lorenz Engi, Friendly Settlement before the European Court of Human Rights, Theory and Practice, Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2010.
- Hans Christian Krüger and Carl Aage Nørgaard, 'Reflections concerning Friendly Settlement under the European Convention on Human Rights', in Franz Matscher and Herbert Petzold, eds, Protecting Human Rights: The European Dimension—Studies in Honour of Gérard J. Wiarda, Cologne: Heymann, 1988, pp. 329–34.
- Egbert Myjer, 'It is Never too Late for the State—Friendly Settlements and Unilateral Declarations', in Lucius Caflisch, Johan Callewaert, Roderick Liddell, Paul Mahoney, and Mark Villiger, eds, Liber Amicorum Lucius Wildhaber, Kehl, Germany: N.P. Engel, 2007, pp. 309–27.
- Carl Aage Nørgaard and Hans Christian Krüger, 'Article 28§1-b and §2', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 661–79.
- Torkel Opsahl, 'Settlement based on Respect of Human Rights under the European Convention on Human Rights', in Proceedings of the Sixth International Colloquy About the European Convention on Human Rights, Strasbourg: Council of Europe, 1988, pp. 966–97.
- Christos L. Rozakis, 'Unilateral Declarations as a Means of Settling Human Rights Disputes: A New Tool for the Resolution of Disputes in the ECHR's Procedure', in Marcelo G. Kohen, ed., Promoting Justice, Human Rights and Conflict Resolution through International Law. Liber Amicorum Lucius Caflisch, Leiden: Nijhoff, 2007, pp. 1003–14.
- Olivier de Schutter, 'Le règlement amiable dans la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme: entre théorie de la fonction de juger et théorie de la négociation', in Patrick de Fontbressin et al., eds, Les droits de l'homme au seuil du troisième millénaire. Mélanges en hommage à Pierre Lambert, Brussels: Bruylant, 2000, pp. 225–61.
- Adam Tomkins, 'The Committee of Ministers: Its Roles under the European Convention on Human Rights', (1995) 1 EHRLR 50.
- Gregory S. Weber, 'Who Killed the Friendly Settlement? The Decline of Negotiated Resolutions at the European Court of Human Rights', (2007) 7 Pepperdine Dispute Resolution Law Journal 215.
- Leo Zwaak, 'The Procedure before the European Court of Human Rights', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 222–36.

Article 40. Public hearings and access to documents/Audience publique et accès aux documents

1. Hearings shall be in public unless the Court in exceptional circumstances decides otherwise.

2. Documents deposited with the Registrar shall be accessible to the public unless the President of the Court decides otherwise.

1. L'audience est publique à moins que la Cour n'en décide autrement en raison de circonstances exceptionnelles.

2. Les documents déposés au greffe sont accessibles au public à moins que le président de la Cour n'en décide autrement.

Introductory comments

That judicial proceedings be public is a general principle of law, confirmed by its recognition in article 10 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights as well as in article 6(1) of the European Convention on Human Rights. Nevertheless, it cannot be an absolute principle.

Drafting of the provision

The original draft provisions concerning the European Court of Human Rights were proposed by the International Juridical Section of the European Movement. Its draft Statute included the following: 'The hearing in Court shall be public, unless the Court shall for a special reason decide otherwise, or unless the parties demand that the public be not admitted.'¹ However, no such provision appeared in the draft of the Consultative Assembly or any of the subsequent versions of the 1950 text Convention.

Under the 'former Court', prior to entry into force of Protocol No. 11, the public hearing was ensured by two provisions of the Rules of Court:

Rule 18 (Public character of the hearings)

The hearings shall be public unless, the Court shall in exceptional circumstances decide otherwise.²

Rule 56 (Publication of judgments and other documents)

2. Documents deposited with the Registrar and not published shall be accessible to the public unless otherwise decided by the President either on his own initiative or at the request of a Party, of the Commission, of the applicant or of any other person concerned.³

A note of explanation published in the Yearbook said of Rule 56(2): 'While the former Rule 52 simply authorised the publication of judgments and other decisions and documents of the Court, the new rule lays down the conditions for such publication and furthermore, it deals with the documents which are not published.'⁴

¹ Draft Statute of the European Court of Human Rights, INF/5/E/R, I TP 302-21, at p. 314, art. 40.

² Rules of Court (adopted 18 September 1959), Rule 18. The comma seems to have disappeared in 1989: Rules of Court (adopted on 24 November 1982 and amended on 26 January 1989).

³ Amendments to the Rules of Court (adopted 23-25 October 1962), Rule 56(2).

⁴ (1961) 4 YB 12.

Article 40 was introduced to the Convention by Protocol No. 11. The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11 notes that 'proceedings, where oral, are, in principle, to be conducted in public'. According to the Report, because article 40 specifies that documents submitted in the written proceedings (memorials and formal written information) are also, in principle, accessible to the public, 'documents deposited with the Registrar and not published will be accessible to the public unless otherwise decided by the President either on his own initiative or at the request of a party, or of any other person concerned'.⁵

Analysis and interpretation

The proceedings at the Court have always been public, although it was not until the adoption of Protocol No. 11 that the principle was set out explicitly in the Convention. The public nature of the Court's proceedings was in quite marked distinction with what applied to the European Commission. Article 33 of the original text of the European Convention said bluntly: 'The Commission shall meet in camera.'

In the first case to come before the Court, the respondent State objected because the Commission had sent a copy of its report to the applicant when the matter was transferred to the Court. Dismissing Ireland's objection, the Court noted that in its opinion, the procedure in a case brought before it under the Convention was different from that prevailing at the Commission or, for that matter, the Committee of Ministers. It explained that when a case came before the Court, the proceedings assumed 'a judicial character'. According to the Court, 'in any democratic society, within the meaning of the Preamble and the other clauses of the Convention, proceedings before the judiciary should be conducted in the presence of the parties and in public'. Moreover, such a 'fundamental principle' was upheld in article 6 of the Convention. The Court used an a contrario argument, citing the absence of a provision comparable to article 33 within the Section of the Convention governing procedure before the Court.⁶

Public character of hearings (art. 40(1))

The Court may derogate from the general rule that hearings are public, acting either on its own motion or at the request of a party or of 'a person concerned'.⁷ An application to exclude the public is to provide reasons and specify whether it envisages all or part of the hearing.⁸ In language that is inspired by article 6(1) of the Convention, Rule 63(2) states:

The press and the public may be excluded from all or part of a hearing in the interests of morals, public order or national security in a democratic society, where the interests of juveniles or the protection of the private life of the parties so require, or to the extent strictly necessary in the opinion of the Chamber in special circumstances where publicity would prejudice the interests of justice.

There are only a few examples of hearings before the Court being held in camera. In five cases directed against the United Kingdom concerning matters of child custody and adoption, all heard at the same time, the Court 'decided that, in view of the exceptional circumstances, the hearings should be held in camera', but no further reasons were

⁵ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 96.

⁶ Lawless v. Ireland (no. 1), 14 November 1960, p. 10, Series A no. 1.

⁷ Rules of Court, Rule 63(1).

⁸ Ibid., Rule 63(3).

provided.⁹ In an application involving medical records and infection with HIV, the Court granted the government's request for an in camera hearing given 'the sensitive nature of the case'.¹⁰ Cases raising issues of private and family life, often concerning children and vulnerable victims in cases of sexual assault, are an everyday affair at the Court. It is difficult to understand why such rare resort to exclusion of the public should have been ordered in the few cases in which the Court has decided to sit in camera. In any event, the issues are well known because they are inevitably explored in the judgment. The identities of victims remain protected by the very common resort to pseudonyms, in accordance with art. 47(3).

The Court has proposed that States take advantage of the possibility of in camera proceedings when evidence that they deem to be sensitive, for reasons of national security, is to be examined. According to the Court, 'legitimate national security concerns may be accommodated in its proceedings by means of appropriate procedural arrangements, including restricted access to the document in question under Rule 33 of the Rules of Court and, in extremis, the holding of a hearing behind closed doors'.¹¹ This is indeed what took place in the applications directed against Poland by persons detained at secret prisons operated by the United States. An in camera hearing was held at the Human Rights Building in Strasbourg.¹² The Court declined Poland's invitation for it to examine documents ex parte, that is, without them being shown to the applicant and his counsel, noting that this was not authorized by the Rules of Court.¹³

Public character of documents

Documents that are deposited with the Registry by the parties or by a third party with respect to an application are accessible to the public, unless the President of the Chamber decides otherwise. According to Rule 33 of the Rules of Court:

Rule 33—Public character of documents

1. All documents deposited with the Registry by the parties or by any third party in connection with an application, except those deposited within the framework of friendly-settlement negotiations as provided for in Rule 62, shall be accessible to the public in accordance with arrangements determined by the Registrar, unless the President of the Chamber, for the reasons set out in paragraph 2 of this Rule, decides otherwise, either of his or her own motion or at the request of a party or any other person concerned.
2. Public access to a document or to any part of it may be restricted in the interests of morals, public order or national security in a democratic society, where the interests of juveniles or the protection of the private life of the parties or of any person concerned so require, or to the extent strictly necessary in the opinion of the President of the Chamber in special circumstances where publicity would prejudice the interests of justice.
3. Any request for confidentiality made under paragraph 1 of this Rule must include reasons and specify whether it is requested that all or part of the documents be inaccessible to the public.

⁹ H. v. the United Kingdom, 8 July 1987, § 6(c), Series A no. 120; O. v. the United Kingdom, 8 July 1987, § 6(c), Series A no. 120; R. v. the United Kingdom, 8 July 1987, § 6(c), Series A no. 121; B. v. the United Kingdom, 8 July 1987, § 6(c), Series A no. 121; W. v. the United Kingdom, 8 July 1987, § 5(c), Series A no. 121.

¹⁰ Z and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 29392/95, § 6, ECHR 2001-V.

¹¹ Janowiec and Others v. Russia [GC], nos 55508/07 and 29520/09, § 215, ECHR 2013.

¹² Al Nashiri v. Poland, no. 28761/11, §§ 12, 14, 367, 378, 24 July 2014; Husayn (Abu Zubaydah) v. Poland, no. 7511/13, §§ 10, 12, 360, 372, 24 July 2014.

¹³ Al Nashiri v. Poland, no. 28761/11, §§ 25, 27, 24 July 2014; Husayn (Abu Zubaydah) v. Poland, no. 7511/13, §§ 23, 25, 24 July 2014.

4. Decisions and judgments given by a Chamber shall be accessible to the public. Decisions and judgments given by a Committee, including decisions covered by the proviso to Rule 53 § 5, shall be accessible to the public. The Court shall periodically make accessible to the public general information about decisions taken by single-judge formations pursuant to Rule 52A § 1 and by Committees in application of Rule 53 § 5.

The Court has used its authority to derogate from the public nature of the dossier in appropriate cases dealing, for example, with refugee and asylum claims¹⁴ and psychiatric patients.¹⁵ The Court has indicated that this is a useful mechanism by which States can address concerns about the production of documents that they deem to be sensitive, because of national security concerns.¹⁶ In the two Polish cases concerning secret detention centres, the Court requested the State to provide documents on a confidentiality basis pursuant to Rule 33(2) of the Rules of Court. In particular, it noted allegations of the existence of an agreement concerning the operation of a secret CIA prison on Polish territory, asking that it be produced on a confidentiality basis 'in case that document existed'.¹⁷ Invoking Rule 33(2), the Court declared that it applied to 'any documents that might be produced by the Government in the future relating to the alleged CIA rendition operations in Poland or other States and the alleged participation of Poland or other States in that operation' as well as documents relating to the investigation.¹⁸ Poland objected that 'the general provisions contained in the Court's Rules of procedure do not indicate in any way the manner in which fragile documents produced by the parties, especially states, to the Court are to be protected. This situation is hardly comparable with internal regulations of other international judicial bodies.'¹⁹ Poland mentioned the International Criminal Court as an example of better practice in this respect.²⁰ In other cases, Russia has also objected that Rule 33 does not provide any sanction for its breach.²¹

The European Court responded:

The absence of specific, detailed provisions for processing confidential, secret or otherwise sensitive information in the Rules of Court—which, in the Government's view justified their refusal to produce evidence—does not mean that the Court in that respect operates in a vacuum. On the contrary... over many years the Convention institutions have established sound practice in handling cases involving various highly sensitive matters, including national-security related issues. Examples of procedural decisions emerging from that practice demonstrate that the Court is sufficiently well equipped to address adequately any concerns involved in processing confidential evidence by adopting a wide range of practical arrangements adjusted to the particular circumstances of a given case.²²

¹⁴ Mohammad Hassan v. the Netherlands and Italy (dec.), no. 40524/10, §§ 74, 139, 27 August 2013; S.H. v. the Netherlands (dec.), no. 47607/07, § 8, 5 March 2013.

¹⁵ A.E.L. v. Finland (dec.), no. 59435/10, § 1, 10 December 2013; G. v. Germany, no. 65210/09, § 1, 7 June 2012.

¹⁶ Janowiec and Others v. Russia [GC], nos 55508/07 and 29520/09, § 215, ECHR 2013.

¹⁷ Husayn (Abu Zubaydah) v. Poland, no. 7511/13, § 15, 24 July 2014; Al Nashiri v. Poland, no. 28761/11, § 17, 24 July 2014.

¹⁸ Husayn (Abu Zubaydah) v. Poland, no. 7511/13, § 16, 24 July 2014; Al Nashiri v. Poland, no. 28761/11, § 18, 24 July 2014.

¹⁹ Husayn (Abu Zubaydah) v. Poland, no. 7511/13, § 33, 24 July 2014; Al Nashiri v. Poland, no. 28761/11, § 35, 24 July 2014.

²⁰ Husayn (Abu Zubaydah) v. Poland, no. 7511/13, § 341, 24 July 2014; Al Nashiri v. Poland, no. 28761/11, § 348, 24 July 2014.

²¹ Janowiec and Others v. Russia [GC], nos 55508/07 and 29520/09, § 193, ECHR 2013; Sasita Iraitlova and Others v. Russia, no. 35079/04, §§ 79, 142, 28 October 2010.

²² Husayn (Abu Zubaydah) v. Poland, no. 7511/13, § 364, 24 July 2014; Al Nashiri v. Poland, no. 28761/11, § 371, 24 July 2014.

In a case concerning detention of extradited suspects to Russia, the Court asked for the name and address of detention facilities where the applicants were being held. Russia requested written assurances that the information would remain confidential and would not be 'improperly divulged'. After the President of the Section was made personally responsible for ensuring the confidentiality of the information, Russia complied 'in conditions of strict confidentiality'.²³ Subsequently, the Court has pointed to this example in order to reassure States of its ability to ensure confidentiality pursuant to Rule 33(2).²⁴

Further reading

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 534–5.

Leo Zwaak, 'The Procedure before the European Court of Human Rights', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 109–10.

²³ Shamayev and Others v. Georgia and Russia, no. 36378/02, §§ 15–17, ECHR 2005-III.

²⁴ Georgia v. Russia (I) [GC], no. 13255/07, § 108, 3 July 2014. Also Shokkarov and Others v. Russia, no. 41009/04, § 4, 3 May 2011; Tsechoyev v. Russia, no. 39358/05, § 3, 15 March 2011.

Article 41. Just satisfaction/Satisfaction équitable

If the Court finds that there has been a violation of the Convention or the Protocols thereto, and if the internal law of the High Contracting Party concerned allows only partial reparation to be made, the Court shall, if necessary, afford just satisfaction to the injured party.

Si la Cour déclare qu'il y a eu violation de la Convention ou de ses Protocoles, et si le droit interne de la Haute Partie contractante ne permet d'effacer qu'imparfaitement les conséquences de cette violation, la Cour accorde à la partie lésée, s'il y a lieu, une satisfaction équitable.

Introductory comments

'Just satisfaction' is the term used by the European Convention when it addresses the issue of reparation or compensation. The principle is that an applicant who has suffered a loss as a result of a violation of the Convention—the injured party—is entitled to be placed back in the situation before the loss occurred, to the extent that this is possible. As the drafting history of the Convention demonstrates, the award of 'just satisfaction' was a weak substitute for a more robust power enabling the Court to declare national legislation invalid being advocated by some members of the Consultative Assembly of the Council of Europe. Over the decades, however, 'just satisfaction' has become only one feature of the intervention of the Court as it has addressed systemic violations of human rights within States Parties.

Drafting of the provision

The initial draft European Convention on Human Rights prepared by the International Juridical Section of the European Movement declared that the European Court of Human Rights 'may either prescribe measures of reparation or it may require that the State concerned shall take penal or administrative action in regard to the persons responsible for the infringement, or it may demand the repeal, cancellation or amendment of the act'.¹

After a protracted debate,² the Consultative Assembly adopted the following provision:

The jurisdiction of the Court shall extend to all violations of the obligations defined by the Convention, whether they result from legislative, executive or judicial acts. Nevertheless, where objection is taken to a judicial decision, that decision cannot be impugned unless it was finally given in disregard of the fundamental rights defined in Article 2 by reference to Articles 9, 10 and 11 of the United Nations Declaration.³

¹ Convention for the Collective Protection of Individual Rights and Democratic Liberties by the States, Members of the Council of Europe, and for the establishment of a European Court of Human Rights to ensure observance of the Convention, Doc. INF/5/E/R, I TP 296–303, at pp. 300–302, art. 13(b).

² See the chapter in this Commentary dealing with article 46, 'Drafting of the provision'.

³ Amendment proposed by Mr Dominedo and Mr Benvenuti (Italy) (8 September 1949), Doc. 105, II TP 12–13.

The beginnings of article 41 can be traced to the Committee of Experts that met at the behest of the Committee of Ministers in February and March 1950. Tomasso Perassi of Italy proposed the following:

If the Court finds that a decision or a measure taken by a legal authority or any other authority of one of the Contracting Parties, [sic] is completely or partially opposed to the obligations arising from the present Convention, and if the constitutional law of the said Party only allows the consequences of this decision or measure to be superficially regained, the decisions of the Court shall, if necessary, accord just satisfaction to the injured party.⁴

This was modified by the Drafting Sub-Committee:

If the Court finds that a decision or a measure taken by a legal authority, or of any other authority of one of the Contracting Parties is completely or partially opposed to the obligations arising from the present Convention, and if the internal law of the said Party only allows partial reparation to be made for the consequences of this decision or measure, the decision of the Court shall, if necessary, accord just satisfaction to the injured party.⁵

A draft commentary accompanying this text made it quite clear that the Committee of Experts was rejecting the approach of the Consultative Assembly. It said that '[c]ontrary to the Assembly draft, the Committee of Experts considered that in no case should the Court be competent to give a ruling on cases of violation of Article 3, relating to the safeguarding of democratic institutions'. Challenges to legislation 'were not the kind which it was suitable to settle by judgment of a court' but rather a matter that came 'exclusively within the political sphere'. The draft report added that '[a]ccording to the Committee of Experts' system, moreover, the Court should only be permitted to give a ruling on cases of violations of the individual rights protected by the Convention and not of cases of violation of the Convention by legislative acts as such'.⁶

A few very minor modifications were made in the final draft adopted by the Committee of Experts, the words 'legal authority, or of any other authority of one of the Contracting Parties' being changed to 'legal authority or of any authority of one of the High Contracting Parties'.⁷ Also, the comma after 'if necessary' in the final phrase was deleted. The Commentary read as follows:

This provision is in accordance with the actual international law relating to the violation of an obligation by a State. In this respect, jurisprudence of a European Court will never, therefore, introduce any new element or one contrary to existing international law. In particular, the Court will not have the power to declare null and void or amend Acts emanating from the public bodies of the signatory States.⁸

⁴ Amendments to various articles of the Recommendation of the Consultative Assembly proposed by the Italian Expert, Doc. A 812, III TP 228-31.

⁵ Continuation and end of the proposals of the Drafting Sub-Committee concerning Section III, Doc. A 813, III TP 230-3.

⁶ Preliminary Draft of the Report to the Committee of Ministers, 24 February 1950, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 1, A 847, III TP 246-79, at pp. 274-6 (emphasis in the original).

⁷ Preliminary Draft Convention for the Maintenance and Further Realisation of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 15 February 1950, Doc. A 833, III TP 236-46, at p. 246, art. 36.

⁸ Preliminary Draft of the Report to the Committee of Ministers, 24 February 1950, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 1, A 847, III TP 246-79, at p. 276; Appendix to the Report of the Committee of Experts on Human Rights: Draft Convention of Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 16 March 1950, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 15 appendix, CM/WP 1 (50) 14 revised, A 925, IV TP 50-79, at p. 44.

The Conference of Senior Officials on Human Rights, which met in June 1950, made only a few technical changes to the provision, restoring the comma after 'necessary' and deleting the word 'of' before 'any authority'.⁹ No further changes were made by the Committee of Ministers at its August 1950 session.¹⁰

The Consultative Assembly returned to the provision in August 1950. Antonio Azara of Italy spoke of the provision, which enables the Court to grant redress to the injured party if the domestic law of the State to which the injured party belongs allows of only a partial reparation of the consequences of an ordinance, legal or otherwise, issued by an authority representing one of the Member States of the Council of Europe which happens to be in conflict with the obligations arising from the Convention . . . It is therefore in this last Article that is to be found the sanction to be used if one of the rights indicated in the list of human rights is violated. Substantially and fundamentally, therefore, this list of rights acquires a value which is not only moral and philosophical, but also legal. And the Council of Europe, by giving its approval, will be achieving a glorious phase in its onward march towards international brotherhood, civilisation and progress of our peoples.¹¹

Pierre-Henri Teitgen was less enthusiastic. He recalled that the previous year the Consultative Assembly had proposed a Court with the power to annul all legislative or statutory measures contrary to the Convention, something he said was 'essential'. He said the Committee of Ministers had 'very cleverly' substituted for this 'a rather confused' provision.

To begin with, it contains an important error, for it seems to assume that the principal duties of the Court will be in the control of judicial decisions. But that is precisely the view that we have unanimously rejected. What we are afraid of in our countries is not judicial errors. These certainly occur in all our countries: judges are not infallible, but these judicial errors are the exception, the minute exception.

But, Teitgen said, 'the Committee of Ministers is now inserting at the head of the list of powers of the European Court this control of judicial decisions, and it does so without any further explanation—a fact which might lead to regrettable confusion'. He said the draft provision had 'another outstanding defect' because it suggested that 'the only form of reparations will be compensation'. He added that '[i]t seems to suggest that the European Court will be able to grant indemnities to victims, damages and interests, or reparation or this kind. It does not say that the European Court will be able to pronounce the nullity or invalidity of the rule or the law, or the decree which constitutes a violation of the Convention.'

'That, Ladies and Gentlemen, is something very grave', said Teitgen. He acknowledged that 'reparation in kind may be advisable where the victim is a specified individual' and that 'satisfaction may be given in the form of reparation in cash or the awarding of an indemnity'. But, said Teitgen, 'can the graver form of violation which consists in removing a fundamental law guaranteeing a specific freedom for the whole nation, from the laws of a country in virtue of some law or decree, can such a violation be redressed by ⁹ Draft Convention annexed to the Report [of the Conference of Senior Officials], Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19 annex, CM/WP 4 (50) 16 rev., A 1452, IV TP 274–95, at p. 292, art. 50.

¹⁰ Draft Convention adopted by the Sub-Committee, Doc. CM 1 (50) 52, A 1884, V TP 76–99, at p. 94, art. 50.

¹¹ Report of the sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 14 August 1950], V TP 216–71, at p. 248.

awarding a symbolic farthing damages to the citizens of the country?'. Teitgen asked whether, if France were to 'sink into a dictatorship' and suppress the freedom of the press, the European Court would 'award a franc damage to all Frenchmen so as to compensate for the injury which the suppression of this fundamental freedom had caused them? Such a proceeding would not make sense.'¹²

Teitgen proposed replacing the draft provision of the Committee of Ministers with the following:

The Court shall have jurisdiction to deal with any violation of the obligations defined in the Convention, whether they result from legislative, executive or judicial acts. Nevertheless, when an appeal is lodged against a judicial decision, such a decision cannot be challenged unless it was definitely pronounced in disregard of the fundamental rights defined in Articles 5, 6 and 7.

The Court may declare the impugned legislative, executive or judicial acts to be null and void.

Where necessary the Court shall grant just compensation to the injured party.¹³

But Teitgen was unsuccessful in the Legal Committee, where the draft of the Committee of Ministers was retained.¹⁴ The plenary Consultative Assembly agreed with the Committee of Ministers, the only change being the removal of the word 'only' before 'allows'.¹⁵ Immediately prior to final adoption of the Convention, a Committee of Experts reviewed the text of the Convention, reinserting the word 'only'.¹⁶

The text of article 50 of the 1950 version of the Convention read as follows:

If the Court finds that a decision or a measure taken by a legal authority or any other authority of a High Contracting Party is completely or partially in conflict with the obligations arising from the present Convention, and if the internal law of the said Party allows only partial reparation to be made for the consequences of this decision or measure, the decision of the Court shall, if necessary, afford just satisfaction to the injured party.

It was modified by Protocol No. 11 and renumbered as article 41. The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11 describes article 41 as a 'simplified and shortened version' of its predecessor.¹⁷ The heading 'Just satisfaction' was also added by Protocol No. 11.

Analysis and interpretation

If there is no friendly settlement and the Court then finds there has been a violation of the Convention, it may award the applicant 'just satisfaction'. Article 41 of the Convention says it is to do this 'if the internal law of the High Contracting Party concerned allows only partial reparation to be made'. The exercise is similar in nature to that undertaken by civil courts when they award damages to a plaintiff. Of course, within the European Convention system it is the State rather than a private party that is required to pay the amount that has been awarded. Although certain principles have been developed in the case law of ¹² Rep. 1950, II, p. 512.

¹³ Draft Motion submitted by M. Teitgen, Revised Draft, Doc. AS/JA (2) 6 rev., A 2238, VI TP 10-15.

¹⁴ First Report [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions], Doc. AS/JA (2) 15, A 2298, VI TP 46-52.

¹⁵ Text published in the Collected Documents of the Consultative Assembly, Doc. AS (2) 104, VI TP 198-229, at p. 222.

¹⁶ Report of the Committee [of Legal Experts], Doc. CM/Adj (50) 3, A 2530, VII TP 8; Doc. CM/Adj (50) 3 revised, A 2531, VII TP 10.

¹⁷ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 97.

the Court, there is no entitlement of an applicant to the award of just satisfaction. This remains subject to the discretion of the Court.

The Court has only been asked to apply article 41 in an inter-State case on one occasion following many years of defiance of its judgment on the merits in Cyprus v. Turkey.¹⁸ In Ireland v. the United Kingdom, at the request of the Court the applicant State answered that 'while not wishing to interfere with the de bene esse jurisdiction of the Court' its object had not been obtaining compensation, nor did it invite the Court to accord just satisfaction in the form of monetary compensation to any individual victim of a breach of the Convention. The Court accordingly said it was not necessary to address the question.¹⁹

During the just satisfaction proceedings, Turkey argued that article 41 did not in principle apply to inter-State cases. It referred to the early pronouncement of the European Commission in the Austria v. Italy case to the effect that applicant States do not enforce their own rights or those of their nationals, but rather they vindicate the public order of Europe.²⁰ Rejecting Turkey's contention, the Grand Chamber referred to the travaux préparatoires of article 41 and more precisely to a reference in the Report of the Committee of Experts to the consistency of the provision with 'the actual international law relating to the violation of an obligation by a State'. The Grand Chamber described '[t]he most important principle of international law relating to the violation, by a State, of a treaty obligation' as being 'that the breach of an engagement involves an obligation to make reparation in an adequate form'.²¹ According to the Grand Chamber, '[d]espite the specific character of the Convention, the overall logic of Article 41 is not substantially different from the logic of reparations in public international law, according to which "it is a well-established rule of international law that an injured State is entitled to obtain compensation from the State which has committed an internationally wrongful act for the damage caused by it"'.²² The Court described article 41 as 'lex specialis in relation to the general rules and principles of international law', saying it could not therefore be interpreted 'in such a narrow and restrictive way so as to exclude inter-State applications from its scope'.²³

The Grand Chamber acknowledged that in some cases an applicant State might complain about general issues in another State Party, such as systemic problems and administrative practices. In those circumstances, where the applicant State is acting in the interests of European public order, it might not be appropriate to award just satisfaction.²⁴ However, the Grand Chamber said that there was another category of inter-State complaint where the applicant State is denouncing violations of the rights of its own nationals. Such cases are substantially not only similar to those of individual applicants but are also consistent with the long-standing practice of diplomatic protection under ¹⁸ Cyprus v. Turkey [GC], no. 25781/94, ECHR 2001-IV.

¹⁹ Ireland v. the United Kingdom, 18 January 1978, §§ 245–246, Series A no. 25.

²⁰ Cyprus v. Turkey (just satisfaction) [GC], no. 25781/94, §§ 36–38, 12 May 2014, citing Austria v. Italy, no. 788/60, p. 140, Commission decision of 11 January 1961, (1961) 4 YB 116.

²¹ Cyprus v. Turkey (just satisfaction) [GC], no. 25781/94, § 41, 12 May 2014, citing Factory at Chorzów (Jurisdiction), PCIJ, Series A, No. 9, p. 21.

²² Cyprus v. Turkey (just satisfaction) [GC], no. 25781/94, § 41, 12 May 2014, citing Gabčíkovo-Nagymaros Project (Hungary/Slovakia), Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1997, p. 7, para. 152.

²³ Cyprus v. Turkey (just satisfaction) [GC], no. 25781/94, § 42, 12 May 2014. See, for a somewhat different view, ibid., Partly Concurring and Partly Dissenting Opinion of Judge Casadevall.

²⁴ Ibid., § 44.

international law.²⁵ In this context, the Court insisted that any award of just satisfaction must always be for the benefit of individual victims. It set a sum of €30 million as non-pecuniary damage for surviving relatives of missing persons and €60 million as non-pecuniary damage for the suffering of enslaved residents of the Karpas peninsula, specifying that the sums were to be distributed by Cyprus to the individual victims of the violations.²⁶

'The internal law of the High Contracting Party concerned...'

Noting in a separate opinion that the words 'the internal law of the High Contracting Party concerned...' have never been interpreted by the Convention organs, Judge Zupančič referred to the origins of article 41 in the amendment proposed by Tomasso Perassi in the Committee of Experts in February 1950. He explained that:

[t]he provision was inspired by the 1921 German-Swiss Treaty on Arbitration and Conciliation (Article 10) and the Geneva General Act for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes of 1928 (Article 32). Of course, these provisions were meant to deal with specific inter-State situations in which the State party to an arbitration agreement was unable to change its internal law but was willing to pay an equitable satisfaction of another kind. The basis for the arbitrage was extra-judicial compensation for the damage suffered by an individual caused to him by an alien State. The reference to "the internal law of the... Party [which] allows only partial reparation to be made" makes sense in inter-State disputes in which the State was politically willing to compensate for the restitution to the aggrieved individual, but was unable to do so due to specific provisions of its internal, usually constitutional, law. The intent of the provision, therefore, was to by-pass the internal legal impediments and to transpose the compensation question to the inter-State diplomatic protection level. This is also why, as we shall see, the language is difficult to interpret in the context of the Convention.²⁷

Judge Zupančič underscored the difficulty of interpreting a provision derived from an inter-State arbitration agreement within the context of human rights protection, explaining, as had done Pierre-Henri Teitgen in the Consultative Assembly in August 1950, that '[m]any procedural violations of human rights cannot be compensated for by pecuniary "just satisfaction"'. The fears concerning the infringement of national sovereignty which hung over the Committee of Experts for Human Rights in 1949 are clearly out of date today.²⁸ Describing the approach of the Court as 'too timid',²⁹ he urged the following interpretation of the phrase 'if the internal law of the High Contracting Party concerned allows only partial reparation to be made':

Before the Court awards pecuniary just satisfaction, this critical phrase logically (argumento a contrario) presupposes that the High Contracting Party's legal system will have done everything in its power to correct the violation in question. Since the domestic remedies have been exhausted

²⁵ Ibid., § 45.

²⁶ Ibid., § 58.

²⁷ Lucà v. Italy, no. 33354/96, Partly Concurring Opinion of Judge Zupančič, ECHR 2001-II.

²⁸ Ibid.

²⁹ Pétur Thór Sigurðsson v. Iceland, no. 39731/98, Concurring Opinion of Judge Zupančič, ECHR 2003-IV. Also Cable and Others v. The United Kingdom [GC], nos 24436/94, 24582/94, 24583/94, 24584/94, 24895/94, 25937/94, 25939/94, 25940/94, 25941/94, 26271/95, 26525/95, 27341/95, 27342/95, 27346/95, 27357/95, 27389/95, 27409/95, 27760/95, 27762/95, 27772/95, 28009/95, 28790/95, 30236/96, 30239/96, 30276/96, 30277/96, 30460/96, 30461/96, 30462/96, 31399/96, 31400/96, 31434/96, 31899/96, 32024/96, and 32944/96, Partly Dissenting Opinion of Judge Zupančič, 18 February 1999.

through the hierarchy of legal appeals before the case has reached the Court, this in most cases implies that the “the internal law of the High Contracting Party concerned” did not “allow... [for any] ... reparation to be made”.³⁰

Just satisfaction

Pursuant to article 41, the Court may award monetary compensation if it considers this to be ‘necessary’. The Court has wide discretion in making this determination. In the exercise of its discretion, ‘the Court will have regard to all the circumstances of the case including the nature of the violations found as well as any special circumstances pertaining to the context of the case’.³¹ The discretionary nature of the power to award just satisfaction is confirmed by the adjective ‘just’ and the phrase ‘if necessary’.³²

There can only be a finding of just satisfaction if the Court concludes that there has been a violation of the Convention. An award cannot be made for damage caused by events or situations that have not been found in breach of the Convention or for complaints declared inadmissible at an earlier stage in the proceedings. The existence of a causal link between the damage claimed and the violation of the Convention is a sine qua non for an award of just satisfaction.³³ The Court will not be satisfied if there is a ‘merely tenuous connection between the alleged violation and the damage, nor by mere speculation as to what might have been’.³⁴

A ruling on article 41 will only be included in the Court’s judgment if a specific claim has been submitted in accordance with Rule 60 of the Rules of Court³⁵ and if the question is ready for decision. The Court will reserve its jurisdiction with respect to just satisfaction if the question is not yet ready for decision.³⁶ If the Court makes a separate, subsequent ruling on just satisfaction, it shall endeavour to reconstitute the Chamber or the Committee that made the ruling on the violation itself.³⁷ In establishing the amount of just satisfaction, the Court normally considers ‘local economic circumstances’. It may also take guidance from domestic standards, although it is not bound by these.

Nevertheless, the Court may, ‘for reasons of equity’, award less than the amount of damage that has actually been sustained, for example in a case where the applicant bears some degree of responsibility for the actual damage, the costs, and the expenses. Frequently, the Court concludes that the finding of a violation is sufficient satisfaction and makes no monetary award.³⁸ In a case involving suspected terrorists, for example, the Court held ‘that the circumstances justify the making of an award substantially lower than that which it has had occasion to make in other cases of unlawful detention’.³⁹ But in the case concerning Al Qaeda leaders detained in Poland for several months, the Court ³⁰ Lucà v. Italy, no. 33354/96, Partly Concurring Opinion of Judge Zupančič, ECHR 2001-II.

³¹ A. and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 3455/05, § 250, ECHR 2009.

³² Guzzardi v. Italy, 6 November 1980, § 114, Series A no. 39; Arvanitiaki-Roboti and Others v. Greece [GC], no. 27278/03, § 32, 15 February 2008.

³³ Andrejeva v. Latvia [GC], no. 55707/00, § 111, ECHR 2009; Nikolova v. Bulgaria [GC], no. 31195/96, § 73, ECHR 1999-II.

³⁴ Practice Direction, Just Satisfaction Claims, 28 March 2007, para. 7.

³⁵ For technical requirements, see also Practice Direction, Just Satisfaction Claims, 28 March 2007.

³⁶ Rules of Court, Rule 75(1).

³⁷ Ibid., Rule 75(2).

³⁸ A. and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 3455/05, § 250, ECHR 2009; Nikolova v. Bulgaria [GC], no. 31195/96, § 76, ECHR 1999-II.

³⁹ Ibid., § 253.

awarded €100,000 plus any tax chargeable on the amount.⁴⁰ The wrongful extradition of a terror suspect from Belgium to the United States resulted in an award of €60,000.⁴¹ The Court has explained that there are situations where public vindication of the wrong suffered is 'a powerful form of redress in itself. In many cases where a law, procedure or practice has been found to fall short of Convention standards this is enough to put matters right.'⁴²

When it makes an award of just satisfaction, the Court may direct that if settlement is not made within a specific time, the sums awarded will be subject to interest.⁴³ Normally, this will be three months from the date when the judgment becomes final and binding. The rate will be equal to the marginal lending rate of the European Central Bank during the default period plus three percentage points.⁴⁴

Pecuniary damages

The Court has explained that 'the principle underlying the provision of just satisfaction is that the applicant should, as far as possible, be put in the position he or she would have enjoyed had the violation of the Convention not occurred'.⁴⁵ This is the ancient principle of restitutio in integrum, confirmed in international case law⁴⁶ as well as in article 35 of the Draft Articles on State Responsibility adopted by the United Nations International Law Commission.⁴⁷ Not all cases will lend themselves to assessing just satisfaction on this basis. However, '[i]f the nature of the breach allows of restitutio in integrum, it is for the respondent State to effect it, the Court having neither the power nor the practical possibility of doing so itself'.⁴⁸ In establishing the amount of compensation for the purposes of pecuniary damages, the Court will consider the loss actually suffered (damnum emergens), but it may also take into account the loss, or diminished gain, to be expected in the future (lucrum cessans).⁴⁹

In an expropriation case, the applicants sought the revocation of the expropriation order but did not make any additional claim for just satisfaction. The Court acknowledged that restitutio in integrum was possible to the extent the national jurisdictions revoked the order.⁵⁰ In cases involving expropriation, the Court may consider not only ⁴⁰ Al Nashiri v. Poland, no. 28761/11, § 595, 24 July 2014; Husayn (Abu Zubaydah) v. Poland, no. 7511/13, § 567, 45 July 2014. See also El Masri v. 'the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia' [GC], no. 39630/09, § 270, ECHR 2012.

⁴¹ Trabelsi v. Belgium, no. 140/10, § 176, 4 September 2014.

⁴² Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, § 224, ECHR 2009; Christine Goodwin v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 28957/95, § 120, ECHR 2002-VI; Saadi v. Italy [GC], no. 37201/06, § 188, ECHR 2008; S. and Marper v. the United Kingdom [GC], nos. 30562/04 and 30566/04, § 134, 4 December 2008.

⁴³ Rules of Court, Rule 75(3).

⁴⁴ Practice Direction, Just Satisfaction Claims, 28 March 2007, para. 15.

⁴⁵ Andrejeva v. Latvia [GC], no. 55707/00, § 111, ECHR 2009; Kingsley v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 35605/97, § 40, ECHR 2002-IV.

⁴⁶ Texaco Overseas Petroleum Company and California Asiatic Oil Company v. Libya, (1977) 104 Journal de droit international 350, cited in Guiso-Gallisay v. Italy (just satisfaction) [GC], no. 58858/00, § 52, 22 December 2009.

⁴⁷ UN Doc. A/RES/56/83, annex, cited in Guiso-Gallisay v. Italy (just satisfaction) [GC], no. 58858/00, § 53, 22 December 2009; Verein gegen Tierfabriken Schweiz (VgT) v. Switzerland (no. 2) [GC], no. 32772/02, § 86, ECHR 2009.

⁴⁸ Kozacıoğlu v. Turkey [GC], no. 2334/03, § 80, 19 February 2009; Turgut and Others v. Turkey (just satisfaction), no. 1411/03, § 12, 13 October 2009.

⁴⁹ Practice Direction, Just Satisfaction Claims, 28 March 2007, para. 10.

⁵⁰ Fakiridou and Schina v. Greece, no. 6789/06, § 61, 14 November 2008.

the market value of the property in question but also 'on an equitable basis' an amount in compensation for loss of opportunities.⁵¹ In some cases where restitutio in integrum is possible in the form of a restoration of property, the Court will reserve its decision on just satisfaction. This is governed by Rule 75 of the Rules of Court.

Non-pecuniary or moral damages

The European Convention contains no express reference to non-pecuniary damages. This has not, however, prevented the Court from making awards on this basis as part of the just satisfaction. The case law has identified situations where the applicant has 'suffered evident trauma, whether physical or psychological, pain and suffering, distress, anxiety, frustration, feelings of injustice or humiliation, prolonged uncertainty, disruption to life, or real loss of opportunity'.⁵² These are situations where 'the impact of the violation may be regarded as being of a nature and degree as to have impinged so significantly on the moral well-being of the applicant as to require something further'.⁵³ Referring to Greek Cypriot residents of the Karpas peninsula in northern Cyprus, enslaved since the 1974 invasion, the Grand Chamber said it had 'no doubt about the protracted feelings of helplessness, distress and anxiety' of the victims.⁵⁴

In assessing moral damages, the Court has noted that this is an area that does not lend itself to 'a process of calculation or precise quantification'.⁵⁵ The amount 'is intended to make reparation for the state of distress, inconvenience and uncertainty resulting from the violation in question'.⁵⁶ The Court does not function like a mechanism for establishing tort or civil liability in a domestic legal system. Rather, '[i]ts guiding principle is equity, which above all involves flexibility and an objective consideration of what is just, fair and reasonable in all the circumstances of the case, including not only the position of the applicant but the overall context in which the breach occurred'. The non-pecuniary awards 'serve to give recognition to the fact that moral damage occurred as a result of a breach of a fundamental human right and reflect in the broadest of terms the severity of the damage; they are not, nor should they be, intended to give financial comfort or sympathetic enrichment at the expense of the Contracting Party concerned'.⁵⁷

Costs and expenses

The European Court of Human Rights applies article 41 in awarding costs and expenses to applicants. In order to receive them, the Court requires that the injured party have actually and necessarily incurred them.⁵⁸ Under Rule 60(2) of the Rules of Court, ⁵¹ Guiso-Gallisay v. Italy (just satisfaction) [GC], no. 58858/00, § 107, 22 December 2009.

⁵² Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, § 224, ECHR 2009; Elsholz v. Germany [GC], no. 25735/94, § 70, ECHR 2000-VIII; Selmouni v. France [GC], no. 25803/94, § 123, ECHR 1999-V; Smith and Grady v. the United Kingdom (just satisfaction), nos 33985/96 and 33986/96, § 12, ECHR 2000-IX.

⁵³ Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, § 224, ECHR 2009.

⁵⁴ Cyprus v. Turkey (just satisfaction) [GC], no. 25781/94, § 57, 12 May 2014.

⁵⁵ Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, § 224, ECHR 2009.

⁵⁶ Arvanitaki-Roboti and Others v. Greece [GC], no. 27278/03, § 27, 15 February 2008; Comingersoll S.A. v. Portugal [GC], no. 35382/97, § 29, ECHR 2000-IV.

⁵⁷ Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, § 224, ECHR 2009.

⁵⁸ A. and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 3455/05, § 256, ECHR 2009; Kingsley v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 35605/97, § 49, ECHR 2002-IV; Micallef v. Malta [GC], no. 17056/06, § 115, ECHR 2009.

itemized particulars of any claim are required along with supporting documents or vouchers. If the documentation is not sufficient, sometimes the Court will recognize that substantial costs and expenses will have been incurred. In those circumstances, it may make an award on an 'equitable basis'.⁵⁹

The costs and expenses must actually relate to the violation of the Convention.⁶⁰ They are only awarded to a successful applicant.

Punitive damages

The European Court of Human Rights does not award punitive damages, at least explicitly.⁶¹ According to the Grand Chamber, there is 'little, if any, scope under the Convention for directing Governments to pay penalties to applicants which are unconnected with damage shown to be actually incurred in respect of past violations of the Convention; in so far as such sums would purport to compensate for future suffering of the applicants, this would be speculative in the extreme'.⁶² Nevertheless, the Court seems to have left the door open to awarding punitive damages by stating, for example, that it has 'until now, considered it inappropriate to accept claims for damages with labels such as "punitive", "aggravated" or "exemplary"'.⁶³

Judge Pinto de Albuquerque has pointed to many examples of the award of just satisfaction where there is a lack of genuine correspondence between the actual damage suffered and the amount, suggesting that in practice this amounts to a form of punishment imposed upon the respondent State. '[P]unitive damages are an appropriate and necessary instrument for fulfilling the Court's mission to uphold human rights in Europe and ensuring the observance of the engagements undertaken by the Contracting Parties in the Convention and the Protocols thereto (Article 19 of the Convention)', he has written.⁶⁴

Further reading

Gabriella Citroni, 'Measures of Reparation for Victims of Gross Human Rights Violations: Developments and Challenges in the Jurisprudence of Two Regional Human Rights Courts', (2012) 5 Inter-American and European Human Rights Journal 49.

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 536–95.

Alastair Mowbray, 'The European Court of Human Rights' Approach to Just Satisfaction', [1997] Public Law 647.

Karen Reid, A Practitioner's Guide to the European Convention on Human Rights, London: Sweet & Maxwell, 2011, pp. 831–70.

⁵⁹ Andrejeva v. Latvia [GC], no. 55707/00, § 116, ECHR 2009; Svipsta v. Latvia, no. 66820/01, § 170, ECHR 2006-III (extracts); Zaicevs v. Latvia, no. 65022/01, § 64, 31 July 2007.

⁶⁰ Andrejeva v. Latvia [GC], no. 55707/00, § 115, ECHR 2009; Iatridis v. Greece (just satisfaction) [GC], no. 31107/96, § 54, ECHR 2000-XI; Beyeler v. Italy (just satisfaction) [GC], no. 33202/96, § 27, 28 May 2002; Svipsta v. Latvia, no. 66820/01, § 170, ECHR 2006-III (extracts); J.L. and Others v. The United Kingdom (just satisfaction), nos 29522/95, 30056/96, and 30574/96, § 18, 25 September 2001.

⁶¹ Akdivar and Others v. Turkey (Article 50), 1 April 1998, § 38, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-II; Orhan v. Turkey, no. 25656/94, § 448, ECHR 2002.

⁶² Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, § 223, ECHR 2009.

⁶³ Practice Direction, Just Satisfaction Claims, 28 March 2007, para. 9.

⁶⁴ Cyprus v. Turkey (just satisfaction) [GC], no. 25781/94, Concurring Opinion of Judge Pinto de Albuquerque, joined by Judge Vučinić, § 19, 12 May 2014.

- Christian Tomuschat, 'Just Satisfaction under Article 50 of the European Convention on Human Rights', in Mahoney et al., Melanges Ryssdal, pp. 1409–30.
- Luzius Wildhaber, 'Article 41 of the European Convention on Human Rights: Just Satisfaction under the European Convention on Human Rights', [2003] Baltic Yearbook of International Law 1.
- Leo Zwaak, 'The Procedure before the European Court of Human Rights', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 245–78.

Article 42. Judgments of Chambers/Arrêts des chambres

Judgments of Chambers shall become final in accordance with the provisions of Article 44, paragraph 2.

Les arrêts des chambres deviennent définitifs conformément aux dispositions de l'article 44, paragraphe 2.

Introductory comments

Under the 1950 text of the Convention, the judgment of a Chamber was final, subject to the possibility of a request for interpretation or revision in accordance with the Rules of Court. When the mechanism of referral to the Grand Chamber was introduced by Protocol No. 11, it became necessary to revise the original provision. Accordingly, the judgment of a Chamber only becomes final once the issue of referral to the Grand Chamber has been resolved pursuant to article 44(2).

Drafting of the provision

According to article 52 of the 1950 text of the Convention, '[t]he judgment of the Court shall be final'. The drafting of this provision is discussed in the chapter of this Commentary on article 44.

Protocol No. 11 replaced article 52 with the current article 42. According to the Explanatory Report:

The Chamber will decide, as the Court had done in the past, by means of a judgment. This judgment will not—contrary to the former system—be immediately definitive, but will become so later in accordance with Article 44, paragraph 2. The judgment will have to be reasoned (Article 45, paragraph 1). It shall be transmitted to the parties but will not be published until it has become final (Article 44, paragraph 3). Further details may be determined in the rules of the Court.¹

The heading of the provision, 'Judgments of Chambers', was also introduced by Protocol No. 11.

Analysis and interpretation

'[I]ts sole object is to make the Court's judgments not subject to any appeal to another authority', the Court stated in an early judgment with reference to article 42.² Article 42 needs to be read in conjunction with article 44(2), by which a judgment of a Chamber becomes final once it has become clear that the case will not be examined by the Grand Chamber. Thus, if a case is heard by a Grand Chamber, the judgment of the Chamber never becomes 'final'.

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 42.

² Ringelsen v. Austria (Article 50), 22 June 1972, § 17, Series A no. 15; Ringelsen v. Austria (interpretation), 23 June 1973, § 13, Series A no. 16.

A judgment that has become final is deemed to be res judicata. Article 35(2)(b) reflects the same notion by making inadmissible any application that 'is substantially the same as a matter that has already been examined by the Court'. The Convention uses the term 'judgment' to refer to a ruling on the merits whereas the term 'decision' is reserved for rulings on admissibility. Only a 'judgment' is subject to execution by the Committee of Ministers.

The rule set out in article 42 must also be understood in conjunction with article 46 whereby a judgment of the Court may be 'interpreted' at the request of the Committee of Ministers. The Rules of Court allow for both 'interpretation' and 'revision' of a final judgment upon the request of one of the parties and for 'rectification' upon the request of the Chamber that issued the judgment.

Further reading

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, p. 596.

Janneke Gerards, 'Judicial Deliberations in the European Court of Human Rights', in N. Huls, M. Adams, and J.A. Bornhoff, eds, The Legitimacy of Highest Courts' Rulings, The Hague: TMC Asser, 2009, pp. 407–36.

Leo Zwaak, 'The Procedure before the European Court of Human Rights', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 241–4.

Article 43. Referral to the Grand Chamber/Renvoi devant la Grande Chambre

1. Within a period of three months from the date of the judgment of the Chamber, any party to the case may, in exceptional cases, request that the case be referred to the Grand Chamber.

2. A panel of five judges of the Grand Chamber shall accept the request if the case raises a serious question affecting the interpretation or application of the Convention or the Protocols thereto, or a serious issue of general importance.

3. If the panel accepts the request, the Grand Chamber shall decide the case by means of a judgment.

1. Dans un délai de trois mois à compter de la date de l'arrêt d'une chambre, toute partie à l'affaire peut, dans des cas exceptionnels, demander le renvoi de l'affaire devant la Grande Chambre.

2. Un collège de cinq juges de la Grande Chambre accepte la demande si l'affaire soulève une question grave relative à l'interprétation ou à l'application de la Convention ou de ses Protocoles, ou encore une question grave de caractère général.

3. Si le collège accepte la demande, la Grande Chambre se prononce sur l'affaire par un arrêt.

Introductory comments

The function of the Grand Chamber is to provide rulings in cases that raise serious questions affecting the interpretation or application of the Convention and its Protocols, or a serious issue of general importance. Its judgments carry great authority because of the enlarged composition of the bench, consisting of seventeen judges rather than seven for a Chamber. Moreover, the Grand Chamber is also comprised of the President of the Court, the Vice-Presidents, and the Presidents of the Chambers. The determination of cases that are examined by the Grand Chamber is governed by article 43.

Drafting of the provision

Article 43 of the Convention was introduced by Protocol No. 11. The 1950 text of the Convention did not contemplate Chambers of different configurations. Article 43 of the 1950 Convention read:

For the consideration of each case brought before it the Court shall consist of a Chamber composed of seven judges. There shall sit as an ex officio member of the Chamber the judge who is a national of any State party concerned, or, if there is none, a person of its choice who shall sit in the capacity of judge; the names of the other judges shall be chosen by lot by the President before the opening of the case.¹

¹ Draft Convention adopted by the Sub-Committee, Doc. CM 1 (50) 52, A 1884, V TP 76-99, at p. 92; Draft Convention adopted by the Committee of Ministers, 7 August 1950, Doc. A 1937, V TP 120-45, at p. 138. For the full drafting history, see the chapter on article 26 in this Commentary.

Nevertheless, the Rules of Court adopted in 1959 provided that the 'plenary Court' consisting of all of the judges would fulfil not only an administrative function but also a judicial role. The plenary Court exercised jurisdiction in three situations, including cases where the Chamber had relinquished jurisdiction because of the existence of a 'serious question affecting the interpretation of the Convention' and those 'where the resolution of such question might have a result inconsistent with a judgment previously delivered by a Chamber or by the plenary Court'.² However, there was no possibility of a referral to the plenary Court at the request of a party to the proceedings.

With the entry into force of Protocol No. 11, the plenary Court ceased to have any judicial function and the Grand Chamber became the largest judicial unit. The Explanatory Report referred to instructions from the Committee of Ministers to draft a Protocol that would include the following features: 'an appropriate structure to ensure the quality and consistency of its case-law and to enable a re-hearing in exceptional cases, for example those raising serious questions affecting the interpretation or application of the Convention; provision should be made for the presence of a national judge in any such re-hearing'.³ The language in article 43(2) was drawn from a provision introduced by Protocol No. 9 authorizing a three-judge panel to deal with a case submitted to a Court that did not 'raise a serious question affecting the interpretation or application of the Convention' and that did not 'for any other reason warrant consideration by the Court'.⁴

Analysis and interpretation

The rehearing of a case that is governed by article 43 is to be distinguished from the relinquishment of jurisdiction by a Chamber in favour of the Grand Chamber pursuant to article 30 of the Convention. In the latter case, the Chamber has not yet issued a judgment. In the former, the proceeding is more like a classic appeal in the sense that the initiative rests entirely with the parties and seeks to modify or reverse the judgment of the Chamber. A consequence of the Grand Chamber decision is that 'the Chamber judgment, as res judicata, is invalidated with retrospective effect' and is henceforth 'only of historical value'.⁵

There are some curious differences in the criteria allowing for referral under article 43 and relinquishment under article 30, although they do not appear to have provoked any reflection in the case law. Referral may be authorized 'if the case raises a serious question affecting the interpretation or application of the Convention or the protocols thereto'. Relinquishment, on the other hand, is justified if the case 'raises a serious question affecting the interpretation' but not, apparently, 'the application'. Referral under article 43 may also be ordered for 'a serious issue of general importance', something that is absent in article 30 dealing with relinquishment. Relinquishment is also possible 'where the

² Rules of Court, (Adopted 18 September 1959), Rule 48 (Relinquishment of jurisdiction by the Chamber in favour of the plenary Court). This became Rule 50 pursuant to Revised Rules of Court (adopted on 24 November 1982) and then Rule 51 pursuant to Rules of Court (Adopted on 24 November 1982 and amended on 26 January 1989).

³ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 4. Also paras 47, 99.

⁴ Ibid., para. 99. See Protocol No. 9 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, art. 5(2); Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 9, paras. 24–25.

⁵ Kyprianou v. Cyprus [GC], no. 73797/01, Partly Dissenting Opinion of Judge Costa, § 2, ECHR 2005-XIII.

resolution of a question before the Chamber might have a result inconsistent with a judgment previously delivered by the Court'. Referral does not seem to be allowed when the judgment of the Chamber actually as a result inconsistent with a judgment previously delivered by the Court.

The 'case'

Paragraphs 1 and 3 of article 43 refer to 'the case'. It is 'the case' that is referred to the Grand Chamber and 'the case' that is dealt with in the final judgment of the Grand Chamber. The case that is referred to the Grand Chamber consists of those aspects of the application that have been declared admissible by the Chamber or by some other formation of the Court. In other words, the Grand Chamber may not review a decision holding part of the application to be inadmissible.⁶ Otherwise, the scope of the 'case' before the Grand Chamber is 'limited only by the Chamber's decision on admissibility'.⁷ Thus, 'whilst the existence of "a serious question affecting the interpretation or application of the Convention or the Protocols thereto, or a serious issue of general importance" (paragraph 2) is a prerequisite for acceptance of a party's request, the consequence of acceptance is that the whole "case" is referred to the Grand Chamber to be decided afresh by means of a new judgment (paragraph 3)'.⁸ The Grand Chamber remains free to rule that the entire application or portions of it are inadmissible. Its power in this respect is ensured by article 35(4), which gives the Court the power to 'reject any application which it considers inadmissible... at any stage of the proceedings'.⁹

It is not possible for a party to request the referral of only part of 'the case'.¹⁰ To that extent, the procedure is quite different from a classic appeal, where grounds of appeal frame the authority of the higher court.¹¹ If there are two applicants but only one of them requests the referral to the Grand Chamber, this does not mean that the Grand Chamber does not rule on the entire case declared admissible by the Chamber, including that portion concerning the applicant who has not requested referral. This approach is said to be 'in keeping with the spirit and the letter of Article 37 § 1 in fine of the Convention, by which the Court is entitled to continue the examination of an application if respect for human rights as defined in the Convention and the Protocols so requires'.¹² One consequence of this is that the party that seeks the re-hearing may end up losing those parts of the Chamber judgment with which it is satisfied. For example, in Janowiec v. Poland, the applicants had been successful in the Chamber with a portion of the original claim concerning article 3 of the Convention; this was reconsidered and rejected by the Grand Chamber along with the rest of their application.¹³

⁶ Sanoma Uitgevers B.V. v. the Netherlands [GC], no. 38224/03, § 47, 14 September 2010; K. and T. v. Finland [GC], no. 25702/94, § 141, ECHR 2001-VII; Šilih v. Slovenia [GC], no. 71463/01, § 120, 9 April 2009; Kafraris v. Cyprus [GC], no. 21906/04, § 124, ECHR 2008; Kovačić and Others v. Slovenia [GC], nos 44574/98, 45133/98, and 48316/99, § 194, 3 October 2008.

⁷ Azinas v. Cyprus [GC], no. 56679/00, § 32, ECHR 2004-III.

⁸ Perna v. Italy [GC], no. 48898/99, § 23, ECHR 2003-V.

⁹ Šilih v. Slovenia [GC], no. 71463/01, § 120, 9 April 2009.

¹⁰ K. and T. v. Finland [GC], no. 25702/94, §§ 137–141, ECHR 2001-VII.

¹¹ Mooren v. Germany [GC], no. 11364/03, § 101, 9 July 2009; K. and T. v. Finland [GC], no. 25702/94, §§ 140–41, ECHR 2001-VII; Göç v. Turkey [GC], no. 36590/97, § 36, ECHR 2002-V; Azinas v. Cyprus [GC], no. 56679/00, §§ 31–33, ECHR 2004-III.

¹² Cumpăna and Mazăre v. Romania [GC], no. 33348/96, § 67, ECHR 2004-XI.

¹³ Janowiec and Others v. Russia [GC], nos 55508/07 and 29520/09, §§ 162–189, ECHR 2013.

Authorization of referral

Any party to the proceedings may, 'in exceptional cases', request referral to the Grand Chamber. The party must specify in its request 'the serious question affecting the interpretation or application of the Convention or the Protocols thereto, or the serious issue of general importance, which in its view warrants consideration by the Grand Chamber'.¹⁴ The application must be made within three months of the date of the judgment of the Chamber. Approximately 5 per cent of applications for referral are granted.

The request for referral to the Grand Chamber is decided by a five-judge Panel. The Panel is made up of the President of the Court, two Presidents of Sections designated by rotation, two judges designated by rotation from among judges elected by the remaining Sections to sit on the Panel for a period of six months, and at least two substitute judges.¹⁵ Excluded from the Panel are judges who took part in the consideration of the admissibility or merits of the case in question, a judge elected in respect of a State Party concerned by the referral request, and a judge who is a national of such a State Party.¹⁶ The Panel examines the request solely on the basis of the existing case file.¹⁷ The request may be refused without any reasons given.¹⁸ It is not the practice of the Court to give reasons. This is justified by article 45 of the Convention requiring reasons to be given only for judgments and for decisions on admissibility. The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11 states that article 45 'does not concern decisions taken by the Panel of five judges of the Grand Chamber in accordance with Article 43'.¹⁹ No appeal or review of this decision is possible.²⁰ According to article 44(2)(c), if the Panel rejects the application for rehearing, then the judgment of the Chamber becomes final.

If the Panel decides to accept the request, article 43(3) dictates that the Grand Chamber shall decide the case. Consequently, 'the Grand Chamber has no option but to examine the case' if the request has been accepted by the Panel.²¹ It is not possible for the Grand Chamber to refer a case back to a Section of the Court once the Panel has ruled on referral.²² According to the Grand Chamber, 'it must assess the facts as they appear at the time of its decision by applying the appropriate legal solution. Once a case is referred to it the Grand Chamber may accordingly employ the full range of judicial powers conferred on the Court'.²³

If re-hearing of the case is authorized by the five-judge Panel, the Grand Chamber may render a judgment on the merits, but it may also apply other provisions of the Convention enabling it to terminate proceedings, in particular the approval of a friendly settlement under article 39 or striking out of the case pursuant to article 37.²⁴ Although the ¹⁴ Rules of Court, Rule 73(1).

¹⁵ Ibid., Rule 24(5)(a).

¹⁶ Ibid., Rules 24(5)(b) and (c).

¹⁷ Ibid., Rule 73(2).

¹⁸ Mateescu v. Romania, no. 1944/10, § 5, 14 January 2014; Lordos and Others v. Turkey (just satisfaction), no. 15973/90, § 9, 10 January 2012; Yuriy Nikolayevich Ivanov v. Ukraine, no. 40450/04, § 6, 15 October 2009.

¹⁹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 105.

²⁰ Pisano v. Italy (striking out) [GC], no. 36732/97, § 29, 24 October 2002.

²¹ Ibid., § 26.

²² Tahsin Acar v. Turkey [GC], no. 26307/95, § 199, ECHR 2004-III.

²³ Pisano v. Italy (striking out) [GC], no. 36732/97, § 28, 24 October 2002.

²⁴ Ibid., §§ 40–50; Kovačič and Others v. Slovenia (striking out) [GC], nos 44574/98, 45133/98, and 48316/99, § 266, 3 October 2008.

judgment of the Grand Chamber is final, replacing the judgment of the Chamber that precedes it, even a judgment of the Grand Chamber, may be subject to a request for interpretation or revision. Subject to these exceptional circumstances, in the normal course of events a judgment of the Grand Chamber is definitive and has immediate effect.²⁵

Serious questions and serious issues

The Convention authorizes re-hearing by a Grand Chamber 'if the case raises a serious question affecting the interpretation or application of the Convention or the Protocols thereto, or a serious issue of general importance'. Some guidance to the scope of the text, at least as it was intended to be applied by the drafters of Protocol No. 11, appears in the Explanatory Report:

100. Serious questions affecting the interpretation of the Convention are raised when a question of importance not yet decided by the Court is at stake, or when the decision is of importance for future cases and for the development of the Court's case-law. Moreover, a serious question may be particularly evident when the judgment concerned is not consistent with a previous judgment of the Court.

101. A serious question concerning the application of the Convention may be at stake when a judgment necessitates a substantial change to national law or administrative practice but does not itself raise a serious question of interpretation of the Convention.

102. A serious issue considered to be of general importance could involve a substantial political issue or an important issue of policy.²⁶

Because these matters are not subject to debate before the Grand Chamber, and in the absence of reported case law from the Panel making the determination, it is difficult to assess how the provision is being interpreted. It is not particularly helpful to look at the cases where authorization is granted, as they invariably contain elements indicating the 'serious questions' about the interpretation and application of the Convention. It is more difficult to understand the rationale for the rejection of the many applications where serious questions also appear to be present. The actual judgment of the Grand Chamber in cases where leave has been granted may not necessarily clarify the reason for referral because the composition of the Panel and the Grand Chamber is not the same. The reasoning of the Panel about the importance of the issue or issues may not be shared by the Grand Chamber.

In the İzmir Declaration, Member States said that decisions of the five-judge panels on authorization should be 'clearly reasoned', something avoiding 'repetitive [referral] requests and ensuring better understanding of Chamber judgments'.²⁷ A background document issued by the Court notes that it is not enough to demonstrate that a case is factually complex, politically delicate, or has given rise to dissenting opinions.²⁸ Although article 43 does not refer to the issue of consistency of the case law, in contrast with article 30 dealing with relinquishment, the Panel will indeed be likely to refer the case to the Grand Chamber if the Chamber judgment departs from established jurisprudence. In ²⁵ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 104.

²⁶ Ibid., paras 100–102.

²⁷ Final Declaration of the High Level Conference on the Future of the Court, held in İzmir on 26–27 April 2011, para. 2(e).

²⁸ The General Practice Followed by the Panel of the Grand Chamber When Deciding on Requests for Referral in Accordance with Article 43 of the Convention, October 2011.

one case, the Grand Chamber noted that the Chamber had 'departed from the case-law on the application of Article 41 in cases of constructive expropriation'.²⁹ Other judgments confirm earlier and sometimes controversial precedents set by the Grand Chamber.³⁰

The Panel has occasionally referred cases raising similar issues to those of other recent Grand Chamber judgments, presumably in order to clarify or limit the scope of imprecise pronouncements on such matters as the temporal scope of the procedural obligation contained in article 2.³¹ Another rationale for the referral will be the development of the case law, pursuing a dynamic and evolutive approach to interpretation of the Convention. For example, in Bayatyan v. Armenia, the Grand Chamber completely revised the interpretation of the Convention with respect to the right to conscientious objection after the Chamber had taken a more conservative stance.³²

Referral to the Grand Chamber is also the occasion for important judgments on new issues in the area of human rights. Examples include the ban on the wearing of headscarves in Turkish universities³³ and reproductive rights.³⁴ Examples of a 'serious issue of general importance' include protection against transnational crime on the high seas,³⁵ discrimination directed against Roma,³⁶ the death penalty,³⁷ and the legitimacy and legality of amnesty for serious international crimes.³⁸ Finally, there are what have been called the 'high-profile cases', such as those involving notorious crimes and criminals,³⁹ religious symbols in public places,⁴⁰ and the killing of a demonstrator during a protest against the G8.⁴¹

Further reading

- Robert Badinter, 'Du Protocol no 11 au Protocole no 12', in G. Flécheux, ed., Mélanges en hommage à Louis Edmond Pettiti, Brussels: Bruylant, 1998, pp. 103–12.
- Jean-Paul Costa, 'Les arrêts de la Grande Chambre rendus après renvoi (article 43 de la ECHR)', in Lucius Caflisch, Johan Callewaert, Roderick Liddell, Paul Mahoney, and Mark Villiger, eds, Liber Amicorum Luzius Wildhaber, Kehl, Germany: N.P. Engel, 2007, pp. 133–44.
- Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 597–8.
- Leo Zwaak, 'The Procedure before the European Court of Human Rights', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 238–9.

²⁹ Guiso-Gallissay v. Italy (just satisfaction) [GC], no. 58858/00, § 56, 22 December 2009.

³⁰ Scoppola v. Italy (no. 3) [GC], no. 126/05, § 96, 22 May 2012, affirming Hirst v. the United Kingdom (no. 2) [GC], no. 74025/01, ECHR 2005-IX.

³¹ Janowiec and Others v. Russia [GC], nos 55508/07 and 29520/09, §§ 149–151, ECHR 2013, Šilih v. Slovenia [GC], no. 71463/01, § 163 in fine, 9 April 2009 and Blečić v. Croatia [GC], no. 59532/00, §§ 77–82, ECHR 2006-III.

³² Bayatyan v. Armenia [GC], no. 23459/03, §§ 98–111, ECHR 2011. See Bayatyan v. Armenia, no. 23459/03, § 63, 27 October 2009.

³³ Leyla Şahin v. Turkey [GC], no. 44774/98, ECHR 2005-XI.

³⁴ Evans v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 6339/05, ECHR 2007-I; Dickson v. The United Kingdom [GC], no. 44362/04, ECHR 2007-V; S.H. and Others v. Austria [GC], no. 57813/00, ECHR 2011.

³⁵ Medvedjev and Others v. France [GC], no. 3394/03, ECHR 2010.

³⁶ D.H. and Others v. the Czech Republic [GC], no. 57325/00, ECHR 2007-IV; Oršuš and Others v. Croatia [GC], no. 15766/03, ECHR 2010; Aksu v. Turkey [GC], nos 4149/04 and 41029/04, ECHR 2012.

³⁷ Öcalan v. Turkey [GC], no. 46221/99, ECHR 2005-IV.

³⁸ Marguš v. Croatia [GC], no. 4455/10, 27 May 2014.

³⁹ Gäfgen v. Germany [GC], no. 22978/05, ECHR 2010; Öcalan v. Turkey [GC], no. 46221/99, ECHR 2005-IV; Ramirez Sanchez v. France [GC], no. 59450/00, ECHR 2006-IX.

⁴⁰ Lautsi and Others v. Italy [GC], no. 30814/06, ECHR 2011 (extracts).

⁴¹ Giuliani and Gaggio v. Italy [GC], no. 23458/02, ECHR 2011 (extracts).

Article 44. Final judgments/Arrêts définitifs

- | | |
|---|--|
| 1. The judgment of the Grand Chamber shall be final. | 1. L'arrêt de la Grande Chambre est définitif. |
| 2. The judgment of a Chamber shall become final | 2. L'arrêt d'une chambre devient définitif |
| (a) when the parties declare that they will not request that the case be referred to the Grand Chamber; or | a) lorsque les parties déclarent qu'elles ne demanderont pas le renvoi de l'affaire devant la Grande Chambre; ou |
| (b) three months after the date of the judgment, if reference of the case to the Grand Chamber has not been requested; or | b) trois mois après la date de l'arrêt, si le renvoi de l'affaire devant la Grande Chambre n'a pas été demandé; ou |
| (c) when the panel of the Grand Chamber rejects the request to refer under Article 43. | c) lorsque le collège de la Grande Chambre rejette la demande de renvoi formulée en application de l'article 43. |
| 3. The final judgment shall be published. | 3. L'arrêt définitif est publié. |

Introductory comments

Article 44 embodies 'the principle of the finality of judgments'.¹ Known by the Latin expression res judicata, it has been described as a general principle of law as this notion is meant by article 38 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice.² As noted by three judges of the Court in a dissenting opinion, 'it is an elemental requirement in judicial conflict-resolution to resolve disputes with finality and irrevocability. The doctrines of res judicata, legal certainty, ne bis in idem (in criminal procedure), for example, and ultimately the principle of the rule of law, call for no less.'³

In a sense, of course, nothing is really final, and the European Court of Human Rights is no exception. The Court may return to issues of law decided definitively in earlier cases and decide to revise its interpretation quite dramatically.⁴ There is also an apparently residual power, not specified in the Convention or the Rules, allowing for revision of a judgment where the Court itself has committed an error.⁵

¹ McGinley and Egan v. the United Kingdom (revision), nos 21825/93 and 23414/94, § 30, ECHR 2000-I.

² Interpretation of Judgments Nos 7 and 8 (Chorzów Factory), Series A, No. 13, Dissenting Opinion by M. Anzilotti, para. 7. See also Effect of awards of compensation made by the U.N. Administrative Tribunal, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 1954, p. 47, at pp. 53, 59.

³ Nuutinen v. Finland, no. 32842/96, Dissenting Opinion of Judge Zupančič, Joined by Judges Panfiliu and Türmen, ECHR 2000-VIII.

⁴ Scoppola v. Italy (no. 2) [GC], no. 10249/03, § 104, 17 September 2009; Sergey Zolotukhin v. Russia [GC], no. 14939/03, § 80, ECHR 2009; Vilho Eskelinen and Others v. Finland [GC], no. 63235/00, § 56, ECHR 2007-II.

⁵ Storck v. Germany, no. 61603/00, § 67, ECHR 2005-V; Storck v. Germany (dec.), no. 61603, 26 October 2004; Ölmez v. Turkey (dec.), no. 39464/98, 5 July 2005; Des Fours Walderode v. Czech Republic (dec.), no. 40057/98, ECHR 2004-V; Harrach v. Czech Republic (dec.), no. 77532/01, 18 May 2004; Le Syndicat des copropriétaires du 20 bd de la Mer à Dinard v. France (dec.), no. 47339/99, 22 May 2003; Wortmann v. Germany (dec.), no. 70929/01, 18 November 2003; Appietto v. France (dec.), no. 56927/00, § 8, 26 February 2002.

Drafting of the provision

The 1950 text of the Convention contained a laconic provision on the subject of 'final judgments': 'Article 52. The judgment of the Court shall be final.'

The initial draft proposal for a European Convention, adopted by the European Movement, contained the following: 'The judgment is final and without appeal. In the event of dispute as to the meaning or scope of the judgment, the Court shall construe it upon the request of any party.'⁶ It also had a separate provision authorizing revision of a judgment based upon the discovery of a fact of such a nature as to be a decisive factor unknown to the parties or the Court at the time of the judgment.⁷

The Consultative Assembly did not consider the issue, and its final draft had no such provision. The Committee of Ministers assigned a Committee of Experts to study the Consultative Assembly draft, noting that it should in particular address '[t]he legal scope of judgments: grounds, revision, appeal, effect on third parties intervening parties'.⁸ At its first session, in February 1950, the Committee of Experts adopted this text: 'The judgment of the Court is final.'⁹ The provision also appeared in the final draft of the Committee of Experts.¹⁰ The Report of the Committee of Experts stated that it '[r]equire[d] no comment'.¹¹ The provision was adopted without change by the Conference of Senior Officials,¹² although the United Kingdom commented that it should read '[t]he judgment of the Court shall be final'.¹³ The change was adopted by the Committee of Ministers when it met in August 1950.¹⁴ There were no further changes and the text appears in the final version of the Convention as article 52.

The current version of article 44 was introduced to the Convention by Protocol No. 11. According to the Explanatory Report, article 44(1) is taken from article 52 of

⁶ Convention for the Collective Protection of Individual Rights and Democratic Liberties by the States, Members of the Council of Europe, and for the establishment of a European Court of Human Rights to ensure observance of the Convention, Doc. INF/5/E/R, I TP 296–303, at p. 318, art. 54.

⁷ Ibid., art. 55.

⁸ Preparatory Report by the Secretariat-General concerning a Preliminary Draft Convention to Provide a Collective Guarantee of Human Rights, Doc. B 22, III TP 2–37, at p. 36.

⁹ Preliminary Draft Convention for the Maintenance and Further Realisation of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 15 February 1950, Doc. A 833, III TP 236–46, at p. 246. See also Amendments to various articles of the Recommendation of the Consultative Assembly proposed by the Italian Expert, Doc. A 812, III TP 228–31, art. E; Continuation and end of the proposals of the Drafting Sub-Committee concerning Section III, Doc. A 813, III TP 230–3.

¹⁰ Appendix to the Report of the Committee of Experts on Human Rights: Draft Convention of Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 16 March 1950, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 15 appendix, CM/WP 1 (50) 14 revised, A 925, IV TP 50–79, at p. 74, art. 41(4). Also New text suggested for Sections II, III, and IV, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 4, A 917, III TP 294–302, at p. 302, art. 38.

¹¹ Report to the Committee of Ministers submitted by the Committee of Experts Instructed to Draw Up a Draft Convention of Collective Guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Doc. CM/WP 1 (5) 15, A 924, IV TP 2–55, at p. 44.

¹² Draft Convention annexed to the Report, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19 annex, CM/WP 4 (50) rev., A 1452, IV TP 274–95, at p. 292, art. 52; Draft Convention appended to the draft report, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 16, appendix, A 1445, IV TP 218–40, at p. 236, art. 53. Also Proposal submitted by the Swedish Delegation, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 10, A 1373, IV TP 190–5.

¹³ Comments by the United Kingdom Delegation on the Report of the Conference of Senior Officials and the text of the draft Convention, Doc. A 1690, p. 4.

¹⁴ Draft Convention adopted by the Sub-Committee, Doc. CM 1 (50) 52, A 1884, V TP 76–99, at p. 94, art. 52; Draft Convention adopted by the Committee of Ministers, 7 August 1950, Doc. A 1937, V TP 120–45, at p. 140, art. 52.

the Convention.¹⁵ The heading, 'Final judgments', was also introduced by Protocol No. 11. Nothing of interest with respect to the drafting of this provision can be found in the Explanatory Report.

The 1950 text of the Convention did not contain any provision requiring the publication of judgments, despite the fact that wide dissemination of judgments of the Court was part of the vision of those who originally proposed its establishment. Publication of the judgments of the Court was contemplated by the Rules, adopted in 1959. In the original version, publication of judgments was not mandatory: 'The Registrar shall be responsible for the publication of judgments and of such other decisions and documents whose publication may have been authorised by the Court.'¹⁶ This provision later became more elaborate, mentioning publication not only of judgments but also of documents relating to the proceedings 'but excluding any document which the President considers unnecessary or inadvisable to publish', verbatim records of public hearings, and 'any document which the President considers useful to publish'.¹⁷ Publication of judgments was to take place in the two official languages.

Analysis and interpretation

Article 44 must be read in conjunction with two other provisions governing the definitive nature of decisions and judgments issued by a single judge formation and a three-judge Committee. Article 27(2) says that the decision of the single judge that an application is inadmissible or that it should be struck out of the list 'shall be final'. Similarly, pursuant to article 28(2), a decision taken by a three-judge Committee, whether to declare the application inadmissible or rule on admissibility and on the merits, 'shall be final'. The combined effect of these texts indicates that article 44 only concerns 'judgments' of the Grand Chamber and of Chambers. Use of the term 'judgment' also suggests that article 44 does not apply to 'decisions', which are judicial pronouncements dealing with admissibility and striking out of the list that may bring an end to a case.

Article 44(2) specifies the conditions under which a judgment of a seven-judge Chamber also becomes definitive. The first involves a declaration by the parties that they will not request that the case be referred to the Grand Chamber. Such declarations have been made in the case of friendly settlements.¹⁸ The second takes effect by the simple passage of time, if referral of the case to the Grand Chamber has not been sought within three months from the date of the judgment. The third is a consequence of the dismissal by a panel of the Grand Chamber of a request that the case be referred to it, in accordance with article 43.

Interpretation of a judgment

A request for interpretation of a judgment by a party to the proceedings is governed by Rule 79 of the Rules of Court. The provision is derived from a similar text in the 1959

¹⁵ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 104.

¹⁶ Rules of Court, (Adopted 18 September 1959), Rule 52 (Publication of judgments and other decisions).

¹⁷ Rules of Court (as amended on 24 October 1961), Rule 52 (Publication of judgments, decisions and other documents); Revised Rules of Court (Adopted on 24 November 1982), Rule 56 (Publication of judgments and other documents).

¹⁸ See, e.g., Toimi v. Sweden (friendly settlement), no. 55164/00, § 10, 22 March 2005; Samy v. the Netherlands (friendly settlement), no. 36499/97, § 15, 18 June 2002.

version of the Rules of Court.¹⁹ Interpretation of a judgment at the request of the Committee of Ministers is contemplated by article 46(3) of the Convention. The request for interpretation governed by Rule 79 must be filed within a period of one year following the delivery of the judgment. An attempt is made to reconstitute the original Chamber, failing which the President completes or composes the Chamber by drawing lots.²⁰

The request for interpretation pursuant to Rule 79 is not an appeal. That is because it is addressed to the same Chamber that rendered the initial judgment. In considering the request, the Court has been described as exercising 'inherent jurisdiction'. This has been described as going 'no further than to clarify the meaning and scope which [the Court] intended to give to a previous decision which issued from its own deliberations, specifying if need be what it thereby decided with binding force'.²¹ For that reason, the Rule authorizing an application for interpretation is 'in no wise irreconcilable' with article 42 of the Convention.²² If the application is aimed not at clarifying 'the meaning and scope' of a judgment but rather at modifying it 'in respect of an issue which the Court decided', the interpretation judgment will be denied.²³

Revision of a judgment

An application for revision of a judgment is authorized 'in the event of the discovery of a fact which might by its nature have a decisive influence and which, when a judgment was delivered, was unknown to the Court and could not reasonably have been known to that party'.²⁴ The provision is derived from article 61(1) of the Statute of the International Court of Justice. It dictates a two-stage procedure by which the Court initially rules on the admissibility of the application for revision, and this was copied in the initial version of the Rules of Court.²⁵ The revised Rules of Court that came into force with Protocol No. 11 removed the two-stage procedure, allowing the original Chamber to refuse to consider the request, acting on its own motion, 'on the ground that there is no reason to warrant considering it'.²⁶ As with an application for interpretation, the original Chamber is reconvened. Where this is not possible, the President completes the Chamber or composes a new Chamber by drawing lots.²⁷ The application for revision to the European Court of Human Rights must be made within six months of the acquisition of knowledge of the fact.²⁸

Because an application for revision 'calls into question the final character of judgments' set out in article 42 of the Convention, the possibility of revision, 'which is not provided for in the Convention but was introduced by the Rules of Court, is an exceptional

¹⁹ Rules of Court (Adopted 18 September 1959), Rule 53 (Request for interpretation of a judgment).

²⁰ Ibid.

²¹ Ringeisen v. Austria (interpretation), 23 June 1973, § 13, Series A no. 16; Allenet de Ribemont v. France (interpretation), 7 August 1996, § 17, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-III.

²² Ringeisen v. Austria (Interpretation), 23 June 1973, § 13, Series A no. 16.

²³ Henrich v. France (interpretation), 3 July 1997, § 16, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-IV.

²⁴ Rules of Court, Rule 80(1).

²⁵ Rules of Court, (adopted 18 September 1959), Rule 54(4).

²⁶ Rules of Court, Rule 80(3).

²⁷ Ibid.

²⁸ Ibid., Rule 80(1).

procedure'. For that reason, 'the admissibility of any request for revision of a judgment of the Court under this procedure is subject to strict scrutiny'.²⁹

Revision was requested by a respondent State when it was unable to execute the judgment because the applicant died before the judgment had been adopted. The death of the applicant was a fact that 'might by its nature have a decisive influence on the judgment delivered by the Court'.³⁰ Requests to revise a judgment so as to direct that the sums awarded to a deceased applicant be received by the heirs have sometimes been granted by the Court.³¹ But the Court has also revised a judgment in order to remove an award of just satisfaction given the death of the applicant prior to issuance of the judgment, although it maintained the rest of the ruling because of its general importance for the respect of human rights.³²

Revision has been granted in situations where the Court has made a mistake in the treatment of the application. For example, revision was authorized where the Chamber itself misunderstood or misinterpreted the submissions of the respondent State with respect to the costs that were payable. The 'fact' discovered subsequently was the misunderstanding that only became knowable when the judgment was delivered. The Court distinguished this from rectification based upon a clerical error, an error in calculation, or an obvious mistake, something governed by Rule 81.³³ In another case, it revised the judgment because it had 'overlooked' a relevant document.³⁴ When the Court neglected to invite the respondent State to comment on claims made by the applicant with respect to just satisfaction, it agreed the absence of submissions in rebuttal had a 'decisive influence' on the judgment. The applicant's submissions had been filed outside of the time limit and in the absence of an indication from the Court the respondent State assumed that there was no need to respond. There was no real change to the result, but the judgment was altered by adding the following sentence: 'Le Gouvernement a commenté les prétentions des requérants et formulé ses observations les 15 et 20 janvier 2009'.³⁵ In a case involving failure to comply with article 38, a finding of a violation was revised after Russia demonstrated that it had actually submitted documents as required but that they failed to reach the Court because of shortcomings in its information processing systems. It agreed that Russia could not 'reasonably' have ²⁹ Pardo v. France (revision—admissibility), 10 July 1996, § 21, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-III; Gustafson v. Sweden (revision—merits), 30 July 1998, § 25, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-V; McGinley and Egan v. the United Kingdom (revision), nos 21825/93 and 23414/94, § 14, ECHR 2000-I; Cernescu and Manolache v. Romania (revision), no. 28607/04, § 7, 30 November 2010; Damir Sibgatullin v. Russia (revision), no. 1413/05, § 12, 28 May 2014.

³⁰ Bajrami v. Albania (revision), no. 35853/04, §§ 5–8, 18 December 2007.

³¹ Bolovan v. Romania (revision), no. 64541/01, §§ 6–11, 20 September 2011; Armando Grasso v. Italy (revision), no. 48411/99, §§ 4–8, 29 April 2003; Carolla v. Italy (revision), no. 51127/99, §§ 5–8, 28 November 2002; D'Amassa and Frezza v. Italy (revision), no. 44513/98, §§ 5–9, 9 January 2003; Erdogan and Firat v. Turkey (revision), nos. 15121/03 and 15127/03, §§ 5–10, 20 July 2010; Armando Grasso v. Italy (revision), no. 48411/99, §§ 5–8, 29 April 2003; Gülbahar Ozer and Others v. Turkey (revision), no. 44125/06, §§ 5–12, 10 June 2014.

³² C.B. v. Romania (revision), no. 21207/03, §§ 5–11, 19 July 2011.

³³ Baumann v. Austria (revision), no. 76809/01, §§ 10–14, 9 June 2005.

³⁴ Fonyódi v. Hungary (revision), no. 30799/04, § 8, 7 April 2009. Along similar lines, Naumoski v. the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (revision), no. 25248/05, §§ 5–11, 5 December 2013.

³⁵ Bortesi and Others v. Italy (revision), no. 71399/01, § 13, 8 December 2009. Note, however, the partially dissenting opinion of Judges Zagrebelsky and Sajó. See also Adamczuk v. Poland (revision), no. 30523/07, §§ 82–85, 15 June 2010.

known that the documents in question had not reached the Court within the required time limit.³⁶

Some revision cases have involved a failure by the applicant to disclose relevant documents to the Court. In a case concerning property rights, the applicant had not been entirely forthcoming, conduct that the Court described as 'improper'. But there had been nothing to prevent the respondent State making its own inquiries as the information in question was available to the public in the land registers, something it had failed to do. The Court rejected the application for revision.³⁷ In a similar case, it granted the request for revision after concluding that the State could not 'reasonably' have known of the fact that the applicant had failed to disclose, despite the fact that it was in the public domain.³⁸ In a case involving the applicant's failure to disclose relevant information, the Court granted the application for revision and declared the claim to be inadmissible because it was an abuse of the right of individual application, contrary to article 35(3)(a) of the Convention.³⁹ In a case against Turkey concerning access to property in occupied Cyprus, the Court had ruled in favour of the applicant but reserved a ruling on just satisfaction so that evidence about the value of the asset could be produced. Evidence emerged that the property had been transferred to the applicant's children prior to the filing of the claim. The Court revised the judgment and found it to be inadmissible.⁴⁰ In December 2014, Ireland filed an application for revision of the 1978 judgment of the Court concerning treatment of detainees in Northern Ireland⁴¹ based upon information that the United Kingdom had not disclosed at the time and that was unknown to the applicant State and the Court.⁴²

The Rules of Court require that the new fact 'could not reasonably have been known to that party'. The earlier version used the phrase 'was unknown both to the Court and to that Party or the Commission'.⁴³ The Court has held that '[t]he express mention of this objective element in Rule 80 § 1 accords, in the Court's view, with the meaning likely to have been given to the word "unknown" in Rule 58 of former Rules of Court A'.⁴⁴ The Court said that although the applicants may not have actually possessed certain documents at the time of the judgment, their existence 'could reasonably have been known', with the consequence that the request for revision was denied.⁴⁵

Rectification of errors in decisions and judgments

Errors in decisions and judgments that are clerical in nature or involve miscalculation, or are 'obvious mistakes', may be rectified by the Court of its own motion or at the request of a party. The application by a party for rectification must be made within one month of the ³⁶ Damir Sibgatullin v. Russia (revision), no. 1413/05, §§ 18–22, 28 May 2014.

³⁷ Bugajny and Others v. Poland (revision), no. 22531/05, §§ 24–27, 15 December 2009. Similarly: De Luca v. Italy (revision), no. 43870/04, §§ 16–20, 8 July 2014.

³⁸ Cernescu and Manolache v. Romania (revision), no. 28607/04, §§ 13–14, 30 November 2010.

³⁹ Gardean and S.C. Grup 95 SA v. Romania (revision), no. 25787/04, § 22, 30 April 2013.

⁴⁰ Nicola v. Turkey (revision), no. 18404/91, § 26, 26 October 2010.

⁴¹ Ireland v. the United Kingdom, 18 January 1978, Series A no. 25.

⁴² Henry McDonald, 'Ireland to Clash with UK at Human Rights Court over Hooded Men Judgment', The Guardian, 2 December 2014; Philip Leach, Ireland v. UK: Revisiting the Treatment of the 'Hooded Men', JURIST—Student Commentary, 6 December 2014.

⁴³ Rules of Court, (adopted 18 September 1959), Rule 54(1).

⁴⁴ McGinley and Egan v. the United Kingdom (revision), nos 21825/93 and 23414/94, § 17, ECHR 2000-I.

⁴⁵ Ibid., § 36.

delivery of a decision or a judgment.⁴⁶ It seems that the Court may rectify an error at any time.⁴⁷

Examples of rectification indicate the relatively anodyne nature of this procedure. The Court rectified the dispositif of judgment that said 'Holds by a majority', changing this to 'Holds by six votes to one'.⁴⁸ It has rectified the dispositif in order to add reference to an article that was violated.⁴⁹ The name of the applicant was changed by rectification from 'Doğan Sorguç' to 'Vehbi Doğan Sorguç'.⁵⁰ The name of a witness was modified from 'Ve.M.' to 'V.M.'.⁵¹ The initials 'D.Š.' were changed to 'the two officers in question'.⁵² Rectification has been used to add a separate or dissenting opinion to a judgment.⁵³

The distinction between rectification and revision is not always clear. In one case, the Court had not considered the applicant's full claim for costs. It granted the request in revision and revised the amount.⁵⁴ In similar cases, however, it has viewed such mistakes as requiring revision of the decision under Rule 80, as discussed earlier in this chapter.⁵⁵

Publication and dissemination

The Convention decrees that '[t]he final judgment shall be published'. The Rules of Court specify that this is the responsibility of the Registrar, and that it is to be done 'in an appropriate form'.⁵⁶ The Rules also declare that the Registrar is responsible 'for the publication of official reports of selected judgments and decisions and of any document which the President of the Court considers it useful to publish'.⁵⁷ Publication of judgments in the official reports of the Court, as set out in Rule 78 of the Rules of Court, is to be in both of the official languages.⁵⁸ Judgments are given in either English or in French unless the Court decides that they shall be given in both official languages.⁵⁹ They are signed by the President of the Chamber or the Committee and the Registrar, distributed to the parties and any third party, and transmitted to the Committee of Ministers.⁶⁰ Before electronic publication, provisions governing the dissemination of judgments may have been of greater significance than they are today. In practice, they are now instantly available on the website of the Court.

⁴⁶ Rules of Court, Rule 81.

⁴⁷ For example, K.H. and Others v. Slovakia, no. 32881/04, ECHR 2009 (extracts), which was rectified nearly two years after the judgment had become final.

⁴⁸ K.H. and Others v. Slovakia, no. 32881/04, dispositif, fn. 1, ECHR 2009 (extracts).

⁴⁹ Barišič v. Slovenia, no. 32600/05, §§ 48, 49, dispositif, fn. 2, 18 October 2012.

⁵⁰ Sorguç v. Turkey, no. 17089/03, § 1, 23 June 2009.

⁵¹ D.J. v. Croatia, no. 42418/10, §§ 16, 18, 21, 24, 30, 103, 24 July 2012.

⁵² Ibid., § 59.

⁵³ M.S. v. the United Kingdom, no. 24527/08, Declaration of Judge Kalaydjieva, fn. 1, 3 May 2012.

⁵⁴ Tsfayo v. the United Kingdom, no. 60860/00, §§ 9, 57–59, 14 November 2006.

⁵⁵ Baumann v. Austria (revision), no. 76809/01, §§ 12–14, 9 June 2005.

⁵⁶ Rules of Court, Rule 78.

⁵⁷ Ibid.

⁵⁸ Ibid., Rule 76(2).

⁵⁹ Ibid., Rule 76(1).

⁶⁰ Ibid., Rule 77.

Further reading

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 599–600.

Alastair Mowbray, 'No Violations but Interesting: A Study of the Strasbourg Court's Jurisprudence in Cases where no Breach of the Convention has been Found', (2008) 14 European Public Law 237.

Leo Zwaak, 'The Procedure before the European Court of Human Rights', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 241–4, 279–86.

Article 45. Reasons for judgments and decisions/Motivation des arrêts et décisions

1. Reasons shall be given for judgments as well as for decisions declaring applications admissible or inadmissible.

2. If a judgment does not represent, in whole or in part, the unanimous opinion of the judges, any judge shall be entitled to deliver a separate opinion.

1. Les arrêts, ainsi que les décisions déclarant des requêtes recevables ou irrecevables, sont motivés.

2. Si l'arrêt n'exprime pas en tout ou en partie l'opinion unanime des juges, tout juge a le droit d'y joindre l'exposé de son opinion séparée.

Introductory comments

The justification for a rule requiring that reasons be given for judgments and decisions can be found in the case law of the Convention organs themselves. In an early decision, the European Commission of Human Rights said that it 'accepts the view expressed by the applicants that Art. 6 requires reasons to be given by a court for its decision and considers that this applies to civil as well as criminal proceedings'.¹ The principle has often been reaffirmed by the Court, with the proviso that the requirement of a reasoned judgment 'cannot be understood as requiring a detailed answer to every argument'.² According to the Grand Chamber, reasoned decisions 'also serve the purpose of demonstrating to the parties that they have been heard, thereby contributing to a more willing acceptance of the decision on their part. In addition, they oblige judges to base their reasoning on objective arguments...'³ Many legal systems prohibit or discourage separate or dissenting opinions. However, in the practice of international tribunals they are very much the rule rather than the exception. Article 45 of the European Convention is clearly modelled on article 57 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice.

Drafting of the provision

The Draft Statute of the European Court of Human Rights proposed by the International Juridical Section of the European Movement included the following:

Art. 50.

- a) The judgment shall state the reasons on which it is based.
- b) It shall contain the names of the judges who have taken part in the decision.

¹ The Firestone Tyre and Rubber Co., Firestone Tyre and Rubber Co. Ltd and the International Synthetic Rubber Co. v. the United Kingdom, no. 5460/72, Commission decision of 2 April 1973, Collection 43, p. 99.

² Haxhia v. Albania, no. 29861/03, § 126, 8 October 2013; Taxquet v. Belgium, no. 926/05, § 40, 13 January 2009; Hiro Balani v. Spain, 9 December 1994, § 27, Series A no. 303-B; Van de Hurk v. the Netherlands, 19 April 1994, § 61, Series A no. 288; Helle v. Finland, 19 December 1997, § 55, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-VIII; Burg v. France (dec.), no. 34763/02, ECHR 2003-II.

³ Taxquet v. Belgium [GC], no. 926/05, § 91, ECHR 2010.

Art. 51.

If the judgment in whole or in part does not represent the unanimous opinion of the judges, any judge shall be entitled to deliver a separate opinion.⁴

The Consultative Assembly draft adopted in September 1949 did not contain detailed provisions on the operation of the Court. There was no provision governing the reasons for judgments.

The Greek delegate to the Committee of Experts that met in February and March 1950 proposed a text that is very similar to the final version: 'Reasons shall be given for the findings of the Court. If the findings do not express all or part of the opinion of the judges, any judge has the right to attach to it a statement of his individual opinion.'⁵ The provision was slightly reformulated by the Committee in the drafts it adopted in February and March. The word 'judgment' replaced 'findings' and 'separate opinion' replaced 'individual opinion'.⁶ The Committee of Experts text was left unchanged in the draft of the Conference of Senior Officials⁷ and of the Committee of Ministers when it met in August 1950.⁸

Article 51 of the 1950 text of the Convention read as follows:

1. Reasons shall be given for the judgment of the Court.
2. If the judgment does not represent in whole or in part the unanimous opinion of the judges, any judge shall be entitled to deliver a separate opinion.

As a consequence of Protocol No. 11, it was renumbered as article 45 and given the heading 'Reasons for judgment and decision'. The only significant modification is the additional phrase in article 45(1) requiring that reasons also be given for decisions declaring applications admissible or inadmissible. The Explanatory Report says that it is 'understood that reasons for decisions rejecting or accepting applications can be given in summary form'.⁹ In addition, the Report declares that article 45 'does not concern decisions taken by the panel of five judges of the Grand Chamber in accordance with Article 43'.¹⁰

Analysis and interpretation

Article 45 sets out a 'general rule' by which 'all judgments and most decisions of the Court must be reasoned, whether they relate to its jurisdiction, a question of procedure, the

⁴ Draft Statute of the European Court of Human Rights, INF/5/E/R, I TP 302–21, at p. 316.

⁵ Amendments to Article 21 and 28 of the Recommendation of the Consultative Assembly proposed by the Greek Expert, Doc. A 811, III TP 226–9, art. A.

⁶ Preliminary Draft Convention for the Maintenance and Further Realisation of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 15 February 1950, Doc. A 833, III TP 236–46, art. 37; Appendix to the Report of the Committee of Experts on Human Rights: Draft Convention of Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 16 March 1950, Doc. C/WP 1 (50) 15 appendix, CM/WP 1 (50) 14 revised, A 925, IV TP 50–79, at p. 74, art. 40 (44).

⁷ Draft Convention annexed to the Report, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19 annex, CM/WP 4 (50) rev., A 1452, IV TP 274–95, at p. 292, art. 51.

⁸ Draft Convention adopted by the Sub-Committee, Doc. CM 1 (50) 52, A 1884, V TP 76–99, at p. 94, art. 51.

⁹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 105.

¹⁰ Ibid.

merits of the case or the award of just satisfaction to the applicant'.¹¹ The Rules of Court provide detailed guidance on the content of the judgment:

Rule 74—Contents of the judgment

1. A judgment as referred to in Articles 28, 42 and 44 of the Convention shall contain
 - (a) the names of the President and the other judges constituting the Chamber or the Committee concerned, and the name of the Registrar or the Deputy Registrar;
 - (b) the dates on which it was adopted and delivered;
 - (c) a description of the parties;
 - (d) the names of the Agents, advocates or advisers of the parties;
 - (e) an account of the procedure followed;
 - (f) the facts of the case;
 - (g) a summary of the submissions of the parties;
 - (h) the reasons in point of law;
 - (i) the operative provisions;
 - (j) the decision, if any, in respect of costs;
 - (k) the number of judges constituting the majority;
 - (l) where appropriate, a statement as to which text is authentic.

This guidance is quite formalist, however, and the requirement in the Convention that the judgment be 'reasoned' is only amplified by the words 'the reasons in point of law'.

A distinction is made between decisions and judgments. The Rules of Court provide for voting on decisions, adding that in the event of a tie the President has a casting vote.¹² In the Chambers and the Grand Chamber, both decisions and judgments are taken by majority vote of the sitting judges.¹³ Abstentions are not allowed in final votes on the admissibility and merits of cases.¹⁴

Dissenting and concurring separate opinions are not at all uncommon. The Rules of Court expressly provide for this in the case of judgments, but not decisions.¹⁵ There are no dissenting opinions with respect to decisions on admissibility even if some of the members of the Chamber may be in profound disagreement with the result. To the extent that there is dissent in a decision on admissibility, this is acknowledged in the dispositif with the words 'Decides by a majority . . .'¹⁶ or 'Declares admissible, by a majority . . .'¹⁷

Pursuant to Protocol No. 2 to the Convention, reasons are also required for advisory opinions of the Court issued in accordance with article 47. In advisory opinions, judges are entitled to deliver separate opinions.¹⁸

¹¹ Ibid.

¹² Rules of Court, Rule 23(1).

¹³ Ibid., Rule 23(2).

¹⁴ Ibid., Rule 23(2).

¹⁵ Ibid., Rule 74.

¹⁶ See, e.g., Demopoulos and Others v. Turkey (dec.) [GC], nos 46113/99, 3843/02, 13751/02, 13466/03, 10200/04, 14163/04, 19993/04, and 21819/04, dispositif, ECHR 2010.

¹⁷ Sec and Others v. the United Kingdom (dec.) [GC], nos 65731/01 and 65900/01, dispositif, ECHR 2005-X.

¹⁸ Protocol No. 2 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, conferring upon the European Court of Human Rights competence to give advisory opinions, ETS 44, art. 3.

Further reading

- Fred J. Bruinsma, 'The Room at the Top: Separate Opinions in the Grand Chamber of the ECHR (1998–2006)', [2008] Ancilla Juris 32.
- Fred J. Bruinsma and Matthijs de Blois, 'Rules of Law from Westport to Wladiwostok: Separate Opinions in the European Court of Human Rights', (1997) 15 Netherlands Quarterly of Human Rights 175.
- Johan Callewaert, 'Article 51', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, p. 842.
- Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, p. 601.
- Florence Rivière, Les opinions séparées des juges à la Cour européenne des droits de l'homme, Brussels: Bruylant, 2004.
- Robin C.A. White and Iris Boussiakou, 'Separate Opinions in the European Court of Human Rights', (2009) 9 HRLR 37.
- Luzius Wildhaber, 'Opinion dissidentes et concordantes de juges individuels à la Cour européenne des droits de l'homme', in René-Jean Dupuy, ed., Droit et Justice. Mélanges en l'honneur de Nicolas Valicos, Paris: Pedone, 1991 pp. 529–35.

Article 46. Binding force and execution of judgments/Force obligatoire et exécution des arrêts

1. The High Contracting Parties undertake to abide by the final judgment of the Court in any case to which they are parties.
 2. The final judgment of the Court shall be transmitted to the Committee of Ministers, which shall supervise its execution.
 3. If the Committee of Ministers considers that the supervision of the execution of a final judgment is hindered by a problem of interpretation of the judgment, it may refer the matter to the Court for a ruling on the question of interpretation. A referral decision shall require a majority vote of two thirds of the representatives entitled to sit on the committee.
 4. If the Committee of Ministers considers that a High Contracting Party refuses to abide by a final judgment in a case to which it is a party, it may, after serving formal notice on that Party and by decision adopted by a majority vote of two thirds of the representatives entitled to sit on the committee, refer to the Court the question whether that Party has failed to fulfil its obligation under paragraph 1.
 5. If the Court finds a violation of paragraph 1, it shall refer the case to the Committee of Ministers for consideration of the measures to be taken. If the Court finds no violation of paragraph 1, it shall refer the case to the Committee of Ministers, which shall close its examination of the case.
1. Les Hautes Parties Contractantes s'engagent à se conformer aux arrêts définitifs de la Cour dans les litiges auxquels elles sont parties.
 2. L'arrêt définitif de la Cour est transmis au Comité des Ministres qui en surveille l'exécution.
 3. Lorsque le Comité des Ministres estime que la surveillance de l'exécution d'un arrêt définitif est entravée par une difficulté d'interprétation de cet arrêt, il peut saisir la Cour afin qu'elle se prononce sur cette question d'interprétation. La décision de saisir la Cour est prise par un vote à la majorité des deux tiers des représentants ayant le droit de siéger au Comité.
 4. Lorsque le Comité des Ministres estime qu'une Haute Partie contractante refuse de se conformer à un arrêt définitif dans un litige auquel elle est partie, il peut, après avoir mis en demeure cette partie et par décision prise par un vote à la majorité des deux tiers des représentants ayant le droit de siéger au Comité, saisir la Cour de la question du respect par cette Partie de son obligation au regard du paragraphe 1.
 5. Si la Cour constate une violation du paragraphe 1, elle renvoie l'affaire au Comité des Ministres afin qu'il examine les mesures à prendre. Si la Cour constate qu'il n'y a pas eu violation du paragraphe 1, elle renvoie l'affaire au Comité des Ministres, qui décide de clore son examen.

Introductory comments

Judgments of the European Court of Human Rights are not directly enforceable in a manner similar to that of judgments of domestic courts. That is not to say that execution of a judgment is not central to the scheme of the European Convention: it is 'an integral part of the Convention system'.¹ States Parties are required to abide by judgments, but the way in which they do so is left largely to their own discretion. Some judgments require legislative changes while others may require administrative changes in order to alter a policy that violates the Convention. The execution of a final judgment is supervised by the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe.

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 16.

Drafting of the provision

The Recommendations adopted by the International Council of the European Movement in February 1949 included the following:

10. In the event of failure to comply with a recommendation of the Commission or a judgment of the Court, the matter may be brought before the Council of Europe. The Council shall order the party to effect execution and, in case of persistent failure to execute, shall decide on such measures as are appropriate.²

In July 1949, the European Movement presented a draft convention to the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe containing the following provision: 'Article 14. In the event of failure to comply with a judgment of the Court the matter shall be brought before the Council of Europe, which shall take such action as it may consider appropriate.'³

Speaking in the Consultative Assembly, in August 1949, Winston Churchill referred to the establishment of a European Court 'before which cases of the violation of these rights in our own body of twelve nations might be brought to the judgment of the civilized world'. He explained that such a court 'would have no sanctions and would depend for the enforcement of their judgments on the individual decisions of the States'. However, Churchill said he had 'no doubt that the great body of public opinion in all these countries would press for action in accordance with the freely given decision'.⁴ Another member of the Assembly, Francesco Dominico of Italy, described a court with 'the power to declare the law' and with 'the acquisition of the necessary prestige to enable it to apply indirect sanction for the enforcement of judgments'.⁵ Henri Fayat of Belgium explained that 'the question of the means of enforcing [the proposed court's] judgments appears of only subsidiary importance. Are we not States by right of law? And can it be supposed that States existing by right of law will fail to yield to the authority of a European Court of Justice whose jurisdiction it has deliberately recognised and accepted?'⁶ William Norton of Ireland spoke of a court 'with the power and authority to compel, by moral pressure, the affiliated nations to respect the Convention to which they have subscribed'.⁷

The Legal Committee of the Consultative Assembly prepared a draft recommendation containing a text based on the draft of the European Movement: 'Article 27. In case of non-execution of a verdict of the Court, the latter shall appeal to the Council of Europe which shall take appropriate measures.'⁸ This was modified in the final version of the Report: 'Article 27. These findings [of the Court] shall be transmitted to the Council of

² Recommendations adopted at the meeting of the International Council of the European Movement held at Brussels in February 1949, INF/2/F, p. 3. This is reproduced in CDH (67) 5, at pp. 2-3, with the indication that the original English version no longer exists.

³ Convention for the Collective Protection of Individual Rights and Democratic Liberties by the States, Members of the Council of Europe, and for the establishment of a European Court of Human Rights to ensure observance of the Convention, Doc. INF/5/E/R, I TP 296-303, at p. 302.

⁴ Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 17 August 1949], I TP 32-5, at p. 35.

⁵ Eighth sitting [of the Consultative Assembly] held 19 August 1949, I TP 36-154, at p. 72.

⁶ Ibid., p. 90.

⁷ Ibid., p. 132.

⁸ Report presented by Mr P.H. Teitgen, 5 September 1949, Doc. A 290, I TP 192-213, at p. 212, art. 27.

Europe, if necessary, for action.⁹ In the plenary Assembly, Arthur Sundt of Norway proposed that the text be replaced with something more modest: 'The findings of the Court shall be transmitted to the Committee of Ministers.'¹⁰ Sundt said he had submitted the amendment 'because the proposal in the report is not in accordance with the decision of the Committee at the meeting on Tuesday night'.¹¹ The rapporteur of the Committee, Pierre-Henri Teitgen, accepted the amendment, and it was duly adopted by the Consultative Assembly.¹²

The Committee of Ministers delegated the examination of the draft convention that had been adopted by the Consultative Assembly to a Committee of Experts that met in February and March 1950. Amendments were proposed to the Consultative Assembly draft. Charles Chaumont of France moved that article 27 be preceded by the following text: 'Each member of the Council of Europe undertakes to abide by the decisions of the Court.'¹³ Article 17 was to be redrafted: 'The findings of the Court shall be transmitted to the Committee of Ministers, who, in conjunction with the Consultative Assembly, will ensure their execution.'¹⁴ Tomasso Perassi of Italy also put forward amendments:

Article F.

Each Contracting Party shall undertake to abide by the decision of the Court in any case to which it is a party.

...

Article H.

If one of the Parties does not abide by the findings of the Court, the other party to the dispute, or the Commission on Human Rights, can refer the matter to the Committee of Ministers which, if it considers it necessary to do so, may make recommendations to implement the Court's findings.¹⁵

A drafting committee composed of Chaumont, Perassi, and Torsten Salén of Sweden prepared the following:

Article 30—(new)

Each Contracting Party shall undertake to abide by the decision of the Court in any case to which it is a party.

...

Article 31 – (new)

The findings of the Court shall be transmitted to the Committee of Ministers which shall supervise its implementation.¹⁶

Very minor modifications were made to the text at the conclusion of the February 1950 session. The word 'High' was inserted before 'Contracting Party' in article 30 and 'findings' was changed to 'judgment' in article 31. The accompanying commentary

⁹ Report [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions], 5 September 1949, Doc. AS (1) 77, I TP 216–39.

¹⁰ Amendment presented by Mr Sundt, Doc. 1949, No. 103, II TP 10–11.

¹¹ Official Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 8 September 1949], II TP 14–274, at p. 220.

¹² Ibid., p. 222.

¹³ Amendments to Articles 20 and 27 of the Recommendation of the Consultative Assembly proposed by the French Expert, Doc. A 794, III TP 198–201.

¹⁴ Ibid.

¹⁵ Amendments to various articles of the Recommendation of the Consultative Assembly proposed by the Italian Expert, Doc. A 812, III TP 228–31.

¹⁶ Continuation and end of the proposals of the Drafting Sub-Committee concerning Section III, Doc. A 813, III TP 230–3.

explained that the provisions 'are concerned with the question of the Court's decisions. It is expressly stipulated here that it is for the Committee of Ministers to supervise their execution.'¹⁷ The provisions remained unchanged at the March session of the Committee.¹⁸

Small alterations were made to the first of the two provisions by the Committee of Ministers at its August 1950 session: 'The High Contracting Parties undertake to abide by the decision of the Court in any case to which they are parties.'¹⁹ No further changes were made to what became articles 53 and 54 of the Convention text adopted in November 1950:

Article 53

The High Contracting Parties undertake to abide by the decision of the Court in any case to which they are parties.

Article 54

The judgment of the Court shall be transmitted to the Committee of Ministers which shall supervise its execution.

Protocol No. 11 to the Convention reconfigured articles 53 and 54 of the Convention as article 46.

Article 46—Binding force and execution of judgments

1. The High Contracting Parties undertake to abide by the final judgment of the Court in any case to which they are parties.
2. The final judgment of the Court shall be transmitted to the Committee of Ministers, which shall supervise its execution.

In the first sentence, the word 'decision' was changed to 'final judgment'. In the second, the word 'final' was added before judgment. The title 'Binding force and execution of judgments' was given to the new provision. According to the Explanatory Report, 'no change of substance' was involved.²⁰

The current text of article 46 contains three new paragraphs that were introduced by Protocol No. 14. These were 'designed to improve and accelerate the execution process'. According to the Explanatory Report:

16. Execution of the Court's judgments is an integral part of the Convention system. The measures that follow are designed to improve and accelerate the execution process. The Court's authority and the system's credibility both depend to a large extent on the effectiveness of this process. Rapid and adequate execution has, of course, an effect on the influx of new cases: the more rapidly general measures are taken by States Parties to execute judgments which point to a structural problem, the fewer repetitive applications there will be. In this regard, it would be desirable for states, over and above their obligations under Article 46, paragraph 1, of the Convention, to give retroactive effect to such measures and remedies... In addition, it would be useful if the Court and, as regards the supervision of the execution of judgments, the Committee of Ministers, adopted a special procedure

¹⁷ Preliminary Draft Convention for the Maintenance and Further Realisation of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 15 February 1950, Doc. A 833, III TP 236-46, at p. 246.

¹⁸ Appendix to the Report of the Committee of Experts on Human Rights: Draft Convention of Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 16 March 1950, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 15 appendix, CM/WP 1 (50) 14 revised, A 925, IV TP 50-79, at p. 74, arts 42(46) and 43(47).

¹⁹ Draft Convention adopted by the Sub-Committee, Doc. CM 1 (50) 52, A 1884, V TP 76-99, at p. 94, arts 53 and 54.

²⁰ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 106.

so as to give priority treatment to judgments that identify a structural problem capable of generating a significant number of repetitive applications, with a view to securing speedy execution of the judgment. The most important Convention amendment in the context of execution of judgments of the Court involves empowering the Committee of Ministers to bring infringement proceedings in the Court against any state which refuses to comply with a judgment.

17. The measures referred to in the previous paragraph are also designed to increase the effectiveness of the Convention system as a whole. While the supervision of the execution of judgments generally functions satisfactorily, the process needs to be improved to maintain the system's effectiveness.²¹

The first change introduced by Protocol No. 14, in article 46(3), empowers the Committee of Ministers to ask the Court to interpret a final judgment for the purpose of facilitating the supervision of its execution. According to the Explanatory Report,

96. ... The Committee of Ministers' experience of supervising the execution of judgments shows that difficulties are sometimes encountered due to disagreement as to the interpretation of judgments. The Court's reply settles any argument concerning a judgment's exact meaning. The qualified majority vote required by the last sentence of paragraph 3 shows that the Committee of Ministers should use this possibility sparingly, to avoid over-burdening the Court.

97. The aim of the new paragraph 3 is to enable the Court to give an interpretation of a judgment, not to pronounce on the measures taken by a High Contracting Party to comply with that judgment. No time-limit has been set for making requests for interpretation, since a question of interpretation may arise at any time during the Committee of Ministers' examination of the execution of a judgment. The Court is free to decide on the manner and form in which it wishes to reply to the request. Normally, it would be for the formation of the Court which delivered the original judgment to rule on the question of interpretation. More detailed rules governing this new procedure may be included in the Rules of Court.²²

The second modification, resulting from the addition of paragraphs 4 and 5 of article 46, is to enable the Committee of Ministers to bring infringement proceedings in the Court:

98. Rapid and full execution of the Court's judgments is vital. It is even more important in cases concerning structural problems, so as to ensure that the Court is not swamped with repetitive applications. For this reason, ever since the Rome ministerial conference of 3 and 4 November 2000 (Resolution I), it has been considered essential to strengthen the means given in this context to the Committee of Ministers. The Parties to the Convention have a collective duty to preserve the Court's authority—and thus the Convention system's credibility and effectiveness—whenever the Committee of Ministers considers that one of the High Contracting Parties refuses, expressly or through its conduct, to comply with the Court's final judgment in a case to which it is party.

99. Paragraphs 4 and 5 of Article 46 accordingly empower the Committee of Ministers to bring infringement proceedings in the Court (which shall sit as a Grand Chamber—see new Article 31, paragraph b), having first served the state concerned with notice to comply. The Committee of Ministers' decision to do so requires a qualified majority of two thirds of the representatives entitled to sit on the Committee. This infringement procedure does not aim to reopen the question of violation, already decided in the Court's first judgment. Nor does it provide for payment of a financial penalty by a High Contracting Party found in violation of Article 46, paragraph 1. It is felt that the political pressure exerted by proceedings for non-compliance in the Grand Chamber and by ²¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, paras 16–17.

²² Ibid., paras 96–97.

the latter's judgment should suffice to secure execution of the Court's initial judgment by the state concerned.

100. The Committee of Ministers should bring infringement proceedings only in exceptional circumstances. None the less, it appeared necessary to give the Committee of Ministers, as the competent organ for supervising execution of the Court's judgments, a wider range of means of pressure to secure execution of judgments. Currently the ultimate measure available to the Committee of Ministers is recourse to Article 8 of the Council of Europe's Statute (suspension of voting rights in the Committee of Ministers, or even expulsion from the Organisation). This is an extreme measure, which would prove counter-productive in most cases; indeed the High Contracting Party which finds itself in the situation foreseen in paragraph 4 of Article 46 continues to need, far more than others, the discipline of the Council of Europe. The new Article 46 therefore adds further possibilities of bringing pressure to bear to the existing ones. The procedure's mere existence, and the threat of using it, should act as an effective new incentive to execute the Court's judgments. It is foreseen that the outcome of infringement proceedings would be expressed in a judgment of the Court.²³

Analysis and interpretation

'Binding force' is in the title of the provision, added by Protocol No. 11, but the words do not appear in the text itself. The notion of 'binding force' is closely related to that of res judicata,²⁴ although the first paragraph of article 46 suggests here that this is not what is really meant by the term 'binding'. The only other use of the term 'binding' in the law of the Convention is in article 5 of Protocol No. 16 where, according to the Explanatory Report, the meaning appears related to the res judicata principle.²⁵ Nor does 'binding' in the context of article 46 apply to the notion of judicial precedent. In principle, there is no rule of stare decisis at the European Court of Human Rights.

The Court has described findings of a violation in its judgments as being 'essentially declaratory'.²⁶ By article 46 of the Convention, States Parties have undertaken to abide by final judgments of the Court in cases to which they were parties, with execution being supervised by the Committee of Ministers.²⁷ The obligation set out in paragraph 1 of article 46 is a specific formulation of the general principle pacta sunt servanda.²⁸ It is codified in article 26 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties as well as in the third recital of its Preamble: 'Every treaty in force is binding upon the parties to it and must be performed by them in good faith.' The Convention regime for the observance of pacta sunt servanda is self-contained, a consequence of article 55. Otherwise, it would be possible for failure to observe a judgment of the Court to be raised in an application before a body like the International Court of Justice, to the extent that States Parties to the Convention have accepted its jurisdiction.

²³ Ibid., paras 98–100 (reference omitted).

²⁴ Rudolf Bernhardt, 'Article 59', in Andreas Zimmermann, Christian Tomuschat, and Karin Oellers-Frahm, eds, The Statute of the International Court of Justice, A Commentary, Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2006, pp. 1232–51.

²⁵ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 16, paras 25–27.

²⁶ Verein gegen Tierfabriken Schweiz (VgT) v. Switzerland (no. 2) [GC], no. 32772/02, § 61, ECHR 2009; Marckx v. Belgium, 13 June 1979, § 58, Series A no. 31; Lyons and Others v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 15227/03, ECHR 2003-IX; Křemář and Others v. the Czech Republic (dec.), no. 69190/01, 30 March 2004; Ocalan v. Turkey [GC], no. 46221/99, § 210, ECHR 2005-IV.

²⁷ Verein gegen Tierfabriken Schweiz (VgT) v. Switzerland (no. 2) [GC], no. 32772/02, § 61, ECHR 2009.

²⁸ Ibid., § 87.

In the inter-State case filed by Cyprus against Turkey relating to the 1974 invasion and its consequences, judgment was issued in 2001 finding violations of articles 2, 3, 5, 9, and 13 of the Convention and article 1 of Protocol No. 1 with respect to missing persons and their relatives and Greek Cypriots living in an enclave in the occupied northern part of the island.²⁹ When Turkey did not address the situation for many years, Cyprus applied to the Court to rule on just satisfaction in accordance with article 41 of the Convention, a matter that it had expressly reserved in the judgment on the merits ('Holds unanimously that the issue of the possible application of Article 41 of the Convention is not ready for decision and adjourns consideration thereof').³⁰ Turkey did nothing to implement and enforce the judgment. Several years later, Cyprus applied to the Court on the basis of article 41. In principle, this was only the continuation of the proceedings on the merits. But in reality, Turkey's failure to respect the judgment was the leitmotif of the judgment on just satisfaction. One judge went so far as to suggest that the extraordinary sum of €90 million awarded against Turkey as just satisfaction was a form of punishment because it 'deliberately failed year after year to comply with the Grand Chamber's judgment on the merits delivered a long time ago with regard to these specific violations'.³¹

In the just satisfaction proceedings, Cyprus asked the Court to apply article 46 and issue a 'declaratory judgment' as part of its ruling on just satisfaction. The Grand Chamber said this was unnecessary, 'since it is clear that the respondent Government is, in any event, formally bound by the relevant terms of the main judgment. . . It thus falls to the Committee of Ministers to ensure that this holding which is binding in accordance with the Convention, and which has not yet been complied with, is given full effect by the respondent Government'.³² Several judges distanced themselves from a controversial sentence in the judgment suggesting a role for the Court in enforcing the judgment. They said that it sought 'to extend the powers of the Court and runs counter to Article 46 § 2 of the Convention by encroaching on the powers of the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe, to which the Convention has entrusted the task of supervising execution of the Court's judgments'. In this respect, they said the Court was without jurisdiction, warning of the creation of 'an imbalance in the distribution of powers between the two institutions that was envisaged by the authors of the Convention'.³³

Freedom to determine means of discharging obligations

If the Court finds that there is a violation, the respondent State remains free to determine the means by which it will discharge the legal obligation that arises from the judgment, subject to the proviso that such means are compatible with the conclusions of the ²⁹ Cyprus v. Turkey [GC], no. 25781/94, dispositif, ECHR 2001-IV.

³⁰ Ibid.

³¹ Cyprus v. Turkey (just satisfaction) [GC], no. 25781/94, Concurring Opinion of Judge Pinto de Albuquerque, Joined by Judge Vučinić, § 19, 12 May 2014.

³² Cyprus v. Turkey (just satisfaction) [GC], no. 25781/94, § 63, 12 May 2014. But see Cyprus v. Turkey (just satisfaction) [GC], no. 25781/94, Concurring Opinion of Judge Pinto de Albuquerque, Joined by Judge Vučinić, §§ 20–23, 12 May 2014.

³³ Cyprus v. Turkey (just satisfaction) [GC], no. 25781/94, Partly Concurring Opinion of Judges Tulkens, Vajić, Raimondi, and Bianku, Joined by Judge Karakaş, §§ 6, 9.

Court.³⁴ The Committee of Ministers has described this as 'the discretion of the High Contracting Party concerned to choose the means necessary to comply with the judgment'.³⁵

In principle, the finding of a breach by the Court 'imposes on the respondent State a legal obligation to put an end to the breach and make reparation for its consequences in such a way as to restore as far as possible the situation existing before the breach'.³⁶ The State Party must not only pay to those concerned the sums that have been awarded but also take individual and general measures, where appropriate, in its domestic legal order 'to put an end to the violation found by the Court and to redress the effects, the aim being to put the applicant, as far as possible, in the position he would have been in had the requirements of the Convention not been disregarded'.³⁷ Despite the principle of freedom in determining the means of implementation of obligations, there are cases where the nature of the violation leaves no choice about the measures that must be taken.³⁸

Thus, 'a total or partial failure to execute a judgment of the Court can engage the State Party's international responsibility'.³⁹ The obligations in the Convention in this respect are a manifestation of principles of international law by which a State responsible for a wrongful act is required to make restitution. According to article 35 of the Draft Articles on State Responsibility, which is the authoritative statement on the issue:

A State responsible for an internationally wrongful act is under an obligation to make restitution, that is, to re-establish the situation which existed before the wrongful act was committed, provided and to the extent that restitution:

- (a) is not materially impossible;
- (b) does not involve a burden out of all proportion to the benefit deriving from restitution instead of compensation.⁴⁰

This is the principle of restitutio in integrum accompanied by its exceptions. The Parliamentary Assembly has insisted that the execution of a judgment should bring about restitutio in integrum to the extent that this is at all possible.⁴¹ Judgments of the Court have also insisted that 'the aim of individual measures should be to put the applicant, as far as possible, in the position he would have been in had the requirements of the Convention not been disregarded'.⁴²

The measures taken by the State in fulfilment of its obligation may be individual or general in nature. They must address the specific violation of which the applicant has been ³⁴ Andrejeva v. Latvia [GC], no. 55707/00, § 110, ECHR 2009; Scozzari and Giunta v. Italy [GC], nos 39221/98 and 41963/98, § 249, ECHR 2000-VIII; Verein gegen Tierfabriken Schweiz (VgT) v. Switzerland (no. 2) [GC], no. 32772/02, § 88, ECHR 2009.

³⁵ Committee of Ministers' Rules for the supervision of the execution of judgments and of the terms of friendly settlements, Rule 6(2)(b).

³⁶ Papamichalopoulos and Others v. Greece (Article 50), 31 October 1995, § 34, Series A no. 330-B.

³⁷ Verein gegen Tierfabriken Schweiz (VgT) v. Switzerland (no. 2) [GC], no. 32772/02, § 82, ECHR 2009; Scozzari and Giunta v. Italy [GC], nos 39221/98 and 41963/98, § 249, ECHR 2000-VIII; Assanidze v. Georgia [GC], no. 71503/01, § 198, ECHR 2004-II.

³⁸ Verein gegen Tierfabriken Schweiz (VgT) v. Switzerland (no. 2) [GC], no. 32772/02, § 88, ECHR 2009; Assanidze v. Georgia [GC], no. 71503/01, § 202, ECHR 2004-II.

³⁹ Verein gegen Tierfabriken Schweiz (VgT) v. Switzerland (no. 2) [GC], no. 32772/02, § 85, ECHR 2009.

⁴⁰ UN Doc. A/RES/56/83, annex, cited in Verein gegen Tierfabriken Schweiz (VgT) v. Switzerland (no. 2) [GC], no. 32772/02, § 86, ECHR 2009; Guiso-Gallisay v. Italy (just satisfaction) [GC], no. 58858/00, § 53, 22 December 2009.

⁴¹ Recommendation No. R (2000) 2 and Explanatory memorandum on Recommendation R (2000) 2.

⁴² Scoppola v. Italy (no. 2) [GC], no. 10249/03, § 150, 17 September 2009; Piersack v. Belgium (Article 50), 26 October 1984, § 12, Series A no. 85.

a victim, but they must also be taken 'in respect of other persons in the applicant's position, notably by solving the problems that have led to the Court's findings'.⁴³ Measures taken by a respondent State to remedy a violation may in certain circumstances raise a new issue that was undecided by the initial judgment.⁴⁴ This can lead to a new application. For example, a retrial by national courts that is intended to implement a judgment may give rise to a new breach of the Convention.⁴⁵

Although infrequent, there are cases where States Parties to the Convention have broken up, and where problems arise concerning the attribution of responsibility where the alleged violation took place prior to the breakup but where the claim is being made after.⁴⁶

Role of the Court

The Court 'may propose various options and leave the choice of measure and its implementation to the discretion of the State concerned'.⁴⁷ Where there is no real option in terms of the measures that may be adopted, the Court may decide to indicate only one measure.⁴⁸ Although the Court does not have jurisdiction to order the reopening of trial, in its judgment on proceedings involving a criminal conviction following proceedings that have entailed breaches of the requirements of Article 6 of the Convention it may indicate retrial or reopening of the case as 'in principle an appropriate way of redressing the violation'⁴⁹ or even 'the most appropriate remedy'.⁵⁰

Despite the principle of freedom of choice of means of execution of judgments, in 'certain special circumstances' the Court has 'found it useful' and suggested it may be of assistance to the respondent State for it to offer an indication of the types of measures that may be taken in order to remedy a situation that has resulted in a violation.⁵¹ This is notably the case where there is a systemic problem.⁵² The Court generally invokes article 46 when making such indications. It has done so in about 150 cases, ranging from 'quite general suggestions intended to guide the Government in the execution of the judgment

⁴³ Manushaqe Puto and Others v. Albania, nos 604/07, 43628/07, 46684/07, and 34770/09, § 102, 31 July 2012; Burdou v. Russia (no. 2), no. 33509/04, § 125, ECHR 2009.

⁴⁴ Mehemi v. France (no. 2), no. 53470/99, § 43, ECHR 2003-IV; Pailot v. France, 22 April 1998, § 57, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-II; Leterme v. France, 29 April 1998, § 70, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-III; Rando v. Italy, no. 38498/97, § 17, 15 February 2000.

⁴⁵ Verein gegen Tierfabriken Schweiz (VgT) v. Switzerland (no. 2) [GC], no. 32772/02, § 62, ECHR 2009; Hertel v. Switzerland (dec.), no. 3440/99, ECHR 2002-I; Mehemi v. France (no. 2), no. 53470/99, § 43, ECHR 2003-IV; Pailot v. France, 22 April 1998, § 57, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-II; Rando v. Italy, no. 38498/97, § 17, 15 February 2000.

⁴⁶ Bijelić v. Montenegro and Serbia, no. 11890/05, § 69, 28 April 2009.

⁴⁷ Ocalan v. Turkey, no. 46221/99, § 210 in fine, ECHR 2005-IV.

⁴⁸ Scoppola v. Italy (no. 2) [GC], no. 10249/03, § 148, 17 September 2009; Aleksanyan v. Russia, no. 46468/06, § 239, 22 December 2008; Abbasov v. Azerbaijan, no. 24271/05, § 37, 17 January 2008.

⁴⁹ Verein gegen Tierfabriken Schweiz (VgT) v. Switzerland (no. 2) [GC], no. 32772/02, § 86, ECHR 2009; Gençel v. Turkey, no. 53431/99, § 27, 23 October 2003; Claes and Others v. Belgium, nos 46825/99, 47132/99, 47502/99, 49010/99, 49104/99, 49195/99, and 49716/99, § 53, 2 June 2005.

⁵⁰ Scoppola v. Italy (no. 2) [GC], no. 10249/03, § 150, 17 September 2009.

⁵¹ Verein gegen Tierfabriken Schweiz (VgT) v. Switzerland (no. 2) [GC], no. 32772/02, § 88, ECHR 2009; Ocalan v. Turkey, no. 46221/99, § 210 in fine, ECHR 2005-IV; Broniowski v. Poland [GC], no. 31443/96, § 194, ECHR 2004-V; Popov v. Russia, no. 26853/04, § 263, 13 July 2006; Scoppola v. Italy (no. 2) [GC], no. 10249/03, § 148, 17 September 2009; Broniowski v. Poland [GC], no. 31443/96, § 194, ECHR 2004-V.

⁵² Ocalan v. Turkey, no. 46221/99, § 210 in fine, ECHR 2005-IV; Broniowski v. Poland [GC], no. 31443/96, § 194, ECHR 2004-V; Popov v. Russia, no. 26853/04, § 263, 13 July 2006.

to cases in which specific directives are included in the operative provisions of the judgment, thereby binding the respondent State'.⁵³ However, the Court does not always invoke article 46, and may simply draw the respondent's attention to arrangements made in other States Parties or to international practice.⁵⁴

In its judgment on an application concerning 'erased' persons in Slovenia, the Court noted that although there were only a few similar applications pending, a potential inflow of future cases was anticipated. The Court indicated, in accordance with Rule 61(3), that the State should set up 'within one year' a domestic compensation scheme.⁵⁵ In a case involving retrospective application where the Court found that retrospective application of the law to the detriment of the applicant meant he received a sentence of life imprisonment rather than one of thirty years, that '[h]aving regard to the particular circumstances of the case and the urgent need to put an end to the breach of Articles 6 and 7 of the Convention, the Court therefore considers that the respondent State is responsible for ensuring that the applicant's sentence of life imprisonment is replaced by a penalty consistent with the principles set out in the present judgment, which is a sentence not exceeding thirty years' imprisonment'.⁵⁶ In a case involving disappearances, the European Court concluded that the domestic tribunals should have required 'that an effective investigation into the matter should be held. Accountability for the fate of the missing men includes carrying out an investigation into the events and those responsible and offering the possibility of claiming redress to the victims and the relatives'.⁵⁷

The 'pilot-judgment procedure' provides the Court with a means of indicating measures to resolve 'a structural or system problem or other similar dysfunction' that is at the origin of a violation of the Convention.⁵⁸ The object of the procedure 'is to facilitate the speediest and most effective resolution of a dysfunction affecting the protection of the Convention right in question in the national legal order'. The aim 'is to induce the respondent State to resolve large numbers of individual cases arising from the same structural problem at the domestic level, thus implementing the principle of subsidiarity which underpins the Convention system'.⁵⁹

The pilot-judgment procedure may be initiated by one of the parties or by the Court acting on its own motion.⁶⁰ In a pilot judgment, the Court is to identify the nature of the problem and to indicate the type of remedial measures that the State Party is required to take.⁶¹ The Court may indicate the time frame for implementation of remedial measures, 'bearing in mind the nature of the measures required and the speed with which the problem which it has identified can be remedied at the domestic level'.⁶² If the parties in a ⁵³ Reply to Committee of Ministers request for comments on the CDDH Report on Execution, 9 May 2014, para. 12.

⁵⁴ Vinter and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], nos 66069/09, 130/10 and 3896/10, § 120, ECHR 2013 (extracts).

⁵⁵ Kurić and Others v. Slovenia [GC], no. 26828/06, §§ 414–415, ECHR 2012 (extracts).

⁵⁶ Scoppola v. Italy (no. 2) [GC], no. 10249/03, § 154, 17 September 2009.

⁵⁷ Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, Concurring Opinion of Judge Spielmann, Joined by Judges Ziemele and Kaladžjeva, § 3, ECHR 2009.

⁵⁸ Rules of Court, Rule 61(1).

⁵⁹ Manushage Puto and Others v. Albania, nos 604/07, 43628/07, 46684/07, and 34770/09, § 104, 31 July 2012; Maria Atanasiu and Others v. Romania, nos 30767/05 and 33800/06, § 212, 12 October 2010.

⁶⁰ Rules of Court, Rule 61(2)(b).

⁶¹ Ibid.

⁶² Ibid., Rule 61(4).

pilot case reach agreement on a friendly settlement, the agreement is taken as a declaration by the respondent State on the general measures to be taken and the redress to be offered to actual or potential applicants.⁶³

Supervision of execution by the Committee of Ministers

The travaux préparatoires of the Convention demonstrate the development of the idea of supervision of the enforcement of judgments of the Court by the Committee of Ministers. The initial vision in the Consultative Assembly had been a treaty with an essentially moral force, relying upon the political pressure of civil society within States Parties in order to enforce the judgments of the Court. It is set out in article 46(2) of the Convention According to the Court, '[s]uch a mechanism demonstrates the importance of effective implementation of judgments'.⁶⁴

The Committee of Ministers has adopted a set of Rules for the supervision of the execution of judgments and of the terms of friendly settlements. In the first place, respondent States are required to provide the Committee of Ministers with 'detailed, up-to-date information on developments in the process of executing judgments that are binding on them'.⁶⁵ The Committee of Ministers holds four regular meetings each year at which the execution of judgments is considered. The Committee concludes each case with the adoption of a final resolution. In some cases it will also adopt interim resolutions.

Ultimately, of course, the system still falls back upon the political pressure of civil society, combined with the disapproval and condemnation of the States Parties when there is a failure to implement the rulings of the Court. In recent years, the Committee of Ministers has condemned States Parties for their failure to comply. For example, five years after Bosnia and Herzegovina was required by the Grand Chamber to amend its constitution in order to allow all citizens to stand for election to the presidency,⁶⁶ the Committee of Ministers '[f]irmly call[ed] upon all authorities and political leaders of Bosnia and Herzegovina to ensure that the constitutional and legislative framework is immediately brought in line with the Convention requirements so that the elections in October 2014 are held without any discrimination against those citizens who are not affiliated with any of the "constituent peoples"'.⁶⁷ In the Varnava case,⁶⁸ concerning Greek Cypriots missing since the 1974 invasion, more than four years after the Grand Chamber judgment Turkey was '[e]xhort[ed] to pay, without further delay, the sums awarded in respect of just satisfaction in the Court's judgment of 18 September 2009, as well as the default interest due'.⁶⁹

⁶³ Ibid., Rule 61(7).

⁶⁴ Verein gegen Tierfabriken Schweiz (VgT) v. Switzerland (no. 2) [GC], no. 32772/02, § 84, ECHR 2009.

⁶⁵ Committee of Ministers' Rules for the supervision of the execution of judgments and of the terms of friendly settlements, Rule 6. See also Verein gegen Tierfabriken Schweiz (VgT) v. Switzerland (no. 2) [GC], no. 32772/02, § 87, ECHR 2009.

⁶⁶ Sejdić and Finci v. Bosnia and Herzegovina [GC], nos 27996/06 and 34836/06, ECHR 2009.

⁶⁷ Interim Resolution CM/ResDH(2013)259. See also Interim Resolution CM/ResDH(2012)233; Interim Resolution CM/ResDH(2011)291.

⁶⁸ Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, ECHR 2009.

⁶⁹ Interim Resolution CM/ResDH(2013)201.

Interpretation (art. 46(3))

The Committee of Ministers may seek a ruling of the Court if it considers that supervision of the execution of a final judgment is hindered by a problem of interpretation. This provision was introduced by Protocol No. 14. The request for interpretation is to be considered by the Grand Chamber, the Chamber or the Committee that rendered the initial judgment, failing which the President is to complete or compose a Chamber by drawing lots.⁷⁰ The decision on the question of interpretation is final. Like an admissibility decision, separate opinions of judges are not permitted.⁷¹ This provision has not yet been invoked by the Committee of Ministers. As several judges recently commented, for article 46(3) to be invoked, 'the Committee of Ministers must have taken the referral decision by a qualified majority of two thirds of the representatives entitled to sit on the committee'.⁷²

Failure to fulfil an obligation (art. 46(4) and (5))

If the Committee of Ministers considers that a State Party refuses to abide by a final judgment in a case to which it is party, it may refer the question of the failure to fulfil the obligation to the Court. The case is to be considered by the Grand Chamber.⁷³ If the Court concludes that there has been such a failure, it shall refer the case back to the Committee of Ministers 'for consideration of the measures to be taken'. Paragraphs 4 and 5 were introduced by Protocol No. 14.⁷⁴ They have not yet been invoked by the Committee of Ministers.

Further reading

Johan Callewaert, 'Article 53', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 847–56.

Valerio Colandrea, 'On the Power of the European Court of Human Rights to Order Specific Non-monetary Measures: Some Remarks in Light of the Assanidze, Broniowski and Sejdovic Cases', (2007) 7 HRLR 396.

P. Ducolombier, "Arrêts pilotes" et efficacité des nouveaux recours internes', in P. Dourneau-Josette and E. Lambert-Abdelgawad, eds, Quel filtrage des requêtes par la Cour européenne des droits de l'homme?, Strasbourg: Editions du Conseil de l'Europe, 2011, pp. 255–92.

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 602–10.

Markus Fyrnys, 'Expanding Competences of Judicial Lawmaking: The Pilot Judgment Procedure of the European Court of Human Rights', (2011) 12 German Law Journal 1231.

Lech Garlicki, 'Broniowski and After: On the Dual Nature of "Pilot Judgments"', in Lucius Castisch, Johan Callewaert, Roderick Liddell, Paul Mahoney, and Mark Villiger, eds, Liber Amicorum Luzius Wildhaber, Kehl, Germany: N.P. Engel, 2007, pp. 177–92.

Dominik Haider, The Pilot-Judgment Procedure of the European Court of Human Rights, The Hague: Martinus Nijhoff, 2013.

⁷⁰ Rules of Court, Rule 92.

⁷¹ Ibid., Rule 93.

⁷² Cyprus v. Turkey (just satisfaction) [GC], no. 25781/94, Partly Concurring Opinion of Judges Tulken, Vajić, Raimondi, and Bianku, Joined by Judge Karakaş, § 8, § 19, 12 May 2014.

⁷³ Rules of Court, Rule 96.

⁷⁴ See also Rules of Court, Rules 94–99.

- Philip Leach, Helen Hardman, Svetlana Stephenson, and Brad K. Blitz, Responding to Systemic Human Rights Violations: An Analysis of the 'Pilot Judgments' of the European Court of Human Rights and their Impact at National Level, Antwerp: Intersentia, 2010.
- Georg Ress, 'Article 54', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 857–69.
- Georg Ress, 'The Effect of Decisions and Judgments of the European Court of Human Rights in the Domestic Legal Order', (2004) 40 Texas International Law Journal 359.
- Frederik G.E. Sundberg, 'Control of Execution of Decisions Under the ECHR—Some Remarks on the Committee of Ministers' Control of the Proper Implementation of Decisions Finding Violations of the Convention', in Gudmundur Alfredsson, Jonas Grimheden, Bertram G. Ramcharan, and Alfred de Zayas, eds, International Human Rights Monitoring Mechanisms: Essays in Honour of Jakob Th. Möller, The Hague/Boston/London: Kluwer Law International, 2002, pp. 561–85.
- Vladimiro Zagrebelsky, 'Questions autour de Broniowski', in Lucius Caffisch, Johan Callewaert, Roderick Liddell, Paul Mahoney, and Mark Villiger, eds, Liber Amicorum Luzius Wildhaber, Kehl, Germany: N.P. Engel, 2007, pp. 521–6.
- Leo Zwaak, 'The Supervisory Task of the Committee of Ministers', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 291–321.

Article 47. Advisory opinions/Avis consultatifs

1. The Court may, at the request of the Committee of Ministers, give advisory opinions on legal questions concerning the interpretation of the Convention and the Protocols thereto.

2. Such opinions shall not deal with any question relating to the content or scope of the rights or freedoms defined in Section I of the Convention and the Protocols thereto, or with any other question which the Court or the Committee of Ministers might have to consider in consequence of any such proceedings as could be instituted in accordance with the Convention.

3. Decisions of the Committee of Ministers to request an advisory opinion of the Court shall require a majority vote of the representatives entitled to sit on the Committee.

1. La Cour peut, à la demande du Comité des Ministres, donner des avis consultatifs sur des questions juridiques concernant l'interprétation de la Convention et de ses protocoles.

2. Ces avis ne peuvent porter ni sur les questions ayant trait au contenu ou à l'étendue des droits et libertés définis au titre I de la Convention et dans les protocoles ni sur les autres questions dont la Cour ou le Comité des Ministres pourraient avoir à connaître par suite de l'introduction d'un recours prévu par la Convention.

3. La décision du Comité des Ministres de demander un avis à la Cour est prise par un vote à la majorité des représentants ayant le droit de siéger au Comité.

Introductory comments

Many international courts and tribunals have a jurisdiction to issue advisory opinions. The Permanent Court of International Justice was the first international tribunal with the express power to issue advisory opinions. Initially this resulted from article 14 of the Covenant of the League of Nations, but it was subsequently included in amendments to the Statute of the Court.¹ The Charter of the United Nations allows for the issuance of an advisory opinion by the International Court of Justice at the request of the General Assembly or the Security Council 'on any legal question'.² Under certain conditions, other United Nations organs and specialized agencies may seek advisory opinions 'on legal questions arising within the scope of their activities'.³ In one form or another, a comparable mechanism exists in many domestic legal orders, whereby a political body such as a legislative assembly may seek an opinion on a legal issue from a constitution court or similar body.

The other main international human rights court, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, also has jurisdiction to issue advisory opinions.⁴ In the course of its activities, it has issued several advisory opinions, many of them at the request of States Parties.⁵ Article 47 of the European Convention is quite clear that only the Committee of Ministers is entitled to seek an advisory opinion. In 2013, the Committee of Ministers adopted

¹ Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice, arts 65–68.

² Charter of the United Nations, art. 96(1).

³ Ibid., art. 96(2).

⁴ American Convention on Human Rights, (1978) 1144 UNTS 123, art. 64.

⁵ Ibid.

Protocol No. 16 in order to give the Court jurisdiction to issue advisory opinions at the request of national courts and tribunals.⁶

Drafting of the provision

The original 1950 version of the European Convention did not provide the authority for the Court to issue advisory opinions. This had initially been proposed by the International Juridical Section of the European Movement in its Draft Statute of the European Court of Human Rights whereby the European Commission of Human Rights would have the authority to request advisory opinions.⁷

In 1960, a resolution of the Consultative Assembly of the Council of Europe recommending that the competence of the Court be extended 'as regards the interpretation of the Convention on Human Rights' lies at the origin of article 47.⁸ Over the course of the next few years, the Committee of Experts on Human Rights prepared a draft Protocol for this purpose.⁹ During the drafting process, the European Commission of Human Rights proposed that it be allowed to request advisory opinions, but the suggestion was not adopted.¹⁰

The competence of the European Court to deliver advisory opinions was introduced by Protocol No. 2, which amended the text of the Convention.¹¹ Adopted in 1963, it entered into force in 1970. The operative provisions were as follows:

Article 1

1. The Court may, at the request of the Committee of Ministers, give advisory opinions on legal questions concerning the interpretation of the Convention and the Protocols thereto.
2. Such opinions shall not deal with any question relating to the content or scope of the rights or freedoms defined in Section 1 of the Convention and in the Protocols thereto, or with any other question which the Commission, the Court or the Committee of Ministers might have to consider in consequence of any such proceedings as could be instituted in accordance with the Convention.
3. Decisions of the Committee of Ministers to request an advisory opinion of the Court shall require a two-thirds majority vote of the representatives entitled to sit on the Committee.

Article 2

The Court shall decide whether a request for an advisory opinion submitted by the Committee of Ministers is within its consultative competence as defined in Article 1 of this Protocol.

Article 3

1. For the consideration of requests for an advisory opinion, the Court shall sit in plenary session.
2. Reasons shall be given for advisory opinions of the Court.
3. If the advisory opinion does not represent in whole or in part the unanimous opinion of the judges, any judge shall be entitled to deliver a separate opinion.
4. Advisory opinions of the Court shall be communicated to the Committee of Ministers.

⁶ See the chapters on Protocol No. 16 in this Commentary.

⁷ Draft Statute of the European Court of Human Rights, INF/5/E/R, I 77 302-21, at p. 318, art. 58.

⁸ Recommendation 232, Consultative Assembly, 22 January 1960.

⁹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 2, paras 2-6.

¹⁰ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 2, paras 5, 7. See the individual statement protesting the exclusion of the Commission by one of the members of the Committee of Experts: Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 2, para. 6.

¹¹ Protocol No. 2 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, conferring upon the European Court of Human Rights competence to give advisory opinions, ETS 44.

Article 4

The powers of the Court under Article 55 of the Convention shall extend to the drawing up of such rules and the determination of such procedure as the Court may think necessary for the purposes of this Protocol.

Articles 1 to 4 of Protocol No. 2 did not assume consecutive numbers within the Convention itself, although from the moment the Protocol entered into force they were deemed to be provisions of the Convention.¹²

Protocol No. 11 incorporated the provisions of Protocol No. 2 into the Convention itself. As amended, articles 47 to 49 are 'virtually identical' to articles 1, 2, 3(2), and 3(4) of Protocol No. 2.¹³ The word 'two-thirds' in article 1(3) of Protocol No. 2 was deleted in article 47(3), a consequence of a change made by Protocol No. 10 to article 32 of the Convention. Also, mention of the Commission was removed in article 47. The reference to the plenary Court in Article 3(1) of Protocol No. 2 was changed to the Grand Chamber. The headings of the three provisions were also added by Protocol No. 11.

Analysis and interpretation

The Committee of Ministers waited more than thirty years after the entry into force of the procedure before requesting an advisory opinion.¹⁴ Over the years there were complaints that Protocol No. 2 was for all practical purposes inert. At one point, the Committee of Experts suggested that if the scope of the consultative opinion jurisdiction was not expanded in order to make it more effective, the alternative might be to repeal Protocol No. 2 altogether.¹⁵ There were occasional attempts to invoke the procedure. In 1972, the Netherlands asked the Committee of Ministers to request an opinion concerning proposed legislation on military discipline. The Committee decided not to pursue this, given objections from some governments about whether this really fell within the scope of Protocol No. 2, given the exceptions it contained.¹⁶ In 1983, the Committee of Ministers also considered whether to request an opinion about the scope of its role under the Convention, although in the end it abandoned the idea.¹⁷

The first application for an advisory opinion was submitted by the Committee of Ministers on 9 January 2002. It was provoked by a Recommendation from the Parliamentary Assembly addressed to the Committee of Ministers to seek the Court's opinion on the relationship between the European Convention and the Convention on Human Rights adopted by the Commonwealth of Independent States.¹⁸ A second request concerned a conflict between Malta and the Parliamentary Assembly, when the former failed to submit the name of a woman on its list of candidates for election as a judge of the Court. The Committee of Ministers formulated the request after being asked to do so by

¹² Ibid., para. 1.

¹³ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 107.

¹⁴ Decision on the Competence of the Court to Give an Advisory Opinion [GC], §§ 1, 15, 21, ECHR 2004-VI.

¹⁵ Andrew Drzemczewski, 'Protocol No. 2, Article 1-4', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 1028-36, at p. 1031.

¹⁶ Documents of the Parliamentary Assembly, 1972-1973, Vol. 1, no. 3 117, pp. 13-14.

¹⁷ Andrew Drzemczewski, 'Protocol No. 2, Article 1-4', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 1028-36, at p. 1035.

¹⁸ Recommendation 1519 (2001).

the Maltese government.¹⁹ The third concerned whether a State could withdraw a list of candidates for judgeship that it had already submitted from the election process by the Parliamentary Assembly.²⁰ Like the first request, it was instigated by a Recommendation of the Parliamentary Assembly.²¹

In the case law, there is a hint that even when the request meets the criteria set out in article 47, the Court has a degree of discretion as whether or not to issue the advisory opinion. In the second request, after discussing the jurisdictional issues the Court said that it 'considers it appropriate to give a ruling on this question in the interests of the proper functioning of the Convention system, as there is a need to ensure that the situation which gave rise to the request for an opinion does not cause a blockage in the system'.²² The fact that article 47 begins with the words 'the Court may...' adds weight to the suggestion that the Court has the discretion not to provide an advisory opinion. The language is very similar to what appears in article 65(1) of the Statute of the International Court of Justice, the provision governing advisory opinions before that body.²³ Although the International Court of Justice has never refused a request for an advisory opinion, it has regularly noted that it is a 'permissive' or 'discretionary' function.²⁴

Neither Protocol No. 2 nor the amended provisions derived from it that were introduced to the Convention by Protocol No. 11 consider whether or not advisory opinions are 'binding'. At the International Court of Justice, where the Statute is also silent on the point, the case law supports the position that an advisory opinion is not binding. The rationale for this is that the advisory opinion originates with the General Assembly or the Security Council and not with a State; thus the binding or non-binding nature does not arise.²⁵

Article 5 of the new Protocol No. 16, not yet in force, states: 'Advisory opinions shall not be binding.' Protocol No. 16 concerns advisory opinions requested by the highest courts at the national level and not by the Committee of Ministers. Even when this provision is in force, following ten ratifications of the Protocol, it would not seem that it could apply to article 47 because Protocol No. 16 is an additional protocol and not an amending protocol. In practice this is of no significance to the extent that advisory opinions under article 47 are not binding in any case. The reason it may have been thought necessary to include the provision in Protocol No. 16 is precisely the same as the reason for interpreting article 47 in the manner explained above.

¹⁹ Advisory opinion on certain legal questions concerning the lists of candidates submitted with a view to the election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights [GC], §§ 8–14, 12 February 2008.

²⁰ Advisory opinion on certain legal questions concerning the lists of candidates submitted with a view to the election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights (no. 2) [GC], §§ 7–18, 22 January 2010.

²¹ Recommendation 1875 (2009).

²² Advisory opinion on certain legal questions concerning the lists of candidates submitted with a view to the election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights [GC], § 39, 12 February 2008.

²³ Jochen Abr. Frowein and Karin Oellers-Frahm, 'Article 65', in Andreas Zimmermann, Christiaan Tomuschat, and Karin Oellers-Frahm, eds, The Statute of the International Court of Justice, A Commentary, Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2006, pp. 1401–26, at paras 30–42.

²⁴ Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 1996, p. 226, § 14; Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 2004, p. 136, § 44.

²⁵ Interpretation of Peace Treaties, Advisory Opinion, [1950] I.C.J. Reports 65, p. 76.

Content of advisory opinion

The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 2 says that the term 'legal question' should be 'understood as having the same meaning as is given to this term in similar international conventions'.²⁶ The term is used in the provision on advisory opinions in the Statute of the International Court of Justice, as well as in article 96(2) of the Charter of the United Nations.²⁷ For the International Court of Justice, the expression refers to questions 'framed in terms of law and rais[ing] problems of international law... [that]. are by their very nature susceptible of a reply based on law... [and] appear... to be questions of a legal character'.²⁸ That a matter may also have political aspects is not sufficient to deny it status as a 'legal question' and thereby 'deprive the Court of a competence expressly conferred on it by its Statute'.²⁹ The existence of political motives for requesting an opinion and political implications that may result 'are of no relevance in the establishment of its jurisdiction to give such an opinion'.³⁰ Therefore, '[w]hatever its political aspects, the Court cannot refuse to admit the legal character of a question which invites it to discharge an essentially judicial task, namely, an assessment of the legality of the possible conduct of States with regard to the obligations imposed upon them by international law'.³¹

Accordingly, 'this rules out, on the one hand, questions which would go beyond the mere interpretation of the text and tend by additions, improvements or corrections to modify its substance; and, on the other hand, questions whose solution would in any way involve matters of policy'.³² Interpreting the provision, the Grand Chamber has turned to the travaux préparatoires of Protocol No. 2, from which article 47 originates. It has cited a report presented on behalf of the Legal Committee of the Consultative Assembly:

It is for consideration, consequently, whether the Court should not be given a general jurisdiction to interpret the Convention, which would therefore include matters arising out of the application of the Convention but not resulting from contentious proceedings brought under Article 48.

If the Court is given jurisdiction to give an authoritative interpretation on matters of this sort, it is important to keep it within proper limits. Its new competence should be limited to questions of a legal character. There are no doubt gaps in the Convention which will need to be filled; some of them require legal decisions and might well be left to the Court, but others are of a political character and we should put the Court in a false position if we asked it to take political decisions.

...

Within the limits thus laid down, there are a certain number of problems of interpretation of a legal character on which it would be useful to have an authoritative ruling. The following are just ²⁶ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 2, para. 6.

²⁷ Statute of the International Court of Justice, art. 65(1).

²⁸ Western Sahara, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 1975, p. 18, para. 15.

²⁹ Application for Review of Judgement No. 158 of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 1973, p. 172, para. 14; Application for Review of Judgement No. 158 of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 1973, p. 172, para. 14.

³⁰ Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 1996, p. 226 § 13.

³¹ Conditions of Admission of a State to Membership in the United Nations (Article 4 of the Charter), Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 1947-1948, pp. 61-2; Competence of the General Assembly for the Admission of a State to the United Nations, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 1950, pp. 6-7; Certain Expenses of the United Nations (Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter), Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 1962, p. 155.

³² Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 2, para. 6.

two examples of problems of a legal character about which the interpretation of the Convention is not clear:

1. Whether a simple majority or an absolute majority is required for the election of the judges under Article 39. . . .
2. The procedure by which the Committee of Ministers should discharge its obligations under Article 32 of the Convention. . . .³³

These examples, the Grand Chamber has noted, 'illustrate the type of questions which might fall within this general jurisdiction related mainly to procedural points concerning, among other subjects, the election of judges and the procedure followed by the Committee of Ministers in monitoring the execution of judgments'.³⁴

The Grand Chamber also referred to discussion in the Committee of Experts, where the utility of the term 'legal' was challenged because 'a question concerning the interpretation of a Convention should be considered as being of necessity a legal one. Conversely, it was said that the use of this term would underline the Committee's desire to exclude any questions whose terms or whose solution would involve matters of policy'.³⁵ It concluded that the restriction of its advisory opinion jurisdiction to 'legal questions' had been 'stressed' during the drafting of Protocol No. 2, when 'it was decided to maintain the adjective "legal" in order to rule out any jurisdiction on the Court's part regarding matters of policy'.³⁶

In the first request for an advisory opinion, the Grand Chamber considered whether a 'legal question' was involved. The Committee of Ministers had referred only in general terms to the coexistence of the European Convention and the Convention on Human Rights of the Commonwealth of Independent States, but the Court took into account the Recommendation of the Parliamentary Assembly that had led to the request. It was clear that the issue was not abstract but rather whether the Commission of the Commonwealth of Independent States could be considered 'another procedure of international investigation or settlement' within the meaning of Article 35(2)(b) of the Convention. The Grand Chamber said it was satisfied 'that the request for an advisory opinion concerns a legal question concerning the interpretation of the Convention'.³⁷ The second request concerned the rights and obligations of the Parliamentary Assembly in the election of judges pursuant to the provisions of article 22 of the Convention and in the Convention system in general. Thus, concluded the Court, 'whatever its implications, it is of a legal character and as such falls within the scope of the Court's jurisdiction under Article 47 § 1 of the Convention'.³⁸

³³ Doc. 1061 of 24 November 1959, cited in: Advisory opinion on certain legal questions concerning the lists of candidates submitted with a view to the election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights [GC], § 18, 12 February 2008.

³⁴ Advisory opinion on certain legal questions concerning the lists of candidates submitted with a view to the election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights [GC], § 37, 12 February 2008; Advisory opinion on certain legal questions concerning the lists of candidates submitted with a view to the election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights (no. 2) [GC], § 29, 22 January 2010.

³⁵ Advisory opinion on certain legal questions concerning the lists of candidates submitted with a view to the election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights [GC], § 19, 12 February 2008; Advisory opinion on certain legal questions concerning the lists of candidates submitted with a view to the election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights (no. 2) [GC], § 29, 22 January 2010.

³⁶ Advisory opinion on certain legal questions concerning the lists of candidates submitted with a view to the election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights [GC], § 36, 12 February 2008.

³⁷ Decision on the Competence of the Court to Give an Advisory Opinion [GC], § 24, ECHR 2004-VI.

³⁸ Advisory opinion on certain legal questions concerning the lists of candidates submitted with a view to the election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights [GC], § 38, 12 February 2008.

The second condition set out in paragraph 1 of article 47 is that the request for an advisory opinion directed to 'the interpretation of the Convention and the Protocols thereto'. In the second advisory request, one of the questions concerned whether two resolutions of the Parliamentary Assembly were in breach of its responsibilities under article 22 of the Convention concerning the examination of a list of candidates for judgeship. The Court said that '[i]n so far as this question ultimately concerns the effects of the two Parliamentary Assembly resolutions in question, the Court has doubts as to whether it relates solely to "the interpretation of the Convention and the Protocols thereto" within the meaning of Article 47 § 1'.³⁹ Under the circumstances, it did not find it necessary to answer this part of the request. The Court returned to the issue in the third advisory opinion where one of the questions it was asked was about the compatibility of resolutions of the Parliamentary Assembly with the European Convention. It said it could not exclude the possibility that it might, in certain circumstances 'be called upon to interpret one or more provisions of an instrument such as the one cited in this instance in order to clarify its answers to questions on which an advisory opinion has been sought from it'. But it said it could not 'express a view on the compatibility with the Convention of such provisions themselves' because this would not involve an advisory opinion about 'the interpretation of the Convention and the protocols thereto'.⁴⁰

Limitations (art. 47(2))

Paragraph 2 of article 47 imposes two limitations on the scope of a legal question that may be the object of an advisory opinion. According to the Court, 'the purpose of the provisions excluding its advisory jurisdiction is to avoid the potential situation in which the Court adopts in an advisory opinion a position which might prejudice its later examination of an application brought under Articles 33 or 34 of the Convention'.⁴¹ In this respect, the Court cited the travaux préparatoires of Protocol No. 2, where it was stated that it was necessary 'to ensure that the Court shall never be placed in the difficult position of being required, as the result of a request for its opinion, to make a direct or indirect pronouncement on a legal point with which it might subsequently have to deal as a main consideration in some case brought before it'.⁴²

In submissions to the Court respecting the first advisory opinion, some governments contended that the Court was not prevented from issuing an advisory opinion because the request was not related to a specific application pending before it. To that argument, the Grand Chamber noted the wording of article 47(2), speaking of 'such proceedings as could be instituted in accordance with the Convention', emphasizing the word 'could'. It said it was 'irrelevant that such an application has not and may never be lodged'. The Explanatory Report had spoken of proceedings that were 'past, present, future or merely hypothetical', the Court noted.⁴³ Consequently, the Grand Chamber considered 'that it suffices to exclude its advisory jurisdiction that the legal question submitted to it is one

³⁹ Ibid., § 40.

⁴⁰ Advisory opinion on certain legal questions concerning the lists of candidates submitted with a view to the election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights (no. 2) [GC], § 30, 22 January 2010.

⁴¹ Decision on the Competence of the Court to Give an Advisory Opinion [GC], § 28, ECHR 2004-VI.

⁴² CM(61)91.

⁴³ Decision on the Competence of the Court to Give an Advisory Opinion [GC], § 28, ECHR 2004-VI.

which it might be called upon to address in the future in the exercise of its primary judicial function, that is in the examination of the admissibility or merits of a concrete case'.⁴⁴

The first of the two restrictions or exclusions set out in paragraph 2 consists of 'any question relating to the content or scope of the rights or freedoms defined in Section 1 of the Convention and the Protocols thereto'. According to the Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 2, the object of this limitation 'is to prevent exercise of the consultative competence of the Court in questions which could come within the Court's primary function, namely, its judicial function'.⁴⁵ The Report said the reasons for this limitation were 'self-evident'.⁴⁶

The second limitation in article 47(2) concerns 'any other question which the Court or the Committee of Ministers might have to consider'. The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 2 noted the intent to 'exclude all questions of substance which, while they do not concern the content or scope of the rights and freedoms, involve obligations on the Contracting Parties'.⁴⁷ A detailed discussion of this provision was provided in the Explanatory Report:

In the first place the Committee intended to exclude all questions of substance which, while they do not concern the content or scope of the rights and freedoms, involve obligations on the Contracting Parties.

Thus, Article 25, paragraph 1 [now article 34 in fine] of the Convention in fine provides that Contracting Parties which have recognised the right of individual application undertake not to hinder in any way the effective exercise of this right.

Article 57 [now article 52] stipulates that Contracting Parties must furnish, on request from the Secretary General, an explanation of the manner in which their internal law ensures the effective implementation of any of the provisions of the Convention.

According to Article 24 [now article 33] of the Convention any Contracting Party may refer to the Commission "any alleged breach" of the provisions of the Convention by another Contracting Party. Owing to the general terms in which this provision is cast, it would be possible for the bodies provided for by the Convention to have to consider breaches of the Convention which do not necessarily result from a violation of the rights and freedoms defined in Section 1 of the Convention and the Protocols, namely, violations of Articles 25, paragraph 1 and 57.

The Committee also intended to rule out questions of competence or of procedure which might come before one of the bodies provided for by the Convention in consequence of the institution of proceedings.

Thus, for example, the consultative competence of the Court does not extend to questions regarding the conditions of admissibility of applications before the Commission, which are defined in Articles 26 and 27 of the Convention.

The Committee has employed the phrase in French 'par suite de l'introduction d'un recours' ('in consequence of . . . proceedings') rather than the phrase 'à l'occasion de l'introduction d'un recours' ('in the course of proceedings') because it considered that the latter phrase was too wide.

The questions which are excluded are those which the Commission, the Court or the Committee of Ministers might have to consider in consequence of the institution of proceedings provided for in the Convention whether such proceedings are past, present, future or merely hypothetical.

In its first advisory opinion, the Court considered as a preliminary matter whether the request from the Committee of Ministers about the coexistence of the European ⁴⁴ Ibid.

⁴⁵ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 2, para. 9.

⁴⁶ Ibid., para. 9.

⁴⁷ Ibid., para. 11.

Convention and the Convention on Human Rights of the Commonwealth of Independent States might fall under this exception. The submissions of the many States Parties that intervened in the proceedings were relatively divided on the point.⁴⁸ The Court noted that the notion of 'any other question' could only refer to questions that did not relate to the content or scope of the rights set out in the Convention and its Protocols because this was explicitly ruled out by the first exclusion defined in article 47(2).⁴⁹ The Court turned to the extensive discussion of the scope of the second exclusion in article 47(2) found in the Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 2, cited above, and notably to the statement that 'the consultative competence of the Court does not extend to questions regarding the conditions of admissibility'.⁵⁰ Yet the heart of the legal question that was asked by Committee of Ministers concerned a matter of admissibility, and the Court concluded that as a result it did not have jurisdiction to issue an advisory opinion.

Procedure

Technical requirements concerning the request for an advisory opinion are set out in further detail in the Rules of Court.⁵¹

As an exception to the general principle that intervention in proceedings is by application and remains at the discretion of the President, the Rules of Court require that the Registrar inform States Parties that they are entitled to submit written comments.⁵² There is no right, however, to an oral hearing. Holding an oral hearing is at the discretion of the President.⁵³ In the three advisory opinion requests that have come before the Court there has been no oral hearing.⁵⁴

Under Protocol No. 2, a request for an advisory opinion required a two-thirds majority vote of the representatives entitled to sit on the Committee of Ministers,⁵⁵ replicating the norm in article 32 of the original text of the Convention concerning the special majority required in the Committee of Ministers for adoption of a report of the Commission. Article 32 of the 1950 text of the Convention was amended by Protocol No. 10 so as to provide for a simple majority.⁵⁶ This was described by the Explanatory Report as a 'logical development of the Convention's system of control' intended to ensure that all three control organs would take decision by means of a simple majority.⁵⁷ Perhaps the rule in Protocol No. 2 had been forgotten. In any event, a few years later, with the adoption of Protocol No. 11, the two-thirds majority required for an advisory opinion was also amended.⁵⁸

⁴⁸ Decision on the Competence of the Court to Give an Advisory Opinion [GC], §§ 22–23, ECHR 2004-VI.

⁴⁹ Ibid., § 27.

⁵⁰ Ibid., § 28.

⁵¹ Rules of Court, Rules 82–86.

⁵² Ibid., Rule 84(2).

⁵³ Ibid., Rule 86.

⁵⁴ Decision on the Competence of the Court to Give an Advisory Opinion [GC], § 5, ECHR 2004-VI; Advisory opinion on certain legal questions concerning the lists of candidates submitted with a view to the election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights [GC], § 6, 12 February 2008; Advisory opinion on certain legal questions concerning the lists of candidates submitted with a view to the election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights (no. 2) [GC], § 5, 22 January 2010.

⁵⁵ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 2, para. 8.

⁵⁶ Protocol No. 10 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, ETS 146, art. 1.

⁵⁷ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 10, para. 6.

⁵⁸ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 107.

The advisory opinion is issued by the Grand Chamber in accordance with article 31(c) of the Convention. At the former Court, the responsibility for consideration of an advisory opinion lay with the plenary Court.⁵⁹ The Committee of Experts that drafted Protocol No. 2 had 'considered that the power conferred on the Court to give advisory opinions was such an important one that it ought to be exercised by the Court sitting in plenary session'.⁶⁰

Further reading

- Andrew Drzemczewski, 'Protocol No. 2, Article 1-4', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 1028-36.
- M.A. Eissen, 'La France et le Protocole no 2 à la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme', in Mélanges Balladore Pallieri, Vol. II, Milan: Università Cattolica, 1978, pp. 249-79.
- Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 611-12.
- A.H. Robertson, 'Advisory Opinions of the Court of Human Rights', in Marceau Long and François Monnier, eds, René Cassin Amicorum Discipulorumque Liber, I, Problèmes de protection internationale des droits de l'homme, Paris: Pedone, 1969, pp. 225-40.
- Leo Zwaak, 'The Procedure before the European Court of Human Rights', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 287-90.

⁵⁹ Protocol No. 2 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, conferring upon the European Court of Human Rights competence to give advisory opinions, ETS 44, art. 3(1); Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 81.

⁶⁰ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 2, para. 17.

Article 48. Advisory jurisdiction of the Court/Compétence consultative de la Cour

The Court shall decide whether a request for an advisory opinion submitted by the Committee of Ministers is within its competence as defined in Article 47.

La Cour décide si la demande d'avis consultatif présentée par le Comité des Ministres relève de sa compétence telle que définie par l'article 47.

Introductory comments

Article 47 is no more than a specific formulation of the very general principle that a Court may determine its own competence: kompetenz-kompetenz or la compétence de la compétence. Put otherwise, the Committee of Ministers is not entitled to an advisory opinion from the Court simply because it so requests. The Court must also have jurisdiction, and it has the authority to rule on this issue.

Drafting of the provision

The advisory opinion procedure was introduced into the Convention system by Protocol No. 2. Article 2 of Protocol No. 2 became article 48 of the European Convention as a consequence of Protocol No. 11. The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 2 indicates that article 2 was itself based upon article 49 of the 1950 text of the Convention: 'in the event of disputes as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the court'. Why it was felt necessary to repeat the same notion in the Protocol to the Convention is not explained.¹ According to the Explanatory Report to Protocol No. 2: 'Thus, the Court has both the right and the obligation to refuse a request for an advisory opinion which the Committee of Ministers has asked to give if it comes to the conclusion that the request made is not within the scope of the Court's power as defined in this Agreement.'²

Analysis and interpretation

In the first request for an advisory opinion, the Court considered 'in the light of Article 48 of the Convention, that it is required to examine, as a preliminary issue', whether it has jurisdiction to give an advisory opinion.³ The Grand Chamber sought the views of States Parties in its request for written comments:

Does the Court have jurisdiction to deal with the Committee of Ministers' request (Article 48 of the Convention and Rule 87)? In particular, does the request relate to a question which the Court might have to consider in consequence of any such proceedings which could be instituted before it in accordance with the Convention (Article 47 § 2 of the Convention), and more precisely, in the context of the examination of the admissibility of an individual application under Article 35 § 2 of the Convention?⁴

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 2, para. 12.

² Ibid. See Andrew Drzemczewski, 'Protocol No. 2, Article 1-4', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 1028-36, at pp. 1028-31.

³ Decision on the Competence of the Court to Give an Advisory Opinion [GC], § 21, ECHR 2004-VI.

Several governments replied that the Court did not in fact have competence to issue the advisory opinion requested by the Committee of Ministers,⁵ which dealt with whether the European Convention could coexist with the Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms of the Commonwealth of Independent States. The Grand Chamber concluded that 'the request for an advisory opinion relates to a question which the Court might have to consider in consequence of proceedings instituted in accordance with the Convention and that it therefore does not have competence to give an advisory opinion on the matter referred to it'.⁶

In the first advisory opinion on lists of candidates for election as judges of the Court, the Grand Chamber dealt with the issue of jurisdiction quite summarily and without any specific reference to article 48. It wrote:

Accordingly, whatever its implications, [the question] is of a legal character and as such falls within the scope of the Court's jurisdiction under Article 47 § 1 of the Convention. Furthermore, it does not appear—nor has any government claimed—that the opinion requested concerns one of the matters excluded from the Court's jurisdiction by the second paragraph of Article 47. Consequently, the Court has jurisdiction to answer the first question.⁷

The Grand Chamber expressed doubts about whether it had jurisdiction to answer the second question, but concluded that the matter was moot given the answer to the first question.⁸ In the second advisory opinion, the Court addressed the issue of jurisdiction in a distinct section of its judgment but, once again, did not refer explicitly to article 48.⁹

These decisions tend to confirm the totally superfluous role played by article 48 in the Convention. It merely echoes what is stated in article 32(2) of the Convention with respect to the powers of the Court in a more general sense.

Rule 87(2) of the Rules of Court states: 'If the Grand Chamber considers that the request is not within its competence as defined in Article 47 of the Convention, it shall so declare in a reasoned decision.'

Further reading

Andrew Drzemczewski, 'Protocol No. 2, Article 1-4', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 1028–36.

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, p. 614.

⁴ Ibid.

⁵ Ibid., § 22.

⁶ Ibid., § 35.

⁷ Advisory opinion on certain legal questions concerning the lists of candidates submitted with a view to the election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights [GC], § 38, 12 February 2008.

⁸ Ibid., § 40.

⁹ Advisory opinion on certain legal questions concerning the lists of candidates submitted with a view to the election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights (no. 2) [GC], §§ 29–34, 22 January 2010.

Article 48. Advisory jurisdiction of the Court/Compétence consultative de la Cour

The Court shall decide whether a request for an advisory opinion submitted by the Committee of Ministers is within its competence as defined in Article 47.

La Cour décide si la demande d'avis consultatif présentée par le Comité des Ministres relève de sa compétence telle que définie par l'article 47.

Introductory comments

Article 47 is no more than a specific formulation of the very general principle that a Court may determine its own competence: kompetenz-kompetenz or la compétence de la compétence. Put otherwise, the Committee of Ministers is not entitled to an advisory opinion from the Court simply because it so requests. The Court must also have jurisdiction, and it has the authority to rule on this issue.

Drafting of the provision

The advisory opinion procedure was introduced into the Convention system by Protocol No. 2. Article 2 of Protocol No. 2 became article 48 of the European Convention as a consequence of Protocol No. 11. The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 2 indicates that article 2 was itself based upon article 49 of the 1950 text of the Convention: 'in the event of disputes as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the court'. Why it was felt necessary to repeat the same notion in the Protocol to the Convention is not explained.¹ According to the Explanatory Report to Protocol No. 2: 'Thus, the Court has both the right and the obligation to refuse a request for an advisory opinion which the Committee of Ministers has asked to give if it comes to the conclusion that the request made is not within the scope of the Court's power as defined in this Agreement.'²

Analysis and interpretation

In the first request for an advisory opinion, the Court considered 'in the light of Article 48 of the Convention, that it is required to examine, as a preliminary issue', whether it has jurisdiction to give an advisory opinion.³ The Grand Chamber sought the views of States Parties in its request for written comments:

Does the Court have jurisdiction to deal with the Committee of Ministers' request (Article 48 of the Convention and Rule 87)? In particular, does the request relate to a question which the Court might have to consider in consequence of any such proceedings which could be instituted before it in accordance with the Convention (Article 47 § 2 of the Convention), and more precisely, in the context of the examination of the admissibility of an individual application under Article 35 § 2 of the Convention?⁴

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 2, para. 12.

² Ibid. See Andrew Drzemczewski, 'Protocol No. 2, Article 1-4', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 1028-36, at pp. 1028-31.

³ Decision on the Competence of the Court to Give an Advisory Opinion [GC], § 21, ECHR 2004-VI.

Several governments replied that the Court did not in fact have competence to issue the advisory opinion requested by the Committee of Ministers,⁵ which dealt with whether the European Convention could coexist with the Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms of the Commonwealth of Independent States. The Grand Chamber concluded that 'the request for an advisory opinion relates to a question which the Court might have to consider in consequence of proceedings instituted in accordance with the Convention and that it therefore does not have competence to give an advisory opinion on the matter referred to it'.⁶

In the first advisory opinion on lists of candidates for election as judges of the Court, the Grand Chamber dealt with the issue of jurisdiction quite summarily and without any specific reference to article 48. It wrote:

Accordingly, whatever its implications, [the question] is of a legal character and as such falls within the scope of the Court's jurisdiction under Article 47 § 1 of the Convention. Furthermore, it does not appear—nor has any government claimed—that the opinion requested concerns one of the matters excluded from the Court's jurisdiction by the second paragraph of Article 47. Consequently, the Court has jurisdiction to answer the first question.⁷

The Grand Chamber expressed doubts about whether it had jurisdiction to answer the second question, but concluded that the matter was moot given the answer to the first question.⁸ In the second advisory opinion, the Court addressed the issue of jurisdiction in a distinct section of its judgment but, once again, did not refer explicitly to article 48.⁹

These decisions tend to confirm the totally superfluous role played by article 48 in the Convention. It merely echoes what is stated in article 32(2) of the Convention with respect to the powers of the Court in a more general sense.

Rule 87(2) of the Rules of Court states: 'If the Grand Chamber considers that the request is not within its competence as defined in Article 47 of the Convention, it shall so declare in a reasoned decision.'

Further reading

Andrew Drzemczewski, 'Protocol No. 2, Article 1-4', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 1028–36.

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, p. 614.

⁴ Ibid.

⁵ Ibid., § 22.

⁶ Ibid., § 35.

⁷ Advisory opinion on certain legal questions concerning the lists of candidates submitted with a view to the election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights [GC], § 38, 12 February 2008.

⁸ Ibid., § 40.

⁹ Advisory opinion on certain legal questions concerning the lists of candidates submitted with a view to the election of judges to the European Court of Human Rights (no. 2) [GC], §§ 29–34, 22 January 2010.

- A.H. Robertson, 'Advisory Opinions of the Court of Human Rights', in Marceau Long and François Monnier, eds, René Cassin Amicorum Discipulorumque Liber, I, Problèmes de protection internationale des droits de l'homme, Paris: Pedone, 1969, pp. 225-40.
- Leo Zwaak, 'The Procedure before the European Court of Human Rights', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 287-90.

Article 49. Reasons for advisory opinions/Motivation des avis consultatifs

1. Reasons shall be given for advisory opinions of the Court.

2. If the advisory opinion does not represent, in whole or in part, the unanimous opinion of the judges, any judge shall be entitled to deliver a separate opinion.

3. Advisory opinions of the Court shall be communicated to the Committee of Ministers.

1. L'avis de la Cour est motivé.

2. Si l'avis n'exprime pas en tout ou en partie l'opinion unanime des juges, tout juge a le droit d'y joindre l'exposé de son opinion séparée.

3. L'avis de la Cour est transmis au Comité des Ministres.

Introductory comments

Article 49 is nothing more than a confirmation that the rules applicable to judgments of the Court, set out in articles 45 and 46(2) of the Convention, also apply to advisory opinions.

Drafting of the provision

The text of article 49 is drawn from Protocol No. 2 to the European Convention on Human Rights, which entered into force in 1970. Article 49 was introduced into the Convention by Protocol No. 11. Article 49 is identical to paragraphs 2–4 of article 3 of Protocol No. 2.

Analysis and interpretation

There have been no separate or dissenting opinions in the two advisory opinions issued by the Court. The Court has said that it has been its practice, when issuing advisory opinions, 'to endeavour to speak with one voice'.¹ At the International Court of Justice, when advisory opinions have been issued it is almost de rigueur for there to be separate and dissenting opinions. The International Court of Justice has never issued a unanimous advisory opinion. In one advisory opinion, every member of the Court issued a separate or dissenting opinion or made a declaration.²

¹ Opinion of the European Court of Human Rights on Draft Protocol No. 16 to the European Convention on Human Rights extending its competence to give advisory opinions on the interpretation of the Convention, 6 May 2013, para. 11.

² Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 1996, p. 226.

Further reading

Andrew Drzemczewski, 'Protocol No. 2, Article 1-4', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 1028-36.

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, p. 616.

A.H. Robertson, 'Advisory Opinions of the Court of Human Rights', in Marceau Long and François Monnier, eds, René Cassin Amicorum Discipulorumque Liber, I, Problèmes de protection internationale des droits de l'homme, Paris: Pedone, 1969, pp. 225-40.

Leo Zwaak, 'The Procedure before the European Court of Human Rights', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 287-90.

Article 50. Expenditure on the Court/Frais de fonctionnement de la Cour

The expenditure on the Court shall be borne by the Council of Europe.

Les frais de fonctionnement de la Cour sont à la charge du Conseil de l'Europe.

Introductory comments

Given that all Member States of the Council of Europe are also States Parties to the European Convention on Human Rights, and that it is impossible to join without ratifying the Convention, it may seem superfluous to specify that the Council of Europe is responsible for the costs of its human rights Court. But in 1949 and 1950, when a majority of Member States were initially opposed to the Court altogether, and only changed their views when acceptance of the jurisdiction of the Court required an optional declaration, the financial responsibility for the institution was a matter of debate. The Committee of Ministers might well have left the financing of the Court to the States that had accepted the Court's jurisdiction or, alternatively, those States that had ratified the Convention.

Drafting of the provision

The original draft Statute of the European Court of Human Rights proposed by the International Juridical Section of the European Movement included the following provision: 'The expenses of the Court shall be borne by the States parties to the Convention on Human Rights in such manner as they shall decide.'¹ The Consultative Assembly draft did not contain any such provision. The March 1950 draft adopted by the Committee of Experts included this text: 'The expenses of the Commission and the Court shall be borne by the Council of Europe.'² It did not undergo any subsequent amendment and was included in the final text of the Convention adopted in November 1950 as article 58.

Pursuant to Protocol No. 11, the provision was renumbered as article 50 and given the title 'Expenditure on the Court'.³ The Explanatory Report states: 'Article 50 follows closely the text of former Article 58 of the Convention. The "expenditure" on the new Court will include, in addition to items relating to staff and equipment, the salaries and social security contributions which will be paid to or for the judges in lieu of the allowances provided for in former Article 42 of the Convention.'⁴

¹ Draft Statute of the European Court of Human Rights, INF/5/E/R, I TP 302-21, at p. 312, art. 30.

² Appendix to the Report of the Committee of Experts on Human Rights: Draft Convention of Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 16 March 1950, Doc. C/WP 1 (50) 15 appendix, CM/WP 1 (50) 14 revised, A 925, IV TP 50-79, at p. 74, art. 44 (48). See also Proposed final provisions—Section V, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 5, A 906, III TP 302-3.

³ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(2).

⁴ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 50.

Analysis and interpretation

The European Court of Human Rights does not have a separate budget. It is funded by the Council of Europe, in accordance with article 50, where it comprises a distinct and important component of the overall budget of the Council. The budget of the Council of Europe is approved by the Committee of Ministers.

For the 2014–2015 biennium, the amount budgeted for the European Court of Human Rights was set at about €68 million.⁵ Of this sum, about €54 million is taken up in remuneration of the judges and members of the Court's personnel.

Further reading

Johan Callewaert, 'Article 58', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 893–4.
Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, p. 615.

⁵ Programme and Budget 2014–2015, CM(2014)1E, p. 21.

Article 51. Privileges and immunities of judges/Privilèges et immunités des juges

The judges shall be entitled, during the exercise of their functions, to the privileges and immunities provided for in Article 40 of the Statute of the Council of Europe and in the agreements made thereunder.

Les juges jouissent, pendant l'exercice de leurs fonctions, des privilèges et immunités prévus à l'article 40 du Statut du Conseil de l'Europe et dans les accords conclus au titre de cet article.

Introductory comments

The Statute of the International Court of Justice states that judges 'when engaged on the business of the Court, shall enjoy diplomatic privileges and immunities'. But the role of a judge is not at all that of a diplomat. The raison d'être for the protection of international judges is to ensure their independence and impartiality rather than to promote international comity, which is the usual justification for diplomatic immunity. Judicial immunity is a feature of most domestic legal systems. It ensures that a judge cannot be sued or prosecuted for acts committed in the exercise of the judicial function.

Drafting of the provision

The original draft Statute of the European Court of Human Rights proposed by the International Juridical Section of the European Movement included the following provision: 'The members of the Court, when engaged on the business of the Court, shall enjoy diplomatic privileges and immunities.'¹ The Consultative Assembly draft adopted in September 1949 did not contain detailed provisions on the operation of the Court. There was no provision governing immunities. The Greek delegate to the Committee of Experts that met in February and March 1950 made a proposal in this area but it was not adopted: 'In the exercise of their duties, members of the Court shall enjoy diplomatic privileges and immunities.'²

The Convention's provision on privileges and immunities of judges was only added to the draft by the Committee of Ministers at its August 1950 meeting: 'The members of the Commission and of the Court shall be entitled, during the discharge of their functions, to the privileges and immunities provided for in Article 40 of the Statute of the Council of Europe and in the agreements made thereunder.'³ This became article 59 of the 1950 text of the Convention.

The provision was slightly revised by Protocol No. 11 to take into account the disappearance of the Commission. Instead of '[t]he members of... the Court', the current text speaks of '[t]he judges'. It was renumbered as article 51 and given the heading 'Privileges and immunities of judges'.⁴

¹ Draft Statute of the European Court of Human Rights, INF/5/E/R, I TP 302-21, at p. 306, art. 18.

² Amendments to Article 21 and 28 of the Recommendation of the Consultative Assembly proposed by the Greek Expert, Doc. A 811, III TP 226-9, art. B.

³ Draft Convention adopted by the Sub-Committee, Doc. CM 1 (50) 52, A 1884, V TP 76-99, at p. 96.

Analysis and interpretation

According to the Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, the word 'agreements' refers to the Fourth Protocol to the General Agreement on Privileges and Immunities of the Council of Europe and any further treaties ratified by States Parties on related subjects.⁵ Following adoption of Protocol No. 11 and its signature by all Member States of the Council of Europe, the Committee of Ministers authorized the amendment and consolidation of the Fourth and Fifth Protocols to the General Agreement on Privileges and Immunities of the Council of Europe. The Sixth Protocol was adopted on 9 February 1996. It entered into force on 1 November 1998.⁶ Its application to judges of the Court is confirmed by Resolutions of the Committee of Ministers.⁷ The Preamble to the Protocol, which applies only to judges of the Court, makes reference to article 51 of the Convention as revised by Protocol No. 11. According to the Sixth Protocol, the immunities that protect judges are those of 'diplomatic envoys in accordance with international law'.⁸ They apply to judges of the Court, including ad hoc judges, and to their spouses and minor children.⁹ The Sixth Protocol also applies to the Registrar and the Deputy Registrar.¹⁰ Other officials of the Court benefit from the provisions of the General Agreement on Privileges and Immunities of the Council of Europe.¹¹

Article 51 confirms the immunity of judges because this is an important component of judicial independence. The Court itself has held that national legislation granting immunity to judges manifests 'a long-standing practice intended to ensure the proper administration of justice'.¹² The Sixth Protocol also highlights the rationale for judicial immunity: 'Privileges and immunities are accorded to judges not for the personal benefit of the individuals themselves but in order to safeguard the independent exercise of their functions'.¹³ Although it is a functional immunity that applies, according to article 51, 'during the exercise of their functions', it remains effective even after the judge's term is completed.¹⁴

⁴ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(2).

⁵ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 111.

⁶ Sixth Protocol to the General Agreement on Privileges and Immunities of the Council of Europe, ETS 162. See also Explanatory Report on the Sixth Protocol to the General Agreement on Privileges and Immunities of the Council of Europe.

⁷ Resolution CM/Res(2009)5 on the status and conditions of service of judges of the European Court of Human Rights and of the Commissioner for Human Rights, art. 2.

⁸ Sixth Protocol to the General Agreement on Privileges and Immunities of the Council of Europe, ETS 162, art. 1.

⁹ Ibid., art. 4.

¹⁰ Ibid., art. 5.

¹¹ General Agreement on Privileges and Immunities of the Council of Europe, ETS 2, art. 18.

¹² Ernst and Others v. Belgium, no. 33400/96, § 50, 15 July 2003.

¹³ Sixth Protocol to the General Agreement on Privileges and Immunities of the Council of Europe, ETS 162, arts. 1–2.

¹⁴ Zoernsch v. Waldoock, [1964] 1 WLR 675, [1964] 2 All ER 256.

In 2011, Romanian authorities searched the house of judge Corneliu Birisan as part of an investigation into corruption concerning the judge's spouse, a judge at the national level. On 19 October 2011, the President of the Court issued a statement of concern:

The immunities of the judges of the European Court of Human Rights are provided for in the Sixth Protocol to the General Agreement on Privileges and Immunities of the Council of Europe and Article 51 of the European Convention on Human Rights. Immunities extend also to their spouses and minor children.

Such immunities are an essential component of judicial independence under the rule of law and attach to judges of every international court. In the specific context of the European Convention on Human Rights they must operate so as to allow judges to carry out their duties in accordance with the independence and impartiality required of them by that instrument.

The Court is concerned that in carrying out a search in the home of the Romanian judge as part of an inquiry concerning allegations about his wife the rules on immunity may not have been respected. The Court has requested the Romanian Government to indicate whether they have grounds for asking the Court to waive the judge's immunity. Under the terms of Article 4 of the Sixth Protocol only the plenary Court is empowered to waive a judge's immunity.

At the present time no request for a waiver of the immunity has been presented to the Court.¹⁵

Shortly thereafter, Romania asked for a waiver of the judge's immunity. The plenary Court's authority to waive immunity under the Sixth Protocol is formulated as a duty as well as a right, to be exercised 'where, in its opinion, the immunity would impede the course of justice, and where it can be waived without prejudice to the purpose for which the immunity is accorded'.¹⁶ In a decision issued on 29 November 2011, the plenary Court agreed to waive immunity for the judge's spouse but not for himself, and only to the extent that this was 'strictly necessary for the investigation'. With respect to Judge Birisan, the plenary Court said it was 'not satisfied that the immunity would impede the course of justice or that the immunity could be waived without prejudice to the purpose for which it is accorded'. The waiver was without retroactive effect, thereby confirming that the initial search was contrary to Protocol No. 6.¹⁷

Further reading

Johan Callewaert, 'Article 59', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 895–6.
Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, p. 616.

¹⁵ Statement by the President of the European Court of Human Rights, ECHR 200 (2011), 19 October 2011.

¹⁶ Sixth Protocol to the General Agreement on Privileges and Immunities of the Council of Europe, ETS 162, art. 4.

¹⁷ Press release, ECHR 265 (2011), 29 November 2011.

The first part of the document discusses the importance of maintaining accurate records of all transactions. It emphasizes that every receipt and invoice should be properly filed and indexed for easy retrieval. This process is crucial for ensuring the integrity of the financial data and for facilitating audits.

In addition, the document outlines the necessary steps for reconciling bank statements with the company's internal records. This involves comparing the bank's records of deposits and withdrawals against the company's own ledger to identify any discrepancies. Any differences should be investigated immediately to prevent errors from going unnoticed.

Furthermore, the document highlights the need for regular reviews of the financial statements. Management should conduct monthly reviews to assess the company's financial health and to identify any trends or potential risks. This proactive approach allows for timely adjustments to the business strategy and helps in maintaining a strong financial position.

Finally, the document stresses the importance of transparency and communication. All financial information should be shared with the relevant stakeholders in a clear and concise manner. This includes providing regular reports to the board of directors and keeping employees informed about the company's financial performance.

The second part of the document provides a detailed overview of the company's current financial status. It includes a summary of the assets, liabilities, and equity as of the end of the reporting period. The total assets are reported to be $1,200,000, with total liabilities amounting to $800,000, resulting in a net equity of $400,000.

The document also includes a breakdown of the company's revenue and expenses for the period. Total revenue was $1,500,000, while total expenses were $1,100,000, resulting in a net profit of $400,000. This profit is consistent with the net equity reported in the balance sheet.

The document concludes with a statement of the company's future outlook. Management is optimistic about the company's growth prospects and is committed to maintaining high standards of financial reporting and transparency. The company plans to invest in new technologies and expand its market reach to further enhance its competitive advantage.

SECTION III
MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

Article 52. Inquiries by the Secretary General/Enquêtes du Secrétaire Général

On receipt of a request from the Secretary General of the Council of Europe any High Contracting Party shall furnish an explanation of the manner in which its internal law ensures the effective implementation of any of the provisions of the Convention.

Toute Haute Partie contractante fournira sur demande du Secrétaire Général du Conseil de l'Europe les explications requises sur la manière dont son droit interne assure l'application effective de toutes les dispositions de cette Convention.

Introductory comments

The role of the Secretary General of the Council of Europe within the European Convention on Human Rights is essentially confined to administrative functions. In particular, as depositary of the treaty itself, the Secretary General receives notifications of derogation, territorial application, denunciation, ratification, and legislation authorizing capital punishment in time of war. The Secretary General's responsibility as depositary, only implicit in the Convention itself, is spelled out in detail in the Protocols.

The position of Secretary General is established by article 38 of the Statute of the Council of Europe. The Secretary General is appointed by the Parliamentary Assembly upon the recommendation of the Committee of Ministers. The description of the responsibilities of the position in the Statute is quite vague, stating only that the Secretary General 'is responsible to the Committee of Ministers for the work of the Secretariat' and that he or she shall 'provide such secretariat and other assistance as the [Parliamentary] Assembly may require'. Although the Secretary General's powers are not clearly defined, in practice the office holder has overall responsibility for the strategic management of the Council of Europe's work programme and budget. The Secretary General also oversees the day-to-day running of the organization and Secretariat.

Article 52 is a rather exceptional provision and can in no way be considered to be implicit in the Secretary General's status as depositary of the Convention. Nothing comparable to this power exists with respect to the role of the Secretary General of the United Nations in the implementation of that body's human rights treaties.

Drafting of the provision

The text of article 52 originates from a proposal by the United Kingdom at the February 1950 session of the Committee of Experts: 'On receipt of a request to this effect from the Secretary General of the Council of Europe, made under the authority of the Resolution of the Consultative Assembly of the Council of Europe the Government of any party to this Convention shall supply an explanation as to the manner in which the law of that State gives effect to any of the provisions of this Convention.'¹ The text was identical in substance to one considered the previous year by the United Nations Commission on Human Rights for inclusion in the draft covenant.² The Commission had voted to postpone consideration of the text and, in the end, no such provision was included in either of the Covenants.

¹ Amendments to Articles 4 and 7 of the Recommendation of the Consultative Assembly proposed by the Expert of the United Kingdom, Doc. A 782, III TP 188-91.

The British proposal was accepted by the Committee of Experts but with the deletion of the reference to a resolution of the Consultative Assembly: 'On receipt of a request to that effect from the Secretary General of the Council of Europe the Government of any State Party to this Convention shall supply an explanation of the manner in which the law of that State gives effect to any of the provisions in this Convention.'³ The Committee's report said that the provision 'tends to strengthen the safeguards of the rights listed in the Convention'.⁴

The text was left unchanged and without comment by the Committee of Senior Officials, although it was moved to the final provisions of the Convention.⁵ It became article 57 in the final text adopted in November 1950.

The provision was renumbered as article 52 and the heading 'Inquiries by the Secretary General' was added according to the provisions of Protocol No. 11.⁶

Analysis and interpretation

The European Convention on Human Rights authorizes the Secretary General of the Council of Europe to request that a State Party furnish an explanation of the manner in which its internal law ensures the effective implementation of any of the provisions of the Convention. The language used—'furnish an explanation'—is rather imperative, an impression that is further enhanced by the title given to the provision as a result of the amendments contained in Protocol No. 11: 'Inquiries by the Secretary General.'

Although it has been compared to the reporting procedures provided for under various human rights treaties, including the European Social Charter, the 'unique characteristic feature is the fact that the Secretary General's power to request explanations under Article 52 is discretionary in nature'.⁷ The Secretary General is free to determine the nature of the

² Report of the Fifth Session of the Commission on Human Rights to the Economic and Social Council, UN Doc. E/1371, E/CN.4/350, pp. 28–9.

³ Appendix to the Report of the Committee of Experts on Human Rights: Draft Convention of Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 16 March 1950, Doc. C/WP 1 (50) 15 appendix, CM/WP 1 (50) 14 revised, A 925, IV TP 50–79, at p. 66, art. 12(16). See also New articles, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 9, A 910, III TP 306–9; Preliminary Draft Convention, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 14, A 932, III TP 312–35, at p. 324–6, art. 16(12).

⁴ Report to the Committee of Ministers submitted by the Committee of Experts Instructed to Draw Up a Draft Convention of Collective Guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Doc. CM/WP 1 (5) 15, A 924, IV TP 2–55, at p. 34.

⁵ Text of the report submitted by the Conference [of Senior Officials] to the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19, CM/WP 4 (50) 16 rev., A 1431, IV TP 242–73, at p. 262. Also New draft alternatives B and B/2, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 9, A 1372, IV TP 182–91, at p. 190; Draft Convention annexed to the Report, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19 annex, CM/WP 4 (50) rev., A 1452, IV TP 274–95, at p. 292, art. 56; Text of the report submitted by the Conference to the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19, CM/WP 4 (50) 16 rev., A 1431, IV TP 242–73, at p. 270.

⁶ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(2).

⁷ Consolidated Report containing an Analysis of the Correspondence between the Secretary General of the Council of Europe and the Russian Federation under Article 52 of the European Convention on Human request and the States to whom it is directed. Moreover, nothing in article 52 prevents the Secretary General from addressing the request to a single State Party.⁸

The procedure has only rarely been invoked. On nine occasions, the Secretary General directed a request on the basis of article 52. All but two of the requests have been directed to all States Parties to the Convention: on the manner in which their internal law ensures the effective implementation of any of the provisions of this Convention, 9 October 1964; on the application of the Convention and its first Protocol, 10 September 1965; on the right to compensation (art. 5(5)), 23 July 1970; on articles 8, 9, 10, and 11, 9 April 1975; on the implementation of the Convention in respect of children and young persons placed in care, 25 March 1983; on fair trial proceedings, 7 July 1988; and on secret detention sites in Europe related to CIA activities, 21 November 2005. On 13 December 1999, a request was directed to Russia concerning implementation of the Convention in Chechnya. On 4 February 2002, a request was directed to Moldova concerning implementation of the Convention on its territory.

When article 52 was first invoked by the Secretary General, in 1964, he made a statement about its scope. The Secretary General explained that the purpose of article 52 was to strengthen the protection of the rights provided for by the Convention and that, in the minds of the drafters it 'was apparently of particular importance'. He noted that the wording of the provision had been taken from the draft human rights Covenant then under discussion within the United Nations Commission on Human Rights. According to the United Nations draft, the Secretary General of the United Nations had a 'right of interrogation' but only on the basis of a resolution of the General Assembly. The requirement of such authorization was not retained in the European Convention. The Secretary General said the wording of article 52 was 'absolutely clear and unequivocal', noting that as a corollary the States Parties are under an obligation to provide the explanation requested. He said that when invoking article 52, the Secretary General would be 'acting on his own responsibility and at his own discretion, in virtue of powers conferred upon him by the Convention independently of any powers he may have in virtue of the Statute of the Council of Europe'. This power of the Secretary General 'is not subject to control or instruction'. He said that while it may have been wise not to use the power in the early years of the Convention, 'the time is now ripe for a modest beginning to be made in developing the procedure'.⁹

Decades later, the Secretary General described the obligations placed upon States Parties when they receive a request under article 52:

The State has the obligation to provide truthful explanations. It appears clearly from the wording of Article 52 that this obligation is unconditional. The scope of the obligation is defined by Article 52 itself. The State must furnish the requested explanations about 'the manner in which its internal law ensures the effective implementation of any of the provisions of this Convention'. The State has an obligation of result to provide explanations about the effective implementation of the Convention in its internal law: the State cannot, therefore, confine itself to providing explanations of a formal nature. On the contrary, bearing in mind also the obligation to execute treaty obligations in good faith (Article 26 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties of 23 May 1969), a State has the obligation to furnish precise and adequate explanations which make it possible to verify whether the Convention is actually implemented in its internal law. This necessarily implies that the State must furnish information of a sufficiently detailed nature about the national law and the practice of the national authorities, in particular the judicial authorities, and about their conformity with the Convention as interpreted in the case-law of the European Court of Human Rights (hereinafter 'the Court'). The case-law has given a concrete expression to the rights and freedoms laid down in the Convention and has specified the conditions for an effective application of the rights guaranteed by the Convention: as the European Court of Human Rights has stated: 'The Convention is intended to guarantee not rights that are theoretical or illusory but rights that are practical and effective' (Airey judgment of 9 October 1979, Series A, No. 32, paragraph 24).¹⁰

Rights, Prepared by Mr Tamas Bán, Mr Frédéric Sudre, and Mr Pieter Van Dijk, SG/Inf(2000)24, 26 June 2000, para. 4.

⁸ Ibid.

⁹ Statement by the Secretary General on Article 57 of the European Human Rights Convention, (1964) 7 YB 38-43.

The Secretary General considers that '[i]t goes without saying that under Article 52 States Parties are also bound to provide the explanations requested by the time-limit indicated in the request, provided that the time given is not unreasonably short in relation to the scope of the explanations sought'.¹¹

With respect to the request directed at Russia concerning application of the Convention in Chechnya, three independent experts concluded 'that replies given were not adequate and that the Russian Federation has failed in its legal obligations as a Contracting State under Article 52 of the Convention'.¹² The most recent of the requests, relating to allegations of secret detention sites operated by the CIA in European States, have been discussed in judgments of the Court. Poland replied on 10 March 2006 indicating that 'findings of the Polish Government's internal enquiry into the alleged existence in Poland of secret detention centres and related over flights fully deny the allegations in the debate'.¹³ The Court concluded that 'Poland knew of the nature and purposes of the CIA's activities on its territory at the material time and that, by enabling the CIA to use its airspace and the airport, by its complicity in disguising the movements of rendition aircraft and by its provision of logistics and services, including the special security arrangements, the special procedure for landings, the transportation of the CIA teams with detainees on land, and the securing of the Stare Kiejkuty base for the CIA's secret detention, Poland cooperated in the preparation and execution of the CIA rendition, secret detention and interrogation operations on its territory'.¹⁴ Macedonia answered the request of the Secretary General with specific information about the case of Khaled El-Masri, indicating that he had been allowed to enter the country on 31 December 2003 and that he 'left the Republic of Macedonia on 23 January 2004 at the Blace border

¹⁰ Report by the Secretary General on the Use of his Powers under Article 52 of the European Convention on Human Rights, in the light of reports suggesting that individuals, notably persons suspected of involvement in acts of terrorism, may have been arrested and detained, or transported while deprived of their liberty, by or at the instigation of foreign agencies, with the active or passive co-operation of States Parties to the Convention or by States Parties themselves at their own initiative, without such deprivation of liberty having been acknowledged, SG/Inf (2006) 5, 28 February 2006, para. 12.

¹¹ Ibid., para. 13.

¹² Consolidated Report containing an Analysis of the Correspondence between the Secretary General of the Council of Europe and the Russian Federation under Article 52 of the European Convention on Human Rights, Prepared by Mr Tamas Bán, Mr Frédéric Sudre, and Mr Pieter Van Dijk, SG/Inf(2000)24 26 June 2000, para. 32.

¹³ Al Nashiri v. Poland, no. 28761/11, § 242, 24 July 2014; Husayn (Abu Zubaydah) v. Poland, no. 7511/13, § 236, 24 July 2014.

¹⁴ Al Nashiri v. Poland, no. 28761/11, § 442, 24 July 2014; Husayn (Abu Zubaydah) v. Poland, no. 7511/13, § 444, 24 July 2014.

crossing to the State Union of Serbia and Montenegro (on the Kosovo section).¹⁵ In judgment of the Court, both submissions were rejected as being untrue. The Grand Chamber accepted the applicant's version that he had been 'subjected to extraordinary rendition by CIA agents assisted, to a large extent, by agents of the respondent State' and that he did not leave Macedonia voluntarily, as the report to the Secretary General had claimed.¹⁶

Further reading

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 617–18.

Monica Hakimi, 'The Council of Europe Addresses CIA Rendition and Detention Program', (2007) 101 AJIL 442.

Paul Mahoney, 'Does Article 57 of the European Convention on Human Rights Serve Any Useful Purpose?', in F. Matscher and H. Petzold, eds, Protecting Human Rights: The European Dimension, Cologne: Carl Heymanns, 1988, pp. 373–93.

Jeroen Schokkenbroek, 'The Supervisory Function of the Secretary General of the Council of Europe', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 323–32.

¹⁵ El Masri v. 'the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia' [GC], no. 39630/09, § 39, ECHR 2012.

¹⁶ Ibid., §§ 149, 167.

Article 53. Safeguard for existing human rights/Sauvegarde des droits de l'homme reconnus

Nothing in this Convention shall be construed as limiting or derogating from any of the human rights and fundamental freedoms which may be ensured under the laws of any High Contracting Party or under any other agreement to which it is a Party.

Aucune des dispositions de la présente Convention ne sera interprétée comme limitant ou portant atteinte aux droits de l'homme et aux libertés fondamentales qui pourraient être reconnus conformément aux lois de toute Partie contractante ou à toute autre Convention à laquelle cette Partie contractante est partie.

Introductory comments

The title 'Safeguard for existing human rights', which was only added to article 53 in the 1990s as a result of Protocol No. 11 and did not appear in the original 1950 version of the Convention, suggests that this is a kind of 'savings clause' intended to protect pre-existing human rights. The French title is probably closer to the real meaning of article 53, making clear that the Convention cannot be interpreted so as to limit or derogate from rights recognized by other sources in national or international law. The text was based on a British proposal in the United Nations Commission on Human Rights¹ that, as modified, became article 5(2) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. According to article 5(2) of the Covenant: 'There shall be no restriction upon or derogation from any of the fundamental human rights recognised or existing in any State Party to the present Covenant pursuant to law, conventions, regulations or custom on the pretext that the present Covenant does not recognize such rights or that it recognizes them to a lesser extent.'

Similar provisions are also present in other international treaties. For example, article 1 of the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment states: 'This article is without prejudice to any international instrument or national legislation which does or may contain provisions of wider application.' According to article 23 of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women: 'Nothing in the present Convention shall affect any provisions that are more conducive to the achievement of equality between men and women which may be contained: (a) In the legislation of a State Party; or (b) In any other international convention, treaty or agreement in force for that State.'

Drafting of the provision

Article 53 originated in an Italian proposal to the February 1950 session of the Committee of Experts: 'This Convention shall in no way affect the rights and obligations arising from the conventions in force between the High Contracting Parties.² At the March session, the United Kingdom adopted the concept, submitting an amended version: 'Nothing in this Convention shall be construed as limiting or derogating from any of the rights and freedoms which may be guaranteed under the laws of any State party to the Convention or under any other agreement to which it is a party.'³ It was incorporated in the draft adopted by the Committee of Experts.⁴ The commentary noted that it reproduced the United Kingdom proposal and that '[t]he experts unanimously considered that the precisions given by this Article were necessary'.⁵ As drafted by the Committee of Experts, it became article 60 of the text adopted in November 1950.

¹ UN Doc. E/CN.4/317: 'Nothing in this Covenant may be construed as limiting or derogating from any of the rights and freedoms which may be guaranteed to all under the law of any contracting State or any conventions to which it is a party.'

The provision was renumbered as article 53 and the heading 'Safeguard for existing human rights' added by Protocol No. 11.⁶

Analysis and interpretation

By virtue of article 53, the Convention cannot be interpreted so as to prejudice the protection of human rights enshrined in the national law of a State Party or as a result of agreements to which it is a party. In one of the very rare references to the provision, Judge Wojtyczek wrote:

The Convention clearly envisages in this provision a situation in which different instruments may provide a higher level of protection than the Convention itself. Such a situation cannot be seen as an example of fragmentation, let alone of incoherence, of international law. The nature of the Convention as a minimum standard for a limited catalogue of rights limits the risk of contradictions with other treaties. A situation in which other treaties guarantee broader rights or offer a higher standard of protection of the same rights cannot be seen as a conflict of treaties. Nor does it change per se the scope of the rights protected under the Convention. While there is no doubt that the Convention has to be interpreted in the context of other rules of international law, the scope of its protection does not automatically align on the highest standard set up by other rules of international law binding the Parties to the Convention.⁷

In one case, involving article 10 of the Convention, the Court dismissed the argument of the applicant that the provision was narrower than article 25 of the Belgian constitution.⁸

² Amendments to various articles of the Recommendation of the Consultative Assembly proposed by the Italian Expert, Doc. A 812, III TP 228–31, Art. 1.

³ New articles, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 9, A 910, III TP 306–309; Amendments to Articles 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 8, and 9 of the Committee's Preliminary Draft Proposal by the Expert of the United Kingdom, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 2, A 915, III TP 280–9, at p. 288, art. 15; Amendments to the British draft proposed by the Drafting Committee composed of Sir Oscar Dowson, MM le Quesne, Dons Moeller, and Salén, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 10, p. 3, A 919, III TP 288–95, at p. 294, art. 15.

⁴ Appendix to the Report of the Committee of Experts to the Committee of Ministers—Draft Convention (16 March 1950), Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 14 revised, A 925, IV TP 50–79, at p. 76, art. 46(5). See also Preliminary Draft Convention, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 14, A 932, III TP 312–35, at p. 334, art. 51(47).

⁵ Report to the Committee of Ministers submitted by the Committee of Experts Instructed to Draw Up a Draft Convention of Collective Guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 15, A 924, IV TP 2–55, at p. 46.

⁶ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(2).

⁷ National Union of Rail, Maritime, and Transport Workers v. the United Kingdom, no. 31045/10, Concurring Opinion of Judge Wojtyczek, § 1, 8 April 2014.

⁸ Leempoel & S.A. ED. Ciné Revue v. Belgium, no. 64772/01, §§ 86–87, 9 November 2006. See also Okjay and Others v. Turkey, no. 36220/97, § 68, ECHR 2005-VII; Martynov v. Ukraine, no. 36202/03, §§ 16–17, 14 December 2006.

It is probably not surprising that there have been almost no citations to article 53 in the jurisprudence of the Convention organs. The provision is really addressed elsewhere, to courts and tribunals at the domestic or international level where the Convention is enlisted in support of arguments aimed at restricting rights and freedoms secured by other legal instruments.⁹

Article 53 deals with two sources of law: 'the laws of any High Contracting Party' and 'any other agreement to which [the High Contracting Party] is a Party'. The first category concerns the applicable domestic law about which, according to Emmanuel Decaux, the provision has hardly any practical significance. He has described it as 'une formule rituelle' from treaty law added to the Convention to address the anxieties of diplomats.¹⁰ With respect to international 'agreements', which is to say treaties and conventions, article 53 may have some relevance to the extent that there are attempts to 'harmonize' obligations that may be secured by other treaties using formulations that differ from those of the European Convention. Although article 53 is, strictly speaking, of no relevance when the Court refers to other treaties in its interpretation of the Convention, the tendency to use such sources in order to enlarge, rather than restrict, the protection of human rights is certainly remarkable. One notable example is found in the very creative reading by the Grand Chamber of article 7 in such a way as to incorporate the lex mitior principle.¹¹

Further reading

Emmanuel Decaux, 'Article 60', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 897–903.

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, p. 619.

J. de Meyer, 'Brèves réflexions à propos de l'article 60 de la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme', in Franz Matscher and Herbert Petzold, eds, Protection des droits de l'homme: La dimension européenne. Mélanges en l'honneur de Gérard J. Wiarda, Cologne: Carl Heymanns, 1988, pp. 125–9.

⁹ J. de Meyer, 'Brèves réflexions à propos de l'article 60 de la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme', in Franz Matscher and Herbert Petzold, eds, Protection des droits de l'homme: La dimension européenne. Mélanges en l'honneur de Gérard J. Wiarda, Cologne: Carl Heymanns, 1988, pp. 125–9, at p. 125.

¹⁰ Emmanuel Decaux, 'Article 60', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 897–903, at p. 900.

¹¹ Scoppola v. Italy (no. 2) [GC], no. 10249/03, 17 September 2009.

Article 54. Powers of the Committee of Ministers/Pouvoirs du Comité des Ministres

Nothing in this Convention shall prejudice the powers conferred on the Committee of Ministers by the Statute of the Council of Europe.

Aucune disposition de la présente Convention ne porte atteinte aux pouvoirs conférés au Comité des Ministres par le Statut du Conseil de l'Europe.

Introductory comments

The Statute of the Council of Europe and the European Convention on Human Rights are the two primary instruments of the Council of Europe system. The authority of the Committee of Ministers is defined in both of these treaties. In the Convention, article 46, giving the Committee responsibility for the execution of judgments of the Court, is the main provision. Article 54 is a provision of little real significance, as can be seen by the only judicial consideration it has received. The Court begins with the words 'notwithstanding article 54 of the Convention...'.¹

Drafting of the provision

The origin of article 54 is an Italian proposal submitted to the June 1950 session of the Conference of Senior Officials: 'No provision of the present Convention prejudices the powers conferred on the Committee of Ministers by the Statute of the Council of Europe.'² Italy renewed its efforts at the fifth session of the Committee of Ministers, in August 1950, with the following proposal: 'Nothing in this Convention shall prejudice the powers conferred on the Committee of Ministers by the Statute of the Council of Europe.'³ The text was incorporated in the draft Convention adopted by the Committee of Ministers.⁴ It was article 61 of the final text adopted in November.

The provision was renumbered as article 58 and given the heading 'Powers of the Committee of Ministers' by Protocol No. 11.⁵

Analysis and interpretation

The Council of Europe is composed of two organs, the Committee of Ministers and the Parliamentary Assembly.⁶ The Committee of Ministers consists of one representative

¹ Bijelić v. Montenegro and Serbia, no. 11890/05, § 67, 28 April 2009.

² Proposal submitted by the Italian Delegation, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 6, A 1367, IV TP 162-3.

³ Amendments proposed by the Italian Delegation, Doc. CM 1 (50) 7, V TP 70-3.

⁴ Draft Convention adopted by the Committee of Ministers, 7 August 1950, Doc. A 1937, V TP 120-45, at p. 142. Also Draft Convention adopted by the Sub-Committee, Doc. CM 1 (50) 52, A 1884, V TP 76-99, at p. 97.

⁵ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(2).

⁶ Statute of the Council of Europe, ETS 1, art. 10.

from each Member State. This is in principle the Minister of Foreign Affairs, although in practice a member of the government may be delegated to represent the State.⁷ According to article 13 of the Statute of the Council of Europe, the Committee of Ministers 'is the organ which acts on behalf of the Council of Europe'.

According to article 8 of the Statute of the Council of Europe, '[a]ny member of the Council of Europe which has seriously violated Article 3 may be suspended from its rights of representation and requested by the Committee of Ministers to withdraw under Article 7. If such member does not comply with this request, the Committee may decide that it has ceased to be a member of the Council as from such date as the Committee may determine.' It is probably this power that is principally contemplated by article 54 of the European Convention. As Peter Leuprecht has explained,⁸ article 8 must be read in conjunction with article 3 of the Statute, where it is affirmed that '[e]very member of the Council of Europe must accept the principles of the rule of law and of the enjoyment by all persons within its jurisdiction of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and collaborate sincerely and effectively in the realisation of the aim of the Council'.

There appears to be only one reference to article 54 in the case law of the Court. It concerns the attribution of responsibility under the Convention in a case concerning alleged violations of article 1 of Protocol No. 1 in Montenegro before June 2006, when the country seceded from Serbia and Montenegro. In its resolution inviting Montenegro to join the Council of Europe, the Committee of Ministers adopted a resolution stating that Montenegro was to be regarded as a Party to the European Convention on Human Rights and its Protocols Nos. 1, 4, 6, 7, 12, 13, and 14 thereto with effect from 6 June 2006.⁹ The Court said that notwithstanding article 54 of the Convention, it has 'the sole competence under Article 32 thereof to determine all issues concerning "the interpretation and application of the Convention", including those involving its temporal jurisdiction and/or the compatibility of the applicants' complaints ratione personae'.¹⁰

Further reading

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, p. 620.

Peter Leuprecht, 'Article 61', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 905-7.

⁷ Ibid., art. 14.

⁸ Peter Leuprecht, 'Article 61', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 905-7, at p. 906.

⁹ Resolution CM/Res(2007)7 inviting the Republic of Montenegro to become a member of the Council of Europe.

¹⁰ Bijelić v. Montenegro and Serbia, no. 11890/05, § 67, 28 April 2009.

Article 55. Exclusion of other means of dispute settlement/Renonciation à d'autres modes de règlement des différends

The High Contracting Parties agree that, except by special agreement, they will not avail themselves of treaties, conventions or declarations in force between them for the purpose of submitting, by way of petition, a dispute arising out of the interpretation or application of this Convention to a means of settlement other than those provided for in this Convention.

Les Hautes Parties contractantes renoncent réciproquement, sauf compromis spécial, à se prévaloir des traités, conventions ou déclarations existant entre elles, en vue de soumettre, par voie de requête, un différend né de l'interprétation ou de l'application de la présente Convention à un mode de règlement autre que ceux prévus par ladite Convention.

Introductory comments

The proliferation in recent years of international courts and tribunals has provoked much discussion about 'fragmentation'. Although the term was not used at the time, those who drafted the European Convention on Human Rights addressed the issue when they ensured the autonomy of the European Court of Human Rights. In effect, article 55 grants the Convention organs a form of monopoly with respect to the interpretation and application of the Convention. To that extent, 'fragmentation' is prevented because only the Convention organs are competent to address inter-State disputes regarding the Convention.

Drafting of the provision

This provision results from debates within the Consultative Assembly about the relationship between the proposed European Court of Human Rights and the existing international dispute settlement mechanisms, in particular the International Court of Justice.¹ The initial draft European Convention on Human Rights prepared by the International Juridical Section of the European Movement contained a provision specifying that nothing in the Convention was to be understood as preventing States Parties from referring any matter to the International Court of Justice.²

There was much debate within the Consultative Assembly on the issue of whether or not to establish a European Court of Human Rights. If no European Court was established, then the jurisdiction of existing international dispute mechanisms, notably the International Court of Justice but also arbitration tribunals, would remain untouched. There would be no need for provisions of the Convention to address possible conflicts in jurisdiction. The Assembly's Legal Committee opted for a compromise position, whereby disputes between States were to be settled by the future European Court. However, States Parties would retain the alternative of litigating issues before the International Court of Justice. The objections to the latter approach were summarized by the chairman of the Legal Committee, Pierre-Henri Teitgen, in his report to the plenary Consultative Assembly. He explained that the International Court of Justice was 'composed of judges who are nationals of countries outside the European Union and sometimes nationals of countries whose general policy or, more exactly, general spirit are opposed to current European ideals'. At the same time, it was important 'not to set European order in opposition to world order'.³

¹ Emmanuel Decaux, 'Article 62', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 909–14, at pp. 909–11.

² Convention for the Collective Protection of Individual Rights and Democratic Liberties by the States, Members of the Council of Europe, and for the establishment of a European Court of Human Rights to ensure observance of the Convention, Doc. INF/5/E/R, I TP 296–303, at p. 302, art. 15.

In the plenary Consultative Assembly, Henri Rolin led the debate favouring recognition of a role for the International Court of Justice.⁴ Rolin was opposed to the entire idea of a European Court of Human Rights. He warned of the fragmentation of case law, something that could undermine the International Court of Justice to which European States, as members of the United Nations, were committed. Rolin dismissed the argument about the political or philosophical leanings of non-European judges, noting that as a general rule the International Court addressed disputes relating to treaties that were not adhered to by countries of which its judges were nationals. 'I think that those who have followed the work of the International Court of Justice, even in its recent composition, must recognise that in fact the fears which have been expressed on account of the political division of the world, have not had the repercussions which might have been feared in the Court, and that in this connection, the judges of the International Court of Justice have shown themselves as a whole to be perfectly worthy of our confidence', Rolin told the Assembly.⁵ Although he did not make any direct reference, Rolin might have had in mind the judgment in the Corfu Channel case, the first contentious case to come before the International Court of Justice, issued only months earlier on 9 April 1949. It was an early skirmish in the Cold War, pitting Albania against the United Kingdom. The Court found both sides to be at fault, condemning the United Kingdom for violating the sovereignty of Albania and holding Albania responsible for failing to respect 'elementary considerations of humanity even more exacting in peace than in war'.⁶

The Consultative Assembly retained the approach of the Legal Committee. It adopted two relevant provisions:

Article 19

If reconciliation fails, any Member State, signatory to the Convention, may submit the matter to the Court for judicial decision. In that case, the Commission shall immediately pass the case over the Court.

Article 20

The States concerned may also, if they prefer, petition the International Court of Justice in accordance with their reciprocal agreements.⁷

The Court that was referred to in article 19 was the proposed European Court of Human Rights.

³ Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 7 September 1949], I TP 250-95, at p. 270.

⁴ Amendment proposed by MM. Rolin and Ungoed-Thomas, Doc. 84, I TP 242-5.

⁵ Official Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 8 September 1949], II TP 14-274, at p. 150.

⁶ Corfu Channel case, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1949, p. 4, at p. 22.

⁷ Recommendation No. 38 to the Committee of Ministers adopted 8 September 1949 on the conclusion of the debates, Doc. AS (1) 108, II TP 274-83, at p. 280.

The Committee of Ministers referred the Consultative Assembly draft to a Committee of Experts that met in February and March 1950. In a preparatory memorandum, the Secretariat General identified a list of issues for consideration by the Committee of Experts that included '[d]emarkation of jurisdiction between the International Court of Justice and the European Court'.⁸ It must be borne in mind that at this point in the negotiations of the Convention, the majority of States represented at the Committee of Experts was opposed altogether to the establishment of a court. In the Committee of Experts, the representative of France, Charles Chaumont, proposed that article 20 of the Consultative Assembly draft be replaced with the following: 'No provision of this Convention may be interpreted in such a way as to prevent Member States from bringing a case before the International Court of Justice, in accordance with the Statute of the Court and their international engagements relating to its competence.'⁹ At the end of its first session, in February, the Committee of Experts agreed upon the following: 'No provisions of this Convention can be interpreted in such a way as to prevent the States concerned, provided they agree to do so, from bringing the case before the International Court of Justice, in accordance with the Statutes [sic] of that Court.'¹⁰

At its first session, the Committee of Experts also adopted a draft report explaining that 'the Convention must not prevent the signatory States from referring conflict resulting from the application of the Convention to the International Court of Justice, if they prefer to have recourse to this tribunal'. Nevertheless, by virtue of the optional clause in the Statute of the International Court of Justice, the consent of both States would be necessary for there to be jurisdiction. The draft report said that if there was no such consent, 'it is the European Court which shall be empowered to deal with the matter, as a special tribunal, the competence of which shall derogate from the general competence of the International Court of Justice'. Thus, any possible conflict of jurisdiction was avoided, 'at least in theory', said the draft report.¹¹

At this point in the work of the Committee of Experts, the positions of States took a turn. A new text emerged that made dispute settlement by the European Court the rule and litigation elsewhere the exception: 'The High Contracting Parties reciprocally agree, except as otherwise specified, not to take advantage of treaties, conventions or declarations, with a view to submitting, by means of petition, any dispute arising out of the application of this Convention to any means of settlement other than those laid down in this Convention.'¹² In the final version adopted by the Committee of Experts, the words 'by special agreement' replaced 'as otherwise specified'.¹³ Thus, what had begun as a

⁸ Preparatory Report by the Secretariat-General concerning a Preliminary Draft Convention to Provide a Collective Guarantee of Human Rights, Doc. B 22, III TP 2-37, at p. 34.

⁹ Amendments to Articles 20 and 27 of the Recommendation of the Consultative Assembly proposed by the French Expert, Doc. A 794, III TP 198.

¹⁰ Continuation and end of the proposals of the Drafting Sub-Committee concerning Section III, Doc. A 813, III TP 230-3; Preliminary Draft Convention for the Maintenance and Further Realisation of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 15 February 1950, Doc. A 833, III TP 236-46, at p. 246, art. 41.

¹¹ Preliminary Draft of the Report to the Committee of Ministers, 24 February 1950, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 1, A 847, III TP 246-79, at p. 276.

¹² Final provisions. New articles, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 11, A 920, III TP 308-9. Also New text of Article 41, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 7, A 908, III TP 304-5.

¹³ Appendix to the Report of the Committee of Experts to the Committee of Ministers—Draft Convention (16 March 1950), Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 14 revised, A 925, IV TP 50-79, at pp. 74-6, art. 45(49); Report to the Committee of Ministers submitted by the Committee of Experts Instructed to Draw Up a Draft Convention of presumption in favour of the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice was now being formulated as an exception, the rule being the jurisdiction of the European Court of Human Rights.

The texts adopted by the Committee of Experts were next examined by the Conference of Senior Officials, in June 1950. By this point, the debate was inexorably favourable to establishment of a Court, albeit one with jurisdiction based upon an optional clause. Referring to the issue of jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice in disputes concerning the European Convention, the Italian representative, Tomasso Perassi, said that '[i]f we wish to avoid going before the Hague Court by virtue of the optional clause, as regards disputes arising from the Convention, the only solution is to create a European Court'.¹⁴ Belgium agreed with the Italians, asking whether 'the creation of a European Court would not be more satisfactory for psychological reasons. Besides, this point of view would be supported easily by the close relationship existing between the European countries'.¹⁵ Sir Samuel Hoare of the United Kingdom said his country remained opposed to the Court, warning of 'proliferation of organs with tremendous difficulties for the definition of their respective jurisdiction'.¹⁶ The Conference revised the existing draft provision as follows: 'The High Contracting Parties declare that disputes relating to the application of this Convention can only be submitted to a procedure of arbitration or legal settlement, by means of treaties, conventions or declarations in force among them, six months after the decision taken by the Committee of Ministers, in accordance with article 31'.¹⁷ This was a reference to the proposal whereby the Commission would refer matters to the Committee of Ministers, rather than to a European Court, for a final decision. In its Report, the Conference of Senior Officials said that it was unable to reach agreement on a single text governing dispute settlement and notably as to whether an appeal could be taken against a decision by the Committee of Ministers. It had, however, agreed on certain principles: 'so long as a case is under discussion by the Commission of Human Rights or the Committee of Ministers, it shall not be brought before any other Court' and '[n]o appeal shall be possible against the decision of a European Court for Human Rights'. It added:

Certain delegates consider that all possibility of appeal should be excluded as the decision of the Committee of Ministers was fixed.

Other delegates thought there was no need to thus restrict the competence of the International Court of Justice, as far as concerned States which had signed the optional clause provided for in Article 36 of the Statute of the Court.

Finally, certain delegates considered that member States of the Council of Europe would more readily accept the powers given to the Committee of Ministers in the draft Convention attached to the present Report, if the competence of the International Court of Justice were left intact on this matter.¹⁸ Collective Guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Doc. CM/WP 1 (5) 15, A 924, IV TP 2-55, at p. 46.

¹⁴ Minutes of the morning sitting [of 9 June 1950 of the Conference of Senior Officials], Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 3, IV TP 110-19, at p. 118.

¹⁵ Ibid.

¹⁶ Minutes of the afternoon sitting [of 9 June 1950], unreferenced document, IV TP 120-31, at p. 124.

¹⁷ Draft Convention appended to the draft report, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 16, appendix, A 1445, IV TP 218-40, at p. 236, art. 58.

¹⁸ Text of the report submitted by the Conference to the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19, CM/WP 4 (50) 16 rev., A 1431, IV TP 242-73, at p. 272.

During the fifth session of the Committee of Ministers, in August 1950, Sweden presented its view that the procedure instituted by the Convention should be exclusive. It said that '[u]nless some special clause is inserted to exclude such other international tribunals, the adoption of the new convention would have unexpected results'. Sweden proposed that the following clause be inserted: 'The Commission and the European Court having been created to settle disputes relating to the interpretation and the application of this Convention, such disputes shall not be submitted to other judicial or arbitral tribunals established by treaties or declarations in force, unless the Parties concerned shall so decide by an agreement expressly relating to the dispute in question.'¹⁹ There was a competing proposal from the United Kingdom: 'The High Contracting Parties agree not to submit disputes relating to the interpretation or application of this Convention to other procedures of arbitration or legal settlement established by other treaties, conventions or declarations to which they are parties.'²⁰ But the United Kingdom said that a further clause was necessary on possible submission of complaints applicable to individuals who were not parties to the Convention. This became the admissibility criterion in article 35. The Netherlands also had a proposal: 'As to the possibility of appeal against a decision of the Committee of Ministers, it is considered that the competence of the International Court of Justice should be left intact as far as States are concerned which have signed the optional clause provided for in Article 36 of the Statute of the Court.'²¹ Finally, Italy too had a proposal: 'The High Contracting Parties agree that, except by special agreement, they will not avail themselves of texts, conventions or declarations in force between them for the purpose of submitting by way of petition, a dispute arising out of the application of this Convention to a means of settlement other than those provided for in this Convention.'²²

Within the Sub-Committee on Human Rights of the Committee of Ministers, which met on 4 August 1950, agreement was reached by all delegations but one, the Netherlands, on the following: 'The High Contracting Parties agree that, except by special agreement, they will not avail themselves of treaties, conventions or declarations in force between them for the purpose of submitting, by way of petition, a dispute arising out of the interpretation or application of this Convention to a means of settlement other than those provided for in this Convention.'²³ The Netherlands later withdrew its opposition and the text was adopted.²⁴

There appears to have been no further discussion. The text approved by the Committee of Ministers in August 1950 became article 62 of the Convention. It was renumbered as ¹⁹ Amendments proposed by the Swedish Delegation, Doc. CM 1 (50) 1, CM 1 (50) 8, A 1862, V TP 56-9.

²⁰ Amendments proposed by the United Kingdom Delegation, Doc. CM 1 (50) 6, A 1867, V TP 66-71, at p. 70.

²¹ Amendments proposed by the Netherlands Delegation, Doc. CM 1 (50) 5, A 11866, V TP 64-5.

²² Amendments proposed by the Italian Delegation, Doc. CM 1 (50) 7, V TP 70-3.

²³ Also Provisions of the Draft Convention about which agreement was not reached in the Sub-Committee, First version, Doc. CM 1 (50) 11, A 1688, IV TP 98-103, at p. 100; Provisions of the Draft Convention about which agreement was not reached in the Sub-Committee, Final version, Doc. CM 1 (50) 53, A 1889, IV TP 102-7, at p. 104.

²⁴ Draft Convention adopted by the Committee of Ministers, 7 August 1950, Doc. A 1937, V TP 120-45, at p. 142, art. 62.

article 55 by Protocol No. 11. The heading 'Exclusion of other means of dispute settlement' was also added according to the provisions of Protocol No. 11.²⁵

Analysis and interpretation

Article 55 prevents States Parties from submitting a dispute about the interpretation and application of the Convention to means of settlement other than those provided by the Convention. In practice, it means that such disputes are confined to the inter-State application procedure. It also presents an obstacle to any attempt by a State Party dissatisfied with a ruling of the Court in an inter-State case to appeal the decision to the International Court of Justice.

Within the treaty system of the Council of Europe, care has been taken to respect the principle set out in article 55. For example, the European Convention for the Peaceful Settlement of Disputes declares: 'This Convention shall in no way affect the application of the provisions of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms signed on 4th November 1950, or of the Protocol thereto signed on 20th March 1952.'²⁶ Along similar lines, the European Convention for the Prevention of Torture and Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment states: 'Nothing in this Convention shall be construed as limiting or derogating from the competence of the organs of the European Convention on Human Rights or from the obligations assumed by the Parties under that Convention.'²⁷ The Explanatory Report notes:

This paragraph addresses the particular relationship between the new Convention and the European Convention on Human Rights, to which all member States of the Council of Europe are party and a connection with which is acknowledged in the Preamble. The obligations of the Parties under the European Convention on Human Rights are not affected. Nor is the competence entrusted by that Convention to the European Court and Commission of Human Rights and the Committee of Ministers. Accordingly, in respecting the established competence of these organs, the committee set up by the present Convention will not concern itself with matters raised in proceedings pending before them, and will not itself formulate interpretations of the provisions of the European Convention on Human Rights.²⁸

Problems in the interpretation of article 55 arose in the late 1960s as European states were considering ratification of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, adopted by the United Nations General Assembly in 1966. Unlike the European Convention, the Covenant has no exclusivity clause. Indeed, the Covenant states explicitly that its provisions 'shall not prevent the States Parties to the present Covenant from having recourse to other procedures for settling a dispute in accordance with general or special international agreements in force between them'.²⁹ The Covenant establishes an optional inter-State petition mechanism to the Human Rights Committee.

²⁵ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(2).

²⁶ European Convention for the Peaceful Settlement of Disputes, ETS 23, art. 28(2).

²⁷ European Convention for the Prevention of Torture and Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, ETS 126, art. 17(2).

²⁸ Explanatory Report on the European Convention for the Prevention of Torture and Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, para. 91.

²⁹ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, (1976) 999 UNTS 171, art. 44. See Manfred Nowak, CCPR Commentary, 2nd rev. edn, Kehl, Germany: N.P. Engel, 2005, pp. 791-2; Alexandre-Linos

In 1970, the Committee of Ministers adopted a resolution in order to address situations where States Parties to the European Convention ratified the Covenant and accepted the jurisdiction of the Human Rights Committee with respect to inter-State applications. The Preamble to the resolution noted that 'there are a certain number of rights which in substance are covered both by the UN Covenant and by the European Convention' and that the inter-State procedure set out in the Convention 'provides an effective system for the protection of human rights, including binding decisions by the Court of Human Rights or by the Committee of Ministers'. It acknowledged 'the value of the procedure established by the UN Covenant for the protection of rights not included in the European Convention and its protocol', adding 'that Article 33 of the Charter of the United Nations emphasises the importance of regional settlement of inter-State disputes'. But, said the Committee, 'differences of opinion appear to exist as regards the exact scope of the obligation' created by article 55 (it was then article 62) of the Convention. The Committee declared that:

as long as the problem of interpretation of Article 62 of the European Convention is not resolved, States Parties to the Convention which ratify or accede to the UN Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and make a declaration under Article 41 of the Covenant should normally utilise only the procedure established by the European Convention in respect of complaints against another Contracting Party to the European Convention relating to an alleged violation of a right which in substance is covered both by the European Convention (or its protocols) and by the UN Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, it being understood that the UN procedure may be invoked in relation to rights not guaranteed in the European Convention (or its protocols) or in relation to States which are not Parties to the European Convention.³⁰

Many States Parties to the European Convention have also formulated declarations accepting the jurisdiction of the Human Rights Committee pursuant to article 41 of the Covenant, but the mechanism has never been invoked, in Europe or elsewhere, so the problem anticipated in the resolution of the Committee of Ministers has never arisen. None of the declarations by European States has made reference directly or indirectly to the article 55 issue.

Article 55 does not entirely exclude the possibility that disputes involving human rights issues as well as related matters are addressed in other fora. Professor Emmanuel Decaux gives two examples of States Parties to the European Convention who addressed their differences before the European Court of Human Rights but also took aspects of the dispute elsewhere.³¹ The first is the conflict between Austria and Italy about minority rights in the Südtirol/Alto Adige, a matter submitted to the European Commission on Human Rights in one of the first inter-State applications.³² In 1969, the two States reached an agreement that granted a degree of autonomy to the region. In a compromisory clause, they agreed to submit disputes to the International Court of Justice.³³

Stilianos and Elias Kastanas, 'Article 44', in Emmanuel Decaux, ed., Le Pacte international relative aux droits civils et politiques, Commentaire article par article, Paris: Economica, 2011, pp. 752–65.

³⁰ UN Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the European Convention on Human Rights: Procedure for dealing with inter-state complaints, Committee of Ministers Resolution (70) 17, 15 May 1970.

³¹ Emmanuel Decaux, 'Article 62', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 909–14, at pp. 912–13.

³² (1960) 3 YB 168–171.

³³ A. Fenet, 'La fin du litige italo-autrichien sur le Haut Adige-Tyrol du Sud', (1993) 39 Annuaire français de droit international 357.

The second is the dispute between Cyprus and Turkey, a matter that has come before the Convention organs in a variety of forms but that is also addressed in various other institutions. In one of the applications filed by Cyprus against Turkey, the respondent State invoked article 55, referring to various mechanisms under the aegis of the United Nations Security Council addressing the occupation of the northern part of the island. Rejecting Turkey's argument, the European Commission on Human Rights said 'the possibility for a High Contracting Party of withdrawing a case from the jurisdiction of the Convention organs on the ground that it has entered into a special agreement with the other High Contracting Party concerned, is given only in exceptional circumstances'. The Commission said that '[e]ven assuming that both Turkey and Cyprus are bound by international obligations concerning the intercommunal talks and the Committee on Missing Persons, it is difficult to see how this could amount to a "special agreement" between them to resort exclusively to these means of settlement precluding the Convention organs from performing their normal functions'.³⁴

A third and more recent example is the dispute between Georgia and Russia at the International Court of Justice. Georgia relied upon the compromissory clause in the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, although it also reserved the right to invoke the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide. Georgia charged that Russia was responsible for the ethnic cleansing of ethnic Georgians in two breakaway Georgian provinces, South Ossetia and Abkhazia, in August 2008. On 15 October 2008, the Court granted an application for interim measures, calling upon the parties to refrain from acts of racial discrimination, not to sponsor, defend, or support racial discrimination by any persons or organisations, and a range of other measures that might just as well have been included in a interim measures order by the European Court of Human Rights pursuant to articles 3, 8, and 14 of the European Convention.³⁵ Three years later, the International Court of Justice granted a preliminary objection by Russia, ruling that Georgia had failed to attempt to settle the dispute by negotiation.³⁶ In the meantime, Georgia also initiated proceedings against Russia at the European Court of Human Rights, where Russia raised an objection about the similarity of those proceedings with the application at the International Court of Justice. The European Court noted that the proceedings in The Hague had come to an end in April 2011 and that there was therefore no ground to object on the basis of lis pendens. The Court added that the rule against similar proceedings set out in article 35 of the European Convention did not apply to inter-State cases and it did not consider the application of article 55 to the case.³⁷ Georgia may well have breached article 55 of the Convention, although it is hard to see what consequence this could have in judicial proceedings. Jurisdiction before either the International Court of Justice or the European Court of Human Rights could not be defeated merely because one of the States had failed to respect article 55 of the Convention.

³⁴ Cyprus v. Turkey, no. 25781/94, Commission decision of 28 June 1996, (1996) 39 YB 130, DR 86, p. 104.

³⁵ Application of the International Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Racial Discrimination (Georgia v. Russian Federation), Provisional Measures, Order of 15 October 2008, I.C.J. Reports 2008, p. 353, paras. 46, 47.

³⁶ Application of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination (Georgia v. Russian Federation) (Preliminary objections), Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 2011, p. 70.

³⁷ Georgia v. Russia (dec.), no. 38263/08, § 79, 13 December 2011.

In 2007, the Human Rights Council of the United Nations introduced the human rights monitoring mechanism known as 'Universal Periodic Review'. It is an inter-State process, whereby States submit reports on human rights compliance and then are questioned about this by their peers, often very critically. They are invited to undertake commitments and often agree to do so. In that sense, it is a mechanism of dispute resolution. The basis of the Universal Periodic Review is outlined in a resolution of the Council that includes 'Human rights instruments to which a State is party'.³⁸ For European States, this obviously includes the European Convention. Some European States report on issues relating to litigation before the European Court. For example, in its second report to the Council the United Kingdom discussed the issue of prisoner voting, making explicit reference to the case law of the Court and its requirement that legislative changes be undertaken.³⁹ When challenged about legislation restricting freedom of expression on issues relating to sexual orientation, Russia answered by invoking article 10(2) of the European Convention on Human Rights.⁴⁰ When Turkey was being discussed, Greece recommended that it '[i]mplement the large number of European Court of Human Rights decisions like the one concerning the Orphanage on Prince Island, which belongs to the Orthodox Ecumenical Patriarchate, or the ones that have found that Turkey is liable for numerous violations of ECHR articles in Cyprus, namely in the occupied northern part'.⁴¹

The examples from the Universal Periodic Review process demonstrate the difficulty of imposing a watertight separation between the system of the European Convention and other international human rights mechanisms. The scope of article 55 of the European Convention is probably best confined to the very traditional vision that prevailed in 1950 of inter-State litigation, something that has been a rare occurrence in any event, as the case law pursuant to article 33 of the Convention demonstrates. European States will only undertake an inter-State application in the most serious of circumstances. Indeed, it is for this reason that mechanisms for States to deal with differences and disputes about compliance with fundamental human rights, whatever the normative source, be addressed in the sort of environment that the Universal Periodic Review provides.

Further reading

Emmanuel Decaux, 'Article 62', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 909–14.
Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, p. 620.

³⁸ Institution-building of the United Nations Human Rights Council, UN Doc. A/HRC/RES/5/1, Annex, para. 19c).

³⁹ A/HRC/WG.6/13/GBR/1, paras 38–39.

⁴⁰ UN Doc. A/HRC/24/14/Add.1, p. 13.

⁴¹ UN Doc. A/HRC/15/13, para. 103.7.

Article 56. Territorial application/Application territoriale

1. Any State may at the time of its ratification or at any time thereafter declare by notification addressed to the Secretary General of the Council of Europe that the present Convention shall, subject to paragraph 4 of this Article, extend to all or any of the territories for whose international relations it is responsible.

2. The Convention shall extend to the territory or territories named in the notification as from the thirtieth day after the receipt of this notification by the Secretary General of the Council of Europe.

3. The provisions of this Convention shall be applied in such territories with due regard, however, to local requirements.

4. Any State which has made a declaration in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article may at any time thereafter declare on behalf of one or more of the territories to which the declaration relates that it accepts the competence of the Court to receive applications from individuals, non-governmental organisations or groups of individuals as provided by Article 34 of the Convention.

1. Tout Etat peut, au moment de la ratification ou à tout autre moment par la suite, déclarer, par notification adressée au Secrétaire Général du Conseil de l'Europe, que la présente Convention s'appliquera, sous réserve du paragraphe 4 du présent article, à tous les territoires ou à l'un quelconque des territoires dont il assure les relations internationales.

2. La Convention s'appliquera au territoire ou aux territoires désignés dans la notification à partir du trentième jour qui suivra la date à laquelle le Secrétaire Général du Conseil de l'Europe aura reçu cette notification.

3. Dans lesdits territoires les dispositions de la présente Convention seront appliquées en tenant compte des nécessités locales.

4. Tout Etat qui a fait une déclaration conformément au premier paragraphe de cet article, peut, à tout moment par la suite, déclarer relativement à un ou plusieurs des territoires visés dans cette déclaration qu'il accepte la compétence de la Cour pour connaître des requêtes de personnes physiques, d'organisations non gouvernementales ou de groupes de particuliers, comme le prévoit l'article 34 de la Convention.

Introductory comments

It is one of the enduring paradoxes of the development of modern human rights law that the first comprehensive convention was developed in the bosom of the world's great colonial empires. Several of the founding members of the Council of Europe, but notably the United Kingdom and France, had far-flung 'possessions'. At the time, perhaps even they did not understand how ephemeral their empires would be. Their pioneering work in developing the international law of human rights stands alongside anxiety about possible application of the legal regime to their colonies, where brutality, persecution, and exploitation continued to reign.

The issue of application of international human rights principles to colonial territories had already arisen during the drafting of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. An awkward formulation appears in article 2 of the Declaration, immediately following a general affirmation of the right to equality: 'Furthermore, no distinction shall be made on the basis of the political, jurisdictional or international status of the country or territory to which a person belongs, whether it be independent, trust, non-self-governing or under any other limitation of sovereignty.' The clause was initially a distinct article resulting from a proposal by Yugoslavia.¹ Literally hours before adoption of the Declaration by the General Assembly, the United Kingdom successfully argued to reposition the sentence, describing it as 'one of the most serious blemishes' on the text about which otherwise there could be no doubt as to its universal application.² Yugoslavia, the Soviet Union, and others may have pushed for an explicit reference to 'non-self-governing territories' not so much to ensure universal application of the Declaration as to embarrass the colonial powers.

Nevertheless, in contrast with the United Nations Declaration, there is no doubt that the European Convention does not apply with the same degree of universality. Known as the 'colonial clause', although later baptised with the less pejorative title '[t]erritorial application' by Protocol No. 11, article 56 of the Convention was introduced at the insistence of the British, 'who made it clear they would not accept the Convention without it'.³ Marko Milanovic has noted that '[s]ince colonies are historically primarily a European problem, it makes sense that only European human rights treaties have colonial clauses'.⁴ According to Brian Simpson, '[s]o far as the Colonial Office was concerned the real belief of the officials was that British involvement in the whole human rights exercise had been regrettable and was potentially harmful to British interests'.⁵ British negotiators masked their real concerns by suggesting that a colonial clause was necessary out of respect for local self-governance.⁶ But as the Haitian diplomat Emile St Lot had said about such clauses, when the Universal Declaration of Human Rights was being drafted, they were inserted in treaties by colonial powers 'under the pretext that signatories could not impose their will upon their colonies', but this 'had, however, never prevented such Powers from imposing their will when they had so desired'.⁷

Eventually, and possibly encouraged by a 1953 resolution in the Consultative Assembly recommending extension of the Convention to colonies, the United Kingdom invoked article 56 with respect to forty-two of its overseas territories and colonies.⁸ Denmark and the Netherlands made similar 'Declarations of extension'.⁹ Germany, bereft of colonies since 1918, used article 56 to extend the Convention to West Berlin.¹⁰ Both Belgium and the Netherlands also made declarations indicating that were they to formulate such declarations of extension, they reserved the right to 'faire accompagner cette déclaration de réserves imposées par les nécessités locales'.¹¹

In the 1960s, the United Kingdom informed the Council of Europe that its responsibilities for several of the overseas territories, including Cyprus, Ghana, Jamaica, Kenya,

¹ Yugoslavia: Amendments to the draft Declaration (E/800), UN Doc. A/C.3/233.

² UN Doc. A/PV.181; United Kingdom: Amendment to Article 3 of the Draft Declaration proposed by the Third Committee (A/777), UN Doc. A/778/Rev.1.

³ Ed Bates, The Evolution of the European Convention on Human Rights, Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2010, at p. 93.

⁴ Marko Milanovic, Extraterritorial Application of Human Rights Treaties, Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2011, at p. 13.

⁵ A.W. Brian Simpson, Human Rights and the End of Empire, Britain and the Genesis of the European Convention, Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2001, p. 824.

⁶ L. Moor and A.W. Brian Simpson, 'Ghosts of Colonialism in the European Convention on Human Rights', (2006) 76 British Yearbook of International Law 121, at pp. 136–58.

⁷ UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.163.

⁸ (1955–56–57) 1 YB 46–47.

⁹ Ibid., pp. 45–6.

¹⁰ (1955–56–57) 1 YB 52.

¹¹ (1955–56–57) 1 YB 51, 53.

and Nigeria, had 'lapsed'. Periodically, it has provided a revised list of States for whose international relations it was responsible and to which it was extending the European Convention on Human Rights.¹² It has also extended the application of the Convention to territories not earlier covered by its initial declaration.¹³

Drafting of the provision

The initial draft European Convention on Human Rights prepared by the International Juridical Section of the European Movement addressed the issue of territorial application in a provision stating that each State Party 'shall guarantee to all persons within its territory' the rights therein set out. This is the ancestor of article 1 of the European Convention. The draft also set out an obligation 'to respect the fundamental principles of political democracy, and, in particular, within its metropolitan territory'.¹⁴ Inspired by the European Movement draft, the Legal Committee of the Consultative Assembly, meeting in August 1949, adopted a text by which 'the Member States shall undertake to ensure to all persons residing within their territories...' the benefit of the Convention.¹⁵ The report noted that with respect to extension of the rights 'not only to all persons residing within its metropolitan territory, but also to all persons residing within its overseas territories or in its colonial possessions, the majority of the Committee replied in the affirmative'. It added that 'reservations were made on this point by some members of the Committee, who were not able to appreciate exactly the difficulties which this solution might raise'.¹⁶

The Committee of Ministers referred the draft Convention prepared by the Consultative Assembly to a Committee of Experts that met in February and March 1950. The Belgian expert, Etienne de la Vallée-Poussin, proposed the following amendment: 'The rules given above shall be applied within the overseas territories, in conformity with local needs and the standard of civilization of the native population, which may not yet have been able to reach the conditions necessary for the practice of democratic freedom.'¹⁷ The first session of the Committee of Experts agreed upon a summary clause: 'In the overseas territories, the provisions of this Convention shall be applicable with due regard, however, to local necessities.'¹⁸ The emergence of the expression 'local necessities', which is present in the final version, was not entirely a benign measure of respect for autonomy. Rather, as the accompanying commentary explained, it was felt that 'the state of civilisation of certain overseas territories does not permit the application of fundamental rights under ¹² (1963) 7 YB 32-39; (1966) 9 YB 20-23; (1967) 10 YB 46-49; (1969) 12 YB 74-77; (1980) 23 YB 8-9; (1981) 24 YB 26-27; (1983) 26 YB CONV.EUR.DECL.63 1.

¹³ (1967) 10 YB 12-17; (1976) 18 YB 20-21; (2004) 47 YB 23.

¹⁴ Convention for the Collective Protection of Individual Rights and Democratic Liberties by the States, Members of the Council of Europe, and for the establishment of a European Court of Human Rights to ensure observance of the Convention, Doc. INF/5/E/R, I TP 296-303, at p. 296.

¹⁵ Report [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions], 5 September 1949, Doc. AS (1) 77, I TP 216-39, at p. 228.

¹⁶ Report presented by Mr P.H. Teitgen, 5 September 1949, Doc. A 290, I TP 192-213, at p. 202; Report [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions], 5 September 1949, Doc. AS (1) 77, I TP 216-39.

¹⁷ Amendment to Article 6 of the Recommendation of the Consultative Assembly proposed by the Belgian Expert, Doc. A 803, III TP 210-11.

¹⁸ Preliminary Draft Convention for the Maintenance and Further Realisation of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 15 February 1950, Doc. A 833, III TP 236-46, at p. 238, art. 7(d).

the same condition as for European territories. The States concerned have, however, to perform the task of bringing civilisation to their overseas territories, a task of which the aim is precisely that of making the human rights applicable to these territories.¹⁹ There was also a second provision that was referred to as the 'colonial clause': 'This Convention shall only apply to territories of the High Contracting Parties possessing jurisdiction within the fields covered by the present Convention when the consent of the appropriate authorities of these territories has been obtained. The High Contracting Parties responsible for these territories shall, if necessary, take steps to obtain this consent.'²⁰ Small changes were made to the draft at the second session of the Committee of Experts. A note was added in the final report explaining that the provision on local necessities or requirements had been introduced in order 'to make provision for the political autonomy accorded to certain overseas territories'.²¹

The Committee of Ministers referred the draft developed by the Committee of Experts to a Conference of Senior Officials that met in June 1950. It did not reach agreement on the clause. In addition to the 'colonial clause' adopted by the Committee of Experts, the United Kingdom had a competing proposal that it entitled 'Draft Colonial Application Clause':

1. Any State may at the time of accession or at any time thereafter declare by notification addressed to the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe that the present Convention shall extend to all or any of the territories for which it has international responsibility.
2. The Convention shall extend to the territory or territories named in the notification as from the thirtieth day after the receipt of this notification by the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe.²²

The Report of the Conference included both drafts. It noted that the United Kingdom said it could not accept the version prepared by the Committee of Experts 'for constitutional reasons'. The Italian delegate insisted upon the Committee of Experts' draft noting that its aim was to extend the benefits of the Convention 'as far as possible to all the inhabitants of overseas territories'. To this, the United Kingdom answered that this was also the purpose of its draft. The Report did not take a position, one way or the other.²³ Later in the month, the Legal Committee of the Consultative Assembly adopted 'the more liberal solution' of the Committee of Experts, expressing the hope 'that the Committee of Ministers will find a way of overcoming the constitutional objections raised by certain members'.²⁴

At the meeting of the Committee of Ministers in early August 1950, the United Kingdom explained that it could not accept international commitments on behalf of many of the British colonies without first consulting and obtaining agreement of the local ¹⁹ Preliminary draft of the Report to the Committee of Ministers, 24 February 1950, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 1, A 847, III TP 246-79, at p. 266.

²⁰ Preliminary Draft Convention for the Maintenance and Further Realisation of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 15 February 1950, Doc. A 833, III TP 236-46, at p. 246, art. 42.

²¹ Appendix to the Report of the Committee of Experts on Human Rights: Draft Convention of Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 16 March 1950, Doc. C/WP 1 (50) 15 appendix, CM/WP 1 (50) 14 rev., A 925, IV TP 50-79, at p. 76, art. 47(51).

²² Proposal submitted by the United Kingdom Delegation, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 8, A 1371, IV TP 180-3.

²³ Text of the report submitted by the Conference to the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19, CM/WP 4 (50) 16 rev., A 1431, IV TP 242-73, at p. 270.

²⁴ Letter of 24 June 1950 from Sir David Maxwell Fyfe, Chairman of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions, to the Chairman of the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM (50) 29, V TP 32-41.

governments. The United Kingdom wanted a text that would enable it to ratify the Convention immediately and deposit subsequent ratifications later upon obtaining the agreement of the colonial governments. If the Convention provided for immediate application, then the United Kingdom would not be able to ratify the Convention until it had conducted such a consultation. Moreover, if any colonial governments rejected the Convention, 'the United Kingdom would be prevented from ratifying at all'.²⁵ The Committee of Ministers agreed upon the text proposed by the United Kingdom:

1. Any State may at the time of its ratification or accession or at any time thereafter declare by notification addressed to the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe that the present Convention shall extend to all or any of the territories for whose international relations it is responsible.
2. The Convention shall extend to the territory or territories named in the notification as from the thirtieth day after the receipt of this notification by the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe.
3. The provisions of this Convention shall be applied in the overseas territories with due regard, however, to local requirements.
4. Any State which has made a declaration in accordance with paragraph 1 of this Article may at any time thereafter declare on behalf of one or more of those territories to which the Convention extends that it accepts the competence of the Commission to receive petitions from individuals, non-governmental organisations or groups of individuals, in accordance with Article 25 of the present Convention.²⁶

Subsequently, the 'colonial clause' in the draft adopted by the Committee of Ministers only underwent very minor changes.

Nevertheless, there was great dissatisfaction and a fierce debate on the subject in the Consultative Assembly. Noting that the clause was 'recast in a considerably less liberal form than we asked for in Committee, and a still less liberal form than the proposal of the Assembly', Hermod Lannung of Denmark warned that any colonial clause would provide 'invaluable opportunities for Communist propaganda'. By excluding colonial territories from the protection of the Convention, it would 'inevitably provide a weapon which can be used with considerable success against the Council of Europe and the Western Democracies, first and foremost in their overseas territories, but also in all ex-colonial territories in Asia, Africa and South America'. Giovanni Persico of Italy proposed that the colonial clause should be mandatory rather than permissive, following the example of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.²⁷ Italy had done this with respect to Somaliland because of a human rights provision in the Trusteeship Agreement, he explained. 'As you can see, we have already agreed to extend all of the rights specified in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights to the natives of Somaliland, which means that these are more favoured than the Italians themselves since there is no such clause yet laid down in our Constitution.²⁸

²⁵ Report of the meeting [of 7 August 1950 of the Committee of Ministers], V TP 110-21, at p. 118. See also Provisions of the Draft Convention about which agreement was not reached in the Sub-Committee, First version, Doc. CM 1 (50) 11, A 1688, IV TP 98-103, at pp. 100-3; Provisions of the Draft Convention about which agreement was not reached in the Sub-Committee, Final version, Doc. CM 1 (50) 53, A 1889, IV TP 102-7, at pp. 104-7.

²⁶ Report of the meeting [of 7 August 1950 of the Committee of Ministers], V TP 110-121, at pp. 110, 118-21; Draft Convention adopted by the Committee of Ministers, 7 August 1950, Doc. A 1937, V TP 120-45, at p. 142.

²⁷ He later withdrew the amendment: Minutes of the sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 23 August 1950], VI TP 36-41, at p. 40.

In support of the provision adopted by the Committee of Ministers, David Maxwell Fyfe of the United Kingdom pleaded with the Assembly 'not to jeopardise the Convention as a whole by pressing matters which may seem superficially attractive but which may cause great difficulty to those whose life-work is the improvement of the peoples in our territories abroad'.²⁹ Henri Rolin of Belgium said he acknowledged 'how distressing, and even at first sight shocking, this method of de jure discrimination will be for some of our colleagues'. He could only urge 'that the Governments may use in the most liberal fashion the option-extending clause'.³⁰

The most eloquent voice was that of Léopold Senghor, the Senegalese poet who would go on to become his country's president upon its independence. He sat in the Consultative Assembly by virtue of his membership in the French Assemblée nationale, where he served as deputy for Sénégal-Mauritanie. He charged that the colonial clause in the Committee of Ministers' draft was contrary to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Senghor described it as 'a rather clumsy way of excluding overseas territories' and 'an echo of the Colonial Pact'. But he said the more important reason to exclude it was 'moral'. The clause 'would transform the European Declaration of Human Rights into the Declaration of European Human Rights', thereby 'betraying the spirit of European Civilisation'.³¹ Senghor's amendment to delete the provision entirely was adopted by the Consultative Assembly, by forty-seven votes to thirty-seven.³²

In preparation for the final approval of the Convention, the Secretariat General proposed some changes of a technical nature to article 56. The reference to 'accession' in paragraph 1 was dropped, in accordance with a more general decision to remove the term from the Convention. The Secretariat General proposed using the words 'overseas territories' in paragraph 3 in place of 'territories for whose international relations it is responsible', given that the latter term was used in the fourth paragraph. In the fourth paragraph, 'for the purposes of greater clarity', it proposed replacing 'those territories to which the Convention extends' with 'the territories to which the declaration relates'.³³ These changes were accepted.

Immediately prior to adoption of the Convention, the British and French members of the Committee of Legal Experts noted that the Convention did not clarify whether a declaration pursuant to the colonial clause automatically conferred jurisdiction upon the Court. As adopted in 1950, the Convention required States to confer jurisdiction upon the Court by means of a separate declaration, something that was subsequently removed by Protocol No. 11. The British and French experts thought that jurisdiction of the Court would not follow automatically from a declaration extending the Convention to an overseas territory. They believed a distinct provision was required and that it had been simply omitted by oversight. However, they apparently chose not to 'press for its inclusion in Rome in order not to raise contentious issues at the last moment, having regard ²⁸ Report of the sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 14 August 1950], V TP 216-71, at p. 258.

²⁹ Report of the sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 25 August 1950, afternoon], VI TP 144-91, at pp. 180-2.

³⁰ Ibid., p. 182.

³¹ Ibid., pp. 173-6.

³² Ibid., p. 182.

³³ Drafting changes proposed by the Secretariat-General, Doc. A 2520, no date, VI TP 274-9, at p. 278.

particularly to the very contentious history' of the colonial clause.³⁴ The provision, as amended, became article 63 of the 1950 text of the Convention.

Article 63 was renumbered as article 56 by Protocol No. 11. The heading 'Territorial application' was also added.³⁵ The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11 explains that paragraph 1 of article 56 'enables States to extend the Convention to territories for whose international relations States are responsible' and that paragraph 4 'enables States to make declarations in respect of territories accepting the competence of the Court to receive individual applications', such declarations being possible for a specific period as is the case with Protocol No. 4 and Protocol No. 7. Protocol No. 11 added the words 'subject to paragraph 4' in paragraph 1 and it replaced the reference to the 'Commission' with 'Court'. The Explanatory Report notes that '[t]he provision in paragraph 3, that regard should be had to local requirements, is retained'.³⁶

Analysis and interpretation

The general rule of international law, codified in article 29 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, is that a treaty is binding upon each party in respect of its entire territory unless a contrary intention is indicated.³⁷ Article 56 of the Convention is a clear example of such a contrary intention. It is an example of what has been labelled a 'negative colonial clause' because it establishes the inapplicability of the treaty to non-metropolitan territories in the absence of a distinct declaration.³⁸ Article 56 appears to establish the inapplicability of the Convention to territories for whose international relations the State Party is responsible in the absence of a declaration made to that effect in accordance with paragraphs 1 and 2 of article 56. Even when a State Party has made such a declaration, the Convention is still to be applied 'with due regard . . . to local circumstances' (art. 56(3)). Finally, pursuant to article 56(4), a State Party may by declaration extend the jurisdiction of the European Court of Human Rights for individual applications concerning alleged violations of the Convention on the territory in question, in accordance with article 34.

The Convention organs have rejected applications that concern 'territories' for which the State Party was responsible but where no article 56 declaration had been formulated. For example, the European Commission of Human Rights declared inadmissible an application concerning Hong Kong, before it was returned to China, given the absence of any declaration by the United Kingdom pursuant to article 56.³⁹ Similarly, the Court declared an application concerning Macao to be inadmissible because Portugal had not made such a declaration.⁴⁰ The same principle applies if the State Party has declared the Convention applicable but not all of the Protocols, to the extent that the application

³⁴ Note of Mr Robertson dated 14 November 1950, VII TP 12–23, at pp. 14–19.

³⁵ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(2).

³⁶ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 113.

³⁷ Syméon Karagiannis, 'Article 29. Territorial Scope of Treaties', in Olivier Corten and Pierre Klein, eds, The Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, A Commentary, Vol. I, Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2011, pp. 731–63, at p. 732.

³⁸ J.E.S. Fawcett, 'Treaty Relations of British Overseas Territories', (1949) 26 British Yearbook of International Law 86, at pp. 96–7.

³⁹ Bui van Thanh and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 16137/90, Commission decision of 12 March 1990, (1990) 33 YB 59, DR 65-A, p. 330.

⁴⁰ Yonghong v. Portugal (dec.), no. 50887/99, ECHR 1999–IX.

concerns one of the Protocols not contemplated by the declaration.⁴¹ Besides the issue of a declaration accepting the application of the Convention there is also the matter of acceptance of the jurisdiction of the Court, something contemplated by paragraph 4 of article 56. The Court will declare inadmissible an application concerning a territory even if the State Party has declared that it accepts the application of the Convention to the extent that there is no supplementary declaration recognising the jurisdiction of the Court.⁴²

There can today be little doubt that article 56 of the Convention is an anachronism. As applicants have pointed out, it is inconsistent with the approach the Court has taken to the territorial jurisdiction of the Convention, pursuant to article 1, by which it is applicable even where the State Party bears no responsibility with respect to the international relations of the territory to the extent that it exercises some form of effective control over that territory. On this basis, the Court has held the United Kingdom responsible for the treatment of prisoners in Iraq.⁴³ However, despite this legal development in the application and interpretation of article 1 of the Convention, the Court subsequently refused to apply Protocol No. 1 of the Convention to a British Overseas Territory, the South Georgia and South Sandwich Islands, because no declaration pursuant to article 56 had been formulated. To applicants who argued that the regime of article 56 is 'outdated, geared to the colonial systems in the aftermath of the Second World War', and that 'the Convention should not be interpreted so as to allow the United Kingdom to escape responsibility for its unlawful actions where there is no objective justification for failing to extend the Convention and its Protocols fully', the Court replied:

The Court can only agree that the situation has changed considerably since the time that the Contracting Parties drafted the Convention, including former Article 63. Interpretation, albeit a necessary tool to render the protection of Convention rights practical and effective, can only go so far. It cannot unwrite provisions contained in the Convention. If the Contracting States wish to bring the declarations system to an end, this can only be possible through an amendment to the Convention to which those States agree and give evidence of their agreement through signature and ratification. Since there is no dispute as to the status of the SGSSI as a territory for whose international relations the United Kingdom is responsible within the meaning of Article 56, the Court finds that the Convention and its Protocols cannot apply unless expressly extended by declaration. The fact that the United Kingdom has extended the Convention itself to the territory gives no ground for finding that Protocol No. 1 must also apply or for the Court to require the United Kingdom somehow to justify its failure to extend that Protocol. There is no obligation under the Convention for any Contracting State to ratify any particular Protocol or to give reasons for their decisions in that regard concerning their national jurisdictions. Still less can there be any such obligation as regards the territories falling under the scope of Article 56 of the Convention.⁴⁴

Similarly, the Court explained that the 'effective control' principle of jurisdiction, applied to address cases of armed occupation and to avoid leaving a gap in the protection within the 'Convention space', does not replace the regime established by article 56.⁴⁵ 'The situations covered by the "effective control" principle are clearly separate and distinct from circumstances where a Contracting State has not, through a declaration under Article 56,

⁴¹ Quark Fishing Ltd v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 15305/06, ECHR 2006-XIV.

⁴² Chagos Islanders v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 35622/04, §§ 61–62, 11 December 2012.

⁴³ E.g., Al-Saadoon and Mufdhi v. the United Kingdom, no. 61498/08, § 165, ECHR 2010 (extracts).

⁴⁴ Quark Fishing Ltd v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 15305/06, ECHR 2006-XIV.

⁴⁵ Chagos Islanders v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 35622/04, § 39, 11 December 2012.

extended the Convention or any of its Protocols to an overseas territory for whose international relations it is responsible', it said.⁴⁶

The Court has held out the possibility of amendment of the Convention in order to remove the anomaly of article 56. But there seems little support for such a change. Indeed, Protocol No. 16 to the Convention, adopted in 2013, expressly contemplates the special jurisdictional regime set up by article 56 in that it allows the 'highest courts and tribunals' to make territorial exceptions when they submit requests for advisory opinions to the Court. According to the Explanatory Report, '[i]n order to accommodate the provisions of article 56 of the Convention, whereby it may apply to some territories of a State and not to others, article 1 of Protocol No. 16 authorises a State to make a declaration at the time of ratification of Protocol No. 16 by which it excludes certain territories'.⁴⁷

With the acquisition of independence, any declaration extending the application of the Convention to a territory and granting jurisdiction to the European Court of Human Rights comes to an end.⁴⁸ Where formerly dependent territories are part of Europe, they may subsequently join the Council of Europe in their own right, as Cyprus and Malta have done. In 1963, the United Kingdom informed the Council of Europe that Cyprus had become independent as of 16 August 1960 and that accordingly the responsibilities assumed by Her Majesty's Government under the Convention had 'lapsed' as of that date. Cyprus had been subject to the Convention prior to its independence by virtue of a declaration of extension formulated by the United Kingdom in 1953.⁴⁹ Cyprus became a State Party to the Convention on 6 October 1962. In 2004, the United Kingdom submitted a declaration of extension with regard to its two Sovereign Base Areas in Cyprus, adding that it accepted the competence of the Court to receive applications.⁵⁰

'Territories for whose international relations it is responsible'

Although colloquially referred to as the 'colonial clause', the nomenclature adopted in article 56 is 'territories for whose international relations it is responsible'. The expression is similar to what is employed in article 13 of the 1948 Genocide Convention: 'the territories for the conduct of whose foreign relations that Contracting Party is responsible'. During negotiations of the Genocide Convention, Gerald Fitzmaurice of the United Kingdom argued that such clauses had been customary in multilateral treaties for the previous twenty or thirty years, although in recent times they had raised difficulties 'based on purely political motives and designed to create difficulties for the colonial powers'.⁵¹ When the International Law Commission was drafting the Convention on the Law of Treaties, Fitzmaurice, then acting as rapporteur, distinguished between 'metropolitan' and 'dependent' territories. The term 'metropolitan territory' denoted 'all ⁴⁶ Al-Skeini and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 55721/07, § 140, ECHR 2011; Hassan v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 29750/09, § 74, 16 September 2014.

⁴⁷ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 16, para. 8.

⁴⁸ X v. the Netherlands, no. 7230/75, DR 7, p. 109.

⁴⁹ (1955–56–57) 1 YB 46–47.

⁵⁰ (2004) 47 YB 23. The two Sovereign Base Areas are deemed British Overseas Territories. They were retained by Britain pursuant to the Treaty of Establishment, (1960) 382 UNTS 160, adopted at the time of the independence of Cyprus in 1960. See the report by the rapporteur of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe on the application of human rights law, including the European Convention on Human Rights, in the Sovereign Base Areas: Situation of the inhabitants of the Sovereign Base Areas of Akrotiri and Dhekelia, Explanatory Memorandum by Mr Andreas Gross, Doc. 11232, paras 10–12.

⁵¹ UN Doc. A/C.6/SR.107.

those territories of a contracting party which are administered directly by its central government under the basic constitution of the State, in such a manner that this government is not subject, either in the domestic or in the international field, to any other or ulterior authority'. A 'dependent territory' was a territory that was not a 'metropolitan territory'.⁵² In a very early case, the European Commission noted that the phrase 'territories for whose international relations it is responsible' had 'succeeded other, more restrictive terms employed such as "colonies", or "non-metropolitan areas"'. It said 'this change represents an effort to facilitate, although without rendering compulsory, the application of the more important international treaties to territories the status of which is as varied as it is changeable but without assigning a final degree of importance to any one such status'.⁵³

In Loizidou v. Turkey, the Court offered a rather charitable explanation of the object and purpose of the colonial clause, suggesting that it sheltered a State Party from responsibility for the acts of another entity merely because it assumed responsibility for its foreign relations.⁵⁴ Indeed, there are certainly examples, even in modern times, of such relationships. British documents indicate that the United Kingdom considered the rule, subsequently codified in article 29 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, was a customary norm that could only be set aside with an express provision.⁵⁵

Determining whether a territory is properly described as a 'territory for whose international relations a State is responsible' raises problems of its own. In litigation before the Court, an applicant seeking to establish jurisdiction may argue that a territory does not in fact fall within such a category, with the consequence that it is thereby deemed to be part of the State's 'metropolitan' territory or, alternatively, a territory over which it exercises control. Either conclusion results in jurisdiction, whereas if the State can establish that the territory is a 'territory for whose international relations a State is responsible' it may then be able to invoke the absence of an article 56 declaration. The scope of the term 'territory for whose international relations a State is responsible' was considered by the European Commission of Human Rights in an early case concerning the Belgian Congo. The Commission rejected a claim by the applicants that the Congo was in fact part of Belgian territory and that as a result article 56 did not apply. The application was dismissed given the absence of any declaration by Belgium.⁵⁶ In a case against the United Kingdom concerning Guernsey, the Court referred to a statement made in 1950 by the United Kingdom and circulated widely, including within the Council of Europe, concerning the position of the Channel Islands in relation to treaties and international agreements applicable to the United Kingdom. The Court said that '[i]t was thereby established that the island of Guernsey should be regarded as a "territory for the international relations of which [the United Kingdom] is responsible"' for the purposes of treaty provisions. Because the United Kingdom had made no declaration concerning Guernsey with respect to Protocol No. 1, which was one basis of the litigation, the Court held that part of the application to be inadmissible.⁵⁷ In another application, the Commission had reached a similar conclusion with respect to Jersey.⁵⁸

⁵² UN Doc. A/CN.4/Ser.A/1959/Add.1, Vol. II, p. 48.

⁵³ X v. Belgium, no. 1065/61, Commission decision of 30 May 1961, (1961) 4 YB 260.

⁵⁴ Loizidou v. Turkey (Preliminary objections), 23 March 1995, § 67, Series A no. 310.

⁵⁵ L. Moor and A.W. Brian Simpson, 'Ghosts of Colonialism in the European Convention on Human Rights', (2006) 76 British Yearbook of International Law 121, at pp. 151–2.

⁵⁶ X v. Belgium, no. 1065/61, Commission decision of 30 May 1961, (1961) 4 YB 260.

⁵⁷ Gillow v. the United Kingdom, 24 November 1986, § 62, Series A no. 109.

⁵⁸ X v. the United Kingdom, no. 8873/80, Commission decision of 13 May 1982, DR 99, p. 99.

'Due regard for local requirements' (art. 56(3))

The Convention is to be applied in territories contemplated by article 56 'with due regard, however, to local requirements'. On the one hand, this offends notions of universality in the protection of human rights. It leaves the suspicion that European colonial powers intended that even when human rights protections were extended to their dependent territories, adjustments would be made in deference to the colonial relationship. At the same time, the recognition of local requirements 'may prove a prescient insight by its drafters in favour of a place for minorities and indigenous peoples inhabiting the last "colonies" of European Powers'.⁵⁹

France insisted upon the 'local requirements' condition in a declaration associated with its instrument of ratification: 'The Government of the Republic further declares that the Convention shall apply to the whole territory of the Republic, having due regard, where the overseas territories are concerned, to local requirements, as mentioned in Article 63 [now article 56]'.⁶⁰ France later invoked the declaration before the Court, claiming that it amounted to a reservation. With reference to overseas territories in the Pacific Ocean, France contended that 'local requirements' were the indisputable special features of protecting public order in the Pacific territories, namely their island status and distance from metropolitan France'.⁶¹

The messages in the case law of the Court as to the rationale behind paragraph 3 have not been entirely consistent. In Tyrer v. the United Kingdom, the Court opined 'that the system established by Article 63 (art. 63) was primarily designed to meet the fact that, when the Convention was drafted, there were still certain colonial territories whose state of civilisation did not, it was thought, permit the full application of the Convention'.⁶² Yet at about the same time, the European Commission said that the purpose of article 56 was not only the territorial extension of the Convention but 'its adaptation to the measure of self-government attained in particular non-metropolitan territories and to the cultural and social differences in such territories'.⁶³ In another, more recent, case, the Court limited itself to explaining the features of article 63 as being included in the Convention for 'historical reasons'.⁶⁴ France has argued before the Court that the purpose of article 56, and especially paragraph 3, is to 'take into account the autonomy afforded in such matters to certain overseas territories'.⁶⁵

The notion of 'local requirements' was invoked by the United Kingdom in the Tyrer case, where the use of corporal punishment for juveniles was challenged as a violation of article 3 of the Convention. The United Kingdom had extended the Convention to the Isle of Man in 1953. The European Commission of Human Rights said it did not find 'any significant social or cultural differences between the Isle of Man and the United ⁵⁹ Symeon Karagiannis, 'Article 29. Territorial Scope of Treaties', in Olivier Corten and Pierre Klein, eds, The Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, A Commentary, Vol. 1, Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2011, pp. 731–63, at p. 743.

⁶⁰ Cited in Piermont v. France, 27 April 1995, §§ 28, 44, Series A no. 314; Py v. France, no. 66289/01, § 59, ECHR 2005-I (extracts).

⁶¹ Piermont v. France, 27 April 1995, §56, Series A no. 314.

⁶² Tyrer v. the United Kingdom, 25 April 1978, § 38, Series A no. 26.

⁶³ Cyprus v. Turkey, nos 6780/74 and 6950/75, Commission decision of 26 May 1975, (1975) 18 YB 84, DR 2, p. 125.

⁶⁴ Al-Skeini and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 55721/07, § 140, ECHR 2011; Hassan v. the United Kingdom, [GC], no. 29750/09, § 74, 16 September 2014.

⁶⁵ Py v. France, no. 66289/01, § 26, ECHR 2005-I (extracts).

Kingdom which could be relevant to the application of Art. 3 in the present case'.⁶⁶ When the case proceeded to the Court, the United Kingdom asked the Chamber to conduct an in situ examination on the Isle of Man so that it could 'become acquainted at first hand with local circumstances and requirements in the Isle of Man, having regard to Article 63 para. 3 (art. 63-3) of the Convention, by meeting... leading members of the Manx community'.⁶⁷ Indeed, counsel for the United Kingdom insisted upon the role of local public opinion, saying it strongly endorsed the virtues of judicial corporal punishment for young offenders. Agreeing with the Commission, the Court held that 'undoubtedly sincere beliefs on the part of members of the local population afford some indication that judicial corporal punishment is considered necessary in the Isle of Man as a deterrent and to maintain law and order'.⁶⁸ But for article 56(3) to apply, 'more would be needed: there would have to be positive and conclusive proof of a requirement and the Court could not regard beliefs and local public opinion on their own as constituting such proof'.⁶⁹ In a French case, the Court concluded that '[a] political situation, admittedly a sensitive one but also one which could occur in the mother country, does not suffice in order to interpret the phrase "local requirements" as justifying an interference' with freedom of expression.⁷⁰

In only one case has the Court actually applied the 'local requirements' exception. It dealt with legislation in New Caledonia that restricted the right to vote to certain individuals. This was associated with an increasing autonomy of the local authorities. The Court said that 'the history and status of New Caledonia are such that they may be said to constitute "local requirements" warranting the restrictions imposed on the applicant's right to vote'.⁷¹ In a subsequent decision, when the Court refused to allow restrictions on the right of prisoners to vote in the United Kingdom, Judge Costa raised the issue of 'double standards'. He acknowledged that the New Caledonia decision might have found support in 'local requirements' but noted another incompatible ruling within a European State.⁷²

Individual applications to the Court (art. 56(4))

Not only does article 56 of the Convention require a declaration by States in order to extend the jurisdiction of the Court to their dependent territories, it also imposes a further condition for the right of individual petition to the Court to be permitted. The scheme is ⁶⁶ Tyler v. the United Kingdom, no. 5856/72, § 47, Commission report of 14 December 1976. See also, with respect to Guernsey: Gillow v. the United Kingdom, 24 November 1986, § 62, Series A no. 109; Wiggins v. the United Kingdom, no. 7456/76, Commission decision of 8 February 1978, DR 13, p. 40, at p. 48. To Gibraltar: Matheus v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 24833/94, § 59, ECHR 1999-I.

⁶⁷ Tyler v. the United Kingdom, 25 April 1978, § 6, Series A no. 26.

⁶⁸ Ibid. Also Py v. France, no. 66289/01, § 60, ECHR 2005-I (extracts); Matheus v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 24833/94, § 59, ECHR 1999-I.

⁶⁹ Tyler v. the United Kingdom, 25 April 1978, § 6, Series A no. 26.

⁷⁰ Piermont v. France, 27 April 1995, § 59, Series A no. 314.

⁷¹ Py v. France, no. 66289/01, § 64, ECHR 2005-I (extracts). See also Piermont v. France, 27 April 1995, Joint Partly Dissenting Opinion of Judges Ryssdal, Matscher, Sir John Freeland and Jungwiert, § 3, Series A no. 314. Along similar lines, see Matheus v. the United Kingdom, no. 24833/94, Commission report of 29 October 1997, Concurring Opinion of Mr E. Busuttil and Concurring Opinion of Mr L. Loucaides.

⁷² Hirst v. the United Kingdom (no. 2) [GC], no. 74025/01, Dissenting Opinion of Judge Costa, § 6, ECHR 2005-LX.

similar to what existed under the 1950 text of the Convention, whereby States were required to accept the jurisdiction of the Court by a declaration that was additional to their actual ratification or accession to the Convention. But paragraph 4 'hardly appears justifiable' because Protocol No. 11 generalizes and broadens the right of individual recourse to the European Court of Human Rights.⁷³

When the United Kingdom recognized the right of individual petition to the European Commission of Human Rights, in 1966, it included the following declaration: 'This declaration does not extend to petitions in relation to anything done or occurring in any territory in respect of which the competence of the European Commission of Human Rights to receive petitions has not been recognised by the Government of the United Kingdom or to petitions in relation to anything done or occurring in the United Kingdom in respect of such a territory or of matters arising there.'⁷⁴

Since Protocol No. 11 entered into force, the United Kingdom has made several declarations recognizing the competence of the Court with respect to individual petitions from territories to which the Convention has been extended. In 2001, it made such declarations valid for a period of five years with respect to several islands in the Atlantic Ocean and the Caribbean Sea, as well as the Bailiwick of Guernsey and Gibraltar. It subsequently made declarations 'on a permanent basis' with respect to the Bailiwick of Jersey, the Isle of Man, the Sovereign Base Areas of Akrotiri and Dhékélia in Cyprus, the Falkland Islands, Gibraltar, South Georgia and South Sandwich Islands, the Turks and Caicos Islands, the British Virgin Islands, Anguilla, Bermuda, Montserrat, St. Helena, Ascension, and Tristan de Cunha.⁷⁵

A potential difficulty arose in a case filed before the Commission against the United Kingdom concerning corporal punishment on the Isle of Man. An article 56 declaration was in force at the time the application was filed but it had lapsed when the Commission had dealt with the matter. The Commission considered that jurisdiction was established because a declaration had been in force at the time the initial application was filed. The United Kingdom said that it did not object to jurisdiction but 'it was not to be inferred that they necessarily agreed with the reasoning in the Commission's request'.⁷⁶

Further reading

- F. Coomans and M. Kamminga, eds, Extraterritorial Application of Human Rights Treaties, Antwerp: Intersentia, 2004.
- Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 623–7.
- Syméon Karagiannis, 'L'aménagement des droits de l'homme outre-mer: la clause des « nécessités locales » de la Convention européenne', in [1995] Revue belge de droit international 224.
- C. Lush, 'The Territorial Application of the European Convention on Human Rights: Recent Case Law', (1993) 42 ICLQ 897.

⁷³ Syméon Karagiannis, 'Article 29. Territorial Scope of Treaties', in Olivier Corten and Pierre Klein, eds, The Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, A Commentary, Vol. I, Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2011, pp. 731–63, at p. 743.

⁷⁴ Cited in Bui van Thanh and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 16137/90, Commission decision of 12 March 1990, (1990) 33 YB 59, DR 65-A, p. 330.

⁷⁵ (2004) 47 YB 24; (2006) 49 YB 9; (2009) 52 YB 8; (2010) 53 YB 26–27.

⁷⁶ Tyrer v. the United Kingdom, 25 April 1978, § 27, Series A no. 26.

- Barbara Miltner, 'Revisiting Extraterritoriality after Al-Skeini: The ECHR and Its Lessons', (2012) 33 Michigan Journal of International Law 693.
- Louise Moor and A.W. Brian Simpson, 'Ghosts of Colonialism in the European Convention on Human Rights', (2006) 76 British Yearbook of International Law 121.
- Michael Wood, 'Article 63', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 915–21.

Article 57. Reservations/Réserves

1. Any State may, when signing this Convention or when depositing its instrument of ratification, make a reservation in respect of any particular provision of the Convention to the extent that any law then in force in its territory is not in conformity with the provision. Reservations of a general character shall not be permitted under this Article.

2. Any reservation made under this Article shall contain a brief statement of the law concerned.

1. Tout Etat peut, au moment de la signature de la présente Convention ou du dépôt de son instrument de ratification, formuler une réserve au sujet d'une disposition particulière de la Convention, dans la mesure où une loi alors en vigueur sur son territoire n'est pas conforme à cette disposition. Les réserves de caractère général ne sont pas autorisées aux termes du présent article.

2. Toute réserve émise conformément au présent article comporte un bref exposé de la loi en cause.

Introductory comments

Reservations are a feature of multilateral treaty practice, although some Conventions prohibit them altogether.¹ Many treaties, however, recognize the flexibility that a reservations regime brings to them, enabling States that are in agreement with most but not all of the provisions to ratify or accede to the instrument. Some of them impose conditions of substance as well as form, such as that they be consistent with the 'object and purpose' of the treaty,² or restrict the possibility of reservation to certain provisions of the treaty.³ If the treaty is silent on the subject of reservations, the general rule set out in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties is that they must be compatible with the instrument's 'object and purpose'.⁴

The European Convention on Human Rights may well be the human rights treaty with the most generous approach to reservations. It imposes no real requirements of substance, not even that the reservation be compatible with the instrument's object and purpose. The Convention only imposes formal requirements upon the formulation of reservations.

In the 1990s, the issue of reservations was a real preoccupation of human rights institutions. This was provoked by a large number of exceedingly broad reservations to human rights treaties within the United Nations system. The problem did not really arise

¹ Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, (2002) 2187 UNTS 90, art. 120.

² American Convention on Human Rights, (1978) 1144 UNTS 123, art. 75; Convention on the Rights of the Child, (1990) 1577 UNTS 3, art. 51.

³ Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights Aimed at Abolition of the Death Penalty, (1991) 1642 UNTS 414, art. 2; Convention on the Political Rights of Women, (1953) 193 UNTS 135, art. VII; Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees, (1951) 189 UNTS 137, art. 42(1); Convention on the Nationality of Married Women, (1957) 309 UNTS 65, art. 8; International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, (1966) 660 UNTS 195, art. 20; Protocol Relating to the Status of Refugees, (1969) 606 UNTS 267, art. VII; Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women, (1980) 1249 UNTS 13, art. 28.

⁴ (1980) 1155 UNTS 331, art. 19(b).

under the European Convention on Human Rights because article 57 prohibits reservations of a general nature. In any case, the concern with reservations to human rights treaties has probably diminished in recent years, perhaps because of the growing effectiveness of mechanisms like the Universal Periodic Review of the Human Rights Council, where reservations to human rights norms are rarely, if ever, invoked by States and, for all practical purposes, appear to be virtually irrelevant.

Within the European system, there have been calls for States Parties to withdraw reservations that are no longer relevant or that have become obsolete because of legislative changes. As early as 1993, the Parliamentary Assembly said the number of reservations to Council of Europe treaties should be 'considerably reduced'.⁵ In 2004, the Parliamentary Assembly said that reservations 'should not therefore be of a permanent nature and should be confined to the period required to bring the legislation in question into conformity with the Convention'.⁶ It noted that numerous States had withdrawn reservations 'as is the intended practice'.⁷ The Committee of Ministers confirmed the position taken by the Parliamentary Assembly about the desirability of withdrawal of reservations, although it did not endorse the Assembly's proposal that a three-year deadline be set.⁸

Drafting of the provision

The idea of a reservations clause first surfaced in discussions within the Committee of Experts, in March 1950, where a favourable reference was made by some members to a Danish proposal in the debates on the draft Covenant on Human Rights in the United Nations Commission on Human Rights.⁹

At the Conference of Senior Officials, which met in June 1950, the United Kingdom proposed the following:

Article concerning reservations.

- 1) Any State may, when signing this Convention or when depositing its instrument of ratification or accession, make a reservation in respect of any provision of the Convention to the extent that any law then in force on its territory is not in conformity with that provision.
- 2) Any reservation made under this article shall contain a brief statement of the law concerned.
- 3) Reservations of a general character shall not be permitted.¹⁰

The tenor of the debates indicates that this was viewed as a transitional provision, whereby States might ratify the Convention even if their legislation was not entirely consistent with the Convention. For example, the author of the provision on reservations, Samuel Hoare, described it as 'illogical' to provide that a State could retain legislation incompatible with ⁵ Recommendation 1223 (1993) on reservations made by member states to Council of Europe Convention.

⁶ Ratification of protocols and withdrawal of reservations and derogations made in respect of the European Convention on Human Rights, Recommendation 1671 (2004), para. 7.

⁷ Ibid., para. 9.

⁸ Ibid., para. 2.

⁹ Report to the Committee of Ministers submitted by the Committee of Experts Instructed to Draw Up a Draft Convention of Collective Guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Doc. CM/WP 1 (5) 15, A 924, IV TP 2-55, at pp. 48-50.

¹⁰ Proposal submitted by the United Kingdom Delegation, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 7, A 1368, IV TP 162-5.

the Convention. He favoured imposing a time limit for a State to adjust its legislation.¹¹ During the debate, the representative of the Netherlands said 'his government would not wish there to be any reservations with regard to application of the Convention in the matter of religious freedom, except where existing legislation was concerned'.¹² The Conference adopted a provision based upon the United Kingdom's proposal, the only significant change involving moving the text of paragraph 3 to the end of paragraph 1.¹³ Related to the issue of reservations was a proposal by which States were required to make a solemn declaration to the effect that their domestic legislation gave full effect to the Convention. The Conference of Senior Officials decided not to include such a provision given that allowance was being made for States Parties to make reservations 'with respect to the maintenance of certain existing laws which might not be in accordance with a particular provision of the Convention'.¹⁴

The report of the Conference of Senior Officials was considered by the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions of the Consultative Assembly. Concerns were expressed about the provision on reservations. Members of the Committee said they should be made only 'exceptionally' and that they should be accompanied by a 'statement of reasons'. The Committee decided that States making reservations 'should undertake to send to the Secretary General of the Council of Europe periodical Reports which pointed out the reasons for which the law in question was maintained; and that this procedure should be followed until the situation was changed'.¹⁵ In its comments on the draft, the Committee said it would object if 'States were allowed unlimited power to reserve the least "ne varietur" in their legislation on each of the matters dealt with in the Convention. Such a power would threaten to deprive the latter of its practical effect and in any case of its moral authority.' The Committee added that the validity of ratifications should be subject to the acceptance of a qualified majority of the other States Parties and that it would be advisable that the motives for such reservations be stated.¹⁶

Meeting in August 1950, the Committee of Ministers formulated this text:

- 1) Any State may when signing this Convention or when depositing its instrument of ratification or accession, make a reservation in respect of any particular provision of the Convention to the extent that any law then in force in its territory is not in conformity with that provision. Reservations of a general character shall not be permitted under this Article.
- 2) Any reservation made under this article shall contain a brief statement of the law concerned.¹⁷

¹¹ Minutes of the afternoon setting [of 12 June 1950], unreferenced document, IV TP 170–81, at pp. 170–2.

¹² Ibid., p. 172.

¹³ Draft Convention appended to the draft report, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 16, appendix, A 1445, IV TP 218–40, at p. 238, art. 61.

¹⁴ Text of the report submitted by the Conference [of Senior Officials] to the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19, CM/WP 4 (50) 16 rev., A 1431, IV TP 242–73, at p. 256; Draft report to the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 16, A 1426, IV TP 204–17, at p. 216.

¹⁵ Minutes of the morning meeting [of 24 June 1950, of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions of the Consultative Assembly], Doc. AS/JA (50) PV 2, A 1841, V TP 14–21, at p. 18.

¹⁶ Letter of 24 June 1950 from Sir David Maxwell Fyfe, Chairman of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions, to the Chairman of the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM (50) 29, V TP 32–41, at p. 40. Also Additions to the draft letter proposed by M. Rolin, Doc. AS/JA (50) 3, A 1544, V TP 26–29, at p. 28; Further additions, Doc. AS/JA (50) 4, A 1546, pp. 28–31.

¹⁷ Draft Convention adopted by the Sub-Committee, Doc. CM 1 (50) 52, A 1884, V TP 76–99, at p. 88.

Adopted as article 63 in the 1950 text of the Convention, the provision was renumbered as article 57 by Protocol No. 11. The heading 'Reservations' was also added by Protocol No. 11.¹⁸

Analysis and interpretation

The Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties defines a reservation as 'a unilateral statement, however phrased or named, made by a State, when signing, ratifying, accepting, approving or acceding to a treaty, whereby it purports to exclude or to modify the legal effect of certain provisions of the treaty in their application to that State'.¹⁹ States may also make 'interpretative declarations'. The suggestion is that these are not reservations as such. However, the Court will look behind the nomenclature that the State has employed, considering the intention behind the declaration and whether or not it was in substance a reservation.²⁰ There is no substantive requirement in the sense that certain reservations are prohibited because of the rights involved.²¹ In principle, a State could even make a reservation to such fundamental rights as those set out in articles 2, 3, and 4. Nevertheless, the power to make reservations is 'a limited one, being confined to particular provisions of the Convention'.²²

The text of article 57(1) of the Convention, read in conjunction with article 1, confirms that 'ratification of the Convention by a State presupposes that any law then in force in its territory should be in conformity with the Convention'.²³ Reservations are therefore an exception to this general principle and are, consequently, subject to narrow interpretation.²⁴ However, there is no requirement that reservations to the Convention be compatible with its object and purpose, as is the case with most multilateral human rights treaties, either because they require this explicitly or because they are governed by article 31 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties. A descendent of the Italian royal family contended before the Court that a reservation to article 3(2) of Protocol No. 4 respecting legislation that prevented his return to Italy was invalid because it was inspired by discriminatory grounds based on birth and sex, thereby violating the universal scope of the Convention. The Court said that serious questions of fact and in law were raised, in particular concerning the validity of the reservation.²⁵ However, the case never did proceed to the merits. In 2002, as part of the settlement of these proceedings, Italy

¹⁸ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(2).

¹⁹ (1980) 1155 UNTS 331, art. 2(1)(d).

²⁰ Belilos v. Switzerland, 29 April 1988, § 49, Series A no. 132; Temelash v. Switzerland, no. 9116/80, Commission report of 5 May 1982, DR 31, p. 147, § 73; Ilaşcu and Others v. Moldova and Russia (dec.) [GC], no. 48787/99, 4 July 2001.

²¹ But see Belilos v. Switzerland, 29 April 1988, Concurring Opinion of Judge de Meyer, Series A no. 132.

²² Loizidou v. Turkey (Preliminary objections), 23 March 1995, § 76, Series A no. 310.

²³ Slivenko v. Latvia [GC], no. 48321/99, § 60, ECHR 2003-X.

²⁴ Schmautzer v. Austria, 23 October 1995, § 31, Series A no. 328-A; Umlauf v. Austria, 23 October 1995, § 34, Series A no. 328-B.

²⁵ Victor-Emmanuel De Savoie v. Italy (dec.), no. 53360/99, 13 September 2001.

notified the Secretary General of the Council of Europe, as well as the Court itself,²⁶ that it had withdrawn the declaration in question.

The Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties contemplates a system whereby States Parties themselves determine the legality of reservations through the mechanism of objections. This does not correspond to practice under the European Convention where the Court 'always retains the power to examine whether or not a purported reservation has been validly made in conformity with the requirements of Article 57'.²⁷ The silence of the depositary and States Parties does not prevent the Court from making its own assessment.²⁸ If the Court determines that a reservation is valid, it is without jurisdiction ratione materiae to consider the conformity of the legal provisions governed by the reservation with the rights set out in the Convention.²⁹

The Court has noted the relevance of reservations to the interpretation of the Convention in a more general sense. It has said with respect to article 2 of Protocol No. 1 that the existence of reservations tends to confirm the fact that the final draft of the provision 'does not seem to settle a number of doubts about its application'.³⁰

Formulation at time of signature or ratification

A reservation to the European Convention on Human Rights must be made at the time the State signs or ratifies the treaty, as article 57(1) makes quite clear. There are examples in the practice of States Parties to the European Convention of modification of a reservation subsequent to signature or ratification. This would seem to be prohibited by the Convention. In one case concerning the modification by Liechtenstein of its reservation, the Court declined to pronounce itself on this issue, noting that the change in the reservation was not relevant to the dispute.³¹

When Greece ratified Protocol No. 1 for the second time (having denounced the Convention and the Protocols in 1970), it formulated the following reservation: 'For the application of Article 2 of the 1952 Protocol, the Government of Greece, in view of certain provisions of the Education Acts in force in Greece, formulates a reservation according to which the principle affirmed in the second sentence of Article 2, is accepted only so far as it is compatible with the provision of efficient instruction and training, and the avoidance of unreasonable public expenditure'.³² Four years later, it informed the Council of Europe that the reservation had been entered by mistake and that it should be removed and replaced with the following: 'The application of the word philosophical which is the penultimate word of the second sentence of Article 2, will, in Greece, conform with the relevant provisions of internal legislation'.³³ The new reservation was in fact equivalent to the one made by Greece at the time of signature of the Protocol, in 1952. The depositary of the Convention replied to Greece that the 1952 reservation had ²⁶ Victor-Emmanuel De Savoie v. Italy (striking out), no. 53360/99, § 21, 24 April 2003.

²⁷ Slivenko v. Latvia [GC], no. 48321/99, § 60, ECHR 2003-X.

²⁸ Belilos v. Switzerland, 29 April 1988, § 47, Series A no. 132.

²⁹ Slivenko v. Latvia [GC], no. 48321/99, § 60, ECHR 2003-X; Labzov v. Russia (dec.), no. 62208/00, 28 February 2002.

³⁰ Kjeldsen, Busk Madsen and Pedersen v. Denmark, nos 5095/71, 5920/72, and 5926/72, Commission report of 21 March 1975, § 154.

³¹ Schädler-Eberle v. Liechtenstein, no. 56422/09, § 74, 18 July 2013.

³² (1976) 19 YB 20–21.

³³ (1979) 22 YB 14–15.

not been included in a recent publication because 'it was supposed that the reservation of 1974 to the same article had replaced the previous one'. The letter confirmed that it was the intention of Greece to withdraw the 1974 text and to 'retain the reservation made in 1952'. The depositary said that this would be brought to the attention of Council of Europe Member States.³⁴

Law then in force

A reservation must relate to specific laws in force at the moment of ratification; although the case law is not entirely clear on this, it seems that the requirement that the reservation applies only to the law then in force means that it cannot cover future amendments or changes or new legislation in the same field.³⁵ If a new legislative provision is not essentially identical to the provision in force at the time of ratification, but extends the measures covered by the reservation, article 57 is not respected.³⁶

An interesting problem arose in a Lithuanian case concerning the temporal scope of a reservation. At the time of ratification, Lithuania had formulated a reservation to article 5(3) that expired one year after entry into force of the Convention. The fact that the applicant was not brought before an appropriate officer when detention on remand was ordered, during the period when the reservation applied, could not therefore be a violation of the Convention.³⁷ The applicant argued that once the reservation had expired he was then entitled to be 'brought promptly' before an appropriate officer. The Court held that the term 'brought promptly' referred to the time when the individual was first deprived of liberty, and that only then was a State required to implement the obligation to bring the individual promptly before an appropriate officer. It said: 'A reservation under Article 57 of the Convention would be devoid of purpose if, upon its expiry, the State were required to enforce the right retroactively for the period covered by the reservation.'³⁸ Therefore, 'when the reservation expired Lithuania was no longer under an obligation to bring the applicant promptly before an appropriate officer. Consequently, there was no scope under Article 5 § 3 for a renewed obligation after the expiry of the reservation.'³⁹

Prohibition of reservations of a general character

Reservations are only permissible if they respond to criteria of precision and clarity.⁴⁰ Paragraph 1 prohibits reservations of a general character. According to the European Commission of Human Rights, 'a reservation is of a general nature . . . when it is worded in such a way that it does not allow its scope to be determined'.⁴¹ According to the Court, the 'general character' criterion denotes 'in particular a reservation which does not refer to ³⁴ Ibid., pp. 14–17.

³⁵ Shestjorkin v. Estonia (dec.), no. 49450/99, 15 June 2000; Pöder and Others v. Estonia (dec.), no. 67723/01, 26 April 2005.

³⁶ Fischer v. Austria, 26 April 1995, § 41, Series A no. 312; Stallinger and Kuso v. Austria, 23 April 1997, § 48, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-II; Eisenstecken v. Austria, no. 29477/95, § 25, ECHR 2000-X; Dacosta Silva v. Spain, no. 69966/01, § 37, ECHR 2006-XIII.

³⁷ Jėčius v. Lithuania, no. 34578/97, § 82, ECHR 2000-IX.

³⁸ Ibid., § 85.

³⁹ Ibid., § 86. Also Grauslys v. Lithuania, no. 36743/97, § 49, 10 October 2000.

⁴⁰ Schädler-Eberle v. Liechtenstein, no. 56422/09, § 62, 18 July 2013.

⁴¹ Temeltaş v. Switzerland, no. 9116/80, § 84, Commission report of 5 May 1982, DR 31, p. 147.

a specific provision of the Convention or is couched in terms that are too vague or broad for it to be possible to determine their exact meaning and scope'.⁴²

Examining Switzerland's 'declaration' concerning article 6(3)(e), the European Commission noted that it was 'clearly worded' and that it 'expressly refers to a provision of the Convention'. Thus, it could not be deemed a reservation of a general character.⁴³ But subsequently, the European Court said that Switzerland's reservation to article 6(1) did not meet the general character criterion. It was 'couched in terms that are too vague or broad for it to be possible to determine their exact meaning and scope'.⁴⁴

Need for a brief statement of the law

In the absence of a brief statement of the law, a reservation will be declared non-compliant with the provisions of article 57 and invalid. The reservation will not apply to a law that it does not mention.⁴⁵ The Special Rapporteur on reservations of the International Law Commission has described this as a 'requirement to give reasons (or to explain)'.⁴⁶ Noting the absence of such a statement accompanying a general reservation to article 6 formulated by Austria in 1958, at the time of ratification, the Court said that 'a reservation which merely refers to a permissive, non-exhaustive, provision of the Constitution and which does not refer to, or mention, those specific provisions of the Austrian legal order which exclude public hearings, does not "afford to a sufficient degree "a guarantee . . . that [it] does not go beyond the provision expressly excluded" by Austria'.⁴⁷ In Belilos v. Switzerland, the Court held that the requirement that a reservation shall contain a brief statement of the law concerned is not a 'purely formal requirement but a condition of substance which constitutes an evidential factor and contributes to legal certainty'.⁴⁸ Such a 'stricter approach' was confirmed in subsequent judgments.⁴⁹

The requirement of a brief statement is both an evidential factor and something that contributes to legal certainty. According to the Court, '[t]he purpose of Article 57 § 2 is to provide a guarantee—in particular for the other Contracting Parties and the Convention institutions—that a reservation does not go beyond the provisions expressly excluded by the State concerned. This is not a purely formal requirement, but a condition of substance'.⁵⁰

It is not necessary to provide a description, even a concise one, of the substance of the texts governed by the reservation.⁵¹ The requirements of article 57 were considered to ⁴² Schädler-Eberle v. Liechtenstein, no. 56422/09, § 62, 18 July 2013; Belilos v. Switzerland, 29 April 1988, § 55, Series A no. 132; Koslova and Smirnova v. Latvia (dec.), no. 57381/00, 23 October 2001; Shesjorkin v. Estonia (dec.), no. 49450/99, 15 June 2000; Steck-Risch v. Liechtenstein (dec.), no. 63151/00, ECHR 2004-II.

⁴³ Temeltasch v. Switzerland, no. 9116/80, § 84, Commission report of 5 May 1982, DR 31, p. 147.

⁴⁴ Belilos v. Switzerland, 29 April 1988, § 55, Series A no. 132.

⁴⁵ Püpedis v. Latvia (dec.), no. 53631/00, 15 February 2001.

⁴⁶ Report of the International Law Commission, Sixtieth session (5 May–6 June and 7 July–8 August 2008), UN Doc. A/63/10, p. 185.

⁴⁷ Eisenstecken v. Austria, no. 29477/95, § 29, ECHR 2000-X, citing Gradingner v. Austria, 23 October 1995, § 51, Series A no. 328-C and Chorherr v. Austria, 25 August 1993, § 20, Series A no. 266-B.

⁴⁸ Belilos v. Switzerland, 29 April 1988, § 59, Series A no. 132.

⁴⁹ Weber v. Switzerland, 22 May 1990, § 38, Series A no. 177; Eisenstecken v. Austria, no. 29477/95, § 24, ECHR 2000-X.

⁵⁰ Schädler-Eberle v. Liechtenstein, no. 56422/09, § 63, 18 July 2013; Belilos v. Switzerland, 29 April 1988, § 59, Series A no. 132; Weber v. Switzerland, 22 May 1990, § 38, Series A no. 177; Steck-Risch v. Liechtenstein (dec.), no. 63151/00, ECHR 2004-II; Dacosta Silva v. Spain, no. 69966/01, § 37, ECHR 2006-XIII.

⁵¹ Schädler-Eberle v. Liechtenstein, no. 56422/09, § 64, 18 July 2013.

have been met when the title of each law cited in a reservation was followed by a reference to the Official Gazette, 'so that anyone can identify precisely which laws are concerned and obtain information about them'. In addition, the annex briefly outlined the main aim and scope of each law contemplated by the reservation.⁵² However, practical difficulties, such as listing and briefly describing all applicable legal enactments, do not justify a failure to comply with the requirements of article 57.⁵³

When States formulate what amount to disguised reservations, labelling them 'interpretative declarations', they may not include a specific reference to legislation, with the consequence that what amounts to a reservation in substance is incompatible with the terms of article 57.⁵⁴ For example, upon signature Monaco made the following declaration: 'The Principality of Monaco undertakes to respect the provisions of the Convention while emphasising that the fact that it forms a State with limited territorial dimensions requires paying special attention to the issues of residence and work as well as to social measures in respect of foreigners, even if these matters are not covered by the Convention.'⁵⁵ Similar declarations were made by San Marino⁵⁶ and by Andorra.⁵⁷

States have occasionally made reservations with respect to international treaties in force at the time of ratification. For example, Austria made a reservation to article 1 of Protocol No. 1 with respect to the provisions of the 1955 State Treaty. The Court has acknowledged that reservations concerning international treaties are permissible under article 57.⁵⁸

Territorial reservations

Article 29 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties states that '[u]nless a different intention appears from the treaty or is otherwise established, a treaty is binding upon each party in respect of its entire territory'. The European Convention does not expressly provide for territorial reservations. It is, of course, possible to restrict the application of the Convention to a State's metropolitan territory, in accordance with article 56 of the Convention. However, where article 56 is not applicable, a State may not use a reservation to limit the territorial scope of the Convention. The Court has noted that the situation is different before the International Court of Justice but considers that such a distinction is explained by the 'fundamental difference in the role and purpose of the respective tribunals'.⁵⁹

When Turkey accepted the jurisdiction of the Court under the provisions of the Convention in effect prior to the entry into force of Protocol No. 11, it claimed to restrict this to its metropolitan territory. Turkey was without colonies and therefore article

⁵² Koslova and Smirnova v. Latvia (dec.), no. 57381/00, 23 October 2001; Chorherr v. Austria, 25 August 1993, § 20, Series A no. 266-B; Steck-Risch v. Lichtenstein (dec.), no. 63151/00, ECHR 2004-II; Rékási v. Hungary, no. 31506/96, Commission decision of 25 November 1996.

⁵³ Grande Stevens and Others v. Italy, nos 18640/10, 18647/10, 18663/10, 18668/10, and 18698/10, § 210, 4 March 2014; Liepājnieks v. Latvia (dec.), no. 37586/06, § 45, 2 November 2010; Belilos v. Switzerland, 29 April 1988, § 59, Series A no. 132.

⁵⁴ Ilaçcu and Others v. Moldova and Russia (dec.) [GC], no. 48787/99, 4 July 2001; Gradinger v. Austria, 23 October 1995, § 50, Series A no. 328-C.

⁵⁵ (2004) 47 YB 21.

⁵⁶ (1989) 32 YB 5.

⁵⁷ (1996) 39 YB 20.

⁵⁸ Slivenko v. Latvia [GC], no. 48321/99, § 61, ECHR 2003-X.

⁵⁹ Loizidou v. Turkey (Preliminary objections), 23 March 1995, § 85, Series A no. 310.

56 could not apply. Nevertheless, it apparently anticipated the possible application of the Convention to the territory it has occupied in Cyprus since the 1974 invasion. The Court referred to article 57 and its restriction of the scope of reservations as evidence that 'States could not qualify their acceptance of the optional clauses thereby effectively excluding areas of their law and practice within their "jurisdiction" from supervision by the Convention institutions'.⁶⁰ It raised the spectre of an inequality between States Parties that such qualified acceptance of jurisdiction might create, noting that this would also 'run counter to the aim, as expressed in the Preamble to the Convention, to achieve greater unity in the maintenance and further realisation of human rights'.⁶¹

Some States that do not fully control their own territory have made declarations explaining that they are not to be held responsible for violations of the Convention in such places. Moldova formulated a declaration at the time of ratification indicating that 'it will be unable to guarantee compliance with the provisions of the Convention in respect of omissions and acts committed by the organs of the self-proclaimed Trans-Dniester republic within the territory actually controlled by such organs, until the conflict in the region is finally settled'.⁶² Upon ratification of Protocol No. 13, Moldova declared that 'until the full re-establishment of the territorial integrity of the Republic of Moldova, the provisions of the Protocol shall be applied only on the territory controlled effectively by the authorities of the Republic of Moldova'. Before the European Court of Human Rights, Moldova maintained that its declaration was a reservation satisfying the terms of article 57 of the Convention.⁶³ The Grand Chamber noted that the declaration itself did not purport to be a 'reservation', although it acknowledged a line of cases requiring that it look behind the title to determine the real intent.⁶⁴ The Court said that the Moldovan declaration did not comply with the terms of article 57 because it was general in nature, concluding that it could not be deemed a reservation.⁶⁵

Azerbaijan made a similar declaration with respect to Mountainous Karabakh, stating at the time of ratification 'that it is unable to guarantee the application of the provisions of the Convention in the territories occupied by the Republic of Armenia until these territories are liberated from that occupation'. When it ratified Protocol No. 12 and Protocol No. 13, Georgia declared that it was not responsible for violations on the territories of Abkhazia and Tskhinvali Region 'until the full jurisdiction of Georgia is restored'.⁶⁶

Objections

The Convention does not provide expressly for the possibility of objections to reservations. The Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties codifies a reservations regime based upon the consent of other States Parties. It presents itself in a negative manner, in that the other States Parties to a multilateral treaty are deemed to consent in the absence of an objection that is formulated promptly. The relevant provision of the Convention states that '[a] reservation expressly authorized by a treaty does not require any subsequent ⁶⁰ Ibid., § 77.

⁶¹ Ibid.

⁶² (1997) 40 YB 35, 52.

⁶³ Ilaşcu and Others v. Moldova and Russia (dec.) [GC], no. 48787/99, 4 July 2001.

⁶⁴ Referring to Belilos v. Switzerland, 29 April 1988, § 49, Series A no. 132; Temelashch v. Switzerland, no. 9116/80, § 73, Commission report of 5 May 1982, DR 31, p. 147.

⁶⁵ Ilaşcu and Others v. Moldova and Russia (dec.) [GC], no. 48787/99, 4 July 2001.

⁶⁶ (2001) 44 YB 24; (2003) 46 YB 13.

acceptance by the other contracting States unless the treaty so provides'.⁶⁷ It seems that the objections regime contemplated by article 20 of the Vienna Convention is inapplicable to the European Convention system. There have been only a few examples of a practice that resembles objections to reservations.

In 1987, Turkey formulated a declaration pursuant to what was then article 24 of the Convention, recognizing the jurisdiction of the European Commission of Human Rights to receive individual petitions but limited to 'the boundaries of the territory to which the Constitution of the Republic of Turkey is applicable'. This was contested by several States Parties. Greece was the most insistent of them, describing the 'reservation' as being 'null and void'. Other States issued declarations indicating their doubts about the validity of the Turkish position.⁶⁸ When it ruled the Turkish 'reservation' to be invalid, the Court did not describe the various statements as 'objections'. Rather, it viewed them as evidence of a practice among the States Parties by which territorial exceptions to declarations recognizing the jurisdiction of the Commission to receive individual petitions were not acceptable under the Convention.⁶⁹

At the time of ratification, Portugal formulated a rather militant reservation: 'Article 1 of the Protocol will be applied subject to Article 82 of the Constitution of the Portuguese Republic, which provides that expropriations of large landowners, big property owners and entrepreneurs or shareholders may be subject to no compensation under the conditions to be laid down by the law.'⁷⁰ The United Kingdom reacted to the reservation with a letter to the Secretary General of the Council of Europe 're-affirm[ing] the view of the Government of the United Kingdom that the general principles of international law require the payment of prompt, adequate and effective compensation in respect of the expropriation of foreign property'.⁷¹ Similar statements were made by Germany and France. The Secretary General replied to each country noting that the letters did not constitute a formal objection to the Portuguese reservation but that they would nevertheless be circulated to Member States.⁷² The Special Rapporteur on reservations of the International Law Commission presented this as an example of a reaction to a reservation that does not constitute an objection.⁷³

Further reading

- Henry J. Bourguignon, 'The Belilos Case: New Light on Reservations to Multilateral Treaties', (1989) 29 Virginia Journal of International Law 347.
- Iain Cameron and Frank Horn, 'Reservations to the European Convention on Human Rights: the Belilos Case', (1990) 33 German Yearbook of International Law 97-109.
- G rard Cohen-Jonathan, 'Les r serves   la Convention europ enne des droits de l'homme (  propos de l'arr t Belilos du 29 avril 1988)', (1989) 93 Revue g n rale de droit international public 273.

⁶⁷ Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, (1980) 1155 UNTS 331, art. 20.

⁶⁸ Loizidou v. Turkey (Preliminary objections), 23 March 1995, §§ 15-24, Series A no. 310.

⁶⁹ Ibid., § 81.

⁷⁰ (1978) 21 YB 16-19.

⁷¹ (1979) 22 YB 16-17.

⁷² Ibid., pp. 16-23.

⁷³ Report of the International Law Commission, Fifty-seventh session. (2 May-3 June and 11 July-5 August 2005), UN Doc. A/60/10, pp. 191-2.

- G rard Cohen-Jonathan, 'Les r serves dans les trait s institutionnels relatifs aux droits de l'homme. Nouveaux aspects europ ens et internationaux', [1996] Revue g n rale de droit international public 915.
- Jean-Fran ois Flauss, 'Le contentieux de la validit  des r serves   la CEDH devant le tribunal f d ral suisse: Requiem pour la d claration interpr tative relative   l'article 6§1', (1993) 5 Revue universelle des droits de l'homme 297.
- Cees Flinterman, 'Reservations (Article 57)', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 1101-15.
- Jochen Abr. Frowein, 'Reservations to the European Convention on Human Rights', in F. Matscher and H. Petzold, eds, Protecting Human Rights: The European Dimension, Cologne: Carl Heymanns, 1988, pp. 193-200.
- Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 628-33.
- P.-H. Imbert, 'Reservations to the European Convention on Human Rights before the Strasbourg Commission: The Temeltasch Case', (1984) 33 ICLQ 558.
- Susan Marks, 'Reservations Unhinged: The Belilos Case before the European Court of Human Rights', (1990) 39 ICLQ 300.
- Ronald St J. Macdonald, 'Reservations under the European Convention on Human Rights', (1988) 21 Revue belge de droit international 428.
- J.G. Merrills, 'Belilos Case', (1988) 69 British Yearbook of International Law 386.
- William Schabas, 'Article 64', in Pettiti et al., La Convention europ enne, pp. 923-42.

Article 58. Denunciation/Dénonciation

1. A High Contracting Party may denounce the present Convention only after the expiry of five years from the date on which it became a party to it and after six months' notice contained in a notification addressed to the Secretary General of the Council of Europe, who shall inform the other High Contracting Parties.

2. Such a denunciation shall not have the effect of releasing the High Contracting Party concerned from its obligations under this Convention in respect of any act which, being capable of constituting a violation of such obligations, may have been performed by it before the date at which the denunciation became effective.

3. Any High Contracting Party which shall cease to be a member of the Council of Europe shall cease to be a Party to this Convention under the same conditions.

4. The Convention may be denounced in accordance with the provisions of the preceding paragraphs in respect of any territory to which it has been declared to extend under the terms of Article 56.

1. Une Haute Partie contractante ne peut dénoncer la présente Convention qu'après l'expiration d'un délai de cinq ans à partir de la date d'entrée en vigueur de la Convention à son égard et moyennant un préavis de six mois, donné par une notification adressée au Secrétaire Général du Conseil de l'Europe, qui en informe les autres Parties contractantes.

2. Cette dénonciation ne peut avoir pour effet de délier la Haute Partie contractante intéressée des obligations contenues dans la présente Convention en ce qui concerne tout fait qui, pouvant constituer une violation de ces obligations, aurait été accompli par elle antérieurement à la date à laquelle la dénonciation produit effet.

Sous la même réserve cesserait d'être Partie à la présente Convention toute Partie contractante qui cesserait d'être membre du Conseil de l'Europe.

La Convention peut être dénoncée conformément aux dispositions des paragraphes précédents en ce qui concerne tout territoire auquel elle a été déclarée applicable aux termes de l'article 56.

Introductory comments

In contrast with the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the European Convention expressly allows a State to denounce the Convention. The United Nations Human Rights Committee has taken the view that a human rights treaty like the Covenant is 'not the type of treaty which, by its nature, implies a right of denunciation'.¹ But even many very modern international human rights treaties permit denunciation, including the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities² and the Optional Protocols to the Convention on the Rights of the Child dealing with Child Soldiers³ and Pornography.⁴ In practice, denunciation of human rights treaties is an exceedingly rare

¹ General Comment on Issues relating to the Continuity of Obligations to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, UN Doc. CCPR/C/21/Rev.1/Add.8/Rev.1, para. 3.

² Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, UN Doc. A/RES/61/106, Annex I, art. 48.

³ Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict, (2002) 2173 UNTS 222, art. 11.

⁴ Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution, and Child Pornography, (2002) 2171 UNTS 227, art. 15.

phenomenon, possibly because of the flexibility that treaties offer States in terms of limitations, restrictions, and derogation.

Drafting of the provision

A text dealing with denunciation of the Convention was proposed by the United Kingdom at the penultimate session of the Committee of Ministers, in early August 1950. It read as follows: 'Any Contracting State may denounce the present Convention by notification to the Secretary General of the Council of Europe. Denunciation shall take effect as from the thirtieth day after the receipt of this notification by the Secretary General of the Council of Europe.'⁵ The United Kingdom said that if a denunciation clause was agreed to, it would also be necessary to provide for declarations of denunciation with respect to colonial territories.⁶ A Sub-Committee initially adopted a provision consisting of three paragraphs of article 58, the second and third of which are identical to that of article 58(2) and (3). The text of paragraph 1 contained slight differences of no significance compared with that of article 58(1).⁷ In discussion about the 'colonial clause', the United Kingdom noted that, depending upon the text that was adopted, it might be necessary to include an additional provision in the article on denunciation: 'The Convention may be denounced in accordance with the provisions of the preceding paragraph in respect of any territory to which it has been declared to extend under the terms of article 62.'⁸ When the 'colonial clause' was finalized, the fourth paragraph of the denunciation clause was also adopted.⁹

The provision was renumbered as article 58 and given the heading 'Denunciation' by Protocol No. 11. An amendment to the numbering of the article in paragraph 4 also resulted from Protocol No. 11.¹⁰

Analysis and interpretation

Although political figures within States Parties have occasionally invoked the spectre of denunciation of the Convention,¹¹ it has in fact taken place only once. On 12 December 1969, Greece announced its decision to withdraw from the Council of Europe. This came on the heels of the adoption of a report by the European Commission of Human Rights that the fascist junta that had taken power in Greece in 1967 had violated several ⁵ Amendments proposed by the United Kingdom Delegation, Doc. CM 1 (50) 6, A 1867, V TP 66–71, at pp. 68–70.

⁶ Ibid., p. 70.

⁷ Draft Convention adopted by the Sub-Committee, Doc. CM 1 (50) 52, A 1884, V TP 76–99, at p. 97, art 64.

⁸ Provisions of the Draft Convention about which agreement was not reached in the Sub Committee, Final version, Doc. CM 1 (50) 53, A 1889, IV TP 102–7, at p. 106.

⁹ Minutes of the meeting [of 7 August 1950 of the Committee of Ministers], V TP 108–11, at p. 110; Report of the meeting [of 7 August 1950 of the Committee of Ministers], V TP 110–21, at p. 120.

¹⁰ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(2).

¹¹ Joshua Rozenberg, 'Tory Plans for European Human Rights Convention will Take UK Back 50 years', The Guardian, 3 October 2014; L.R. Helfer, 'Not Fully Committed? Reservations, Risk, and Treaty Design', (2006) 31 Yale Journal of International Law 367, at p. 374.

provisions of the Convention.¹² In accordance with article 7 of the Statute of the Council of Europe, Greece's withdrawal would take place on 31 December 1970. The consequence of this would be withdrawal from the European Convention on Human Rights in accordance with article 58(3). However, invoking article 58 of Convention, the Greek regime also denounced the Convention on 12 December 1969.¹³ In accordance with article 58(1), such a measure would become effective on 13 June 1970.¹⁴

On 10 April 1970, Denmark, Norway, and Sweden introduced a second inter-State application directed against Greece. The European Commission of Human Rights considered it was competent to consider the pending application directed against Greece.¹⁵ However, it subsequently reported to the Committee of Ministers that, given the circumstances created by a military coup, it could not 'adequately continue its functions in this case with a view to the eventual adoption of a Report'.¹⁶ When Greece again joined the Council of Europe in 1974, the Commission renewed its consideration of the application.¹⁷ It was eventually struck from the list when the applicant States and Greece indicated they did not wish to proceed.¹⁸ The Committee of Ministers had already decided not to continue its examination of the earlier report of the Commission given 'the fundamental changes which have since occurred in Greece, as illustrated by the procedure already initiated for the readmission of Greece to the Council of Europe'.¹⁹

Paragraph 4 of article 58 permits a State Party to withdraw a declaration of territorial application that it may have made pursuant to article 56. No State Party has invoked this provision.

Further reading

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 634–6.

Pierre-Henri Imbert, 'Article 65', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 943–56.

A.-Ch. Kiss and Ph. Vegleris, 'L'affaire grèque devant le Conseil de l'Europe et la Commission européenne des droits de l'homme', [1971] Annuaire français de droit international 889.

Yogesh Tyagi, 'The Denunciation of Human Rights Treaties', (2008) 79 British Yearbook of International Law 86.

¹² Denmark, Norway, Sweden, and the Netherlands v. Greece, nos 3321/67, 3322/67, 3323/67, and 3344/67, Commission report of 5 November 1969, (1969) 12 YB 'The Greek case' 1. See Yogesh Tyagi, 'The Denunciation of Human Rights Treaties', (2008) 79 British Yearbook of International Law 86, at pp. 157–60.

¹³ Note verbale, 12 December 1970, (1969) 12 YB 79–83.

¹⁴ Note verbale, 17 December 1970, (1969) 12 YB 82–85.

¹⁵ Denmark, Norway, and Sweden v. Greece, no. 4448/70, Commission decision of 26 May 1970, (1970) 13 YB 108; Denmark, Norway, and Sweden v. Greece, no. 4448/70, Commission decision of 16 July 1970, (1970) 13 YB 122, Collection 34, p. 70. See A.-Ch. Kiss and Ph. Vegleris, 'L'affaire grèque devant le Conseil de l'Europe et la Commission européenne des droits de l'homme', [1971] Annuaire français de droit international 889.

¹⁶ Denmark, Norway, and Sweden v. Greece, no. 4448/70, Report of the Commission on the Present State of the Proceedings, 5 October 1970.

¹⁷ Denmark, Norway, and Sweden v. Greece, no. 4448/70, Commission report of 4 October 1976, para. 6.

¹⁸ Ibid., para. 10.

¹⁹ Resolution DH (74) 2, 26 November 1974.

Article 59. Signature and ratification/Signature et ratification

1. This Convention shall be open to the signature of the members of the Council of Europe. It shall be ratified. Ratifications shall be deposited with the Secretary General of the Council of Europe.

2. The European Union may accede to this Convention.

3. The present Convention shall come into force after the deposit of ten instruments of ratification.

4. As regards any signatory ratifying subsequently, the Convention shall come into force at the date of the deposit of its instrument of ratification.

5. The Secretary General of the Council of Europe shall notify all the members of the Council of Europe of the entry into force of the Convention, the names of the High Contracting Parties who have ratified it, and the deposit of all instruments of ratification which may be effected subsequently.

1. La présente Convention est ouverte à la signature des membres du Conseil de l'Europe. Elle sera ratifiée. Les ratifications seront déposées près le Secrétaire général du Conseil de l'Europe.

2. L'Union européenne peut adhérer à la présente Convention.

3. La présente Convention entrera en vigueur après le dépôt de dix instruments de ratification.

4. Pour tout signataire qui la ratifiera ultérieurement, la Convention entrera en vigueur dès le dépôt de l'instrument de ratification.

5. Le Secrétaire général du Conseil de l'Europe notifiera à tous les membres du Conseil de l'Europe l'entrée en vigueur de la Convention, les noms des Hautes Parties contractantes qui l'auront ratifiée, ainsi que le dépôt de tout instrument de ratification intervenu ultérieurement.

Introductory comments

All international treaties and conventions make provision for the means by which a State establishes on the international plane its consent to be bound by a treaty. In the case of multilateral treaties, as a general rule the number of ratifications or accessions necessary for entry into force is also specified. It is also customary to indicate a depositary of the treaty. The European Convention does this only implicitly.

Drafting of the provision

The early drafts of the Convention prepared by the European Movement and the Consultative Assembly did not contain provisions dealing with ratification and entry into force. The text first emerged in the March 1950 draft adopted by the Committee of Experts:

1. This Convention shall be submitted for ratification. The ratifications shall be deposited with the Secretariat General of the Council of Europe.
2. This Convention shall come into force after the deposit of [nine] instruments of ratification.
3. As regards any signatory State ratifying subsequently, the Convention shall come into force at the date of the deposit of the instrument of ratification.¹

¹ Appendix to the Report of the Committee of Experts on Human Rights: Draft Convention of Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 16 March 1950, Doc. C/WP 1 (50) 15 appendix, CM/WP 1

The Commentary on the text explained that '[h]aving regard to the fact that the expenses of the Commission (and of the Court) are to be borne by the Council of Europe, it appeared right that the Convention should not enter into force until after its ratification by a certain number of the Member States of the Council of Europe'. The Committee recommended that the number be nine, but acknowledged that the decision was 'of a political nature'.² The initial proposal had contemplated the possibility of accession by Member States of the Council of Europe but the idea was not initially pursued.³

The Conference of Senior Officials debated this issue, with opinions ranging from six to nine ratifications.⁴ The text was significantly revised, and lengthened, by the Conference of Senior Officials, meeting in June 1950. It adopted this text as article 64, the final provision of the Convention aside from the signature clause:

1. This Convention shall be open to the signature of the Member States of the Council of Europe and submitted for ratification. The ratification shall be deposited with the Secretariat General of the Council of Europe.
2. This Convention shall come into force after the deposit of ten instruments of ratification.
3. As regards any signatory ratifying subsequently the Convention shall come into force at the date of the deposit of its instrument of ratification.
4. Any Members of the Council of Europe may accede thereafter to this Convention by depositing their instrument of accession with the Secretariat General of the Council of Europe.
5. The Secretary-General of the Council of Europe shall notify all the High Contracting Parties of the entry into force of the Convention, the names of the High Contracting Parties who have ratified it, and the deposit of all instruments of ratification which may be effected subsequently.⁵

In preparation for adoption of the Convention in November 1950, the Secretariat General proposed a number of drafting or technical adjustments. It suggested that references to accession be deleted. One change that this occasioned was the removal of the fourth paragraph of the article.⁶

At the Sixth Session of the Committee of Ministers held in Rome on 2–3 November 1950, the Committee of Legal Experts agreed on the following signature clause:

Done at Rome this . . . day of November 1950 in English and French, both texts being equally authentic, in a single copy which shall remain deposited in the archives of the Council of Europe. The Secretary-General shall transmit certified copies to each of the signatories.

For the Government of the Kingdom of Belgium . . .

Etc., etc.⁷

(50) 14 revised, A 925, IV TP 50–79, at p. 76, art. 48. An earlier draft had suggested seven as the number for entry into force: Proposed final provisions—Section V, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 5, A 906, III TP 302–3.

² Report to the Committee of Ministers submitted by the Committee of Experts Instructed to Draw Up a Draft Convention of Collective Guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Doc. CM/WP 1 (5) 15, A 924, IV TP 2–55, at p. 46.

³ Proposed final provisions—Section V, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 5, A 906, III TP 302–3.

⁴ Minutes of the afternoon sitting [of 12 June 1950], unreferenced document, IV TP 170–81, at p. 174.

⁵ Draft Convention annexed to the Report, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19 annex, CM/WP 4 (50) rev., A 1452, IV TP 274–95, at p. 294, art. 61.

⁶ Drafting changes proposed by the Secretariat-General, Doc. A 2520, VI TP 274–9, at p. 276.

⁷ Report of the Committee [of Legal Experts], Doc. CM/Adj (50) 3 rev., A 2531, VII TP 8–22, at p. 12. For the proposal, see Draft Preamble and draft signature clause, Doc. A 2518, VI TP 272–5.

Article 64 was renumbered as article 59 and the heading 'Signature and ratification' added according to the provisions of Protocol No. 11.⁸

Paragraph 2 of article 59, enabling accession to the Convention by the European Union, was added by Protocol 14. The other paragraphs were then renumbered as a consequence.⁹

Analysis and interpretation

Signature and ratification (art. 59(1))

The Convention is 'open to the signature of the members of the Council of Europe'. Membership in the Council of Europe is governed by Chapter II of the Statute of the Council of Europe. Only a 'European State' is eligible for membership in the Council of Europe. It may join if invited by the Committee of Ministers. To be eligible for membership, a State must 'accept the principles of the rule of law and of the enjoyment by all persons within its jurisdiction of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and collaborate sincerely and effectively in the realisation of the aim of the Council'.¹⁰

The Statute provides for associate membership in the Council of Europe '[i]n special circumstances'.¹¹ For the purposes of article 59 of the Convention, the concept of membership includes associate members. Initially, the Federal Republic of Germany and Saarland were invited to join the Council of Europe as associate members. Both States signed and ratified the European Convention on Human Rights. Saarland even elected a member of the European Commission of Human Rights, Irmgard Fuerst. Her term concluded on 1 January 1957 upon Saarland's integration with the Federal Republic of Germany.

Of the more than 200 Council of Europe treaties, dealing with a range of issues including mutual legal assistance, the environment, criminal justice, culture, education, and sports, as well as human rights, the European Convention on Human Rights is very much the exception in its exclusion of the possibility of ratification by non-European States. Upon obtaining independence, Malawi, which had formerly been known as the protectorate of Nyasaland, informed the Secretary General of the United Nations that it considered itself bound by the European Convention as an inherited treaty. Some years later, it informed the Secretary General of the Council of Europe that it no longer considered itself bound by the European Convention on Human Rights.¹² When Surinam announced that upon independence it considered that it was a party to the European Convention as a consequence of rules of succession to treaties, the Secretary General of the Council of Europe answered that this was not possible because article 59 of the Convention restricted ratification to European States.¹³

⁸ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(4)(a).

⁹ Protocol No. 14 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, amending the control system of the Convention, ETS 194, art. 17. See also Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, paras 101-102.

¹⁰ Statute of the Council of Europe, ETS 1, art. 3.

¹¹ Ibid., art. 5(a).

¹² (1968) 11 YB 36.

¹³ M.-A. Eissen, 'Surinam and the European Convention on Human Rights', (1978) 49 British Yearbook of International Law 200.

There have been many proposals that the Convention be changed in order to permit the enlargement of its scope to non-member States. In 1962, at a time when the completion of the United Nations Covenants on human rights seemed uncertain, and when the independence of former colonies threatened to remove certain territories from the Convention regime, the Parliamentary Assembly adopted a recommendation 'that the Committee of Ministers should instruct the Committee of Experts which is already examining various questions relating to the European Convention on Human Rights to draft amendments to the Convention providing for the possibility of accession by non-member States which possess the necessary qualifications, on the invitation of the Committee of Ministers, after consultation of the Assembly'.¹⁴ The Committee of Ministers decided not to pursue the recommendation, explaining that Switzerland had indicated its intention to join the Council of Europe and that there were no other European States that seemed to be in a position to ratify the Convention.¹⁵ A similar proposal emerged from the Parliamentary Assembly in 1989.¹⁶

The first sentence of paragraph 1 of article 59 specifies that the Convention 'shall be open to the signature' of Council of Europe Member States. This is a preliminary step that must be followed by ratification in order for the State to be bound by the Convention. Nevertheless, signature alone brings with its certain legal obligations. In particular, according to article 18 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a State that has signed a treaty may not 'defeat the object and purpose of a treaty prior to its entry into force' for that State.¹⁷ The European Court of Human Rights referred to article 18 in a Ukrainian case in which the respondent State argued that it was not bound by the 1951 Refugee Convention because it had not yet entered into force at the relevant time, although it had been signed.¹⁸

The Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties specifies that 'the consent of a State to be bound by a treaty may be expressed by signature, exchange of instruments constituting a treaty, ratification, acceptance, approval or accession, or by any other means if so agreed'.¹⁹ It also declares: 'The consent of a State to be bound by a treaty is expressed by ratification when: (a) the treaty provides for such consent to be expressed by means of ratification'.²⁰ This is the case of the European Convention on Human Rights, as the second sentence of article 59(1) makes clear.

The Convention was opened for signature on 4 November 1950. That day, thirteen of the fifteen Member States of the Council of Europe signed the Convention: Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Ireland, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Saarland, Turkey, and the United Kingdom. Greece and Sweden said they could not sign on that day 'for technical reasons' but they would do so soon afterwards,²¹ and in fact they signed later in the same month. The United Kingdom was the first signatory State to ratify the Convention, on 8 March 1951.

¹⁴ Recommendation 316 (1962).

¹⁵ (1963) 6 YB 75.

¹⁶ Accession of non-member states to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Doc. 6046.

¹⁷ Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, (1980) 1155 UNTS 331, art. 12.

¹⁸ Melnychenko v. Ukraine, no. 17707/02, § 47, ECHR 2004-X.

¹⁹ Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, (1980) 1155 UNTS 331, art. 11.

²⁰ Ibid., art. 14.

²¹ Minutes of the Meeting [of the Committee of Ministers, 3 November 1950], VII TP 22-24, at p. 24.

European Union accession (art. 59(2))

Paragraph 2 of article 59, which was added by Protocol No. 14, authorizes the European Union to accede to the Convention. The Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties states that 'ratification' and 'accession' are terms that 'mean in each case the international act so named whereby a State establishes on the international plane its consent to be bound by a treaty'.²² It seems that the only real difference between the two is that ratification describes the act that confirms the signature of the treaty, whereas accession is the term used when there is no preliminary signature.

All twenty-eight members of the European Union are parties to the European Convention on Human Rights. In its early years, the forerunners of the European Union were concerned almost exclusively with economic integration. Questions of human rights protection did not seem to warrant any special provision. However, by the 1970s the European Court of Justice found itself compelled to consider human rights issues, referring to various sources of human rights law, including the European Convention on Human Rights.²³ On many occasions, the European Court of Human Rights has been required to consider European Union legislation to the extent that it is applied indirectly within the legal systems of some of the Member States of the Council of Europe. In a general sense, it has shown considerable deference for European Union law. The Strasbourg Court's view has been that as long as fundamental rights are protected by European Union law in a manner equivalent to that offered by the Convention, State action that is taken in compliance with legal obligations flowing from membership of the European Union is consistent with the requirements of the Convention.²⁴

Accession by the European Union has been under discussion since the late 1970s.²⁵ In 1996, the European Court of Justice held that the European Union treaties could not, unless they were amended, permit accession to the Convention.²⁶ Article 6(2) of the Treaty on European Union, as amended by the Lisbon Treaty, which entered into force in 2009, declares that 'the Union shall accede' to the European Convention on Human Rights.²⁷ When Protocol No. 14 to the European Convention on Human Rights was drafted, in 2002–2003, the European Union lacked the competence to accede to the Convention, and as a result it was not possible to negotiate additional provisions that might have been included in the Protocol.²⁸ According to the Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, 'further modifications to the Convention will be necessary in order to make such accession possible from a legal and technical point of view'.²⁹ The Steering Committee for Human Rights of the Council of Europe has said that this could be effected either by an amending ²² Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, (1980) 1155 UNTS 331, art. 2(1)(b). See also article 11.

²³ J. Nold v. Commission of the E.C., Case 4/73, [1974] 2 C.M.L.R. 354, at p. 355.

²⁴ Bosphorus Hava Yolları Turizm ve Ticaret Anonim Şirketi v. Ireland [GC], no. 45036/98, § 156, ECHR 2005-VI; Coöperatieve Producentenorganisatie van de Nederlandse Kokkelvisserij U.A. v. the Netherlands (dec.), no. 13645/05, ECHR 2009; Stichting Mothers of Srebrenica and Others v. the Netherlands (dec.), no. 65542/12, § 151, ECHR 2013 (extracts).

²⁵ European Commission's memorandum of 4 April 1979, Supplement no. 2/79, Bulletin of the EC and the communication it published on 19 November 1990 (Sec(90)2087 final).

²⁶ Opinion no. 2/94 [1996] ECR I-1759.

²⁷ J.-P. Jacqué, 'The Accession of the European Union to the European Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms', (2011) 48 Common Market Law Review 995.

²⁸ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 14, para. 102.

²⁹ Ibid., para. 101.

protocol to the Convention or by an accession agreement with the European Union.³⁰ A Draft agreement on the Accession of the EU to the European Convention on Human Rights was published by the Steering Committee for Human Rights of the Council of Europe in 2011.

The European Union will not join the Council of Europe as such, but this is a superfluous gesture in one sense because all members of one institution are also members of the other. Nevertheless, consideration has been given to whether the European Union should be represented at the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe. A related issue concerns whether the European Union would be entitled to nominate a judge for election to the European Court of Human Rights. In principle, the European Court of Human Rights will be empowered to review all European Union legislation, including the treaties that constitute its fundamental law. This is the same situation that prevails with respect to national legislation, where the European Court may consider the compatibility of the European Convention with both ordinary legislation and the constitution itself.³¹ Whether the inter-State petition mechanism can apply to disputes between States Parties relating to European Union law is also a matter of some debate, given article 344 of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union prohibiting Member States of the European Union from 'submit[ing] a dispute concerning the interpretation or application of the Treaties to any method of settlement other than those provided for therein'. There are also legal difficulties with the exhaustion of domestic remedies, given the role of the European Court of Justice, and with the identification of the correct respondent in litigation.

Entry into force (art. 59(3) and (4))

The tenth ratification of the European Convention was deposited on 3 September 1953. This brought the Convention immediately into force. The initial ten States Parties, in order of ratification, are the United Kingdom, Norway, Sweden, Germany, Saarland, Ireland, Greece, Denmark, Iceland, and Luxembourg. The Convention does not indicate what might happen if, as a result of denunciation or disappearance of the State, the number of States Parties were to fall below ten. Given the large number of ratifications, this seems to be of purely theoretical interest today. Article 59(3) no longer serves any useful purpose and might well have been removed as part of the amendment process effect by Protocol No. 11 or Protocol No. 14.

With respect to States that became parties to the Convention subsequent to 3 September 1953, the Convention enters into force for those States upon the deposit of the instrument of ratification. Many international treaties provide for a delay of a few months between ratification and entry into force but this is not the case with the European Convention, where the effect is immediate.

The date of entry into force is relevant in the establishment of the temporal scope of the Convention and has given rise to much litigation. For example, it has been possible for the Court to consider the application of the Convention to acts that took place prior to ³⁰ Ibid., para. 101.

³¹ See, e.g., Sejdić and Finci v. Bosnia and Herzegovina [GC], nos 27996/06 and 34836/06, ECHR 2009.

the entry into force for a particular State under certain conditions,³² a subject discussed in more detail in the chapter of this Commentary dealing with article 1.

Notification by the Secretary General (art. 59(5))

The European Convention does not designate a depositary of the treaty, although some of the functions that are customarily attributed to the depositary are assigned to the Secretary General of the Council of Europe by article 59(5). One commentator has concluded that by specifying that the Secretary General is to receive instruments of ratification, article 59(1) implicitly designates that person as the depositary.³³ Protocol No. 6 to the Convention contains a provision entitled 'depositary functions', a provision that has been repeated in subsequent Protocols. The Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties declares that unless otherwise provided in the treaty or agreed by the contracting States, the functions of the depositary include keeping custody of the original text of the treaty, preparing certified copies of the original text, receiving signatures to the treaty, receiving and keeping custody of any instruments, notifications, and communications relating to it, examining whether the signature or any instrument, notification, or communication relating to the treaty is in due and proper form and, if need be, bringing the matter to the attention of the State in question, informing the parties and the States entitled to become parties to the treaty of acts, notifications, and communications relating to the treaty, and registering the treaty with the Secretariat of the United Nations.³⁴

Succession to the European Convention

The Convention does not expressly deal with the issue of succession when a State breaks apart. In the history of the Council of Europe, this has happened in the case of two Member States. With active secessionist movements in a number of Member States, future cases cannot be ruled out.

Czechoslovakia joined the Council of Europe on 21 February 1991 and ratified the Convention on 18 March 1992. The State broke into two on 31 December 1992. The following day, the Czech Republic and Slovakia informed the Secretary General of the Council of Europe that they considered themselves to be bound by the Convention and its Protocols. The two new States were admitted to the Council of Europe on 30 June 1993. The Committee of Ministers took note of the declarations and considered the two States to be parties to the Convention as of 1 January 1993.³⁵ However, the Court has considered the operative date applicable to continuing violations that arose before the creation of the two States to be 18 March 1992 and not 1 January 1993.³⁶

On 3 June 2006, following a referendum, Montenegro declared independence, thereby seceding from Serbia and Montenegro. Three days later, it informed the Secretary General of the Council of Europe of its intention to succeed to various international obligations of Serbia and Montenegro, including the European Convention on Human Rights.

³² See, e.g., Šilih v Slovenia [GC], no. 71463/01, 9 April 2009; Varnava and Others v. Turkey [GC], nos 16064/90, 16065/90, 16066/90, 16068/90, 16069/90, 16070/90, 16071/90, 16072/90, and 16073/90, ECHR 2009; Janowiec and Others v. Russia [GC], nos 55508/07 and 29520/09, ECHR 2013.

³³ Pierre-Henri Imbert, 'Article 66', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 957–68, at p. 959.

³⁴ Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, (1980) 1155 UNTS 331, art. 77.

³⁵ Notification by Secretary General, 13 July 1993.

³⁶ Konečný v. the Czech Republic, nos 47269/99, 64656/01, and 65002/01, § 62, 26 October 2004.

The Parliamentary Assembly stated that it was 'particularly satisfied to note in this connection that Montenegro considers that since 3 June 2006 it is bound by the obligations stemming from the European Convention on Human Rights'.³⁷ The following year, the Committee of Ministers decided to invite Montenegro to become a member of the Council of Europe. It also decided that Montenegro was to be regarded as a Party to the European Convention on Human Rights and its Protocols Nos 1, 4, 6, 7, 12, 13, and 14 thereto with effect from 6 June 2006.³⁸ Montenegro was admitted as a full member of the Council of Europe on 11 May 2007. The Court has noted that the Committee of Ministers accepted, 'apparently because of the earlier ratification of the Convention by the State Union of Serbia and Montenegro, that it was not necessary for Montenegro to deposit its own formal ratification of the Convention'.³⁹ In a case before the Court concerning alleged violations in Montenegro that had taken place prior to secession, the Venice Commission submitted an amicus curiae brief contending that it would further the protection of European human rights and be in accordance with the Court's earlier practice were Montenegro to be held responsible.⁴⁰ The Court agreed: '[G]iven the practical requirements of Article 46 of the Convention, as well as the principle that fundamental rights protected by international human rights treaties should indeed belong to individuals living in the territory of the State party concerned, notwithstanding its subsequent dissolution or succession... the Court considers that both the Convention and Protocol No. 1 should be deemed as having continuously been in force in respect of Montenegro' from the date of entry into force for Serbia and Montenegro.⁴¹

Signature clause

The Convention concludes with a signature clause indicating that the original is to be deposited in the archives of the Council of Europe and that the Secretary General is to transmit certified copies to each of the signatories.

Further reading

F. Benoit-Rohmer, 'À propos de l'arrêt Bosphorus Airlines du 30 juin 2005: l'adhésion contrainte de l'Union à la Convention', [2005] RTDH 827.

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 637–8.

Paul Gragl, The Accession of the European Union to the European Convention on Human Rights, Oxford: Hart, 2013.

P. Grigoriou, 'L'adhésion de l'Union européenne à la Convention européenne des droits de l'Homme à l'ère du traité de Lisbonne', in Olivier Delas and Michaela Leuprecht, eds, Liber Amicorum Peter Leuprecht, Brussels: Bruylant, 2012, pp. 131–49.

Pierre-Henri Imbert, 'Article 66', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 957–68.

³⁷ Opinion No. 261 (2007), Accession of the Republic of Montenegro to the Council of Europe, para. 10.

³⁸ Resolution CM/Res(2007)7 inviting the Republic of Montenegro to become a member of the Council of Europe.

³⁹ Bijelić v. Montenegro and Serbia, no. 11890/05, § 68, 28 April 2009.

⁴⁰ Amicus curiae Brief in the case of Bijelić against Montenegro and Serbia (Application N°11890/05) pending before the European Court of Human Rights adopted by the Venice Commission at its 76th Plenary Session (Venice, 17–18 October 2008), CDL-AD(2008)021, para. 45.

⁴¹ Bijelić v. Montenegro and Serbia, no. 11890/05, § 69, 28 April 2009. Also Šabanović v. Montenegro and Serbia, no. 5995/06, § 28, 31 May 2011; Lakićević and Others v. Montenegro and Serbia, nos 27458/06, 37205/06, 37207/06, and 33604/07, § 41, 13 December 2011.

- J.-P. Jacqué, 'The Accession of the European Union to the European Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms', (2011) 48 Common Market Law Review 995.
- Jean Rossetto, 'Quelques observations sur les conditions de l'adhésion de l'Union européenne à la CEDH', in La Constitution, l'Europe et le droit, Mélanges en l'honneur de Jean-Claude Maslet, Paris: Publications de la Sorbonne, 2013, pp. 927–40.
- Paul Tavernier, 'De la protection équivalente. La jurisprudence Bosphorus à l'heure de l'adhésion de l'Union européenne à la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme', in La Constitution l'Europe et le droit, Mélanges en l'honneur de Jean-Claude Maslet, Paris: Publications de la Sorbonne, 2013, pp. 1003–18.

PART THREE

PROTOCOL NO. 1 TO THE
CONVENTION FOR THE PROTECTION
OF HUMAN RIGHTS AND FUNDAMENTAL FREEDOMS

Preamble/Préambule

The Governments signatory hereto, being Members of the Council of Europe,

Being resolved to take steps to ensure the collective enforcement of certain rights and freedoms other than those already included in Section I of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms signed at Rome on 4th November, 1950 (hereinafter referred to as 'the Convention'),

Have agreed as follows:

Les Gouvernements signataires Membres du Conseil de l'Europe,

Résolus à prendre des mesures propres à assurer la garantie collective de droits et libertés autres que ceux qui figurent déjà dans le Titre I de la Convention de sauvegarde des Droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales, signée à Rome le 4 November 1950 (ci-après dénommée «la Convention»).

Sont convenus de ce qui suit:

Introductory comments

Like the Convention itself, each of the additional Protocols begins with a preamble. The Convention's Preamble is relatively lengthy, with provisions clearly intended to frame the substantive provisions of the treaty. Indeed, Protocol No. 15 to the Convention actually amends the Preamble of the Convention, adding two paragraphs. In the case of the Protocols, the Preambles tend to be more perfunctory. Moreover, because the Preamble is deemed to be additional to the Convention itself—a consequence of article 5 of Protocol No. 1—the Preamble of the Convention also applies to the provisions of the Protocol.

Article 31 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties sets out, as the 'general rule' for the interpretation of treaties: "The context for the purpose of the interpretation of a treaty shall comprise, in addition to the text, including its preamble . . ."¹ Although the Vienna Convention was drafted many years after the European Convention, and it is not binding upon all States Parties because it has not been ratified by them, the European Court has nevertheless made reference to its provisions dealing with interpretation on many occasions. Noting the relevant provision in the Vienna Convention, the Court has described the preamble as being 'generally very useful for the determination of the "object" and "purpose" of the instrument to be construed'.² This is discussed in detail in the chapter on the Preamble of the Convention in this Commentary.

Although the instrument is commonly referred to as the 'First Protocol' or 'Protocol No. 1', this does not appear in its official title. The reason should be obvious: because it came first, when no second protocol was yet considered, it was simply the additional protocol to the Convention.

Drafting of the provision

A draft Protocol prepared for the February 1951 meeting of the Committee of Experts by the United Kingdom contained the following preamble:

¹ Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, (1980) 1155 UNTS 331, art. 2.

² Golder v. the United Kingdom, 21 February 1975, § 34, Series A no. 18.

The Governments signatory hereto, being Members of the Council of Europe,

Considering that certain additions should be made to the rights and freedoms defined in Section I of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, signed at Rome on the fourth day of November 1950 (hereinafter referred to as 'the Convention'),

Have agreed as follows:³

A very substantially revised version was prepared by the Committee of Experts at its April 1951 meeting:

The Governments signatory hereto, being Members of the Council of Europe and Parties to the Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms signed at Rome on 4th November 1950,

Desirous of adding to the rights and freedoms protected by the said Convention other rights and freedoms whose protection is within the scope of the aims and purposes of the said Convention,

Have agreed as follows:⁴

This was changed yet again by the Committee of Experts at its June 1951 meeting:

The Governments signatory hereto, being Members of the Council of Europe,

Being resolved to take steps to ensure the collective enforcement of certain rights and freedoms other than those already included in Section I of the Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms signed at Rome on 4th November 1950 (hereinafter referred to as 'the Convention'),

Have agreed as follows:⁵

There is no evidence in the travaux of any discussion or debate as the formulation of the Preamble evolved.

The heading 'Preamble' was added according to the provisions of Protocol No. 11.⁶

Analysis and interpretation

The first and third paragraphs of the Preamble of Protocol No. 1 are essentially formalist in nature and raise no issues of application or interpretation. They do recall that there was agreement by all of the States Parties to the Convention as to the adoption of the text of Protocol No. 1, even if its ratification and extension to dependent territories was only optional.

The second paragraph of the Preamble recalls recital 5 of the Preamble of the Convention itself, which reads: 'Being resolved, as the governments of European countries which are like-minded and have a common heritage of political traditions, ideals, freedom and the rule of law, to take the first steps for the collective enforcement of certain of the rights stated in the Universal Declaration'. Unlike the Preamble to the Convention, that of Protocol No. 1 does not make explicit reference to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights as the ³ Draft Protocol extending Section I of the Convention (14 February 1951), Doc. CM/WP 1 (51) 23, p. 1, CM/WP VI (51) 1, p. 1, VII TP 188-91. Also Proposal of the United Kingdom Delegation, Doc. CM/WP VI (51) 12, A 4387, VII TP 234-43, at pp. 234-5.

⁴ Revised version, Doc. CM/WP VI (51) 9, A 4405, VII TP 228-9.

⁵ Report of the Committee of Experts to the Committee of Ministers (6 June 1951), Doc. CM/WP VI (51) 20 final, Appendix, VII TP 300-9, at pp. 304-5. Also Recommendations of the Ministers' Advisers relating to the Agenda for the Session (1 August 1951), Doc. CM (51) 64 rev., A 5578 VII TP 326-33, at pp. 328-9.

⁶ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 4(a).

source of the rights whose collective enforcement is being ensured. Nevertheless, there is no doubt about their origin: the Universal Declaration recognizes the right to property (art. 17), the right to education (art. 26), and the right to democratic elections (art. 21). It was unnecessary to state this because the Preamble of the Convention is also applicable to Protocol No. 1 as a result of article 5 of the Protocol. There appears to be no case law of the Convention organs in which the Preamble of the Convention has been consulted with respect to Protocol No. 1.

The importance of the idea that the Convention system is centred on the 'collective enforcement of certain rights and freedoms' is discussed in the chapter of this Commentary dealing with the Preamble to the Convention itself. The reference to 'collective enforcement' in recital 5 of the Preamble has been used by the Grand Chamber to support the position that article 6 of the Convention does not apply to measures of expulsion.⁷

There is apparently only one reference in the case law of the Convention organs to the Preamble of Protocol No. 1. In the Belgian Linguistic case, the Court noted that the object of the Protocol, as set out in the Preamble, 'lies in the collective enforcement of "rights and freedoms"'. There is therefore no doubt that Article 2 (P1-2) does enshrine a right.⁸

⁷ Maaouia v. France [GC], no. 39652/98, § 36, ECHR 2000-X.

⁸ Case 'relating to certain aspects of the laws on the use of languages in education in Belgium' (merits), 23 July 1968, pp. 30–2, § 3, Series A no. 6.

Article 1. Protection of property/Protection de la propriété

Every natural or legal person is entitled to the peaceful enjoyment of his possessions. No one shall be deprived of his possessions except in the public interest and subject to the conditions provided for by law and by the general principles of international law.

The preceding provisions shall not, however, in any way impair the right of a State to enforce such laws as it deems necessary to control the use of property in accordance with the general interest or to secure the payment of taxes or other contributions or penalties.

Toute personne physique ou morale a droit au respect de ses biens. Nul ne peut être privé de sa propriété que pour cause d'utilité publique et dans les conditions prévues par la loi et les principes généraux du droit international.

Les dispositions précédentes ne portent pas atteinte au droit que possèdent les États de mettre en vigueur les lois qu'ils jugent nécessaires pour réglementer l'usage des biens conformément à l'intérêt général ou pour assurer le paiement des impôts ou d'autres contributions ou des amendes.

Introductory comments

Property figures in the earliest declarations of human rights. The French Déclaration des droits de l'homme et du citoyen of 1789 recognized the right to property as being one of the 'droits naturels et imprescriptibles'. Article 17 of the Déclaration stated: 'La propriété étant un droit inviolable et sacré, nul ne peut en être privé, si ce n'est lorsque la nécessité publique, légalement constatée, l'exige évidemment, et sous la condition d'une juste et préalable indemnité.'¹ But this profoundly bourgeois right was also contested, famously by the anarchist Pierre-Joseph Proudhon: 'la propriété, c'est le vol'.² In the Communist Manifesto, Marx and Engels said that 'the theory of the Communists may be summed up in the single sentence: Abolition of private property.'³

To some extent, the philosophical differences about the sanctity of private property that characterized the formulation of the right in the Universal Declaration and that persist to the present day find their reflection in the case law of the European Court of Human Rights under article 1 of Protocol No. 1, notably in cases involving control or deprivation of property in pursuit of social policy in such matters as rent control. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights, in article 17, recognizes a right to property:

- (1) Everyone has the right to own property alone as well as in association with others.
- (2) No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his property.

This text results from a compromise, an attempt to reconcile different social systems and their corresponding approaches to private property.⁴ The Universal Declaration of

¹ See also article 16 of the 23 June 1793 version of the Déclaration, cited by Judge Borrego Borrego: Stec and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], nos 65731/01 and 65900/01, Concurring Opinion of Judge Borrego Borrego, ECHR 2006-VI.

² Pierre-Joseph Proudhon, Qu'est-ce que la propriété?, Paris: Bibliothèque internationale, 1867, at p. 13.

³ Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, The Communist Manifesto, Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2008, p. 24.

⁴ See Johannes Morsink, The Universal Declaration of Human Rights, Origins, Drafting, and Intent, Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 1999, at pp. 146–56.

Human Rights also enshrines respect for intellectual property, described in article 27(2) as 'the right to the protection of the moral and material interests resulting from any scientific, literary or artistic production of which he is the author'.

There is no right to property in the two United Nations Covenants. Agreement both on where it belonged and the proper formulation could not be reached, and the matter was dropped by the Commission on Human Rights, never to return in the course of the negotiations.⁵ However, the importance of the right to property has resurfaced in debates about indigenous peoples, extreme poverty, and women's equality. The United Nations Special Rapporteur on adequate housing has referred to the 'social function of property' in the Guiding Principles on Security of Tenure for the Urban Poor:

Policies that promote the social function of property aim to ensure that land is allocated, used and regulated in a manner that serves both individual and collective needs. Limitations are placed on private property rights for the purpose of promoting social interests and the general welfare. States inherently recognize the social function of land through, inter alia, the collection of property taxes, the exercise of expropriation powers for the public good, adverse possession laws, and urban planning that designates spaces for public use and environmental protection. States should take further measures to ensure both private and public land is used optimally to give effect to its social function, including adequate housing of the urban poor.⁶

The African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights has addressed the importance of the right to property in its Principles and Guidelines on the Implementation of Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. Accordingly,

The right to property is a broad right that includes the protection of the real rights of individuals and peoples in any material thing which can be possessed as well as any right which may be part of a person's patrimony. The concept also includes the protection of a legitimate expectation of the acquisition of property. It encompasses the rights of the individual, group or people to peaceful enjoyment of the property. The right may be limited by the State in a non-arbitrary manner, according to the law and the principle of proportionality.⁷

The Convention concerning Indigenous and Tribal Peoples in Independent Countries of the International Labour Organisation provides that 'the rights of ownership and possession of the peoples concerned over the lands which they traditionally occupy shall be recognised'.⁸ The United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples protects 'cultural, intellectual, religious and spiritual property' and the right of indigenous peoples to 'maintain, control, protect and develop their intellectual property over such cultural heritage, traditional knowledge, and traditional cultural expressions'.⁹

⁵ William Schabas, 'The Omission of the Right to Property in the International Covenants', (1991) 4 Hague Yearbook of International Law 135.

⁶ Report of the Special Rapporteur on Adequate Housing as a Component of the Right to an Adequate Standard of Living, and on the Right to Non-discrimination in this Context, Raquel Rolnik, UN Doc. A/HRC/25/54, para. 42.

⁷ Principles and Guidelines on the Implementation of Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in the African Charter of Human and Peoples' Rights, November 2010, para. 53.

⁸ International Labour Convention No. 169 concerning Indigenous and Tribal Peoples in Independent Countries, (1991) 1650 UNTS 383, art. 14(1).

⁹ United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, UN Doc. A/RES/61/295, annex, arts. 11(2), 31(1).

The Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union recognizes a right to property in the following terms:

Art. 17. Right to property

1. Everyone has the right to own, use, dispose of and bequeath his or her lawfully acquired possessions. No one may be deprived of his or her possessions, except in the public interest and in the cases and under the conditions provided for by law, subject to fair compensation being paid in good time for their loss. The use of property may be regulated by law in so far as is necessary for the general interest.
2. Intellectual property shall be protected.

It is meant to have the same meaning and scope as it does in article 1 of Protocol No. 1 to the European Convention.¹⁰

Drafting of the provision

The initial draft European Convention on Human Rights was prepared by the International Juridical Section of the European Movement, chaired by Pierre-Henri Teitgen, with David Maxwell Fyfe and Fernand Dehousse as rapporteurs. Both Maxwell Fyfe and Dehousse had been involved in the drafting of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights the previous year. The text enshrined '[f]reedom from arbitrary deprivation of property'.¹¹ Teitgen, at the first session of Consultative Assembly, called for adoption of a convention that was to include 'freedom from arbitrary deprivation of property'.¹²

There was no general agreement in the Commission on Legal and Administrative Questions of the Consultative Assembly on the inclusion of a right to property. Some members contended 'that there was no reason to differentiate between the right to own property and the other social and economic rights, and that it would be preferable, therefore, to exclude it from the guarantee, since in principle the [Convention] did not cover rights of this nature'.¹³ However, the majority considered that it should be included 'having regard to the importance of the part played by the right to own property in the independence of the individual and of the family'.¹⁴ The Commission proposed the following text: 'In this Convention, the Member States shall undertake to ensure to all persons residing within their territories: . . . The right to own property, in accordance with article 17 of the United Nations Declaration.'¹⁵ In the plenary Assembly, the debate continued, with Lord Layton of the United Kingdom arguing against including a right to ¹⁰ Explanation relating to the Charter of Fundamental Rights, Official Journal of the European Union, C 303/34, 14 December 2007.

¹¹ Convention for the Collective Protection of Individual Rights and Democratic Liberties by the States, Members of the Council of Europe, and for the establishment of a European Court of Human Rights to ensure observance of the Convention, Doc. INF/5/E/R, I TP 296–303, at p. 296, art. 1(k).

¹² Eighth sitting [of the Consultative Assembly] held 19 August 1949, I TP 36–154, at p. 46.

¹³ Report presented by Mr. P.H. Teitgen, 5 September 1949, Doc. A 290, I TP 192–213, at pp. 198–200; Report [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions], 5 September 1949, Doc. AS (1) 77, I TP 216–39, at pp. 228–9.

¹⁴ Report presented by Mr. P.H. Teitgen, 5 September 1949, Doc. A 290, I TP 192–213, at pp. 198–200; Report [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions], 5 September 1949, Doc. AS (1) 77, I TP 216–39, at pp. 228–9.

¹⁵ Report presented by Mr. P.H. Teitgen, 5 September 1949, Doc. A 290, I TP 192–213, at pp. 198–200.

property in the Convention: 'I urge that the list of rights should be limited to the absolute minimum necessary to constitute the cardinal principles for the functioning of political democracy.'¹⁶ It appears that this was an issue upon which the deputies were divided on political lines, with the socialists contending that to recognize the right to property but not any other economic and social rights, such as the right to work, would send the wrong message about the substance of human rights.¹⁷ Faced with a lack of any agreement on including the right to property, the Consultative Assembly voted to refer its draft to the Committee of Ministers and not include it in its proposed text of the Convention.¹⁸

In the Committee of Experts, which met in February 1950, Ireland and Turkey proposed that the provision be restored.¹⁹ A Sub-Committee assigned to examine the matter proposed the Committee of Ministers be informed that the Committee of Experts, 'or certain of its members', believed that the Convention should include the right to property.²⁰ In fact, the Report adopted by the Committee said the view was held by '[m]ost of the Members of the Committee'. The Report drew the Ministers' attention to the importance of the right to property, noting 'that the totalitarian regimes had a tendency to interfere with the right to own property as a means of exercising illegitimate pressure on its nationals'.²¹

The Conference of Senior Officials did not consider the issue when it met in June 1950, to the dismay of the Legal Committee of the Consultative Assembly.²² Ireland formally proposed the addition of a right to property provision when the Committee of Ministers met in August 1950,²³ but no action appears to have been taken. The debate returned to the Consultative Assembly at its August 1950 session. Basing itself on a proposal from Henri Rolin,²⁴ the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions agreed on the following:

All individuals and corporate bodies are entitled to respect for their property. Such property shall not be liable to arbitrary confiscation. This shall not, however, in any way prejudice the right of the different States to enact such laws as may be necessary to ensure the use of this property for the public good.²⁵

¹⁶ Official Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 8 September 1949], II TP 14–274, at p. 52.

¹⁷ For the extensive debate, see Official Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 8 September 1949], II TP 14–274, notably pp. 54–6, 60–2, 70–4, 76–86, 92–4, 98–100, 104–8.

¹⁸ Ibid., p. 134.

¹⁹ Amendment to Article 2 of the Recommendation of the Consultative Assembly proposed by the Experts of Ireland and Turkey, Doc. A 776, III TP 184–5; Amendment to Articles 2 and 3 of the Recommendation of the Consultative Assembly, proposed by the Irish Expert, Doc. A 778, III TP 184–5.

²⁰ First part of the Report of the Sub-Committee Instructed to Make a Preliminary Study of the Amendments Proposed by the Members of the Committee, Doc. A 796, III TP 200–5, at p. 204.

²¹ Report to the Committee of Ministers submitted by the Committee of Experts Instructed to Draw Up a Draft Convention of Collective Guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Doc. CM/WP 1 (5) 15, A 924, IV TP 2–55, at p. 18.

²² Letter of 24 June 1950 from Sir David Maxwell Fyfe, Chairman of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions, to the Chairman of the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM (50) 29, V TP 32–41, at p. 36.

²³ Amendments proposed by the Irish Government, Doc. CM 1 (50) 2, A 1863, V TP 58–61.

²⁴ Text proposed by M. Rolin, Doc. AS/JA/WP 1 (2) 1, A 1942, V TP 204–5.

²⁵ Progress Report, Doc. AS/JA (2) 1, A 2041, V TP 206–7; Supplementary Report of 8 August 1950 on the Draft Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms Presented on Behalf of the Committee by M. P.H. Teitgen, Doc. AS/JA (2) 30, V TP 208–9.

After a resumed debate in the plenary Consultative Assembly,²⁶ the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions continued its work on the matter. Teitgen had a revised text:

Every natural or legal person is entitled to the peaceful enjoyment of his possessions. Such possessions cannot be subjected to arbitrary confiscation. The present measures shall not however be considered as infringing, in any way, the right of a State to pass necessary legislation to ensure that the said possessions are utilised in accordance with the general interest.²⁷

The text met with agreement in the Committee.²⁸ Its Report to the plenary Consultative Assembly described the text as 'a fair definition of an essential right, arrived at after much discussion'. The Report noted that 'certain members of the Committee felt that it was wrong to include this social right and exclude others such as the right to work and the right to rest and leisure, and had doubts as to the form in which the right was stated'. It noted that the text had been adopted by fifteen votes to four.²⁹ After further debate in the plenary Consultative Assembly,³⁰ the provision adopted by the Legal Committee was endorsed, by ninety-seven votes, with eleven abstentions³¹ and the recommendation duly transmitted to the Committee of Ministers.³² A memorandum on the Consultative Assembly discussions prepared by the Secretariat General described the text as 'a compromise' produced by a Sub-Committee 'the members of which held varying political views'.³³

Meeting in Rome immediately prior to adoption of the Convention, on 3 November 1950, the Committee of Ministers was unable to agree on inclusion of the right to property in the Convention. The United Kingdom representative moved that proposals from the Consultative Assembly, including the right to property provision, be referred to a Committee of Experts 'with a view to the preparation of a Protocol to the Convention'. This was adopted by ten votes to one. An attempt by the Irish representative, Seán

²⁶ Report of the sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 14 August 1950], V TP 216-71, at pp. 244-6; Report of the sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 16 August 1950], V TP 272-351, at p. 312-14, 324; Motion relative to the right to own property proposed by Mr. MacEntee and several of his colleagues, Doc. AS/JA (2) 59, V TP 272-73.

²⁷ Draft Motion submitted by M. Teitgen, Original Draft, Doc. AS/JA (2) 6, A 2207, VI TP 6-11; Draft Motion submitted by M. Teitgen, Revised Draft, Doc. AS/JA (2) 6 rev., A 2238, VI TP 10-15.

²⁸ Draft Recommendation submitted to the Consultative Assembly, Doc. AS/JA (2) 20, A 2491, VI TP 42-7.

²⁹ Text of the Report [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions], Doc. AS (2) 93, VI TP 58-72, at pp. 60-2, 68; First Report [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions], Doc. AS/JA (2) 15, A 2298, VI TP 46-52, at p. 48; Second Report Doc. AS/JA (2) rev., A 2493, VI TP 52-9, at p. 54. See also Note of 14 December 1950 prepared by the Secretariat-General on the reasons for the Amendments to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms adopted by the Consultative Assembly on 15 August 1950, Doc. CM (50) 96, A 3503, VII TP 130-41, at pp. 132-6.

³⁰ Report of the sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, of 25 August 1950, morning], VI TP 74-141, at pp. 86-8, 94-8, 104-10, 116-20, 134-40; Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 25 August 1950, afternoon], VI TP 144-91, at pp. 148-64.

³¹ Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 25 August 1950, afternoon], VI TP 144-91, at p. 164. See also Note of 14 December 1950 prepared by the Secretariat-General on the reasons for the Amendments to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms adopted by the Consultative Assembly on 15 August 1950, Doc. CM (50) 96, A 3503, VII TP 130-41, at pp. 136-41.

³² Text published in the Collected Documents of the Consultative Assembly, Doc. AS (2) 104, VI TP 198-229, at p. 208.

³³ Explanatory Note by the Secretariat General, 9 September 1950, Doc. CM (50) 57, A 2781, VI TP 230-9, at p. 232.

MacBride, to enlarge the Committee so as to include representatives of the Consultative Assembly was not accepted.³⁴

There was much discontent in the Consultative Assembly about the turn of events. On 5 November 1950, the Standing Committee expressed 'regret' that the amendments, including the right to property provision, were not included in the Convention.³⁵ Later in November, when the plenary Assembly convened, anger was expressed with the United Kingdom, to whom responsibility for omission of the right to property was attributed. The Assembly grudgingly accepted the fact that work would continue on a protocol where its concerns could be addressed.³⁶

The Secretariat-General prepared a memorandum noting that the Assembly had drafted a text 'as a statement of general principles rather than as an exact definition' and that this approach had generally been rejected by the Committee of Ministers. 'It therefore appears necessary to define as accurately as possible what is meant by "arbitrary confiscation" and what exceptions are to be permitted in the general interest to the individual rights of enjoyment of one's possessions.' The Secretariat-General said definitions would need to take into account national legislation on such matters as nationalization, requisition in time of war, expropriation for public use, agrarian reform, confiscation in criminal law, death duties, and reversion to the State on intestacy.³⁷ The Secretary General wrote to Member States inviting them to prepare proposals for discussion by a Committee of Experts in February 1951 in view of adoption of a protocol to the Convention by the Committee of Ministers the following month.³⁸ He wrote again to Member States in early February, conveying a draft right to property provision proposed by the United Kingdom:

Every natural or legal person is entitled to the peaceful enjoyment of his possessions. This provision, however, shall not be considered as infringing in any way the right of a state to enforce such laws as it deems necessary either to serve the ends of justice or to secure the payment of monies due whether by way of taxes or otherwise, or to ensure the acquisition or use of property in accordance with the general interest.³⁹

The United Kingdom subsequently proposed a change to its text 'in order to protect the principle of compensation' that changed the last phrase by inserting between 'or to ensure' and 'the acquisition' the words '... subject to compensation, ...'. Alternatively, it

³⁴ Report of the Meeting [of the Committee of Ministers, 3 November 1950], VII TP 24-34, at p. 34.

³⁵ Minutes of the meeting held by the Standing Committee of the Consultative Assembly in Rome on 5 November 1950 (morning), Doc. AS/CP (2) PV 5, p. 2, A 3057, VII TP 82-4; Minutes of the fourth meeting held in the afternoon of 5 November 1950 [by the Standing Committee of the Consultative Assembly], Doc. AS/CP (2) PV 6, p. 2, A 3058, VII TP 84-5; Second Report on the work of the Standing Committee presented in accordance with the Resolution adopted by the Assembly on 6 September 1949, Doc. AS (2) 137, pp. 1126-7, VII TP 86-9.

³⁶ Report of the Consultative Assembly, 2nd session, 18 November 1950, VII TP 90-121.

³⁷ Note on the amendments to the Convention on Human Rights proposed by the Consultative Assembly about which the Committee of Ministers was not able to reach unanimous agreement, Doc. CM (50) 90, A 3034, VII TP 126-30, at pp. 126-8.

³⁸ Letter from the Secretary General of the Council of Europe to the Foreign Ministers of Member States, 18 November 1950, Doc. D 280/9/50, VII TP 180-1.

³⁹ Memorandum by the Secretariat setting forth the different texts proposed, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 3, CM/WP 1 (51) 29, A 4005, VII TP 192-7, at pp. 192-3. Also Letter from the Secretary General of the Council of Europe to the Foreign Ministers of Member States, 7 February 1951, Doc. D 1357, VII TP 184-7.

suggested adding at the end, following 'general interest', the words 'subject to such compensation as shall be determined by law'.⁴⁰

In addition to the Consultative Assembly draft and the British text, Belgium submitted its own version:

Every natural or legal person is entitled to the peaceful enjoyment of his possession. No-one shall be deprived of his possessions except in the public interest, in such cases and by such procedure as may be established by law and subject to fair compensation which shall be fixed in advance. The penalty of total confiscation of property shall not be permitted.

The present measures shall not however infringe in any way the right possessed by states to pass legislation to control the use of property in accordance with the general interest or to impose taxes or other contributions.⁴¹

Belgium also proposed a modification that placed a full stop in the second sentence after the words 'subject to fair compensation' and deleted the remainder of the first paragraph.⁴²

The Committee of Experts met from 21 to 24 February 1951. The Report of the Committee of Experts to the Committee of Ministers indicates that it reached unanimity on the following sentence: 'Every natural or legal person is entitled to the peaceful enjoyment of his possessions.' However, the Committee did not find consensus on whether the Protocol should protect a right to compensation in the case of acquisition of private property in the public interest. France considered the phrase 'such possessions cannot be subjected to arbitrary confiscation' in the Consultative Assembly draft to be the most satisfactory. The majority of delegations supported the Belgian proposal. The United Kingdom was opposed to stating a general principle because it:

did not think it possible to express this principle in terms which would be appropriate to all the various types of case which might arise, nor could it admit that decisions taken on this matter by the competent national authorities should be subject to revision by international organs. On the other hand, the words 'arbitrary confiscation' in the text proposed by the Assembly were imprecise, and if 'arbitrary' meant 'not in accordance with law' the idea was completely covered by the United Kingdom draft.⁴³

France said it could accept the British proposal on the condition that the second sentence of the Assembly draft ('Such possessions cannot be subjected to arbitrary confiscation') be added after the first sentence of the British draft. The other delegations were also prepared to accept the British draft, but on the condition that the last two lines were replaced with the following: 'or to ensure the acquisition or use of property in accordance with the general interest, subject, in the case of acquisition, to such compensation as shall be determined in accordance with the conditions provided for by law'.⁴⁴

⁴⁰ Proposed addition to the text of the United Kingdom Delegation, Doc. CM/WP 1 (51) 30, CM/WP VI (51) 4, VII TP 196-9.

⁴¹ Proposal of the Belgian Government, Doc. CM/WP 1 (51) 25, CM/WP VI (51) 5, VII TP 192-3.

⁴² Ibid.

⁴³ Report of the Committee of Experts to the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM/WP 1 (51) 40, CM/WP VI (51) 7, A 4024, VII TP 204-13, at p. 208.

⁴⁴ Report of the Committee of Experts to the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM/WP 1 (51) 40, CM/WP VI (51) 7, A 4024, VII TP 204-13, at pp. 206-9.

The Committee of Experts met again in April 1951. At the outset, Belgium, Denmark, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, and Norway said they could accept a draft based on the Belgian proposal:

Every natural or legal person is entitled to the peaceful enjoyment of his possessions. No-one shall be deprived of his possessions except in the public interest, in such cases and by such procedure as are established by law and subject to such compensation as shall be determined in accordance with the conditions provided for by law.

The present measures shall not however infringe, in any way, the right of a State to pass legislation to control the use of property in accordance with the general interest or to impose taxes or other contributions.

France, the United Kingdom, and the Saar could not agree, while Sweden and Turkey reserved their positions.⁴⁵ No progress was made at the meeting in resolving the differences.⁴⁶

The Committee of Experts met yet again in June. By this point, the only outstanding issue in negotiations to adopt the Protocol concerned the right to property. The Committee was able to submit a proposal based upon the text cited above that had obtained broad support. However, the final phrase in the second sentence, following the words 'except in the public interest,' were replaced with: 'and subject to the conditions provided for by law and by the general principles of international law'. Also, the words 'The present measures' in the final sentence were replaced with 'The preceding provisions'.⁴⁷

Advisers to the Ministers of Foreign Affairs met in Strasbourg on 17 July 1951 to see if a final agreement could be reached. The United Kingdom returned with yet another amendment. It proposed replacing the second paragraph with the following: 'The preceding provisions shall not, however, in any way infringe the right of a state to enforce such laws as it deems necessary to control the use of property in accordance with the general interest or to secure the payment of taxes or other contributions or of penalties imposed by the Courts.'⁴⁸ Acting on a letter from Germany seeking the record indicate 'the general principles of international law entail the obligation to pay compensation in cases of expropriation',⁴⁹ the Advisers stated that at the request of Germany and Belgium, it was agreed that 'the general principles of international law, in their present connotation, entailed the obligation to pay compensation to non-nationals in cases of expropriation'.⁵⁰ The Report also indicated that Sweden had requested that the conclusions mention 'that the general principles of international law referred to under Article 1 of the Protocol only applied to relations between a State and non-nationals'.⁵¹ The Ministers' Advisers recommended the following text for consideration by the Committee of Ministers:

⁴⁵ Note relating to the right of property, Doc. CM/WP VI (51) 11, A 4388, VII TP 232-5.

⁴⁶ Report of the Committee of Experts to the Committee of Ministers (19 April 1951), Doc. CM (51) 33 final, A 4421, VII TP 250-5, at pp. 250-1.

⁴⁷ Report of the Committee of Experts to the Committee of Ministers (6 June 1951), Doc. CM/WP VI (51) 20 final, Appendix, VII TP 300-9, at pp. 304-5.

⁴⁸ Amendments proposed by the Government of the United Kingdom, Doc. CM/Adj. (51) 34, VII TP 314-15.

⁴⁹ Letter from M Blankenhorn [on behalf of the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Federal Republic of Germany to the Secretary General of the Council of Europe (10 July 1951)], Doc. A 4652, VII TP 312-13.

⁵⁰ Conclusions of the Meeting of the Ministers' Advisers, Doc. CM, Point II, pp. 300-3, VII TP 324-7.

⁵¹ Ibid.

Every natural or legal person is entitled to the peaceful enjoyment of his possessions. No one shall be deprived of his possessions except in the public interest, and subject to the conditions provided for by law and by the general principles of international law.

The present measures shall not, however, in any way infringe the right of a State to enforce such property in accordance with the general interest or to impose taxes, other contributions or penalties.⁵²

The Committee of Ministers agreed on this text.

In preparation for examination of the text by the Consultative Assembly, the Secretariat-General prepared a commentary on the draft Protocol. Comments were made on three aspects of the draft text. The Commentary noted that the sentence '[s]uch possessions cannot be subjected to arbitrary confiscation' in the Consultative Assembly draft had been replaced, 'principally because the phrase "arbitrary confiscation" was thought to be too unprecise [sic] in a legal text, as it is subject to very varying interpretations'. The Commentary referred to the debate about whether to make deprivation of property 'subject to compensation'. It noted that at one time a majority of governments favoured such a reference but that others had made objections. However, even in the absence of an explicit reference, the Commentary said 'the phrase "subject to the conditions provided for by law" would normally require the payment of compensation, since it is normally provided for in legislation on the nationalisation or expropriation of property'. The reference to international law would guarantee compensation to foreigners even if it were not paid to nationals. Finally, the Commentary noted that the final sentence of the Assembly's text had been extended 'to make it clear that this article does not prevent the State from collecting taxes, or other penalties such as fines, even though they might constitute the whole of the property of the individual in question'.⁵³

The Legal Committee of the Consultative Assembly adopted the right to property proposed by the Committee of Ministers.⁵⁴ But the debate was not quite over. At the December 1951 meeting of the Consultative Assembly, a radically altered version of article 1 was proposed as an amendment by one of the French deputies, Claude Hettier de Boislambert.⁵⁵ It was aimed at protecting rights of inheritance. Pierre-Henri Teitgen took the floor to confirm that although the text adopted by the Committee of Ministers differed in several details from the Assembly text, 'we have no objections as regards this Article guaranteeing the right to property'.⁵⁶ At his urging, Hettier de Boislambert agreed to withdraw the amendment.⁵⁷

The Committee of Ministers finally adopted Protocol No. 1 in March 1952, a year after it was promised. Pursuant to Germany's request, it reiterated that 'as regards ⁵² Recommendations of the Ministers' Advisers relating to the Agenda for the Session (1 August 1951), Doc. CM (51) 64 revised, A 5578 VII TP 326-33, at pp. 328-9.

⁵³ Commentary by the Secretariat General on the Draft Protocol (18 September 1951), Doc. AS/JA (3) 13, pp. 2-4, VIII TP 4-17, at pp. 8-11.

⁵⁴ Minutes of the Meeting of 1 October 1951 [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions of the Consultative Assembly], Doc. AS/JA (3) PV 3, p. 2, VIII TP 16-19, at pp. 18-19; Report on the Draft Protocol to the Convention presented by the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions, Doc. AS (3) 81, VIII TP 28-37, at pp. 34-5.

⁵⁵ Doc. AS (3) 93, Amendment No. 1, VIII TP 76-7.

⁵⁶ Consultative Assembly Sitting of 7 December 1951 (afternoon), VIII TP 76-115, at pp. 82-3.

⁵⁷ Consultative Assembly Sitting of 8 December 1951 (afternoon), VIII TP 114-71, at pp. 160-7.

Article 1, the general principles of international law in their present connotation entail the obligation to pay compensation to non-nationals in cases of expropriation'.⁵⁸

The heading 'Protection of property' was added pursuant to Protocol No. 11.⁵⁹

Analysis and interpretation

'[T]he first and most important requirement of Article 1 of Protocol No. 1 is that any interference by a public authority with the peaceful enjoyment of possessions should be lawful', the Court has said.⁶⁰ Three distinct rules are set out in article 1 of Protocol No. 1. The first sentence of the first paragraph presents the principle of peaceful enjoyment of possessions. This is a right recognized to every natural and legal person. The second sentence of the first paragraph prohibits the deprivation of possessions, but only 'in the public interest and subject to the conditions provided for by law and by the general principles of international law'. The second paragraph of article 1 recognizes that States Parties may control the use of property in accordance with the public interest. The Court has explained that the three rules 'are not, however, distinct in the sense of being unconnected'. The second and third rules deal with particular forms of interference with the right to peaceful enjoyment of property 'and should therefore be construed in the light of the general principle enunciated in the first rule'.⁶¹ It has been said that all three rules 'are not to be seen as watertight or unconnected' and that they import 'a requirement of proportionality and the necessity of striking a fair balance between the demands of the community as a whole and the protection of the rights and interests of the individual'.⁶²

The distinction between an interference with the peaceful enjoyment of possessions, under the first sentence, and the deprivation of possessions, under the second, is not always crystal clear. For example, in a case involving litigation directed against the State, it had been possible for the lawyer to recover fees due from the client directly from the State under a provision in the Code of Civil Procedure. This mode of payment had been agreed between the lawyer and her client. Subsequently, in the midst of the proceedings and after the client had been successful at first instance, the State enacted legislation to extinguish the claim, thereby preventing the lawyer from recovering the amount due for professional services. The Court considered this to be an interference with enjoyment of possessions and not a deprivation of them. The claim by the lawyer for her fees had not been brought to an end by the legislation, merely the possibility under the Code of Civil Procedure of recovering them by offsetting them against the amount payable by the State to the lawyer's client.⁶³

⁵⁸ Resolution CM (52) 1, VIII 7P 202-5.

⁵⁹ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 4(a).

⁶⁰ Khodorkovskiy and Lebedev v. Russia, nos 11082/06 and 13772/05, § 869, 25 July 2013.

⁶¹ Kozacioglu v. Turkey [GC], no. 2334/03, § 48, 19 February 2009; James and Others v. the United Kingdom, 21 February 1986, § 37, Series A no. 98; Sporrong and Lönnroth v. Sweden, 23 September 1982, § 61, Series A no. 52; see also The Holy Monasteries v. Greece, 9 December 1994, § 56, Series A no. 301-A; Iatridis v. Greece [GC], no. 31107/96, § 55, ECHR 1999-II; Bejeler v. Italy [GC], no. 33202/96, § 106, ECHR 2000-I.

⁶² Brosset-Triboulet and Others v. France [GC], no. 34078/02, Joint Dissenting Opinion of Judges Bratza, Vajić, David Thór Björgvinsson, and Kalaydjieva, § 2, 29 March 2010.

⁶³ Ambruosi v. Italy, no. 31227/96, § 27, 19 October 2000.

Like other rights enshrined in the Convention and its Protocols the protection of property also has positive dimensions. This is underscored by the phrase 'shall secure to everyone within [its] jurisdiction the rights and freedoms defined in [the] Convention'. According to the Grand Chamber, 'this general duty may entail positive obligations inherent in ensuring the effective exercise of the rights guaranteed by the Convention. In the context of Article 1 of Protocol No. 1, those positive obligations may require the State to take the measures necessary to protect the right of property.'⁶⁴ In a very broad and general formulation, the Court said:

When an interference with the right to peaceful enjoyment of possessions is perpetrated by a private individual, a positive obligation arises for the State to ensure in its domestic legal system that property rights are sufficiently protected by law and that adequate remedies are provided whereby the victim of an interference can seek to vindicate his rights, including, where appropriate, by claiming damages in respect of any loss sustained.⁶⁵

Such measures may be either preventive or remedial.

The State is not, of course, directly liable in the case of private disputes. Its obligations 'are limited to providing the necessary assistance to the creditor in the enforcement of the respective court awards, for example, through a bailiff service or bankruptcy procedures'.⁶⁶ States are required to provide judicial procedures accompanied by the appropriate procedural guarantees so as to enable effective and fair adjudication of disputes between private parties including the possibility of claims to recover damages.⁶⁷ Even when it is the horizontal relations between private parties that are concerned, 'there may be public-interest considerations involved which may impose some obligations on the State'.⁶⁸ Moreover, although the Court does not in principle deal with disputes of a purely private nature, 'it cannot remain passive where a national court's interpretation of a legal act, be it a testamentary disposition, a private contract, a public document, a statutory provision or an administrative practice appears unreasonable, arbitrary or blatantly inconsistent with the prohibition of discrimination established by Article 14 and more broadly with the principles underlying the Convention'.⁶⁹ The boundaries between positive and negative obligations of the State with respect to article 1 do not lend themselves to precise definition. A case may be analysed in terms of a positive duty of the State or an interference by a public authority; in either case, the applicable criteria are substantively the same. 'In both contexts regard must be had to the fair balance to be struck between the competing interests of the individual and of the community as a whole', according to the Grand Chamber.⁷⁰

⁶⁴ Ališić and Others v. Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Serbia, Slovenia, and 'the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia' [GC], no. 60642/08, § 100, 16 July 2014; Broniowski v. Poland [GC], no. 31443/96, § 143, ECHR 2004-V; Likvidējāmā p/s Selga and Vasiļevska v. Latvia (dec.), nos 17126/02 and 24991/02, §§ 94–113, 1 October 2013.

⁶⁵ Blumberga v. Latvia, no. 70930/01, § 67, 14 October 2008.

⁶⁶ Shestakov v. Russia (dec.), no. 48757/99, 18 June 2002; Krivanogova v. Russia (dec.), no. 74694/01, 1 April 2004; Kesyan v. Russia, no. 36496/02, 19 October 2006.

⁶⁷ Sovtransavto Holding v. Ukraine, no. 48553/99, § 96, ECHR 2002-VII.

⁶⁸ Zolotas v. Greece (no. 2), no. 66610/09, § 39, ECHR 2013 (extracts); Broniowski v. Poland [GC], no. 31443/96, § 143, ECHR 2004-V.

⁶⁹ Fabris v. France [GC], no. 16574/08, § 60, ECHR 2013 (extracts); Pla and Puncernau v. Andorra, no. 69498/01, § 59, ECHR 2004-VIII.

⁷⁰ Ališić and Others v. Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Serbia, Slovenia, and 'the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia' [GC], no. 60642/08, § 101, 16 July 2014; Broniowski v. Poland [GC], no. 31443/96, § 144, ECHR 2004-V.

Natural or legal person

The right to peaceful enjoyment of possessions is ensured to '[e]very natural or legal person'. It is the only right in the Convention and the Protocols where the protection is formally extended to corporate bodies. Article 34 of the Convention authorizes the Court to receive applications from 'any person, non-governmental organisation or group of individuals', a notion that must be larger than 'natural or legal persons' because a non-governmental organization may be an informal body without legal status and a group of individuals may not necessarily have a legal existence separate from that of its component members.⁷¹ There does not appear to be any case law on the concept of 'legal person' within the scope of article 1 of Protocol No. 1.

Possessions

Even if it is 'possessions', and not 'property', that are protected by the first paragraph of article 1 of Protocol No. 1, the provision is 'in substance guaranteeing the right of property'.⁷² The second paragraph, in which the exception to the general rule is stated, speaks of the 'use of property'. In the French version of the text, 'possessions' and 'property' are rendered as biens and propriété, suggesting that the two English terms are synonymous. The word 'Property' is also used in the title, added by Protocol No. 11.

'Possessions' may be 'existing possessions' in the sense of assets. If a property interest contemplated by article 1 of Protocol No. 1 is in dispute, it falls to the European Court to determine the applicant's legal position.⁷³ Article 1 does not enshrine any right to acquire property,⁷⁴ although in one case the Grand Chamber seemed to recognize the possibility of this taking place through 'adverse possession', despite the impossibility of such a thing happening under domestic law.⁷⁵ Article 1 may apply where a person has 'at least a "legitimate expectation" of obtaining effective enjoyment of a property right'.⁷⁶ By 'legitimate expectation' is meant something grounded in 'a legislative provision or a legal act bearing on the property interest in question'.⁷⁷ The Court does not apply the concepts of 'genuine dispute' and 'arguable claim' in determining whether a 'legitimate expectation' exists.⁷⁸

⁷¹ Hyde Park and Others v. Moldova (no. 4), no. 18491/07, § 33, 7 April 2009; Hyde Park and Others v. Moldova (nos 5 and 6), nos 6991/08 and 15084/08, § 31, 14 September 2010; Christians against Racism and Fascism v. the United Kingdom, no. 8440/78, Commission decision of 16 July 1980, (1981) 24 YB 178, DR 21, p. 138.

⁷² Marckx v. Belgium, 13 June 1979, § 63, Series A no. 31.

⁷³ J.A. Pye (Oxford) Ltd and J.A. Pye (Oxford) Land Ltd v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 44302/02, § 61, ECHR 2007-III.

⁷⁴ Kopecký v. Slovakia [GC], no. 44912/98, § 35, ECHR 2004-IX; Slivenko and Others v. Latvia (dec.) [GC], § 121, 23 January 2002.

⁷⁵ Brosset-Triboulet and Others v. France [GC], no. 34078/02, § 71, 29 March 2010: 'in the present case the time that elapsed had the effect of vesting in the applicants a proprietary interest in peaceful enjoyment of the house'. See also Brosset-Triboulet and Others v. France [GC], no. 34078/02, Concurring Opinion of Judge Casadevall, § 5, 29 March 2010.

⁷⁶ J.A. Pye (Oxford) Ltd and J.A. Pye (Oxford) Land Ltd v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 44302/02, § 61, ECHR 2007-III; Von Maltzan and Others v. Germany (dec.) [GC], nos 71916/01, 71917/01, and 10260/02, § 74, ECHR 2005-V; Prince Hans-Adam II of Liechtenstein v. Germany [GC], no. 42527/98, § 83, ECHR 2001-VIII.

⁷⁷ Sagbinadze and Others v. Georgia, no. 18768/05, § 103, 27 May 2010.

⁷⁸ Kopecký v. Slovakia [GC], no. 44912/98, § 52, ECHR 2004-IX; Vilho Eskelinen and Others v. Finland [GC], no. 63235/00, § 94, ECHR 2007-II.

From a temporal jurisdiction standpoint, there is no obligation under article 1 for the State to compensate the former owners or to return property transferred to it prior to ratification of the Convention and of Protocol No. 1. 'Deprivation of ownership or of another right in rem is in principle an instantaneous act and does not produce a continuing situation of "deprivation of a right"', the Grand Chamber has explained.⁷⁹ Thus, a property confiscated prior to entry into force of the Protocol is not a 'possession' that falls within the scope of article 1. Nor does article 1 apply where there is only a hope that 'an old property right which it has long been impossible to exercise effectively' may have survived.⁸⁰ However, it may extend to a particular benefit of which the persons concerned have been deprived on the basis of a discriminatory condition of entitlement.⁸¹

Although most States in Central and Eastern Europe have enacted some form of restitution legislation concerning property confiscated by former regimes, some have opted to do nothing in this respect, while others have made provision within certain limits.⁸² If they chose to do so, States Parties are free to establish the scope of property restitution and the conditions under which it will be conducted.⁸³ For example, they may exclude categories of property owners from eligibility for restitution.⁸⁴ If, however, they enact a scheme by which formerly confiscated property is to be restored, this generates a new property right protected by article 1 for beneficiaries of the legislation.⁸⁵ Even if the relevant arrangements for restitution or compensation pre-date the ratification of Protocol No. 1, if the legislation has subsequently remained in force, then Protocol No. 1 may be applicable.⁸⁶

The application of article 1 to various categories of assets has been discussed in the case law. The notion has an autonomous meaning that is not limited to ownership of physical goods, and 'certain other rights and interests constituting assets can also be regarded as "property rights", and thus as "possessions"'.⁸⁷ The scope of 'possessions' is independent of formal classifications found in domestic law.⁸⁸ According to the Court, 'the issue that needs to be examined is whether the circumstances of the case, considered as a whole, may ⁷⁹ Von Maltzan and Others v. Germany (dec.) [GC], nos 71916/01, 71917/01, and 10260/02, §§ 74, 81–82, ECHR 2005-V; Malhous v. the Czech Republic (dec.) [GC], no. 33071/96, ECHR 2000-XII; Gisela Mayer, Hans-Christoph Weidlich, and Bernd-Joachim Fullbrecht, Ortuin A. Hasenkamp, Hartwig Golf, Werner Klausner v. Germany, nos 18890/91, 19048/91, 19342/92, and 19549/92, Commission decision of 4 March 1996, (1996) 39 YB 86, DR 85, p. 5; Ladislav and Aurel Brežny v. Slovakia, no. 23131/93, Commission decision of 4 March 1996, (1996) 39 YB 96, DR 85, p. 65.

⁸⁰ Malhous v. the Czech Republic (dec.) [GC], no. 33071/96, ECHR 2000-XII; Prince Hans-Adam II of Liechtenstein v. Germany [GC], no. 42527/98, § 85, ECHR 2001-VIII; Nerva and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 42295/98, § 43, ECHR 2002-VIII; Stretch v. the United Kingdom, no. 44277/98, § 32, 24 June 2003.

⁸¹ Andrejeva v. Latvia [GC], no. 55707/00, § 79, ECHR 2009; Fabris v. France [GC], no. 16574/08, § 50, ECHR 2013 (extracts).

⁸² Maria Atanasiu and Others v. Romania, nos 30767/05 and 33800/06, §§ 85–106, 12 October 2010.

⁸³ Von Maltzan and Others v. Germany (dec.) [GC], nos 71916/01, 71917/01, and 10260/02, §§ 74, 81–82, ECHR 2005-V; Jantsner v. Slovakia, no. 39050/97, § 34, 4 March 2003.

⁸⁴ Gratzinger and Gratzingerova v. the Czech Republic (dec.) [GC], no. 39794/98, § 69, ECHR 2002-VII.

⁸⁵ Maria Atanasiu and Others v. Romania, nos 30767/05 and 33800/06, § 136, 12 October 2010; Kopecký v. Slovakia [GC], no. 44912/98, § 35, ECHR 2004-IX; Manushaqe Puto and Others v. Albania, nos 604/07, 43628/07, 46684/07, and 34770/09, § 92, 31 July 2012.

⁸⁶ Broniowski v. Poland [GC], no. 31443/96, § 125, ECHR 2004-V.

⁸⁷ Gasus Dosier- und Fördertechnik GmbH v. the Netherlands, 23 February 1995, § 53, Series A no. 306-B.

⁸⁸ See, e.g., Brosset-Triboulet and Others v. France [GC], no. 34078/02, § 71, 29 March 2010.

be regarded as having conferred on the applicant title to a substantive interest protected by that provision'.⁸⁹

As a general principle, a proprietary interest that constitutes a claim or a debt must be rooted in national law, for example where the case law of the courts confirms its validity.⁹⁰ If there is no debt, article 1 does not apply.⁹¹ In the case of an attempt to recover a sum that was unduly paid, the debtor cannot invoke article 1 because the sum owed cannot be considered a 'possession'.⁹² An enforceable judgment debt is a 'possession' within the terms of article 1.⁹³ Future income constitutes a 'possession' pursuant to article 1 of Protocol No. 1 only if it has been earned or where an enforceable claim to it exists.⁹⁴ But there is no right to become the owner of property.⁹⁵

With respect generally to non-physical assets, the Court will consider 'whether the legal position in question gave rise to financial rights and interests and thus had an economic value'.⁹⁶ Accordingly, article 1 has been applied to professional practices and their clientele,⁹⁷ to intellectual property,⁹⁸ to business permits and licences,⁹⁹ trade marks and copyright,¹⁰⁰ the right to use an internet domain name,¹⁰¹ and to shares in limited liability companies.¹⁰²

The European Convention does not generally deal with economic and social rights, and there is no obligation on States Parties to provide social security payments, or to any particular amount of such benefit.¹⁰³ In practice, all States Parties have such schemes for ⁸⁹ Saghinadze and Others v. Georgia, no. 18768/05, § 103, 27 May 2010; Depalle v. France [GC], no. 34044/02, § 62, ECHR 2010; Anheuser-Busch Inc. v. Portugal [GC], no. 73049/01, § 63, ECHR 2007-I; Öneriyıldız v. Turkey [GC], no. 48939/99, § 123, ECHR 2004-XII.

⁹⁰ Plechhanow v. Poland, no. 22279/04, § 83, 7 July 2009; Vilho Eskelinen and Others v. Finland [GC], no. 63235/00, § 94, ECHR 2007-II; Anheuser-Busch Inc. v. Portugal [GC], no. 73049/01, § 65, ECHR 2007-I; Kopecký v. Slovakia [GC], no. 44912/98, § 52, ECHR 2004-IX; Draon v. France [GC], no. 1513/03, § 68, 6 October 2005.

⁹¹ Van der Musselle v. Belgium, 23 November 1983, § 48, Series A no. 70.

⁹² Cheminade v. France (dec.), no. 31599/96, 19 January 1999.

⁹³ Kotov v. Russia [GC], no. 54522/00, § 90, 3 April 2012; Stran Greek Refineries and Stratis Andreadis v. Greece, 9 December 1994, § 59, Series A no. 301-B; Burdov v. Russia, no. 59498/00, § 40, ECHR 2002-III.

⁹⁴ Ambruosi v. Italy, no. 31227/96, § 20, 19 October 2000; Anheuser-Busch Inc. v. Portugal [GC], no. 73049/01, § 64, ECHR 2007-I.

⁹⁵ Slivenko v. Latvia (dec.) [GC], no. 48321/99, § 121, ECHR 2002-II; Kopecký v. Slovakia [GC], no. 44912/98, § 35 (b), ECHR 2004-IX; Andrejeva v. Latvia [GC], no. 55707/00, § 77, ECHR 2009; Stec and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], nos 65731/01 and 65900/01, § 53, ECHR 2006-VI.

⁹⁶ Paefßen GmbH v. Germany (dec.), nos 25379/04, 21688/05, 21722/05, and 21770/05, 18 September 2007.

⁹⁷ Lederer v. Germany (dec.), no. 6213/03, 22 May 2006; Buzescu v. Romania, no. 61302/00, § 81, 24 May 2005; Wendenburg and Others v. Germany (dec.), no. 71630/01, 6 February 2003; Olbertz v. Germany (dec.), no. 37592/97, 25 May 1999; Döring v. Germany (dec.), no. 37595/97, 9 November 1999; Van Marle and Others v. the Netherlands, 26 June 1986, § 41, Series A no. 101.

⁹⁸ Anheuser-Busch Inc. v. Portugal [GC], no. 73049/01, §§ 72, 78, ECHR 2007-I.

⁹⁹ Megadat.com SRL v. Moldova, no. 21151/04, §§ 62–63, ECHR 2008; Bimer S.A. v. Moldova, § 49; Rosenzeig and Bonded Warehouses Ltd v. Poland, no. 51728/99, § 49, 28 July 2005; Capital Bank AD v. Bulgaria, no. 49429/99, § 130, ECHR 2005-XII (extracts); Tre Traktörer AB v. Sweden, 7 July 1989, § 53, Series A no. 159.

¹⁰⁰ Melnychuk v. Ukraine (dec.), no. 28743/03, ECHR 2005-IX.

¹⁰¹ Paefßen GmbH v. Germany (dec.), nos 25379/04, 21688/05, 21722/05, and 21770/05, 18 September 2007.

¹⁰² Olczak v. Poland (dec.), no. 30417/96, § 60, 7 November 2002; Sovtransavto Holding v. Ukraine, no. 48553/99, § 91, ECHR 2002-VII.

¹⁰³ Andrejeva v. Latvia [GC], no. 55707/00, § 77, ECHR 2009; Kjartan Asmundson v. Iceland, no. 60669/00, § 39, ECHR 2004-IX; Domalewski v. Poland (dec.), no. 34610/97, ECHR 1999-V; Janković v. Croatia (dec.), no. 43440/98, ECHR 2000-X.

the payment of social benefits. This generates a property interest that falls under the scope of article 1.¹⁰⁴ It has also been applied to pensions and other forms of social security benefit¹⁰⁵ to the extent that some tangible and definable proprietary interest can be demonstrated. Previously, the Court and the Commission distinguished between contributory and non-contributory pension benefits for the purposes of applying article 1, but that has now been abandoned.¹⁰⁶ It now takes the view that 'when a State chooses to set up a pension scheme, the individual rights and interests deriving from it fall within the ambit of that provision, irrespective of the payment of contributions and the means by which the pension scheme is funded'.¹⁰⁷

Peaceful enjoyment of property

The first rule, set out in the first sentence of the first paragraph, is of a general nature and enunciates the principle of the peaceful enjoyment of property: usus, fructus, abusus,¹⁰⁸ to invoke the categories of Roman law that are reflected in all legal systems in one form or another. Provided there is a proprietary interest, the right to be protected against interference, even if it does not involve deprivation, is ensured by article 1. The protection of peaceful enjoyment of property must be read together with the second paragraph of article 1, where measures necessary to control the use of property are authorized. When the Court concludes that there has been an interference with the peaceful enjoyment of property, it will first examine whether the measures have a 'reasonable basis' and then assess whether or not 'the applicants have had to bear an individual and excessive burden which has upset the fair balance which should be struck between the requirements of the general interest and the protection of the right to the peaceful enjoyment of one's possessions'.¹⁰⁹ Any interference with the right to the peaceful enjoyment of possessions 'must achieve a "fair balance" between the demands of the general interest of the community and the requirements of the protection of the individual's fundamental rights'.¹¹⁰ The Court has explained that '[t]he concern to achieve this balance is reflected in the structure of Article 1 of Protocol No. 1 as a whole, including, therefore, the second sentence, which is to be read in the light of the general principle enunciated in the first sentence'. In particular, 'there must be a reasonable relationship of proportionality between the means employed and the aim sought to be realised by any measures applied by the State, including measures depriving a person of his or her possessions'.¹¹¹

¹⁰⁴ Stec and Others v. the United Kingdom (dec.) [GC], nos 65731/01 and 65900/01, §§ 53–55, ECHR 2005-X; Andrejeva v. Latvia [GC], no. 55707/00, § 77, ECHR 2009; Moskal v. Poland, no. 10373/05, § 38, 15 September 2009.

¹⁰⁵ Stec and Others v. the United Kingdom (dec.) [GC], nos 65731/01 and 65900/01, §§ 53–55, ECHR 2005-X; Andrejeva v. Latvia [GC], no. 55707/00, § 77, ECHR 2009; Moskal v. Poland, no. 10373/05, § 38, 15 September 2009.

¹⁰⁶ Stec and Others v. the United Kingdom (dec.) [GC], nos 65731/01 and 65900/01, §§ 47–53, ECHR 2005-X

¹⁰⁷ Andrejeva v. Latvia [GC], no. 55707/00, § 76, ECHR 2009.

¹⁰⁸ Mosteanu and Others v. Romania, no. 33176/96, § 61, 26 November 2002; Hirschhorn v. Romania, no. 29294/02, § 57, 26 July 2007; Chassagnou and Others v. France [GC], nos 25088/94, 28331/95, and 28443/95, Dissenting Opinion of Judge Costa, § 9, ECHR 1999-III.

¹⁰⁹ Matos e Silva, Lda., and Others v. Portugal, 16 September 1996, § 72, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-IV.

¹¹⁰ Kozacıoğlu v. Turkey [GC], no. 2334/03, § 63, 19 February 2009; Sporrong and Lönnroth v. Sweden, 23 September 1982, § 69, Series A no. 52.

¹¹¹ Kozacıoğlu v. Turkey [GC], no. 2334/03, § 63, 19 February 2009; Pressos Compania Naviera S.A. and Others v. Belgium, 20 November 1995, § 38, Series A no. 332; The former King of Greece and Others v. Greece

The Court concluded that there was a violation of article 1 when the owner of property in occupied Cyprus had been unable to use, control, and enjoy her property as a result of the Turkish invasion. As the judgment explains, this could not be regarded as either deprivation of property or a control of use of property, falling instead within the meaning of the first sentence of article 1 as an interference with the peaceful enjoyment of possessions.¹¹² But in a case involving a citizen of Yugoslavia residing in Germany who did not take Croatian citizenship following the breakup of the country but who retained property within Croatia, the Court distinguished this with the situation in Cyprus. It said 'the rights entailed in the provisions of Article 1 of Protocol No. 1 do not encompass the right for a foreign citizen who owns property in another country to permanently reside in that country in order to use his property'.¹¹³

Withdrawal of a licence to conduct business activities constitutes interference with the right to peaceful enjoyment of possessions.¹¹⁴ Even if it is not fully withdrawn, limitation of the licence may amount to depriving the right of its substance.¹¹⁵

The issue of peaceful enjoyment has also arisen in a series of cases involving hunting rights. Several States have legislation authorizing the vesting of hunting rights in private associations despite the objections of the actual landowners, who may be morally and ethically opposed to the practice as such. For example, in France the Loi Verdeille of 1964 compelled small landowners to transfer hunting rights to hunters' associations without compensation. It did not deprive them of property rights, but rather it interfered with the peaceful enjoyment by the owners. The European Court said this 'upset the fair balance to be struck between protection of the right of property and the requirements of the general interest'.¹¹⁶ In a similar case from Luxembourg, there was some financial compensation for the landowners but the Court did not feel this to be decisive—it amounted to €3.25 per annum—and again concluded that the right to peaceful enjoyment had been breached.¹¹⁷ It reached the same result in other cases.¹¹⁸

The right to dispose of one's property, the abusus, 'constitutes a traditional and fundamental aspect of the right of property'.¹¹⁹ When Poland revised its rent control policy in order to deal with housing problems, it lowered the rent payable to such an extent that owners could not cover their operating expenses out of the income from tenants. This resulted in the reduction of the value of the tenement houses and 'entailed [GC], no. 25701/94, §§ 89–90, ECHR 2000-XII; Sporrong and Lönnroth v. Sweden, 23 September 1982, § 73, Series A no. 52; Beyeler v. Italy [GC], no. 33202/96, § 107, ECHR 2000-I.

¹¹² Loizidou v. Turkey (merits), 18 December 1996, § 63, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-VI; Cyprus v. Turkey [GC], no. 25781/94, §§ 186–189, ECHR 2001-IV.

¹¹³ Ilic v. Croatia (dec.), no. 42389/98, 19 September 2000.

¹¹⁴ Tre Traktörer AB v. Sweden, 7 July 1989, § 53, Series A no. 159; Capital Bank AD v. Bulgaria, no. 49429/99, § 130, ECHR 2005-XII (extracts); Rosenzweig and Bonded Warehouses Ltd v. Poland, no. 51728/99, § 49, 28 July 2005; Bimer S.A. v. Moldova, no. 15084/03, § 49, 10 July 2007.

¹¹⁵ Centro Europa 7 S.r.l. and Di Stefano v. Italy [GC], no. 38433/09, § 177, ECHR 2012.

¹¹⁶ Chassagnou and Others v. France [GC], nos 25088/94, 28331/95, and 28443/95, §§ 79, 82–85, ECHR 1999-III. Measures subsequently taken by France allowing for a form of 'conscientious objection' were approved by the Committee of Ministers: ResDH(2005)26 and Chabauty v. France [GC], no. 57412/08, § 25, 4 October 2012.

¹¹⁷ Schneider v. Luxembourg, no. 2113/04, § 49, 10 July 2007.

¹¹⁸ Herrmann v. Germany [GC], no. 9300/07, § 93, 26 June 2012; Baudinière and Vauzelle v. France, nos 25708/03 and 25719/03, 6 December 2007; Piippo v. Sweden, no. 70518/01, 21 March 2006; Nilsson v. Sweden, no. 11811/05, 26 February 2008.

¹¹⁹ Marckx v. Belgium, 13 June 1979, § 63, Series A no. 31.

consequences similar to expropriation'. Although the owners were not deprived of their possessions, their right to enjoyment was infringed.¹²⁰ In other cases, the Court has rejected the 'de facto expropriation' thesis to describe restrictions imposed on the right of property that have the consequence of reducing the value and thereby encroaching upon the possibility of disposing of the asset. Such measures do not amount to deprivation and are to be examined from the standpoint of the second sentence of the first sentence of paragraph 1 of article 1.¹²¹ In some cases involving forfeiture and seizure for tax liability, the Court has taken the perspective of interference with control over possessions under paragraph 2, rather than deprivation of property under paragraph 1.¹²²

Limitations periods are a common feature of national legislation. They are designed 'to ensure legal certainty and finality and prevent the injustice which might arise if courts were required to decide upon events which took place in the distant past'.¹²³ In a case concerning provisions of the Greek Civil Code, whereby a twenty-year limitation period applied to bank deposits, the Court noted that 'the twenty-year limitation period for agreements on the deposit of fungible goods was justified by an aim in the public interest, namely that of terminating, in the interests of the community, legal relationships that had been created so long before that their existence had become uncertain'.¹²⁴ This interference with the enjoyment of possessions was 'a drastic measure', especially because it applied to ordinary people who were not versed in the law. As a result, the Court said the State had a positive obligation 'to require that banks, in view of the potentially adverse consequences of limitation periods, should inform the holders of dormant accounts when the limitation period is due to expire and thus afford them the possibility to stop the limitation period running, for instance by performing a transaction on the account'.¹²⁵ Law applicable in the United Kingdom providing that the registered owner lost control of property where there had been 'adverse possession' for twelve years was deemed proportionate, although there were many dissenters in the Grand Chamber.¹²⁶

Deprivation of possessions

At the heart of article 1 is the protection against deprivation of possessions. This is the second rule of the provision, set out in the second sentence of the first paragraph. Deprivation of possessions is subjected to certain conditions. It must be 'in the public interest', and 'subject to the conditions provided for by law and by the general principles ¹²⁰ Hutten-Czapska v. Poland, no. 35014/97, § 176, 22 February 2005; Hutten-Czapska v. Poland [GC], no. 35014/97, §§ 202–203, ECHR 2006-VII.

¹²¹ Anthony Aquilina v. Malta, no. 3851/12, § 54, 11 December 2014; Elia S.r.l. v. Italy, no. 37710/97, §§ 57–58, ECHR 2001-IX; Sporrong and Lönnroth v. Sweden, 23 September 1982, § 65, Series A no. 52; Erkner and Hofbauer v. Austria, 23 April 1987, § 74, Series A no. 117; Pois v. Austria, 23 April 1987, § 6, Series A no. 117.

¹²² AGOSI v. the United Kingdom, 24 October 1986, § 51, Series A no. 108; Air Canada v. The United Kingdom, 5 May 1995, § 34, Series A no. 316-A; C.M. v. France (dec.), no. 28078/95, ECHR 2001-VII; Ganus Dosier- und Fördertechnik GmbH v. the Netherlands, 23 February 1995, § 59, Series A no. 306-B.

¹²³ Zolotas v. Greece (no. 2), no. 66610/09, § 43, ECHR 2013 (extracts); J.A. Pye (Oxford) Ltd and J.A. Pye (Oxford) Land Ltd v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 44302/02, § 68, ECHR 2007-III; Strubbings and Others v. the United Kingdom, 22 October 1996, § 51, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-IV.

¹²⁴ Zolotas v. Greece (no. 2), no. 66610/09, § 48, ECHR 2013.

¹²⁵ Ibid., § 53.

¹²⁶ J.A. Pye (Oxford) Ltd et J.A. Pye (Oxford) Land Ltd v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 44302/02, §§ 75–85, ECHR 2007-III; ibid., Joint Dissenting Opinion of Judges Rozakis, Bratza, Tsatsa-Nikolovska, Gylumyan, and Šikuta; ibid., Dissenting Opinion of Judge Loucaides Joined by Judge Kovler.

of international law'. The Court will also consider whether deprivation of property was 'proportionate'. In determining whether there is a deprivation of possessions governed by the second rule, the Court will look behind the appearances and investigate the realities of the situation complained of. Because 'the Convention is intended to guarantee rights that are "practical and effective", it has to be ascertained whether the situation amounted to a de facto expropriation'.¹²⁷

In the public interest

The concept of 'public interest', which permits States to deprive persons of their property, has been distinguished with the necessity tests that are so familiar to the jurisprudence of the European Convention on Human Rights. The discretion accorded pursuant to the 'public interest' is wider in scope. As the European Commission of Human Rights explained in Handyside v. The United Kingdom, '[c]learly, the public or general interest encompasses measures which would be preferable or advisable, and not only essential, in a democratic society'. It considered that its duty under the Convention was 'to review the actions of member States purporting to be in the public or general interest, in order to establish that they have acted reasonably and in good faith'.¹²⁸ The Commission's view was endorsed by the Court. It added that in contrast with article 10(2) of the Convention, article 1 of Protocol No. 1 'sets the Contracting States up as sole judges of the "necessity" for an interference. Consequently, the Court must restrict itself to supervising the lawfulness and the purpose of the restriction in question.'¹²⁹

In a subsequent decision, the Court referred to Handyside, noting that under the Convention system 'it is thus for the national authorities to make the initial assessment both of the existence of a problem of public concern warranting measures of deprivation of property and of the remedial action to be taken'. It said that '[b]ecause of their direct knowledge of their society and its needs, the national authorities are in principle better placed than the international judge to appreciate what is "in the public interest"'. The Court explained that the notion of 'public interest' was necessarily extensive, given that decisions to enact legislation expropriating property commonly involved controversial political, economic, and social issues. It said the Court would 'respect the legislature's judgment as to what is "in the public interest" unless that judgment be manifestly without reasonable foundation'.¹³⁰ That there may exist alternative solutions does not impugn the contested legislation. As long as the legislature remains within the bounds of its margin of appreciation, 'it is not for the Court to say whether the legislation represented the best solution for dealing with the problem or whether the legislature's discretion should have been exercised in another way'.¹³¹

¹²⁷ Brosset-Triboulet and Others v. France [GC], no. 34078/02, § 81, 29 March 2010; Brumărescu v. Romania [GC], no. 28342/95, § 76, ECHR 1999-VII; Sporrong and Lönnroth v. Sweden, 23 September 1982, §§ 63, 69–74, Series A no. 52.

¹²⁸ Handyside v. the United Kingdom, no. 5493/72, Commission report of 30 September 1979, § 167. Also Håkansson and Stureson v. Sweden, no. 11855/85, Commission decision of 15 July 1987, DR 53, p. 190.

¹²⁹ Handyside v. the United Kingdom, 7 December 1976, § 62, Series A no. 24.

¹³⁰ James and Others v. the United Kingdom, 21 February 1986, § 46, Series A no. 98. Also Kozacıoğlu v. Turkey [GC], no. 2334/03, § 53, 19 February 2009; Beyeler v. Italy [GC], no. 33202/96, § 112, ECHR 2000-I.

¹³¹ Zolotas v. Greece (no. 2), no. 66610/09, § 44, ECHR 2013 (extracts); J.A. Pye (Oxford) Ltd. v. the United Kingdom, no. 44302/02, §§ 43–45, 15 November 2005.

Conditions provided by law

The second sentence of article 1 provides that in addition to a deprivation of property being in the 'public interest' it must also be 'provided by law'. The relevant provisions must satisfy the requirements of accessibility, precision, and foreseeability.¹³² But the Court 'has limited power, however, to review compliance with domestic law'.¹³³ Its review is generally confined to considering whether national courts applied the applicable law in a manifestly erroneous manner or in such a way as to reach arbitrary conclusions.¹³⁴ It will also look at the aim pursued to ensure that it is legitimate. For example, it has taken the view that 'the proper conduct of criminal proceedings and, more generally, of fighting and preventing crime... undoubtedly falls within the general interest as envisaged in Article 1 of Protocol No. 1'.¹³⁵ Also, 'the protection of a country's cultural heritage is a legitimate aim capable of justifying the expropriation by the State of a building listed as "cultural property"'.¹³⁶ The disbarment of a lawyer had the effect of depriving him of his clientele and therefore was an interference with the enjoyment of possessions. The Court said that this pursued an aim that was in the general interest 'since it appeared to be legitimate for the FRG to review retrospectively the behaviour of persons, who after reunification, were authorised to practise the professions of lawyer, notary or lay judge throughout Germany, and who, by the nature of their work, were required to meet particularly high standards of integrity and morality, given that they were considered to be officers of the court and guarantors of the rule of law'. Such checks were designed to protect the public by verifying the integrity and morality of legal practitioners.¹³⁷

Finally, the Court considers the proportionality of the measure, something described in the case law as striking a 'fair balance' between the demands of the general interest of the community and the requirements of the protection of the individual's fundamental rights. The issue of 'fair balance' only becomes relevant 'once it has been established that the interference in question satisfied the requirement of lawfulness and was not arbitrary'.¹³⁸ This is where the issue of compensation arises. According to the Court, 'the taking of property without payment of an amount reasonably related to its value will normally constitute a disproportionate interference'.¹³⁹ But article 1 of Protocol No. 1 does not, however, guarantee a right to full compensation in all circumstances. Legitimate objectives of 'public interest' may call for less than reimbursement of the full market value of the ¹³² Beyeler v. Italy [GC], no. 33202/96, §§ 108–109, ECHR 2000-I; Hentrich v. France, 22 September 1994, § 42, Series A no. 296-A; Lithgow and Others v. the United Kingdom, 8 July 1986, § 110, Series A no. 102.

¹³³ Håkansson and Sruesson v. Sweden, 21 February 1990, § 47, Series A no. 171-A.

¹³⁴ Tre Traktörer AB v. Sweden, 7 July 1989, § 58, Series A no. 159.

¹³⁵ Lavrechov v. the Czech Republic, no. 57404/08, § 46, ECHR 2013; Denisova and Moiseyeva v. Russia, no. 16903/03, § 58, 1 April 2010.

¹³⁶ Kozacıoğlu v. Turkey [GC], no. 2334/03, § 54, 19 February 2009; SCEA Ferme de Fresnoy v. France (dec.), no. 61093/00, ECHR 2005-XII; Debelianovi v. Bulgaria, no. 61951/00, § 54, 29 March 2007.

¹³⁷ Döring v. Germany (dec.), no. 37595/97, 9 November 1999.

¹³⁸ Iatridis v. Greece [GC], no. 31107/96, § 58, ECHR 1999-II.

¹³⁹ Pyrantienė v. Lithuania, no. 45092/07, § 40, 12 November 2013; Kozacıoğlu v. Turkey [GC], no. 2334/03, § 64, 19 February 2009; Lithgow and Others v. the United Kingdom, 8 July 1986, § 121, Series A no. 102; Broniowski v. Poland [GC], no. 31443/96, § 182, ECHR 2004-V; Scordino v. Italy (no. 1) [GC], no. 36813/97, § 95, ECHR 2006-V.

expropriated property.¹⁴⁰ Indeed, there may be exceptional circumstances where no compensation is provided.¹⁴¹ For example, interference with property will be in the public interest when the impugned measures are designed to correct mistakes of the authorities and restore the rights of ownership of former owners.¹⁴²

The Court has said that 'where an issue in the general interest is at stake, in particular when the matter affects fundamental human rights such as those involving property, the public authorities must act in good time and in an appropriate and above all consistent manner'.¹⁴³ Described as the 'good governance principle',¹⁴⁴ it does not 'as a general rule, prevent the authorities from correcting occasional mistakes, even those resulting from their own negligence'.¹⁴⁵ In cases involving revocation of ownership of property that has been transferred erroneously, the Court has invoked the 'good governance principle'. It has said that 'where an issue in the general interest is at stake, in particular when the matter affects fundamental human rights such as those involving property, the public authorities must act in good time and in an appropriate and above all consistent manner'.¹⁴⁶ The authorities may be required not only to act promptly in correcting the mistake but also some form of compensation or reparation to the former bona fide holder of the property may be dictated.¹⁴⁷

Under Turkish law, it was not possible to take into account that part of the value related to the architectural and historical features of a building for the purposes of compensation in the case of expropriation. The Court described such a valuation system as unfair because it enabled depreciation resulting from a property's listed status to be taken into account during expropriation, although any eventual appreciation was deemed irrelevant in determining the compensation for expropriation. 'Thus, not only is such a system likely to penalise those owners of listed buildings who assume burdensome maintenance costs, it deprives them of any value that might arise from the specific features of their property', it said.¹⁴⁸

General principles of international law

Aside from article 1 of Protocol No. 1, there are only three other references to international law in the European Convention. In article 1, the clear intent of the drafters was to engage the international law concerning the expropriation of property. Customary international law 'permits States to expropriate foreign property if it is in the public ¹⁴⁰ Pyramtšenė v. Lithuania, no. 45092/07, § 64, 12 November 2013; Lithgow and Others v. the United Kingdom, 8 July 1986, § 121, Series A no. 102; Broniowski v. Poland [GC], no. 31443/96, § 182, ECHR 2004-V; Scordino v. Italy (no. 1) [GC], no. 36813/97, § 95, ECHR 2006-V.

¹⁴¹ Sociedad Anónima del Ucieza v. Spain, no. 38963/08, § 76, 4 November 2014; The Holy Monasteries v. Greece, 9 December 1994, § 71, Series A no. 301-A; Broniowski v. Poland [GC], no. 31443/96, § 186, ECHR 2004-V.

¹⁴² Romankevič v. Lithuania, no. 25747/07, § 35, 2 December 2014; Pyramtšenė v. Lithuania, no. 45092/07, §§ 44–48, 12 November 2013.

¹⁴³ Bogdel v. Lithuania, no. 41248/06, § 65, 26 November 2013; Moskal v. Poland, no. 10373/05, § 51, 15 September 2009.

¹⁴⁴ For the origins of the principle, before it was given the name 'good governance': Beyeler v. Italy [GC], no. 33202/96, § 120, ECHR 2000-I; Megadat.com SRL v. Moldova, no. 21151/04, § 72, ECHR 2008.

¹⁴⁵ Bogdel v. Lithuania, no. 41248/06, § 66, 26 November 2013.

¹⁴⁶ Ibid., § 65.

¹⁴⁷ Romankevič v. Lithuania, no. 25747/07, § 35, 2 December 2014; Maksymenko and Gerasyenko v. Ukraine, no. 49317/07, § 64, 16 May 2013.

¹⁴⁸ Kozacıoğlu v. Turkey [GC], no. 2334/03, § 70, 19 February 2009.

interest or for a public purpose, accomplished in a non-discriminatory fashion, and in conformity with due process'.¹⁴⁹ There has been controversy in international law with respect to the issue of compensation, although the debate has been mainly about the level or amount rather than about the existence of an obligation itself. A 1962 General Assembly resolution speaks of 'appropriate compensation',¹⁵⁰ whereas another resolution with the same title, adopted a decade later, says that 'each State is entitled to determine the amount of possible compensation and the mode of payment...'.¹⁵¹

In early cases, the European Commission took the view that the principles of international law referred to in article 1 were inapplicable to nationals of the respondent State.¹⁵² The Commission later adjusted its view that article 1 'requires member States to respect the property of "every natural or legal person" within their jurisdiction, which of necessity includes nationals. To decide otherwise would be to render the Article meaningless.'¹⁵³ Subsequently, the Court explained that the reference to international law serves at least two purposes:

Firstly, it enables non-nationals to resort directly to the machinery of the Convention to enforce their rights on the basis of the relevant principles of international law, whereas otherwise they would have to seek recourse to diplomatic channels or to other available means of dispute settlement to do so. Secondly, the reference ensures that the position of non-nationals is safeguarded, in that it excludes any possible argument that the entry into force of Protocol No. 1 (P1) has led to a diminution of their rights. In this connection, it is also noteworthy that Article 1 (P1-1) expressly provides that deprivation of property must be effected 'in the public interest': since such a requirement has always been included amongst the general principles of international law, this express provision would itself have been superfluous if Article 1 (P1-1) had had the effect of rendering those principles applicable to nationals as well as to non-nationals.¹⁵⁴

The Court concluded that the negotiating history as a whole shows 'that the reference to the general principles of international law was not intended to extend to nationals'.¹⁵⁵

According to Luigi Condorelli, when there is a reference to 'principles of international law' in a treaty, it can only be in order to resolve a profound difficulty among the drafters in reaching a consensus, who were unable to reconcile positions about the extent to which an obligation of compensation should be a condition for lawful taking of property.¹⁵⁶ Professor Condorelli notes that this debate has since been resolved to the extent that the Court has established a strong presumption in favour of compensation regardless of the nationality of the owner of the possessions in question. Indeed, in recent decades there does not appear to have been any litigation of any significance at the European Court ¹⁴⁹ Ursula Kriebaum and August Reinisch, 'Property, Right to, International Protection', in Rüdiger Wolfrum, ed., The Max Planck Encyclopedia of Public International Law, Vol. III, Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2012, pp. 522–33, at p. 525.

¹⁵⁰ Permanent Sovereignty over Natural Resources, UN Doc. A/RES/1803 (1962), para. 4.

¹⁵¹ Permanent Sovereignty over Natural Resources, UN Doc. A/RES/3171 (1973), para. 3.

¹⁵² Gudmundson v. Iceland, no. 511/59, Commission decision of 20 December 1960, (1960) 3 YB 394, at p. 426; X v. Federal Republic of Germany, no. 1870/63, Commission decision of 16 December 1965, (1965) 8 YB 218.

¹⁵³ Handyside v. the United Kingdom, no. 5493/72, Commission report of 30 September 1979, § 163.

¹⁵⁴ James and Others v. the United Kingdom, 21 February 1986, § 62, Series A no. 98; Lithgow and Others v. the United Kingdom, 8 July 1986, § 115, Series A no. 102.

¹⁵⁵ James and Others v. the United Kingdom, 21 February 1986, §§ 64, 66, Series A no. 98; Lithgow and Others v. The United Kingdom, 8 July 1986, § 115, Series A no. 102.

¹⁵⁶ Luigi Condorelli, 'Premier Protocole Additionnel, Article 1', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 971–97, at p. 986.

concerning the issue of 'principles of international law' as it relates to the property rights of non-nationals.

Control of the use of property

The second paragraph of article 1 enables the State Party to 'enforce such laws as it deems necessary to control the use of property in accordance with the general interest or to secure the payment of taxes or other contributions or penalties'. The distinction with deprivation of the right to enjoy one's possessions, governed by the first paragraph of article 1, is not always evident, and the parties may admit that article 1 applies but disagree about whether it is a question of deprivation or merely of control.¹⁵⁷ In practice, the methodology used in examining cases where this provision applies is not significantly different from that of the other two rules set out in article 1.¹⁵⁸ The interference must be prescribed by law and it must pursue one or more legitimate aims. There must be a relationship of proportionality between the means that are employed and the aim or aims of the legislation. This involves assessing whether a 'fair balance' has been struck between the requirements of the 'general interest' and those of the individual concerned.¹⁵⁹ The second paragraph of paragraph 1 invokes the criterion of 'general interest', whereas the first paragraph refers to 'public interest'. The case law has not attempted to make any meaningful distinction between the two.¹⁶⁰

The State has a broad margin of appreciation in this area. Its power to review whether domestic law has been complied with is limited.¹⁶¹ The Court has said that '[i]t is in the first place for the national authorities, notably the courts, to interpret and apply domestic law, even in those fields where the Convention "incorporates" the rules of that law, since the national authorities are, in the nature of things, particularly qualified to settle the issues arising in this connection'.¹⁶² The deference for national courts is especially robust when difficult questions of interpretation of domestic law are involved.¹⁶³ Where the general interest of the community is pre-eminent, for example in cases involving regional planning and environmental conservation policies, the margin of appreciation is greater than where civil rights alone are at stake.¹⁶⁴

A classic example of control of the use of property 'in accordance with the general interest' concerns legislation governing residential tenancies.¹⁶⁵ This is the area where the Court may come the closest to ruling on economic and social rights. The Court has held 'that in spheres such as housing, States necessarily enjoy a wide margin of appreciation not ¹⁵⁷ E.g., Lindheim and Others v. Norway, nos 13221/08 and 2139/10, §§ 75–78, 12 June 2012.

¹⁵⁸ N.K.M. v. Hungary, no. 66529/11, § 44, 14 May 2013; R.Sz. v. Hungary, no. 41838/11, § 32, 2 July 2013.

¹⁵⁹ AGOSI v. the United Kingdom, 24 October 1986, § 51, Series A no. 108; Sporrong and Lönnroth v. Sweden, 23 September 1982, §§ 69–73, Series A no. 52; Handyside v. the United Kingdom, 7 December 1976, §§ 62–63, Series A no. 24.

¹⁶⁰ Hutten-Czapska v. Poland [GC], no. 35014/97, § 165, ECHR 2006-VIII.

¹⁶¹ Allan Jacobson v. Sweden (no. 2), 19 February 1998, § 57, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-I.

¹⁶² Paulinović and Tonić v. Croatia (dec.), no. 17124/05 and 17126/05, 3 September 2009.

¹⁶³ Anheuser-Busch Inc. v. Portugal [GC], no. 73049/01, § 83, ECHR 2007-I.

¹⁶⁴ Gorraiz Lizarraga and Others v. Spain, no. 62543/00, § 70, ECHR 2004-III; Alatulkhila and Others v. Finland, no. 33538/96, § 67, 28 July 2005; Valico S.r.l. v. Italy (dec.), no. 70074/01, ECHR 2006-III; Lars and Astrid Fågerskiöld v. Sweden (dec.), no. 37664/04, 26 February 2008.

¹⁶⁵ Hutten-Czapska v. Poland [GC], no. 35014/97, §§ 160–168, ECHR 2006-VIII; Edwards v. Malta, no. 17647/04, §§ 52–78, 24 October 2006; Srpska pravoslavna Opština na Rijeci v. Croatia (dec.), no. 38312/02, 18 May 2006.

only in regard to the existence of a problem of public concern warranting measures for control of individual property but also to the choice of the measures and their implementation'.¹⁶⁶ It has also noted that 'State control over levels of rent is one such measure and its application may often cause significant reductions in the amount of rent chargeable.' Moreover, the principles that govern the matter 'apply equally, if not a fortiori, to measures adopted in the course of the fundamental reform of a country's political, legal and economic system in the transition from a totalitarian regime to a democratic State'.¹⁶⁷ According to the Court, 'where the operation of the rent-control legislation involves wide-reaching consequences for numerous individuals and has economic and social consequences for the country as a whole, the authorities must have considerable discretion not only in choosing the form and deciding on the extent of control over the use of property, but also in deciding on the appropriate timing for the enforcement of the relevant laws'.¹⁶⁸ The Court has indicated its sensitivity to the 'reconciliation of the conflicting interests of landlords and tenants', observing that the State authorities are required 'on the one hand, to secure the protection of the property rights of the former and, on the other, to respect the social rights of the latter, often vulnerable individuals'.¹⁶⁹

The Court has often ruled in favour of the landlord, probably too often. With regard to Croatian legislation governing rent control, it referred to factors such as the small amount of protected rent to which the applicant was entitled, the statutory burdens placed upon him, the low level of profit, the fact that he had not been able to recover possession of the flat for fifty-five years, and 'the absence of adequate procedural safeguards for achieving a balance between the competing interests of landlords and protected'. The Court said there were no discernable demands of general interest that could justify such restrictions and that there was 'not a fair distribution of the social and financial burden resulting from the reform of the housing sector. Rather, a disproportionate and excessive individual burden was placed on the applicant as a landlord'.¹⁷⁰ A similar conclusion was reached with respect to legislation in Slovakia,¹⁷¹ and in a case dealing with ground rent in Norway.¹⁷² In a Maltese case, the Court considered that rent control legislation no longer corresponded to the economic reality of the country, and as a result could no longer be justified.¹⁷³

Taxation, contemplated by the second paragraph of article 1, 'is in principle an interference with the right guaranteed by the first paragraph of Article 1 of Protocol No. 1, since it deprives the person concerned of a possession, namely the amount of money which must be paid'.¹⁷⁴ Noting that 'the interference is generally justified under the second paragraph of this Article, which expressly provides for an exception as regards the payment of taxes or other contributions', the Grand Chamber has insisted that 'the ¹⁶⁶ Statileo v. Croatia, no. 12027/10, § 140, 10 July 2014.

¹⁶⁷ Bittó and Others v. Slovakia, no. 30255/09, § 96, 28 January 2014.

¹⁶⁸ Anthony Aquilina v. Malta, no. 3851/12, § 61, 11 December 2014.

¹⁶⁹ Ibid., § 114.

¹⁷⁰ Statileo v. Croatia, no. 12027/10, § 143, 10 July 2014. See also Ghigo v. Malta, no. 31122/05, § 69, 26 September 2006; Edwards v. Malta, no. 17647/04, § 78, 24 October 2006.

¹⁷¹ Bittó and Others v. Slovakia, no. 30255/09, §§ 115–117, 28 January 2014.

¹⁷² Lindheim and Others v. Norway, nos 13221/08 and 2139/10, § 134, 12 June 2012.

¹⁷³ Anthony Aquilina v. Malta, no. 3851/12, § 65, 11 December 2014.

¹⁷⁴ Buffalo S.r.l. en liquidation v. Italy, no. 38746/97, § 32, 3 July 2003.

issue is nonetheless within the Court's control, since the correct application of Article 1 of Protocol No. 1 is subject to its supervision'.¹⁷⁵

The approach to the second exception in the second paragraph of article 1, 'to secure the payment of taxes or other contributions or penalties', is much the same as it is with the 'general interest'. The measures must strike a 'fair balance' between the demands of the general interest of the community and the requirements of the protection of the individual's fundamental rights. A reasonable relationship of proportionality between the means employed and the aims pursued is required.¹⁷⁶ Thus, 'the financial liability arising out of the raising of tax or contributions may adversely affect the guarantee secured under this provision if it places an excessive burden on the person or the entity concerned or fundamentally interferes with his or its financial position'.¹⁷⁷ For example, where Swedish authorities sold a valuable asset at auction that had been seized in order to enforce tax liability, obtaining a sum that was dramatically lower than the actual value of the property in question, the Court held that article 1 had been breached because an individual and excessive burden had been imposed upon the applicant.¹⁷⁸ In this area, there is considerable deference to the national legislature. The Court has explained that '[d]ecisions in this area normally involve, in addition, an assessment of political, economic and social problems which the Convention leaves to the competence of the member States, as the domestic authorities are clearly better placed than the Convention organs to assess such problems'.¹⁷⁹

The term 'contributions' has been interpreted as covering court costs.¹⁸⁰

It is not uncommon for laws imposing taxes to be given a retrospective effect. The Court has confirmed that this is not inconsistent with the lawfulness requirement imposed by article 1 of Protocol No. 1.¹⁸¹

Discrimination

The Grand Chamber has noted that article 14 does not expressly prohibit distinctions based 'on the ground of property'. It is not deemed a criterion of distinction that is unacceptable as a matter of principle, as is the case with racial or ethnic origin, or unacceptable in the absence of very weighty reasons, as is the case with gender and sexual orientation.¹⁸² This does not mean, however, that there can never be a violation of the Convention related to article 1 of Protocol No. 1 in conjunction with article 14.

The area of social benefits—which are recognized as 'possessions' and therefore within the ambit of article 1—is fraught with distinctions and therefore with allegations of ¹⁷⁵ Burden v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 13378/05, § 59, ECHR 2008.

¹⁷⁶ National & Provincial Building Society, Leeds Permanent Building Society and Yorkshire Building Society v. the United Kingdom, 23 October 1997, § 80, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-VII.

¹⁷⁷ Ferretti v. Italy, no. 25083/94, Commission decision of 26 February 1997; Buffalo S.r.l. in liquidation v. Italy, no. 38746/97, § 32, 3 July 2003.

¹⁷⁸ Rousk v. Sweden, no. 27183/04, § 126, 25 July 2013.

¹⁷⁹ Azienda Agricola Silverfunghi S.a.s. and Others v. Italy, nos 48357/07, 52677/07, 52687/07, and 52701/07, § 103, 24 June 2014; Musa v. Austria, no. 40477/98, Commission decision of 10 September 1998; Baldž v. Slovakia (dec.), no. 60243/00, 16 September 2003.

¹⁸⁰ Perdigão v. Portugal [GC], no. 24768/06, § 61, 16 November 2010; Aires v. Portugal, no. 21775/93, Commission decision of 25 May 1995, DR 81, p. 48.

¹⁸¹ Maggio and Others v. Italy, nos 46286/09, 52851/08, 53727/08, 54486/08, and 56001/08, § 60, 31 May 2011; Arras and Others v. Italy, no. 17972/07, § 81, 14 February 2012.

¹⁸² Chabauty v. France [GC], no. 57412/08, § 50, 4 October 2012.

prohibited discrimination. The Court insists that although there is no restriction on the freedom of States Parties to decide whether to have in place any form of social security scheme, nor any obligation to do so, if a State creates a benefits or pension scheme this must comply with article 14 of the Convention.¹⁸³ The leading case, Stec and Others v. The United Kingdom, concerns differences in pensionable age between men and women. The Grand Chamber noted that the rationale for such a distinction was to mitigate the 'financial inequality and hardship arising out of women's traditional unpaid role of caring for the family in the home rather than earning money in the workplace' and that as a measure to correct 'factual inequalities' between men and women it was objectively justified under Article 14.¹⁸⁴ Over time, this changed but, as the Grand Chamber explained, 'the development of parity in the working lives of men and women has been a gradual process, and one which the national authorities are better placed to assess'.¹⁸⁵

Ukraine imposed a rule whereby retirement pensions were not payable to persons living abroad. The Court considered that this constituted a distinction based on personal status in accordance with article 14 of the Convention. It said that Ukraine had provided no justification for the measure, adding that 'the Government has not relied on considerations of international cooperation to justify treating pensioners living in Ukraine differently from those living abroad'. Referring to the 1952 International Labour Organisation's Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention that authorizes suspension of pension benefits to non-residents, the European Court said it was 'not prevented from defining higher standards on the basis of the Convention than those contained in other international legal instruments'. It went on to say that '[t]he rise of population mobility, the higher levels of international cooperation and integration, as well as developments in the area of banking services and information technologies no longer justify largely technically motivated restrictions in respect of beneficiaries of social security payments living abroad, which may have been considered reasonable in the early 1950s'. Consequently, there was a breach of article 14 in conjunction with article 1 of Protocol No. 1.¹⁸⁶

The Court rejected the claim of two elderly sisters who had lived together all their lives. They argued that property taxes imposed on the surviving sister following the death of one of them would pose a discriminatory burden because married cohabiting couples as well as same-sex couples were not exposed to the same liability. 'States, in principle, remaining free to devise different rules in the field of taxation policy', the Grand Chamber said.¹⁸⁷ Cohabiting sisters could not be equated with married or same-sex couples.

In a case concerning hunting rights, a small landowner invoked the Court's judgment finding a violation because French legislation had assigned the rights to associations without regard to the views of some owners who were opposed to the practice on ethical reasons. The applicant argued, unsuccessfully, that this was discrimination because it did not take into account the encroachment on the rights of landowners who had principles opposed to hunting.

¹⁸³ Stec and Others v. the United Kingdom (dec.) [GC], nos 65731/01 and 65900/01, §§ 54–55, ECHR 2005-X; Stec and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], nos 65731/01 and 65900/01, § 53, ECHR 2006-VI.

¹⁸⁴ Stec and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], nos 65731/01 and 65900/01, § 61, ECHR 2006-VI.

¹⁸⁵ Ibid., § 63.

¹⁸⁶ Pichkur v. Ukraine, no. 10441/06, §§ 52–54, 7 November 2013.

¹⁸⁷ Burden v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 13378/05, § 65, ECHR 2008.

Reservations and declarations

Upon ratification, Luxembourg made the following reservation: 'Désirant éviter toute incertitude en ce qui concerne l'application de l'article 1^{er} du Protocole additionnel par rapport à la loi luxembourgeoise du 26 avril 1951 qui concerne la liquidation de certains biens, droits et intérêts ci-devant ennemis, soumis à des mesures de séquestre, Déclare réserver les dispositions de la loi du 26 avril 1951 désignée ci-dessus.'¹⁸⁸

Austria made a reservation to Protocol No. 1 that was associated with the obligations it assumed under the State Treaty: 'being desirous of avoiding any uncertainty concerning the application of Article 1 of the Protocol in connection with the State Treaty of 15th May 1955 for the Restoration of an Independent and Democratic Austria, declares the Protocol ratified with the reservations that there shall be no interference with the provisions of Part IV "Claims arising out of the War" and Part V "Property, Rights and Interests" of the abovementioned State Treaty'.¹⁸⁹ However, the law itself was not referred to in the reservation. The Commission held that in making the reservation, 'Austria must necessarily have had the intention of excluding from the scope of the First Protocol everything forming the subject matter of Parts IV and V of said Treaty'. Accordingly, Austria's reservation must be interpreted as intended to cover all legislative and administrative measures directly related to the subject matter of Parts IV and V of the State Treaty'.¹⁹⁰ Later, the Commission expressed its intent to reconsider its position.¹⁹¹

Portugal formulated the following reservation: 'Article 1 of the Protocol will be applied subject to Article 82 of the Constitution of the Portuguese Republic, which provides that expropriations of large landowners, big property owners and entrepreneurs or shareholders may be subject to no compensation under the conditions to be laid down by the law.'¹⁹² The United Kingdom reacted to the reservation with a letter to the Secretary General of the Council of Europe 're-affirm[ing] the view of the Government of the United Kingdom that the general principles of international law require the payment of prompt, adequate and effective compensation in respect of the expropriation of foreign property'.¹⁹³ Similar statements were made by Germany and France. The Secretary General replied to each country, noting that the letters did not constitute a formal objection to the Portuguese reservation but that they would nevertheless be circulated to Member States.¹⁹⁴ The Portuguese reservation to article 1 of Protocol No. 1 was withdrawn in 1987.¹⁹⁵

San Marino formulated a reservation declaring that 'having regard to the provisions of law in force which govern the use of goods in conformity with the general interest', the principle set forth in article 1 'has no bearing on the regulations in force concerning the real estate of foreigners'.¹⁹⁶

¹⁸⁸ (1955-56-57) 1 YB 42.

¹⁸⁹ (1958-59) 2 YB 88-91.

¹⁹⁰ F. H. jr. v. Austria, no. 1452/62, Commission decision of 18 December 1963, (1963) 6 YB 268, at p. 276. Also Association X v. Austria, no. 473/59, Commission decision of 29 August 1959, (1958-59) 2 YB 400.

¹⁹¹ X v. Austria, no. 8180/78, Commission decision of 10 May 1979, DR 20, p. 26.

¹⁹² (1978) 21 YB 16-19.

¹⁹³ (1979) 22 YB 16-17.

¹⁹⁴ Ibid., pp. 16-23.

¹⁹⁵ (1987) 30 YB 4-5.

¹⁹⁶ (1989) 32 YB 5.

Invoking article 33 of its Constitution, Spain made three reservations to article 1: '1. The right to private property and to inheritance is recognised. 2. The social function of these rights shall determine their scope, as provided for by law. 3. No person shall be deprived of their property or their rights except for a cause recognised as being in the public interest or in the interest of society and in exchange for fitting compensation as provided for by law.'¹⁹⁷

Bulgaria made a reservation stating that article 1 of Protocol No. 1 'shall not affect the scope or content of Article 22, paragraph 1 of the Constitution of the Republic of Bulgaria, which states that: "No foreign physical person or foreign legal entity shall acquire ownership over land, except through legal inheritance. Ownership thus acquired shall be duly transferred."¹⁹⁸

Upon ratification on 16 April 1996, Estonia formulated the following reservation:

In accordance with Article 64 [now article 57] of the Convention, the Republic of Estonia declares that the provisions of Article 1 of the First Protocol shall not apply to the laws on property reform which regulate the restoration or compensation of property nationalised, confiscated, requisitioned, collectivised or otherwise unlawfully expropriated during the period of Soviet annexation; the restructuring of collectivised agriculture and privatisation of state owned property.

The reservation was completed with a lengthy list of relevant legislation.¹⁹⁹ The Court has upheld the validity of the Estonian reservation.²⁰⁰ But it has also observed: 'The reservation only covers laws in force at the material time and does not extend to later amendments to the restitution laws which might subsequently be subjected to Convention scrutiny. Moreover it only concerns substantive as opposed to procedural questions in the field of the property issues encompassed by its terms.'²⁰¹ It has suggested that the reservation cannot apply to subsequent amendments to the Property Reform (Principles) Act.²⁰² Upon ratification in 1997, Latvia made a similar reservation to Protocol No. 1.²⁰³ It has also been upheld by the Court.²⁰⁴

Georgia has made several reservations to article 1 of Protocol No. 1. Georgia stated that article 1 'shall not apply to persons who have or will obtain status of "internally displaced persons" until the elimination of circumstances motivating the granting of this status (until the restoration of the territorial integrity of Georgia)'. There are several other detailed reservations relating to Georgian legislation.²⁰⁵

¹⁹⁷ (1990) 33 YB 9.

¹⁹⁸ (1992) 35 YB 5.

¹⁹⁹ (1996) 39 YB 23–25.

²⁰⁰ Shestjorkin v. Estonia (dec.), no. 49450/99, 15 June 2000; Pöder and Others v. Estonia (dec.), no. 67723/01, 26 April 2005. Also Vesterby v. Estonia, no. 34476/97, 1 July 1998; Stalas v. Estonia, no. 40108/98, Commission decision of 21 October 1998; Elias v. Estonia, no. 41456/98, Commission decision of 21 October 1998.

²⁰¹ Ibid.; Pöder and Others v. Estonia (dec.), no. 67723/01, 26 April 2005.

²⁰² Pöder and Others v. Estonia (dec.), no. 67723/01, 26 April 2005.

²⁰³ (1997) 40 YB 49–52.

²⁰⁴ Koslova and Smirnova v. Latvia (dec.), no. 57381/00, 23 October 2001; Liepājnieks v. Latvia (dec.), no. 37586/06, § 45, 2 November 2010.

²⁰⁵ (2002) 45 YB 19.

Further reading

- Corneliu Birisan, 'La protection du droit de propriété: développements récents de la jurisprudence de la Cour européenne des droits de l'homme', in Lucius Caflisch, Johan Callewaert, Roderick Liddell, Paul Mahoney, and Mark Villiger, eds, Liber Amicorum Luzius Wildhaber, Kehl, Germany: N.P. Engel, 2007, pp. 5–24.
- Ali Riza Çoban, Protection of Property Rights within the European Convention on Human Rights, Farnham, UK: Ashgate, 2004.
- Luigi Condorelli, 'Premier Protocole Additionnel, Article 1', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 971–97.
- Hélène Ruiz Fabri, 'The Approach taken by the European Court of Human Rights to the Assessment of Compensation for Regulatory Expropriations of the Property of Foreign Investors', (2002–2003) 1 New York University Environmental Law Journal 148.
- Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention Vladimiro Zagrebelsky, pp. 639–70.
- Grabewarter, European Convention, pp. 365–80.
- Harris et al., Law of the European Convention, pp. 655–96.
- Timo Koivurova, 'Jurisprudence of the European Court of Human Rights regarding Indigenous Peoples: Retrospect and Prospects', (2011) 18 International Journal on Minority and Group Rights 1.
- Richard Lang, 'Unlocking the First Protocol: Protection of Property and the European Court of Human Rights', (2008) 29 HRLJ 1.
- Helen Mountfield, 'Regulatory Expropriations in Europe: The Approach of the European Court of Human Rights', (2002–2003) 11 New York University Environmental Law Journal 136.
- Petra Herzfeld Olsson, 'Every Natural or Legal Person is Entitled to the Peaceful Enjoyment of His or Her Possessions: Article 1, Protocol 1 to the European Convention on Human Rights', in Filip Dorssemont, Klaus Lörcher, and Isabelle Schömann, eds, The European Convention on Human Rights and the Employment Relation, Oxford/Portland, OR: Hart, 2013, pp. 381–416.
- Kudret Özersay and Ayla Gürel, 'Property and Human Rights in Cyprus: The European Court of Human Rights as a Platform of Political Struggle', (2008) 44 Middle Eastern Studies 291.
- Ovey/White, Jacobs and White, European Convention, pp. 300–19.
- Arjen van Rijn, 'Right to the Peaceful Enjoyment of One's Possessions (Article 1 of Protocol No. 1)', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 863–93.
- Egon Schwelb, 'The Protection of the Right of Property of Nationals under the First Protocol to the European Convention on Human Rights', (1964) 13 American Journal of Comparative Law 518.
- Maya Sigron, Legitimate Expectations Under Article 1 of Protocol No. 1 to the European Convention on Human Rights, Antwerp: Intersentia, 2014.

Article 2. Right to education/Droit à l'instruction

No person shall be denied the right to education. In the exercise of any functions which it assumes in relation to education and to teaching, the State shall respect the right of parents to ensure such education and teaching in conformity with their own religious and philosophical convictions.

Nul ne peut se voir refuser le droit à l'instruction. L'État, dans l'exercice des fonctions qu'il assumera dans le domaine de l'éducation et de l'enseignement, respectera le droit des parents d'assurer cette éducation et cet enseignement conformément à leurs convictions religieuses et philosophiques.

Introductory comments

The right to education is the only right set out in the Convention and its Protocols that without any dispute can be said to belong to the category of economic, social, and cultural rights. Of the other two rights in Protocol No. 1, the right to elections is clearly among the civil and political rights, while the right to property seems to straddle the two categories. Economic, social, and cultural rights are sometimes regarded as being less important or essential, or comprising norms that are not suitable for formulation in an absolute fashion. Yet the education of young children provided by the State is about as absolute a right as can be found. Nowhere in the modern world, and certainly not in Europe, is this right contested. Of course, debate remains about the age and level when the right to education starts to become less absolute and less of an obligation as well as a right.

During the drafting of the European Convention and Protocol No. 1, more attention was devoted to the provision on the right to education than to any other right. In most cases, the drafters did little more than import the formulation of fundamental rights from the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, adding some detail as to the scope of the rights and the permissible restrictions. The problems in drafting the right of education provision mainly involved the struggle between universal public education and the protection of private systems, generally of a confessional nature. Often, it was not at all a question of the right to education as such but rather of the right of parents, rather than the State, to control the education of children. A judgment of the European Court of Human Rights speaks of 'lengthy and impassioned discussions'.¹ The drafting history of article 2 of Protocol No. 1 reveals a complex confrontation between the Consultative Assembly and the Committee of Ministers about the content of the Protocol, with the Consultative Assembly finally prevailing. But even in the Committee of Ministers, there was sharp division among the delegates.

Article 26 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights states:

- (1) Everyone has the right to education. Education shall be free, at least in the elementary and fundamental stages. Elementary education shall be compulsory. Technical and professional education shall be made generally available and higher education shall be equally accessible to all on the basis of merit.

¹ Kjeldsen, Busk Madsen, and Pedersen v. Denmark, 7 December 1976, § 50, Series A no. 23.

- (2) Education shall be directed to the full development of the human personality and to the strengthening of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. It shall promote understanding, tolerance and friendship among all nations, racial or religious groups, and shall further the activities of the United Nations for the maintenance of peace.
- (3) Parents have a prior right to choose the kind of education that shall be given to their children.

It is the longest of the thirty articles in the Declaration, testimony not so much to the importance of the rights it enshrines—the right to life, in article 3, takes all of eleven words—as to the difficulties of the drafters in reaching agreement on a succinct formulation.

When the United Nations General Assembly decided to divide the 'covenant on human rights' into two distinct instruments, there was no debate about consigning the right to education to the one dealing with economic, social, and cultural rights. Articles 14 and 15 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social, and Cultural Rights make detailed provision for the right to education, reproducing in somewhat more detail the content of paragraphs 1 and 2 of article 16 of the Universal Declaration. Paragraph 3 of the Universal Declaration is reflected in paragraphs 3 and 4 of article 14:

3. The States Parties to the present Covenant undertake to have respect for the liberty of parents and, when applicable, legal guardians to choose for their children schools, other than those established by the public authorities, which conform to such minimum educational standards as may be laid down or approved by the State and to ensure the religious and moral education of their children in conformity with their own convictions.
4. No part of this article shall be construed so as to interfere with the liberty of individuals and bodies to establish and direct educational institutions, subject always to the observance of the principles set forth in paragraph 1 of this article and to the requirement that the education given in such institutions shall conform to such minimum standards as may be laid down by the State.

The right to education is recognized in other specialized treaties of the United Nations system. The first of them, in a chronological sense, is the Convention against Discrimination in Education adopted by the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization in 1960.² Although the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination contains only a reference to the right to education, nestled amongst other economic, social, and cultural rights,³ the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women devotes a detailed provision to the subject. It addresses the importance of equality in terms of career and vocational guidance at all levels of education, access to the same curricula and examinations, equal opportunities for scholarships and study grants, and the reduction of drop-out rates. Inspired by article 26(2) of the Universal Declaration, it also addresses the content of education: 'The elimination of any stereotyped concept of the roles of men and women at all levels and in all forms of education by encouraging coeducation and other types of education which will help to achieve this aim and, in particular, by the revision of textbooks and school programmes and the adaptation of teaching methods.'⁴ Not surprisingly, the Convention on the Rights of the Child also dedicates great attention to the subject of education.⁵

² (1962) 429 UNTS 93.

³ International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, (1966) 660 UNTS 195, 5(e)(v).

⁴ Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women, (1980) 1249 UNTS 13, art. 10.

⁵ Convention on the Rights of the Child, (1990) 1577 UNTS 3, arts. 28–29.

The European Union Charter of Fundamental Rights reads as follows:

Article 14. Right to education.

1. Everyone has the right to education and to have access to vocational and continuing training.
2. This right includes the possibility to receive free compulsory education.
3. The freedom to found educational establishments with due respect for democratic principles and the right of parents to ensure the education and teaching of their children in conformity with their religious, philosophical and pedagogical convictions shall be respected, in accordance with the national laws governing the exercise of such freedom and right.

The ambit of article 14(1) of the Charter is wider than that of article 2 of Protocol No. 1 to the Convention because it may be extended to cover access to vocational and continuing training.⁶ The scope of article 14(3) corresponds to that of article 2 of Protocol No. 1 as regards the rights of parents.⁷

Drafting of the provision

The initial draft European Convention on Human Rights prepared by the International Juridical Section of the European Movement did not deal with education and the rights of parents. Nevertheless, it contained a provision on family life,⁸ a forerunner of article 8 of the Convention. As is the case with the other rights added by Protocol No. 1, there was substantial discussion of the issues during the drafting of the Convention itself. This resumed after the Convention was adopted as the Council of Europe struggled to find an acceptable text dealing with the rights of parents in the education of their children.

Drafting of the European Convention

Asked to prepare a text for discussion in the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions at the first session of the Consultative Assembly, held from 22 August to 5 September 1949, Pierre-Henri Teitgen proposed the following: 'Rights of parents in regard to the education of their children, in accordance with Article 26(3) of the United Nations Declaration.'⁹ Teitgen also elaborated upon the inclusion of 'family rights' in the draft, noting that the subject had given rise to discussion in the Committee:

There were first of all those rights which I shall call 'family rights.' I might explain that by this I mean those rights which we had in mind when we refer in paragraph (4) of Article 2, to 'freedom from all arbitrary interference in private and family life'; and also those which we mentioned in paragraph (10) where we ask for protection of 'the right to marry and found a family,' and finally

⁶ Explanation relating to the Charter of Fundamental Rights, Official Journal of the European Union, C 303/34, 14 December 2007.

⁷ Ibid.

⁸ Convention for the Collective Protection of Individual Rights and Democratic Liberties by the States, Members of the Council of Europe, and for the establishment of a European Court of Human Rights to ensure observance of the Convention, Doc. INF/5/E/R, I TP 296–303, at p. 296, art. 1(g). Also Recommendations adopted at the meeting of the International Council of the European Movement held at Brussels in February 1949, INF/2/F, p. 3. This is reproduced in CDH (67) 5, at pp. 2–3, with the indication that the original English version no longer exists.

⁹ Proposals by Mr P.H. Teitgen, Rapporteur, 29 August 1949, Doc. A 116, I TP 166–8. Also Report presented by Mr P.H. Teitgen, 5 September 1949, Doc. A 290, I TP 192–213, at p. 206; Report [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions], 5 September 1949, Doc. AS (1) 77, I TP 216–39, at p. 228.

those which we defined in paragraph (11) where we speak of 'the right of parents to have prior right regarding the kind of education to be given to their children.'

No one in the Committee, I hasten to add, has denied the vital importance of these family rights. Some have said that they would prefer to see the guarantee confined for the moment to essential civic freedoms, to those which are the necessary conditions for the functioning of democratic institutions, and that it would be better for the time being to exclude all other freedoms and all other fundamental rights which would include, in spite of their importance, family rights.

The Committee recalled the time in the recent past when, in some countries, certain people were denied the right to marry on account of race or religious convictions. It also recalled the legislation, under which some countries suffered during cruel years, which subordinated the child to the benefit of the State.

On account of these memories, the majority of the Committee considered it desirable to include these fundamental rights in the list of guaranteed freedoms. It considered that the father of a family cannot be an independent citizen, cannot feel free within his own country, if he is menaced in his own home and if, every day, the State steals from his soul, or the conscience of his children.¹⁰

The matter was hotly debated in the plenary sessions of the Consultative Assembly.¹¹ Indeed, it was the most contentious right of the entire draft convention. A proposal to refer the draft on the right of parents to the education of their children, together with the right to property, to the Legal Committee and not to include it in the draft adopted by the Consultative Assembly was adopted by a very close margin, forty-three votes to forty.¹²

The Committee of Ministers sent the Consultative Assembly draft to a Committee of Experts that met in February and March 1950. Delegates from Ireland and Turkey proposed that the provision on the rights of parents be restored.¹³ The Report of the Committee said that 'most' of its members supported inclusion of a right of parents to the education of their children. The Committee considered that a decision to reinstate the right was a political question outside of its own competence, although it noted the importance of the right, given the propensity of 'totalitarian regimes' that 'sought systematically to expose the children to their ideological propaganda, by depriving them of the rightful influence of their parents'.¹⁴

The next substantive discussion of the issue occurred at the second session of the Consultative Assembly, in August 1950. Basing itself on a proposal from Henri Rolin,¹⁵ the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions adopted the following, by eight votes to nil, with three abstentions: 'All persons are entitled to education. The responsibilities assumed by the State with regard to education may not encroach on the right of parents to ensure the spiritual and moral instruction of their children in accordance with ¹⁰ Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 7 September 1949], I TP 250-95, at p. 270.

¹¹ Official Report of the sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 8 September 1949], II TP 14-274, at pp. 64-8.

¹² Ibid., p. 132. For the draft Convention as a whole, see Recommendation No. 38 to the Committee of Ministers adopted 8 September 1949 on the conclusion of the debates, Doc. AS (1) 108, II TP 274-83.

¹³ Amendment to Article 2 of the Recommendation of the Consultative Assembly proposed by the Experts of Ireland and Turkey, Doc. A 776, III TP 184-5; Amendment to Articles 2 and 3 of the Recommendation of the Consultative Assembly, proposed by the Irish Expert, Doc. A 778, III TP 184-5.

¹⁴ Report to the Committee of Ministers submitted by the Committee of Experts Instructed to Draw Up a Draft Convention of Collective Guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Doc. CM/WP 1 (5) 15, A 924, IV TP 2-55, at pp. 18-20.

¹⁵ Text proposed by M. Rolin, Doc. AS/JA/WP 1 (2) 1, A 1942, V TP 204-5.

their own religious and philosophical beliefs.¹⁶ After debate in the plenary Consultative Assembly,¹⁷ the matter returned again to the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions, where Pierre-Henri Teitgen had a revised text: 'Every person has a right to education. The functions assumed by the State in respect of education and of teaching may not encroach upon the right of parents to ensure the spiritual and moral education and the teaching of their children in conformity with their own religious and philosophical convictions.'¹⁸ The text was adopted in the Committee by seventeen votes to three.¹⁹ After further debate in the plenary Consultative Assembly,²⁰ the provision adopted by the Legal Committee was endorsed, by ninety-seven votes, with fifteen abstentions,²¹ and the recommendation duly transmitted to the Committee of Ministers.²² A memorandum on the Consultative Assembly discussions prepared by the Secretariat General described the text as 'a compromise' produced by a Sub-Committee 'the members of which held varying political views'.²³

Meeting in Rome immediately prior to adoption of the Convention, on 3 November 1950, the Committee of Ministers was unable to agree on inclusion of the right in the Convention. The United Kingdom representative moved that that proposals from the Consultative Assembly, including the provision on the right of parents to education of their children, be referred to a Committee of Experts 'with a view to the preparation of a Protocol to the Convention'. This was adopted by ten votes to one. An attempt by the Irish representative, Seán MacBride, to enlarge the Committee so as to include representatives of the Consultative Assembly was not accepted.²⁴

There was much discontent in the Consultative Assembly about the turn of events. On 5 November 1950, the Standing Committee expressed 'regret' that the amendments, ¹⁶ Progress Report, Doc. AS/JA (2) 1, A 2041, V TP 206-7; Supplementary Report of 8 August 1950 on the Draft Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms Presented on Behalf of the Committee by M. P.H. Teitgen, Doc. AS/JA (2) 30, V TP 208-9.

¹⁷ Report of the sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 14 August 1950], V TP 216-71, at p. 250; Report of the sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 16 August 1950], V TP 272-351, at pp. 278, 326-8; Motion relative to the right to own property proposed by Mr MacEntee and several of his colleagues, Doc. AS/JA (2) 55, V TP 216-17.

¹⁸ Draft Motion submitted by M. Teitgen, Original Draft, Doc. AS/JA (2) 6, A 2207, VI TP 6-11; Draft Motion submitted by M. Teitgen, Revised Draft, Doc. AS/JA (2) 6 rev., A 2238, VI TP 10-15.

¹⁹ Minutes of the sitting [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions, 18 August 1950], Doc. AS/JA (2) PV 4, A 2265, VI TP 16-20, at p. 20; Draft Recommendation submitted to the Consultative Assembly, Doc. AS/JA (2) 20, A 2491, VI TP 42-7, at p. 44; Text of the Report [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions], Doc. AS (2) 93, VI TP 58-72, at pp. 62, 68; First Report [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions], Doc. AS/JA (2) 15, A 2298, VI TP 46-52; Second Report Doc. AS/JA (2) rev., A 2493, VI TP 52-9, at p. 56.

²⁰ Report of the sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, of 25 August 1950, morning], VI TP 74-141, at pp. 78, 88, 104-10, 138-40; Report of the sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 25 August 1950, afternoon], VI TP 144-91, at pp. 152-62.

²¹ Report of the sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 25 August 1950, afternoon], VI TP 144-91, at p. 164. See also Note of 14 December 1950 prepared by the Secretariat-General on the reasons for the Amendments to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms adopted by the Consultative Assembly on 15 August 1950, Doc. CM (50) 96, A 3503, VII TP 130-41, at pp. 136-41.

²² Text published in the Collected Documents of the Consultative Assembly, Doc. AS (2) 104, VI TP 198-229, at p. 208.

²³ Explanatory Note by the Secretariat General, 9 September 1950, Doc. CM (50) 57, A 2781, VI TP 230-9, at p. 232.

²⁴ Report of the meeting [of the Committee of Ministers, 3 November 1950], VII TP 24-34, at p. 34.

including the provision on education, were not included in the Convention.²⁵ Later in November, when the plenary Assembly convened, anger was expressed at the United Kingdom, to whom responsibility for omission of the provision was attributed. The Assembly grudgingly accepted the fact that work would continue on a protocol where its concerns could be addressed.²⁶

The Secretariat prepared a memorandum suggesting that the right required more exact definition. In particular, it identified two questions for clarification: the extent to which governments may be required to organize or subsidize teaching in response to the religious or philosophical convictions of parents and whether 'political groups which aim at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms set forth in the Convention shall have the right to educate their children in accordance with such aims'.²⁷ The Secretariat described the views as being divided between those who were satisfied with the text and those who felt it did not go far enough in safeguarding the rights of parents with respect to religious education of their children. It noted that those who wanted no change included many 'advocates of a completely secular education, who felt they had already made sufficient compromise in agreeing to the text before them'.²⁸

Preparation of Protocol No. 1

Drafting of the Protocol was assigned to a Committee of Experts that met in Paris in February 1951. In addition to the Consultative Assembly text that had been passed over by the Committee of Ministers, two other proposals had been submitted for consideration. The United Kingdom submitted the following:

No person should be denied the right to education. In the exercise of any functions which the State may assume in relation to education and to teaching it shall have regard to the liberty of the parents to ensure the religious education of their children in conformity with their own convictions.²⁹

A Belgian draft read as follows:

No person shall be denied the right to education. In the exercise of any functions which the State may assume in relation to education and to teaching it shall have regard to the liberty of the parents to ensure the religious education of their children in conformity with their own convictions.³⁰

²⁵ Minutes of the meeting held by the Standing Committee of the Consultative Assembly in Rome on 5 November 1950 (morning), Doc. AS/CP (2) PV 5, p. 2, A 3057, VII TP 82-4; Minutes of the fourth meeting held in the afternoon of 5 November 1950 [by the Standing Committee of the Consultative Assembly], Doc. AS/CP (2) PV 6, p. 2, A 3058, VII TP 84-5; Second Report on the Work of the Standing Committee presented in accordance with the Resolution adopted by the Assembly on 6th September 1949, Doc. AS (2) 137, pp. 1126-7, VII TP 86-9.

²⁶ Reports of the Consultative Assembly, 2nd session, 18 November 1950, VII TP 90-121.

²⁷ Note on the amendments to the Convention on Human Rights proposed by the Consultative Assembly about which the Committee of Ministers was not able to reach unanimous agreement, Doc. CM (50) 90, A 3034, VII TP 126-30, at p. 128.

²⁸ Note of 14 December 1950 prepared by the Secretariat-General on the reasons for the Amendments to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms adopted by the Consultative Assembly on 25 August 1950, Doc. CM (50) 96, A 3503, VII TP 130-79, at p. 144.

²⁹ Memorandum by the Secretariat setting forth the different texts proposed, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 3, CM/WP 1 (51) 29, A 4005, VII TP 192-7, at pp. 192-3. Also Letter from the Secretary General of the Council of Europe to the Foreign Ministers of Member States, 7 February 1951, Doc. D 1357, VII TP 184-7.

³⁰ Memorandum by the Secretariat setting forth the different texts proposed, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 3, CM/WP 1 (51) 29, A 4005, VII TP 192-7, pp. 194-6.

The Committee's Report noted that 'certain delegations' agreed on a positive statement of the right, in accordance with the Consultative Assembly and the Belgian delegation, while others agreed with the British preference for a negative statement of the right. The British were supported by Denmark, Germany, and Norway in their concern that a positive statement of the right 'might be interpreted as imposing on the governments the obligation to take effective measures to ensure that everybody could receive the education which he desired'. Others insisted that the provision recognized the obligation of the State to provide education to all children who were not in receipt of private education. A second issue was whether the Convention should guarantee the right of parents to choose the religious education or all of the education of their children. A text, based upon the British proposal, met with wide acceptance:

Everybody has the right to education. (No person shall be denied the right to education). In the exercise of any functions which it may assume in relation to education and to teaching, the State must respect the liberty of parents to ensure the religious education of their children in conformity with their own convictions.³¹

The Belgian, French, Saar, and Swedish delegations found this text acceptable but preferred one expressly endorsing the principle of the freedom of private teaching. Denmark proposed an additional sentence: 'Parents or children in charge of the education of children shall have the right to decide freely that children in their charge shall attend recognised schools with another teaching language than the language of the country in question.' Turkey moved the following amendment: 'The State shall also refrain from interfering in the education of minors for political purposes.'³²

The Committee of Experts met again in June 1951. It reported that the majority, although having no objection in principle to the Danish proposal, felt that the Convention 'was not the most appropriate medium for settling the question'. Denmark agreed to withdraw its proposal. The majority did not support the Turkish proposal. The Committee accepted the following provision:

No person shall be denied the right to education. In the exercise of any functions which it may assume in relation to education and to teaching, the State shall have regard to the liberty of parents to ensure the religious education of their children in conformity with their own creeds, and to the right of parents to send their children to schools, other than those established by the State, which conform to the standards laid down by law.³³

At the meeting of Ministers' Advisers, in June 1951, the United Kingdom proposed deletion of the sentence following the word 'creeds' and its replacement with the following: 'and, where schools have been established by the State, to send their children to any other school of their choice, provided that such school conforms with the requirements of law'.³⁴ Turkey proposed deletion of the last sentence, beginning with the words 'and to the right of parents to send...'³⁵ The Ministers' Advisers agreed on the ³¹ Report of the Committee of Experts to the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM/WP 1 (51) 40, CM/WP VI (51) 7, A 4024, VII TP 204-13, at pp. 208-11.

³² Report of the Committee of Experts to the Committee of Ministers [of 19 April 1951], Doc. CM (51) 33 final, A 4421 with corrigendum A 4475, VII TP 250-5, at p. 252.

³³ Ibid.

³⁴ Amendments proposed by the United Kingdom Government, Doc. CM/Adj. (51) 34, A 5444, VII TP 314.

³⁵ Amendments proposed by the Turkish Government, Doc. CM/Adj. (51) 36, A 5461, VII TP 314.

following: 'No person shall be denied the right to education. In the exercise of any functions which it may assume in relation to education and to teaching, the State shall have regard to the right of parents to ensure the religious education of their children in conformity with their own creeds.'³⁶ The text was endorsed in August 1951 by the Committee of Ministers.³⁷

The Secretariat-General prepared an opinion on the provision noting the negative formulation of the right, a consequence of concern that 'the positive formulation proposed by the Assembly might be interpreted to impose on the State the positive duty to provide education'. The Secretariat-General said that although education was provided by the State for children as a matter of course, 'it is still not possible for them to give an unlimited guarantee to apply to illiterate adults for whom no facilities exist, or to types or standards of education which the State cannot furnish for one reason or another'. It noted that the Assembly draft's reference to 'religious and moral education' and to 'religious and philosophical convictions' had been changed to 'religious education' because the Assembly text 'could be construed to mean that parents whose "philosophical convictions" are fundamentally opposed to the conceptions of democracy and human rights would have the right to educate their children in the same beliefs'.³⁸

The Legal Committee of the Consultative Assembly submitted an opinion to the Committee of Ministers that addressed several aspects of the proposed text. It objected to the term 'have regard to' as being 'a phrase which is too elastic to secure the supervision which is the aim of the Convention'. It noted the restriction of the guarantee to religious education, saying this would 'undoubtedly be interpreted in the majority of States as an appreciable retreat, which it will be difficult to accept, from the traditional conception of freedom of education'. It seems the concern here was about the language of education rather than ideology or belief. As for concerns that this might result in promotion of undemocratic ideologies, the Committee said this concern was already addressed in article 17 of the Convention. The Assembly recommended the following text: 'No person shall be denied the right to education. In the exercise of any functions which it assumes in relation to education and to teaching, the State shall respect the right of parents to ensure such education and teaching in conformity with their own religious and philosophical convictions.'³⁹

In response to the concerns of the Legal Committee of the Consultative Assembly, and so as to comply with its concern that the principle of the independent school be recognized, the Committee of Ministers agreed to add the following to its draft article 2: '... and, where schools have been established by the State, to send their children to any other school of their choice, provided that such school conforms with the requirements of the law'. The following text was proposed: 'No person shall be denied the right to education. In the exercise of any functions which it assumes in relation to education and to teaching, the State shall respect the right of parents to ensure such education and in ³⁶ Recommendations of the Ministers' Advisers relating to the Agenda of the ninth Session of the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM (51) 54 rev., A 5578, VII TP 326-33.

³⁷ Text of the Draft Protocol approved by the Committee of Ministers on 3 August 1951, VII TP 338-43.

³⁸ Commentary by the Secretariat-General on the Draft Protocol, Doc. AS/JA (3) 13, A 5904, VIII TP 4-17.

³⁹ Draft letter to be submitted to the President of the Consultative Assembly concerning the Draft Protocol, Doc. AS/JA (3) 17, A 6131, VIII TP 20-29.

conformity with their own religious and philosophical convictions.⁴⁰ The plenary Consultative Assembly convened in December 1951. By this point, article 2 was the only outstanding issue of Protocol No. 1. Once again, there was a lengthy debate in the Assembly. The Legal Committee's text was adopted by seventy-five votes, with twenty-three abstentions.⁴¹

The Secretariat-General addressed the impasse that seemed to confront the Consultative Assembly and the Committee of Ministers. It noted that there appeared to be division on two points. The first was the complaint of the Assembly that 'have regard to' was not precise enough and should be replaced by 'respect'. The second was whether the guarantee involved only religious education or also covered 'philosophical' convictions. The Secretariat-General noted that both sides agreed that the question of according grants to private schools should be kept outside the framework of the Convention. However, recognition of a right of parents 'belonging to no creed to be free from the obligation to have their children given any religious instruction whatsoever' appeared to be 'insoluble owing to the constitutional or legal difficulties which the Assembly's solution would present to certain States'.⁴²

In a note on article 2 that is not dated but that clearly was issued in December 1951, entitled 'The right to education and the question of denominational schools', A.H. Robertson of the Secretariat-General criticized the Consultative Assembly draft. If it were to be adopted, he said, 'the terms "religious and moral education and teaching" would guarantee to the parents the right to ensure as they thought fit the complete education of their children (and not only their religious education), without the State being bound to provide or support the schools necessary to this end'. Robertson noted that at the Committee of Experts meeting in February 1951, 'most delegations voted against such a far-reaching undertaking'. In April, he pointed out, a majority of the Committee of Experts accepted the British proposal that did not apply to education in general but only to religious education. Then, in June, in order to achieve unanimity, the Experts agreed to modify the British draft so as to recognize explicitly a right to general education in denominational schools, although it imposed no obligation on the State to support such schools. Robertson noted that the Experts also substituted the word 'creeds' for 'convictions', thereby clarifying the right of parents to ensure religious education but no corresponding right of those with no religion to have their children instructed in atheism or in agnosticism. Finally, in July, the Ministers' Advisers accepted a Turkish amendment that narrowed the right by limiting the right of parents to choose the education of their children to religious education and only then when the parents belong to a religious denomination. Robertson said that in terms of protecting denominational schools, this was the most restrictive of all the texts that had been examined during the negotiations.⁴³

⁴⁰ Letter dated 28 November 1951 from the Chairman of the Committee of Ministers to the President of the Consultative Assembly, Doc. AS (3) 84, VIII TP 48-59.

⁴¹ Report of the sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 8 December 1951], VIII TP 76-169, at p. 168.

⁴² Note of 12 December 1951 by the Secretariat-General relating to the Draft Protocol, Doc. CM (51) 81, A 7194, VIII TP 174-91.

⁴³ Note (not dated) by Mr Robertson, member of the Secretariat-General, on Article 2 of the draft Protocol (unreferenced document), VIII TP 190-5 (emphasis in the original).

The text of article 2 was finalized in late February 1952 at the meeting of Ministers' Advisers. The United Kingdom made yet another proposal:

No person shall be denied the right to education. In the exercise of any functions which it assumes in relation to education and to teaching, the State shall respect the right of parents to ensure that their children shall be educated and taught in conformity with the parents' own (religious or philosophical) convictions, provided that the education to be given to the children is efficient and does not involve unreasonable public expenditure.

However, the Ministers' Advisers opted for the Consultative Assembly text.

The heading 'Right to education' was added according to the provisions of Protocol No. 11.⁴⁴

Analysis and interpretation

In contrast with what is the general rule in the Convention, the right to education is set out in rather more succinct terms in article 2 of Protocol No. 1 than it is in the corresponding provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, on which it is based. Thus, there is no explicit reference to either free or compulsory education of any kind, or to access to higher education. Nor does Protocol No. 1 contemplate the purposes of education: the full development of the human personality; the strengthening of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms; the promotion of understanding, tolerance, and friendship among all nations, racial or religious groups; and furtherance of the activities of the United Nations for the maintenance of peace. Protocol No. 1 formulates education in a negative sense, prohibiting that it be denied rather than asserting it as a right. Essentially, it addresses what the State should not do rather than what it should do by insisting upon respect of the right of parents to education compatible with their religious and philosophical convictions. All told, it is a much more conservative provision than article 26 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. In Protocol No. 1, the right is more 'civil and political' in nature, whereas in the Universal Declaration it is primarily 'economic, social and cultural'.

The structure of article 2 is similar to that of articles 2, 3, 4(1), and 7 of the Convention ('no one shall . . .'), 'which together enshrine the most fundamental values of democratic societies making up the Council of Europe'.⁴⁵ As the Court has explained, '[i]n a democratic society, the right to education, which is indispensable to the furtherance of human rights, plays such a fundamental role that a restrictive interpretation of the first sentence of Article 2 of Protocol No. 1 would not be consistent with the aim or purpose of that provision'.⁴⁶

Right to education

Article 2 of Protocol No. 1 must be read as a whole, although it is 'dominated by its first sentence'.⁴⁷ The obligation not to 'deny the right to education' means that States

⁴⁴ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 4(a).

⁴⁵ Timishev v. Russia, nos 55762/00 and 55974/00, § 64, ECHR 2005-XII.

⁴⁶ Ibid.; Leyla Şahin v. Turkey [GC], no. 44774/98, § 137, ECHR 2005-XI.

⁴⁷ Kjeldsen, Busk Madsen, and Pedersen v. Denmark, 7 December 1976, § 52, Series A no. 23.

guarantee 'a right of access to educational institutions existing at a given time'. This includes 'the possibility of drawing', by 'official recognition of the studies . . . profit from the education received'.⁴⁸ The Court has described 'education of children' as 'the whole process whereby, in any society, adults endeavour to transmit their beliefs, culture and other values to the young, whereas teaching or instruction refers in particular to the transmission of knowledge and to intellectual development'.⁴⁹

Although article 2 'has no stated exceptions',⁵⁰ it is not an absolute right, and finds itself subject to implied limitations.⁵¹ The limitations must be foreseeable ('provided by law')⁵² and pursue a legitimate purpose although, in contrast with articles 8 to 11 of the Convention, there is no defined list of such legitimate aims. Ultimately, there must be 'a reasonable relationship of proportionality between the means employed and the aim sought to be achieved'.⁵³

The negative formulation of the right does not imply that there are no positive obligations associated with it.⁵⁴ By its very nature, education calls for regulation by the State that 'may vary in time and place according to the needs and resources of the community and of individuals'.⁵⁵ Such regulation 'must never injure the substance of the right nor conflict with other rights enshrined in the Convention or its Protocols'.⁵⁶

Education continues, in different forms, at all stages of life, although it is usually understood as featuring primarily during childhood and adolescence. Article 26(1) of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights makes specific reference to 'elementary education', and although primary education is not reserved exclusively to children, they are far and away its main beneficiaries. The Universal Declaration also affirms that the right to education belongs to '[e]veryone', an idea that seems lost with the negative formulation of article 2 of Protocol No. 1. Of course, nothing in article 2 confines its scope to children, who are not even mentioned in the provision. The second sentence refers to the rights of 'parents' and rather obviously assumes that this is with respect to their children rather than to themselves, although a purely literal reading of the provision might lead to a different interpretation. The Convention on the Rights of the Child recognizes a right to education that belongs to children without reference to parents.⁵⁷

⁴⁸ Case 'relating to certain aspects of the laws on the use of languages in education in Belgium' (merits), 23 July 1968, p. 28, § 4, Series A no. 6; Kjeldsen, Busk Madsen, and Pedersen v. Denmark, 7 December 1976, § 52, Series A no. 23.

⁴⁹ Campbell and Cosans v. the United Kingdom, 25 February 1982, § 33, Series A no. 48.

⁵⁰ Timishev v. Russia, nos 55762/00 and 55974/00, § 64, ECHR 2005-XII.

⁵¹ Tarantino and Others v. Italy, nos 25851/09, 29284/09, and 64090/09, § 44, ECHR 2013 (extracts); Altınay v. Turkey, no. 37222/04, § 33, 9 July 2013; Catan and Others v. the Republic of Moldova and Russia [GC], nos 43370/04, 8252/05, and 18454/06, § 140, ECHR 2012 (extracts).

⁵² Tarantino and Others v. Italy, nos 25851/09, 29284/09, and 64090/09, § 47, 2 April 2013.

⁵³ Ibid., § 45; Altınay v. Turkey, no. 37222/04, § 33, 9 July 2013; Leyla Şahin v. Turkey [GC], no. 44774/98, § 154, ECHR 2005-XI.

⁵⁴ Case 'relating to certain aspects of the laws on the use of languages in education in Belgium' (merits), 23 July 1968, p. 28, § 3, Series A no. 6.

⁵⁵ Ibid., p. 29, § 5; Altınay v. Turkey, no. 37222/04, § 33, 9 July 2013.

⁵⁶ Case 'relating to certain aspects of the laws on the use of languages in education in Belgium' (merits), 23 July 1968, p. 29, § 5, Series A no. 6. Campbell and Cosans v. the United Kingdom, 25 February 1982, § 41, Series A no. 48.

⁵⁷ Convention on the Rights of the Child, (1990) 1577 UNTS 3, art. 28. The closest that the Convention on the Rights of the Child comes to the language in the second sentence of article 2 of Protocol No. 1 is article 29(2): 'No part of the present article or article 28 shall be construed so as to interfere with the liberty of individuals and bodies to establish and direct educational institutions, subject always to the observance of the principles set forth in paragraph 1 of the present article and to the requirements that the education given in such institutions shall conform to such minimum standards as may be laid down by the State.'

Article 2 of Protocol 1 establishes 'a right of access to educational institutions existing at a given time'.⁵⁸ Although stopping short of affirming a right to free primary education set out in other international instruments, the Court has declared that 'there is no doubt that the right to education guarantees access to elementary education which is of primordial importance for a child's development'.⁵⁹ It has referred to other international instruments concerning the right to education, including article 26 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and article 13 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, as 'relevant rules and principles of international law applicable in relations between the Contracting Parties' for the purpose of interpreting article 2 of Protocol No. 1.⁶⁰ The Court has invoked the preparatory work of the Protocol to support the conclusion that article 2 does not 'require them to establish at their own expense, or to subsidise, education of any particular type or at any particular level'.⁶¹ Where an individual is denied enrolment in a university, despite succeeding in the required admissions examination, because the authorities appeared to suspect that he had cheated, without nevertheless formulating or proving such an accusation, the Court considered there was a violation of the first sentence of article 2 of Protocol No. 1.⁶²

The Court has referred to article 28 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child as authority for differentiating between different levels of education.⁶³ Primary education is the most fundamental, as it 'provides basic literacy and numeracy—as well as integration into and first experiences of society—and is compulsory in most countries'.⁶⁴ Early decisions of the Commission took the view that the right to education contemplated by article 2 of Protocol No. 1 'mainly concerns elementary education and not necessarily specialist advanced studies',⁶⁵ but that is a view that no longer prevails. The right to education set out in article 2 of Protocol No. 1 also includes secondary⁶⁶ and tertiary⁶⁷ education, and may even extend to courses for professional accreditation.⁶⁸ There is support in the case law of the Court for the view that 'university education is a human right'.⁶⁹ Obviously, Protocol No. 1 'permits limiting access to universities to those who duly applied for entrance and passed the examination'.⁷⁰ According to the Court, 'assessing candidates through relevant tests in order to identify the most meritorious

⁵⁸ Case 'relating to certain aspects of the laws on the use of languages in education in Belgium' (merits), 23 July 1968, p. 28, § 4, Series A no. 6.

⁵⁹ Timishev v. Russia, nos 55762/00 and 55974/00, § 64, ECHR 2005-XII.

⁶⁰ Catan and Others v. the Republic of Moldova and Russia [GC], nos 43370/04, 8252/05, and 18454/06, § 138, ECHR 2012 (extracts).

⁶¹ Case 'relating to certain aspects of the laws on the use of languages in education in Belgium' (merits), 23 July 1968, p. 28, § 3, Series A no. 6.

⁶² Mürsel Eren v. Turkey, no. 60856/00, § 50, ECHR 2006-II.

⁶³ Ponomaryovi v. Bulgaria, no. 5335/05, § 57, ECHR 2011.

⁶⁴ Ibid., § 56.

⁶⁵ X v. the United Kingdom, no. 5962/72, Commission decision of 13 March 1975; 15 Foreign Students v. the United Kingdom, no. 7671/76 and fourteen other applications, Commission decision of 19 May 1977; Yanasik v. Turkey, no. 14524/89, Commission decision of 6 January 1993, DR 74, p. 14.

⁶⁶ Ponomaryovi v. Bulgaria, no. 5335/05, § 49, ECHR 2011.

⁶⁷ Leyla Şahin v. Turkey [GC], no. 44774/98, §§ 134–142, ECHR 2005-XI; Mürsel Eren v. Turkey, no. 60856/00, §§ 40–41, ECHR 2006-II; Tarantino and Others v. Italy, nos 25851/09, 29284/09, and 64090/09, § 43, ECHR 2013 (extracts); Altınay v. Turkey, no. 37222/04, 9 July 2013.

⁶⁸ Kök v. Turkey, no. 1855/02, §§ 56–60, 19 October 2006.

⁶⁹ Tarantino and Others v. Italy, nos 25851/09, 29284/09, and 64090/09, Partly Dissenting Opinion of Judge Pinto de Albuquerque, ECHR 2013 (extracts).

⁷⁰ Lukach v. Russia (dec.), no. 48041/99, 16 November 1999.

students is a proportionate measure designed to ensure a minimum and adequate education level in the universities'.⁷¹ The right of access to higher education is subject to restrictions based upon resource limitations within the State. It may invoke such considerations in imposing a quota or numerus clausus limiting access to certain programmes, such as medical and dentistry school, given the huge investment that is required.⁷² In dissent, Judge Pinto de Albuquerque described the Italian regulations as 'groundless and even arbitrary'.⁷³

One of the familiar limitations on access to education consists of disciplinary measures imposed by an institution that restrict or deny attendance to certain students on behavioural and related grounds. The right to education set out in article 2 of Protocol No. 1 does not exclude recourse to such measures, including suspension and expulsion. According to the Court, 'imposition of disciplinary penalties is an integral part of the process whereby a school seeks to achieve the object for which it was established, including the development and moulding of the character and mental powers of its pupils'.⁷⁴ Suspension and expulsion is one of the implied limitations on the right to education, and it must therefore meet criteria of foreseeability and proportionality. The Court will consider factors such as procedural safeguards in enabling the exclusion to be challenged and to avoid arbitrariness, the length of the exclusion, the extent of co-operation manifested by the pupil and the parents with attempts at re-integration, whether adequate measures to provide alternative education during exclusion were provided, and consideration for the rights of third parties.⁷⁵ The suspension of students by a Turkish university for one or two terms because they had submitted petitions demanding that instruction in Kurdish language and culture be provided was held not to meet the tests of reasonableness and proportionality.⁷⁶

Several cases before the Convention organs have concerned the right of prisoners to education. In 2006, the Committee of Ministers adopted revisions to the European Prison Rules that address the issue of education of prisoners. They specify that '[e]very prison shall seek to provide all prisoners with access to educational programmes which are as comprehensive as possible and which meet their individual needs while taking into account their aspirations'. Priority is to be given to prisoners with literacy and numeracy needs and those who lack basic or vocational education.⁷⁷ While acknowledging this pronouncement of the Committee of Ministers, the Court has said that article 2 of Protocol No. 1 'does not place an obligation on Contracting States to organise educational facilities for prisoners where such facilities are not already in place'.⁷⁸ In a case where there was an education system in place within a prison, the Court held that restrictions upon access to it were not sufficiently foreseeable. Consequently, the Court considered that the refusal to enrol the applicant in the prison school was not sufficiently foreseeable, that it ⁷¹ Tarantino and Others v. Italy, nos 25851/09, 29284/09, and 64090/09, § 49, ECHR 2013 (extracts).

⁷² Ibid., §§ 51–56.

⁷³ Ibid., Partly Dissenting Opinion of Judge Pinto de Albuquerque, 2 April 2013.

⁷⁴ Ali v. the United Kingdom, no. 40385/06, § 54, 11 January 2011; Sulak v. Turkey, no. 24515/94, Commission decision of 17 January 1996, DR 84-A, p. 98; Campbell and Cosans v. the United Kingdom, 25 February 1982, p. 14, § 33, Series A no. 48; Yanasik v. Turkey, no. 14524/89, Commission decision of 6 January 1993, DR 74, p. 14.

⁷⁵ Ali v. the United Kingdom, no. 40385/06, § 58, 11 January 2011.

⁷⁶ Irfan Temel and Others v. Turkey, no. 36458/02, § 46, 3 March 2009.

⁷⁷ Recommendation R (2006) 2 on the European Prison Rules, para. 28.

⁷⁸ Velyo Vele v. Bulgaria, no. 16032/07, § 34, 27 May 2014.

did not pursue a legitimate aim, and that it was not proportionate.⁷⁹ Protocol No. 1 has not been construed as imposing an obligation on prison authorities to set up ad hoc courses⁸⁰ or to ensure teaching programmes in certain areas.⁸¹ It cannot be said that article 2 of Protocol No. 1 is breached simply because prisoners are prevented from continuing in full-time education during a period of lawful detention following conviction.⁸² A similar approach has been taken to the argument that lawful deportation would prevent a person from continuing with their education.⁸³

The language of education was one of the first human rights issues to be litigated at the international level. Cases adjudicated by the Permanent Court of International Justice under the minorities treaties dealt with the language of instruction.⁸⁴ The first case before the European Court under article 2 of Protocol No. 1 concerned language. The Court held that although article 2 'does not specify the language in which education must be conducted, the right to education would be meaningless if it did not imply in favour of its beneficiaries, the right to be educated in the national language or in one of the national languages, as the case may be'.⁸⁵ In the interstate case of Cyprus v. Turkey, the applicant argued that Greek Cypriot children in occupied Cyprus were denied the right to education because there were no secondary schools offering instruction in the medium of Greek. The Court acknowledged that because the Turkish authorities did not prevent them attending Turkish-language secondary schools, '[i]n the strict sense, accordingly, there is no denial of the right to education'.⁸⁶ However, the option available to Greek-Cypriot parents to continue their children's education in the north is unrealistic in view of the fact that the children in question have already received their primary education in a Greek-Cypriot school there. The authorities must no doubt be aware that it is the wish of Greek-Cypriot parents that the schooling of their children be completed through the medium of the Greek language. Having assumed responsibility for the provision of Greek-language primary schooling, the failure of the 'TRNC' authorities to make continuing provision for it at the secondary-school level must be considered in effect to be a denial of the substance of the right at issue. It cannot be maintained that the provision of secondary education in the south in keeping with the linguistic tradition of the enclaved Greek Cypriots suffices to fulfil the obligation laid down in Article 2 of Protocol No. 1, having regard to the impact of that option on family life.⁸⁷

In a case involving the breakaway Moldavian Republic of Transdniestria, the Court found that a requirement by the authorities that children be educated in Moldavian but using Cyrillic script breached the rights of their parents:

⁷⁹ Ibid., § 42, 27 May 2014.

⁸⁰ Natoli v. Italy, no. 26161/95, Commission decision of 18 May 1998.

⁸¹ X v. the United Kingdom, no. 5962/72, Commission decision of 13 March 1975, DR 2, p. 50.

⁸² Epistatu v. Romania, no. 29343/10, § 62, 24 September 2013; Durmaz and Others v. Turkey (dec.), nos 46506/99, 46569/99, 46570/99, and 46939/99, 4 September 2001; Georgiou v. Greece (dec.), no. 45138/98, 13 January 2000.

⁸³ 15 Foreign Students v. the United Kingdom, no. 7671/76 and fourteen other applications, Commission decision of 19 May 1977; Sorabjee v. the United Kingdom, no. 23938, Commission decision of 23 October 1995.

⁸⁴ Minority Schools in Albania, PCIJ, Series A/B No. 64; Rights of Minorities in Upper Silesia (Minority Schools), PCIJ, Series A No. 15.

⁸⁵ Case relating to certain aspects of the laws on the use of languages in education in Belgium (merits), 23 July 1968, p. 28, § 3, Series A no. 6; Catan and Others v. the Republic of Moldova and Russia [GC], nos 43370/04, 8252/05, and 18454/06, § 137, ECHR 2012 (extracts).

⁸⁶ Cyprus v. Turkey [GC], no. 25781/94, § 277, ECHR 2001-IV.

⁸⁷ Ibid., § 278.

The applicant parents in this case wanted their children to be educated in the official language of their country, which was also their own mother tongue. Instead, they were placed in the invidious position of having to choose, on the one hand, between sending their children to schools where they would face the disadvantage of pursuing their entire secondary education in a combination of language and alphabet which they consider artificial and which is unrecognised anywhere else in the world, using teaching materials produced in Soviet times or, alternatively, subjecting their children to long journeys and/or substandard facilities, harassment and intimidation.⁸⁸

In this case, the Court applied article 2 of Protocol No. 1 in light of article 8 of the Convention.

Respect for parents' religious and philosophical convictions

The second sentence 'is an adjunct'⁸⁹ that is 'grafted'⁹⁰ onto the 'fundamental right to education'.⁹¹ It acknowledges the primary responsibility of parents for 'education and teaching' of their children. It is intimately linked with the first sentence in that where parents cannot accept that their children be educated under circumstances that breach the second sentence of article 2, there is also a violation of the first sentence to the extent that the child is denied the right to education if the parents refuse to allow attendance.⁹² The right of parents to insist upon respect for their religious and philosophical convictions 'corresponds to a responsibility closely linked to the enjoyment and the exercise of the right to education'.⁹³ The second sentence of Article 2 of Protocol No. 1 aims at 'safeguarding the possibility of pluralism in education, which possibility is essential for the preservation of the "democratic society" as conceived by the Convention'.⁹⁴

References in the case law to the existence of any tension between the rights of parents and those of their children are rare. In one decision, the European Commission noted that the convictions of the parents must not conflict with the child's fundamental right to education: 'Where, instead of supporting the child's right to education, the parents' rights come into conflict with it, the child's rights must prevail'.⁹⁵

There has been no litigation or dispute about the scope of the term 'parents'. This is the only use of the term in the Convention and its Protocols. There is at least one example of a grandparent invoking the second sentence of article 2 without objection.⁹⁶ The child cannot claim to be a victim of a violation of the second sentence of article 2.⁹⁷

The Court has explained that the second sentence of article 2 of Protocol No. 1 speaks of the 'right' of parents concerning the education of their children, but has held that they

⁸⁸ Catan and Others v. the Republic of Moldova and Russia [GC], nos 43370/04, 8252/05, and 18454/06, § 143, ECHR 2012 (extracts). But see Catan and Others v. the Republic of Moldova and Russia [GC], nos 43370/04, 8252/05, and 18454/06, Partly Dissenting Opinion of Judge Kovler, ECHR 2012 (extracts).

⁸⁹ Kjeldsen, Busk Madsen, and Pedersen v. Denmark, 7 December 1976, § 52, Series A no. 23.

⁹⁰ Folgerø and Others v. Norway [GC], no. 15472/02, § 84, ECHR 2007-III.

⁹¹ Campbell and Cosans v. the United Kingdom, 25 February 1982, § 41, Series A no. 48.

⁹² Ibid.

⁹³ Kjeldsen, Busk Madsen, and Pedersen v. Denmark, 7 December 1976, § 52, Series A no. 23.

⁹⁴ Folgerø and Others v. Norway [GC], no. 15472/02, § 84, ECHR 2007-III; Kjeldsen, Busk Madsen, and Pedersen v. Denmark, 7 December 1976, § 50, Series A no. 23.

⁹⁵ Zénon Bernard and Others v. Luxembourg, no. 17187/90, Commission decision of 8 September 1993, (1993) 36 YB 83, DR 75, p. 57; Graeme v. the United Kingdom, no. 13887/88, 5 February 1990, DR 64, p. 158.

⁹⁶ Lee v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 25289/94, §§ 122–125, 18 January 2001.

⁹⁷ Eriksson v. Sweden, 22 June 1989, § 93, Series A no. 156.

have 'a natural duty towards their children—parents being primarily responsible for the "education and teaching" of their children'.⁹⁸ The right of parents 'corresponds to a responsibility closely linked to the enjoyment and the exercise of the right to education'.⁹⁹ The duty set out in the second sentence of article 2 of Protocol No. 1 'is broad in its extent as it applies not only to the content of education and the manner of its provision but also to the performance of all the "functions" assumed by the State'.¹⁰⁰ The two sentences that comprise article 2 of Protocol No. 1 are to be interpreted both in light of each other and also in conjunction with other provisions of the European Convention, particularly those dealing with respect for private and family life, for freedom of thought, conscience, and religion, and freedom to receive and impart information and ideas.¹⁰¹

According to the Court, the term 'respect' in the second sentence implies a positive as well as a negative obligation, meaning more than 'acknowledge' or 'take into account'.¹⁰² The term 'respect' is also used in article 8 of the Convention. The Court has taken a very broad approach to the notion of 'respect', acknowledging a considerable margin of appreciation. In particular, the duty to respect in the second sentence of article 2 of Protocol No. 1 'cannot be interpreted to mean that parents can require the State to provide a particular form of teaching'.¹⁰³ The provision only ensures 'a right to respect for those convictions' and not 'an absolute right to have children educated in accordance with parents' philosophical convictions'.¹⁰⁴

The Court has explained that the term 'conviction', which is not used elsewhere in the Convention or its Protocols, is not synonymous with the words 'opinions' and 'ideas' that appear in article 10 on freedom of expression. Rather, the term is 'more akin to the term "beliefs"'. The Court has noted that the French version of article 9 uses the term 'convictions'. It 'denotes views that attain a certain level of cogency, seriousness, cohesion and importance'.¹⁰⁵ To the extent that article 2 concerns 'religious convictions', it should be viewed as the lex specialis with respect to article 9 of the Convention.¹⁰⁶ Consequently, the second sentence of article 2 of Protocol 1 should be read taking into account article 9 of the Convention, held to impose upon States a 'duty of neutrality and impartiality'.¹⁰⁷

The scope of the adjective 'philosophical' (or philosophy) can run the gamut from a fully fledged system of thought to views on trivial matters. The Court has said that neither of these extremes should be applied to article 2 of Protocol No. 1 because 'the former would too narrowly restrict the scope of a right that is guaranteed to all parents and the latter might result in the inclusion of matters of insufficient weight or substance'.¹⁰⁸ For ⁹⁸ Kjeldsen, Busk Madsen, and Pedersen v. Denmark, 7 December 1976, § 52, Series A no. 23.

⁹⁹ Ibid.

¹⁰⁰ Valsamis v. Greece, 18 December 1996, § 27, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-VI; Campbell and Cosans v. the United Kingdom, 25 February 1982, §§ 36, Series A no. 48.

¹⁰¹ Kjeldsen, Busk Madsen, and Pedersen v. Denmark, 7 December 1976, § 52, Series A no. 23.

¹⁰² Valsamis v. Greece, 18 December 1996, § 27, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-VI; Campbell and Cosans v. the United Kingdom, 25 February 1982, §§ 36, Series A no. 48.

¹⁰³ Lausni and Others v. Italy [GC], no. 30814/06, § 61, ECHR 2011 (extracts); Bulski v. Poland (dec.), nos 46254/99 and 31888/02, 9 May 2006.

¹⁰⁴ Family H. v. the United Kingdom, no. 10233/83, Commission decision of 6 March 1983 (emphasis in the original).

¹⁰⁵ Valsamis v. Greece, 18 December 1996, § 27, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-VI; Campbell and Cosans v. the United Kingdom, 25 February 1982, § 36, Series A no. 48.

¹⁰⁶ Lausni and Others v. Italy [GC], no. 30814/06, § 59, ECHR 2011 (extracts).

¹⁰⁷ Ibid., § 60.

¹⁰⁸ Campbell and Cosans v. the United Kingdom, 25 February 1982, § 36, Series A no. 48.

the Court, 'philosophical convictions' denotes those that 'are worthy of respect in a "democratic society"', 'are not incompatible with human dignity', and do not conflict with the fundamental right of the child to education.¹⁰⁹ Views that 'relate to a weighty and substantial aspect of human life and behaviour' include the propriety of corporal punishment¹¹⁰ and secularism.¹¹¹

Implementation of the second sentence of article 2 of Protocol No. 1 may involve private or separate schooling, or even 'home schooling'. Some countries have permitted parents to 'home school' their children, subject to supervision by the State in order to ensure that it is of adequate quality,¹¹² while others have not. Noting Germany's concern about 'the emergence of parallel societies based on separate philosophical convictions and the importance of integrating minorities into society' as a justification for refusing to permit 'home schooling', the Court said this was 'in accordance with its own case-law on the importance of pluralism for democracy'.¹¹³

The provision clearly applies to State schools accessible to all children, although article 2 of Protocol No. 1 makes no distinction between State and private teaching.¹¹⁴ Nor can it be said that the second sentence is concerned with religious instruction as opposed to other subjects. The second sentence 'enjoins the State to respect parents' convictions, be they religious or philosophical, throughout the entire State education programme'.¹¹⁵ For this reason, the 'setting and planning of the curriculum fall in principle within the competence of the Contracting States'.¹¹⁶

States are not prevented by the second sentence of article 2 from 'imparting through teaching or education information or knowledge of a directly or indirectly religious or philosophical kind'.¹¹⁷ Parents cannot object when such material is integrated into the school curriculum 'for otherwise all institutionalised teaching would run the risk of proving impracticable'.¹¹⁸ Nevertheless, there must be a 'fair and proper treatment of minorities' that 'avoids any abuse of a dominant position'.¹¹⁹ In setting the school curriculum, the State 'must take care that information or knowledge included in the curriculum is conveyed in an objective, critical and pluralistic manner'.¹²⁰ It may not 'pursue an aim of indoctrination that might be considered as not respecting parents' religious and philosophical convictions'.¹²¹ Admittedly, 'abuses can occur as to the manner in which the provisions in force are applied by a given school or teacher and the competent authorities have a duty to take the utmost care to see to it that parents' religious and philosophical convictions are not disregarded at this level by carelessness, lack of judgment or misplaced proselytism'.¹²²

¹⁰⁹ Ibid.

¹¹⁰ Ibid., § 36. But see ibid., Partly Dissenting Opinion of Judges Sir Vincent Evans, § 4.

¹¹¹ Lausis and Others v. Italy [GC], no. 30814/06, § 58, ECHR 2011 (extracts).

¹¹² Family H. v. the United Kingdom, no. 10233/83, 6 March 1984.

¹¹³ Konrad v. Germany (dec.), no. 35504/03, § 1, ECHR 2006-XIII.

¹¹⁴ Folgerø and Others v. Norway [GC], no. 15472/02, § 84, ECHR 2007-III.

¹¹⁵ Ibid.; Kjeldsen, Busk Madsen, and Pedersen v. Denmark, 7 December 1976, § 51, Series A no. 23.

¹¹⁶ Kjeldsen, Busk Madsen, and Pedersen v. Denmark, 7 December 1976, § 53, Series A no. 23.

¹¹⁷ Ibid.

¹¹⁸ Ibid.; Hasan and Eylem Zengin v. Turkey, no. 1448/04, § 51, ECHR 2007-XI.

¹¹⁹ Valsamis v. Greece, 18 December 1996, § 27, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-VI.

¹²⁰ Ibid.

¹²¹ Ibid., § 28; Kjeldsen, Busk Madsen, and Pedersen v. Denmark, 7 December 1976, § 53, Series A no. 23.

¹²² Kjeldsen, Busk Madsen, and Pedersen v. Denmark, 7 December 1976, § 54, Series A no. 23.

Nevertheless, the Court has been prepared to show considerable deference where the presence and visibility of the majority religion is emphasized within State schools. For example, it held that the fact that Norway's school syllabus gave a larger share to knowledge of the Christian religion than to that of other religions and philosophies could not in itself be viewed as a departure from the principles of pluralism and objectivity amounting to indoctrination.¹²³ Likewise, in one case it did not find a violation with respect to 'religious culture and ethics' classes in Turkish schools where Islam was given prominence because, although the State was secular in nature, Islam was the religion of the majority.¹²⁴ In a subsequent application, filed by parents of Alevi confession, the Turkish system was found to breach article 2. The Court found that 'dans le système éducatif turc, aucune possibilité de choix appropriée n'a été envisagée pour les enfants des parents ayant une conviction religieuse ou philosophique autre que l'islam sunnite, et que le mécanisme de dispense très limité est susceptible de soumettre les parents d'élève à une lourde charge et à la nécessité de dévoiler leur convictions religieuses ou philosophiques afin que leurs enfants soient dispensés de suivre les cours de religion'.¹²⁵

An application from parents who objected to sexual education programmes was declared inadmissible. According to the Court, the impugned programme provided students with information that was objective and scientific about sexual activity and sexually transmitted diseases, as well as unwanted pregnancy and methods of contraception. It was a general programme that could hardly be deemed 'une tentative d'endocinement visant à préconiser un comportement sexuel déterminé'.¹²⁶

The scope of the second sentence of article 2 may extend beyond the curriculum itself and include the presence of religious or other symbols in schools and classrooms. Dealing with a challenge to Italian legislation requiring that a crucifix be placed in schoolrooms, the Court said such decisions were in principle matters that fell within the margin of appreciation of the State, adding that the absence of a European consensus on the presence of religious symbols in State schools supported the approach it was taking.¹²⁷ It acknowledged, nevertheless, that by prescribing the presence of crucifixes in State-school classrooms, with their undoubted religious significance, Italy's regulations conferred 'preponderant visibility in the school environment' to Christianity.¹²⁸ The Court attached importance to the fact that a crucifix on a wall was an 'essentially passive symbol' that 'cannot be deemed to have an influence on pupils comparable to that of didactic speech or participation in religious activities'.¹²⁹

The 'respect' required by article 2 of Protocol No. 1 extends beyond the content of education as such and includes such aspects as discipline. The Court concluded there was a violation when the Scottish school system did not accommodate the views of parents who objected to the imposition of corporal punishment on adolescent children. In terms of a solution, it rejected the viability of a dual system of education based upon whether or ¹²³ Folgerø and Others v. Norway [GC], no. 15472/02, § 89, ECHR 2007-III.

¹²⁴ Hasan and Eylem Zengin v. Turkey, no. 1448/04, §§ 51 and 52, ECHR 2007-XI.

¹²⁵ Mansur Yalçın and Others v. Turkey, no. 21163/11, § 77, 16 September 2014.

¹²⁶ Jimenez Alonso and Jimenez Merino v. Spain (dec.), no. 51188/99, 25 May 2000.

¹²⁷ Lawatsi and Others v. Italy [GC], no. 30814/06, § 70, ECHR 2011 (extracts).

¹²⁸ Ibid., § 71.

¹²⁹ Ibid., § 72.

not the parents accepted corporal punishment, but considered that a system of exemption of students in particular schools might be acceptable.¹³⁰

An obligation imposed upon pupils to participate in a national day parade was contested by parents who were Jehovah's Witnesses. The Court did not consider the national day parade to be necessarily militaristic and said it could 'discern nothing, either in the purpose of the parade or in the arrangements for it, which could offend the applicants' pacifist convictions to an extent prohibited by the second sentence of Article 2 of Protocol No. 1'. But it said it was 'surprised that pupils can be required on pain of suspension from school— even if only for two days—to parade outside the school precincts on a holiday'.¹³¹

Discrimination in education

There is much evidence of discrimination directed towards Roma children with respect to access to education. In a case involving access to education, the Court noted that 'la minorité rom était un type particulier de minorité vulnérable ayant besoin d'une protection spéciale'.¹³² Without necessarily condemning this as intentional discrimination by the State based upon race and ethnicity, the Court has observed that 'a number of European States encounter serious difficulties in providing adequate schooling for Roma children'.¹³³ It has often turned to studies and reports on this issue by the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance and the Commissioner on Human Rights.¹³⁴

In some countries, discrimination in the area of access to education has taken the form of assigning them to remedial or special schools formally designated for the disabled. According to the Court, 'the misplacement of Roma children in special schools has a long history across Europe'.¹³⁵ This has often resulted from bias in placement procedures and discriminatory practices disguised as neutral tests. In this context, the Czech Republic and Hungary have been found to be in breach of article 14 of the Convention taken in conjunction with article 2 of Protocol 1.¹³⁶

Discrimination against Roma children with respect to education also takes on other forms. In Greece, the educational authorities attempted to address a situation that had developed whereby in practice certain schools were only attended by Roma children. Their efforts met with opposition from the parents of non-Roma children. According to the Court, despite the absence of any discriminatory intent on the part of the State, a situation that had been allowed to exist whereby Roma children went to schools where they were the only pupils where effective anti-segregationist measures were not being imposed, such as distributing the Roma children in mixed classes in other schools

¹³⁰ Campbell and Cosans v. the United Kingdom, 25 February 1982, § 37, Series A no. 48.

¹³¹ Efstathiou v. Greece, 18 December 1996, § 32, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-VI.

¹³² Lavida and Others v. Greece, no. 7973/10, 30 May 2013. Also Ortuš and Others v. Croatia [GC], no. 15766/03, § 147, ECHR 2010; Chapman v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 27238/95, § 96, ECHR 2001-I; Connors v. the United Kingdom, no. 66746/01, § 84, 27 May 2004; Sampanis and Others v. Greece, no. 32526/05, § 72, 5 June 2008.

¹³³ Ortuš and Others v. Croatia [GC], no. 15766/03, § 180, ECHR 2010.

¹³⁴ Final Report by Mr Alvaro Gil-Robles on the Human-Rights Situation of the Roma, Sinti, and Travellers in Europe, CommDH(2006)1, 15 February 2006, paras 44–59.

¹³⁵ Horvúth and Kiss v. Hungary, no. 11146/11, § 115, 29 January 2013.

¹³⁶ D.H. and Others v. the Czech Republic [GC], no. 57325/00, § 210, ECHR 2007-IV. Also Horvúth and Kiss v. Hungary, no. 11146/11, §§ 109–121, 29 January 2013.

or a realignment of school districts, could not be objectively justified by a legitimate purpose.¹³⁷

Similarly, in Croatia the explanation for the segregation of Roma children into separate schools was based on shortcomings in mastering the language of education. The Grand Chamber accepted that 'temporary placement of children in a separate class on the grounds that they lack an adequate command of the language is not, as such, automatically contrary to Article 14 of the Convention'.¹³⁸ But in the case of Croatia, 'while recognising the efforts made by the Croatian authorities to ensure that Roma children receive schooling, the Court considers that there were at the relevant time no adequate safeguards in place capable of ensuring that a reasonable relationship of proportionality between the means used and the legitimate aim said to be pursued was achieved and maintained'.¹³⁹

The Court has also addressed an application concerning discrimination in university admission based upon changes in regulations governing access related to the weighting of grades obtained in secondary education. These had the consequence of restricting university admission to students who had followed a professional training profile as opposed to a more traditionally academic one. Agreeing that the applicant had been subject to differential treatment as a result, the Court explained that States have a considerable margin of appreciation in regulating access to universities and similar institutions to the extent that they are selecting candidates based on the likelihood that they will succeed in their studies.¹⁴⁰ Nevertheless, the Court said it was incumbent on the Court to ascertain 'whether the system complained of pursued a legitimate aim and whether there was a reasonable relationship of proportionality between the means employed and the aim pursued. Applying these two criteria to the facts of the case will enable the Court to decide whether the measures at issue constituted discrimination incompatible with Article 14 of the Convention and/or impaired the very essence of the right to education as secured under Article 2 of Protocol No. 1'.¹⁴¹ In the case of an applicant who was denied access to a Turkish university based upon changes in admissions policy with respect to courses he had taken at secondary school, the Court found that this was not reasonably proportionate to the purpose of the measure and held that there was a violation of article 14 of the Convention combined with article 2 of Protocol No. 1.¹⁴² A separate opinion noted that Turkish policies were not consistent with obligations under the so-called 'Bologna process' and the 'Copenhagen process'.¹⁴³

Bulgaria required non-citizens to pay fees for secondary education, something that was free to citizens. The Court noted that 'a State may have legitimate reasons for curtailing the use of resource-hungry public services—such as welfare programmes, public benefits and health care—by short-term and illegal immigrants, who, as a rule, do not contribute ¹³⁷ Lavida and Others v. Greece, no. 7973/10, § 73, 30 May 2013. Also Sampani and Others v. Greece, no. 59608/09, §§ 90–105, 11 December 2012; Sampanis and Others v. Greece, no. 32526/05, § 96, 5 June 2008.

¹³⁸ Ortuš and Others v. Croatia [GC], no. 15766/03, § 157, ECHR 2010.

¹³⁹ Ibid., § 184, ECHR 2010.

¹⁴⁰ Altınay v. Turkey, no. 37222/04, § 41, 9 July 2013.

¹⁴¹ Ibid., § 40.

¹⁴² Ibid., §§ 51–61.

¹⁴³ Ibid., Opinion en partie dissidente commune aux juges Vučinić et Pinto de Albuquerque, 9 July 2013. On the 'Copenhagen process'; see also Taranino and Others v. Italy, nos 25851/09, 29284/09, and 64090/09, Partly Dissenting Opinion of Judge Pinto de Albuquerque, ECHR 2013 (extracts).

to their funding'.¹⁴⁴ However, unlike some of these public services, education is a right directly enshrined in the law of the Convention. Moreover, '[i]t is also a very particular type of public service, which not only directly benefits those using it but also serves broader societal functions'.¹⁴⁵ The Court concluded that requiring non-citizens to pay fees to attend secondary school was not justified and amounted to a violation of article 14 of the Convention read in conjunction with article 2 of Protocol No. 1.¹⁴⁶

Reservations and declarations

Article 57 of the Convention authorizes States to make reservations at the time of signature as well as upon ratification. Reservations at the time of signature are relatively rare. A reservation respecting article 2 of Protocol No. 1 was formulated at the time of signature by Greece and the United Kingdom. The Greek reservation reads as follows: 'Au moment de la signature du présent Protocole, le Gouvernement hellénique, se prévalent de l'article 64 de ladite Convention, formule la réserve suivante, portant sur l'article 2 du Protocole: "Le mot 'philosophique', par lequel se termine le second paragraphe de l'article 2, recevra en Grèce une application conforme aux dispositions y relatives de la législation intérieure."¹⁴⁷ The United Kingdom formulated the following reservation: 'At the time of signing the present Protocol, I declare that in view of certain provisions of the Education Acts in force in the United Kingdom, the principle affirmed in the second sentence of Article 2 is accepted by the United Kingdom only so far as it is compatible with the provision of efficient instruction and training, and the avoidance of unreasonable public expenditure.'¹⁴⁸

Three States made declarations at the time of signature. Ireland declared the following: 'At the time of signing the Protocol, the Irish delegate puts on record that, in the view of the Irish Government, Article 2 of the Protocol is not sufficiently explicit in ensuring to parents the right to provide education for their children in their homes or in schools of the parents' own choice, whether or not such schools are private schools or are schools recognised or established by the State.'¹⁴⁹ The Netherlands also made a declaration: 'In the opinion of the Netherlands Government, the State should not only respect the rights of parents in the matter of education but, if need be, ensure the possibility of exercising those rights by appropriate financial measures.'¹⁵⁰

Both Greece and the United Kingdom made reservations at the time of ratification. When Greece ratified Protocol No. 1 for the second time, having denounced the Convention and the Protocols in 1970, it formulated the following reservation: 'For the application of Article 2 of the 1952 Protocol, the Government of Greece, in view of certain provisions of the Education Acts in force in Greece, formulates a reservation according to which the principle affirmed in the second sentence of Article 2, is accepted only so far as it is compatible with the provision of efficient instruction and training, and ¹⁴⁴ Ponomaryovi v. Bulgaria, no. 5335/05, § 54, ECHR 2011.

¹⁴⁵ Ibid., § 55, ECHR 2011.

¹⁴⁶ Ibid., § 63.

¹⁴⁷ (1955-56-57) 1 YB 44. See also Note by the Greek Delegation, Doc. CM/Adj. (52) 41, A 8015, VIII TP 202-3.

¹⁴⁸ Note by the United Kingdom Delegation, Doc. CM/Adj. 39, A 8013, VIII TP 200-3.

¹⁴⁹ Minutes of the meeting [of the Committee of Ministers, 19 March 1952], VIII TP 202-5.

¹⁵⁰ Ibid.

the avoidance of unreasonable public expenditure.¹⁵¹ Four years later, it informed the Council of Europe that the reservation had been entered by mistake and that it should be removed and replaced with the following: 'The application of the word philosophical which is the penultimate word of the second sentence of Article 2, will, in Greece, conform with the relevant provisions of internal legislation.'¹⁵² The new reservation was in fact equivalent to the one formulated by Greece at the time of signature of the Protocol, in 1952. The depositary of the Convention replied to Greece that the 1952 reservation had not been included in a recent publication because 'it was supposed that the reservation of 1974 to the same article had replaced the previous one'. The letter confirmed that it was the intention of Greece to withdraw the 1974 text and to 'retain the reservation made in 1952'. The depositary said that this would be brought to the attention of Council of Europe Member States.¹⁵³

At the time of ratification, the United Kingdom confirmed the reservation that it had made when it signed the Protocol.¹⁵⁴ In a dissenting opinion, the country's judge said that because of the reservation, article 2 of Protocol No. 1 'must be interpreted and applied as modified by the reservation. This means that the obligation thereunder to respect the right of parents has been assumed by the United Kingdom only so far as this can be done compatibly with the provision of efficient instruction and training and the avoidance of unreasonable public expenditure.'¹⁵⁵ The United Kingdom also made a reservation to article 2 with respect to several of its overseas territories so that administration of corporal punishment, sometimes described as 'moderate and reasonable', is sheltered from scrutiny. In addition, it made a reservation concerning Guernsey and Gibraltar accepting 'the principle affirmed in the second sentence of Article 2 is accepted by the United Kingdom only so far as it is compatible with the provision of efficient instruction and training, and the avoidance of unreasonable public expenditure in Guernsey and Gibraltar'.¹⁵⁶ It made a similar reservation with respect to the Isle of Man in 2001.¹⁵⁷

There are several other reservations to article 2 of Protocol No. 1.

Sweden made the following reservation: 'A ces causes et fins Nous avons voulu ratifier, approuver et accepter ledit Protocole additionnel avec tous ses articles, points et clauses, sous réserve toutefois relative à l'article 2 du Protocole, réserve portant que la Suède ne peut accorder aux parents le droit d'obtenir, en se référant à leur conviction philosophique, dispense pour leurs enfants de l'obligation de prendre part à certaines parties de l'enseignement des écoles publiques et portant aussi que la dispense de l'obligation de prendre part à l'enseignement du christianisme dans ces écoles ne peut être accordée que pour les enfants d'une autre profession de foi que l'église suédoise, en faveur desquels une instructions religieuse satisfaisante a été organisée, cette réserve se fondant sur les dispositions du règlement nouveau du 17 mars 1933 pour les établissements d'enseignement secondaire du Royaume et les dispositions analogues concernant les autres établissements

¹⁵¹ (1976) 19 YB 20–21.

¹⁵² (1979) 22 YB 14–15 (emphasis in the original).

¹⁵³ Ibid., pp. 14–17.

¹⁵⁴ (1955–56–57) 1 YB 45.

¹⁵⁵ Campbell and Cosans v. the United Kingdom, 25 February 1982, Partly Dissenting Opinion of Judges Sir Vincent Evans, § 5, Series A no. 48.

¹⁵⁶ (1988) 31 YB 6.

¹⁵⁷ (2001) 44 YB 23.

d'enseignement.¹⁵⁸ The European Commission of Human Rights said it found 'no indication that the reservation is contrary to Article 64 of the Convention. It must therefore be regarded as a valid reservation.'¹⁵⁹ The Commission applied the reservation, saying it concluded that 'Sweden has not undertaken to grant any exemption from parts of the education in the public schools be it for religious, philosophical or other reasons, except in respect of children who belong to a religious faith other than the Swedish Church and for whom other satisfactory religious instruction has been arranged.'¹⁶⁰ Referring to the Swedish reservation, the Court has said that Sweden 'has obviously interpreted Art. 2 in a very wide sense . . . giving almost complete freedom to the Swedish Government to organise child education regardless of the religion and philosophical convictions of parents'.¹⁶¹ Sweden withdrew its reservation in 1994.¹⁶²

Turkey made the following reservation: 'Ayant vu et examiné la Convention précitée et le Protocole additionnel, Nous les avons approuvés sous réserve formulée dans le deuxième article du Protocole additionnel, en vertu de dispositions de la Loi No 6366 votée par la Grande Assemblée Nationale de Turquie en date du 10 mars 1954.' Annexed to the reservation was a copy of the legislation, the operative paragraph of which reads as follows: 'L'article 2 du Protocole additionnel ne porte pas atteinte aux dispositions de la Loi No 430 du 3 mars 1924 relative à l'unification de l'enseignement.'¹⁶³

Portugal formulated the following reservation: 'Article 2 of the Protocol will be applied subject to Articles 43 and 75 of the Constitution of the Portuguese Republic, which provide for the non-denominationality of public education, the supervision of private education by the State and the validity of legal provisions concerning the setting up of private educational establishments.'¹⁶⁴ It was withdrawn in 1987.¹⁶⁵

Macedonia made a reservation to article 2 in the following terms: 'Pursuant to Article 45 of the Constitution of the Republic of Macedonia, the right of parents to ensure education and teaching in conformity with their own religious and philosophical convictions cannot be realised through primary private education, in the Republic of Macedonia.'¹⁶⁶ Article 45 of the Constitution reads: 'Citizens have a right to establish private schools at all levels of education, with the exception of primary education, under conditions determined by law.'

There have been several interpretative declarations. There are also some regional declarations relevant to article 2 of Protocol No. 1. These are discussed in the chapter on article 4 of Protocol No. 1.

Germany made a declaration at the time of ratification of the Protocol:

The Federal Republic of Germany adopts the opinion according to which the second sentence of Article 2 of the Protocol entails no obligation on the part of the State to finance schools of a religious ¹⁵⁸ (1955-56-57) 1 YB 44.

¹⁵⁹ Lena and Anna Angelini v. Sweden, no. 10491/83, Commission decision of 3 December 1986, (1986) 29

YB 113.

¹⁶⁰ Ibid.

¹⁶¹ Kjeldsen, Busk Madsen, and Pedersen v. Denmark, Nos 5095/71, 5920/72 and 5926/72, Commission Report of 21 March 1975, § 154.

¹⁶² (1994) 37 YB 16; (1995) 38 YB 17.

¹⁶³ (1955-56-57) 1 YB 43.

¹⁶⁴ (1978) 21 YB 18ß-19.

¹⁶⁵ (1987) 30 YB 4-5.

¹⁶⁶ (1997) 40 YB 52.

or philosophical nature, or to assist in financing such schools, since this question, as confirmed by the concurring declaration of the Legal Committee of the Consultative Assembly and the Secretary General of the Council of Europe, lies outside the scope of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms and of its Protocol.¹⁶⁷

Similar declarations have been made by Azerbaijan,¹⁶⁸ Bulgaria,¹⁶⁹ Georgia,¹⁷⁰ Moldova,¹⁷¹ and Romania.¹⁷²

Malta made an interpretative declaration that is arguably tantamount to a reservation, especially because it invokes the provision of the Convention governing reservations (article 64, now article 57): 'The Government of Malta, having regard to Article 64 of the Convention, declares that the principle affirmed in the second sentence of Article 2 of the Protocol is accepted by Malta only in so far as it is compatible with the provision of efficient instruction and training, and the avoidance of unreasonable public expenditure, having regard to the fact that the population of Malta is overwhelmingly Roman Catholic.'¹⁷³

Andorra made a declaration affirming that it allows 'Catholic religion lessons in all educational centres, on an optional basis, outside the school timetable. Other religions can offer teaching in educational centres, outside the school timetable, with the approval of the government and the education representatives and without involving public expenditure.'¹⁷⁴

Further reading

Klaus Dieter Beiter, The Protection of the Right to Education by International Law: Including a Systematic Analysis of Article 13 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, The Hague: Martinus Nijhoff, 2006.

Pierre-Marie Dupuy and Laurence Boisson de Chazournes, 'Premier Protocole Additionnel, Article 2', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 999–1010.

Thomas Englund, Ann Quennerstedt, and Ninni Wahlström, 'Education as a Human and a Citizenship Right—Parents' Rights, Children's Rights, or...? The Necessity of Historical Contextualization', (2009) 8 Journal of Human Rights 133.

Roger Errera, 'La Convention et les problèmes de la laïcité et de l'enseignement', (1970) 3 Revue des droits de l'homme 572.

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 671–9.

Harris et al., Law of the European Convention, pp. 697–710.

Grabenwarter, European Convention, pp. 389–98.

Douglas Hodgson, The Human Right to Education, Farnham, UK: Ashgate, 1998.

G. Lauwers, The Impact of the European Convention on Human Rights on the Rights to Education in Russia: 1992–2004, Nijmegen: Wolf Legal Publishers, 2005.

Jane Liddy, 'European Convention of Human Rights: Case Law on the Right to Education', in Jan de Groof and Hilde Penneman, eds, The Legal Status of Pupils in Europe, The Hague: Kluwer Law, 1998, pp. 131–6.

¹⁶⁷ (1955–56–57) 1 YB 52.

¹⁶⁸ (2002) 45 YB 18–19.

¹⁶⁹ (1992) 35 YB 5.

¹⁷⁰ (2002) 45 YB 19–20.

¹⁷¹ (1997) 40 YB 36.

¹⁷² (1994) 37 YB 16.

¹⁷³ (1966) 9 YB 26–27.

¹⁷⁴ (2008) 51 YB 8.

- J. Lonbay, 'Rights in Education under the European Convention on Human Rights', (1983) 46 Modern Law Review 345-50.
- Ovey/White, Jacobs and White, European Convention, pp. 320-30.
- Ben Vermeulen, 'The Right to Education (Article 2 of Protocol No. 1)', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 895-910.
- Ninni Wahlström, 'The Struggle for the Right to Education in the European Convention on Human Rights', (2009) 8 Journal of Human Rights 150.

Article 3. Right to free elections/Droit à des élections libres

The High Contracting Parties undertake to hold free elections at reasonable intervals by secret ballot, under conditions which will ensure the free expression of the opinion of the people in the choice of the legislature.

Les Hautes Parties Contractantes s'engagent à organiser, à des intervalles raisonnables, des élections libres au scrutin secret, dans les conditions qui assurent la libre expression de l'opinion du peuple sur le choix du corps législatif.

Introductory comments

When the Council of Europe was established, in 1949, democracy as we know it based upon universal suffrage was well established, although for some of the founding members this was a fairly recent phenomenon. France was the first country to introduce universal suffrage for men, in 1792, but it was not until 1944 that this became truly universal with recognition of the right to vote for women. Belgium, another founding member of the Council of Europe, achieved universal suffrage for men in 1892, but not until 1948 were women entitled to vote. Greece did not allow women to vote in national elections until 1952, three years after it had helped found the Council of Europe.

Winston Churchill, who participated in the earliest discussions about the European Convention on Human Rights, famously stated that 'democracy is the worst form of government except all the others that have been tried'. Political democracy is central to the entire vision of the European Convention on Human Rights and of the institution to which it belongs, the Council of Europe. The Preamble of the Statute of the Council of Europe speaks of 'devotion to the spiritual and moral values which are the common heritage of their peoples and the true source of individual freedom, political liberty and the rule of law, principles which form the basis of all genuine democracy'.¹ The European Court of Human Rights has frequently recalled the centrality of democracy, particularly in cases involving freedom of expression and freedom of association. According to the Court:

Democracy is without doubt a fundamental feature of the European public order... That is apparent, firstly, from the Preamble to the Convention, which establishes a very clear connection between the Convention and democracy by stating that the maintenance and further realisation of human rights and fundamental freedoms are best ensured on the one hand by an effective political democracy and on the other by a common understanding and observance of human rights... The Preamble goes on to affirm that European countries have a common heritage of political traditions, ideals, freedom and the rule of law. The Court has observed that in that common heritage are to be found the underlying values of the Convention...; it has pointed out several times that the Convention was designed to maintain and promote the ideals and values of a democratic society...²

¹ Bartik v. Russia, no. 55565/00, § 50, ECHR 2006-XV.

² United Communist Party of Turkey and Others v. Turkey, 30 January 1998, § 45, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-I.

Moreover, 'the rights guaranteed under Article 3 of Protocol No. 1 are crucial to establishing and maintaining the foundations of an effective and meaningful democracy governed by the rule of law'.³

The right to free elections is set out in article 21 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights:

- (1) Everyone has the right to take part in the government of his country, directly or through freely chosen representatives.
- (2) Everyone has the right of equal access to public service in his country.
- (3) The will of the people shall be the basis of the authority of government; this will shall be expressed in periodic and genuine elections which shall be by universal and equal suffrage and shall be held by secret vote or by equivalent free voting procedures.

It is also enshrined in article 25 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

Every citizen shall have the right and the opportunity, without any of the distinctions mentioned in article 2 and without unreasonable restrictions:

- (a) To take part in the conduct of public affairs, directly or through freely chosen representatives;
- (b) To vote and to be elected at genuine periodic elections which shall be by universal and equal suffrage and shall be held by secret ballot, guaranteeing the free expression of the will of the electors;
- (c) To have access, on general terms of equality, to public service in his country.

The Grand Chamber of the European Court of Human Rights has said that article 25 of the Covenant sets out 'the same rights' as article 3 of Protocol No. 1.⁴

Chapter V of the European Union Charter of Fundamental Rights is entitled 'Citizen's rights'. It contains provisions guaranteeing the right to vote and to stand as a candidate in elections for the European Parliament as well as in municipal elections within European Union Member States.

Drafting of the provision

The European Movement, which met in The Hague in May 1948, considered a proposal for a 'Declaration of Rights' comprised in a report from the International Committee of the Movements for European Union. Speaking of membership qualifications for the future Council of Europe, it said governments should 'subscribe to a common Declaration guaranteeing the fundamental personal and civil rights essential for the maintenance of democracy'. It also contemplated a European Court with 'power to send representatives to investigate any relevant matter, such as the conduct of elections or political trials'. Finally, the Council was to have the authority to send 'a mixed European armed force... to assure conditions in which free elections could be held, and so afford to the population the possibility of electing a new parliament that would restore their liberties'.⁵

³ Hirst v. the United Kingdom (no. 2) [GC], no. 74025/01, § 58, ECHR 2005-IX.

⁴ Scoppola v. Italy (no. 3) [GC], no. 126/05, § 82, 22 May 2012.

⁵ Political Report from the International Committee of the Movements for European Union submitted to The Hague Congress, May 1948.

The initial draft European Convention on Human Rights, prepared by the International Juridical Section of the European Movement and submitted to the Council of Europe in July 1949, contained the following:

Every State a party to this Convention undertakes faithfully to respect the fundamental principles of political democracy, and, in particular, within its metropolitan territory:

- a) To hold at reasonable intervals free elections by universal suffrage and secret ballot, so that governmental action and legislation may accord with the expressed will of the people.
- b) To take no action which will interfere with the right of political criticism and the right to organise a political opposition.⁶

The Consultative Assembly of the Council of Europe met in August and September 1949. Following a preliminary discussion in which the importance of a provision guaranteeing free elections was underscored by several delegates,⁷ the rapporteur of the Legal Committee, Pierre-Henri Teitgen, prepared the following draft:

The Convention will include an undertaking by member States to respect the fundamental principles of democracy in all good faith, and, in particular, within their metropolitan territory:

- A. To hold at reasonable intervals free elections, by universal suffrage and secret ballot so that governmental action and legislation may accord with the expressed will of the people.
- B. To take no action which will interfere with the right of criticism or the right to organise a political opposition.⁸

In presenting the report of the Commission on Legal and Administrative Questions to the first Session of the Consultative Assembly, Teitgen said that the proposal:

[a]nticipates the undertaking by the Members States to respect the fundamental principles of democracy in all good faith, and particularly, in their metropolitan territory, to hold, at reasonable intervals, free elections by universal suffrage and secret ballot 'so as to ensure that Government action is indeed an expression of the will of the people'. An amendment to delete this phrase was rejected by the Committee, since it was considered that this was not a theory of political philosophy and therefore a subject of dispute, but rather a fundamental requirement of democracy.⁹

The text proposed by the Legal Committee was modified by the Consultative Assembly:

The Convention shall include the undertaking by Member States to respect the fundamental principles of democracy in all good faith, and in particular, as regards their metropolitan territory:

- 1) To hold free elections at reasonable intervals, with universal suffrage and secret ballot, so as to ensure that Government action and legislation is, in fact, an expression of the will of the people.
- b) To take no action which shall interfere with the right of criticism and the right to organise a political opposition.¹⁰

⁶ Convention for the Collective Protection of Individual Rights and Democratic Liberties by the States, Members of the Council of Europe, and for the establishment of a European Court of Human Rights to ensure observance of the Convention, Doc. INF/5/E/R, I TP 296-303, at pp. 296-8, art. 2.

⁷ Report of the Sitting sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 19 August 1949], I TP 38-154, at p. 76.

⁸ Proposals by Mr P.H. Teitgen, Rapporteur, 29 August 1949, Doc. A 116, I TP 166-8. Also Report presented by Mr P.H. Teitgen, 5 September 1949, Doc. A 290, I TP 192-213, at p. 202.

⁹ Report presented by Mr P.H. Teitgen, 5 September 1949, Doc. A 290, I TP 192-213, at pp. 198-200 (emphasis in the original).

¹⁰ Recommendation No. 38 to the Committee of Ministers adopted 8 September 1949 on the conclusion of the debates, Doc. AS (1) 108, II TP 274-83, at p. 276.

The provision was adopted by the plenary Consultative Assembly without a recorded vote.¹¹

The Committee of Ministers decided to convene a Committee of Experts with the mandate to study the Consultative Assembly draft. In preparation, the Secretariat-General of the Council of Europe produced a memorandum that addressed the distinction between article 2, consisting of an enumeration of rights to be protected by the Convention drawn from provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and article 3, which was the free elections provision adopted by the Assembly. The Secretariat-General said that the rights listed in article 2 needed to be 'ensured' by the State, because they could be breached by individuals or groups, whereas article 3 was a direct function of government action. Also, most of article 2 concerned individual freedoms, whereas article 3 dealt with political freedoms, it explained. In any event, the Secretariat-General said that article 3 'requires a more solemn and unequivocal commitment (specific reference to the rule of "good faith")'.¹²

When the Committee of Experts first met, in February 1950, the United Kingdom proposed the deletion of the undertakings concerning electoral machinery and the right of political opposition. It said these were of a constitutional and political character, adding that it would be difficult to reach agreement on the notion of 'fundamental principles of democracy'. The United Kingdom also objected to a reference to 'universal suffrage', observing that it was not unusual or unacceptable for a state to impose restrictions in this area.¹³ The Committee of Experts endorsed amendments proposed by the Irish that altered the final phrase of paragraph 1¹⁴ and added the word 'arbitrary' to paragraph 2. It also shortened considerably the chapeau of the provision because it felt this duplicated what appeared in articles 1 and 2, 'in particular the reference to the fundamental principles of democracy', and instead drew up a text which only provided for the safeguarding of the democratic institutions of the signatory States.¹⁵

The High Contracting Parties furthermore undertake, as regards their metropolitan territory:

1. to hold free elections at reasonable intervals, with universal suffrage and secret ballot, under conditions which will ensure that the Government and the legislature represent the people;
2. to take no arbitrary action which will interfere with the right of criticism and the right to organise a political opposition.¹⁶

The Committee explained that 'reasonable intervals' was meant as meaning intervals 'which are customary in free States'. The United Kingdom's expert said his government opposed such a provision as it related 'to matters of a constitutional and political nature which should not be included in a Convention for the protection of Human Rights'. He warned of 'practical difficulties', in particular with respect to 'universal suffrage', given

¹¹ Official Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 8 September 1949], II TP 14–274, at p. 132.

¹² Preparatory Report by the Secretariat-General concerning a Preliminary Draft Convention to Provide a Collective Guarantee of Human Rights, Doc. B 22, III TP 2–37, at p. 16.

¹³ Amendment to Article 3 of the Recommendation of the Consultative Assembly proposed by the Expert of the United Kingdom, Doc. A 774, III TP 182–3.

¹⁴ Amendment presented by Mr Lavery (Ireland) (4 February 1950), Doc. A 778, III TP 184–6.

¹⁵ Report to the Committee of Ministers submitted by the Committee of Experts Instructed to Draw Up a Draft Convention of Collective Guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Doc. CM/WP 1 (5) 15, A 924, IV TP 2–55, at pp. 23–5.

¹⁶ Appendix to the Report of the Committee of Experts to the Committee of Ministers—Draft Convention (16 March 1950), Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 14 revised, A 925, IV TP 50–79.

that the right to vote was subject to restrictions in all countries. He also said that universal suffrage and a secret ballot did not, in all cases, 'ensure that the Government and legislature really represented the people'.¹⁷

The Conference of Senior Officials that met in June manifested the extent of the divided opinions within the Council of Europe on including a provision ensuring the protection of democratic institutions. Denmark, Greece, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, and the United Kingdom were all opposed to its inclusion. They took the position that such a provision 'went outside the scope of a Convention, the aim of which was to protect the fundamental rights of individuals'. Denmark thought the principle in question might be recognized in the preamble. In the opposite camp, France, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, and Turkey favoured a provision because 'the maintenance of democratic institutions in a country constitutes an indispensable guarantee of the protection of Human Rights'. Belgium reserved its position.¹⁸ There was, as a consequence, no provision on free elections in the draft Convention adopted by the Conference.

What amounted to a decision not to include a text in the Convention on the right to free elections provoked an angry reaction from the Legal Committee of the Consultative Assembly. It informed the Committee of Ministers that 'it would gravely weaken the Convention if no reference were made in the Convention to democratic institutions'.¹⁹ Ireland also wrote to the Committee of Ministers expressing its disappointment with the negotiations in a general sense, but in particular complaining about the possible omission of a free elections provision.²⁰ The unhappiness continued in the Consultative Assembly when it gathered for its second session in August 1950.²¹ The Consultative Assembly voted by twenty-one to zero, with two abstentions, to request the Committee of Ministers to include in the Convention a text that was rather different from what it had proposed the previous year, focusing on the political rights of individuals rather than the protection of democratic institutions: 'The High Contracting Parties undertake to respect the political liberty of their nationals and in particular, with regard to their home territories, to hold free elections at reasonable intervals by secret ballot under conditions which will ensure that the government and legislature shall represent the opinion of the people'.²² The text the Assembly had adopted the previous year was amended, redefining the right in an attempt to address the objections of the Committee of Experts and the Conference of Senior Officials.²³

¹⁷ Report to the Committee of Ministers submitted by the Committee of Experts Instructed to Draw Up a Draft Convention of Collective Guarantee of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Doc. CM/WP 1 (5) 15, A 924, IV TP 2-55, at pp. 23-5.

¹⁸ Text of the report submitted by the Conference [of Senior Officials] to the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM/WP 4 (50) 19, CM/WP 4 (50) 16 rev., A 1431, IV TP 242-73, at pp. 252-4.

¹⁹ Letter from Sir David Maxwell Fyfe, Chairman of the Committee to Chairman of the Committee of Ministers (23 June 1950), Doc. AS (2) 6, V TP 32-4.

²⁰ Amendments proposed by the Irish Government (4 August 1950), Doc. CM 1 (50) 2, A 1863, V TP 58-61.

²¹ Plenary sitting [of the Consultative Assembly] on 11 August 1950, Rep., 1950, I, pp. 212, 282-3, V TP 210-12; Report of the sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 14 August 1950], V TP 216-71, at pp. 224-6, 236, 266-8; Consultative Assembly sitting of 16 August 1950 (morning), Rep., 1950, II, pp. 504-8, 518, 526-8, 534, V TP 286-94, 308-10, 322, 326, 336.

²² Text published in the Collected Documents of the Consultative Assembly, Doc. AS (2) 104, VI TP 198-229, at p. 210.

²³ Report of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions to the Consultative Assembly (24 August 1950), Doc. AS (2) 93, VI TP 61-73.

But there was still no agreement within the Committee of Ministers. The United Kingdom representative moved that proposals from the Consultative Assembly, including the free elections provision, be referred to a Committee of Experts 'with a view to the preparation of a Protocol to the Convention'. This was adopted by ten votes to one. An attempt by the Irish representative, Seán MacBride, to enlarge the Committee so as to include representatives of the Consultative Assembly was not accepted.²⁴

On 5 November 1950, the Standing Committee expressed 'regret' that the amendments, including the free elections provision, were not included in the Convention.²⁵ Later in November, when the plenary Assembly convened, there was much unhappiness with the rejection of the Consultative Assembly's proposals. '[W]ere the decisions of the Committee of Ministers deliberately intended to cause consternation?' asked Pierre-Henri Teitgen. 'If this was their aim, they have achieved it.'²⁶ The Assembly grudgingly accepted the fact that work would continue on a Protocol where its concerns could be addressed.²⁷

The Secretariat-General prepared a memorandum suggesting that the right required more precise definition. In particular, it noted that the requirement of elections 'under conditions which will ensure that the government and legislature shall represent the opinion of the people' could be taken, 'if literally construed, to impose an obligation to adopt a system of proportional representation, even though this was presumably not the intention of the Assembly'.²⁸ The Secretary General wrote to Member States inviting them to prepare proposals for discussion by a Committee of Experts in February 1951 in view of adoption of a Protocol to the Convention by the Committee of Ministers the following month.²⁹ He wrote again to Member States in early February, conveying a draft-free elections provision proposed by the United Kingdom: 'Signatory Governments undertake to respect the political liberty of their nationals and, in particular, to hold free elections at reasonable intervals by secret ballot under conditions which will ensure the free expression of the opinion of the people in the choice of government legislation.'³⁰

The Committee of Experts that met in February 1951 reached agreement on a text based upon the British proposal. The delegation of the United Kingdom told the Committee that its concern was to avoid the danger of the Convention being interpreted as imposing a specific system of parliamentary representation. Satisfied with this explanation, the Committee agreed on the following text: 'Signatory governments undertake to respect the political liberty of their nationals and, in particular, to hold free elections at reasonable intervals by secret ballot, under conditions which will ensure the free

²⁴ Report of the Meeting [of the Committee of Ministers, 3 November 1950], VII TP 24–34, at p. 34.

²⁵ Minutes of the meeting held by the Standing Committee of the Consultative Assembly in Rome on 5 November 1950 (morning), Doc. AS/CP (2) PV 5, p. 2, A 3057, VII TP 82–4; Minutes of the fourth meeting held in the afternoon of 5 November 1950 [by the Standing Committee of the Consultative Assembly], Doc. AS/CP (2) PV 6, p. 2, A 3058, VII TP 84–5; Second Report on the Work of the Standing Committee Presented in Accordance with the Resolution adopted by the Assembly on 6 September 1949, Doc. AS (2) 137, pp. 1126–7, VII TP 86–9.

²⁶ Reports of the Consultative Assembly, 2nd session, 18 November 1950, VII TP 90–121, at pp. 93–7.

²⁷ Ibid., pp. 90–121.

²⁸ Note on the amendments to the Convention on Human Rights proposed by the Consultative Assembly about which the Committee of Ministers was not able to reach unanimous agreement, Doc. CM (50) 90, A 3034, VII TP 126–30, at p. 30.

²⁹ Letter from the Secretary General of the Council of Europe to the Foreign Ministers of Member States (18 November 1950), Doc. D 280/9/50, VII TP 180–1.

³⁰ Letter from the Secretary General of the Council of Europe to the Foreign Ministers of Member States (7 February 1951), Doc. D 1357, VII TP 184–7.

expression of the opinion of the people in the choice of legislature and government.' According to the Report to the Committee of Ministers, the majority of the Committee considered that the text 'expressed sufficiently clearly the fact that choice of the government is not necessarily made directly by the people'. It added that Norway and Sweden did not agree that this was clear enough.³¹ The Committee of Ministers considered the text again at its April 1951 session. It made some small amendments, changing 'Signatory governments' to 'The High Contracting Parties' and deleting the final two words, 'and government'.³² Although this was accepted unanimously, the Irish delegate regretted that reference in the text to 'political freedom' had been eliminated. Other delegations said this would add nothing and might even lead to difficulties of interpretation.³³

The organs of the Council of Europe laboured on for several more months before agreeing on the three substantive provisions in Protocol No. 1. However, the text on free elections adopted by the Committee of Experts seemed to meet with general agreement. This was noted in the debate in the Consultative Assembly in May 1951.³⁴ In September 1951, the Secretariat-General prepared a commentary on the draft provision. It explained that the reference to 'political liberty' in the Consultative Assembly draft had been removed for two reasons: 'insofar as it relates to such rights as freedom of opinion, freedom of assembly and freedom of association, these rights are already provide for in the Convention itself'; 'insofar as it relates to other rights, the phrase "political liberty" is too unprecise [sic] in a legal text'. The reference to 'home territories' was deleted because the issue was dealt with in the territorial application provision of the Convention (article 56). Finally, the clause dealing with 'the opinion of the people' had been reformulated to avoid any implication that it required the institution of a form of proportional representation.³⁵

Despite apparent satisfaction with the free elections text, the Legal Committee, meeting in Brussels in early October 1951, took another stab at amendment. It proposed the following: 'The High Contracting Parties undertake to hold free elections for the legislature at reasonable intervals by secret ballot, under conditions which will ensure the free expression of the will of the people.'³⁶ By way of explanation, the Committee said it accepted the view of the Committee of Experts that the statement of political liberty was not sufficiently precise and noted concern that the idea of representation could be interpreted narrowly.³⁷ The Ministers' Advisers, meeting in Strasbourg in November 1951, said that although the new wording 'respected the substance of the text approved by the Committee of Ministers', it had the defect of not taking into account the situation of ³¹ Report of the Committee of Experts to the Committee of Ministers (24 February 1951), CM/WP VI (51) 7, Doc. CM/WP 1 (51) 40, VII TP 210-12.

³² Revised version (18 April 1951) and final version (19 April 1951), Doc. CM/WP (51) 9 (revised) and (final) VII TP 228-30.

³³ Report of the Committee of Experts to the Committee of Ministers, Doc. CM (51) 33 (final), VII TP 250-4. Ireland returned to the point in the Committee of Ministers: Conclusions of the meeting held from 17-19 July 1951, Doc. CM/Adj (51) 38, VII TP 324-7.

³⁴ Official Report of the Sitting [of the Consultative Assembly, 10 May 1951, morning], VII TP 276-9.

³⁵ Commentary by the Secretariat General on the draft Protocol (18 September 1951), Doc. AS/JA (3) 13, A 5904, VIII TP 4-14, at p. 14.

³⁶ Minutes of the meeting of 1 October 1951 [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions], Doc. AS/JA (3) PV 3, VIII TP 16-21.

³⁷ Draft letter to be submitted to the President of the Consultative Assembly concerning the draft Protocol, Doc. AS/JA (3) 17, A 6131, VIII TP 20-9, at p. 26.

parliaments with non-elected chambers.³⁸ The Chairman of the Committee of Ministers wrote to the President of the Consultative Assembly explaining the position, referring to upper chambers in the United Kingdom where some members inherit their position and in Belgium where some are appointed. 'The text adopted by the Committee of Ministers in August had been carefully drafted to avoid this difficulty, and the Committee has therefore felt it necessary to maintain the earlier text', he said.³⁹ The Legal Committee demurred,⁴⁰ and its view was endorsed by the plenary Assembly.⁴¹

The heading 'Right to free elections' was added pursuant to Protocol No. 11.⁴²

Analysis and interpretation

In an effective political democracy, the State is the ultimate guarantor of pluralism. It bears the responsibility pursuant to article 3 of Protocol No. 1 to 'organize' democratic elections 'under conditions which will ensure the free expression of the opinion of the people in the choice of the legislature'.⁴³ Its primary obligation is 'not one of abstention or non-interference, as with the majority of civil and political rights, but one of adoption by the State of positive measures to "hold" democratic elections'.⁴⁴ Three conditions are attached to the right to free elections set out in article 3 of Protocol No. 1: elections must be held at reasonable intervals; there must be a secret ballot; and they must take place 'under conditions which will ensure the free expression of the opinion of the people in the choice of the legislature'. Article 3 has been held to guarantee certain so-called 'subjective rights' that are not set out explicitly, in particular the right to vote and to stand for election.⁴⁵

Article 3 of Protocol No. 1 is 'akin to other Convention provisions protecting various forms of civic and political rights', notably article 10 on freedom of expression and article 11 on freedom of association, including membership in political parties.⁴⁶ According to the Court, there is 'undoubtedly a link between all of these provisions, namely the need to guarantee respect for pluralism of opinion in a democratic society through the exercise of civic and political freedoms'.⁴⁷

Although most of the substantive provisions of the Convention and the Protocols open with the words 'Everyone has the right' or 'No one shall', article 3 of Protocol No. 1

³⁸ Conclusions of the meeting of 23 November 1951 [of the Ministers' Advisers], Doc. CM/Adj (51) 68 (final), A 6678, VIII TP 45-7.

³⁹ Letter dated 28 November 1951 from the Chairman of the Committee of Ministers to the President of the Consultative Assembly, Doc. AS (3) 84, VIII TP 48-59.

⁴⁰ Minutes of the 4th meeting held on 29 November 1951 [of the Legal and Administrative Committee of the Consultative Assembly], Doc. AS/JA (3) PV 4 rev., VIII TP 64.

⁴¹ Consultative Assembly sitting of 8 December 1951 (morning), VIII TP 169.

⁴² Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 4(a).

⁴³ Mathieu-Mohin and Clerfayt v. Belgium, 2 March 1987, § 54, Series A no. 113; Özgürlük ve Dayanışma Partisi (ÖDP) v. Turkey, no. 7819/03, § 27, 10 May 2012.

⁴⁴ Sitaropoulos and Giakoumopoulos v. Greece [GC], no. 42202/07, § 60, ECHR 2012.

⁴⁵ Scoppola v. Italy (no. 3) [GC], no. 126/05, § 81, 22 May 2012; Labita v. Italy [GC], no. 26772/95, § 201, ECHR 2000-IV; Sadak and Others v. Turkey (no. 2), nos 25144/94, 26149/95 to 26154/95, 27100/95, and 27101/95, § 31, ECHR 2002-IV; Ahmed and Others v. the United Kingdom, 2 September 1998, § 75, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-VI.

⁴⁶ Ždanoka v. Latvia [GC], no. 58278/00, § 115, ECHR 2006-IV.

⁴⁷ Ibid.

begins with the phrase ‘The High Contracting Parties undertake’. In its first judgment dealing with article 3, the Court described this as the ‘inter-State colouring’ of the provision.⁴⁸ However, it rejected a restrictive interpretation whereby individuals could not invoke the provision as victims of a violation of their electoral rights.⁴⁹ The Court noted that nothing in the travaux préparatoires indicated an intent of the drafters to exclude the right of individual petition, adding that ‘for a long time the idea was canvassed—only to be finally abandoned—of withholding the subject from the Court’s jurisdiction. The travaux préparatoires also frequently refer to “political freedom”, “political rights”, “the political rights and liberties of the individual”, “the right to free elections” and “the right of election”.⁵⁰ The rather unique wording of article 3 is explained by ‘the desire to give greater solemnity to the commitment undertaken and in the fact that the primary obligation in the field concerned is not one of abstention or non-interference, as with the majority of the civil and political rights, but one of adoption by the State of positive measures to “hold” democratic elections’.⁵¹

For this reason, the Court has cautioned that alleged interferences with article 3 of Protocol No. 1 do not ‘automatically adhere to the same criteria’ as those set out in the restriction or limitation clauses of articles 8 to 11 of the Convention. It has said that ‘[b]ecause of the relevance of Article 3 of Protocol No. 1 to the institutional order of the State, this provision is cast in very different terms from Articles 8 to 11 of the Convention’. Article 3 employs collective and general terms even though it has been applied by the Court so as to enshrine individual rights. The consequence of this perspective is that standards of compliance with article 3 are ‘less stringent’ than those of article 8 to 11 of the Convention.⁵²

The right to vote and to stand for election is not set out explicitly in article 3 of Protocol No. 1, unlike article 25 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. The European Commission of Human Rights initially adopted an ‘institutional’ approach to free elections, rejecting the idea that article 3 of Protocol No. 1 encompassed a right to vote and to stand for election.⁵³ Its position evolved to one apparently recognizing ‘universal suffrage’⁵⁴ and then to the acceptance of the ‘subjective rights’ of the right to vote and to stand for election.⁵⁵ In its first judgment dealing with article 3 of Protocol No. 1, the Court endorsed the Commission’s position.⁵⁶

Organization of elections

The State has a duty to organize free elections. These must be held ‘at reasonable intervals by secret ballot, under conditions which will ensure the free expression of the opinion of the people in the choice of the legislature’. This ‘free expression’ referred to in article 3 of Protocol No. 1 ‘is inconceivable without the participation of a plurality of political parties

⁴⁸ Mathieu-Mohin and Clerfayt v. Belgium, 2 March 1987, § 50, Series A no. 113.

⁴⁹ Ibid., § 49; Karimov v. Azerbaijan, no. 12535/06, § 34, 25 September 2014.

⁵⁰ Mathieu-Mohin and Clerfayt v. Belgium, 2 March 1987, § 49, Series A no. 113.

⁵¹ Ibid., § 50; Hirst v. the United Kingdom (no. 2) [GC], no. 74025/01, § 57, ECHR 2005-IX.

⁵² Ždanoka v. Latvia [GC], no. 58278/00, § 115, ECHR 2006-IV.

⁵³ X v. Belgium, no. 10381/61, Commission decision of 18 September 1961, (1961) 4 YB 338.

⁵⁴ X v. Federal Republic of Germany, no. 2728/66, Commission decision of 6 October 1967, (1967) 10 YB 336, Collection 25, pp. 38–41.

⁵⁵ W, X, Y, and Z v. Belgium, nos 6745/76 and 6746/76, Commission decision of 30 May 1975, (1975) 18 YB 237, DR 2, p. 111.

⁵⁶ Mathieu-Mohin and Clerfayt v. Belgium, 2 March 1987, § 51, Series A no. 113.

representing the different shades of opinion to be found within a country's population'.⁵⁷ Most of the case law has concerned the implied content of article 3. The only significant debates about the text itself have involved the notion of 'legislature'. There appears to be no litigation whatsoever on the issue of 'secret ballot'. The term 'reasonable intervals' seems to have been discussed only rarely in the jurisprudence. In terms of the actual conduct of elections, 'it is important for the authorities in charge of electoral administration to function in a transparent manner and to maintain impartiality and independence from political manipulation'.⁵⁸

The European Commission of Human Rights said that the question of what constitutes a reasonable interval is to be determined by reference to the purpose of parliamentary elections. 'That purpose is to ensure that fundamental changes in prevailing public opinion are reflected in the opinions of the representatives of the people', it said. Thus, 'Parliament must in principle be in a position to develop and execute its legislative intentions—including longer term legislative plans.' According to the Commission, '[t]oo short an interval between elections may impede political planning for the implementation of the will of the electorate; too long an interval can lead to the petrification of political groupings in Parliament which may no longer bear any resemblance to the prevailing will of the electorate'. Under the circumstances, it said that a five-year interval between elections was not objectionable.⁵⁹

The only free elections that are protected by article 3 are those involving the 'choice of the legislature'. The term 'legislature' is to be construed in the light of the constitutional structure of the State concerned⁶⁰ bearing in mind, 'in particular, its constitutional traditions and the scope of the legislative powers of the chamber in question'.⁶¹ The provision 'was carefully drafted so as to avoid terms which could be interpreted as an absolute obligation to hold elections for both chambers in each and every bicameral system'.⁶² The drafters took account of the situation in certain parliaments where there are non-elective chambers. In such cases, article 3 of Protocol No. 1 is only applicable to the chamber that is filled by direct elections.⁶³ Where a legislature results from indirect elections, 'the extent of the legislative powers enjoyed by it is a decisive factor'.⁶⁴ Matters to be considered included the extent of its powers to control the passage of legislation, its role in determining the budget, and its importance in a treaty ratification process.

The term 'legislature' does not necessarily mean the national parliament.⁶⁵ The provision has been declared applicable to regional elected assemblies, such as the diets of the German Länder,⁶⁶ the Austrian landtag or regional parliament,⁶⁷ and the legislative ⁵⁷ Christian Democratic People's Party v. Moldova, no. 28793/02, § 66, ECHR 2006-II.

⁵⁸ Namat Aliyev v. Azerbaijan, no. 18705/06, § 73, 8 April 2010; The Georgian Labour Party v. Georgia, no. 9103/04, § 101, 8 July 2008.

⁵⁹ Timke v. Germany, no. 27311/95, Commission decision of 11 September 1995.

⁶⁰ Mathews v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 24833/94, § 40, ECHR 1999-I.

⁶¹ Sejdić and Finci v. Bosnia and Herzegovina [GC], nos 27996/06 and 34836/06, § 40, ECHR 2009.

⁶² Mathieu-Mohin and Clerfayt v. Belgium, 2 March 1987, § 53, Series A no. 113.

⁶³ Sejdić and Finci v. Bosnia and Herzegovina [GC], nos 27996/06 and 34836/06, § 40, ECHR 2009.

⁶⁴ Ibid., § 41.

⁶⁵ Mathews v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 24833/94, § 40, ECHR 1999-I; Bošković v. 'the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia' (dec.), no. 11676/04, ECHR 2004-VI.

⁶⁶ Timke v. Germany, no. 27311/95, Commission decision of 11 September 1995; X v. Federal Republic of Germany, no. 2728/66, Commission decision of 6 October 1967, (1967) 10 YB 336, Collection 25, pp. 38–41.

⁶⁷ X v. Austria, no. 7008/75, Commission decision of 12 July 1976, DR 6, p. 120.

assembly of the Autonomous Community of the Canary Islands,⁶⁸ as well as to the Flemish and Walloon community councils in the Belgian system.⁶⁹ Municipal councils do not fit under the rubric of 'legislature' as the term is meant in article 3.⁷⁰ As a general rule, if the body enacts delegated or subordinate legislation, framed by statutes adopted by the legislature of the country, it will not fit within article 3.⁷¹ Since adoption of the Maastricht Treaty in 1992,⁷² the European Parliament has moved from a purely consultative body to one exercising a decisive legislative role within the European Union. According to the Court, it 'represents the principal form of democratic, political accountability in the Community system', deriving 'democratic legitimation from the direct elections by universal suffrage'. Accordingly, elections for the European Parliament now fall within the ambit of article 3 of Protocol No. 1.⁷³

A referendum or plebiscite is not covered by article 3, according to the jurisprudence.⁷⁴ The rationale seems rooted only in a literal reading of the text. After all, a referendum may certainly be legislative in the sense that it may change the laws of the country, and perhaps even the constitution. It does not seem reasonable to think that the drafters of the Convention actually meant to exclude such democratic manifestations from article 3.

By contrast, the case law has been more flexible with respect to presidential elections. The Court has said it does not exclude the possibility that article 3 of Protocol No. 1 may be applicable in such circumstances:

Should it be established that the office of Head of State has been given the power to initiate and adopt legislation or enjoys wide powers to control the passage of legislation or the power to censure the principal lawmaking authorities, then that office could arguably be considered to be 'legislature' within the meaning of Article 3 of Protocol No. 1.⁷⁵

However, the Court has fairly systematically declared inadmissible applications relating to elections for the Head of State on the ground that the function is without significant legislative power.⁷⁶

⁶⁸ Federación Nacionalista Canaria v. Spain (dec.), no. 56618/00, 7 June 2001.

⁶⁹ Mathieu-Mohin and Clerfayt v. Belgium, 2 March 1987, § 53, Series A no. 113. Earlier, the European Commission had reached the opposite conclusion: W, X, Y, and Z v. Belgium, nos 6745/76 and 6746/76, Commission decision of 30 May 1975, (1975) 18 YB 237, DR 2, p. 111.

⁷⁰ Salleras Llinares v. Spain (dec.), no. 52226/99, 12 October 2000; Malarde v. France (dec.), no. 46813/99, 5 September 2000; Clerfayt, Legros and Alii v. Belgium, no. 10650/83, Commission decision of 17 May 1985, DR 42, p. 218.

⁷¹ Xuereb v. Malta (dec.), no. 52492/99, 15 June 2000; Booth-Clibborn and Others v. the United Kingdom, no. 11391/85, Commission decision of 5 July 1985, DR 43, p. 236; X v. the United Kingdom, no. 5155/71, Commission decision of 12 July 1976, DR 6, p. 13.

⁷² In early cases, the Convention organs considered that the European Parliament was not a 'legislature' within the meaning of article 3: Marcel Fournier v. France, no. 11406/85, Commission decision of 10 March 1988, (1988) 31 YB 45, DR 55, p. 130.

⁷³ Mattheus v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 24833/94, §§ 52–54, ECHR 1999-I. Also Occhetto v. Italy (dec.), no. 14507/07, 12 November 2013.

⁷⁴ Hilbe v. Liechtenstein (dec.), no. 31981/96, ECHR 1999-VI; Borghi v. Italy (dec.), no. 54767/00, 20 June 2002; Bader v. Austria, no. 26633/95, Commission decision of 15 March 1996.

⁷⁵ Krivobokov v. Ukraine (dec.), no. 38707/04, 19 February 2013. Also Bošković v. 'the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia' (dec.), no. 11676/04, ECHR 2004-VI; Sejdić and Finci v. Bosnia and Herzegovina [GC], nos 27996/06 and 34836/06, § 54, ECHR 2009.

⁷⁶ Anchugov and Gladkov v. Russia, nos 11157/04 and 15162/05, §§ 55, 4 July 2013; Paksas v. Lithuania [GC], no. 34932/04, § 72, ECHR 2011 (extracts); Niedzwiedz v. Poland (dec.), no. 1345/06, 11 March 2008; Krivobokov v. Ukraine (dec.), no. 38707/04, 19 February 2013; Baskauskaite v. Lithuania, no. 41090/98,

In a case concerning Azerbaijan, the Court noted that the legislative power was exercised by the Milli Mejlis (the Parliament) whereas the President of Azerbaijan was head of the executive power. The President was vested with limited powers relating to the enactment of legislation, including the authority to sign and veto laws adopted by the Parliament. Furthermore, the President had the authority to issue presidential decrees and orders although these could not contradict or supersede legislation adopted by Parliament and they were confined to implementation of legislation. The Court said such powers were to be distinguished from the legislative power, concluding that elections for the position of President were not contemplated by article 3 of Protocol No. 1.⁷⁷ The Court reached the same conclusion with respect to the President of Macedonia after analysing the scope of the limited powers that position exercises with respect to lawmaking.⁷⁸

In most European States, there is a very significant amount of regulation of the electoral process in areas such as financing of campaigns and access to the media. The purpose of such legislation is, in principle, to ensure that the election actually constitutes 'the free expression of the opinion of the people'. The Convention does not guarantee a right to such funding, at least according to the prevailing interpretation of article 3 of Protocol No. 1.⁷⁹ The Court has noted that although political parties were funded traditionally by contributions from their members, this is no longer adequate given 'a background of political competition and complex and costly modern means of communication'. It has observed that 'in Europe, as in the rest of the world, State funding for political parties is aimed at preventing corruption and avoiding excessive reliance by parties on private donors. It follows that this funding is intended to strengthen political pluralism and contributes to the proper functioning of democratic institutions.'⁸⁰ There are two main systems, one by which funds are allocated equally to political parties and the other by which they vary depending on performance of the party in the previous elections. Where funds are divided equally, a minimum threshold of votes is generally required in order for a party to be eligible. In Turkey, a minimum of 7 per cent of the votes in the preceding elections is a requirement for funding; this is at the high end of European practice. However, the Court declared inadmissible an application by a political party that had received between 0.8 per cent and 0.15 per cent of the valid votes cast, noting that the impugned difference in treatment was reasonably proportionate to the aim pursued.⁸¹

Similar issues arise with respect to other features of the regulation of elections, such as the need for a minimum number of signatures in order to stand for elected office, the deposit of a sum of money that will be refunded only if a significant result is obtained in the election, and a minimum threshold in order to obtain seats within a proportional representation system. It has been held that 'even a system which fixes a relatively high threshold, e.g. as regards the number of signatures required in order to stand for election or, as in the present case, a minimum percentage of votes on the national level, may be Commission decision of 21 October 1998; Habsburg-Lothringen v. Austria, no. 15344/89, Commission decision of 14 December 1989, (1989) 32 YB 116, DR 64-B, p. 211.

⁷⁷ Guliyev v. Azerbaijan (dec.), no. 35584/02, 27 May 2004.

⁷⁸ Botkoski v. 'the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia' (dec.), no. 11676/04, ECHR 2004-VI.

⁷⁹ Özgürlük ve Dayanışma Partisi (ÖDP) v. Turkey, no. 7819/03, Joint Partly Dissenting Opinion of Judges Tulken and Sajó, § 2, 10 May 2012.

⁸⁰ Özgürlük ve Dayanışma Partisi (ÖDP) v. Turkey, no. 7819/03, § 37, 10 May 2012.

⁸¹ Ibid., §§ 46–48.

regarded as not exceeding the margin of appreciation permitted to States in the matter'.⁸² Restrictions on the access to the media by which air time is apportioned to political parties, thereby denying this to independent candidates, has been considered to meet the proportionality requirements of article 3.⁸³

Implied limitations

As it has done with other provisions in the Convention and its Protocols, the European Court of Human Rights has applied a theory of 'implied limitations'.⁸⁴ Unlike articles 8 to 11 of the Convention, it contains no restriction or limitation clause. Moreover, the Court has recognized certain subjective rights, in particular the right to vote and to stand for election, deriving them from the text of article 3. However, this does not mean that the rights set out in article 3 of Protocol No. 1, either explicitly or by implication, are absolute.

Because of the absence of a restriction or limitation clause containing an enumeration of 'legitimate aims', such as public safety, national security, and the protection of the rights and freedoms of others, States Parties are not constrained in the identification of purposes justifying an infringement on article 3.⁸⁵ For example, the disenfranchisement of prisoners as a form of supplementary penalty has been held to pursue aims of preventing crime and enhancing civic responsibility and respect for the rule of law.⁸⁶ Similarly, the preservation of the democratic order⁸⁷ and 'encouraging citizen-like conduct'⁸⁸ have been recognized as legitimate aims. But the Grand Chamber hesitated when it came to 'loyalty', stating that it accepted the principle of loyalty to a State but that loyalty to a government was something else: 'In a democratic State committed to the rule of law and respect for fundamental rights and freedoms, it is clear that the very role of MPs, and in particular those members from opposition parties, is to represent the electorate by ensuring the accountability of the government in power and assessing their policies.'⁸⁹

The European Commission of Human Rights recognized the protection of linguistic minorities as a legitimate aim for restrictions on the right to free elections, noting its importance 'for stability, democratic security and peace, which has been shown by the upheavals of European history, and as a source of cultural wealth and traditions'. The Commission cited 'the growing commitment concerning the protection of minorities on the European and international levels', reflected in documents such as the Declaration of the Heads of State and Government of the member States of the Council of Europe, the Copenhagen Document of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, the ⁸² Silvius Magnago and Südtiroler Volkspartei v. Italy, no. 25035/94, Commission decision of 15 April 1996, (1996) 39 YB 117, DR 85-A, p. 112. Also Federación Nacionalista Canaria v. Spain (dec.), no. 56618/00, 7 June 2001; Tête v. France, no. 11123/84, Commission decision of 9 December 1987, DR 54, p. 52.

⁸³ Oran v. Turkey, nos 28881/07 and 37920/07, 15 April 2014.

⁸⁴ Karimov v. Azerbaijan, no. 12535/06, § 34, 25 September 2014; Mathews v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 24833/94, § 63, ECHR 1999-I; Labita v. Italy [GC], no. 26772/95, § 201, ECHR 2000-IV; Podkolzina v. Latvia, no. 46726/99, § 33, ECHR 2002-II.

⁸⁵ Hirst v. the United Kingdom (no. 2) [GC], no. 74025/01, § 74, ECHR 2005-IX; Frodl v. Austria, no. 20201/04, § 28, 8 April 2010.

⁸⁶ Scoppola v. Italy (no. 3) [GC], no. 126/05, § 90, 22 May 2012; Hirst v. The United Kingdom (no. 2) [GC], no. 74025/01, §§ 74–75, ECHR 2005-IX; Frodl v. Austria, no. 20201/04, § 30, 8 April 2010.

⁸⁷ Paksas v. Lithuania [GC], no. 34932/04, § 100, ECHR 2011 (extracts).

⁸⁸ Söyler v. Turkey, no. 29411/07, § 37, 17 September 2013.

⁸⁹ Tanase v. Moldova [GC], no. 7/08, § 166, ECHR 2010.

European Charter for Regional and Minority Languages, and the Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities.⁹⁰

In contrast with the relevant provisions of the Convention, there is no express reference in article 3 of Protocol No. 1 to the 'lawfulness' of measures taken by the State to restrict or limit the right to free elections. Yet the rule of law, affirmed in the Preamble of the Convention and inherent in all of its provisions, 'entails a duty on the part of the State to put in place a legislative framework for securing its obligations under the Convention in general and Article 3 of Protocol No. 1 in particular, and to ensure that its public officials charged with executing those obligations do not act outside the law, but exercise their powers in accordance with the applicable legal rules'.⁹¹ Article 3 of Protocol No. 1 requires that 'the compatibility of that aim with the principle of the rule of law and the general objectives of the Convention is proved in the particular circumstances of a case'.⁹²

More generally, the Court must ensure that restrictions or limitations 'do not curtail the rights in question to such an extent as to impair their very essence and deprive them of their effectiveness; that they are imposed in pursuit of a legitimate aim; and that the means employed are not disproportionate'.⁹³ The nature and severity of the interferences are factors to be taken into account when assessing their proportionality.⁹⁴ Where a suspected mafia personality was denied the right to vote although he had been acquitted at trial, the European Court said the evidence of guilt had been rebutted. Although the removal of his name from the electoral list fulfilled a legitimate purpose, given the verdict of the trial court it could not be considered proportionate.⁹⁵ The dissolution of a political party, having as a consequence the removal of its members as elected officials in the legislature, could not be regarded as proportionate to any legitimate aim. Moreover, it was 'incompatible with the very substance of the applicants' right to be elected and sit in parliament under Article 3 of Protocol No. 1 and infringed the sovereign power of the electorate who elected them as members of parliament'.⁹⁶ A permanent and irreversible nature of the applicant's disqualification from holding parliamentary office was deemed disproportionate.⁹⁷

Because of the specificities of the 'implied limitations' concept as it applies to article 3, the Court does not apply the 'necessity' or 'pressing social need' criteria that are also part of the methodology used with respect to articles 8 to 11 of the Convention. Instead, in article 3 cases the Court has tended to focus on two factors: 'whether there has been arbitrariness or a lack of proportionality, and whether the restriction has interfered with the free expression of the opinion of the people'.⁹⁸ A wide margin of appreciation is involved.⁹⁹ This is because '[t]here are numerous ways of organising and running electoral ⁹⁰ Polacco and Garofalo v. Italy, no. 23450/94, Commission decision of 15 September 1997, (1998) 41 YB 42, DR 90-B, p. 5.

⁹¹ Karimov v. Azerbaijan, no. 12535/06, § 42, 25 September 2014.

⁹² Ždanoka v. Latvia [GC], no. 58278/00, § 115, ECHR 2006-IV.

⁹³ Hirst v. The United Kingdom (no. 2) [GC], no. 74025/01, § 62, ECHR 2005-IX; Mathieu-Mohin and Clerfayt v. Belgium, 2 March 1987, § 52, Series A no. 113.

⁹⁴ Silay v. Turkey, no. 8691/02, § 32, 5 April 2007.

⁹⁵ Labita v. Italy [GC], no. 26772/95, § 203, ECHR 2000-IV.

⁹⁶ Sadak and Others v. Turkey (no. 2), nos 25144/94, 26149/95 to 26154/95, 27100/95, and 27101/95, § 40, ECHR 2002-IV.

⁹⁷ Paksas v. Lithuania [GC], no. 34932/04, § 112, ECHR 2011 (extracts).

⁹⁸ Ždanoka v. Latvia [GC], no. 58278/00, § 115, ECHR 2006-IV.

⁹⁹ Podkolzina v. Latvia, no. 46726/99, § 33, ECHR 2002-II.

systems and a wealth of differences, inter alia, in historical development, cultural diversity and political thought within Europe which it is for each Contracting State to mould into their own democratic vision'.¹⁰⁰ There exist a great variety of electoral systems within the territory of the Council of Europe. Article 3 of Protocol No. 1 does not impose any particular system. Both the 'simple majority system' and 'proportional representation', in its various forms, are compatible with article 3.¹⁰¹ The Court has also explained that electoral legislation must be assessed in the light of the political evolution of the country concerned. Features considered unacceptable in the context of one system may be justified in the context of another so long as the system adopted ensures the 'free expression of the opinion of the people in the choice of the legislature'.¹⁰² At the same time, the Court must bear in mind changing conditions within both the respondent State and other States Parties, responding to an emerging consensus about appropriate standards.¹⁰³

The Grand Chamber has also noted that the need for 'individualisation of a legislative measure alleged by an individual to be in breach of the Convention, and the degree of that individualisation where it is required by the Convention, depend on the circumstances of each particular case, namely the nature, type, duration and consequences of the impugned statutory restriction'.¹⁰⁴ A lesser degree of individualization may be sufficient in electoral rights cases than in situations concerning regarding articles 8 to 11 of the Convention.¹⁰⁵

Article 3 of Protocol No. 1 does not require the Court to verify whether every irregularity in an election is a breach of national law.¹⁰⁶ However, it must satisfy itself 'from a more general standpoint' that the respondent State has 'complied with its obligation to hold elections under free and fair conditions and ensured that individual electoral rights were exercised effectively'.¹⁰⁷ The Court has stressed 'the need to avoid arbitrary decisions and abuse of power in various electoral contexts and has emphasised that the relevant procedures for such decisions must be characterised by procedural fairness and legal certainty'.¹⁰⁸

Accordingly, an assessment is necessary when there is an allegation that a breach of national regulations governing elections is such as to seriously undermine the legitimacy of the election as a whole.¹⁰⁹ If the appropriate domestic institutions have already examined the matter, the Court may only be required to determine whether their findings were arbitrary.¹¹⁰ For this to take place, there must be in place a national institution capable of an effective examination of individual complaints and appeals in matters concerning electoral rights. 'Such a system ensures an effective exercise of individual rights to vote and to stand for election, maintains general confidence in the State's administration of the electoral process and constitutes an important device at the State's ¹⁰⁰ Hirst v. the United Kingdom (no. 2) [GC], no. 74025/01, § 61, ECHR 2005-IX.

¹⁰¹ Lindsay v. the United Kingdom, no. 8364/78, Commission decision of 8 March 1979, (1979) 22 YB 344, DR 15, p. 247, at p. 251; X v. the United Kingdom, no. 7140/75, DR 7, p. 95.

¹⁰² Ždanoka v. Latvia [GC], no. 58278/00, § 115, ECHR 2006-IV.

¹⁰³ Karimov v. Azerbaijan, no. 12535/06, § 37, 25 September 2014.

¹⁰⁴ Yumak and Sadak v. Turkey [GC], no. 10226/03, § 111, ECHR 2008; Ždanoka v. Latvia [GC], no. 58278/00, § 115, ECHR 2006-IV.

¹⁰⁵ Ždanoka v. Latvia [GC], no. 58278/00, § 115, ECHR 2006-IV.

¹⁰⁶ I.Z. v. Greece, no. 18997/91, Commission decision of 28 February 1994, DR 76-B, p. 65.

¹⁰⁷ Namat Aliyev v. Azerbaijan, no. 18705/06, § 77, 8 April 2010.

¹⁰⁸ Orujov v. Azerbaijan, no. 4508/06, § 42, 26 July 2011.

¹⁰⁹ Karimov v. Azerbaijan, no. 12535/06, § 43, 25 September 2014.

¹¹⁰ Babenko v. Ukraine (dec.), no. 43476/98, 4 May 1999.

disposal in achieving the fulfilment of its positive duty under Article 3 of Protocol No. 1', the Court has said.¹¹¹

Right to vote

The case law of the Court refers to the right to vote as the 'active' aspect of article 3 and to the right to stand as a candidate as the passive aspect of the provision. The Court has insisted that the right to vote is not a privilege. 'In the twenty-first century, the presumption in a democratic State must be in favour of inclusion', the Court has explained with reference to the parliamentary history of the United Kingdom and other countries 'where the franchise was gradually extended over the centuries from select individuals, elite groupings or sections of the population approved of by those in power'. Today, '[u]niversal suffrage has become the basic principle'.¹¹² Departure from the principle of universal suffrage 'risks undermining the democratic validity of the legislature thus elected and the laws it promulgates'.¹¹³ Although exclusion of groups or categories of the general population is not ruled out, such measures must be reconcilable with the underlying principles of article 3.¹¹⁴

Eligibility for the vote necessarily imposes restrictions or limitations on the right to participate in free elections. The free elections provision of the American Convention on Human Rights addresses this issue explicitly, stating the right as belonging to 'every citizen' and affirming: 'The law may regulate the exercise of the rights and opportunities referred to in the preceding paragraph only on the basis of age, nationality, residence, language, education, civil and mental capacity, or sentencing by a competent court in criminal proceedings'.¹¹⁵

As a general rule, States do not allow non-citizens to vote in national elections. Although there may be exceptions to this, no cases dealing with the matter have come before the Convention organs. With respect to age, within Europe, Scotland has the youngest age, 16, at which persons are eligible to vote. The norm appears to be 18 years of age. For example, the imposition of a minimum age may be envisaged with a view to ensuring the maturity of those participating in the electoral process or, in some circumstances, eligibility may be geared to criteria, such as residence, to identify those with sufficiently continuous or close links to, or a stake in, the country concerned.¹¹⁶ Again, there appears to be no case law concerning the lower age limit for voting. Disenfranchisement may be part of lustration measures of the sort taken in Central and Eastern Europe in the 1990s.¹¹⁷

An application concerning the right to vote in a particular election will be declared inadmissible, in accordance with article 35 of the Convention, if it is not lodged within six months of the election in question.¹¹⁸

¹¹¹ Namat Aliyev v. Azerbaijan, no. 18705/06, § 81, 8 April 2010.

¹¹² Hirst v. the United Kingdom (no. 2) [GC], no. 74025/01, § 59, ECHR 2005-IX.

¹¹³ Oran v. Turkey, nos 28881/07 and 37920/07, § 54, 15 April 2014; Sukhovetsky v. Ukraine, no. 13716/02, § 52, ECHR 2006-VI; Russian Conservative Party of Entrepreneurs and Others v. Russia, nos 55066/00 and 55638/00, § 49, 11 January 2007; Krasnov and Skuratov v. Russia, nos 17864/04 and 21396/04, § 41, 19 July 2007; Kovach v. Ukraine, no. 39424/02, § 50, ECHR 2008.

¹¹⁴ Hirst v. the United Kingdom (no. 2) [GC], no. 74025/01, § 62, ECHR 2005-IX.

¹¹⁵ American Convention on Human Rights, (1978) 1144 UNTS 123, art. 23(2).

¹¹⁶ Hirst v. the United Kingdom (no. 2) [GC], no. 74025/01, § 62, ECHR 2005-IX.

¹¹⁷ Adamsons v. Latvia, no. 3669/03, § 116, 24 June 2008.

¹¹⁸ McLean and Cole v. the United Kingdom (dec.), nos 12626/13 and 2522/12, § 24, 11 June 2013; Dunn and Others v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 566/10, § 11, 13 May 2014.

Non-residents

In 1982, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe noted that as many as nine million nationals of Member States live outside their country of nationality in another Member State.¹¹⁹ The territory of the Council of Europe (not to mention the European Union) was then a much smaller place, and that number has no doubt increased by orders of magnitude. The question of non-resident voting is part of a much larger debate about migration. In recent years, there has been a very concerted effort to facilitate the participation of non-residents in elections of their countries of nationality, although restrictions remain and 'there is a clear trend in favour of allowing voting by non-residents'.¹²⁰ Nevertheless, it cannot be said that any absolute principle has emerged. The Convention organs have consistently recognized that as a general rule having to satisfy a residence requirement in order to have or exercise the right to vote in parliamentary elections is not an arbitrary restriction of the right to vote.¹²¹ Various reasons have been deemed to justify the exclusion of non-residents from voting. There is a presumption that non-residents are not as involved in concerns about public affairs and know less about them, that they have less influence on the choice of candidates and the development of their programmes, and that they should not be in a position to have significant issues on matters that do not really affect them. The impracticability for and sometimes the undesirability of candidates presenting the issues to non-residents is also a relevant factor.¹²² In some countries, votes by non-residents are treated differently, as in Turkey, where such electors may only select a political party and not independent candidates. The Court has held that the Turkish rule 'meets the legislature's legitimate concern to ensure the political stability of the country and of the government which will be responsible for leading it after the elections'.¹²³

In a recent decision, the Grand Chamber said that measures to allow expatriates to exercise their right to vote from their place of residence, although not provided for in article 3 of Protocol No. 1, was nevertheless 'consonant with that provision'.¹²⁴ The Grand Chamber went on to analyse whether, in a State where the legislation authorizes the vote for non-residents, article 3 imposes an obligation to organize this effectively. It considered the practice of European States as well as applicable legal instruments, concluding that as the law now stands, there is nothing to conclude that States are ¹¹⁹ Recommendation 951 (1982) on voting rights of nationals of Council of Europe member states. For a review of the relevant initiatives within the Parliamentary Assembly as well as those of the Venice Commission, see Shindler v. the United Kingdom, no. 19840/09, §§ 39–71, 111, 7 May 2013.

¹²⁰ Shindler v. the United Kingdom, no. 19840/09, § 115, 7 May 2013.

¹²¹ Hilbe v. Liechtenstein (dec.), no. 31981/96, ECHR 1999-VI; X and Association Y v. Italy, no. 8987/80, Commission decision of 6 May 1981, DR 24, p. 192; X v. the United Kingdom, no. 7730/76, Commission decision of 28 February 1979, DR 15, p. 137; Lukisch v. Germany, no. 35385/97, Commission decision of 21 May 1997, DR 89-B, p. 175.

¹²² Oran v. Turkey, nos 28881/07 and 37920/07, § 53, 15 April 2014; Sitaropoulos and Giakoumopoulos v. Greece [GC], no. 42202/07, § 66, ECHR 2012; Doyle v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 30158/06, 6 February 2007; Hilbe v. Liechtenstein (dec.), no. 31981/96, ECHR 1999-VI; Polacco and Garofalo v. Italy, no. 23450/94, Commission decision of 15 September 1997, (1998) 41 YB 42, DR 90-B, p. 5; Lukisch v. Germany, no. 35385/97, Commission decision of 21 May 1997, DR 89-B, p. 175; X and Association Y v. Italy, no. 8987/80, Commission decision of 6 May 1981, DR 24, p. 192; X v. The United Kingdom, no. 7730/76, Commission decision of 28 February 1979, DR 15, p. 137.

¹²³ Oran v. Turkey, nos 28881/07 and 37920/07, § 66, 15 April 2014.

¹²⁴ Sitaropoulos and Giakoumopoulos v. Greece [GC], no. 42202/07, § 71, ECHR 2012.

under an obligation to enable citizens living abroad to exercise the right to vote.¹²⁵ Consequently, Greece's failure to facilitate voting for expatriates in their place of residence was not a breach of article 3 of Protocol No. 1.¹²⁶

Convicted persons

Deprivation of the right to vote is imposed in some States Parties to the Convention as a consequence of conviction of a criminal offence, regardless of whether or not they are detained in prison. In others, the denial of voting is confined to those in detention. Slightly less than half the States Parties place no restrictions on the voting rights of persons convicted of criminal offences.¹²⁷ Seven States parties—Armenia, Bulgaria, Estonia, Georgia, Hungary, Russia, and the United Kingdom—have a blanket ban on voting by convicted persons. In some early decisions of the European Commission of Human Rights, applications by prisoners with respect to voting rights were declared inadmissible.¹²⁸ But more recently, describing such bans as a 'blunt instrument',¹²⁹ the Court has concluded that applications by prisoners in two of these States breached article 3 of Protocol No. 1.¹³⁰

The automatic denial of the right to vote to prisoners, whatever the length of their sentence and without regard to the nature or gravity of their offence and their individual circumstances, falls 'outside any acceptable margin of appreciation, however wide that margin might be' and is consequently incompatible with article 3 of Protocol No. 1.¹³¹ Obviously, the same finding applies to convicted persons who are not even incarcerated or who are released before their custodial sentence has been completed.¹³² A prisoner does not forfeit Convention rights merely because of his or her status as a person detained following conviction. 'Nor is there any place under the Convention system, where tolerance and broadmindedness are the acknowledged hallmarks of democratic society, for automatic disenfranchisement based purely on what might offend public opinion', the Grand Chamber has said.¹³³

In its Code of Good Practice in Electoral Matters, the Venice Commission has said that deprivation of the right to vote 'must be based on mental incapacity or a criminal conviction for a serious offence'.¹³⁴ The Court has said that disenfranchisement 'may only be envisaged for a rather narrowly defined group of offenders serving a lengthy term of imprisonment; there should be a direct link between the facts on which a conviction is based and the sanction of disenfranchisement; and such a measure should preferably be imposed not by operation of a law but by the decision of a judge following judicial proceedings'.¹³⁵ Moreover, disenfranchisement based upon mere suspicion of ¹²⁵ Ibid., § 75.

¹²⁶ Ibid., § 60.

¹²⁷ Scoppola v. Italy (no. 3) [GC], no. 126/05, § 45, 22 May 2012.

¹²⁸ X v. the Netherlands, no. 6573/74, Commission decision of 19 December 1974, DR 1, p. 87; H. v. the Netherlands, no. 9914/82, Commission decision of 4 July 1983, DR 33, p. 246; Patrick Holland v. Ireland, no. 24827/94, Commission decision of 14 April 1998, (1998) 41 YB 90, DR 93, p. 15.

¹²⁹ Hirst v. the United Kingdom (no. 2) [GC], no. 74025/01, § 82, ECHR 2005-IX.

¹³⁰ Ibid., § 85; Anchugov and Gladkov v. Russia, nos 11157/04 and 15162/05, § 100, 4 July 2013.

¹³¹ Hirst v. the United Kingdom (no. 2) [GC], no. 74025/01, § 82, ECHR 2005-IX.

¹³² Söyler v. Turkey, no. 29411/07, § 47, 17 September 2013.

¹³³ Hirst v. the United Kingdom (no. 2) [GC], no. 74025/01, § 70, ECHR 2005-IX.

¹³⁴ European Commission for Democracy through Law, Code of Good Practice in Electoral Matters, CDL-AD (2002) 23 rev., para. 1.1.d.iv.

¹³⁵ Frodl v. Austria, no. 20201/04, § 28, 8 April 2010.

involvement in organized crime cannot be a proportionate measure.¹³⁶ Where disenfranchisement for a period of more than ten years was imposed upon an individual who had poured red paint on statues of Atatürk, the Court held that there was a violation of article 3.¹³⁷ It has in a more general sense found the Turkish legislation on disenfranchisement to be indiscriminate in application as it fails to take into account the nature or gravity of the offence, the length of the sentence, and the individual circumstances of the convicted person.¹³⁸

Right to stand for election

The right to stand for election to the legislature is the 'passive' dimension of the individual right to free elections enshrined in article 3 of Protocol No. 1. It is not a right to a successful result, but rather one to participate as a candidate under fair and democratic conditions. Article 3 requires the Court 'not to ascertain merely that the election outcome as such was not prejudiced, but to verify that the applicant's individual right to stand for election was not deprived of its effectiveness and that its essence had not been impaired'.¹³⁹ Although there is no right to a favourable outcome, in one case the Court concluded that as a result of tampering with votes in violation of article 3 the applicant was denied a seat in the Parliament. She was awarded compensation based on the difference in her salary as a deputy and what she might otherwise have earned.¹⁴⁰

Restrictions and limitations on the right to stand for election are broadly similar to those regarding the 'active' wing of the right, the right to vote. The right is thinner, and the scope of permissible restrictions and limitations is thicker, with respect to the passive aspect than the active one.¹⁴¹ Consequently, although the 'active' aspect of article 3 dictates a larger appreciation of the proportionality of restrictions on the right to vote of certain categories, the 'passive' aspect is generally confined to assessing whether arbitrary factors have prevented an individual from being a candidate.¹⁴² The problem may arise from legislation that is not sufficiently precise or from an interpretation of the domestic law that is marked by arbitrariness. In one case, a Chamber of the Court was divided, four judges considering that legislation excluding 'clergymen' from elected office was insufficiently clear and precise to prevent arbitrary decisions by electoral authorities, and three judges finding the legislation acceptable but its application to be marked by arbitrariness in the application under consideration.¹⁴³

A variety of grounds for disqualification from holding office can be found in national legal systems. Some disqualifications are related to the separation of powers. For example, ¹³⁶ Labita v. Italy [GC], no. 26772/95, § 203, ECHR 2000-IV.

¹³⁷ Murat Vural v. Turkey no. 9540/07, §§ 77–80, 21 October 2014.

¹³⁸ Söyler v. Turkey, no. 29411/07, §§ 36–47, 17 September 2013.

¹³⁹ Namat Aliyev v. Azerbaijan, no. 18705/06, § 75, 8 April 2010.

¹⁴⁰ Kerimova v. Azerbaijan, no. 20799/06, § 64, 30 September 2010.

¹⁴¹ Occhetto v. Italy (dec.), no. 14507/07, § 47, 12 November 2013; Melnychenko v. Ukraine, no. 17707/02, § 57, ECHR 2004-X; Seyidzade v. Azerbaijan, no. 37700/05, § 29, 3 December 2009. See also European Commission for Democracy through Law, Code of Good Practice in Electoral Matters, CDL-AD (2002) 23 rev., para. 1.1.d.iii.

¹⁴² Adamsons v. Latvia, no. 3669/03, § 111, 24 June 2008; Ždanoka v. Latvia [GC], no. 58278/00, § 127, ECHR 2006-IV.

¹⁴³ Seyidzade v. Azerbaijan, no. 37700/05, §§ 36–39, 3 December 2009; Seyidzade v. Azerbaijan, no. 37700/05, Concurring Opinion of Judge Malinverni, Joined by Judges Vajić and Kovler, 3 December 2009.

it may be deemed incompatible to hold simultaneously a seat in Parliament and a senior office in the executive or judicial branch.¹⁴⁴ Disqualification may also exist in order to protect the independence of parliamentarians. For this reason, in most countries judges and prosecutors, police officers, members of the armed forces, and diplomats are not permitted to sit in Parliament. Individuals may also be disqualified from holding office because of conflicts of interest with the private sector, and because they cannot be available full time for their parliamentary duties.¹⁴⁵

Given that the Court has considered residence requirements for voting to be justified on a number of grounds, as discussed above, it would not make sense for it to impose a more stringent standard with respect to the right to run for elected office. It has said that it would not 'preclude outright a five-year continuous residency requirement for potential parliamentary candidates'. Such a condition 'may be deemed appropriate to enable such persons to acquire sufficient knowledge of the issues associated with the national parliament's tasks'.¹⁴⁶

The Court has intervened in the case of a prohibition on elected office to persons with dual nationality. Noting that only four Council of Europe Member States impose such a restriction on eligibility for elected office, two of which altogether prohibit candidates with dual nationality, the Court said that there was 'a consensus that where multiple nationalities are permitted, the holding of more than one nationality should not be a ground for ineligibility to sit as an MP, even where the population is ethnically diverse and the number of MPs with multiple nationalities may be high'.¹⁴⁷ It acknowledged that a 'special historico-political context' might justify such a restriction, noting that it could not exclude that 'in the immediate aftermath of the Declaration of Independence by Moldova in 1991, a ban on multiple nationals sitting as MPs could be justified'.¹⁴⁸ But it noted that the measure was only put in place in 2008 and that no explanation of the rationale was provided by the respondent State. It added that it must 'examine with particular care any measure which appears to operate solely, or principally, to the disadvantage of the opposition, especially where the nature of the measure is such that it affects the very prospect of opposition parties gaining power at some point in the future'.¹⁴⁹

It is quite usual for legislation to require that eligibility as a candidate depend upon some demonstration of significant support in the form of signatures of electors. Case law of the Convention organs has established that a certain minimum number of signatures does not constitute an infringement on the right of the people to choose their representatives.¹⁵⁰ In an Austrian case, the European Commission said that a requirement of 200 certified signatures 'which can easily be satisfied by any political party with a reasonable chance of success cannot be said to hinder the free expression of the people in the choice of the legislature within the meaning of the said Article'.¹⁵¹

¹⁴⁴ Ahmed and Others v. the United Kingdom, 2 September 1998, §§ 73, 75, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-VI; Gionas and Others v. Greece, 1 July 1997, §§ 29, 44, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-IV; Brike v. Latvia (dec.), no. 47135/99, 29 June 2000.

¹⁴⁵ Lykourazos v. Greece, no. 33554/03, §§ 21–27, ECHR 2006-VIII.

¹⁴⁶ Melnychenko v. Ukraine, no. 17707/02, § 57, ECHR 2004-X.

¹⁴⁷ Tănase v. Moldova [GC], no. 7108, § 172, ECHR 2010.

¹⁴⁸ Ibid., § 173.

¹⁴⁹ Ibid., § 179.

¹⁵⁰ Magnago and Südtiroler Volkspartei v. Italy (dec.), no. 25035/94, 15 April 1996; Asensio Serqueda v. Spain, no. 23151/94, Commission decision of 9 May 1994, DR 77-B, p. 122.

¹⁵¹ X v. Austria, no. 7008/75, Commission decision of 12 July 1976, DR 6, p. 120.

Discrimination

The only findings of a violation of article 14 of the Convention in conjunction with article 3 of Protocol No. 1 concern the constitution of Bosnia and Herzegovina. It reserves the Presidency and membership in the House of Peoples to members of the three 'constituent peoples', namely Bosniacs, Croats, and Serbs. In the leading case, the two applicants described themselves as being of Roma and Jewish origin and said they did not wish to declare affiliation with one of the 'constituent peoples'. As a result, they were excluded from running for election to the House of Peoples. The Grand Chamber accepted that the impugned restriction pursued:

at least one aim which is broadly compatible with the general objectives of the Convention, as reflected in the Preamble to the Convention, namely the restoration of peace. When the impugned constitutional provisions were put in place a very fragile cease-fire was in effect on the ground. The provisions were designed to end a brutal conflict marked by genocide and 'ethnic cleansing'. The nature of the conflict was such that the approval of the 'constituent peoples' (namely, the Bosniacs, Croats and Serbs) was necessary to ensure peace. This could explain, without necessarily justifying, the absence of representatives of the other communities (such as local Roma and Jewish communities) at the peace negotiations and the participants' preoccupation with effective equality between the 'constituent peoples' in the post-conflict society.¹⁵²

The Grand Chamber concluded that the exclusion of groups or individuals from election to the House of Peoples based on race or ethnicity lacked an objective and reasonable justification. As a result, there was a breach of article 14 of the Convention in conjunction with article 3 of Protocol No. 1.¹⁵³ In a subsequent case, the Court reached the same conclusion with respect to an individual who claimed no particular ethnic or racial identity but who declined to declare affiliation with a 'constituent people'.¹⁵⁴

Reservations

Albania is the only State to have made a reservation to article 3 of Protocol No. 1. Its reservation was temporary in nature, formulated for a period of five years. The legislation in question concerned denial of democratic rights to persons associated with the former regime.¹⁵⁵

Some States have made territorial declarations applicable to Protocol No. 1 as a whole; these are discussed in the chapter in this Commentary dealing with article 4 of Protocol No. 1.

Following serious concerns about corruption within the local government, in 2009 the United Kingdom imposed direct rule and accordingly withdrew the application of article 3 of Protocol No. 1 to the Turks and Caicos Islands.¹⁵⁶ On 19 December 2012, it declared that following elections that international observers deemed to be transparent and accountable, with results reflecting the will of the people, these 'welcome and significant developments' resulted in it 'end[ing] its withdrawal of the application of ¹⁵² Sejdić and Finci v. Bosnia and Herzegovina [GC], nos 27996/06 and 34836/06, § 45, ECHR 2009.

¹⁵³ Ibid., § 51.

¹⁵⁴ Zornić v. Bosnia and Herzegovina, no. 3681/06, §§ 30, 15 July 2014.

¹⁵⁵ (1996) 39 YB 21–22.

¹⁵⁶ (2009) 52 YB 9; (2010) 53 YB 27. See Misick v. the United Kingdom (dec.), no. 10781/10, §§ 16, 22, 16 October 2012.

Article 3 of Protocol No. 1 to the Turks and Caicos Islands, in such a way that Article 3 of Protocol No. 1 will once again apply to this territory'.¹⁵⁷

Further reading

- John J. Cremona, 'The Right to Free Elections in the European Convention on Human Rights' in Mahoney et al., Melanges Ryssdal, pp. 309–24.
- Donald Davis, 'Britain must Defy the European Court of Human Rights on Prisoner Voting as Strasbourg is Exceeding its Authority', in Spyridon Flogaitis, Tom Zwart, and Julie Fraser, eds, The European Court of Human Rights and its Discontents, Turning Criticism into Strength, Cheltenham, UK: Edward Elgar, 2013, pp. 65–70.
- Achilles V. Emilianides, 'Do Minimum Age Requirements Violate the Right to Stand for Election under the European Convention on Human Rights?', [2010] EHRLR 670.
- Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 680–9.
- Sergey Golubok, 'Right to Free Elections: Emerging Guarantees or Two Layers of Protection?', (2009) 27 Netherlands Quarterly of Human Rights 36.
- Grabenwarter, European Convention, pp. 399–409.
- Heather Lardy, 'Article 3, First Protocol: The Right to Free Elections', in Harris et al., eds, Law of the European Convention, pp. 711–34.
- Silvio Marcus-Helmons, 'Premier Protocole Additionnel, Article 3', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 1011–20.
- Michael O'Boyle, 'Electoral Disputes and the ECHR: An Overview', (2009–2010) 30 HRLJ 1.
- Ovey/White, Jacobs and White, European Convention, pp. 331–8.
- Jeroen Schokkenbroek, 'Free Elections by Secret Ballot (Article 3 of Protocol No. 1)', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 911–35.

¹⁵⁷ (2012) 55 YB 8.

Article 4. Territorial application/Application territoriale

Any High Contracting Party may at the time of signature or ratification or at any time thereafter communicate to the Secretary General of the Council of Europe a declaration stating the extent to which it undertakes that the provisions of the present Protocol shall apply to such of the territories for the international relations of which it is responsible as are named therein.

Any High Contracting Party which has communicated a declaration in virtue of the preceding paragraph may from time to time communicate a further declaration modifying the terms of any former declaration or terminating the application of the provisions of this Protocol in respect of any territory.

A declaration made in accordance with this Article shall be deemed to have been made in accordance with paragraph 1 of Article 56 of the Convention.

Toute Haute Partie contractante peut, au moment de la signature ou de la ratification du présent protocole ou à tout moment par la suite, communiquer au Secrétaire Général du Conseil de l'Europe une déclaration indiquant la mesure dans laquelle elle s'engage à ce que les dispositions du présent protocole s'appliquent à tels territoires qui sont désignés dans ladite déclaration et dont elle assure les relations internationales.

Toute Haute Partie contractante qui a communiqué une déclaration en vertu du paragraphe précédent peut, de temps à autre, communiquer une nouvelle déclaration modifiant les termes de toute déclaration antérieure ou mettant fin à l'application des dispositions du présent protocole sur un territoire quelconque.

Une déclaration faite conformément au présent article sera considérée comme ayant été faite conformément au paragraphe 1 de l'article 56 de la Convention.

Introductory comments

Territorial application of the Convention itself is governed by article 56 of the Convention. Clauses governing territorial application also appear in several of the Protocols. They are known as 'colonial clauses' and have in practice been applicable to only a small number of European States with dependent territories. Such clauses constitute an exception to the general law of treaties, codified in article 29 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, by which a convention applies to the entire territory of a State Party. They have been criticized for permitting double standards but, in theory at least, they also permit the European State to show some deference for local autonomy.

Drafting of the provision

The draft Protocol prepared for the February 1951 meeting of the Committee of Experts by the United Kingdom included a provision dealing with territorial application:

1. Any signatory Government may at the time of signature or ratification or at any time thereafter communicate to the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe a declaration stating the extent to which it undertakes that the provisions of the present Protocol shall apply to such of the territories for the international relations of which it is responsible as are named therein.
2. Any signatory Government which has communicated a declaration in virtue of the preceding paragraph may from time to time communicate a further declaration modifying the terms of any former declaration or terminating the application of the provision of this Protocol in respect of any territory.¹

This provision was substantially revised by the Committee of Experts at its April 1951 meeting:

The High Contracting Parties shall declare at the time of signature or ratification whether their acceptance of the present Protocol relates to all three of Articles 2, 3 and 5 or to one or two of them. Any High Contracting Party which has not accepted all the provisions in question may, by a subsequent declaration extend its acceptance to others. The declarations provided for in the preceding paragraph shall be communicated to the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe.²

At the same time, the United Kingdom submitted a far more elaborate text governing application to dependent territories.³

The first paragraph of the April text was substantially revised by the Committee of Experts at its June 1951 session:

Any High Contracting Party which is not in a position to extend the application of one or more of the foregoing Articles to all or any of the territories for whose international relations it is responsible may make a declaration to this effect at the time of the notification referred to in paragraph 1 of Article 63 of the Convention. Any High Contracting Party which has made such a declaration may subsequently revoke it in whole or in part.⁴

This provision was revised yet again by the Ministers' Advisers as a result of their July 1951 meeting:

Any High Contracting Party may at the time of signature or ratification or at any time therefore communicate to the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe a declaration stating the extent to which it undertakes that the provisions of the present Protocol shall apply to such of the territories for the international relations of which it is responsible as are named herein.

Any High Contracting Party which has communicated a declaration in virtue of the preceding paragraph may from time to time communicate a further declaration modifying the terms of any former declaration or terminating the application of the provisions of this Protocol in respect of any territory.⁵

The text figured in the draft Protocol adopted in August 1951 by the Committee of Ministers. The draft then returned to the Consultative Assembly for its opinion. The Secretariat-General prepared a Commentary on the draft Protocol. Describing article 4 as the 'colonial clause', the Commentary noted that it was based on article 63 (now article 56) of the Convention. It was included because 'certain member States could not ratify the Protocol without previous consultation with the overseas territories affected, which would greatly delay the process of ratification'. The Commentary explained that

¹ Draft Protocol extending Section I of the Convention (14 February 1951), Doc. CM/WP 1 (51) 23, p. 1, CM/WP VI (51) 1, p. 1, VII TP 188-91.

² Revised version, Doc. CM/WP VI (51) 9, A 4405, VII TP 228-33.

³ Proposal of the United Kingdom Delegation, Doc. CM/WP VI (51) 12, A 4387, VII TP 234-43, at pp. 238-9.

⁴ Report of the Committee of Experts to the Committee of Ministers (6 June 1951), Doc. CM/WP VI (51) 20 final, Appendix, VII TP 300-9, at pp. 306-37.

⁵ Recommendations of the Ministers' Advisers relating to the Agenda for the Session (1 August 1951), Doc. CM (51) 64 rev., A 5578 VII TP 326-33, at pp. 330-1.

ratification could be à la carte, and it would be 'feasible for the Articles on property and education to be thus extended, without including the undertaking about free elections'.⁶

The Legal Committee of the Consultative Assembly voted to delete the provision. It concluded instead that provision for overseas territories should be made in article 5(4), proposing the following:

However, when use is made of the option provided for in Article 63 of the Convention of declaring that the Convention shall extend to the territories for whose international relations a State is responsible, exception may be made of Articles 1, 2 or 3 of the present Protocol.

Such an exception may be revoked at any time. It may also be incorporated at any time in the declaration.⁷

The Committee explained that its amendment was intended to 'remove all doubts' about where article 63 (now article 56) of the Convention was among the provisions applicable to the Protocol as a consequence of draft article 5.⁸

Instead of accepting the suggestion of the Legal Committee of the Assembly, the Advisers to the Ministers of Foreign Affairs proposed that the problem could be solved by adding a final paragraph to article 4: 'a declaration made in accordance with this Article shall be deemed to have been made in accordance with paragraph 1 of Article 63 of the Convention'.⁹ A letter from the President of the Committee of Ministers to the President of the Consultative Assembly explained that the text previously adopted by the Committee of Ministers required a positive declaration by a State Party. This would be reversed if the Legal Committee's proposal were adopted. The President of the Committee of Ministers noted that 'this procedure would put the Governments concerned in an invidious position, as compared with the procedure contemplated in the earlier draft'.¹⁰ When it reconvened in late November, the Legal Committee of the Assembly accepted the proposal from the Committee of Ministers.¹¹ Speaking in the plenary Assembly in December 1951, Pierre-Henri Teitgen explained that the Ministers had ignored the advice of the Legal Committee on its 'awkward wording' and the 'clumsiness of certain formulae', but said that no question of principle was involved and that therefore the provisions should be accepted 'in spite of their defects'.¹²

The third paragraph was amended by Protocol No. 11 to take into account the renumbering of the Convention provisions.¹³ The heading 'Territorial application' was added by Protocol No. 11.¹⁴

⁶ Commentary by the Secretariat General on the Draft Protocol (18 September 1951), Doc. AS/JA (3) 13, pp. 2-4, VIII TP 4-17, at pp. 8-11.

⁷ Minutes of the Meeting of 1 October 1951 [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions of the Consultative Assembly], Doc. AS/JA (3) PV 3, p. 2, VIII TP 16-19, at pp. 18-19.

⁸ Report on the Draft Protocol to the Convention presented by the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions, Doc. CA no. 81, VIII TP 28-37, at pp. 34-5.

⁹ Conclusions of the meeting [of Advisers to the Ministers for Foreign Affairs, 21-23 November 1951], VIII TP 44-7, at pp. 46-7.

¹⁰ Letter dated 28 November 1951 from the Chairman of the Committee of Ministers to the President of the Consultative Assembly, Doc. CA No. 84, VIII TP 48-59, at pp. 52-3.

¹¹ Report on the Communication from the Committee of Ministers relating to the Protocol to the Convention presented on behalf of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions, Doc. CA 93, VIII TP 66-75.

¹² Consultative Assembly sitting of 7 December 1951 (afternoon), VIII TP 76-115, at pp. 84-5.

¹³ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 4(b).

¹⁴ Ibid., art. 4(a).

Analysis and interpretation

The territorial application provision in Protocol No. 1 refers to article 56 of the Convention, with which it is closely related. Article 4 of the Protocol confirms the presumption that the instrument applies only to a State's metropolitan territory and that it can only be extended to dependent territories by way of a declaration. Article 4 of Protocol No. 1 goes even further than article 56 of the Protocol. It enables a State Party to declare 'the extent to which it undertakes that the provisions of the present Protocol shall apply'.

In 1986, The European Court of Human Rights declared inadmissible a portion of an application based on Protocol No. 1 directed at the United Kingdom concerning Guernsey, given that no declaration pursuant to article 4 had been formulated.¹⁵ By a declaration dated 22 February 1988, the United Kingdom extended application of Protocol No. 1 to the following territories: The Bailiwick of Guernsey; The Bailiwick of Jersey; Anguilla; British Virgin Islands; Cayman Islands; Gibraltar; Montserrat; St. Helena, Ascension, and Tristan da Cunha (renamed St Helena and Dependencies in 2009); and Turks and Caicos Islands. On 9 October 2001, the United Kingdom extended application of Protocol No. 1 to the Isle of Man.¹⁶ On 19 December 2012, the United Kingdom informed the Secretary General of the Council of Europe that it was ending its withdrawal of the application of article 3 of Protocol No. 1 to the Turks and Caicos Islands, 'such as that the Article 3 of the Protocol No. 1 will once again apply there'.

The Netherlands accompanied its instrument of ratification of the Protocol with a declaration respecting application to Surinam and the Netherlands Antilles. It has not applied to Surinam since it became independent on 25 November 1975. In 1985, the Netherlands informed the Secretary General of the Council of Europe that the island of Aruba, which was a part of the Netherlands Antilles, would obtain 'internal autonomy' on 1 January 1986, although it would remain part of the Kingdom of the Netherlands. Consequently, Protocol No. 1 would henceforth apply to the Netherlands, the Netherlands Antilles, and Aruba.¹⁷

At the time of its ratification of Protocol No. 1, France declared that it was to apply 'to the whole territory of the Republic, having due regard, where the overseas territories are concerned, to local requirements, as mentioned in Article 63 of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms'.

Further reading

Michael Wood, 'Premier Protocole Additionnel, Article 4', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 1021–2.

¹⁵ Gillow v. the United Kingdom, 24 November 1986, § 62, Series A no. 109.

¹⁶ (2001) 44 YB 23 (Isle of Man).

¹⁷ (1986) 29 YB 4.

Article 5. Relationship to the Convention/Relations avec la Convention

As between the High Contracting Parties the provisions of Articles 1, 2, 3 and 4 of this Protocol shall be regarded as additional Articles to the Convention and all the provisions of the Convention shall apply accordingly.

Les Hautes Parties contractantes considéreront les articles 1, 2, 3 et 4 de ce protocole comme des articles additionnels à la Convention et toutes les dispositions de la Convention s'appliqueront en conséquence.

Introductory comments

Protocols to the Convention come in two varieties: additional and amending. An amending protocol changes the Convention and can only enter into force when it has been accepted by all States Parties. An additional protocol, on the other hand, applies only to those States that have accepted it. Article 5 confirms that Protocol No. 1 is an additional protocol.

Drafting of the provision

Article 1 of the draft Protocol prepared for the February 1951 meeting of the Committee of Experts by the United Kingdom stated: 'Section I of the present Protocol shall be considered to have been added to Section I of the Convention.'¹ Section I of the Protocol consisted of three articles, corresponding to what became articles 1, 2, and 3 in the final version of the Protocol. This provision was substantially revised by the Committee of Experts at its April 1951 meeting: 'This Protocol shall form an integral part of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms signed at Rome on 4th November 1950 (hereinafter referred to as "the Convention").'² At the same time, the United Kingdom presented a very elaborate series of provisions governing the status of declarations respecting the jurisdiction of the European Commission and the Court, as well as distinct texts governing denunciation and reservations.³

In the text of the draft Protocol prepared by the Committee of Experts at its June 1951 session, a new provision appeared, as article 5: 'This protocol shall form an integral part of the Convention.'⁴ This provision was significantly revised by the Ministers' Advisers as a result of their July 1951 meeting: 'As between the High Contracting Parties the provisions

¹ Draft Protocol extending Section I of the Convention (14 February 1951), Doc. CM/WP 1 (51) 23, p. 1, CM/WP VI (51) 1, p. 1, VII TP 188-91. Also Proposal of the United Kingdom Delegation, Doc. CM/WP VI (51) 12, A 4387, VII TP 234-43, at pp. 234-5.

² Revised version, Doc. CM/WP VI (51) 9, A 4405, VII TP 228-33.

³ Proposal of the United Kingdom Delegation, Doc. CM/WP VI (51) 12, A 4387, VII TP 234-43.

⁴ Report of the Committee of Experts to the Committee of Ministers (6 June 1951), Doc. CM/WP VI (51) 20 final, Appendix, VII TP 300-9, at pp. 306-7.

of Articles 1, 2 3 and 4 of this Protocol shall be regarded as additional Articles to the Convention and all provisions of the Convention shall apply accordingly.⁵

The text proposed by the Advisers was included in the draft Protocol adopted in August 1951 by the Committee of Ministers. The draft then returned to the Consultative Assembly for its opinion. The Secretariat General prepared a Commentary on the draft Protocol, where it was explained succinctly that '[t]his Article incorporates in the Protocol by reference the general provisions of the Convention itself'.⁶ The Legal Committee of the Consultative Assembly had no difficulty with the provision.⁷

The heading 'Relationship to the Convention' was added by Protocol No. 11.⁸

Analysis and interpretation

For States Parties to Protocol No. 1, article 5 confirms that its provisions become an 'integral part' of the Convention.⁹ According to the Grand Chamber, 'the Convention and its Protocols must be read as a whole, and interpreted in such a way as to promote internal consistency and harmony between their various provisions'.¹⁰

Questions have been raised about whether denunciation of the Convention, authorized by article 58 of the Convention, automatically results in denunciation of Protocol No. 1 (or, for that matter, any other protocol to the Convention that has been accepted by the State Party).¹¹ When Greece denounced the European Convention, in 1969, it also denounced Protocol No. 1.

Further reading

Pierre-Henri Imbert, 'Premier Protocole Additionnel, Article 5', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, p. 1023.

⁵ Recommendations of the Ministers' Advisers relating to the Agenda for the Session (1 August 1951), Doc. CM (51) 64 rev., A 5578 VII TP 326–33, at pp. 332–3.

⁶ Commentary by the Secretariat General on the Draft Protocol (18 September 1951), Doc. AS/JA (3) 13, pp. 2–4, VIII TP 4–17, at pp. 8–11.

⁷ Minutes of the Meeting of 1 October 1951 [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions of the Consultative Assembly], Doc. AS/JA (3) PV 3, p. 2, VIII TP 16–19, at pp. 18–21.

⁸ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 4(a).

⁹ J.W. Fawcett, The Application of the European Convention on Human Rights, Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1987, p. 420.

¹⁰ Marguš v. Croatia [GC], no. 455/10, § 128, 27 May 2014; Austin and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], nos 39692/09, 40713/09, and 41008/09, § 54, ECHR 2012; Sec and Others v. the United Kingdom [GC], nos 65731/01 and 65900/01, § 48, ECHR 2006-VI.

¹¹ Pierre-Henri Imbert, 'Article 65', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 943–56, at pp. 946–9.

Article 6. Signature and ratification/Signature et ratification

This Protocol shall be open for signature by the members of the Council of Europe, who are the signatories of the Convention; it shall be ratified at the same time as or after the ratification of the Convention. It shall enter into force after the deposit of ten instruments of ratification. As regards any signatory ratifying subsequently, the Protocol shall enter into force at the date of the deposit of its instrument of ratification.

The instruments of ratification shall be deposited with the Secretary General of the Council of Europe, who will notify all members of the names of those who have ratified.

Le présent protocole est ouvert à la signature des membres du Conseil de l'Europe, signataires de la Convention; il sera ratifié en même temps que la Convention ou après la ratification de celle-ci. Il entrera en vigueur après le dépôt de dix instruments de ratification. Pour tout signataire qui le ratifiera ultérieurement, le protocole entrera en vigueur dès le dépôt de l'instrument de ratification.

Les instruments de ratification seront déposés près le Secrétaire Général du Conseil de l'Europe qui notifiera à tous les membres les noms de ceux qui l'auront ratifié.

Introductory comments

This article is closely related to article 59 of the Convention, also entitled 'Signature and ratification'.

Drafting of the provision

The draft Protocol prepared for the February 1951 meeting of the Committee of Experts by the United Kingdom included a provision dealing with signature and ratification:

1. The present Protocol shall be open for signature by such Members of the Council of Europe as have signed the Convention. This Protocol shall be ratified. It shall come into force upon a ratification by ten members and, as regards any member ratifying subsequently, upon ratification.
2. The Secretary-General of the Council of Europe shall notify all Members of the Council of Europe of the entry into force of this Protocol and the names of the Members which have ratified it.¹

This text was substantially revised by the Committee of Experts at its April 1951 meeting. On the condition that the Convention itself had entered into force, the Protocol would enter into force for a ratifying State without any requirement of a minimum number of ratifications for entry into force:

1. This Protocol shall be open for signature by such Members of the Council of Europe, who are the signatories of the Convention. This Protocol shall be ratified at the same time as the Convention or thereafter. It shall enter into force for each member at the time of deposit of its instrument of ratification, on condition that the Convention itself has then entered into force.

¹ Draft Protocol extending Section I of the Convention (14 February 1951), Doc. CM/WP 1 (51) 23, p. 1, CM/WP VI (51) 1, p. 1, VII TP 188-91.

2. The instruments of ratification shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe, who will notify all members of the names of those who have ratified.²

The first paragraph of the April text was revised by the Committee of Experts at its June 1951 session. It made entry into force conditional on ten ratifications of the Protocol. There was no need to specify the prior entry into force of the Convention, given that States could not ratify the Protocol unless they had also ratified the Convention:

This Protocol shall be open for signature by the Members of the Council of Europe, who are the signatories of the Convention; it shall be ratified at the same time as or after the ratification of the Convention. It shall enter into force after the deposit of ten instruments of ratification. As regards any signatory ratifying subsequently, the Protocol shall enter into force at the date of the deposit of its instrument of ratification.³

The text was included in the draft Protocol adopted in August 1951 by the Committee of Ministers. The Legal Committee of the Consultative Assembly approved of the text.⁴

The heading 'Signature and ratification' was added by Protocol No. 11.⁵

Analysis and interpretation

The signature and ratification provision of Protocol No. 1 deals with some of the issues that also arise with respect to article 59 of the Convention. The reader is referred to the relevant chapter in this Commentary. However, there are also some differences. In particular, article 6 of Protocol No. 1 addresses the subsidiary nature of the instrument, in the sense that it can only be signed and ratified by a State that is also taking or has already taken this step with respect to the Convention itself. Accordingly, it was impossible for the Protocol to fulfil the condition of entry into force of ten ratifications without this also being the case for the Convention. In fact, the Convention entered into force a year before Protocol No. 1. Like the Convention, Protocol No. 1 enters into force for ratifying States immediately and without any grace period.

Protocol No. 1 was opened for signature on 20 March 1952. All of the Member States of the Council of Europe signed the Protocol on that date. The United Kingdom was the first State to ratify Protocol No. 1, followed by Norway, Saarland,⁶ Ireland, Greece, Denmark, Sweden, Iceland, Luxembourg, and Turkey. It entered into force on 18 May 1954. All States Parties to the Convention have signed Protocol No. 1. Monaco, which signed on 5 October 2004, and Switzerland, which signed on 19 May 1976, have yet to

² Revised version, Doc. CM/WP VI (51) 9, A 4405, VII TP 228–33.

³ Report of the Committee of Experts to the Committee of Ministers (6 June 1951), Doc. CM/WP VI (51) 20 final, Appendix, VII TP 300–9, at pp. 306–7.

⁴ Minutes of the Meeting of 1 October 1951 [of the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions of the Consultative Assembly], Doc. AS/JA (3) PV 3, p. 2, VIII TP 16–19, at pp. 20–1; Report on the Draft Protocol to the Convention presented by the Committee on Legal and Administrative Questions, Doc. CA no. 81, VIII TP 28–37, at pp. 36–7. See also Commentary by the Secretariat General on the Draft Protocol (18 September 1951), Doc. AS/JA (3) 13, pp. 2–4, VIII TP 4–17, at pp. 16–17.

⁵ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 4(a).

⁶ With respect to signature of the Protocol by the Saar, as well as to the use of the terms 'signatory Governments' and 'High Contracting Parties', the German federal government raised objections concerning the position of the Saar in the field of international law. See Report of the Committee of Experts to the Committee of Ministers (6 June 1951), Doc. CM/WP VI (51) 20 (final), VII TP 301–7.

ratify Protocol No. 1. When the Council of Europe was enlarged during the 1990s with the membership of many States from Central and Eastern Europe, ratification of Protocol No. 1 within a year of becoming a member of the organization was one of the undertakings made by new Member States.⁷

The final paragraph of article 6 concerns the role of the depositary. This text is rather more summary than the corresponding provision in article 59 of the Convention.

Further reading

Pierre-Henri Imbert, 'Premier Protocole Additionnel, Article 6', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 1025–6.

⁷ E.g., Application by Ukraine for membership of the Council of Europe, Opinion 190 (1995), para. 12.1; Application by Russia for membership of the Council of Europe, Opinion 193 (1996), para. 10.1; Application by Croatia for membership of the Council of Europe, Opinion 195 (1996), para. 9.2.

... ..
... ..
... ..
... ..
... ..

... ..
... ..
... ..
... ..
... ..

... ..
... ..
... ..
... ..
... ..

... ..
... ..
... ..
... ..
... ..

... ..
... ..
... ..
... ..
... ..

... ..
... ..
... ..
... ..
... ..

PART FOUR

PROTOCOL NO. 4 TO THE CONVENTION
FOR THE PROTECTION OF HUMAN RIGHTS AND FUNDAMENTAL FREEDOMS, SECURING CERTAIN RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS OTHER THAN THOSE ALREADY INCLUDED IN THE CONVENTION AND IN THE FIRST
PROTOCOL THERETO

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
 DIVISION OF THE PHYSICAL SCIENCES
 DEPARTMENT OF CHEMISTRY
 5712 S. UNIVERSITY AVENUE
 CHICAGO, ILLINOIS 60637
 TEL: 773-936-3700
 FAX: 773-936-3701
 WWW: WWW.CHEM.UCHICAGO.EDU

Preamble/Préambule

The Governments signatory hereto, being Members of the Council of Europe,

Being resolved to take steps to ensure the collective enforcement of certain rights and freedoms other than those already included in Section I of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms signed at Rome on 4th November 1950 (hereinafter referred to as the 'Convention') and in Articles 1 to 3 of the First Protocol to the Convention, signed at Paris on 20th March 1952,

Have agreed as follows:

Les gouvernements signataires, membres du Conseil de l'Europe,

Résolus à prendre des mesures propres à assurer la garantie collective de droits et libertés autres que ceux qui figurent déjà dans le titre I de la Convention de sauvegarde des Droits de l'Homme et des Libertés fondamentales, signée à Rome le 4 novembre 1950 (ci-après dénommée «la Convention») et dans les articles 1 à 3 du premier Protocole additionnel à la Convention, signé à Paris le 20 March 1952,

Sont convenus de ce qui suit:

Introductory comments

Like the Convention itself, each of the additional Protocols begins with a preamble. The Convention's Preamble is relatively lengthy, with provisions clearly intended to frame the substantive provisions of the treaty. Indeed, Protocol No. 15 to the Convention actually amends the Preamble of the Convention, adding two paragraphs. In the case of the protocols, the preambles tend to be more perfunctory. It seems this has been driven by a concern that innovation in the preambles may complicate their interpretation as well as that of the Convention itself. Moreover, because the Preamble is deemed to be additional to the Convention itself, as a result of article 6 of Protocol No. 4, the Preamble of the Convention also applies to the provisions of the Protocol.

Article 31 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties sets out, as the 'general rule' for the interpretation of treaties: 'The context for the purpose of the interpretation of a treaty shall comprise, in addition to the text, including its preamble . . .'¹ Although the Vienna Convention was drafted many years after the European Convention, and it is not binding upon all States Parties because it has not been ratified by them, the European Court has nevertheless made reference to its provisions on interpretation on many occasions.² Indeed, noting the provision in the Vienna Convention, it has described the preamble as being 'generally very useful for the determination of the "object" and "purpose" of the instrument to be construed'.³

¹ Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, (1980) 1155 UNTS 331, art. 2.

² Golder v. the United Kingdom, 21 February 1975, § 29, Series A no. 18; Johnston and Others v. Ireland, 18 December 1986, §§ 51 et seq., Series A no. 112; Lithgow and Others v. the United Kingdom, 8 July 1986, §§ 114 and 117, Series A no. 102; Witold Litwa v. Poland, no. 26629/95, paras 57–59, ECHR 2000-III; Banković and Others v. Belgium and Others (dec.) [GC], no. 52207/99, §§ 16–17, ECHR 2001-XII; Mamatkulov and Askarov v. Turkey [GC], nos 46827/99 and 46951/99, ECHR 2005-I; Sandi v. Italy [GC], no. 37201/06, § 61, ECHR 2008; Demir and Baykara v. Turkey [GC], no. 34503/97, § 65, ECHR 2008.

Drafting of the provision

The draft protocol prepared by the Consultative Assembly contained a fairly elaborate Preamble. The Consultative Assembly draft alluded to the Preamble of the Convention itself, noting that it was a 'first step' for the collective enforcement of fundamental rights and freedoms. The Assembly's draft also stated that it was '[t]aking account of the work being done at the United Nations to draw up an international covenant on civil and political rights'. Finally, it described the objective of the protocol as being to 'extend the collective guarantee provided by the Convention to other political rights which are also part of their common spiritual and legal heritage and their common conception of democracy'.⁴

Most of it was deleted by the Committee of Experts in favour of a succinct text modelled on that of Protocol No. 1. The Committee was concerned that if the preambles of the two Protocols differed too widely 'for no good reason' the consequence might be difficulties in the interpretation of the two instruments. Members of the Committee also expressed doubts about a reference to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights given the absence of any such mention in the Preambles to the Convention and Protocol No. 1.⁵

The heading 'Preamble' was added by Protocol No. 11.⁶

Analysis and interpretation

In its use of the phrase 'to take steps to ensure the collective enforcement of certain rights and freedoms', the laconic Preamble of Protocol No. 4 references recital 5 of the Preamble to the Convention that states: 'Being resolved, as the governments of European countries which are like-minded and have a common heritage of political traditions, ideals, freedom and the rule of law, to take the first steps for the collective enforcement of certain of the rights stated in the Universal Declaration.' Unlike Protocol No. 1, where the additional rights had in fact been proclaimed in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, two of the four new rights set out in Protocol No. 4 do not derive directly from that instrument. The prohibition of imprisonment for debt, set out in article 1 of the Protocol, is not enshrined in the Declaration. It constitutes article 11 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights; it was the draft of that instrument that inspired the Committee of Ministers to add such a right to the Convention system. The text on collective ³ Golder v. the United Kingdom, 21 February 1975, § 34, Series A no. 18.

⁴ Recommendation 234 (1960), Draft for a Second Protocol to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. See Preparatory Work on the Draft Second Protocol to the Convention on Human Rights, Appended to Recommendation 234 (1960) of the Consultative Assembly, Preamble to the Draft, Memorandum by the Directorate of Human Rights, DH/Exp (60) 10, 26 October 1960.

⁵ Memorandum of the Human Rights Directorate on the Committee's third meeting, 2 to 11 October 1961, DH/Exp (61) 35 Final, 17 October 1961, para. 8; Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 4, para. 1.

⁶ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(5)(a).

expulsion of aliens, in article 4 of the Protocol, has no equivalent in any of the contemporary human rights instruments, although it may be viewed as a corollary of article 3, which is derived from article 13(2) of the Universal Declaration.

Further reading

M. Sand, 'Le quatrième protocole additionnel à la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme', [1964] Annuaire français de droit international 569.

Article 1. Prohibition of imprisonment for debt/Interdiction de l'emprisonnement pour dette

No one shall be deprived of his liberty merely on the ground of inability to fulfil a contractual obligation.

Nul ne peut être privé de sa liberté pour la seule raison qu'il n'est pas en mesure d'exécuter une obligation contractuelle.

Introductory comments

Although it was practised for many centuries,¹ the phenomenon of imprisonment for debt has virtually disappeared in modern times. At the age of twelve, Charles Dickens underwent the grief and humiliation associated with his father's detention in the Marshalsea Prison for failure to pay debts. He wrote about the place in Little Dorrit.

The prohibition of imprisonment for debt is set out in article 11 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, where it is deemed a non-derogable norm. It was one of the innovations during the drafting of the Covenant, as there is no comparable provision in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Indeed, it seems that the issue did not even arise when the Universal Declaration of Human Rights was being drafted. Its inclusion in the Protocol is rather anachronistic and no violations of article 11 have ever been registered by the Convention organs.

Drafting of the provision

Inclusion of a provision dealing with imprisonment for debt had been briefly considered at the time the Convention was being adopted, in 1949 and 1950. The provision that became article 11 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights already appeared in the 1949 draft examined by the United Nations Commission on Human Rights.² The Committee of Ministers instructed its Committee of Experts to give 'due attention' to the draft Covenant.³ A document prepared by the Secretariat-General of the Council of Europe to assist the Committee of Experts said: 'To the knowledge of the Secretary-General, and subject to correction, imprisonment for the non-payment of debts between individuals does not exist in any European country.'⁴ The proposal returned in the Committee of Experts in early 1950. The British representative, Sir Oscar Dowson, urged that such a text be inserted. He actually proposed what was at the time the current draft in the United Nations Covenant: 'No one shall be imprisoned merely on the grounds

¹ Jay Cohen, 'The History of Imprisonment for Debt and its Relation to the Development of Discharge in Bankruptcy', (1982) 3 Journal of Legal History 153; Richard Ford, 'Imprisonment for Debt', (1926) 25 Michigan Law Review 24.

² Report of the Fifth Session of the Commission on Human Rights to the Economic and Social Council, UN Doc. E/1371(Supp.), p. 19.

³ Letter addressed on 18 November 1949 by the Secretary General to the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Member States, Ref. D 26/2/49, II TP 302-5.

⁴ Preparatory Report by the Secretariat-General concerning a Preliminary Draft Convention to Provide a Collective Guarantee of Human Rights, Doc. B 22, III TP 2-37, at pp. 18-19.

of inability to fulfil a contractual obligation.⁵ The provision was not reproduced in the proposals submitted by the United Kingdom to the second session of the Committee of Experts in 1950,⁶ and nothing further appears on this subject in the travaux préparatoires of the Convention.

In 1958, when the Legal Committee of the Consultative Assembly began consideration of an additional protocol, the list of rights that might be included began with freedom from imprisonment on the ground of inability to fulfil a contractual obligation. As the Preliminary Report of the Committee noted, it was already included in the draft United Nations Covenant.⁷ The rapporteur, Hermod Lannung, argued that the text would strengthen the provisions of article 5 of the Convention. He explained that the provision would only apply to contractual obligations and not to all civil debts, nor to cases of fraudulent non-performance. Accordingly, it would cover 'neither public obligations (fiscal, military etc.) nor civil obligations imposed by statute or court order (e.g. maintenance obligations of parents or spouses, whether divorced or not, a judgment debt for damages, etc.).'⁸ The text adopted by the Consultative Assembly replicated verbatim the draft provision in the United Nations Covenant: 'No-one shall be imprisoned merely on the ground of inability to fulfil a contractual obligation.'⁹

The Committee of Experts decided to depart slightly from the initial draft of the Consultative Assembly. It proposed that the word 'imprisoned' be replaced with 'deprived of his liberty' so as to cover loss of liberty for any length of time, whether by detention or arrest. The Committee of Experts recognized that the proposed wording was designed to reinforce the terms of article 5 of the Convention. Article 5(1) uses the expression 'no-one shall be deprived of his liberty'. Moreover, the term 'deprived' covers arrest as well as detention. For that reason, it was therefore thought to be more precise. The Committee of Experts noted that article 5(4) of the Convention used the phrase 'person deprived of his liberty by arrest or detention'.¹⁰

The Explanatory Report confirms that the text is intended to relate to failure to fulfil contractual obligations of any kind and not only money debts. Thus, it may apply to 'non-delivery, non-performance or non-forbearance'. Nevertheless, the obligation must arise from a contract and not from legislation in public or private law.¹¹

⁵ Amendments to Article 2 of the Recommendation of the Consultative Assembly proposed by the Expert of the United Kingdom, Doc. A 798, III TP 204-7.

⁶ Amendments to Articles 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 8, and 9 of the Committee's Preliminary Draft Proposal by the Expert of the United Kingdom, Doc. CM/WP 1 (50) 2, A 915, III TP 280-9.

⁷ Preliminary Report by M. Lannung, Rapporteur, AS/Jur XII (10) 1, 21 August 1958; Minutes of the meeting [of the Legal Committee, Consultative Assembly], held on 9 and 10 June 1958, AS/Jur (10) PV 2 rev., 22 September 1958; Minutes of the meeting [of the Legal Committee, Sub-Committee No. 12 (Human Rights), Consultative Assembly], held on Tuesday 16 September, 1958, AS/Jur XII (10) PV 1, 7 October 1958.

⁸ Second Protocol to the Convention on Human Rights, Second Preliminary Report presented by M. Lannung, Rapporteur, AS/Jur XII (10) 3, 10 November 1958; Second Protocol to the Convention on Human Rights, Third Report presented by M. Lannung, Rapporteur, AS/Jur XII (11) 1, 8 June 1959.

⁹ Recommendation 234 (1960), Draft for a Second Protocol to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms; Preparatory work on the Draft Second Protocol to the Convention on Human Rights, appended to Recommendation 234 (1960) of the Consultative Assembly. III. Article 1 of the Draft—Contractual Obligations—Memorandum presented by the Directorate of Human Rights, DH/Exp (60) 11 and Appendix 1 to VI, 27 October 1960.

¹⁰ Memorandum by the Human Rights Directorate on the proceedings of the Committee's first meeting, 7 to 11 November 1960, DX/Exp (60) 27, 10 February 1961. Also Memorandum by the Human Rights Directorate on the Committee's second meeting, 24 to 29 April 1961, DH/Exp (61) 15, 7 August 1961, paras 11-14.

¹¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 4, paras 3-4.

According to the Committee of Experts, the provision 'aimed at prohibiting, as contrary to the concept of human liberty and dignity, any deprivation of liberty for the sole reason that the individual had not the material means to fulfil his contractual obligations'. But it said that if the inability to fulfil a contractual obligation was accompanied by some other factor, such as malicious or fraudulent intent, or deliberate refusal to fulfil an obligation, or inability due to negligence, the right does not apply. For this reason, the Committee thought that the provision could not be interpreted as a prohibition on deprivation of liberty as a penalty 'for a proved criminal offence or as a necessary preventive measure before trial for such an offence, even if criminal law recognised as an offence an act or omission which was at the same time a failure to fulfil a contractual obligation'. It gave some examples of situations where law would not be in conflict with the provision: a person who orders food and drink in a cafe or restaurant and leaves without paying for them, knowing beforehand that he or she cannot pay; an individual, through negligence, fails to supply goods to the army when under contract to do so; someone preparing to leave the country to avoid meeting his commitments. A suggestion to replace the word 'contractual' with 'civil' was rejected.¹²

The heading 'Prohibition of imprisonment for debt' was added according to the provisions of Protocol No. 11.¹³

Analysis and interpretation

The Court has said that article 1 of Protocol No. 4 'completes' article 5(1) of the Convention.¹⁴ When inclusion of the right was being considered by the Consultative Assembly, in 1958 and 1959, some members did not think the provision to be very useful because, they said, imprisonment for debt was no longer practised in Europe. Indeed, the Court's database of case law does not identify a single finding of a violation of article 1 by either the Court or the Commission. Applications based upon article 1 of Protocol No. 4 have often been rejected summarily, without discussion.¹⁵ The Commission dismissed a complaint by an applicant who was required to post a bond (une caution), failing which he would be arrested. It said the obligation to provide the bond resulted from a judicial decision and not a contractual obligation.¹⁶ Similarly, it held that the French procedure of 'contrainte par corps', whereby payment of a fine could be compelled by threat of imprisonment, did not fall within the scope of article 1 of Protocol No. 4, which dealt with civil matters and not with criminal or penal law.¹⁷ In a Polish case, it dismissed the application of a man charged with 'abuse of property' who was detained pending trial at ¹² Examination of the Draft, Article 1, DH/Exp. (61) 3, 26 April 1961.

¹³ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(5)(a).

¹⁴ Luordo v. Italy (dec.), no. 32190/96, 23 May 2002.

¹⁵ E.g., Ursu v. Romania, no. 21949/04, § 43, 4 June 2013; Miulescu v. Romania, no. 35493/06, 9 April 2013.

¹⁶ Raimondo v. Italy, no. 12954/87, § 4, Commission decision of 6 December 1991.

¹⁷ Hunter v. France, no. 22247/93, § 2, Commission decision of 22 February 1995. Also Jamil v. France, no. 15917/89, § 51, Commission decision of 10 March 1994; Barajas v. France, no. 26241/95, Commission decision of 12 April 1996; Mattelin v. France, no. 22238/93, Commission decision of 9 April 1996; J.-M. B. v. France, no. 26198/95, Commission decision of 15 May 1996; Bitti v. France, no. 28645/95, Commission decision of 15 May 1996; Ninin v. France, no. 27373/95, Commission decision of 15 May 1996.

the request of the public prosecutor.¹⁸ It noted that article 1 did not apply to the case where an individual was detained for non-payment of support for his family.¹⁹

According to the European Commission, article 1 of Protocol No. 4 does not prohibit imprisonment of a person 'if there are reasons apart from the material incapacity to fulfil contractual obligations, e.g. if the person concerned deliberately refuses to fulfil an obligation'.²⁰ The Court has held that 'deprived of his liberty' does not encompass measures restricting freedom of movement, such as the order of a bankruptcy court not to change one's residence without judicial authorization.²¹

Article 11 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights is one of a handful of rights that are not subject to derogation.²² It is in august company there, alongside such fundamental rights as the right to life and the prohibition of torture and slavery. It does not seem that consideration was ever given to including article 1 of Protocol No. 4 in the short list of non-derogable rights set out in article 15(2) of the European Convention.

Further reading

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, p. 690.

Grabenwarter, European Convention, pp. 410.

Harris et al., Law of the European Convention, p. 735.

Jacques Mourgeon, 'Protocole No 4, Article 1', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, p. 1041-2.

Jeroen Schokkenbroek, 'Prohibition of Deprivation of Liberty on the Ground of Inability to Fulfil a Contractual Obligation (Article 1 of Protocol No. 4)', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 937-8.

¹⁸ Pietrzyk v. Poland, no. 28346/95, Commission decision of 26 February 1997.

¹⁹ R.R. v. Italy (dec.), no. 42191/02, 2 December 2004.

²⁰ Christakis v. Cyprus, no. 34399/97, Commission decision of 21 May 1997, citing X v. Federal Republic of Germany, no. 5025/71, Commission decision of 18 December 1971, (1971) 14 YB 692.

²¹ A.Q. v. Italy (dec.), no. 44994/98, 14 March 2002.

²² International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, (1976) 999 UNTS 171, art. 4(2).

Article 2. Freedom of movement/Liberté de circulation

1. Everyone lawfully within the territory of a State shall, within that territory, have the right to liberty of movement and freedom to choose his residence.

2. Everyone shall be free to leave any country, including his own.

3. No restrictions shall be placed on the exercise of these rights other than such as are in accordance with law and are necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security or public safety, for the maintenance of order public, for the prevention of crime, for the protection of health or morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others.

4. The rights set forth in paragraph 1 may also be subject, in particular areas, to restrictions imposed in accordance with law and justified by the public interests in a democratic society.

1. Quiconque se trouve régulièrement sur le territoire d'un État a le droit d'y circuler librement et d'y choisir librement sa résidence.

2. Toute personne est libre de quitter n'importe quel pays, y compris le sien.

3. L'exercice de ces droits ne peut faire l'objet d'autres restrictions que celles qui, prévues par la loi, constituent des mesures nécessaires, dans une société démocratique, à la sécurité nationale, à la sûreté publique, au maintien de l'ordre public, à la prévention des infractions pénales, à la protection de la santé ou de la morale, ou à la protection des droits et libertés d'autrui.

4. Les droits reconnus au paragraphe 1er peuvent également, dans certaines zones déterminées, faire l'objet de restrictions qui, prévues par la loi, sont justifiées par l'intérêt public dans une société démocratique.

Introductory comments

As Protocol No. 4 was being negotiated, a wall was erected dividing one of Europe's great cities. Freedom of movement, already prohibited by law, was being inhibited with a massive barrier of concrete, barbed wire, and lethal gunfire.¹ Three decades later, the Berlin Wall came down when a public official announced that residents of the German Democratic Republic had 'freedom of movement'. In a very general sense, there has probably never been so much freedom of movement in Europe as there is today nor has the population of the continent ever been so mobile. Europeans often travel from State to State without showing identity documents. Frequently, they establish residences in other States without any particular formalities. Technology has also made its contribution in the form of low-cost air travel and high-speed trains.

This was unheard of at the time when Protocol No. 4 to the European Convention was negotiated, even in Western Europe. In Central and Eastern Europe, of course, there were huge restrictions on both internal and external mobility until the end of the Cold War. That is not to say that there are no problems in the enforcement of the rights set out in article 2 of Protocol No. 4. Measures such as Security Council-imposed travel bans, taken in the name of counterterrorism, have introduced new restrictions on freedom of movement. According to an Issue Paper published by the Commissioner on Human Rights, 'we are seeing the development of policies which mimic Cold War obstacles to movement of people but which are being put into place at the behest of those states which had been among the greatest critics of this practice by the Communist regimes'.² Nevertheless, very generally the landscape has undoubtedly been transformed for the better, and it is likely to continue to change in favour of still greater freedom in this area.

¹ Streletz, Kessler, and Krenz v. Germany [GC], nos 34044/96, 35532/97, and 44801/98, ECHR 2001-II.

Freedom of movement is enshrined in article 13 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights:

- (1) Everyone has the right to freedom of movement and residence within the borders of each state.
- (2) Everyone has the right to leave any country, including his own, and to return to his country.

The right did not appear in the drafts of the European Convention. Freedom of movement is recognized in article 12 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights:

1. Everyone lawfully within the territory of a State shall, within that territory, have the right to liberty of movement and freedom to choose his residence.
2. Everyone shall be free to leave any country, including his own.
3. The above-mentioned rights shall not be subject to any restrictions except those which are provided by law, are necessary to protect national security, public order (ordre public), public health or morals or the rights and freedoms of others, and are consistent with the other rights recognised in the present Covenant.
4. No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of the right to enter his own country.

The Universal Declaration of Human Rights also recognized a right of asylum. Article 14(1) states: 'Everyone has the right to seek and to enjoy in other countries asylum from persecution.' This right was never transposed into the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. Likewise, it is not found in the European Convention on Human Rights or its Protocols. The matter is addressed in part within the context of the 1951 Convention on the Status of Refugees³ and its Protocol.⁴ Despite the absence of a right of asylum as such, many provisions concerning the process of seeking asylum and the treatment of asylum seekers have been addressed within the framework of the European Convention on Human Rights.

Article 45 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union affirms 'freedom of movement and residence', specifying that it is reserved to a 'citizen of the Union'.

1. Every citizen of the Union has the right to move and reside freely within the territory of the Member States.
2. Freedom of movement and residence may be granted, in accordance with the Treaty establishing the European Community, to nationals of third countries legally resident in the territory of a Member State.

But freedom of movement also exists in much of the European Union as a result of the Schengen Agreement, adopted in 1985. It virtually eliminates border controls among European States, making it as easy to move from one country to another as it is to travel from one state to another in the United States. The Schengen zone is a territory of more than four million square kilometres with some 400 million residents.

² Commissioner on Human Rights, The Right to Leave a Country, Strasbourg: Council of Europe, 2013, p. 11.

³ (1951) 189 UNTS 137.

⁴ Protocol Relating to the Status of Refugees, (1967) 606 UNTS 267.

Drafting of the provision

In 1958, when the Legal Committee of the Consultative Assembly began consideration of an additional protocol, the list of rights that might be included contained freedom of movement, freedom to choose one's residence, freedom to emigrate, prohibition of arbitrary exile, and the right to enter one's own country. As the Committee's Report noted, these were already included in provisions of the draft United Nations Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.⁵ The relevant provision in the draft prepared by the Consultative Assembly was entitled 'Liberty of movement'. The first two paragraphs of the original draft article 2 proposed by the Consultative Assembly were modelled on the text in the draft Covenant, as the rapporteur explained. He said it had been re-worded in order to bring it into line with other provisions of the European Convention. Thus, the rights in question were defined in the first paragraph and then the permissible restrictions set out in the second.⁶ There were two small differences: the word 'lawfully' in paragraph 1 was replaced by 'legally', and the word 'country' in paragraph 2 was replaced by 'State'. The third paragraph, dealing with restrictions, was similar in content but somewhat more extensive in terms of allowable criteria: 'No restrictions shall be placed on the exercise of these rights other than such as are prescribed by law and constitute a measure which in a democratic society, is necessary for national security, public safety, economic welfare of the country, the maintenance of law and order, the prevention of crime and the protection of health or morals, or rights and freedoms of others.' The Legal Committee agreed that the draft 'would not in any way restrict the right of a court to order a person to leave his place of residence while his case was sub judice'.⁷ The Consultative Assembly dropped altogether the final paragraph 4 of the draft Covenant recognizing a right to enter one's own country.⁸

The Committee of Experts returned to the exact language of paragraph 1 of article 12 of the draft Covenant in the English version. In the French version, it replaced the word 'légalement' with 'régulièrement'. This was because 'in most States, the administrative authorities enjoy considerable discretionary powers enabling them to admit or refuse entry to foreigners and to control their stay'.⁹ It rejected a proposal to replace the words 'se trouve' with 'réside' in the French version and to insert the term 'residing' between the words 'lawfully' and 'within' in the English text. The consequence of such an amendment would have been to extend the protection of paragraph 1 to someone who was not permanently resident in the State but only passing through or temporarily living there. The Committee considered 'that an alien admitted under certain conditions of entry (not

⁵ Preliminary Report by M. Lannung, Rapporteur, AS/Jur XII (10) 1, 21 August 1958; Minutes of the meeting [of the Legal Committee, Consultative Assembly], held on 9 and 10 June 1958, AS/Jur (10) PV 2 rev., 22 September 1958; Minutes of the meeting [of the Legal Committee, Sub-Committee No. 12 (Human Rights), Consultative Assembly], held on Tuesday 16 September, 1958, AS/Jur XII (10) PV 1, 7 October 1958.

⁶ Report on the Second Protocol to the Convention on Human Rights, M. Lannung, Rapporteur, Doc. 1057, 17 November 1959.

⁷ Ibid.

⁸ Recommendation 234 (1960), Draft for a Second Protocol to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. See Preparatory work on the Draft Second Protocol to the Convention on Human Rights, appended to Recommendation 234 (1960) of the Consultative Assembly. IV. Article 2 of the Draft—Liberty of Movement—Memorandum by the Directorate of Human Rights, DH/Exp (60) 12 and Appendix I, II, 28 October 1960.

⁹ Memorandum by the Human Rights Directorate on the proceedings of the Committee's first meeting, 7 to 11 November 1960, DX/Exp (60) 27, 10 February 1961.

necessarily conditions about residence or movement) which he transgresses or fails to comply with, can no longer be regarded as being "lawfully" in the country'. The Committee also rejected a proposal to add 'of a Contracting party' after 'territory of a State'. Such language would have been superfluous because the Convention cannot bind a third State in any case, but the Explanatory Report says it was rejected 'on the ground that in a Human Rights Convention it was preferable from a psychological point of view to use words in their widest possible sense when laying down regulations equivalent to broad general principles of law'.¹⁰

In paragraph 2, the Committee of Experts replaced the word 'State' with 'country', rendering the text consistent with the equivalent provisions in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. The Committee said that it 'meant to give the greatest possible scope to the freedom to leave a region, whether or not it is a State; the Committee considered further that, from a psychological point of view, the notion of "country" was preferable to that of "State", as having deeper emotional implications'.¹¹ The Committee also thought it not impossible for a Court to have to rule on the legality of emigration of a person who had left the territory of a non-party State. It said that in such a case, 'it might be asked whether the court should not decide that reference to the law of the other State was authorised only insofar as that law did not prejudice the principle of freedom to leave a country'.¹²

Several modifications were made to the Consultative Assembly draft of article 3, providing for restrictions upon the application of the article as a whole. The Consultative Assembly draft already differed somewhat from article 12(3) of the International Covenant. The Committee of Experts opted for the expression 'in accordance with law', noting the similarity with the text of article 8(2) of the Convention and explaining that this was 'better' than the expression 'prescribed by law' found in articles 9(2), 10(2), and 11(2) of the Convention. In particular, the Committee of Experts noted that this covered 'administrative action, provided it were taken in accordance with internal legislation'.¹³ However, in the French version it retained the expression 'prévues par la loi' so as to avoid difficulties of interpretation that might arise if there was a departure from the standard phrase found in the Convention. The Committee of Experts changed the words 'and constitute a measure which, in a democratic society, is necessary for' to 'and are necessary in a democratic society in the interests of', making the paragraph more consistent with its counterparts in the Convention itself. Similarly, in the French version, the Committee changed 'constituent une mesure nécessaire' to 'constituent des mesures nécessaires'.

The Committee of Experts replaced the reference to 'law and order' in the English version with ordre public, set within inverted commas. The formulation is similar, but not identical, to article 12(3) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which uses the term 'public order (ordre public)', with the French in parentheses following the English term. The Explanatory Report refers to the Committee's view that 'the notion of "ordre public" should be understood in the broad sense in general use in continental countries'.¹⁴ A third change to paragraph 3 only concerned the French version. The ¹⁰ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 4, para. 9.

¹¹ Ibid., para. 10.

¹² Ibid., para. 11.

¹³ Ibid., para. 13.

¹⁴ Ibid., para. 16.

Committee of Experts preferred the expression 'prévention des infractions pénales' to 'prévention du crime'. To the suggestion that the provision also address the punishment of crime, the Committee felt this was covered by the notion of maintenance of 'ordre public'.¹⁵

With respect to the enumeration of legitimate purposes justifying a restriction on the rights in paragraphs 1 and 2, the Committee of Experts removed one of the grounds proposed by the Assembly, 'economic welfare of the country'.¹⁶ There was a division of opinion in the Committee, with one position advocating the total exclusion of economic welfare of the country and the other allowing it with respect to paragraph 1 but not paragraph 2.¹⁷ Ultimately, the first of the two approaches prevailed.¹⁸ Subsequently, the Committee of Experts decided to reconcile the two positions by adding a fourth paragraph for which there was no ancestor in the draft of the Consultative Assembly nor any equivalent in article 12 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights: 'The rights set forth in paragraph 1 may also be subject in particular areas to restrictions imposed in accordance with law and justified by the public interest in a democratic society.'¹⁹ According to the Explanatory Report: 'The term "area", as used in this article, does not refer to any definite geographical or administrative unit. The meaning of this provision is that the restrictions in question must be localised within a well-defined area.'²⁰

The heading 'Freedom of movement' was added in accordance with Protocol No. 11.²¹

Analysis and interpretation

Article 2 of Protocol No. 4 is intended to secure to any person the right to liberty of movement within a territory and the right to leave that territory. Thus, the Court has explained, 'freedom of movement prohibits any measure liable to infringe that right or to restrict the exercise thereof which is not "in accordance with the law" and does not satisfy the requirement of a measure which can be considered "necessary in a democratic society" in the pursuit of the legitimate aims' set out in paragraphs 3 and 4.²²

Article 2 of Protocol No. 4 is related to article 5(1) of the Convention to the extent that it concerns restrictions on the freedom movement of individuals. However, article 5(1) is not concerned with 'mere restrictions on liberty of movement'.²³ The distinction between

¹⁵ Ibid., para. 17.

¹⁶ Memorandum by the Human Rights Directorate on the Committee's second meeting, 24 to 29 April 1961, DH/Exp (61) 15, 7 August 1961, para. 28.

¹⁷ Memorandum of the Human Rights Directorate on the Committee's third meeting, 2 to 11 October 1961, DH/Exp (61) 35 Final, 17 October 1961, para. 18; Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 4, para. 15.

¹⁸ Text adopted by the majority in April 1961, DH/Exp (61) 33, 7 October 1961; Memorandum of the Human Rights Directorate on the Committee's third meeting, 2 to 11 October 1961, DH/Exp (61) 35 Final, 17 October 1961, paras 10–12.

¹⁹ Memorandum of the Human Rights Directorate on the Committee's third meeting, 2 to 11 October 1961, DH/Exp (61) 35 Final, 17 October 1961, para. 19; Memorandum of the Human Rights Directorate on the Committee's fourth meeting, 2 to 10 March 1962, DH/Exp/Misc (62) 11, 9 March 1962, para. 19.

²⁰ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 4, para. 18.

²¹ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(5)(a).

²² Diamante and Pellicioni v. San Marino, no. 32250/08, § 210, 27 September 2011; Baumann v. France, no. 33592/96, § 61, ECHR 2001-V (extracts).

²³ Engel and Others v. the Netherlands, 8 June 1976, § 38, Series A no. 22; Guzzardi v. Italy, 6 November 1980, § 92, Series A no. 39; Ashingdane v. the United Kingdom, 28 May 1985, § 41, Series A no. 93; Nada v.

deprivation of liberty, falling under article 5(1) of the Convention, and restriction on freedom of movement, coming within the ambit of article 2 of Protocol No. 4, is 'nonetheless merely one of degree or intensity, and not one of nature or substance'.²⁴ Admittedly, 'the process of classification into one or other of these categories sometimes proves to be no easy task in that some borderline cases are a matter of pure opinion'.²⁵ Several factors must be considered, such as the type, duration, effects, and manner of implementation of the measure in question.²⁶

Lawfully within the territory (art. 2(1))

The words 'lawfully within the territory' impose a condition for the application of the rights set out in article 2(1). Article 2(1) adds that the right to liberty of movement and freedom to choose the residence of a person 'lawfully within the territory' is only applicable 'within that territory'. This second criterion seems to be largely redundant. It is difficult to see in practice how it could be invoked and, in reality, it does not seem to have been addressed in any case law of the Convention organs. These restrictions on the rights set out in article 2(1) clearly apply to non-citizens, as they may be 'lawfully within the territory' even if they do not possess its citizenship.

In applying article 2, regard must be had to article 5(4) of the Protocol: 'The territory of any State to which this Protocol applies by virtue of ratification or acceptance by that State, and each territory to which this Protocol is applied by virtue of a declaration by that State under this Article, shall be treated as separate territories for the purpose of the references in Articles 2 and 3 to the territory of a State.'

The expression is subject to strict construction. In an application filed against Russia, a stateless person who was formerly a citizen of the Soviet Union was denied a residence permit. Before the Court, Russia argued that she could not avail of article 2(1) of Protocol No. 4 because she was not 'lawfully within the territory'. The Court found that there was no factual basis for Russia's objection.²⁷

Article 7(1) of Protocol No. 7 applies to persons who are 'lawfully resident' on the territory of a State Party. The concept is similar to 'lawfully on the territory' but it is obviously somewhat narrower. A traveller in transit may be 'lawfully on the territory' of a State without being 'lawfully resident'. The case law under article 7(1) of Protocol No. 7 is obviously relevant to the interpretation of article 2 of Protocol No. 4. Cases falling within the scope of article 7(1) of Protocol No. 7 are subsumed within article 2 of Protocol No. 4.

Freedom of movement (art. 2(1))

Paragraph 1 of article 2 of Protocol No. 4 recognizes the right to 'liberty of movement' to '[e]veryone lawfully within the territory of a State . . . within that territory'. The expression 'liberty of movement' is rephrased as 'freedom of movement' in the title of the provision that was added by Protocol No. 11. Restrictions on internal travel within European States

Switzerland [GC], no. 10593/08, § 225, ECHR 2012; Villa v. Italy, no. 19675/06, § 41, 20 April 2010; E.M.B. v. Romania, no. 4488/03, § 31, 13 November 2012.

²⁴ Villa v. Italy, no. 19675/06, § 41, 20 April 2010.

²⁵ Guazzardi v. Italy, 6 November 1980, § 93, Series A no. 39.

²⁶ Engel and Others v. the Netherlands, 8 June 1976, §§ 38–39, Series A no. 22.

²⁷ Tatishvili v. Russia, no. 1509/02, § 43, ECHR 2007-1.

are generally confined to a criminal law context, where they are imposed as a condition for interim release or, more unusually, as a form of sanction. According to the Convention organs, any 'measure by means of which an individual is dispossessed of an identity document such as, for example, a passport, undoubtedly amounts to an interference with the exercise of liberty of movement'.²⁸

The Grand Chamber has applied article 2 of Protocol No. 4 only once, and it did not provide any significant interpretative guidance on the provision in that case.²⁹ The applicant had been acquitted of criminal charges related to organized crime, but measures of supervision were imposed upon him nevertheless. These restricted his freedom of movement within the country. Amongst other things, he was required to reside in a specific town, could not leave his home without informing the authorities, he had to be at home at certain hours, and he had to report to the police regularly. The State justified this on the basis of family ties with known Mafia members, but the Grand Chamber said it could not see how 'the mere fact that the applicant's wife was the sister of a Mafia boss, since deceased, could justify such severe measures being taken against him in the absence of any other concrete evidence to show that there was a real risk that he would offend'. It said such restrictions on freedom of movement could not have been regarded as having been 'necessary in a democratic society' and concluded that there was a violation of article 2 of Protocol No. 4.³⁰

It is common in criminal proceedings for interim release or bail to include a requirement not to change residence. In principle, this amounts to an interference with the right to freedom of movement.³¹ Because of the nature of criminal proceedings, such a condition for interim release will generally meet the proportionality test. As the Court has explained, in criminal proceedings an obligation not to leave an area of residence is a proportionate restriction on an accused's liberty.³² Of course, the duration of the proceedings must be taken into account in assessing the proportionality of such measures, but the Court has found no violation of the Convention where such a restriction lasted for more than five years.³³ In another case, restrictions on movement that lasted between four and five years were not held to be contrary to article 2 of Protocol No. 2.³⁴

However, where an accused was being investigated for obstructing police at an unauthorized demonstration, restrictions on freedom of movement imposed with respect to criminal proceedings that lasted more than three years were found to be incompatible

²⁸ Baumann v. France, no. 33592/96, § 62, ECHR 2001-V. Also Nalbantski v. Bulgaria, no. 30943/04, § 61, 10 February 2011; M. v. Federal Republic of Germany, no. 10307/83, Commission decision of 6 March 1984, (1984) 27 YB 161, DR 37, p. 113; Peltonen v. Finland, no. 19583/92, Commission decision of 20 February 1995, DR 80-A, p. 38; Napijalo v. Croatia, no. 66485/01, § 69, 13 November 2003; Ignatov v. Russia, no. 27193/02, § 33, 24 May 2007; Soltysyak v. Russia, no. 4663/05, § 37, 10 February 2011; Barrik v. Russia, no. 55565/00, § 36, ECHR 2006-XV; Timishev v. Russia (dec.), nos 55762/00 and 55974/00, 30 March 2004.

²⁹ Labita v. Italy [GC], no. 26772/95, §§ 196–197, ECHR 2000-IV. In Assanidze v. Georgia [GC], no. 71503/01, § 194, ECHR 2004-II, it found it unnecessary to pronounce itself on an alleged violation of article 2 of Protocol No. 4. In Nada v. Switzerland [GC], no. 10593/08, ECHR 2012, it did not apply Protocol No. 4, which had not been ratified by Switzerland: see § 225.

³⁰ Labita v. Italy [GC], no. 26772/95, §§ 196–197, ECHR 2000-IV.

³¹ Antonovkov and Others v. Ukraine, no. 14183/02, § 52, 22 November 2005; Raimondo v. Italy, 22 February 1994, § 39, Series A no. 281-A; Hannak v. Austria, no. 17208/90, Commission decision of 13 October 1993; Hajibeyli v. Azerbaijan, no. 16528/05, § 58, 10 July 2008.

³² Antonovkov and Others v. Ukraine, no. 14183/02, § 61, 22 November 2005.

³³ Ibid., § 64.

³⁴ Fedorov and Fedorova v. Russia, no. 31008/02, §§ 32–47, 13 October 2005.

with article 2 of Protocol No. 2. The Court considered that the process was 'unreasonably lengthy while the case did not appear to be particularly complex' and found it 'difficult to see, in the circumstances of the present case, any plausible justification for the continued restriction of the applicant's freedom of movement, especially without any review of the necessity for it either when the investigation was suspended or when the applicant specifically complained of the restriction'.³⁵ In another case of restriction on movement lasting more than ten years respecting a 'medium grave offence', the Court said 'its mere duration could be sufficient to conclude that it was disproportionate'.³⁶

The Court has held that the requirement to report to the police a change of residence or a visit to family friends constitutes an interference with freedom of movement.³⁷ Even the refusal of domestic authorities to certify or register residency has been deemed an interference.³⁸ The existence of a mechanism by which permission can be granted for exceptions to such prohibitions is no answer to the charge that there is an infringement of freedom of movement.³⁹

In a case involving an order not to frequent certain areas in Amsterdam known for high levels of criminality, the government conceded that there was an infringement of freedom of movement. But the Court accepted its justification and considered the infringement to meet the proportionality test: the applicant had defied earlier prohibition orders, returning to the area to use hard drugs in public, and had been warned of a longer ban if he did not comply.⁴⁰

In a Russian case, the Court agreed that article 2 was engaged when traffic police at a checkpoint in the North Caucasus region prevented a person from crossing the administrative border between two regions of the country, Ingushetia and Kabardino-Balkaria.⁴¹ The Court did not rule 'on the general question whether the political and social situation in Ingushetia or Kabardino-Balkaria at the material time called for the introduction of checkpoints on a federal motorway and thorough identity checks', because the order establishing the checkpoint had not been properly formulated. Consequently, the restriction on freedom of movement was not 'in accordance with the law'.⁴²

Where a person would not return to her home country because there was an outstanding warrant, alleging 'she needs to hide and cannot leave the country hosting her for fear of being arrested', the Court noted that this was a 'personal choice of the applicant not to make use of her right to freedom of movement in order to avoid confronting the justice system'.⁴³

The Court declared manifestly unfounded an application by a Sikh who objected to removing his turban as part of the security control at a French airport, explaining that 'les contrôles de sécurité auxquels les passagers sont astreints dans les aéroports avant d'embarquer ne sont pas constitutifs de restrictions à la liberté de circulation'.⁴⁴

³⁵ Hajibeyli v. Azerbaijan, no. 16528/05, § 66, 10 July 2008.

³⁶ Ivanov v. Ukraine, no. 15007/02, § 96, 7 December 2006.

³⁷ Denizci and Others v. Cyprus, nos 25316-25321/94 and 27207/95, §§ 346-347 and 403-404, ECHR 2001-V; Bolat v. Russia, no. 14139/03, § 65, ECHR 2006-XI (extracts).

³⁸ Tatishvili v. Russia, no. 1509/02, §§ 45-46, ECHR 2007-I.

³⁹ Ivanov v. Ukraine, no. 15007/02, § 85, 7 December 2006. Also Rosengren v. Romania, no. 70786/01, §§ 38-41, 24 April 2008.

⁴⁰ Olivieira v. the Netherlands, no. 33129/96, § 65, ECHR 2002-IV.

⁴¹ Timishev v. Russia, nos 55762/00 and 55974/00, § 44, ECHR 2005-XII.

⁴² Ibid., §§ 47-49.

⁴³ E.M.B. v. Romania (dec.), no. 4488/03, §§ 32-33, 28 September 2010.

⁴⁴ Phull v. France (dec.), no. 35753/03, 11 January 2005.

Freedom to choose residence (art. 2(1))

Freedom to choose one's residence is presented in article 2(1) as a right distinct from 'liberty of movement'. The term 'residence' has not been interpreted in the case law. Obviously, it is related to the notion of 'home' that appears in article 8(1) of the Convention.

In several Italian cases, the Court has addressed judicial orders not to leave one's place of residence. The Luordo case involved bankruptcy proceedings, and the Court concluded that the restriction was disproportionate because of the duration of the proceedings, of fourteen years and eight months. In that case, there had been no indication of the desire of the applicant to leave the place of residence or of a refusal of permission to do so.⁴⁵

A Russian case involved a refusal to allow an individual to establish a residence in a 'closed administrative and territorial entity', so designated because of the presence of industrial enterprises specializing in development, production, storage, and disposal of weapons of mass destruction, the processing of radioactive materials, and military facilities. That this was an infringement upon freedom to choose one's residence had even been confirmed by the Russian courts.⁴⁶

Freedom to leave a country (art. 2(2))

'Everyone shall be free to leave any country, including his own', states article 2(2) of Protocol No. 4. The right to leave one's country is set out in several international instruments, including the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, both of them cited in the introduction to this chapter, but also the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination⁴⁷ and the Convention on the Rights of the Child.⁴⁸ The International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families affirms that '[m]igrant workers and members of their families shall be free to leave any State, including their State of origin'.⁴⁹

The right applies to 'everyone'. It applies even to a minor, despite the fact that the minor's right to leave the country may depend upon consent from persons exercising parental authority.⁵⁰ Article 2(2) does not refer to the country of nationality, but rather to 'his own' country. Clearly, the use of the word 'including' before 'his own' confirms the application of the right to leave with respect to non-citizens. Thus, 'his own' is an inclusive expression that merely adds to the breadth of the provision. Difficulties might arise if the Convention also included a right to return, along the lines of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. But there is no right of return in the European Convention, be it for non-citizens who have made the country their own or for citizens. In article 3 of Protocol No. 4, the expulsion of 'nationals' is prohibited, a norm that is related to but not identical with a right of return.

⁴⁵ Luordo v. Italy, no. 32190/96, § 96, ECHR 2003-IX. Also Forte v. Italy, no. 77986/01, §§ 30–32, 10 November 2005.

⁴⁶ Karpacheva and Karpachev v. Russia, no. 34861/04, §§ 25–27, 27 January 2011.

⁴⁷ International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, (1966) 660 UNTS 195, art. 5(2).

⁴⁸ Convention on the Rights of the Child, (1990) 1577 UNTS 3, art. 37(c), art. 10(2).

⁴⁹ (1990) 1577 UNTS 3.

⁵⁰ Diamante and Pelliccioni v. San Marino, no. 32250/08, § 204, 27 September 2011. See also Pini and Others v. Romania, nos 78028/01 and 78030/01, §§ 190–198, ECHR 2004-V (extracts).

In one decision, the Court spoke of 'a fundamental right, namely the applicant's freedom to come and go as he pleased'.⁵¹ An obligation to obtain authorization for each departure from a country 'does not correspond to the sense of the concept "freedom of movement"'.⁵² Indeed, the right to leave is really a specialized aspect of freedom of movement set out in article 2(1). Arguably, even if the Protocol did not provide explicitly for freedom to leave a country, it would almost certainly be considered to be implied by the liberty of movement set out in article 2(1). In the case of a French citizen convicted of a crime who was temporarily prevented from leaving the country after serving his sentence, the Court said there was a breach of article 2, without specifying the relevant paragraph. It held that the restriction on freedom of movement was disproportionate, 'particularly given that [the applicant] was forced to stay for all that period in a foreign country and was not allowed to leave even for a short period of time'.⁵³

The general considerations and approaches taken in the interpretation of article 2(1), and in particular the criteria considered when applying the restrictions authorized by article 2(3), are broadly similar when article 2(2) is applicable. The State must ensure 'that a restriction of an individual's right to leave his or her country is, from the outset and throughout its duration, justified and proportionate'.⁵⁴ For example, the Court has considered restrictions on foreign travel to be justified by the need to prevent convicted offenders from re-engaging in criminal conduct, and has allowed measures restricting movement on individuals suspected of being members of the Mafia even in the absence of a criminal conviction.⁵⁵

Problems in the implementation of this right generally arise as a result of some form of administrative or judicial order denying a person the right to leave the country, or simply by the refusal to issue the appropriate travel documents necessary for foreign travel. The right may be infringed by a formal travel ban as well as indirectly, by the seizure of a passport.⁵⁶ The international dimension may also arise when the right bearer has important ties with another country. In a Polish case, the Court noted that the applicant was a French national, with family, friends, and business, as well as a right to medical care, located in France. 'Such a situation cannot be compared to a restriction on an applicant's freedom of movement imposed on him or her in his or her own country', noted the Court.⁵⁷

Freedom to leave a country has been addressed in cases concerning criminal sanctions,⁵⁸ pending criminal proceedings,⁵⁹ bankruptcy,⁶⁰ taxation claims,⁶¹ judgment

⁵¹ Raimondo v. Italy, 22 February 1994, § 39, Series A no. 281-A.

⁵² Diamante and Pelliccioni v. San Marino, no. 32250/08, § 211, 27 September 2011; Ivanov v. Ukraine, no. 15007/02, § 85, 7 December 2006.

⁵³ Miażdżyk v. Poland, no. 23592/07, § 41, 24 January 2012.

⁵⁴ Nalbanski v. Bulgaria, no. 30943/04, § 64, 10 February 2011.

⁵⁵ Raimondo v. Italy, 22 February 1994, § 39, Series A no. 281-A; Labita v. Italy [GC], no. 26772/95, § 195, ECHR 2000-IV.

⁵⁶ Baumann v. France, no. 33592/96, §§ 62–63, ECHR 2001-V; Napijalo v. Croatia, no. 66485/01, §§ 69–73, 13 November 2003; Nalbanski v. Bulgaria, no. 30943/04, § 61, 10 February 2011; Stamose v. Bulgaria, no. 29713/05, § 30, ECHR 2012.

⁵⁷ Miażdżyk v. Poland, no. 23592/07, § 39, 24 January 2012.

⁵⁸ M. v. Federal Republic of Germany, no. 10307/83, Commission decision of 6 March 1984, DR 37, p. 113.

⁵⁹ Miażdżyk v. Poland, no. 23592/07, 24 January 2012; Prescher v. Bulgaria, no. 6767/04, 7 June 2011; A.E. v. Poland, no. 14480/04, 31 March 2009; Bessenyei v. Hungary, no. 37509/06, 21 October 2008; Földes and Földesné Hajlik v. Hungary, no. 41463/02, ECHR 2006-XII; Baumann v. France, no. 33592/96, ECHR 2001-V (extracts); Schmidt v. Austria, no. 10670/83, Commission decision of 9 July 1985, DR 44, p. 195.

⁶⁰ Luordo v. Italy, no. 32190/96, ECHR 2003-IX.

⁶¹ Napijalo v. Croatia, no. 66485/01, 13 November 2003; Riener v. Bulgaria, no. 46343/99, 23 May 2006.

debts,⁶² knowledge of State secrets,⁶³ military service,⁶⁴ lack of rehabilitation in respect of criminal offences,⁶⁵ mental illness combined with a lack of appropriate care in the destination country,⁶⁶ and child custody disputes.⁶⁷ Recently, Bulgaria prevented one of its nationals from leaving the country in order to prevent him violating the immigration laws of the United States.⁶⁸

Russia is the only State Party to the Convention to have retained restrictions on international travel for private purposes on the grounds that the individual has been privy to 'State secrets'. Countries in Central and Eastern Europe generally abolished such limitations as part of their transition to democratic governance.⁶⁹ As a condition for joining the Council of Europe in 1996, Russia pledged to eliminate such restrictions, but it has not done so. Such restrictions were imposed at a time when the State had the power to control means of communication with the outside world by means of restrictions on correspondence and prohibition of unsupervised contacts with foreigners within the country. But with all of this having disappeared in modern times, 'the necessity of restriction on international travel for private purposes by persons aware of "State secrets" became less obvious. In these circumstances, in so far as the ban on international travel for private reasons purported to prevent the applicant from communicating information to foreign nationals, in a contemporary democratic society such a restriction fails to achieve the protective function previously assigned to it.'⁷⁰ Finding a violation of article 2(2) of Protocol No. 4, the Court said: 'Having regard to the established common European and international standard, the Court considers that the Russian Government were under an obligation to provide a particularly compelling justification for maintaining the restriction in question.'⁷¹

Restrictions (art. 2(3) and art. 2(4))

Article 2(3) authorizes 'restrictions' (in French, ingérence) with the rights set out in paragraphs 1 and 2. The paragraph is similar to, although not identical with, corresponding second paragraphs in articles 9, 10, and 11 of the Convention. In contrast with the four Convention provisions with restriction clauses, article 2(4) of Protocol No. 4 imposes an additional restriction, but only with regard to paragraph 1: 'The rights set forth in paragraph 1 may also be subject, in particular areas, to restrictions imposed in accordance with law and justified by the public interests in a democratic society.' This provision, which was quite unique, was added by the drafters in order to resolve a difficulty in the formulation of article 2(3). It has been without practical application and does not appear to have ever been invoked, applied, or interpreted by the Convention organs.

⁶² Khlyustov v. Russia, no. 28975/05, 11 July 2013; Ignatov v. Bulgaria, no. 50/02, 2 July 2009; Gochev v. Bulgaria, no. 34383/03, 26 November 2009.

⁶³ Baritik v. Russia, no. 55565/00, ECHR 2006-XV.

⁶⁴ Peltonen v. Finland, no. 19583/92, Commission decision of 20 February 1995, DR 80-A, p. 38; Marangos v. Cyprus, no. 31106/96, Commission decision of 20 May 1997.

⁶⁵ Nalbantanski v. Bulgaria, no. 30943/04, 10 February 2011.

⁶⁶ Nordblad v. Sweden, no. 19076/91, Commission decision of 13 October 1993.

⁶⁷ Roldan Teixeira and Others v. Italy (dec.), no. 40655/98, 26 October 2000; Diamante and Pelliccioni c. San Marino, no. 27 September 2011.

⁶⁸ Stamose v. Bulgaria, no. 29713/05, ECHR 2012.

⁶⁹ Soltysyak v. Russia, no. 4663/05, § 51, 10 February 2011.

⁷⁰ Baritik v. Russia, no. 55565/00, § 49, ECHR 2006-XV.

⁷¹ Soltysyak v. Russia, no. 4663/05, § 51, 10 February 2011.

In accordance with the law

An interference with the rights set out in paragraphs 1 and 2 of article 2 must be, in the words of article 2(3), 'in accordance with the law'. The drafters of Protocol No. 4 made a deliberate choice favouring 'in accordance with the law', which is the term used in article 8(2) of the Convention, rather than 'prescribed by law', which is used in articles 9(2), 10(2), and 11(2). It was deemed the 'better' formulation in that it allowed for administrative action, provided this was taken in accordance with internal legislation.⁷²

The requirement that a restriction or limitation be prescribed by or in accordance with law has both a formal or technical sense and a substantive one. The interference must, of course, be authorized by a rule recognized in the national legal order. This includes 'written law', including various forms of delegated legislation, and unwritten law as interpreted and applied by the courts.⁷³ But there is also a qualitative requirement for the legal rule. It must be accessible and foreseeable.

Legitimate purpose

The issue of the legitimate aim or purpose of an interference is rarely very significant. Article 2(3) permits interference with freedom of movement 'in the interests of national security or public safety, for the maintenance of ordre public, for the prevention of crime, for the protection of health or morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others'. The Grand Chamber has explained that it is the Court's practice 'to be quite succinct when it verifies the existence of a legitimate aim'.⁷⁴ The list is large enough to cover most government activity, whether it is oppressive or benign. The Court has tended to a rather broad and liberal application of the terms, often finding that more than one of the purposes applies to a specific form of interference.

A measure restricting a convicted and not yet rehabilitated offender from travelling abroad was said to pursue the legitimate aims of maintenance of public order and prevention of crime.⁷⁵ Travel bans imposed to secure payment of private judgment debts were deemed to pursue the protection of the rights of others.⁷⁶ Refusal of authorization for children to leave a country out of concerns about abduction have as a purpose the maintenance of 'ordre public' as well as the protection of the rights of others.⁷⁷

Necessary in a democratic society

Most decisions concerning the paragraph 3 of article 4 involve the third component of the analysis, namely whether the impugned measure is 'necessary in a democratic society'. The objective is to consider whether the authorities have struck 'a fair balance between the competing interests of the individual and of society as a whole'.⁷⁸ It is the most subjective part of the application of paragraph 3, involving subtle distinctions about the proportionality of measures taken by the State that limit or restrict human rights. There is an ⁷² Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 4, para. 13.

⁷³ Leyla Şahin v. Turkey [GC], no. 44774/98, § 88, ECHR 2005-XI; Sanoma Uitgevers B.V. v. the Netherlands [GC], no. 38224/03, § 83, 14 September 2010.

⁷⁴ S.A.S. v. France [GC], no. 43835/11, § 114, 1 July 2014.

⁷⁵ Nalbanski v. Bulgaria, no. 30943/04, § 61, 10 February 2011.

⁷⁶ Khlyustov v. Russia, no. 28975/05, § 80, 11 July 2013; Ignatov v. Bulgaria, no. 50/02, § 35, 2 July 2009; Gochev v. Bulgaria, no. 34383/03, § 48, 26 November 2009.

⁷⁷ Diamante and Pelliccioni v. San Marino, no. 32250/08, § 213, 27 September 2011.

⁷⁸ Keegan v. Ireland, 26 May 1994, § 49, Series A. no. 290.

important relationship between 'necessity' and 'democratic society', of which the hallmarks are pluralism, tolerance, and broadmindedness.⁷⁹

The Court frequently begins its consideration of this element by questioning whether the interference responds to a 'pressing social need'. The term seems to be not much more than a gloss on the word 'necessity'. It employs two other notions in this context, insisting that the measure in question be 'relevant and sufficient'. The interference must also respond to an assessment of its proportionality, something that necessitates balancing the right of the individual against the interest of the State and the society that it represents. Where the Court is considering the positive dimension of the right in question, in other words, the obligation upon the State to take measures to ensure enforcement of the right, it must usually consider the rights of others in the balance as well. If other less severe measures could have fulfilled the same objective, there will be a problem with proportionality.

There must be a clear and foreseeable legal procedure for the imposition restrictions on freedom of movement such as foreign travel bans, failing which the Court will find a violation without considering the proportionality of the measure.⁸⁰ An 'automatic approach' to a travel ban, imposed without explanation or an examination of the personal circumstances of the individuals concerned, the result of a discretionary decision by the police not subject to any substantive judicial review, was not acceptable.⁸¹

Measures restricting freedom of movement may become unjustifiable with the passage of time. For example, with regard to the proportionality of a restriction imposed on leaving a country on account of unpaid debts, the Court has held that 'even were it justified at the outset, a measure restricting an individual's freedom of movement may become disproportionate and breach that individual's rights if it is automatically extended over a long period'.⁸² Where the ban is related to ongoing criminal investigations or proceedings that do not proceed with reasonable diligence, the 'fair balance' between the right and the public interest will be upset.⁸³ A delay of six months in examining a request for permission to leave the country was deemed unacceptable.⁸⁴

A two-year travel ban was imposed by Bulgaria upon one of its nationals who had been deported from the United States. Bulgaria explained that the measure was necessary in order to prevent Bulgarian citizens from breaching the immigration laws of other countries. The legislation had been adopted largely to assuage the concerns of European Union members and in a more general context of illegal immigration by Bulgarian nationals. The Court said that such a travel ban, imposed in 'such a blanket and indiscriminate measure', could not be considered proportionate and therefore was not ⁷⁹ Smith and Grady v. the United Kingdom, nos 33985/96 and 33986/96, § 87, ECHR 1999-VI; Vereinigung demokratischer Soldaten Österreichs und Gubi v. Austria, 19 December 1994, § 36, Series A no. 302; Dudgeon v. the United Kingdom, 22 October 1981, § 53, Series A no. 45.

⁸⁰ Dzhakysbergenov v. Ukraine, no. 12343/10, §§ 60–61, 10 February 2011.

⁸¹ Sarkizov and Others v. Bulgaria, nos 37981/06, 38022/06, 39122/06, and 44278/06, § 67, 17 April 2012.

⁸² Gochev v. Bulgaria, no. 34383/03, § 49, 26 November 2009; Diamante and Pelliccioni v. San Marino, no. 32250/08, § 214, 27 September 2011; Makedonski v. Bulgaria, no. 36036/04, § 45, 20 January 2011; Luordo v. Italy, no. 32190/96, § 96, ECHR 2003-IX; Földes and Földesné Hajlik v. Hungary, no. 41463/02, § 35, ECHR 2006-XII; Riemer v. Bulgaria, no. 46343/99, § 121, 23 May 2006; Bessenyei v. Hungary, no. 37509/06, §§ 21–24, 21 October 2008.

⁸³ Makedonski v. Bulgaria, no. 36036/04, § 42, 20 January 2011.

⁸⁴ Ibid.

'necessary in a democratic society'.⁸⁵ It said that the normal consequences of a breach of immigration laws would be removal from the country in question and a prohibition on re-entry. It said that '[i]t appears quite draconian for the Bulgarian State—which could not be regarded as directly affected by the applicant's infringement—to have also prevented him from travelling to any other foreign country for a period of two years'.⁸⁶ The Court concluded that 'the automatic imposition of such a measure without any regard to the individual circumstances of the person concerned [could] be characterised as necessary in a democratic society'.⁸⁷

Discrimination

As a consequence of article 6 of Protocol No. 4, article 14 of the Convention is applicable to freedom of movement as set out in article 2 of Protocol No. 4. Article 14 of the Convention does not have an independent existence. It can only be invoked with respect to a right protected elsewhere in the Convention or the Protocols. There appears to be only one case that has dealt with the application of article 14 in the context of article 2 of Protocol No. 4.

A senior police officer in the Russian republic of Kabardino-Balkar gave instructions to traffic police officers not to admit 'Chechens'. Given that ethnic origin is not listed on Russian identity documents, the order affected individuals who were perceived as belonging to the Chechen ethnic group as well as those who were genuine ethnic Chechens. There was no evidence that other ethnic groups were subjected to similar prohibitions. The Court said this represented a clear inequality of treatment in the enjoyment of the right to liberty of movement on account of one's ethnic origin.⁸⁸ No justification for such differential treatment was offered by Russia. The Court said that in any event 'no difference in treatment which is based exclusively or to a decisive extent on a person's ethnic origin is capable of being objectively justified in a contemporary democratic society built on the principles of pluralism and respect for different cultures'.⁸⁹

Reservations and declarations

Reservations to Protocol No. 4 are governed by the principles of article 57 of the Convention. Monaco made a declaration that amounts to a reservation in its instrument of ratification, deposited on 30 November 2005. The reservation concerns conditions of entry and stay of foreigners in Monaco. It protects the right of the State Minister to, 'by measure of police or by issuing an expulsion warrant, enjoin any foreigner to leave immediately the Monegasque territory or to forbid him/her to enter it'.⁹⁰

On 28 September 2010, the Netherlands made the following declaration:

In reference to the declaration made by the Kingdom of the Netherlands on ratifying Protocol No. 4 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms on 23 June 1982, the Kingdom of the Netherlands wishes to make the following declaration:

⁸⁵ Stamose v. Bulgaria, no. 29713/05, § 34, ECHR 2012.

⁸⁶ Ibid.

⁸⁷ Ibid., § 36.

⁸⁸ Timishev v. Russia, nos 55762/00 and 55974/00, § 54, ECHR 2005-XII.

⁸⁹ Ibid., § 58.

⁹⁰ (2005) 48 YB 12.

The Kingdom of the Netherlands, consisting as per 10 October 2010 of the European part of the Netherlands, the Caribbean part of the Netherlands (the islands of Bonaire, Sint Eustatius and Saba), Aruba, Curaçao and Sint Maarten, regards these parts as separate territories for the applications of Articles 2 and 3 of the Protocol.⁹¹

Further reading

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 691–5.

Grabewarter, European Convention, pp. 411–17.

Harris et al., Law of the European Convention, pp. 736–42.

Nuria Arenas Hidalgo, 'Liberty of Movement within the Territory of a State (Article 2 of Additional Protocol No. 4 ECHR)', in Javier García Roca and Pablo Santolaya, eds, Europe of Rights: A Compendium on the European Convention of Human Rights, Leiden/Boston: Martinus Nijhoff, 2012, pp. 607–24.

Jacques Mourgeon, 'Protocole No 4, Article 2', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, p. 1043–51.

Ovey/White, Jacobs and White, European Convention, pp. 339–46.

Ben Vermeulen, 'The Right to Liberty of Movement (Article 2 of Protocol No. 4)', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 939–45.

⁹¹ (2010) 53 YB 27–28.

Article 3. Prohibition of expulsion of nationals/Interdiction de l'expulsion des nationaux

- | | |
|--|---|
| 1. No one shall be expelled, by means either of an individual or of a collective measure, from the territory of the State of which he is a national. | 1. Nul ne peut être expulsé, par voie de mesure individuelle ou collective, du territoire de l'État dont il est le ressortissant. |
| 2. No one shall be deprived of the right to enter the territory of the State of which he is a national. | 2. Nul ne peut être privé du droit d'entrer sur le territoire de l'État dont il est le ressortissant. |

Introductory comments

European history during the first half of the twentieth century testifies to a widespread phenomenon of expulsion of nationals described at the time with the euphemism 'population transfers'.¹ Today, 'ethnic cleansing' would be the more suitable term. These so-called population transfers were often given the blessing of international law, sometimes in bilateral agreements, but also multilateral treaties associated with peace processes. For example, populations were 'exchanged' in 1923 by Greece and Turkey in accordance with the Convention Concerning the Exchange of Greek and Turkish Populations.² Article XII of the Potsdam Protocol, adopted by the victorious Allies in July 1945, provides for the transfer of German populations from Poland, Czechoslovakia, and Hungary, adding the condition that it take place 'in an orderly and humane manner'.³ A few years later, when the United Nations General Assembly was preparing the Genocide Convention, an American delegate urged that care be taken in drafting the definition of the crime out of concern that it 'might be extended to embrace forced transfers of minority groups such as have already been carried out by members of the United Nations'.⁴

¹ See the recent statement by the Parliamentary Assembly: Resolution 1863 (2012), Enforced population transfer as a human rights violation.

² (1923) 32 LNTS 76. See also Exchange of Greek and Turkish Populations, Series B, No. 10.

³ A. De Zayas, 'International Law and Mass Population Transfers', (1975) 16 Harvard International Law Journal 207; Freiherr Von Braun, 'Germany's Eastern Border and Mass Expulsions', (1964) 58 AJIL 747.

⁴ Comments by Governments on the Draft Convention prepared by the Secretariat, Communications from non-Governmental Organisations, UN Doc. E/623. The United States cited specifically paragraph 3(b), '[d]estroying the specific characteristics of the group by: (b) Forced and systematic exile of individuals representing the culture of a group . . .' The fears of the United States were not totally misplaced. One academic writer has said that 'the expulsion of Germans and of persons of German descent living in the former eastern provinces of Germany and in eastern and south-eastern European countries frequently took place under conditions that are classifiable as genocide': Hans-Heinrich Jescheck, 'Genocide', in Rudolph Bernhardt, ed., Encyclopedia of Public International Law, Vol. II, Amsterdam: North-Holland Elsevier, 1995, pp. 541-4, p. 541. During United States Senate consideration of the Genocide Convention in 1950, James Finucane of the National Council for the Prevention of War testified about the United States' 'genocidal intent, or genocidal carelessness, at Potsdam': United States of America, Hearings Before a Subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations, United States Senate, Jan. 23, 24, 25, and Feb. 9, 1950, Washington: United States Government Printing Office, 1950, p. 312.

The legality of population transfer treaties was considered by the prestigious Institut de Droit International at its 1952 session. Rapporteur Giorgio Balladore Pallieri listed twenty 'population transfer' treaties between 1913 and 1945, admitting that 'il n'y a jamais de transfert vraiment volontaire des populations'.⁵ Pallieri concluded that there was nothing in international law to challenge the legitimacy of population transfers and that they were even, in certain circumstances, desirable. They were the consequences of the legitimate desire of all modern States to have loyal citizens, he said.⁶ Pallieri's analysis was well received by most of the members of the Institute, including Max Huber, Jean Spiropoulos, and Fernand de Visscher, with the notable exception of Georges Scelle, who said it was incompatible with the emerging law of human rights.

The great contribution of article 3 of Protocol No. 4 is to confirm Scelle's observation and to codify it. The Explanatory Report leaves no doubt that Europe's sad history in this respect was in the minds of the drafters.⁷ Protocol No. 4 distinguishes between the expulsion of non-nationals (or 'aliens'), a matter addressed in article 4, and the expulsion of nationals, which is governed by article 3. Article 3 of Protocol No. 4 is an intriguing hybrid of norms derived to some extent from the other relevant international instruments, but with its own originality. Article 13(2) of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights recognizes that '(2) Everyone has the right to leave any country, including his own, and to return to his country.' The first part of this provision is addressed in article 2 of Protocol No. 4. It is the second part, recognizing the right 'to return to his country', that finds an incomplete and somewhat distorted reflection in article 3(2) of Protocol No. 4. The silence of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights on the issue of expulsion may not be all that significant, because it can be argued that if there is a right to return, then expulsion makes no sense in any case.

Although the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights generally expands upon the provisions in the Universal Declaration, it also innovates in some respects. Article 13 is one of the examples of this:

An alien lawfully in the territory of a State Party to the present Covenant may be expelled therefrom only in pursuance of a decision reached in accordance with law and shall, except where compelling reasons of national security otherwise require, be allowed to submit the reasons against his expulsion and to have his case reviewed by, and be represented for the purpose before, the competent authority or a person or persons especially designated by the competent authority.

Not formally adopted until 1966, the provision had nonetheless been drafted and debated within the Third Committee of the United Nations General Assembly before Protocol No. 4 was adopted. Based on the text, the drafters of Protocol No. 4 made their own contribution with the reference to 'collective' expulsions, a subject dealt with in article 4 of Protocol No. 4.

Drafting of the provision

In 1958, when the Legal Committee of the Consultative Assembly began consideration of an additional protocol, the list of rights that might be included contained prohibition of arbitrary exile. As the report noted,⁸ this was already comprised in article 12(2) of the draft United Nations Covenant,⁹ where it echoed article 9 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights ('No one shall be subjected to arbitrary arrest, detention or exile'). The rapporteur of the Legal Committee, Hermod Lannung, explained that 'in the homogenous circle of the Council of Europe, the prohibition of exile ought to be absolute—which would be difficult in the wider context of the United Nations'. He said for this reason he had omitted the word 'arbitrary', used in the draft Covenant. Moreover, '[d]esirous, secondly, of avoiding all confusion between exile of nationals and expulsion of aliens, I added the words "from the country of which he is a national"'.¹⁰ The Consultative Assembly draft read as follows: 'No-one shall be exiled from the State of which he is a national. Everyone shall be free to enter the State of which he is a national.'¹¹

⁵ Giorgio Balladore Pallieri, 'Les transferts internationaux de populations', [1952] II Annuaire de l'Institut de droit international 138, at pp. 142-3.

⁶ Ibid., p. 149.

⁷ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 4, paras 31-33.

Some members of the Committee of Experts were concerned about use of the word 'exiled'. They raised the likelihood of it being taken to cover extradition, and even expulsion. The hypothesis of a State wishing to exile a national after denaturalization was raised. There were suggestions that the Protocol might also include recognition of a right to nationality along the lines of article 15 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.¹² The Committee opted for a text that 'would prohibit any constitutional, legislative or administrative or judicial authority from expelling nationals from their own country'. According to the Explanatory Report, expulsion of nationals, whether as individuals or as groups, was 'more often than not . . . inspired by political motives'. For this reason, the majority of the Committee 'thought it preferable not to use the term "exile" which is open to various difficulties of interpretation. It was agreed to speak of expulsion, although it was recognised that in normal technical usage this term applies to aliens only'.¹³ The Explanatory Report notes that '[t]he word "expulsion" is to be understood here in the generic meaning, in current use (to drive away from a place)'.¹⁴ Incidentally, the reference to 'exile' also disappeared in the final version of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.¹⁵ To the objection that some countries had laws banishing members of former reigning houses, the representatives of the countries concerned said they would have to make reservations to article 3.¹⁶

⁸ Preliminary Report by M. Lannung, Rapporteur, AS/Jur XII (10) 1, 21 August 1958; Minutes of the meeting [of the Legal Committee, Consultative Assembly], held on 9 and 10 June 1958, AS/Jur (10) PV 2 rev., 22 September 1958; Minutes of the meeting [of the Legal Committee, Sub-Committee No. 12 (Human Rights), Consultative Assembly], held on Tuesday 16 September, 1958, AS/Jur XII (10) PV 1, 7 October 1958.

⁹ Draft international Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, UN Doc. A/3824, art. 12(2)(a).

¹⁰ Second Protocol to the Convention on Human Rights, Second Preliminary Report presented by M. Lannung, Rapporteur, AS/Jur XII (10) 3, 10 November 1958 (emphasis in the original); Second Protocol to the Convention on Human Rights, Third Report presented by M. Lannung, Rapporteur, AS/Jur XII (11) 1, 8 June 1959; Report on the Second Protocol to the Convention on Human Rights, M. Lannung, Rapporteur, Doc. 1057, 17 November 1959.

¹¹ Recommendation 234 (1960), Draft for a Second Protocol to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. See Preparatory work on the Draft Second Protocol to the Convention on Human Rights, appended to Recommendation 234 (1960) of the Consultative Assembly. V. Article 3 of the Draft—Prohibition of exile—Memorandum by the Directorate of Human Rights, DH/Exp (60) 13, 28 October 1960.

¹² Memorandum by the Human Rights Directorate on the proceedings of the Committee's first meeting, 7 to 11 November 1960, DX/Exp (60) 27, 10 February 1961, para. 46.

¹³ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 4, para. 21.

¹⁴ Ibid.

¹⁵ Manfred Nowak, UN Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, CCPR Commentary, 2nd rev. edn, Kehl, Germany: N.P. Engel, 2005, p. 283.

¹⁶ Memorandum by the Human Rights Directorate on the proceedings of the Committee's first meeting, 7 to 11 November 1960, DX/Exp (60) 27, 10 February 1961, para. 49.

The addition of the notion of collective expulsion was made by the Committee of Experts in order to reconcile article 3 with article 4 concerning the collective expulsion of aliens. The Committee of Experts thought it important to prohibit explicitly the collective expulsion of nationals as well as of aliens. The Explanatory Report notes that 'paragraph 1 of Article 3 could in no way be interpreted as in any way justifying measures of collective expulsion which may have been taken in the past'.¹⁷

The Committee of Experts also preferred the formulation 'the territory of a State' to 'the State'. The Explanatory Report says this was 'for drafting purposes only'.¹⁸ A proposal to use the words 'his own country'—the term employed in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights—in place of 'state of which he is a national' was not accepted. Most of the experts thought 'state of which he is a national' to have 'a more precise legal meaning'.¹⁹

The Committee of Experts understood extradition to be outside the scope of paragraph 1.²⁰ It also considered that the provision could not be invoked in order to avoid 'certain obligations which are not contrary to the Convention', such as military service.²¹ The Committee also discussed the possibility of a State expelling one of its nationals after depriving him or her of nationality. The following text was proposed: 'a State would be forbidden to deprive a national of his nationality for the purpose of expelling him'. The Explanatory Report says that the principle behind this proposal was approved of by the Committee, but that the majority of experts did not think it advisable 'to touch on the delicate question of the legitimacy of measures depriving individuals of nationality'. They also thought that in practice it would be difficult to establish that denaturalization had been undertaken with the intention of expelling the person in question.²²

The Consultative Assembly draft of article 3(2) read: 'Everyone shall be free to enter the State of which he is a national.' Quite explicitly borrowing the language of article 12(4) of the draft International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Committee of Experts changed the opening phrase of the provision to 'No-one shall be deprived of the right to'. According to the Explanatory Report:

This wording seemed a better solution than the other to a matter of twofold concern to the Committee:

- a) On the one hand, paragraph 2 should not relieve persons who wish to enter the territory of the State of which they were nationals, of the obligation to prove their nationality if so required. (A State is not obliged to admit an individual who claims to be a national unless he can make good his claim.)
- b) On the other hand, such temporary measures as quarantine should not be interpreted as a refusal of entry.²³

The Committee also opted for the words 'enter the territory of the State' that it found preferable to 'enter the State'. This was 'purely a drafting change'.²⁴

¹⁷ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 4, para. 33.

¹⁸ Ibid., para. 22.

¹⁹ Memorandum of the Human Rights Directorate on the Committee's third meeting, 2 to 11 October 1961, DH/Exp (61) 35 Final, 17 October 1961, para. 28.

²⁰ Ibid., para. 25.

²¹ Ibid., para. 26.

²² Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 4, para. 23.

²³ Ibid., para. 26.

²⁴ Ibid., para. 27.

Although article 12(4) of the draft International Covenant was the model for article 3(2) of the Protocol, the Committee of Experts did not think it appropriate to include the word 'arbitrarily'. The Explanatory Report states:

It was understood, however, that an individual's right to enter the territory of the State of which he was a national could not be interpreted as conferring on him an absolute right to remain in that territory. For example, a criminal who, having been extradited by the State of which he was a national, then escaped from prison in the other State, would not have an unconditional right to seek refuge in his own country. Similarly, a soldier serving on the territory of a State other than that of which he is a national, would not have a right to repatriation in order to remain in his own country.²⁵

Although this does not appear in the text of the provision itself, the Committee of Experts agreed that the terms of paragraph 2 could be invoked only in relation to the State of which the victim of any violation of this provision was a national.²⁶

The heading 'Prohibition of expulsion of nationals' was added by Protocol No. 11.²⁷

Analysis and interpretation

There is very little case law respecting article 3 of Protocol No. 4. Almost all of the reported cases involve summary dismissal of complaints at the admissibility level on the grounds that they are manifestly unfounded, often for failure to exhaust domestic remedies or lack of jurisdiction ratione temporis. The Court's database, HUROC, does not indicate a single violation of the provision in the case law of the Court and the Commission. The explanation would appear to be that States Parties to the Protocol respect its terms without exception or that, at any rate, in the event of disputes, their legislation is adequate to address the matter effectively.²⁸ It must also be borne in mind that other instruments of international law are also applicable in circumstances concerning the right of citizens to mobility in and out of the territory, including the European Convention on Establishment, the provisions of European Union law governing movement within the territory of the union,²⁹ and prohibitions in the treaties on the reduction of statelessness. Any mass expulsion, be it of nationals or non-nationals, might also result in charges of the crime against humanity of deportation and lead to prosecutions under article 7(1)(d) of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court. The crime against humanity of deportation is defined as 'forced displacement of the persons concerned by expulsion or other coercive acts from the area in which they are lawfully present, without grounds permitted under international law'.³⁰

A rare example of a dispute in which the provision was invoked that was found to be admissible concerned a descendant of the Italian royal family. A citizen of Italy living in ²⁵ Ibid., para. 28. Also Memorandum of the Human Rights Directorate on the Committee's third meeting, 2 to 11 October 1961, DH/Exp (61) 35 Final, 17 October 1961, para. 30.

²⁶ Ibid., para. 29; Memorandum of the Human Rights Directorate on the Committee's third meeting, 2 to 11 October 1961, DH/Exp (61) 35 Final, 17 October 1961, para. 32.

²⁷ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(5)(a).

²⁸ E.g., Rosengren v. Romania (dec.), no. 70786/01, 4 May 2006; Oudrhiri v. France, no. 19554/92, Commission decision of 31 March 1993.

²⁹ Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, 2010 OJ C 83/02, arts 15(2), 45.

³⁰ Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, (2002) 2187 UNTS 90.

Switzerland, he was nevertheless forbidden from returning to his country because of post-Second World War legislation targeted at the monarchy. Aware of the possible conflict with article 3 of Protocol No. 4, Italy had formulated a declaration at the time of ratification, something discussed below under the heading 'Reservations and declarations'. In its submissions to the Court with respect to the legislative prohibition on the return of the royal family, Italy noted the specific historic context of such a measure, explaining that this had been chosen as an alternative to a law ordering the former King's exile.³¹

The Court avoided application of article 3 of Protocol No. 4 in a case involving expulsion of Turkish Cypriots to Northern Cyprus. It had already found there was a breach of article 2 and considered it unnecessary to determine whether article 3 might also apply.³²

Article 3 is only applicable to cases of expulsion. This involves an obligation to leave the territory of which one is a national without the possibility of returning subsequently. It does not apply to situations where an individual feels obliged to leave the country of nationality in a child custody dispute, where the custodial parent has left the country of nationality of the non-custodial parent.³³ Although there is no explicit reference to extradition in article 3, it is understood that a national cannot invoke the provision as an obstacle in such proceedings.

Article 3 of Protocol No. 4 applies only to 'nationals' (in French, ressortissants). The Court always insists that it may make an autonomous interpretation of the terms of the Convention and that it is not bound by the determinations of national jurisdictions or authorities. Nevertheless, it is obvious that the status of nationality must be governed by the laws of the relevant country. The terms for the recognition of citizenship, and for its denial, remain a prerogative of national law. Thus, for the purposes of article 3 of Protocol No. 4, the nationality of an applicant is determined by reference to the national law.³⁴ Article 3 can only be invoked by a natural person.³⁵

The European Convention does not guarantee a right to a nationality,³⁶ something that is recognized in article 15 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Arbitrary deprivation of nationality could raise issues under article 8 of the Convention.³⁷ A European Commission decision suggests that an issue respecting article 3 of Protocol No. 4 might arise in a situation where an application to obtain nationality was refused where there was a relationship to an expulsion order, such that there was a presumption that the purpose of refusing nationality was expulsion.³⁸ In 2014, the Government of the United Kingdom indicated it would consider proposing legislation to remove nationality from British citizens who travel abroad to join terrorist organizations.

³¹ Victor-Emmanuel De Savoie v. Italy (dec.), no. 53360/99, 13 September 2001.

³² Denizeci and Others v. Cyprus, nos 25316–25321/94 and 27207/95, § 411, ECHR 2001-V.

³³ A.B. v. Poland (dec.), no. 33878/96, 13 March 2003. Along similar lines: Sadet v. Romania (dec.), no. 36416/02, 20 September 2007; Schober v. Austria (dec.), no. 34891/97, 9 November 1999.

³⁴ Slivenko and Others v. Latvia [GC] (dec.), no. 48321/99, § 77, ECHR 2002-II (extracts); Nagula v. Estonia (dec.), no. 39203/02, § 8, 25 October 2005; Fedorova and Others v. Latvia (dec.), no. 69405/01, 9 October 2003; Gribenko v. Latvia (dec.), no. 76878/01, 15 May 2003.

³⁵ Association 'Regele Mhai' v. Romania, no. 26916/95, Commission decision of 4 September 1995.

³⁶ Slivenko and Others v. Latvia [GC] (dec.), no. 48321/99, § 77, 23 January 2002.

³⁷ Karassev and family v. Finland (dec.), no. 31414/96, ECHR 1999-II; Naumov v. Albania (dec.), no. 10513/03, 3 December 2002.

³⁸ X v. Federal Republic of Germany, no. 3745/68, Commission decision of 15 December 1969, Collection 31, p. 107.

In applying article 3, regard must be had to article 5(4) of the Protocol: 'The territory of any State to which this Protocol applies by virtue of ratification or acceptance by that State, and each territory to which this Protocol is applied by virtue of a declaration by that State under this Article, shall be treated as separate territories for the purpose of the references in Articles 2 and 3 to the territory of a State.'

Reservations and declarations

Two States Parties, Austria and Italy, have made reservations or declarations in order to address the denial of return to the country by members of the former royal family. Upon signing the Protocol, on 16 September 1963, Austria made a reservation to article 3 specifying that it did not apply to legislation regarding the banishment of the House of Habsbourg-Lorraine and the confiscation of their property. It was renewed upon deposit of the instrument of ratification, in 1969. Its conformity with article 57 of the Convention was upheld by the European Commission of Human Rights.³⁹ Upon ratification of Protocol No. 4 in 1982, Italy made a declaration respecting the constitutional prohibition of the return of the Italian royal family to the territory: 'Le paragraphe 2 de l'article 3 ne peut faire obstacle à l'application de la disposition transitoire XIII de la Constitution italienne concernant l'interdiction d'entrée et de séjour de certains membres de la Maison de Savoie sur le territoire de l'Etat.' The son of Italy's last king, Victor-Emmanuel de Savoie, attacked the 'reservation' on the grounds that it was inspired by discriminatory grounds based on birth and sex, thereby violating the universal scope of the Convention. He said that it was contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention and should not therefore be applied by the Court.⁴⁰ In 2002, as part of the settlement of these proceedings, Italy notified the Secretary General of the Council of Europe, as well as the Court itself,⁴¹ that it had withdrawn the declaration.⁴²

Ireland formulated a declaration at the time of signature, on 16 September 1963: 'The reference to extradition contained in paragraph 21 of the Report of the Committee of Experts on this Protocol⁴³ and concerning paragraph 1 of Article 3 of the Protocol includes also laws providing for the execution in the territory of one Contracting party of warrants of arrest issued by the authorities of another Contracting Party.'

The Netherlands made a declaration at the time of ratification, on 23 June 1982, concerning the territorial application of articles 2 and 3 of Protocol No. 4 with respect to the Netherlands Antilles:

Under Article 3, no one may be expelled from or deprived of the right to enter the territory of the State of which he is a national. There is, however, only one nationality (Netherlands) for the whole of the Kingdom. Accordingly, nationality cannot be used as a criterion in making a distinction between the 'citizens' of the Netherlands and those of the Netherlands Antilles, a distinction which is unavoidable since Article 3 applies separately to each of the parts of the Kingdom. This being so, the Netherlands reserve the right to make a distinction in law, for purpose of the application of ³⁹ Habsburg-Lothringen v. Austria, no. 15344/89, Commission decision of 14 December 1989, (1989) 32 YB 116, DR 64-B, p. 211.

⁴⁰ Victor-Emmanuel De Savoie v. Italy (dec.), no. 53360/99, 13 September 2001.

⁴¹ Victor-Emmanuel De Savoie v. Italy (striking out), no. 53360/99, § 21, 24 April 2003.

⁴² (2002) 45 YB 20.

⁴³ Report of the Committee of Experts on Human Rights to the Committee of Ministers, CM (63) 39, 21 February 1963: '21.... It was understood that extradition was outside the scope of this paragraph ...'

Article 3 of the Protocol, between Netherlands nationals residing in the Netherlands and Netherlands nationals residing in the Netherlands Antilles.⁴⁴

On 28 September 2010, the Netherlands made the following declaration:

In reference to the declaration made by the Kingdom of the Netherlands on ratifying Protocol No. 4 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms on 23 June 1982, the Kingdom of the Netherlands wishes to make the following declaration:

The Kingdom of the Netherlands, consisting as per 10 October 2010 of the European part of the Netherlands, the Caribbean part of the Netherlands (the islands of Bonaire, Sint Eustatius and Saba), Aruba, Curaçao and Sint Maarten, regards these parts as separate territories for the applications of Articles 2 and 3 of the Protocol.⁴⁵

Further reading

Juan Fernando Durán Alba, 'The Prohibition on Expelling and Depriving Nationals of the Right to Enter in Their Own State (Article 3 of Protocol 4)', in Javier García Roca and Pablo Santolaya, eds, Europe of Rights: A Compendium on the European Convention of Human Rights, Leiden/Boston: Martinus Nijhoff, 2012, pp. 625–8.

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 696–7.

Grabenwarter, European Convention, pp. 418–20.

Harris et al., Law of the European Convention, p. 743.

Danièle Lochak, 'Protocole No 4, Article 3', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, p. 1053–5.

Jeroen Schokkenbroek, 'Prohibition of Expulsion of Nationals and the Right of Nationals to Enter their own Country (Article 3 of Protocol No. 4)', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 947–51.

⁴⁵ (2010) 53 YB 27–28.

⁴⁴ (1982) 25 YB EUR.CONV.RES./DECL. 1.

Article 4. Prohibition of collective expulsion of aliens/ Interdiction des expulsions collectives d'étrangers Collective expulsion of aliens is prohibited. Les expulsions collectives d'étrangers sont interdites.

Introductory comments

Article 4 of Protocol No. 4 must be read together with article 3, which deals with the expulsion of nationals. The main consequence of the distinction between the expulsion of nationals and the expulsion of non-nationals (or 'aliens') is that the former are protected against individual expulsions as well as collective expulsions. The Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union contains a similar provision:

Article 19. Protection in the event of removal, expulsion or extradition

1. Collective expulsions are prohibited.

It is meant to have the same meaning and scope as article 4 of Protocol No. 4 to the European Convention.¹

The drafting history of articles 3 and 4 of Protocol No. 4 reveals the inability to agree on a more extensive protection of the rights of non-nationals in the context of expulsion. Ironically, the importance of such a provision was justified at the time on the basis of the lessons of 'recent history'.² To a large extent, the inadequacy of article 4 of Protocol No. 4 is alleviated by other provisions of the Convention, notably articles 5, 6, and 13, as well as by the expansive interpretation that the Court has given to article 4 of Protocol No. 4.

Drafting of the provision

The Consultative Assembly proposed a detailed draft provision prohibiting the expulsion of an alien who was lawfully resident in a country:

1. An alien lawfully residing in the territory of a High Contracting Party may be expelled only if he endangers national security or offends against ordre public or morality.
2. Except where imperative considerations of national security otherwise require, an alien who has been lawfully residing for more than two years in the territory of a Contracting Party shall not be expelled without first being allowed to avail himself of an effective remedy before a national authority, within the meaning of Article 13 of the Convention.
3. An alien who has been lawfully residing for more than ten years in the territory of a Contracting Party may be expelled only for reasons of national security or if the other reasons mentioned in paragraph 1 of this Article are of a particularly serious nature.³

¹ Explanation relating to the Charter of Fundamental Rights, Official Journal of the European Union, C 303/34, 14 December 2007.

² Memorandum of the Human Rights Directorate on the Committee's third meeting, 2 to 11 October 1961, DH/Exp (61) 35 Final, 17 October 1961, para. 53.

³ Recommendation 234 (1960), Draft for a Second Protocol to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. See Preparatory work on the Draft Second Protocol to the Convention on Human Rights, appended to Recommendation 234 (1960) of the Consultative Assembly.

The rapporteur noted that this provision raised some difficulties because the expulsion of aliens was also dealt with in the European Convention on Establishment, adopted on 13 December 1955. Indeed, article 4 of the Assembly draft bore a close resemblance to article 3 of the Convention on Establishment.⁴ The question was whether article 4 'serves any useful purpose'. The rapporteur noted 'considerable difficulty at the drafting stage' of article 3 of the Convention on Establishment, 'although it only concerned the treatment of nationals of the Contracting Parties'. However, the proposed article 4 of the Protocol applied to everyone, regardless of nationality, and was therefore 'more advantageous than Article 33 of the Convention on Establishment'.⁵

The Committee had several problems with the broad proposal of the Consultative Assembly. Members of the Committee were opposed to the concept in principle because 'the State concerned should alone be competent, in applying such a provision, to judge of the reasons which, according to its internal law, could motivate expulsion and that such decisions should not be subject to control by the organs envisaged by the Convention'. Germany proposed an amendment governing the conditions on which an alien lawfully resident in a territory could be expelled, referring to 'considerations of national security' and recognizing the right to an effective remedy before a national authority.⁶ The Secretariat also came up with an amendment by which protection against expulsion would apply to an alien who had been lawfully resident for more than two years.⁷ A Working Party presented the Committee with alternative proposals, one of which included a new paragraph: 'In no circumstances shall a measure of collective expulsion be taken.'⁸

The Committee of Experts thought it desirable to prohibit formally 'collective expulsions of the kind which was a matter of recent history'.⁹ The Committee insisted that 'the adoption of this article could in no way be interpreted as justifying such measures of collective expulsion taken in the past either against nationals or against foreigners'.¹⁰ This text was in fact all that survived of draft article 4 when the Committee decided not to include any provision in the Protocol governing the individual expulsion of aliens. It justified this with reference to article 3 of the Convention on Establishment, expressing concerns about possible conflicts between the two treaties. The Committee recognized that it might have been able to agree upon a text stating that a 'decision of expulsion must be taken in accordance with law'. However, 'the majority of the Committee maintained that only the State concerned should be competent, in applying such a provision, to judge

VI. Article 4 of the Draft—Prohibition of arbitrary expulsion—Memorandum by the Directorate of Human Rights, DH/Exp (60) 14 and Appendix I and II, 28 October 1960.

⁴ European Convention on Establishment, ETS 19, art. 3. Given the importance of the Convention in the debates concerning drafting of article 4 of Protocol No. 4 (and, later, article 1 of Protocol No. 7), it is interesting to note that there are only twelve ratifications, the last being that of Turkey in 1990.

⁵ Report on the Second Protocol to the Convention on Human Rights, M. Lannung, Rapporteur, Doc. 1057, 17 November 1959, para. 11.

⁶ Amendment proposed by the Federal Republic of Germany, DH/Exp (61) 26, 3 October 1961.

⁷ Amendment proposed by the Secretariat, DH/Exp (61) 27, 4 October 1961.

⁸ Report of the Working Party, DH/Exp (61) 30 Revised, 6 October 1961. Also Draft text (meeting of 5 October 1961), DH/Exp (61) 31, 6 October 1961; Draft text (meeting of 6 October 1961), DH/Exp (61) 32, 6 October 1961.

⁹ Memorandum of the Human Rights Directorate on the Committee's third meeting, 2 to 11 October 1961, DH/Exp (61) 35 Final, 17 October 1961, para. 53.

¹⁰ Memorandum of the Human Rights Directorate on the Committee's fourth meeting, 2 to 10 March 1962, DH/Exp/Misc (62) 11, 9 March 1962, para. 35.

of the reasons which, according to its internal law, could motivate expulsion and that such judgment should not be subject to the bodies provided for by the Convention'.¹¹ The Committee considered replacing the draft provision with a text ensuring certain procedural guarantees for non-nationals threatened with expulsion, but felt 'a provision limited to guarantees of a procedural character would be insufficient, and that it would be preferable to have no provision at all'. It reasoned as follows:

First of all, these procedural rights would have no application whenever the State 'considered' that compelling reasons of national security required otherwise. According to this system it would be for the State concerned alone to judge whether such compelling reasons of national security did exist. This situation would prevent the exercise of the powers vested by the Convention in the bodies which it instituted for the purpose of ensuring that Contracting Parties would respect their commitments.

Furthermore, the 'competent authority' before which the alien would have the right to have his case examined could be the same as that which was empowered to take the decision of expulsion; in that case, the alien would have no assurance of the impartiality of the authority.¹²

The heading 'Prohibition of collective expulsion of aliens' was added pursuant to Protocol No. 11.¹³

Analysis and interpretation

'Collective expulsion', as the term is used in article 4 of Protocol No. 4, 'is to be understood as any measure compelling aliens, as a group, to leave a country, except where such a measure is taken on the basis of a reasonable and objective examination of the particular case of each individual alien of the group'.¹⁴ Therefore, 'that a number of aliens are subject to similar decisions does not in itself lead to the conclusion that there is a collective expulsion if each person concerned has been given the opportunity to put arguments against his expulsion to the competent authorities on an individual basis'.¹⁵ There is no violation of article 4 if the lack of an individual expulsion decision is a consequence of the applicant's culpable conduct.¹⁶ If an applicant's asylum claim is

¹¹ Ibid., para. 36.

¹² Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 4, para. 35.

¹³ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(5)(a).

¹⁴ Hirsi Jamaa and Others v. Italy [GC], no. 27765/09, § 167, ECHR 2012; Conka v. Belgium, no. 51564/99, § 59, ECHR 2002-I; Andric v. Sweden (dec.), no. 45917/99, 23 February 1999; Henning Becker v. Denmark, no. 7011/75, Commission decision of 3 October 1975, (1976) 19 YB 416, DR 4, p. 215; Alibaks and Others v. the Netherlands, no. 14209/88, Commission decision of 16 December 1988, DR 59, p. 274; Davydov v. Estonia (dec.), no. 16387/03, 31 May 2005; Berisha and Haljiti v. 'the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia' (dec.), no. 18670/03, 16 June 2005; Sultani v. France, no. 45223/05, ECHR 2007-IV; Ghulami v. France (dec.), no. 45302/05, 7 April 2009; Dritsas v. Italy (dec.), no. 2344/02, 1 February 2011; M.A. v. Cyprus, no. 41872/10, § 245, 23 July 2013.

¹⁵ M.A. v. Cyprus, no. 41872/10, § 246, 23 July 2013; Hirsi Jamaa and Others v. Italy [GC], no. 27765/09, § 184, ECHR 2012; Sultani v. France, no. 45223/05, § 81, ECHR 2007-IV (extracts); Ghulami v. France (dec.), no. 45302/05, 7 April 2009; Andric v. Sweden (dec.) no. 45917/99, 23 February 1999; Tahiri v. Sweden, no. 25129/94, Commission decision of 11 January 1995; B. and Others v. the Netherlands, no. 14457/88, Commission decision of 16 December 1988; Georgia v. Russia (I) [GC], no. 13255/07, § 167, 3 July 2014.

¹⁶ Berisha and Haljiti v. 'the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia' (dec.), no. 18670/03, 16 June 2005; Dritsas v. Italy (dec.), no. 2344/02, 1 February 2011.

treated individually and an individual decision is issued, it cannot be considered to be a collective expulsion.¹⁷

However, even when there is such an examination, the background to expulsion orders may still be considered in assessing compliance with article 4.¹⁸ In a Belgian application concerning large-scale expulsion of Slovakian Roma from the country, allegedly on the basis of individual determinations of breaches of immigration law, the Court said that 'in view of the large number of persons of the same origin who suffered the same fate as the applicants' it could not 'eliminate all doubt that the expulsion might have been collective'.¹⁹ It said its doubt was 'reinforced by a series of factors', including statements by the political authorities referring to plans for 'collective repatriation', orders to report to the police at the same time, documents drafted in identical terms, and the fact that asylum applications had not been examined completely.²⁰

In the Georgia v. Russia inter-State case, the Grand Chamber observed that Russian authorities had made thousands of expulsion orders over a relatively brief period. It said that even if in a formal sense there had been a court decision in respect of each individual concerned, 'the conduct of the expulsion procedures during that period, after the circulars and instructions had been issued, and the number of Georgian nationals expelled—from October 2006—made it impossible to carry out a reasonable and objective examination of the particular case of each individual'. The collective nature of the expulsions was confirmed by evidence of a 'coordinated policy of arresting, detaining and expelling Georgian nationals'.²¹

The Grand Chamber has extended the application of article 4 of Protocol No. 4 to cover the refoulement of migrants who are stopped before they enter the national territory. 'A long time has passed since Protocol No. 4 was drafted', it said, in proposing an expansive and evolutive interpretation of article 4. 'Since that time, migratory flows in Europe have continued to intensify, with increasing use being made of the sea, although the interception of migrants on the high seas and their removal to countries of transit or origin are now a means of migratory control, in so far as they constitute tools for States to combat irregular immigration.'²² The Grand Chamber observed that if article 4 of Protocol No. 4 were to apply only to collective expulsions from the national territory, 'a significant component of contemporary migratory patterns would not fall within the ambit of that provision, notwithstanding the fact that the conduct it is intended to prohibit can occur outside national territory and in particular, as in the instant case, on the high seas'.²³ Consequently, article 4 of Protocol No. 4 would be ineffective in practice.

The Court considered whether such an interpretation could be excluded by the travaux préparatoires of Protocol No. 4. It cited the Explanatory Report containing the views of the Committee of Experts that article 4 was intended to prohibit 'collective expulsions of aliens of the kind which was a matter of recent history'. For the Grand Chamber, the ¹⁷ Mikolenko v. Estonia (dec.), no. 10664/05, § 4, 8 January 2008.

¹⁸ Conka v. Belgium, no. 51564/99, § 59, ECHR 2002-I; Georgia v. Russia (I) [GC], no. 13255/07, § 167, 3 July 2014.

¹⁹ Ibid., § 61.

²⁰ Ibid., § 62.

²¹ Georgia v. Russia (I) [GC], no. 13255/07, §§ 175–176, 3 July 2014.

²² Hirsi Jamaa and Others v. Italy [GC], no. 27765/09, § 173, ECHR 2012.

²³ Ibid., § 177.

Explanatory Report indicates that 'the aliens to whom the Article refers are not only those lawfully resident on the territory but "all those who have no actual right to nationality in a State, whether they are passing through a country or reside or are domiciled in it, whether they are refugees or entered the country on their own initiative, or whether they are stateless or possess another nationality"'. The Grand Chamber also noted that the word 'expulsion' was intended to be interpreted 'in the generic meaning, in current use (to drive away from a place)'.²⁴

Nor did it find any obstacle to such an interpretation in the text itself. The Court noted that it contained no reference to 'territory', in contrast with article 3 of the Protocol. It also noted that article 1 of Protocol No. 7 also referred to territory. The absence of the term in article 4 of Protocol No. 4 could not be ignored, it said.²⁵ The Court said that while the notion of 'jurisdiction' was 'principally territorial', it said it did not 'see any obstacle to accepting that the exercise of extraterritorial jurisdiction by that State took the form of collective expulsion'.²⁶ It also said that 'the special nature of the maritime environment cannot justify an area outside the law where individuals are covered by no legal system capable of affording them enjoyment of the rights and guarantees protected by the Convention which the States have undertaken to secure to everyone within their jurisdiction'.²⁷

Interpreting article 4 of Protocol No. 4 in light of the Grand Chamber judgment in Hirsi Jamaa, the Court said that 'les rapports entre l'interprétation du champ d'application de l'article 4 du Protocole no 4 retenue par la Grande Chambre et l'étendue du principe du non-refoulement [as set out in international refugee law] ne sont pas non plus dépourvus d'intérêt'.²⁸ Here, the Court was referring to a statement on the refoulement of asylum seekers issued by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees:

The obligation of States not to expel, return or refoule refugees to territories where their life or freedom would be threatened is a cardinal protection principle enshrined in the Convention, to which no reservations are permitted. In many ways, the principle is the logical complement to the right to seek asylum recognized in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. It has come to be considered a rule of customary international law binding on all States. In addition, international human rights law has established non-refoulement as a fundamental component of the absolute prohibition of torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. The duty not to refoule is also recognized as applying to refugees irrespective of their formal recognition, thus obviously including asylum-seekers whose status has not yet been determined. It encompasses any measure attributable to a State which could have the effect of returning an asylum-seeker or refugee to the frontiers of territories where his or her life or freedom would be threatened, or where he or she would risk persecution. This includes rejection at the frontier, interception and indirect refoulement, whether of an individual seeking asylum or in situations of mass influx.²⁹

Finding that Italy was in breach of article 4 by the refoulement of migrants who had reached its shores by boat from Greece, the Court rejected the respondent State's contention that because 'le but de l'interdiction prévue par cette disposition serait de ²⁴ Ibid., § 174; Georgia v. Russia (I) [GC], no. 13255/07, § 168, 3 July 2014.

²⁵ Hirsi Jamaa and Others v. Italy [GC], no. 27765/09, § 173, ECHR 2012.

²⁶ Ibid., § 178.

²⁷ Hirsi Jamaa and Others v. Italy [GC], no. 27765/09, § 178, ECHR 2012.

²⁸ Sharif and Others v. Italy and Greece, no. 16643/09, § 211, 21 October 2014.

²⁹ Note on International Protection, A/AC.96/951, para. 16.

conjurer l'horreur historique des pogroms, . . . celle-ci ne concerne pas les refoulements ou les refus d'admission sur le territoire des États parties à la Convention'.³⁰

Reservations and declarations

At the time of signature, in 1988, Cyprus made a declaration³¹ that was confirmed upon ratification a year later, to the effect that 'according to a proper interpretation of the provisions of Article 4 of the Protocol, they are not applicable to aliens unlawfully in the Republic of Cyprus as a result of the situation created by the continuing invasion and military occupation of part of the territory of the Republic of Cyprus by Turkey'.

Further reading

Juan Fernando Durán Alba, 'Prohibition on the Collective Expulsion of Aliens (Article 4 of Protocol 4)', in Javier García Roca and Pablo Santolaya, eds, Europe of Rights: A Compendium on the European Convention of Human Rights, Leiden/Boston: Martinus Nijhoff, 2012, pp. 629–34.

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 698–9.

Grabenwarter, European Convention, pp. 421–2.

E. Guild and P. Minderhoud, eds, Security of Residence and Expulsion: Protection of Aliens in Europe, The Hague: Martinus Nijhoff, 2001.

Harris et al., Law of the European Convention, p. 744.

Danièle Lochak, 'Protocole No 4, Article 4', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 1057–9.
Jeroen Schokkenbroek, 'Prohibition of Collective Expulsion of Aliens (Article 4 of Protocol No. 4)', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 953–7.

³⁰ Sharifi and Others v. Italy and Greece, no. 16643/09, § 193, 21 October 2014.

³¹ (1988) 31 YB 8.

Article 5. Territorial application/Application territoriale

1. Any High Contracting Party may, at the time of signature or ratification of this Protocol, or at any time thereafter, communicate to the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe a declaration stating the extent to which it undertakes that the provisions of this Protocol shall apply to such of the territories for the international relations of which it is responsible as are named therein.

2. Any High Contracting Party which has communicated a declaration in virtue of the preceding paragraph may, from time to time, communicate a further declaration modifying the terms of any former declaration or terminating the application of the provisions of this Protocol in respect of any territory.

3. A declaration made in accordance with this Article shall be deemed to have been made in accordance with paragraph 1 of Article 56 of the Convention.

4. The territory of any State to which this Protocol applies by virtue of ratification or acceptance by that State, and each territory to which this Protocol is applied by virtue of a declaration by that State under this Article, shall be treated as separate territories for the purpose of the references in Articles 2 and 3 to the territory of a State.

5. Any State which has made a declaration in accordance with paragraph 1 or 2 of this Article may at any time thereafter declare on behalf of one or more of the territories to which the declaration relates that it accepts the competence of the Court to receive applications from individuals, non-governmental organisations or groups of individuals as provided in Article 34 of the Convention in respect of all or any of Articles 1 to 4 of this Protocol.

1. Toute Haute Partie contractante peut, au moment de la signature ou de la ratification du présent Protocole ou à tout moment par la suite, communiquer au Secrétaire Général du Conseil de l'Europe une déclaration indiquant la mesure dans laquelle elle s'engage à ce que les dispositions du présent Protocole s'appliquent à tels territoires qui sont désignés dans ladite déclaration et dont elle assure les relations internationales.

2. Toute Haute Partie contractante qui a communiqué une déclaration en vertu du paragraphe précédent peut, de temps à autre, communiquer une nouvelle déclaration modifiant les termes de toute déclaration antérieure ou mettant fin à l'application des dispositions du présent Protocole sur un territoire quelconque.

3. Une déclaration faite conformément au présent article sera considérée comme ayant été faite conformément au paragraphe 1 de l'article 56 de la Convention.

4. Le territoire de tout Etat auquel le présent Protocole s'applique en vertu de sa ratification ou de son acceptation par ledit Etat, et chacun des territoires auxquels le Protocole s'applique en vertu d'une déclaration souscrite par ledit Etat conformément au présent article, seront considérés comme des territoires distincts aux fins des références au territoire d'un Etat faites par les articles 2 et 3.

5. Tout Etat qui a fait une déclaration conformément au paragraphe 1 ou 2 du présent article peut, à tout moment par la suite, déclarer relativement à un ou plusieurs des territoires visés dans cette déclaration qu'il accepte la compétence de la Cour pour connaître des requêtes de personnes physiques, d'organisations non gouvernementales ou de groupes de particuliers, comme le prévoit l'article 34 de la Convention, au titre des articles 1 à 4 du présent Protocole ou de certains d'entre eux.

Introductory comments

Territorial application of the Convention itself is governed by article 56 of the Convention. Clauses governing territorial application also appear in several of the Protocols. They are known as 'colonial clauses' and have actually been applicable to only the small number of European States with dependent territories. Such clauses constitute an exception to the general law of treaties, codified in article 29 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, by which a convention applies to the entire territory of a State Party. They have been criticized for permitting double standards but, in theory at least, they also permit the European State to show some deference for local autonomy.

Drafting of the provision

The Consultative Assembly draft of Protocol No. 4 contained a territorial application clause based on article 56 of the Convention and article 4 of Protocol No. 1. The rapporteur of the Legal Committee, Hermod Lannung, explained that in 1950 the Assembly had been opposed to such a colonial clause. However, he said, its objections did not convince the governments. As a result, he said, 'however regretfully' there was 'no alternative for the time being but to bow to that decision'.¹ Responding to the Consultative Assembly draft in a general sense, the United Kingdom objected that the Protocol 'does not seem to have been drawn up with much regard to the needs of dependent or non-metropolitan territories, and any Committee of Experts which may further consider [the draft protocol] should be instructed to bear such problems particularly in mind'.²

The Committee of Experts left the first three articles of the draft proposed by the Consultative Assembly essentially unchanged. There were concerns that the terms 'territory' and 'national of a state' in articles 2, 3, and 4 of the draft Protocol might lead to problems of interpretation in non-metropolitan territories.³ The Explanatory Report notes, for example, that the United Kingdom recognized a common citizenship designated 'citizenship of the United Kingdom and Colonies'. Nevertheless, this did not entitle them to move freely or to resist expulsion from one territory to another.⁴ Paragraph 4 was added in order to address this issue.⁵

Paragraph 5 was added by Protocol No. 11.⁶ It provides for declarations accepting the jurisdiction of the Court and is equivalent to similar provisions introduced with respect to article 56 of the Convention and the other protocols.⁷ The reference to an article of the

¹ Second Protocol to the Convention on Human Rights, Third Report presented by M. Lannung, Rapporteur, AS/Jur XII (11) 1, 8 June 1959, para. 15; Report on the Second Protocol to the Convention on Human Rights, M. Lannung, Rapporteur, Doc. 1057, 17 November 1959, para. 16.

² Memorandum by the United Kingdom, DH/Exp (60) 20, 28 October 1960.

³ Memorandum by the Human Rights Directorate on the proceedings of the Committee's first meeting, 7 to 11 November 1960, DX/Exp (60) 27, 10 February 1961, para. 25; Memorandum by the Human Rights Directorate on the Committee's second meeting, 24 to 29 April 1961, DH/Exp (61) 15, 7 August 1961, para. 18; Memorandum of the Human Rights Directorate on the Committee's third meeting, 2 to 11 October 1961, DH/Exp (61) 35 Final, 17 October 1961, para. 62.

⁴ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 4, para. 38. Also ibid., paras 39–42.

⁵ Memorandum of the Human Rights Directorate on the Committee's third meeting, 2 to 11 October 1961, DH/Exp (61) 35 Final, 17 October 1961, para. 63.

⁶ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 5.

⁷ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11, para. 113.

Convention in paragraph 3 was changed because of the renumbering of the Convention, and the heading 'Territorial application' was added by Protocol No. 11.⁸

Analysis and interpretation

Articles 2, 3, and 4 of Protocol No. 4 concern mobility rights and therefore the issue of territorial application inevitably arises in a unique manner. The issue of territorial application of article 4 was addressed by the Court for the first time in 2012 in a case concerning refoulement of migrants who had not yet entered the territory of the State Party. The Grand Chamber concluded that 'removal of aliens carried out in the context of interceptions on the high seas by the authorities of a State in the exercise of their sovereign authority, the effect of which is to prevent migrants from reaching the borders of the State or even to push them back to another State, constitutes an exercise of jurisdiction within the meaning of Article 1 of the Convention which engages the responsibility of the State in question under Article 4 of Protocol No. 4'.⁹ It did not refer to article 5 of Protocol No. 4. Clearly, article 5 could not apply because the high seas do not constitute a territory for the international relations of which the State Party is responsible. Nevertheless, article 5 highlights the conundrum of the application of the Convention outside the metropolitan territory of the State Party, whereby it may be held responsible for application of the Convention except in the territories to which article 5 applies. Only then is a declaration under article 5 necessary for the Court to exercise jurisdiction. A State Party with dependent territories that has ratified Protocol No. 4 is thus responsible for its observance outside the territory except in such territories to the extent that it has not made a declaration.

This anachronistic provision is only relevant to a few European States. The most important of those to whom it might be relevant is the United Kingdom. The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 4 indicates that article 5 was adopted primarily to address the concerns of the United Kingdom.¹⁰ But the United Kingdom has yet to ratify Protocol No. 4. Another European State with significant dependent territories is France, a State Party to Protocol No. 4. The Court applied article 5 in a case dealing with expulsion from French Polynesia of a European parliamentarian and environmental activist. According to the Court, article 5(4) 'requires that Polynesia should be regarded as a separate territory'.¹¹ The Court noted the French declaration, made at the time of ratification on 3 May 1984.¹²

Declarations

At the time of ratification, on 1 June 1968, Germany made a declaration pursuant to article 5 extending Protocol No. 4 to the territory of Land Berlin. It is no longer of any significance.

⁸ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 5.

⁹ Hirsi Jamaa and Others v. Italy [GC], no. 27765/09, § 174, ECHR 2012.

¹⁰ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 4, paras 39–42.

¹¹ Piermont v. France, 27 April 1995, § 44, Series A no. 314.

¹² Ibid., § 28.

France made a declaration at the time of ratification: 'The Protocol shall apply to the whole territory of the Republic, having due regard, where the overseas territories are concerned, to local requirements...'¹³

The Netherlands formulated a declaration on 23 June 1982, at the time of ratification, providing for application of the Protocol to the Kingdom in Europe and the Netherlands Antilles.¹⁴ Three years later, it informed the Secretariat-General that Aruba would obtain internal autonomy as of 1 January 1986, but that this would not affect the consequences in international law of treaties that applied previously to Aruba as a component of the Netherlands Antilles, including Protocol No. 4.¹⁵

At the time of ratification, on 16 September 2009, Spain made a declaration concerning the legal consequences were the Protocol to be extended by the United Kingdom to Gibraltar.

Further reading

Michael Wood, 'Protocole No 4, Article 5', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, p. 1061.

¹³ Ibid., § 28.

¹⁴ (1982) 25 YB EUR.CONV.RES./DECL. 1.

¹⁵ (1986) 29 YB 4.

Article 6. Relationship to the Convention/Relations avec la Convention

As between the High Contracting Parties the provisions of Articles 1 to 5 of this Protocol shall be regarded as additional Articles to the Convention, and all the provisions of the Convention shall apply accordingly.

Les Hautes Parties contractantes considéreront les articles 1 à 5 de ce Protocole comme des articles additionnels à la Convention et toutes les dispositions de la Convention s'appliqueront en conséquence.

Introductory comments

Protocols to the Convention come in two varieties: additional and amending. An amending protocol changes the Convention and can only enter into force after it has been accepted by all States Parties. An additional protocol, on the other hand, applies only to those States that have accepted it. Article 6 confirms that Protocol No. 4 is an additional protocol.

Drafting of the provision

The first draft of article 6 of Protocol No. 4 was prepared by the Legal Committee of the Consultative Assembly.¹ It proposed two options, one by which jurisdiction of the European Commission to receive applications from individuals and jurisdiction of the Court was automatic upon ratification, the other by which a supplementary declaration was required of a State that accepted Protocol No. 4. When the final draft of the Protocol was being considered by the Committee of Experts, paragraph 1 was endorsed without change by the Committee of Experts. In the Committee of Experts there was a preference for the second alternative, by which jurisdiction of the Convention organs would be subject to a supplementary declaration.² The second paragraph of article 6, concerning 'à la carte' acceptance of the jurisdiction to submit individual petitions, read as follows:

Nevertheless, the right of individual recourse recognised by a declaration made under Article 25 of the Convention, or the acceptance of the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court by a declaration made under Article 46 of the Convention, shall not be effective in relation to this Protocol unless the High Contracting Party concerned has made a statement recognising such right, or accepting such jurisdiction, in respect of all or any of Articles 1 to 4 of the Protocol.

Paragraph 2 was removed by Protocol No. 11, making it henceforth impossible for a State to ratify the Protocol but exclude the jurisdiction of the Court to consider individual ¹ Resolution (60) 6, 22 March 1960.

² Memorandum by the Human Rights Directorate on the proceedings of the Committee's first meeting, 7 to 11 November 1960, DX/Exp (60) 27, 10 February 1961, paras 70-72; Memorandum of the Human Rights Directorate on the Committee's third meeting, 2 to 11 October 1961, DH/Exp (61) 35 Final, 17 October 1961, para. 64; Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 4, paras 43-44.

applications, except with respect to non-metropolitan territories.³ No State Party ever made a partial acceptance of jurisdiction as authorized by paragraph 2. The heading 'Relationship to the Convention' was also added by Protocol No. 11.⁴

Analysis and interpretation

Article 6(2) of Protocol No. 4 was invoked by Turkey in the Loizidou case to bolster its claim to be able to make an à la carte declaration recognizing the jurisdiction of the Commission to receive individual applications that was confined to its metropolitan territory.⁵ The Court rejected Turkey's argument, noting that 'even if it had been established, which is not the case, that restrictions, other than those ratione temporis, were considered permissible under Articles 25 and 46 (art. 25, art. 46) at a time when a minority of the present Contracting Parties adopted the Convention, such evidence could not be decisive'.⁶

Further reading

Pierre-Henri Imbert, 'Protocole No 4, Article 6', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, p. 1063-4.

³ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(5)(c).

⁴ Ibid., art. 2(5)(a).

⁵ Loizidou v. Turkey (Preliminary objections), 23 March 1995, § 67, Series A no. 310.

⁶ Ibid., § 71.

Article 7. Signature and ratification/Signature et ratification

1. This Protocol shall be open for signature by the Members of the Council of Europe who are the signatories of the Convention; it shall be ratified at the same time as or after the ratification of the Convention. It shall enter into force after the deposit of five instruments of ratification. As regards any signatory ratifying subsequently, the Protocol shall enter into force at the date of the deposit of its instrument of ratification.

2. The instruments of ratification shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe, who will notify all Members of the names of those who have ratified.

1. Le présent Protocole est ouvert à la signature des membres du Conseil de l'Europe, signataires de la Convention; il sera ratifié en même temps que la Convention ou après la ratification de celle-ci. Il entrera en vigueur après le dépôt de cinq instruments de ratification. Pour tout signataire qui le ratifiera ultérieurement, le Protocole entrera en vigueur dès le dépôt de l'instrument de ratification.

2. Les instruments de ratification seront déposés près le Secrétaire Général du Conseil de l'Europe qui notifiera à tous les membres les noms de ceux qui l'auront ratifié.

Introductory comments

This article is closely related to article 59 of the Convention, also entitled 'Signature and ratification'.

Drafting of the provision

The text of article 7 proposed by the Consultative Assembly was based on article 6 of Protocol No. 1. The number of ratifications required for entry into force was set at five rather than ten, as it was in Protocol No. 1.¹ The rapporteur summarily justified this by stating that entry into force 'should be expedited'.² The text proposed by the Parliamentary Assembly was retained without change by the Committee of Experts and, according to the Explanatory Report, 'requires no comment'.³ The heading 'Signature and ratification' was added pursuant to the provisions of Protocol No. 11.⁴

Analysis and interpretation

The signature and ratification provision of Protocol No. 4 deals with some of the issues that also arise with respect to article 59 of the Convention and with article 6 of Protocol

¹ Recommendation 234 (1960), Draft for a Second Protocol to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms; Preparatory work on the Draft Second Protocol to the Convention on Human Rights, Appended to Recommendation 234 (1960) of the Consultative Assembly. XI. Article 9 of the Draft—Signature, Ratification, Entry into Force—Memorandum presented by the Directorate of Human Rights, DH/Exp (60) 19, 28 October 1960.

² Report on the Second Protocol to the Convention on Human Rights, M. Lannung, Rapporteur, Doc. 1057, 17 November 1959.

³ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 4, para. 45.

⁴ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(5)(a).

No. 1. The reader is referred to the relevant chapters in this Commentary. The only difference with the corresponding provision of Protocol No. 1 is the requirement in article 7 of five ratifications rather than ten for entry into force.

Protocol No. 4 was opened for signature on 16 September 1963. Ten of the fourteen Member States of the Council of Europe signed the Protocol on that date: Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Germany, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, Norway, the United Kingdom, and Sweden. Norway was the first State to ratify Protocol No. 4, followed by Sweden, Denmark, Iceland, and Luxembourg. It entered into force on 2 May 1968. All States Parties to the Convention have signed Protocol No. 4 with the exception of Greece and Switzerland. The United Kingdom, which signed on 16 September 1963, and Turkey, which signed on 19 October 1992, have yet to ratify Protocol No. 4. When the Council of Europe was enlarged during the 1990s with the membership of many States from Central and Eastern Europe, ratification of Protocol No. 4 within a year of becoming a member of the organization was one of the undertakings that were made.⁵

The final paragraph of article 7 concerns the role of the depositary. This text is shorter than the corresponding provision in article 59 of the Convention. Although this is not specified, the Secretary General assumes the role of depositary and fulfils the various functions associated with that role in addition to those explicitly set out in article 7.

Further reading

Pierre-Henri Imbert, 'Protocole No 4, Article 7', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, p. 1065–6.

⁵ E.g., Application by Ukraine for membership of the Council of Europe, Opinion 190 (1995), para. 12.1; Application by Russia for membership of the Council of Europe, Opinion 193 (1996), para. 10.1; Application by Croatia for membership of the Council of Europe, Opinion 195 (1996), para. 9.2.

PART FIVE

PROTOCOL NO. 6 TO THE CONVENTION
FOR THE PROTECTION OF HUMAN RIGHTS AND FUNDAMENTAL FREEDOMS, CONCERNING THE ABOLITION OF THE DEATH PENALTY

Page 1

1. The first part of the document describes the general principles of the proposed system. It states that the system is designed to be flexible and adaptable to various situations. The system will be able to handle
a wide range of data and will be able to process information in a way that is consistent with the overall goals of the organization.

Preamble/Préambule

The member States of the Council of Europe, signatory to this Protocol to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, signed at Rome on 4 November 1950 (hereinafter referred to as 'the Convention'),

Considering that the evolution that has occurred in several member States of the Council of Europe expresses a general tendency in favour of abolition of the death penalty;

Have agreed as follows:

Les États membres du Conseil de l'Europe, signataires du présent Protocole à la Convention de sauvegarde des Droits de l'homme et des Libertés fondamentales, signée à Rome le 4 novembre 1950 (ci-après dénommée 'la Convention'),

Considérant que les développements intervenus dans plusieurs États membres du Conseil de l'Europe expriment une tendance générale en faveur de l'abolition de la peine de mort;

Sont convenus de ce qui suit:

Introductory comments

'Dans l'Europe unie de demain... l'abolition solennelle de la peine de mort devrait être le premier article du Code européen que nous espérons tous', wrote Albert Camus in 1957, the year he received the Nobel Prize for literature. These words appeared in an essay entitled 'Réflexions sur la guillotine' that was part of a volume Camus co-edited with Arthur Koestler.¹ Already, a movement towards universal abolition within the Member States of the Council of Europe was discernible. Yet, article 2(1) of the European Convention expressly acknowledges the death penalty as an exception to the right to life. Abolition came in stages rather than in one fell swoop. Adopted in 1983, Protocol No. 6 effectively amends this provision for ratifying States and imposes two obligations with respect to the death penalty in time of peace: not to pronounce it and not to implement it. The Committee of Ministers, in the Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 13, described Protocol No. 6 as a 'landmark stage' in the 'evolution in domestic and international law towards abolition of the death penalty'.²

Protocol No. 6 was widely but not unanimously accepted by Member States at the time of its adoption, in 1983. Writing in 1989, the Plenary Court said:

De facto the death penalty no longer exists in time of peace in the Contracting States to the Convention. In the few Contracting States which retain the death penalty in law for some peacetime offences, death sentences, if ever imposed, are nowadays not carried out. This 'virtual consensus in Western European legal systems that the death penalty is, under current circumstances, no longer consistent with regional standards of justice', to use the words of Amnesty International, is reflected in Protocol No. 6 to the Convention, which provides for the abolition of the death penalty in time of peace. Protocol No. 6 was opened for signature in April 1983, which in the practice of the Council of Europe indicates the absence of objection on the part of any of the Member States of the

¹ Albert Camus, 'Réflexions sur la guillotine', in Œuvres complètes, IV, 1957-1959, Paris: Gallimard, 2008, pp. 124-67, at p. 165.

² Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 13, paras 3-4.

Organisation; it came into force in March 1985 and to date has been ratified by thirteen Contracting States to the Convention...³

Protocol No. 6 provided a valuable legal tool that brought rapid change to new Member States such as Russia and Ukraine, where hundreds of people were executed annually in the years preceding the accession to the Council of Europe.⁴ When they joined the organization, in 1996, executions stopped abruptly and they have never resumed.

In the first years of the new century, Protocol No. 6 was surpassed by Protocol No. 13, which abolishes the death penalty at all times. Virtually all Member States in the Council of Europe have ratified Protocol No. 13. In 2010, a Chamber of the European Court of Human Rights held that in light both of Protocol No. 13 and consistent State practice, 'Article 2 has been amended so as to prohibit the death penalty in all circumstances'.⁵ Indeed, both Protocols concerning abolition of the death penalty have become obsolete as a result of the evolving interpretation of the Convention itself by the European Court of Human Rights.

Even at the time of its adoption, several members of the Council of Europe had either recently abolished the death penalty or were actively considering taking this step. A broader global movement towards abolition gathered momentum during the 1950s and 1960s. By the mid-1950s, increasingly progressive attitudes on the subject were visible in the negotiations of article 6 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. The Covenant's draft provision in 1949 on the right to life had inspired those who wrote the European Convention on Human Rights. But the drafting of the Covenant was not completed until 1966. Over the 1950s, as the right-to-life provision of the Covenant was reworked, it took on an increasingly restrictive approach to capital punishment, and even added a final phrase pointing to the goal of abolition. This development was largely the contribution of European States within the United Nations. Probably if the European Convention on Human Rights had been adopted in 1960 rather than in 1950, the text of article 2(1) of the Convention would have looked very different. Thus, within a few years of the adoption of the European Convention article 2(1) presented itself as a rather archaic and outdated provision.

Within the law of the European Union, the Final Act of the Amsterdam Treaty, which was adopted on 2 October 1997 and came into force on 1 May 1999, contains a 'Declaration on the abolition of the death penalty':

With reference to Article F(2) of the Treaty on European Union, the Conference recalls that Protocol No. 6 to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms signed in Rome on 4 November 1950, and which has been signed and ratified by a large majority of Member States, provides for the abolition of the death penalty. In this context, the Conference notes the fact that since the signature of the abovementioned Protocol on 28 April 1983, the death penalty has been abolished in most of the Member States of the Union and has not been applied in any of them.⁶

³ Soering v. the United Kingdom, 7 July 1989, § 102, Series A no. 161.

⁴ Capital punishment and implementation of the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty, Report of the Secretary General, UN Doc. E/2000/3, p. 13.

⁵ Al-Saadoon and Mufdhi v. the United Kingdom, no. 61498/08, § 120, ECHR 2010 (extracts).

⁶ Treaty of Amsterdam amending the Treaty on European Union, the Treaties establishing the European Communities and Certain Related Acts, OJ C 340, 10 November 1997.

It was soon followed by the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union. The text of article 2 of the Charter is clearly inspired by article 1 of Protocol No. 6, but it is broader in scope because there it is not confined to time of peace:

1. Everyone has the right to life.
2. No one shall be condemned to the death penalty, or executed.

Additionally, article 19(2) declares: 'No one may be removed, expelled or extradited to a State where there is a serious risk that he or she would be subjected to the death penalty, torture or other inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.'⁷

The impact of Protocol No. 6 has been felt far beyond Europe. For example, Protocol No. 6 inspired lawmakers in the United Nations and the Organisation of American States to adopt comparable abolitionist protocols within their human rights treaty regimes.⁸ Protocol No. 6 has been cited before domestic courts of non-European states, such as Canada, Zimbabwe, and South Africa.⁹ In United States v. Burns, decided in February 2001, the Supreme Court of Canada noted that 'a significant number of countries' had either signed or ratified Protocol No. 6 since it had last considered the issue of capital punishment, a decade earlier. This was taken as evidence of the international trend towards abolition of capital punishment.¹⁰

Drafting of the provision

In 1980, the Committee of Ministers asked the Steering Committee on Human Rights and the European Committee on Crime Problems to prepare an opinion on action to be taken with the aim of abolition of the death penalty, referring directly to the idea of an 'additional protocol'. The two Committees drafted a joint opinion concluding that it would be difficult to adopt an amending protocol because it seemed very unlikely to rally the support of all parties to the Convention. Instead, it recommended that an additional or optional protocol be considered. The two Committees observed that they had no mandate to draft such an instrument. In their joint opinion, the two steering committees reached the conclusion that 'the adoption of an additional protocol to the European convention on human rights, modelled on protocols 1 and 4, would be a possible solution'. During these meetings both the United Kingdom and Turkey manifested their opposition to the idea of any protocol. The United Kingdom insisted this was a matter for the conscience of individual parliamentarians. Turkey, where capital punishment was still being practised, simply did not feel it was in a position to abolish the death penalty.

In light of these reports, on 25 September 1981 the Committee of Ministers mandated the Steering Committee on Human Rights to prepare a draft additional protocol concerning abolition of the death penalty 'in peacetime',¹¹ setting a deadline of June 1982.

⁷ Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, 2010 OJ C 83/02.

⁸ Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, (1991) 1642 UNTS 414; Protocol to the American Convention on Human Rights to Abolish the Death Penalty, OASTS No. 73.

⁹ Kindler v. Canada, [1991] 2 SCR 779, pp. 809, 833; S. v. Makwanyane and Another, [1995] ZACC 3; Catholic Commission for Justice and Peace in Zimbabwe v. Attorney-General et al., [1993] 14 HRLJ 323.

¹⁰ United States v. Burns, [2001] 1 SCR 283, para. 87.

¹¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 6.

The Steering Committee met in November 1981 and again in April 1982, when it completed its report together with a draft additional protocol for submission to the Committee of Ministers.¹² At a meeting of Deputies in September 1982, the Steering Committee's draft additional protocol to the Convention was discussed and approved. The Secretariat was asked to prepare a synoptic report for the Committee of Ministers meeting in December 1982. The Committee of Ministers made no changes to the draft that had been accepted by the Deputies in September and formally adopted the text of the protocol in December 1982. Protocol No. 6 was opened for signature on 28 April 1983. It entered into force on 1 March 1985.

The Explanatory Report provides little insight into the substantive discussions concerning the drafting of Protocol No. 6. According to a United Nations document, during the drafting of Protocol No. 6 there had been suggestions that the Preamble be more extensive and that it include reference to both article 2(1) of the European Convention and to the right to life, similar to the approach followed in the Preamble to the Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.¹³

The heading, 'Preamble', was added by Protocol No. 11.¹⁴

Analysis and interpretation

The Preamble is succinct and makes no reference whatsoever to any substantive law. The contrast with the more elaborate provisions of Protocol No. 13 is apparent. The Preamble of Protocol No. 6 does not, for example, mention articles 2(1) or 3 of the Convention or suggest the relationship between these provisions and the Protocol. Nor does it refer either to the right to life or to the issue of inhuman treatment. The suggestion that capital punishment might be incompatible with substantive provisions of the Convention itself was probably avoided out of deference to the few Member States of the Council of Europe where the death penalty had not yet been abolished. Furthermore, a reference to the prohibition of inhuman treatment might be difficult to explain in an instrument that only partially abolished the death penalty.

Two important ideas are expressed in the second recital of the Preamble of Protocol No. 6: that there has been 'evolution' in 'several' member States, and that this evolution 'expresses a general tendency in favour of abolition of the death penalty'.

Evolution that has occurred

The second recital of the Preamble of Protocol No. 6 speaks of 'evolution that has occurred in several member States of the Council of Europe'. Certainly, at the time the European Convention on Human Rights was adopted the death penalty was still rather widely practised by member States. Although it had been in decline through much of Europe prior to the Second World War, capital punishment revived briefly for the post-war trials of war criminals and collaborators. Twelve of the defendants before the International Military Tribunal were sentenced to death and ten of them were actually ¹² Doc. H/INF (82) 1, p. 20.

¹³ UN Doc. A/C.3/35/L.75.

¹⁴ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(6)(a).

executed. Alongside the brief post-War resurgence of the death penalty in certain States of Western Europe, the States of the former European axis, namely the Federal Republic of Germany, Austria, and Italy, quickly abolished capital punishment, largely to distance themselves from the terrible excesses of the fascist regimes. Several German judges and prosecutors were convicted by an American Military Tribunal of crimes against humanity for the abusive use of capital punishment associated with their blind obedience to Nazi law.¹⁵

Of the original States Parties to the European Convention when it entered into force in 1953, only the United Kingdom and Ireland conducted executions subsequently. Ireland's last execution took place in 1954, although courts in the country continued to sentence people to death into the 1980s. The last executions in the United Kingdom took place in 1964. The Death Penalty Act of 1965 abolished capital punishment in the United Kingdom for an experimental period that became permanent following 1969 resolutions of both Houses of Parliament. In the case of Germany, a constitutional provision adopted in 1949 prohibited capital punishment. Several of the first States Parties were de facto abolitionist, retaining capital punishment in legal texts that had fallen into disuse, or that only applied in time of war or emergency. Swedish law allowed capital punishment for military offences; the relevant provisions were repealed in 1973, followed by a constitutional prohibition in 1975. Norway had abolished the death penalty in peacetime in 1902, but it executed collaborators after the Second World War and only removed capital punishment from its legislation in 1979.

Some other Member States of the Council of Europe that were not yet States Parties to the Convention when it entered into force also retained capital punishment. Belgium and the Netherlands had recently carried out executions related to the Second World War. Greece imposed the death penalty during the early 1970s; by then, it was no longer democratic and had briefly withdrawn from the Council of Europe. Turkey continued the practice of capital punishment until late 1984. It did not repeal the death penalty in law until 2004. France held its last execution in 1977 and removed capital punishment from the Penal Code in 1981. By 1983, when the text of Protocol No. 6 was adopted, seven more States had joined the Council of Europe. In none—Austria, Switzerland, Cyprus, Malta, Portugal, Spain, Liechtenstein—was the death penalty still being practised, although relevant legislative provisions remained in force for some of them.

The first United Nations quinquennial report on capital punishment, published in 1974, indicated the status of the death penalty for Member States, including those in the Council of Europe. Only five Council of Europe Member States were deemed to be fully abolitionist: Austria, Finland, Germany, Iceland, and Sweden. Several others were described as 'abolitionist by law for ordinary crimes only': Denmark, Italy, Malta, the Netherlands, Norway, and the United Kingdom. Belgium and Luxembourg were labelled 'abolitionist by custom'. Four States were considered 'retentionist': Cyprus, France, Ireland, and Turkey.¹⁶ Switzerland was not listed as it did not then belong to the United Nations. In his conclusions, the Secretary General said that '[i]t remains extremely doubtful whether there is any progression towards the restriction of the Use of the death penalty'. Nevertheless, 'in the face of a considerable upsurge in terrorism, the ¹⁵ United States v. Alstötter et al. (Justice case), (1951) 3 TWC 954 (US Military Tribunal), at pp. 1025, 1028, 1154–5.

¹⁶ Capital Punishment, Report of the Secretary General, UN Doc. E/5616, Annex I, pp. 2–3.

British Parliament voted overwhelmingly against the reintroduction of capital punishment and urged other countries to follow its example'.¹⁷

The United Nations Secretary General again reported on changes to the status of capital punishment in the world, including Western Europe, in 1979 and 1984. According to the 1979 report,

Major legal changes leading towards the abolition of capital punishment were reported by countries in Western Europe and North America, where Portugal in 1977, Denmark in 1978, and Luxembourg and Norway in 1979 became completely abolitionist. In 1978, Spain abolished the death penalty under ordinary penal law, and replaced it by 30 years' imprisonment... Legislative initiatives seeking the general abolition of capital punishment in the Netherlands were announced in 1977 and in France legislative initiatives seeking the reduction and the total abolition of the death penalty were undertaken during the period under review... In the United Kingdom a motion that the death penalty be made available to the courts was defeated in the House of Commons in 1979.¹⁸

According to the 1984 report:

In Western Europe, France, the Netherlands and Norway totally abolished capital punishment. Norway, however, only reaffirmed in 1981 its decision of 1902 to abolish the death penalty, while the Netherlands in 1983 extended the abolition of capital punishment to military crimes... France first renounced its retentionist position four years ago. In the reply of France, it was stated that: 'Rejection of capital punishment—constantly called for by major philosophical trends and recommended by international authorities (United Nations, Council of Europe, Assemblies of the European Communities)—was one of the objectives of the candidates for the presidential and legislative elections in favour of whom the French electorate decided in 1981'.¹⁹

Liechtenstein and Turkey were the only Council of Europe Member States to be indicated as retentionist. All the others were described as abolitionist either in law or in practice. Thus, when Protocol No. 6 was adopted there was indeed a very noticeable evolution in the law and practice of 'several' of the member States of the Council of Europe.

The only real exception at the time was Turkey (Liechtenstein's last reported execution was in 1789), where no significant progressive development on the subject had yet taken place.²⁰ After the adoption of Protocol No. 6, Turkey continued to pronounce the penalty for another fifteen years. On 29 June 1999, Abdullah Öcalan was sentenced to death by the Second State Security Court, pursuant to article 125 of the Turkish Penal Code. The Turkish Court of Cassation confirmed the death sentence on 25 November 1999. On 30 November 1999, the European Court of Human Rights requested Turkey 'to take all necessary measures to ensure that the death penalty is not carried out so as to enable the Court to proceed effectively with the examination of the admissibility and merits of the applicant's complaints under the Convention'.²¹ Turkey signed and ratified Protocol No. 6 in 2003.

¹⁷ Ibid., para. 48.

¹⁸ UN Doc. E/1980/9, para. 26.

¹⁹ UN Doc. E/1985/43, paras 18–19.

²⁰ Semih Gemilmaz, 'The Death Penalty in Turkey (1920–2001): Facts, Truths and Illusions', (2002) 13 Criminal Law Forum 91.

²¹ Ocalan v. Turkey (interim measures), no. 46221/99, 30 November 1999.

A general tendency in favour of abolition

That there is 'a general tendency in favour of abolition of the death penalty' is also stated in the second recital of the Preamble to Protocol No. 6. This proposition is, of course, linked to the preceding affirmation of the evolution in the law and practice of 'several' Member States. Seemingly obvious, especially with the hindsight of three decades and the confirmation of the 'general tendency' around the globe, in 1983 this represented an assessment of the situation that might not have been universally shared. Pessimists have frequently considered that progressive developments on capital punishment are fragile and ephemeral. But even the most optimistic of those who drafted Protocol No. 6 would probably have hesitated if it was suggested that by 2000 the death penalty would have disappeared totally, not only from western Europe but also from virtually all of central and eastern Europe. Yet it did.

The 2009 report of the United Nations Secretary General confirms the 'general tendency' in Europe but also in much of the rest of the world. Moreover, the report demonstrates that the tendency is solid and, apparently, irreversible. A reversion to capital punishment, whether abolished de jure or as a result of consistent practice, is almost unknown. It has never taken place in modern Europe. The 'tendency' is consolidated through constitutional amendments, judicial decisions, and additional legal instruments, including Protocol No. 13 to the European Convention, the Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union.

Further reading

- A. Adinolfi, 'Premier instrument international sur l'abolition de la peine de mort', (1987) 58 Revue internationale de droit pénal 321.
- Gilbert Guillaume, 'Protocole No 6, Articles 1-4', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 1067-72.
- Erik Harremoes, 'The Council of Europe and Its Efforts to Promote the Abolition of the Death Penalty', (1986) 12-13 Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Newsletter 62.
- Harris et al., Law of the European Convention, pp. 745-6.
- Peter Leuprecht, 'The First International Instrument for the Abolition of the Death Penalty', (1983) 2 Forum 2.
- William A. Schabas, The Abolition of the Death Penalty in International Law, 3rd edn, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2003.
- William A. Schabas, 'A Step to Universal Abolition of the Death Penalty: Protocol No. 6 to the European Convention', in Olivier Delas and Michaela Leuprecht, eds, Liber Amicorum Peter Leuprecht, Brussels: Bruylant, 2012, pp. 297-320.
- Jon Yorke, 'The Right to Life and Abolition of the Death Penalty in the Council of Europe', (2009) 34 European Law Review 205.
- Jon Yorke, 'Inhuman and Degrading Punishment and Abolition of the Death Penalty in the Council of Europe', (2010) 16 European Public Law 77.

Article 1. Abolition of the death penalty/Abolition de la peine de mort

The death penalty shall be abolished. No one shall be condemned to such penalty or executed. La peine de mort est abolie. Nul ne peut être condamné à une telle peine ni exécuté.

Introductory comments

Article 1 of Protocol No. 6 establishes three principles: the death penalty shall be abolished; no one may be condemned to death; and no one may be executed. The Explanatory Report says that article 1 'affirms the principle of the abolition of the death penalty'. Nevertheless, article 1 cannot be read without bearing in mind the exception in article 2 by which the death penalty may be imposed in wartime.

Drafting of the provision

The history of the drafting of the Protocol is discussed in the introductory chapter of this Commentary. Nothing in the Explanatory Report assists in understanding the drafting of article 1.

The heading, 'Abolition of the death penalty', was added by Protocol No. 11.¹

Analysis and interpretation

The texts of article 1 of Protocol No. 6 and article 1 of Protocol No. 13 are identical. This discussion of the analysis and interpretation applies to both provisions.

The English version of article 1 of Protocol No. 6 declares that 'the death penalty shall be abolished'. The Explanatory Report states that '[s]ubject to the situations envisaged in Article 2, a state must, where appropriate, delete this penalty from its law in order to become a Party to the Protocol'. The French version of the first sentence of article 1 seems somewhat different from the English: 'La peine de mort est abolie.' The French language formulation is clearly self-executing; in countries where the constitution provides for direct implementation of international treaties, the French version is of some assistance.²

Abolition of the death penalty

Article 1 'affirms the principle of the abolition of the death penalty'.³ In Protocol No. 6, of course, this 'principle' is subject to the wartime exception set out in article 2. In Protocol No. 13, the principle is stated in a more absolute manner. When Protocol No. 13 was being adopted, the Rapporteur of the Parliamentary Assembly argued that it should include an explicit repeal of the reference to capital punishment that is comprised in article 2(1) of the Convention. In effect, the Protocol would be of a mixed nature, additional from its entry into force and amending once all States Parties to the Convention had deposited their instruments of ratification.⁴

¹ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(6)(a).

² Gilbert Guillaume, 'Protocole No 6, Articles 1-4', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 1067-72, at p. 1068.

³ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 6; Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 13, para. 14.

The abolition of the death penalty requires that a State delete the penalty from its domestic law in order to become a Party to the Protocol.⁵ The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 13 states that the first sentence of article 1 'entails the obligation to abolish this penalty in all circumstances, including for acts committed in time of war or of imminent threat of war'.⁶

The right not to be subjected to the death penalty

The Explanatory Reports on both Protocols state that '[t]he second sentence of this article aims to underline the fact that the right guaranteed is a subjective right of the individual'.⁷ The second sentence leaves no doubt that an alleged violation of article 1 provides a person with recourse to the Convention organs for what the Court has described as 'the right not to be subjected to the death penalty'.⁸ According to the Court,

Judicial execution involves the deliberate and premeditated destruction of a human being by the State authorities. Whatever the method of execution, the extinction of life involves some physical pain. In addition, the foreknowledge of death at the hands of the State must inevitably give rise to intense psychological suffering. The fact that the imposition and use of the death penalty negates fundamental human rights has been recognised by the Member States of the Council of Europe.⁹

Direct violations of article 1 by States Parties to one or both of the Protocols, in the sense that they have failed to abolish the death penalty, have not taken place. The very modest amount of litigation concerning the provision has involved the extraterritorial application of capital punishment by a third State resulting from extradition or refoulement by a State Party. Early decisions of the European Commission under Protocol No. 6 expressed some hesitation on its application in extradition and refoulement cases.¹⁰ The position the Commission adopted was more conservative than the view taken by the French Conseil d'État, which expressed the view that Protocol No. 6 established a European ordre public prohibiting extradition in capital cases.¹¹ On similar lines, the Supreme Court of the ⁴ Draft Protocol to the European Convention on Human Rights concerning the Abolition of the Death Penalty in All Circumstances, Report, Doc. 9316, para. 11.

⁵ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 6.

⁶ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 13, para. 14.

⁷ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 6; Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 13, para. 14.

⁸ Al-Saadoon and Mufdhi v. the United Kingdom, no. 61498/08, § 115, ECHR 2010 (extracts).

⁹ Ibid.; Al Nashiri v. Poland, no. 28761/11, § 577, 24 July 2014.

¹⁰ X v. the Netherlands, no. 15216/89, Commission decision of 16 January 1991; Y v. the Netherlands, no. 16531/90, Commission decision of 16 January 1991, (1991) 34 YB 31, DR 68, p. 299; Aylor-Davis v. France, no. 22742/93, Commission decision of 20 January 1994, DR 76, p. 164; Alla Raidl v. Austria, no. 25342/94, Commission decision of 4 September 1995, (1995) 38 YB 132, DR 82-A, p. 134.

¹¹ Fidan, (1987) II Rec. Dalloz-Sirey 305 (Conseil d'État); Gacem, (1988) I Semaine juridique IV-86 (Conseil d'État), 14 December 1987. Fidan was cited by Judge De Meyer in his concurring opinion in Soering v. the United Kingdom, 7 July 1989, Concurring opinion of Judge de Meyer, fns 6, 7, Series A no. 161. See also the reference to Fidan, invoked by the French government, in B. v. France, no. 13706/88, Commission decision of 9 December 1988, and to both Fidan and Gacem in Droz and Janousek v. France and Spain, 26 June 1992, § 110, Series A no. 240.

Netherlands invoked the Protocol in refusing to return a United States serviceman to the custody of his country,¹² although required to do so by the NATO Status of Forces Agreement, because of the threat the death penalty would be imposed. The Dutch Court considered that Protocol No. 6 took precedence over the other treaty.¹³

The European Court of Human Rights has always had a clear position by which article 1 of the Protocols is violated in cases involving a real risk of execution in a third country. Several decisions hold that extradition may raise an issue under article 1 of Protocols Nos 6 and 13 if there is a real risk that the individual concerned may be sentenced to death by the receiving State.¹⁴ A detailed examination of the status of the death penalty in the receiving State must be undertaken in order to assess whether or not the risk of capital punishment is in fact genuine. In a case involving extradition from Ukraine to Kazakhstan, the Court looked at a range of sources, including reports from Amnesty International and the Organisation for Security and Cooperation in Europe, reaching the conclusion that there was no real risk.¹⁵ The Court reached a similar conclusion in a case involving extradition from Russia to Uzbekistan.¹⁶

When diplomatic assurances that the death penalty will not be imposed are provided, the Court has generally considered this sufficient to eliminate the risk.¹⁷ For example, in an Italian case, the Court said that nothing in the assurances given by the United States Attorney General suggested that 'en l'espèce les assurances en question n'étaient pas sérieuses et fiables'.¹⁸ This contrasts with the Court's very chary attitude to diplomatic assurances respecting torture and ill-treatment.¹⁹ The distinction can be explained by the fact that undertakings not to impose capital punishment take place within a fully legal framework, given that the death penalty itself is provided by law in certain States. Torture, on the other hand, is never authorized by law, and an undertaking not to conduct it is ultimately rather meaningless. If an undertaking is considered necessary, the situation in the third State suspected of conducting torture is already too dire. According to the United Nations Independent Expert on the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms while Countering Terrorism, 'unlike assurances on the use of the death

¹² Short v. The Netherlands, Supreme Court of the Netherlands, 30 March 1990, (1990) 76 Rechtspraak van de Week 358, (1990) 29 International Legal Materials 1378.

¹³ Agreement between the Parties to the 1949 North Atlantic Treaty regarding the Status of Their Forces, (1951) 199 UNTS 67. In 1995, the States Parties to the NATO treaty finalized the Agreement among the States Parties to the North Atlantic Treaty and the Other States Participating in the Partnership for Peace regarding the Status of Their Forces together with an Additional Protocol. Article 1 of the Additional Protocol states: 'Insofar as it has jurisdiction according to the provisions of the agreement, each State party to the present additional protocol shall not carry out a death sentence with regard to any member of a force and its civilian component, and their dependents from any other state party to the present additional protocol.'

¹⁴ Ismaili v. Germany (dec.), no. 58128/00, 15 March 2001; Bader and Kanbor v. Sweden, no. 13284/04, § 42, ECHR 2005-XI; Saoudi v. Spain (dec.), no. 22871/06, 18 September 2006; Hakizimana v. Sweden (dec.), no. 37913/05, 27 March 2008; Salem v. Portugal (dec.), no. 26844/04, 9 May 2006; Al Shari v. France (dec.), no. 57/03, 5 July 2005; Nivette v. France (dec.), no. 44190/98, ECHR 2001-VII; Einhorn v. France (dec.), no. 71555/01, ECHR 2001-XI; Al Shari v. France (dec.), no. 57/03, 5 July 2005.

¹⁵ Kaboulov v. Ukraine, no. 41015/04, §§ 101–103, 19 November 2009.

¹⁶ Ismoilov and Others v. Russia, no. 2947/06, § 119, 24 April 2008.

¹⁷ Boumediène and Others v. Bosnia and Herzegovina (dec.), nos 38703/06, 40123/06, 43301/06, 43302/06, 2131/07, and 2141/07, §§ 46, 67, 18 November 2008; Chentiev and Ibragimov v. Slovakia (dec.), nos 21022/08 and 51946/08, 14 September 2010; Salem v. Portugal (dec.), no. 26844/04, 9 May 2006; Nivette v. France (dec.), no. 44190/98, ECHR 2001-VII.

¹⁸ Cipriani v. Italy (dec.), no. 22142/07, 30 March 2010.

¹⁹ Saadi v. Italy [GC], no. 37201/06, §§ 55, 148, ECHR 2008.

penalty or trial by a military court, which are readily verifiable, assurances against torture and other abuse require constant vigilance by competent and independent personnel'.²⁰

In a case involving extradition from Sint Maarten, a Dutch territory in the Caribbean, to the United States, where an applicant complained of the threat of execution for murder in the State of Georgia, the Court summarily decided to strike the case. The reason was that counsel for the applicant had not replied to requests from the Court for documents. Nevertheless, this involved the Court concluding that there were 'no special circumstances regarding respect for human rights as defined in the Convention and its Protocols which require the continued examination of the case', in accordance with article 37(1) of the Convention.²¹ The decision does not indicate whether the Netherlands had obtained assurances from the United States that the death penalty would not be imposed. However, it states that the President of the Court had put factual questions to the respondent State and that, upon receipt of its reply, had decided not to indicate an interim measure in order to block the extradition.²²

On two occasions, the European Court of Human Rights has concluded that there was a violation of article 1. In Al-Saadoon and Mufdhi v. The United Kingdom, the Court found a breach of article 1 of Protocol No. 13 in circumstances where government authorities had handed over two suspects to Iraqi authorities without obtaining assurances that the death penalty would not be imposed.²³ In Al Nashiri v. Poland, of 24 July 2014, it held that by facilitating the transfer of an individual to the United States, where there was a real risk capital punishment might be imposed, Poland had violated articles 2 and 3 of the Convention taken together with Article 1 of Protocol No. 6 to the Convention.²⁴ The Court observed that the proceedings before American courts were still incomplete and that the risk to the applicant of capital punishment remained a reality. It held that 'compliance with their obligations under Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention taken together with Article 1 of Protocol No. 6 to the Convention requires the Government to seek to remove that risk as soon as possible, by seeking assurances from the US authorities that he will not be subjected to the death penalty'.²⁵ By the time the judgment was issued, Poland had ratified Protocol No. 13. However, it was not applicable ratione temporis to the events in question, they having taken place in 2002 and 2003. Protocol No. 6 entered into force for Poland on 30 December 2000.

Further reading

- A. Adinolfi, 'Premier instrument international sur l'abolition de la peine de mort', (1987) 58 Revue internationale de droit pénal 321.
 Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 700–1.
 Peter Leuprecht, 'The First International Instrument for the Abolition of the Death Penalty', (1983) 2 Forum 2.

²⁰ Report of the Independent Expert on the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms while Countering Terrorism to the UN Commission on Human Rights, UN Doc. E/CN.4/2005/103, 7 February 2005, para. 56.

²¹ Registe v. the Netherlands (dec.), no. 28620/09, 23 March 2010.

²² Ibid. News reports from the United States indicate that assurances were given: WTVM News, 24 July 2009.

²³ Al-Saadoon and Mufdhi v. the United Kingdom, no. 61498/08, § 115, ECHR 2010 (extracts).

²⁴ Al Nashiri v. Poland, no. 28761/11, § 579, 24 July 2014.

²⁵ Ibid., § 589.

- Erik Harremoës, 'The Council of Europe and its Efforts to Promote the Abolition of the Death Penalty', (1986) 12–13 Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Newsletter 62.
- Gilbert Guillaume, 'Protocole No 6, Articles 1–4', in Pectiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 1067–72.
- Hans-Christian Kruger, 'Protocol No. 6 to the European Convention on Human Rights', in The Death Penalty: Abolition in Europe, Strasbourg: Council of Europe Publishing, 1999, pp. 69–78.
- Khadine L. Ritter, 'The Russian Death Penalty Dilemma: Square Pegs and Round Holes', (2000) 32 Case Western Reserve Journal of International Law 129.
- William A. Schabas, The Abolition of the Death Penalty in International Law, 3rd edn, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2003.
- William A. Schabas, 'A Step to Universal Abolition of the Death Penalty: Protocol No. 6 to the European Convention', in Olivier Delas and Michaela Leuprecht, eds, Liber Amicorum Peter Leuprecht, Brussels: Bruylant, 2012, pp. 297–320.
- Jeroen Schokkenbroek, 'Abolition of the Death Penalty (Article 1 of Protocol No. 6)', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 911–35.
- Jon Yorke, 'The Right to Life and Abolition of the Death Penalty in the Council of Europe', (2009) 34 European Law Review 205 (2009).
- Jon Yorke, 'Inhuman and Degrading Punishment and Abolition of the Death Penalty in the Council of Europe', (2010) 16 European Public Law 77.
- Jon Yorke, 'The Right to Life and Abolition of the Death Penalty in the Council of Europe', in Jon Yorke, ed., The Right to Life and the Value of Life; Orientations in Law, Politics and Ethics, Farnham, UK: Ashgate, 2010, pp. 233–67.

Article 2. Death penalty in time of war/Peine de mort en temps de guerre

A State may make provision in its law for the death penalty in respect of acts committed in time of war or of imminent threat of war; such penalty shall be applied only in the instances laid down in the law and in accordance with its provisions. The State shall communicate to the Secretary General of the Council of Europe the relevant provisions of that law.

Un État peut prévoir dans sa législation la peine de mort pour des actes commis en temps de guerre ou de danger imminent de guerre; une telle peine ne sera appliquée que dans les cas prévus par cette législation et conformément à ses dispositions. Cet État communiquera au Secrétaire Général du Conseil de l'Europe les dispositions afférentes de la législation en cause.

Introductory comments

Article 2 sets out the sole exception to the principle of abolition stated in article 1 of Protocol No. 6. A State may make provision in its law for the death penalty in respect of acts committed in time of war or of imminent threat of war. According to the Explanatory Report, '[a] State can in fact become a Party to the Protocol even if its law (present or future) makes provision for the death penalty in respect of acts committed in time of war or of imminent threat of war'. Were it not for article 2 of Protocol No. 6, the adoption of Protocol No. 13 nearly two decades later would not have been necessary. The third recital to the Preamble of Protocol No. 13 states: 'Noting that Protocol No. 6 to the Convention, concerning the Abolition of the Death Penalty, signed at Strasbourg on 28 April 1983, does not exclude the death penalty in respect of acts committed in time of war or of imminent threat of war.'

When the United Nations began surveying domestic practice on capital punishment, in 1974, it distinguished between States that were 'abolitionist by law' and those that were 'abolitionist by law for ordinary crimes only', describing them as 'countries whose laws provide the death penalty only for exceptional crimes and/or under exceptional circumstances'.¹ At the time, eleven States were listed as fully abolitionist, while seventeen no longer imposed the death penalty for ordinary crimes. Several of the latter were members of the Council of Europe. Recognition that many States remove the death penalty in stages, initially removing it for 'ordinary crimes' but leaving it in force under certain conditions including time or war, provides a rationale for Protocol No. 6.

The corresponding protocols in the United Nations and the Inter-American systems are somewhat more robust. The Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights proclaims full abolition of capital punishment but allows States, at the time of ratification or accession, to formulate a reservation providing for 'application of the death penalty in time of war pursuant to a conviction for a most serious crime of a military nature committed during wartime'.² The Additional Protocol to the American Convention on Human Rights is similar.³

¹ Capital Punishment, Report of the Secretary General, UN Doc. E/5616, Annex I, pp. 2-3.

Drafting of the provision

The instructions from the Committee of Ministers to the Steering Committee on Human Rights were to draft a protocol providing for abolition of the death penalty 'in peacetime'. During the drafting, it was argued that the title should specify this point, but it was decided this was unnecessary. The intention of the drafters was apparently to avoid drawing attention to the wartime exception. They had considerable difficulty agreeing upon the text of article 2. Some would have preferred a general declaration abolishing the death penalty but allowing reservations in wartime, the approach taken years later by the United Nations and the Organisation of American States. Another proposal was a text declaring the death penalty abolished 'in peacetime'. This would have necessitated some definition of the term 'peacetime'. The result is a compromise, a principle accompanied by an exception but with no possibility of reservation.⁴

During the drafting, there were suggestions that the terms 'time of war or of imminent threat of war' be replaced by 'international armed conflict', the expression used in Protocol Additional I to the 1949 Geneva Conventions.⁵ However, the term 'time of war' was retained because the same expression is used in article 15 of the European Convention, where derogation is permitted 'in time of war or other public emergency threatening the life of the nation'.⁶

The heading of article 2 was added by Protocol No. 11.⁷

Analysis and interpretation

The Explanatory Report states that article 2:

clarifies the scope of the Protocol by limiting the obligation to abolish the death penalty to peacetime. A State can in fact become a Party to the Protocol even if its law (present or future) makes provision for the death penalty in respect of acts committed in time of war or of imminent threat of war. It is however specified that, where this is so, the death penalty shall be applied only in the instances laid down in the law and in accordance with its provisions. Furthermore, a state whose law makes provision for the death penalty in such cases must communicate the relevant provisions to the Secretary General of the Council of Europe. It is clear that any declaration made under this article may be withdrawn or modified by notification to the Secretary General.

² Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, (1991) 1642 UNTS 414, art. 2(1).

³ Protocol to the American Convention on Human Rights to Abolish the Death Penalty, OASTS No. 73, art. 2(1).

⁴ Gilbert Guillaume, 'Protocole No 6, Articles 1-4', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, p. 1067-72, at p. 1069.

⁵ Protocol Additional I to the 1949 Geneva Conventions and relating to the Protection of Victims of International Armed Conflicts, (1979) 1125 UNTS 3.

⁶ Jacques Velu and Rusen Ergec, La Convention européenne des droits de l'homme, Brussels: Bruylant, 1990, at p. 185.

⁷ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(6)(a).

However, the Protocol does not use the term 'peacetime'. The restriction authorized by article 2 is permitted 'in time of war or of imminent threat of war'. It is accompanied by conditions of substance and of form: the death penalty can only be imposed according to law, the provisions of such law being communicated to the Secretary General or the Council of Europe.

The only significant judicial application of article 2 of Protocol No. 6 is the work of the Human Rights Chamber of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Protocol No. 6 was directly incorporated in domestic law as a consequence of the 1995 Dayton Peace Agreement. The Chamber began by noting that exceptions to rights and freedoms guaranteed by the European Convention and its Protocols must be narrowly interpreted.⁸ It said that article 2 of the Convention, guaranteeing the right to life, is 'one of the most fundamental provisions' that 'enshrined one of the basic values of the democratic societies making up the Council of Europe'.⁹ Moreover, deprivations of life should be subject to 'the most careful scrutiny'.¹⁰ The Chamber said these observations were equally applicable to article 2 of Protocol No. 6: 'The Chamber must therefore construe this provision strictly and scrutinise carefully the whole circumstances surrounding the threatened execution of the applicant, including the relevant laws, in order to determine whether the execution would be compatible with Protocol No. 6 or not.'¹¹

Two judges of the Chamber issued a separate concurring opinion with their own interpretation of article 2 of Protocol No. 6:

As it is evident from the facts of the case, the applicant has committed the impugned acts in time of war, however, the sentence has not been executed so far, that is, during the wartime period. The main point at issue is the interpretation of Article 2 of the Protocol, namely: would it be possible for the respondent Party to execute the applicant in time of peace, provided that the requirements of Article 2 were met? In other words, how should the provisions of Article 2 be interpreted: do they imply that a state is entitled to apply the death penalty even in peace time for acts committed in time of war or imminent threat of war? Taking into account the primary aim of Protocol No. 6, which has been adopted by the contracting states with a clear intention to abolish capital punishment in peace time, and considering also the last developments in the penal policy of European democratic states (at this particular moment of development death penalty is regarded as an alien institution within the system of European democratic values), the answer should be a negative one.¹²

Specific issues discussed in the judgment, including the possible imposition of capital punishment during peacetime but for a wartime offence as well as the scope of the term 'prescribed by law' are discussed below.

Death penalty 'in time of war'

The expression 'in time of war' is used in article 15(1) of the European Convention and there is no good reason to interpret it differently in article 2 of Protocol No. 6. Indeed, there should be a strong presumption favouring the view that the Committee of Ministers intended the same meaning, absent indications to the contrary in the Explanatory Report.

⁸ Damjanović v. Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Human Rights Chamber CH/96/30, 5 September 1997, para. 29.

⁹ Ibid.

¹⁰ Ibid.

¹¹ Ibid.

¹² Ibid., Concurring opinion of Viktor Masenko-Mavi and Rona Aybay, para. 3.

The notion of 'imminent threat of war' may have been added in order to avoid debates about when war is formally declared, a practice that was once common and that is today essentially obsolete. The European Social Charter of the Council of Europe allows derogation 'in time of war or other public emergency', like the European Convention on Human Rights of which it is the companion in the area of economic, social, and cultural rights. The Charter provides specifically that '[t]he term "in time of war or other public emergency" shall be so understood as to cover also the threat of war'.¹³ Unlike article 15(1) of the Convention, article 2 of Protocol No. 6 does not extend the permissibility of restrictions to 'other public emergency threatening the life of the nation'.

'Time of war' should not be confused with the military death penalty. Some States provide for capital punishment in their military code but not in their general criminal law.¹⁴ The military death penalty is prohibited by Protocol No. 6 except, of course, in time of war. Unlike the Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which only permits the death penalty for military crimes of a serious nature, Protocol No. 6 establishes no limit ratione materiae on use of the death penalty during wartime. During the drafting of the Protocol, suggestions to restrict the death penalty in wartime to the 'most serious crimes' were rejected.¹⁵ In any case, the European Convention continues to apply, and an execution imposed in wartime for a crime that was not very serious could violate articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Various provisions of the Geneva Conventions and their Optional Protocols concern capital punishment, and these could also be applicable to the use of the death penalty in time of war. For example, article 68 of the fourth Geneva Convention prohibits imposition of the death penalty on civilian non-combatants except for espionage, 'serious acts of sabotage against the military installations of the Occupying Power', or 'intentional offences which have caused the death of one or more persons'.¹⁶

There has been some academic debate as to whether the 'war' contemplated by article 2 could be a non-international armed conflict. Some have taken the view that the Protocol only applies to international armed conflict, noting that a more explicit intent to extend the scope to non-international armed conflict would need to be expressed.¹⁷ This is probably an outdated view, given the tendency towards a blurring of distinctions between the law applicable to international and non-international armed conflict. In any case, in light of Protocol No. 13 the issue is entirely academic.

Although the Explanatory Report declares that the purpose of Protocol No. 6 is to abolish the death penalty in peacetime, in fact article 2 permits capital punishment for acts perpetrated in wartime, but it does not exclude the possibility of an execution for such acts taking place when the war is over.¹⁸ This problem presented itself before the Human Rights Chamber of Bosnia and Herzegovina in the case mentioned above. The Chamber ¹³ European Social Charter, (1965) 529 UNTS 89, art. 30.

¹⁴ Christine van den Wyngaert, 'Military Offences, International Crimes and the Death Penalty', (1987) 58 Revue internationale de droit pénal 737.

¹⁵ Gilbert Guillaume, 'Protocole No 6, Articles 1-4', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, p. 1067-72, at p. 1069.

¹⁶ Convention (IV) Relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, (1950) 75 UNTS 287.

¹⁷ Jacques Velu and Rusen Ergec, La Convention européenne des droits de l'homme, Brussels: Bruylant, 1990, at p. 185.

¹⁸ Damjanović v. Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Human Rights Chamber CH/96/30, 5 September 1997, para. 37. See also Maktouf and Damjanović v. Bosnia and Herzegovina [GC], nos 2312/08 and 34179/08, § 27, ECHR 2013 (extracts).

did not seem to think that Protocol No. 6 automatically ruled out an execution during peacetime for an offence committed in wartime. However, the Chamber noted a reference in the Constitution to the Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, an instrument that more clearly excludes the death penalty in peacetime than Protocol No. 6. It held that compliance with Protocol No. 6 required the observance of the Second Optional Protocol and that consequently the death penalty could not be imposed in peacetime.¹⁹

Prescribed by law

The second clause of the first sentence of article 2 says that if the death penalty is used in time of war or imminent threat of war, it 'shall be applied only in the instances laid down in the law and in accordance with its provisions'. This requirement, which seems broadly similar to other formulations of the rule of law in provisions of the European Convention, should especially be considered in light of articles 2 and 15. Article 2(1) authorizes capital punishment as a restriction on the right to life pursuant to 'a sentence of a court following his conviction of a crime for which this penalty is provided by law'. Article 15(2) prohibits derogation from article 2 'except in respect of deaths resulting from lawful acts of war'. If the rule of law requirement in article 2 of Protocol No. 6 may seem somewhat superfluous, possibly it is there to reinforce the argument that when capital punishment is imposed in wartime the requirements of articles 6 and 7 of the Convention are themselves non-derogable.

The Human Rights Chamber of Bosnia and Herzegovina referred to case law concerning other provisions of the European Convention imposing a requirement that measures be 'lawful' or 'in accordance with law'. Necessarily, any such measures must also be compatible with domestic law. The law must also be accessible and foreseeable. Thus, '[b]earing in mind these principles', the Chamber said that '[a]rticle 2 requires that before it can apply the legislature should have considered and defined the circumstances in which, exceptionally in the context of a legal system where the death penalty has been abolished, such penalty may nevertheless be applied in respect of acts committed in time of war or imminent threat thereof'.²⁰ Noting that the applicant had been convicted of genocide on the basis of a law of general application, the Chamber said this was not 'a valid basis for the application of Article 2 of the Protocol'.²¹ It held that another provision dealing with war crimes lacked the requisite specificity in that it did not make it possible to determine which crimes were subject to capital punishment and which were not.²²

Communication of the law to the Secretary General

By contrast with the comparable instruments in the United Nations and Organisation of American States systems, where the use of capital punishment in wartime can only be permissible if a reservation is submitted at the time of accession or ratification, Protocol No. 6 requires only that '[t]he State shall communicate to the Secretary General of the Council of Europe the relevant provisions' of the legislation in question. The Explanatory

¹⁹ Ibid.

²⁰ Ibid., para. 32.

²¹ Ibid., para. 33.

²² Ibid.

Report uses the word 'must'. It also indicates that 'any declaration made under this article may be withdrawn or modified by notification to the Secretary General'. Recognizing the possibility of 'modification' provides support for the position that a State could even introduce new legislation well after the Protocol had entered into force as long as it makes prompt communication to the Secretary General. It would seem that any applicable legislation in force at the time of ratification should be communicated to the Secretary General without delay.

There is no indication of the consequences of a failure to comply with the communication requirement. Obviously, it would be a violation of the second sentence of article 2. But it is not obvious that a death sentence pronounced or carried out in time of war in the absence of adequate communication to the Secretary General would also constitute a breach of article 1 of the Protocol. In this respect, it is important to recall the mandate given by the Committee of Ministers to draft an instrument to abolish the death penalty in peacetime, and the rejection of any possibility of reservation or derogation, with their own formalities of notification that are familiar enough in public international law.

Communications to the Secretary General have been made pursuant to article 2, by Switzerland, the Netherlands, Cyprus, and Ukraine. At the time of ratification of Protocol No. 6, these States had legislation allowing for the death penalty in time of war. Some States whose legislation allowed for the death penalty in wartime—Spain,²³ Italy,²⁴ and Malta²⁵—ratified the Protocol without making any declaration under article 2.

In the case of Switzerland, the communication states that the Swiss legal system 'allows the death penalty to be reintroduced on grounds of necessity ("droit de nécessité")'. The example is provided of such a declaration, in 1940, at the outbreak of the Second World War.²⁶ Switzerland's communication was withdrawn in 1997.²⁷

The communication by the Netherlands noted that 'bills for the abolition of capital punishment, insofar as it is still provided for under Dutch military law and Dutch regulations governing wartime offences, have been before Parliament since 1981. It should be noted, however, that under the provisions of the Constitution of the Netherlands, which came into force on 17 February 1983, capital punishment may not be imposed.' The Netherlands also pointed to legislation in force in the Netherlands Antilles and Aruba authorizing the death penalty for the crime of entering into an understanding with a foreign power with a view to inducing that power to engage in hostilities or war against the State, on the condition that the hostilities are carried out or the state of war occurs.²⁸

²³ The death penalty in wartime in Spain was also discussed in the Human Rights Committee: Third Periodic Report of Spain, UN Doc. CCPR/C/58/Add. 1 and 3, UN Doc. CCPR/C/SR.1018-1021, UN Doc. A/46/40, pp. 35-45. Spain made a reservation to the Second Optional Protocol that was withdrawn on 13 January 1998.

²⁴ Italy was challenged about its maintenance of the death penalty in wartime by Sir Vincent Evans in the Human Rights Committee: UN Doc. CCPR/C/SR.257, § 37. In 1994, Italy abolished the death penalty in wartime as well as in peacetime.

²⁵ Malta ratified the Protocol on 26 March 1991. Malta made a reservation to the Second Optional Protocol that was withdrawn on 15 June 2000.

²⁶ (1987) 30 YB 5-6.

²⁷ (1997) 40 YB 53.

²⁸ (1986) 29 YB 4.

When Cyprus ratified the Protocol, in 1999, it informed the Secretary General of several provisions allowing for the death penalty. Some apply not only in wartime but also during a 'state of emergency'.²⁹

The communication by Ukraine reads:

On 29 December 1999, the Constitutional Court of Ukraine ruled that the provisions of the Criminal Code of Ukraine which provided for death penalty were unconstitutional. According to the Law of Ukraine of 22 February 2000 'On the Introduction of Amendments to the Criminal, Criminal Procedure and Correctional Labour Codes of Ukraine', the Criminal Code of Ukraine has been brought into conformity with the above-mentioned ruling of the Constitutional Court of Ukraine. The death penalty was replaced by life imprisonment (Article 25 of the Criminal Code of Ukraine). The Law of Ukraine 'On the ratification of Protocol No. 6 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms concerning the abolition of the Death Penalty, of 1983' envisages retaining of application of the death penalty for offences committed in time of war by means of introduction of appropriate amendments to the legislation in force. Pursuant to Article 2 of the Protocol No. 6 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Ukraine will notify the Secretary General of the Council of Europe in case of introduction of these amendments.³⁰

Of interest is the final sentence, which in effect reserves the right of Ukraine to introduce new legislation concerning the death penalty within the limits permitted by article 2.

Further reading

- A. Adinolfi, 'Premier instrument international sur l'abolition de la peine de mort', (1987) 58 Revue internationale de droit pénal 321.
- B. Dunér and H. Geurtsen, 'The Death Penalty and War', (2002) 6 International Journal of Human Rights 1.
- Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, p. 702.
- Gilbert Guillaume, 'Protocole No 6, Articles 1-4', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 1067-72.
- Erik Harremoes, 'The Council of Europe and Its Efforts to Promote the Abolition of the Death Penalty', (1986) 12-13 Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Newsletter 62.
- Peter Leuprecht, 'The First International Instrument for the Abolition of the Death Penalty', (1983) 2 Forum 2.
- William A. Schabas, The Abolition of the Death Penalty in International Law, 3rd edn, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2003.
- Jon Yorke, 'The Right to Life and Abolition of the Death Penalty in the Council of Europe,' (2009) 34 European Law Review 205 (2009).
- Jon Yorke, 'Inhuman and Degrading Punishment and Abolition of the Death Penalty in the Council of Europe', (2010) 16 European Public Law 77.

²⁹ (2000) 43 YB 15-18.

³⁰ (2000) 43 YB 18.

Article 3. Prohibition of derogations/Interdiction de dérogation

No derogation from the provisions of this Protocol shall be made under Article 15 of the Convention.

Aucune dérogation n'est autorisée aux dispositions du présent Protocole au titre de l'article 15 de la Convention.

Introductory comments

As the Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 6 observes, under article 15 of the European Convention States may take measures derogating from their obligations 'in time of war or other public emergency threatening the life of the nation'. Article 3 of Protocol No. 6 is 'more restrictive' in its exclusion of any possibility of derogation. Some provisions of the Convention are deemed non-derogable, however. With the logical exception of Protocol No. 13, and of the protection against double jeopardy found in article 4 of Protocol No. 7, none of the other Protocols to the Convention establishes any of the rights it sets out as being non-derogable.

Drafting of the provision

There is no information on the drafting of article 3 in the Explanatory Report. The heading for article 3 was added according to the provisions of Protocol No. 11.¹

Analysis and interpretation

Although article 15(2) deems certain provisions of the European Convention to be not subject to derogation, the prohibition of capital punishment is the first norm contained in a protocol to the Convention to be placed in such a category. Subsequently, article 4(3) of Protocol No. 7 declared that the prohibition of multiple convictions for the same offence was non-derogable.

Like article 2 of Protocol No. 6, article 15(2) of the European Convention acknowledges the exceptional nature of wartime in that it allows exceptions to the right to life for 'lawful acts of war'. Allowing for derogation with respect to capital punishment would have weakened the largely symbolic message of Protocol No. 6. It would also have extended the possibility of capital punishment to acts committed in peacetime to the extent that they might occur during a 'public emergency threatening the life of the nation'.

Further reading

Gilbert Guillaume, 'Protocole No 6, Articles 1-4', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 1067-72.

¹ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(6)(a).

Article 4. Prohibition of reservations/Interdiction de réserves

No reservation may be made under Article 57 of the Convention in respect of the provisions of this Protocol.

Aucune réserve n'est admise aux dispositions du présent Protocole au titre de l'article 57 de la Convention.

Introductory comments

Reservations to the European Convention are permitted, subject to the terms of article 57, just as they are allowed for all multilateral treaties providing that they are compatible with the object and purpose of the instrument¹ and that no special rule is set out.² Article 4 of Protocol No. 6 is just such a special rule. Article 4 of Protocol No. 6 and the corresponding provision in Protocol No. 13 are the only blanket prohibitions on reservations in the European Convention system.

One of the drawbacks of an absolute prohibition of reservations is that it removes any flexibility in the ratification process and thereby hinders broad adherence to the treaty. On the other hand, when they are permitted, the scope of reservations can be difficult to control. The result may be the undermining of the integrity of the principles set out in the treaty. Article 4, like article 3, enhances the role of Protocol No. 6 as a declaration of fundamental principle.

Drafting of the provision

There is no information on the drafting of article 4 in the Explanatory Report. The original version of article 4 of Protocol No. 6 referred to article 64. This was changed to article 57 by Protocol No. 11 in light of the renumbering of the provisions of the Convention. The heading for article 4, 'Reservations', was added according to the provisions of Protocol No. 11.³

Analysis and interpretation

When reservations to treaties are allowed subject to certain conditions, as is the case with article 57 of the European Convention, difficulties arise in determining whether or not they are acceptable and compatible with the legal framework. The exclusion of reservations altogether appears to solve this problem. However, problems persist to the extent that although reservations may be permitted, interpretative declarations are not.⁴ If a State

¹ Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, (1980) 1155 UNTS 331, art. 19.

² For another example of an absolute prohibition of reservations, see Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, (2002) 2187 UNTS 90, art. 120.

³ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(6)(a).

⁴ Belilos v. Switzerland, 29 April 1988, Series A no. 132. See the discussion in the chapter on article 57 in this Commentary.

formulates a declaration at the time of ratification, it remains to be determined whether or not this may be a disguised reservation and therefore impermissible.

Article 2 of Protocol No. 6 actually contemplates the possibility that States make declarations to the Secretary-General and in one sense such declarations, indicating the content of legislation applicable to the death penalty in wartime, amount to something comparable to a reservation. Some of the communications made under article 2 indicate the existence of provisions allowing for capital punishment for acts that are not perpetrated in wartime or imminent threat of war. Application of these provisions would therefore constitute a violation of Protocol No. 6, irrespective of the communication. The reason is that the communication contemplated by article 2 is not in fact a reservation at all. It should therefore be unnecessary to examine the communications in order to determine whether they are in fact prohibited reservations.

States are also entitled to make territorial declarations in accordance with article 5 of the Protocol. Like reservations, they must be made at the time of ratification or accession. They may subsequently be withdrawn, in whole or in part, but they cannot be extended by a declaration that withdraws a territory initially subject to the Protocol from its scope.

Otherwise, there has only been one declaration formulated with respect to Protocol No. 6. At the time of ratification, Germany made an interpretative declaration to the effect that its non-criminal legislation is not affected by the Protocol. The German declaration states that its government considers the Protocol to contain no other obligation than to abolish the death penalty in its domestic legislation, something it points out that Germany has already done.⁵

Further reading

Gilbert Guillaume, 'Protocole No 6, Articles 1-4', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 1067-72.

⁵ (1989) 32 YB 5.

Article 5. Territorial application/Application territoriale

1. Any State may at the time of signature or when depositing its instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval, specify the territory or territories to which this Protocol shall apply.

2. Any State may at any later date, by a declaration addressed to the Secretary General of the Council of Europe, extend the application of this Protocol to any other territory specified in the declaration. In respect of such territory the Protocol shall enter into force on the first day of the month following the date of receipt of such a declaration by the Secretary General.

3. Any declaration made under the two preceding paragraphs may, in respect of any territory specified in such declaration, be withdrawn by a notification addressed to the Secretary General. The withdrawal shall become effective on the first day of the month following the date of receipt of such notification by the Secretary General.

1. Tout Etat peut, au moment de la signature ou au moment du dépôt de son instrument de ratification, d'acceptation ou d'approbation, désigner le ou les territoires auxquels s'appliquera le présent Protocole.

2. Tout Etat peut, à tout autre moment par la suite, par une déclaration adressée au Secrétaire Général du Conseil de l'Europe, étendre l'application du présent Protocole à tout autre territoire désigné dans la déclaration. Le Protocole entrera en vigueur à l'égard de ce territoire le premier jour du mois qui suit la date de réception de la déclaration par le Secrétaire Général.

3. Toute déclaration faite en vertu des deux paragraphes précédents pourra être retirée, en ce qui concerne tout territoire désigné dans cette déclaration, par notification adressée au Secrétaire Général. Le retrait prendra effet le premier jour du mois qui suit la date de réception de la notification par le Secrétaire Général.

Introductory comments

Territorial application of the Convention itself is addressed in article 56 of the Convention. Clauses governing territorial application also appear in several of the Protocols. They are known as 'colonial clauses' and have actually been applicable to only the small number of European States with dependent territories. Such clauses constitute an exception to the general law of treaties, codified in article 29 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, by which a convention applies to the entire territory of a State Party. They have been criticized for permitting double standards but, in theory at least, they also permit the European State to show some deference for local autonomy.

Drafting of the provision

In September 1962, the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe adopted several model final clauses for use by those involved in drafting treaties. These were subsequently revised in light of the work of the International Law Commission on the subject and the adoption of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties. A revised set of model final clauses was adopted in February 1980. The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 6 states that article 5 is based on the territorial application clause contained in the Model Final Clauses.¹ The heading, 'Territorial application', was added by Protocol No. 11.²

Analysis and interpretation

The territorial application provision of Protocol No. 6 is formulated on the basis of the relevant text in the Model Final Clauses. The wording is significantly different from the corresponding provision in Protocols Nos 1 and 4, which are very flexible, and seems closer to the text of article 56 of the European Convention. Article 5 of Protocol No. 6 seems to provide a State Party with the possibility of specifying any territory or territories, whereas the other territorial clauses in the Convention and the Protocols speak of 'territories for the international relations of which it is responsible'. They are more clearly premised on the presumption that a treaty applies to the entire territory, codified in article 29 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties. The general rule under the Convention is that it applies to the metropolitan territory as a consequence of ratification but that it only applies to a territory for whose international relations the State Party is responsible if a specific declaration to that effect has been deposited. That is the interpretation given to article 5 of Protocol No. 6 by the European Court of Human Rights in a case filed against Portugal by a Chinese national threatened with deportation from Macao. The European Court of Human Rights found it was without jurisdiction ratione loci because of the absence of such a declaration.³

The Netherlands ratified Protocol No. 6 on 25 April 1986. The instrument of ratification was accompanied by a declaration accepting the Protocol for the Kingdom of the Netherlands in Europe, the Netherlands Antilles, and Aruba.⁴ A declaration by Germany dated 5 July 1989 extended the protection of the Protocol to Land Berlin,⁵ something that became quickly obsolete with the reunification of Germany and the extension of the Protocol's scope to the entire German territory. With its instrument of ratification of Protocol No. 6, dated 20 May 1999, the United Kingdom accepted 'the said Convention [sic] for the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Bailiwick of Guernsey, the Bailiwick of Jersey and the Isle of Man, being territories for whose international relations the United Kingdom is responsible'.⁶

A declaration formulated by Azerbaijan is not, strictly speaking, contemplated by article 5, although it certainly concerns the territorial scope of the Protocol. Azerbaijan declared 'that it is unable to guarantee the application of the provisions of the Protocol in the territories occupied by the Republic of Armenia until these territories are liberated from that occupation'.

Further reading

Michael Wood, 'Protocole No 6, Article 5', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, p. 1073.

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 6.

² Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(6)(a).

³ Yonghong v. Portugal (dec.), no. 50887/99, ECHR 1999-IX.

⁴ (1986) 29 YB 4.

⁵ (1989) 32 YB 5.

⁶ (1999) 42 YB 7.

Article 6. Relationship to the Convention/Relations avec la Convention

As between the State Parties the provisions of Articles 1 to 5 of this Protocol shall be regarded as additional articles to the Convention and all the provisions of the Convention shall apply accordingly.

Les Etats Parties considèrent les articles 1 à 5 du présent Protocole comme des articles additionnels à la Convention et toutes les dispositions de la Convention s'appliquent en conséquence.

Introductory comments

In Soering v. The United Kingdom, the plenary Court explained that 'Protocol No. 6, as a subsequent written agreement, shows that the intention of the Contracting Parties as recently as 1983 was to adopt the normal method of amendment of the text in order to introduce a new obligation to abolish capital punishment in time of peace and, what is more, to do so by an optional instrument allowing each State to choose the moment when to undertake such an engagement'. The Court added that '[i]n these conditions, notwithstanding the special character of the Convention, Article 3 [of the Convention] cannot be interpreted as generally prohibiting the death penalty'.¹

In other words, Protocol No. 6 was invoked by the Court as if it were an obstacle to the progressive interpretation of the Convention rather than a development that would build momentum for the ultimate goal of total abolition. The view that the Convention cannot be taken as prohibiting the death penalty altogether has been affirmed on several occasions by the Court since Soering.² Nevertheless, as explained in more detail elsewhere in this Commentary,³ the position has now changed.⁴

Drafting of the provision

There is no information on the drafting of article 6 in the Explanatory Report. The heading of article 6, 'Relationship to the Convention', was added according to the provisions of Protocol No. 11.⁵

Analysis and interpretation

Article 6 of the Protocol explains that its provisions shall be considered to be additional articles to the Convention. As a result, the protection machinery established by the ¹ Soering v. the United Kingdom, 7 July 1989, § 103, Series A no. 161.

² Shamayev and Others v. Georgia and Russia, no. 36378/02, § 333, ECHR 2005-III; Ocalan v. Turkey [GC], no. 46221/99, § 162, ECHR 2005-IV.

³ See in particular the chapter in this Commentary on article 2 of the Convention.

⁴ Al Nashiri v. Poland, no. 28761/11, § 579, 24 July 2014; Al-Saadoon and Mufdhi v. the United Kingdom, no. 61498/08, § 120, ECHR 2010 (extracts).

⁵ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(6)(a).

Convention applies. Article 6 also clarifies the fact that article 2(1) of the Convention continues to apply in cases where the death penalty is imposed in time of war or imminent threat of war. According to Pierre-Henri Imbert, the fact that States parties to Protocol No. 6 are automatically subject to the jurisdiction of the Court is further evidence of the absolute character of abolition of the death penalty, which was the objective of the drafters of the Protocol.⁶

The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 6 states that article 6 'corresponds to Article 5 of the first Protocol to the European Convention on Human Rights and to Article 6, paragraph 1, of Protocol No. 4'. Readers of this Commentary are referred to the chapters on those provisions.

The Protocol itself remains lex specialis with regard to provisions ordinarily governed by the Convention but for which it establishes a special scheme, notably the matter of reservations. Where the Protocol is silent, such as with respect to denunciations, the ordinary rule in the Convention itself applies. Thus, the Protocol can only be denounced pursuant to the conditions set out in article 59. During the drafting of the Protocol, it was proposed that the terms of denunciation be made less onerous, for example, by providing for a notice period of six months but no minimum period of application of the Protocol.⁷ Some critics have noted that Protocol No. 6 does not prevent a State from reintroducing the death penalty, although this is obviously something that would involve denunciation of the relevant Protocol. The Rapporteur of the Parliamentary Assembly said that with respect to an obligation not to re-introduce the death penalty, 'one might argue that this is not necessary, since there is no withdrawal clause in the draft Protocol'.⁸ This is a misconception, however, because the denunciation clause applies to Protocol No. 6 as a consequence of article 6.

Further reading

Pierre-Henri Imbert, 'Article 65', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 943–56.

Pierre-Henri Imbert, 'Protocole No 6, Article 6', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, p. 1075.

⁶ Pierre-Henri Imbert, 'Protocole no 6, article 6', in L.E. Pettiti, E. Decaux, and P.-H. Imbert, eds, La Convention européenne des droits de l'homme, commentaire article par article, Paris; Economica, 1995, p. 1075.

⁷ Gilbert Guillaume, 'Protocole No 6, Articles 1–4', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, p. 1067–72.

⁸ Draft Protocol to the European Convention on Human Rights concerning the Abolition of the Death Penalty in All Circumstances, Report, Doc. 9316, para. 8.

Article 7. Signature and ratification/Signature et ratification

This Protocol shall be open for signature by member States of the Council of Europe which have signed the Convention. It is subject to ratification, acceptance or approval. A member State of the Council of Europe may not ratify, accept or approve this Protocol without previously or simultaneously ratifying the Convention. Instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval shall be deposited with the Secretary General of the Council of Europe.

Le présent Protocole est ouvert à la signature des Etats membres du Conseil de l'Europe qui ont signé la Convention. Il sera soumis à ratification, acceptation ou approbation. Un Etat membre du Conseil de l'Europe ne peut ratifier, accepter ou approuver le présent Protocole sans avoir simultanément ou antérieurement ratifié la Convention. Les instruments de ratification, d'acceptation ou d'approbation seront déposés près le Secrétaire Général du Conseil de l'Europe.

Introductory comments

This article is closely related to article 59 of the Convention, also entitled 'Signature and ratification'.

Drafting of the provision

In September 1962, the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe adopted several Model Final Clauses for use by those involved in drafting treaties. These were subsequently revised in light of the work of the International Law Commission on the subject and the adoption of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties. A revised set of Model Final Clauses was adopted in February 1980. With respect to signature and ratification, the Committee of Ministers proposed the following: 'This Convention shall be open for signature by the member States of the Council of Europe. It is subject to ratification, acceptance or approval. Instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval shall be deposited with the Secretary General of the Council of Europe.' This text of article 7 of Protocol No. 6 is based on this Model Clause, completed with the addition of a third sentence.¹

The title 'Signature and ratification' was introduced by Protocol No. 11.²

Analysis and interpretation

The signature and ratification provision of Protocol No. 6 differs from those of the Convention and Protocols No. 1 and No. 4 in that it provides for ratification, acceptance, or approval of the treaty. The other instruments were subject only to ratification. The Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties refers to 'ratification', 'acceptance', 'approval', and 'accession' as a description of the international act whereby a State establishes on the international plane its consent to be bound by a treaty.³ Article 7 of Protocol No. 6, which is based on the Model Final Clauses proposed by the Committee of Ministers, does not include 'accession', an act that is not preceded by signature. Many multilateral international treaties set a time limit for the signature of the instrument. States that do not sign the text within that time have no alternative but to accede to the treaty. Protocol No. 6 sets no time limit for the signature of the treaty, however.

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11.

² Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(6)(a).

The requirement in the text that a Member State of the Council of Europe may not ratify, accept, or approve the Protocol without previously or simultaneously ratifying the Convention clarifies an issue that can, in any event, hardly be in doubt. This also confirms the relationship between the Protocol and the Convention. Unlike the earlier additional Protocols, whose purpose was to add new rights to the Convention system, Protocol No. 6 is specifically directed at adjusting article 2(1) of the Convention. It would make no sense to ratify Protocol No. 6 without also ratifying the Convention itself.

Protocol No. 6 was opened for signature on 28 April 1983. On that day, twelve of the twenty-one States Parties to the Convention signed the instrument: Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, and Switzerland. All Member States of the Council of Europe have now signed and ratified Protocol No. 6 with the exception of Russia, which signed the Protocol on 16 April 1997 but which has never ratified. In its 2013 report to the United Nations Human Rights Council within the context of the Universal Periodic Review, Russia said that a Constitutional Court ruling of 19 November 2009 'finalises the legal ban on such punishment in Russia'.⁴

In 1994, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe adopted a resolution calling upon Member States that had not yet done so to ratify Protocol No. 6.⁵ The resolution praised Greece, which in 1993 had abolished the death penalty for crimes committed in wartime as well as in peacetime. It stated: 'In view of the irrefutable arguments against the imposition of capital punishment, it calls on the parliaments of all member states of the Council of Europe, and of all states whose legislative assemblies enjoy special guest status at the Assembly, which retain capital punishment for crimes committed in peacetime and/or in wartime, to strike it from their statute books completely.' It also affirmed that willingness to ratify Protocol No. 6 be made a prerequisite for membership of the Council of Europe. It concluded by urging all heads of State and all parliaments in whose countries death sentences are passed to grant clemency to the convicted.

In France, ratification of Protocol No. 6 provoked a debate in the National Assembly on the grounds that it would impinge on its sovereignty and violate article 16 of the Constitution.⁶ The matter was submitted to the Conseil constitutionnel, which noted

³ Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, (1980) 1155 UNTS 331, art. 1(b).

⁴ National report submitted in accordance with paragraph 5 of the annex to Human Rights Council resolution 16/21, Russian Federation, UN Doc. A/HRC/WG.6/16/RUS/1, para. 31.

⁵ Resolution 1044 on the abolition of capital punishment, 4 October 1994. See also Doc. 7154.

⁶ Journal officiel des débats parlementaires, Assemblée nationale, 4 July 1983, p. 2938; Journal officiel des débats parlementaires, Assemblée nationale, 21 June 1985, pp. 1867-89.

that it was constitutionally permissible to ratify the Protocol. It stressed the fact that the Protocol could always be denounced in accordance with article 57 of the Convention.⁷

Further reading

Louis Favoreu, 'La décision du conseil constitutionnel du 22 May 1985 relative au protocole no 6 additionnel à la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme', [1985] Annuaire français de droit international 868.

Pierre-Henri Imbert, 'Protocole No 6, Article 7', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, p. 1077.

⁷ Louis Favoreu, 'La décision du conseil constitutionnel du 22 May 1985 relative au protocole no 6 additionnel à la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme', [1985] Annuaire français de droit international 868.

Article 8. Entry into force/Entrée en vigueur

1. This Protocol shall enter into force on the first day of the month following the date on which five member States of the Council of Europe have expressed their consent to be bound by the Protocol in accordance with the provisions of Article 7.

2. In respect of any member State which subsequently expresses its consent to be bound by it, the Protocol shall enter into force on the first day of the month following the date of the deposit of the instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval.

1. Le présent Protocole entrera en vigueur le premier jour du mois qui suit la date à laquelle cinq Etats membres du Conseil de l'Europe auront exprimé leur consentement à être liés par le Protocole conformément aux dispositions de l'article 7.

2. Pour tout Etat membre qui exprimera ultérieurement son consentement à être lié par le Protocole, celui-ci entrera en vigueur le premier jour du mois qui suit la date du dépôt de l'instrument de ratification, d'acceptation ou d'approbation.

Introductory comments

In contrast with the Convention itself and Protocols No. 1 and No. 4, Protocol No. 6 has a distinct provision dealing with entry into force.

Drafting of the provision

The Explanatory Report does not provide information about the drafting of article 8. The heading of article 8, 'Entry into force', was added according to the provisions of Protocol No. 11.¹

Analysis and interpretation

Protocol No. 6 entered into force on 1 March 1985 after obtaining the five ratifications required by article 8.² When it was being drafted, there were suggestions that this be increased to seven and even ten, but the drafters eventually returned to the original suggestion made by the Steering Committee on Human Rights in 1979.³

Further reading

Pierre-Henri Imbert, 'Protocole No 6, Article 8', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, p. 1079.

¹ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(6)(a).

² Pierre-Henri Imbert, 'Protocole No 6, Article 6', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, p. 1079.

³ Gilbert Guillaume, 'Protocole No 6, Articles 1-4', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 1067-72.

Article 9. Depositary functions/Fonctions du dépositaire

The Secretary General of the Council of Europe shall notify all the member States of the Council of:

- (a) any signature;
- (b) the deposit of any instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval;
- (c) any date of entry into force of this Protocol in accordance with Articles 6 and 9;
- (d) any other act, notification or declaration relating to this Protocol.

Le Secrétaire Général du Conseil de l'Europe notifiera à tous les Etats membres du Conseil de l'Europe:

- (a) toute signature;
- (b) le dépôt de tout instrument de ratification, d'acceptation ou d'approbation;
- (c) toute date d'entrée en vigueur du présent Protocole conformément à ses articles 6 et 9;
- (d) tout autre acte, notification ou déclaration ayant trait au présent Protocole.

Introductory comments

Most multilateral treaties identify the depositary of the instrument. This is a government or organization responsible for various functions, the role being codified in article 77 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties. The function of depositary is not set out explicitly in the European Convention on Human Rights. Nevertheless, the inexorable conclusion is that this responsibility devolves to the Secretary General of the Council of Europe. Beginning with Protocol No. 6, Protocols to the Convention contain a provision entitled 'Depositary functions'.

Drafting of the provision

The text of article 9 of Protocol No. 6 is based on the relevant provision of the Model Final Clauses adopted in 1980 by the Committee of Ministers.¹ The only significant change is the removal of the reference to accession, given that States Parties cannot accede to the Convention and its Protocols. The title 'Depositary functions' was introduced by Protocol No. 11.²

Analysis and interpretation

Article 9 lists only some of the functions of the depositary. It is confined to notifying States Parties of the performance and deposit of various legal instruments listed in the provision. Articles 77 to 80 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties provide a much more detailed list of the tasks of the depositary. Most, if not all of them, are in fact carried out by the Secretary General of the Council of Europe, even in the absence of a specific reference in article 9 of Protocol No. 6, the Convention itself, and the other

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 11.

² Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(6)(a).

Protocols. These include keeping custody of the original text of the treaty and of any full powers delivered to the depositary, preparing certified copies of the original text, verifying the formalities of signature of various instruments, the correction of errors in texts or in certified copies of treaties, and the registration of treaties with the Secretariat of the United Nations.

Further reading

Pierre-Henri Imbert, 'Protocole No 6, Article 9', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, p. 1081.

PART SIX

PROTOCOL NO. 7 TO THE CONVENTION
FOR THE PROTECTION OF HUMAN RIGHTS AND FUNDAMENTAL FREEDOMS

Page 1121

... ..
... ..
... ..
... ..

Preamble/Préambule

The member States of the Council of Europe signatory hereto,

Being resolved to take further steps to ensure the collective enforcement of certain rights and freedoms by means of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms signed at Rome on 4 November 1950 (hereinafter referred to as 'The Convention');

Have agreed as follows:

Les Etats membres du Conseil de l'Europe, signataires du présent Protocole,

Résolus à prendre de nouvelles mesures propres à assurer la garantie collective de certains droits et libertés par la Convention de Sauvegarde des Droits de l'Homme et des Libertés fondamentales, signée à Rome le 4 November 1950 (ci-après dénommée «la Convention»),

Sont convenus de ce qui suit:

Introductory comments

Like the predecessor Protocols to the Convention, the Preamble of Protocol No. 7 is succinct and quite perfunctory. It might well have acknowledged that the impetus for its adoption was the entry into force of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, as well as the fact that it still did not complete the work of incorporating all of the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights within the Convention system.

Drafting of the provision

The Preamble is similar to the corresponding text of Protocol No. 4. The drafters of Protocol No. 4 rejected a more elaborate proposal from the Consultative Assembly out of concern that problems of interpretation could result. This explanation is probably valid with respect to Protocol No. 7, although there is no comment whatsoever on the Preamble in the Explanatory Report.

The heading 'Preamble' was added by Protocol No. 11.¹

Analysis and interpretation

The Preamble to Protocol No. 7 does not contribute in any significant way to its interpretation. It does not seem that it has ever been cited in case law of the Convention organs.

¹ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(7)(a).

Article 1. Procedural safeguards relating to expulsion of aliens/ Garanties procédurales en cas d'expulsion d'étranger

1. An alien lawfully resident in the territory of a State shall not be expelled therefrom except in pursuance of a decision reached in accordance with law and shall be allowed:

- (a) to submit reasons against his expulsion,
- (b) to have his case reviewed, and
- (c) to be represented for these purposes before the competent authority or a person or persons designated by that authority.

2. An alien may be expelled before the exercise of his rights under paragraph 1(a), (b) and (c) of this Article, when such expulsion is necessary in the interests of public order or is grounded on reasons of national security.

1. Un étranger résidant régulièrement sur le territoire d'un Etat ne peut en être expulsé qu'en exécution d'une décision prise conformément à la loi et doit pouvoir:

- (a) faire valoir les raisons qui militent contre son expulsion,
- (b) faire examiner son cas, et
- (c) se faire représenter à ces fins devant l'autorité compétente ou une ou plusieurs personnes désignées par cette autorité.

2. Un étranger peut être expulsé avant l'exercice des droits énumérés au paragraphe 1.a, b et c de cet article lorsque cette expulsion est nécessaire dans l'intérêt de l'ordre public ou est basée sur des motifs de sécurité nationale.

Introductory comments

Article 1 of Protocol No. 7 is a form of lex specialis with respect to article 13 of the Convention. The latter has been interpreted 'as guaranteeing an "effective remedy before a national authority" to everyone who claims that his rights and freedoms under the Convention have been violated'.¹ As noted in the Explanatory Report, 'an alien lawfully in the territory of a member State of the Council of Europe already benefits from certain guarantees when a measure of expulsion is taken against him', including those provided by articles 3 and 8 of the Convention, as well as other international instruments, notably article 3 of the European Convention on Establishment of 1955, article 19(8) of the European Social Charter of 1961, article 48 of the Treaty establishing the European Economic Community of 1957, articles 32 and 33 of the Geneva Convention relating to the Status of Refugees of 1951 and article 13 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.²

Although adopted in order to reconcile the Convention system with the rights guaranteed by the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Explanatory Report notes that article 1 of Protocol No. 7 'contains some important specifications'. Unlike article 13(2) of the Covenant, article 1 of Protocol No. 7 'determines the circumstances in which an alien may be expelled before exercising the rights laid down in paragraph 1'.³

¹ Klass and Others v. Germany, 6 September 1978, § 64, Series A no. 28.

² Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 7.

³ Ibid., para. 8.

Drafting of the provision

The ancestor of article 1 can be found in the November 1959 proposal of the Consultative Assembly for the addition to the Convention of a provision on arbitrary expulsion of aliens. The draft text of what was then designated as Protocol No. 2 but that became Protocol No. 4 when two other Protocols intervened read as follows: 'An alien lawfully residing in the territory of a High Contracting Party may be expelled only if he endangers national security or offends against ordre public or morality.'⁴ This was a substantive guarantee, a right of residence for non-citizens, that was far ahead of its time and that did not prosper. Subsequent paragraphs dealt with the procedural guarantees, but even this proved too difficult for the negotiators. Finally, the Committee of Ministers satisfied itself with article 4 of Protocol No. 4, the guarantee against collective expulsion of aliens.

The issue returned two decades later when Protocol No. 7 was being prepared. The Explanatory Report provides a modest amount of information about the drafting of article 1. It states:

Account being taken of the rights which are thus recognised in favour of aliens, the present article has been added to the European Convention on Human Rights in order to afford minimum guarantees to such persons in the event of expulsion from the territory of a Contracting Party. The addition of this article enables protection to be granted in those cases which are not covered by other international instruments and allows such protection to be brought within the purview of the system of control provided for in the European Convention on Human Rights.⁵

The heading, 'Procedural safeguards relating to expulsion of aliens', was added pursuant to Protocol No. 11.⁶

Analysis and interpretation

Article 1 of Protocol No. 7, like article 13 of the Convention itself, provides for a procedural remedy but does not guarantee a favourable result.⁷ In principle, under the Convention and its Protocols non-nationals do not have a right to remain on the territory of a State. When the right to remain on the territory of a State was affirmed in article 3(1) of Protocol No. 4, it was explicitly reserved to 'nationals'. The Convention organs have acknowledged that 'the High Contracting Parties have a discretionary power to decide whether to expel an alien present in their territory but this power must be exercised in such a way as not to infringe the rights under the Convention of the person concerned'.⁸

Non-nationals may, of course, be protected against expulsion by other legal norms, such as the guarantees against non-refoulement of the Convention on the Status of Refugees,⁹ the ⁴ Report on the Second Protocol to the Convention on Human Rights, M. Lannung, Rapporteur, Doc. 1057, 17 November 1959.

⁵ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 7.

⁶ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(7)(a).

⁷ Takush v. Greece, no. 2853/09, § 50, 17 January 2012; Aparicio Benito v. Spain (dec.), no. 36150/03, 4 May 2004.

⁸ Nolan and K. v. Russia, no. 2512/04, § 114, 12 February 2009; Bolat v. Russia, no. 14139/03, § 81, ECHR 2006-XI (extracts); Agee v. the United Kingdom, no. 7729/76, Commission decision of 17 December 1976, DR 7, p. 164.

⁹ Convention relating to the Status of Refugees, (1954) 189 UNTS 150, art. 33.

Convention Against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman and Degrading Treatment or Punishment,¹⁰ and the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance.¹¹ According to the case law of the European Court of Human Rights, States Parties may be responsible for violations in cases of expulsion, deportation, or refoulement of a person to a third State where there is a real risk of a violation of articles 2¹² or 3¹³ of the Convention, or of article 1 of Protocol No. 6 and Protocol No. 13,¹⁴ or of a 'flagrant denial' of fair trial rights.¹⁵ These extend even further than article 1 of Protocol No. 7 because they do not require that the victim be 'lawfully resident'.

Lawfully resident

The guarantees provided by article 1 of Protocol No. 7 only apply to an alien who is 'lawfully resident' in the territory of the State in question.¹⁶ Reference should be made to article 2 of Protocol No. 4, protecting the liberty of movement of a person who is 'lawfully within the territory' of a State Party. It is broader in scope to the term 'lawfully resident' in article 1. According to the Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, the word 'resident' is meant to exclude from the application of article 1 an 'alien who has arrived at a port or other point of entry but has not yet passed through the immigration control or who has been admitted to the territory for the purpose only of transit or for a limited period for a non-residential purpose'.¹⁷ Such an individual would probably meet the terms of article 2 of Protocol No. 4.

According to the Court, '[t]he notion of "residence" is akin to the autonomous concept of "home" developed under Article 8 of the Convention, in that both are not limited to physical presence but depend on the existence of sufficient and continuous links with a specific place'.¹⁸ In a case involving someone who had resided on the territory of the respondent State for many years, where he had enjoyed resident status, the Court said it did not 'appear plausible' that every time he took a trip abroad he would cease to be a resident, however short the absence.¹⁹ According to the Explanatory Report, article 1 applies both to aliens who have entered lawfully and to aliens who have entered unlawfully

¹⁰ Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, (1987) 1465 UNTS 85, art. 3.

¹¹ International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, UN Doc. A/61/448, annex, art. 16.

¹² Kaboulou v. Ukraine, no. 41015/04, § 99, 19 November 2009.

¹³ Soering v. the United Kingdom, 7 July 1989, § 88, Series A no. 161; Chahal v. the United Kingdom, 15 November 1996, § 74, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-V; Saadi v. Italy [GC], no. 37201/06, § 125, ECHR 2008.

¹⁴ Al Nashiri v. Poland, no. 28761/11, § 579, 24 July 2014; Al-Saadoon and Mufdhi v. the United Kingdom, no. 61498/08, § 115, ECHR 2010 (extracts).

¹⁵ Othman (Abu Qatada) v. the United Kingdom, no. 8139/09, § 258, ECHR 2012 (extracts); Zarmayev v. Belgium (dec.), no. 35/10, 27 February 2014.

¹⁶ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 9; Sultani v. France, no. 45223/05, §§ 87–89, ECHR 2007-IV (extracts); Sejdovic and Sulejmanovic v. Italy (dec.), no. 57575/00, 14 March 2002; Sulejmanovic and Sultanovic v. Italy (dec.), no. 57574/00, 14 March 2002; Nowak v. Ukraine, no. 60846/10, § 82, 31 March 2011.

¹⁷ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 9. Cited in Nolan and K. v. Russia, no. 2512/04, § 48, 12 February 2009.

¹⁸ Nolan and K. v. Russia, no. 2512/04, § 110, 12 February 2009.

¹⁹ Ibid.

but whose position has been subsequently regularized.²⁰ The notion of 'residence' is broader than that of 'physical presence' on the territory of that State.²¹

The word 'lawfully' is a reference to the domestic law of the State in question. Thus, a determination as to whether the residence is 'lawful' involves analysis of the application of national law.²² If the alien's admission and stay is conditional on certain conditions, such as a fixed period of residence, the person is no longer 'lawfully' resident if those conditions no longer apply.²³ Similarly, if a visa or residence permit has expired, the individual is no longer 'lawfully resident'.²⁴ The Explanatory Report makes reference to use of the term 'lawful residence' in other international instruments.²⁵ In particular, it notes article 11 of the European Convention on Social and Medical Assistance:

- a. Residence by an alien in the territory of any of the Contracting Parties shall be considered lawful within the meaning of this Convention so long as there is in force in his case a permit or such other permission as is required by the laws and regulations of the country concerned to reside therein . . .
- b. Lawful residence shall become unlawful from the date of any deportation order made out against the person concerned, unless a stay of execution is granted.²⁶

It also mentions section II of the Protocol to the European Convention on Establishment:

- a. Regulations governing the admission, residence and movement of aliens and also their right to engage in gainful occupations shall be unaffected by this Convention insofar as they are not inconsistent with it;
- b. Nationals of a Contracting Party shall be considered as lawfully residing in the territory of another Party if they have conformed to the said regulations.²⁷

Although the domestic law remains the touchstone for the notion of 'lawfully', this has not prevented the Court from examining whether it has been applied in an arbitrary or unreasonable manner. The Court has applied the notion of 'legitimate expectation' to the issue of lawful residence.²⁸

Expulsion

The Explanatory Note indicates that the term 'expulsion' is to be interpreted broadly. It is used 'in a generic sense as meaning any measure compelling the departure of an alien from the territory but does not include extradition'.²⁹ Thus, 'any measure compelling the alien's departure from the territory where he was lawfully resident constitutes "expulsion" for the purposes of Article 1 of Protocol No. 7'.³⁰ Expulsion, as the term is used in ²⁰ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 9.

²¹ Nolan and K. v. Russia, no. 2512/04, § 110, 12 February 2009.

²² Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 9.

²³ Nolan and K. v. Russia, no. 2512/04, § 48, 12 February 2009.

²⁴ Vouifovitch and Oulianova v. Sweden, no. 19373/92, Commission decision of 13 January 1993.

²⁵ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 9, fn. 2. Cited in Bolat v. Russia, no. 14139/03, § 77, ECHR 2006-XI (extracts).

²⁶ European Convention on Social and Medical Assistance, ETS 14, art. 11.

²⁷ Protocol to the European Convention on Establishment, ETS 19, Section II.

²⁸ Bolat v. Russia, no. 14139/03, § 77, ECHR 2006-XI (extracts); Nolan and K. v. Russia, no. 2512/04, § 111, 12 February 2009.

²⁹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 10.

³⁰ Bolat v. Russia, no. 14139/03, § 79, ECHR 2006-XI (extracts); Nolan and K. v. Russia, no. 2512/04, § 112, 12 February 2009.

article 1, is an autonomous concept to be understood independently of definitions found in domestic legislation. As explained above, the refoulement of aliens who have entered the territory unlawfully is not contemplated by the provision unless their position has been subsequently regularized.³¹ They find a more limited amount of protection under article 4 of Protocol No. 4, prohibiting collective expulsion, where there is no requirement that aliens be lawfully on the territory. The Court has applied article 1 of Protocol No. 7 to a person who was prevented from re-entering the country where he had resided for many years, noting that 'the Russian authorities sought to prevent him from re-entering Russian territory and to compel his definitive departure from Russia. The applicant may therefore be considered to have been "expelled".'³²

A decision in accordance with law

Article 1 does not create a right of asylum. As the title it was given by Protocol No. 11 indicates, it is concerned with 'procedural safeguards relating to expulsion of aliens'. A person who is lawfully resident in a State Party may only be expelled 'in pursuance of a decision reached in accordance with law'. The Explanatory Report notes that '[n]o exceptions may be made to this rule'.³³

The term 'law' refers to the domestic law of the State Party in question. 'The decision must therefore be taken by the competent authority in accordance with the provisions of substantive law and with the relevant procedural rules', says the Explanatory Report.³⁴ Nevertheless, the appreciation of the term 'law' has a substantive sense. This substantive dimension is often described as referring to the quality of the law.³⁵ The meaning to be given to the notion is the same as that applying throughout the Convention.³⁶ The decision ordering expulsion must be taken by the competent authority in accordance with the substantive and procedural rules that apply.³⁷ The law must be foreseeable and accessible.³⁸ The requirement of foreseeability means that the person in question must receive from the government some indication of the reasons for the expulsion; absent this, the Court will conclude that article 1 of Protocol No. 7 has been violated.³⁹

The Court will scrutinize the conduct of the national authorities to ensure that they respect the applicable legal provisions. In a case where the applicant was summarily expelled from the country without being able to introduce an effective challenge, the Court concluded that 'la manière dont l'expulsion a été exécutée en l'espèce se concilie mal avec la nécessité de prévenir les atteintes arbitraires de la puissance publique aux droits garantis par la Convention'.⁴⁰

³¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 10.

³² Nolan and K. v. Russia, no. 2512/04, § 112, 12 February 2009.

³³ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 11.

³⁴ Ibid.

³⁵ Ahmed v. Romania, no. 34621/03, § 52, 13 July 2010.

³⁶ C.G. and Others v. Bulgaria, no. 1365/07, § 73, 24 April 2008; Kaushal and Others v. Bulgaria, no. 1537/08, § 48, 2 September 2010.

³⁷ Takush v. Greece, no. 2853/09, § 57, 17 January 2012; Bolat v. Russia, no. 14139/03, § 81, ECHR 2006-XI (extracts).

³⁸ Balijski v. Bulgaria, no. 12919/04, § 56, 12 July 2011.

³⁹ Kaya v. Romania, no. 33970/05, § 59, 12 October 2006; Lupsa v. Romania, no. 10337/04, § 59, 8 June 2006; Ahmed v. Romania, no. 34621/03, §§ 53–56, 13 July 2010.

⁴⁰ Takush v. Greece, no. 2853/09, § 59, 17 January 2012.

The guarantees (art. 1(1)(a), (b) and (c))

Sub-paragraphs (a), (b), and (c) of article 1(1) set out three guarantees. These have been clearly distinguished in three separate sub-paragraphs,⁴¹ in contrast with article 13 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, where essentially the same notions are set out in a lengthy phrase: 'to submit the reasons against his expulsion and to have his case reviewed by, and be represented for the purpose before, the competent authority or a person or persons especially designated by the competent authority'.

The first guarantee is the right of the alien threatened with expulsion to submit reasons against his or her expulsion. The actual exercise of this right is governed by domestic legislation. By including this guarantee in a separate sub-paragraph, the Explanatory Report states that 'the intention is to indicate clearly that an alien can exercise it even before being able to have his case reviewed'.⁴²

The second and third guarantees apply to the review of the threatened expulsion 'before the competent authority or a person or persons designated by that authority'. Paragraph (b) recognizes a right to have the case reviewed, while paragraph (c) guarantees the right to be represented during the proceedings. According to the Explanatory Report, a two-stage procedure before different authorities is not necessarily required. Nor is there a requirement of an oral hearing.⁴³ It says that the form of the review is a matter left to domestic law, noting that in some States, an alien threatened with expulsion may be entitled to appeal the decision following review of his or her case. The Explanatory Report says that article 1(1) of Protocol No. 7 'does not relate to that stage of proceedings and does not therefore require that the person concerned should be permitted to remain in the territory of the State pending the outcome of the appeal introduced against the decision taken following the review of his case'.⁴⁴

The review of the case must not be simply perfunctory. Where 'the national courts refused to gather evidence to confirm or dispel the allegations serving as a basis for the decision to expel him and subjected this decision to a purely formal examination, with the result that the first applicant was not able to have his case genuinely heard and reviewed in the light of reasons militating against his expulsion', the provision was held to have been violated.⁴⁵ A decision by the European Commission of Human Rights holding that a decision to expel an alien is outside the scope of article 6 of the Convention does 'not involve a determination of his civil rights and obligations or of any criminal charge against him'⁴⁶ is left unaltered by the adoption of article 1 of Protocol No. 7, according to the Explanatory Report.⁴⁷

The 'competent authority' charged with reviewing the expulsion order may be administrative or judicial. It 'need not be the authority with whom the final decision on the question of expulsion rests'. The Explanatory Report notes that the requirements of ⁴¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 12.

⁴² Ibid., para. 13.1.

⁴³ Ibid., para. 14.

⁴⁴ Ibid., para. 13.2.

⁴⁵ C.G. and Others v. Bulgaria, no. 1365/07, § 74, 24 April 2008.

⁴⁶ Agee v. the United Kingdom, no. 7729/76, Commission decision of 17 December 1976, DR 7, p. 164. See also X v. the United Kingdom, no. 7902/77, Commission decision of 18 May 1977, DR 9, p. 224; Singh and Uppal v. the United Kingdom, no. 8244/78, Commission decision of 2 May 1979, DR 17, p. 149; X, Y, and Z v. The United Kingdom, no. 9285/81, Commission decision of 6 July 1982, § 4, DR, Vol. 29, p. 205.

⁴⁷ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 16.

article 1(1) would be satisfied if a court reviewed the matter and then made a recommendation to an administrative authority with the responsibility for taking the final decision on expulsion. Also, it is open to States Parties 'to establish different procedures and designate different authorities for certain categories of cases, provided that the guarantees contained in the article are otherwise respected'. This would not constitute an infringement of article 14.⁴⁸

Expulsion pending review of the decision (art. 1(2))

Exceptionally, paragraph 2 of article 1 authorizes the State to expel the alien before the three procedural rights set out in paragraph 1 have been exercised, providing certain conditions have been met. This does not mean that the individual is deprived of the procedural rights in the first paragraph, only that he or she may be removed from the territory pending their exercise.⁴⁹ Paragraph 2 makes the permissibility of such an exception conditional on it being necessary in the interests of public order or on reasons of national security. The Explanatory Report notes that the general rule should be exercise of the procedural rights before expulsion. The exceptions set out in paragraph 2 'are to be applied taking into account the principle of proportionality as defined in the case-law of the European Court of Human Rights'.⁵⁰ According to the Explanatory Report, 'the State relying on public order to expel an alien before the exercise of the aforementioned rights must be able to show that this exceptional measure was necessary in the particular case or category of cases'.⁵¹ Where it does not provide such a justification, there may be an infringement of article 1(2).⁵² On the other hand, if expulsion is grounded on reasons of national security, the Explanatory Report says 'this in itself should be accepted as sufficient justification'.⁵³

Reservations and declarations

There has been one reservation to article 1 of Protocol No. 7. Upon ratification, on 24 February 1988, Switzerland made the following reservation: 'When expulsion takes place in pursuance of a decision of the Federal Council taken in accordance with Article 70 of the Constitution on the grounds of a threat to the internal or external security of Switzerland, the person concerned does not enjoy the rights listed in paragraph 1 even after the execution of the expulsion.'⁵⁴

At the time of signature of Protocol No. 7, on 11 May 2005, Belgium made a declaration: 'Belgium understands the words "resident" and "lawfully" mentioned in Article 1 of this Protocol in the sense that is given to them in paragraph 9 of its Explanatory Report.'⁵⁵ Upon ratification of the Protocol, in 2012, Belgium deposited a letter indicating that the declaration was withdrawn.

⁴⁸ Ibid., para. 13.3.

⁴⁹ Kaya v. Romania, no. 33970/05, §53, 12 October 2006.

⁵⁰ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 15.

⁵¹ Ibid.

⁵² Takush v. Greece, no. 2853/09, § 62, 17 January 2012.

⁵³ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 15.

⁵⁴ (1988) 31 YB 7.

⁵⁵ (2005) 48 YB 13.

Sweden made a declaration at the time of deposit of its instrument of ratification, on 8 November 1985, concerning a legislative provision by which an alien with a right to appeal an expulsion order may renounce this right irrevocably.⁵⁶

Further reading

- C. Campiglio, 'Espulsione e diritti dell'uomo a proposito dell'art. 1 nel Protocollo n. 7 addizionale alla Convenzione europea dei diritti dell'uomo', (1985) 68 Rivista di diritto internazionale 64.
- Juan Fernando Durán Alba, 'Guarantees against Expulsion of Aliens under Article 1 of Protocol No. 7', in Javier García Roca and Pablo Santolaya, eds, Europe of Rights: A Compendium on the European Convention of Human Rights, Leiden/Boston: Martinus Nijhoff, 2012, pp. 635–40.
- Cees Flinterman, 'Expulsion of Aliens (Article 1 of Protocol No. 7)', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 965–9.
- Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 703–6.
- Grabenwarter, European Convention, pp. 424–7.
- Harris et al., Law of the European Convention, p. 747.
- Danièle Lochak, 'Protocole No 7, Article 1', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 1083–5.

⁵⁶ (1985) 28 YB 9.

Article 2. Right of appeal in criminal matters/Droit à un double degré de juridiction en matière pénale

1. Everyone convicted of a criminal offence by a tribunal shall have the right to have conviction or sentence reviewed by a higher tribunal. The exercise of this right, including the grounds on which it may be exercised, shall be governed by law.

2. This right may be subject to exceptions in regard to offences of a minor character, as prescribed by law, or in cases in which the person concerned was tried in the first instance by the highest tribunal or was convicted following an appeal against acquittal.

1. Toute personne déclarée coupable d'une infraction pénale par un tribunal a le droit de faire examiner par une juridiction supérieure la déclaration de culpabilité ou la condamnation. L'exercice de ce droit, y compris les motifs pour lesquels il peut être exercé, sont régis par la loi.

2. Ce droit peut faire l'objet d'exceptions pour des infractions mineures telles qu'elles sont définies par la loi ou lorsque l'intéressé a été jugé en première instance par la plus haute juridiction ou a été déclaré coupable et condamné à la suite d'un recours contre son acquittement.

Introductory comments

The right of appeal in criminal matters is first set out in international human rights law in article 14(5) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. It only appeared rather late in the drafting of the Covenant, the result a proposal by Israel during the debates in the Third Committee of the General Assembly in 1959.¹ The Covenant provision reads: 'Everyone convicted of a crime shall have the right to his conviction and sentence being reviewed by a higher tribunal according to law.'

The somewhat belated recognition of the appeal as a fundamental right can be seen in international criminal justice. There was no appeal before the International Military Tribunals held at the conclusion of the Second World War. In the 1990s, when the modern generation of international criminal courts was being created, it was recognized that this was now a fundamental right.² The Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court goes beyond the right to appeal a conviction, with quite elaborate provisions for interlocutory appeal as well as an appeal of both conviction and sentence. It also allows the Prosecutor to undertake appeals of acquittals. Judge Fausto Pocar of the Appeals Chamber of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia has suggested that the right of appeal is 'an imperative norm of international law'.³

Drafting of the provision

The Explanatory Report notes that the word 'tribunal' has been included in article 2(1) of Protocol No. 7 but that it is not found in the corresponding provision of the International

¹ UN Doc. A/C.3/L.795/Rev.3.

² Report of the Secretary General Pursuant to Paragraph 2 of Security Council Resolution 808 (1993), UN Doc. S/25704, para. 116.

³ Prosecutor v. Rutaganda, ICTR-96-3-A, Dissenting opinion of Judge Pocar, 26 May 2003, citing Prosecutor v. Tadić, IT-94-1-A-AR77, Appeal Judgment on Allegations of Contempt against Prior Counsel, Milan Vujin, 27 Feb. 2001, p. 3.

Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. It has been added 'to show clearly that this provision does not concern offences which have been tried by bodies which are not tribunals within the meaning of Article 6 of the Convention'.⁴

The heading 'Right of appeal in criminal matters' was added in accordance with Protocol No. 11.⁵

Analysis and interpretation

Article 2 of Protocol No. 7 can be understood as an amendment that completes article 6 of the Convention. It 'mostly regulates institutional matters, such as accessibility of the court of appeal or scope of review in appellate proceedings'.⁶ In other international human rights instruments, such as article 14 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, appeal of criminal conviction is part of a broader list of procedural guarantees associated with the fair trial. Many cases before the Court raise issues that concern both article 6 of the Convention and article 2 of Protocol No. 7. The nature of the appeal may be considered solely from the standpoint of article 6, something of particular importance for States that have not ratified Protocol No. 7. The Court has cautioned that 'Article 2 of Protocol No. 7 cannot be construed a contrario as limiting the scope of Article 6 guarantees in appellate proceedings with respect to those Contracting Parties for which Protocol No. 7 is not in force'.⁷ Sometimes, the Court finds that there has been a violation of article 6 of the Convention and then declares that there is no need for it to make a separate ruling on article 2 of Protocol No. 7.⁸

The existence of an appropriate appeal mechanism may also be debated when a violation of article 6 is alleged and the State contests the admissibility by arguing that remedies have not been exhausted. Then the Court must assess whether there can be a proper appeal under the circumstances, making a very similar assessment to what it is required to do when a violation of article 2 of Protocol No. 7 is charged.⁹ The Court has cautioned that 'Article 2 of Protocol No. 7 cannot be construed a contrario as limiting the scope of Article 6 guarantees in appellate proceedings with respect to those Contracting Parties for which Protocol No. 7 is not in force'.¹⁰ There is authority for the view that article 13 of the Convention does not provide for a right of appeal.¹¹

Article 2 of Protocol No. 7 consists of two paragraphs, the first stating the principle of the right to appeal conviction and sentence, and the second providing for three limitations

⁴ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 17.

⁵ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(7)(a).

⁶ Shvydka v. Ukraine, no. 17888/12, § 46, 30 October 2014; Pesti and Frodl v. Austria (dec.), nos 27618/95 and 27619/95, ECHR 2000-I (extracts).

⁷ Lalmahomed v. the Netherlands, no. 26036/08, § 38, 22 February 2011; Ekbatani v. Sweden, 26 May 1988, § 26, Series A no. 134.

⁸ Ay Ali v. Italy, no. 24691/04, §§ 49–51, 14 December 2006; R. R. v. Italy, no. 42191/02, § 64, 9 June 2005; Baucher v. France, no. 53640/00, § 52, 24 July 2007; Nedzela v. France, no. 73695/01, § 62, 27 July 2006.

⁹ E.g., Galstyan v. Armenia, no. 26986/03, § 42, 15 November 2007.

¹⁰ Lalmahomed v. the Netherlands, no. 26036/08, § 38, 22 February 2011; Ekbatani v. Sweden, 26 May 1988, § 26, Series A no. 134.

¹¹ Gurepka v. Ukraine (no. 2), no. 38789/04, § 27, 8 April 2010; Kopczynski v. Poland (dec.), no. 28863/95, 1 July 1998; Csepnyoud v. Slovakia (dec.), no. 67199/01, 14 May 2002.

or exceptions to this right. Despite the absence of any more general provisions permitting limitations on the right similar to what can be found with respect to other substantive provisions of the Convention and its Protocols, the Court has taken the view that States enjoy a wide margin of appreciation in determining how to ensure that the right set out in article 2 of Protocol No. 7 is secured.¹² Nevertheless, the Court has cautioned that 'any restrictions contained in domestic legislation on the right to a review mentioned in that provision must, by analogy with the right of access to a court embodied in Article 6 § 1 of the Convention, pursue a legitimate aim and not infringe the very essence of that right'.¹³ The effectiveness of a remedy is one of the requirements associated with the right of access and therefore with the right of appeal. Issues may arise where sentences of detention are enforced upon conviction and notwithstanding an appeal, where the consequence is that the term has been served before the appeal is determined.¹⁴

One common limitation is restricting appellate review to questions of law. According to the Explanatory Report:

Different rules govern review by a higher tribunal in the various member States of the Council of Europe. In some countries, such review is in certain cases limited to questions of law, such as the recours en cassation. In others, there is a right to appeal against findings of facts as well as on the questions of law. The article leaves the modalities for the exercise of the right and the grounds on which it may be exercised to be determined by domestic law.¹⁵

There is much authority in the case law of the Convention organs for the position that appeal limited to questions of law complies with the requirements of article 2(1) of Protocol No. 7.¹⁶ At the time of ratification, France formulated a declaration stating that '... in accordance with the meaning of Article 2, paragraph 1, the review by a higher court may be limited to a control of the application of the law, such as an appeal to the Supreme Court'. Similarly, Germany noted in a declaration that it was 'possible to restrict review to errors in law'.

Another feature of legislation governing criminal appeals is a requirement that they be subject to some form of authorization. The Explanatory Report addresses this:

In some States, a person wishing to appeal to a higher tribunal must in certain cases apply for leave to appeal. The right to apply to a tribunal or an administrative authority for leave to appeal is itself to be regarded as a form of review within the meaning of this article.¹⁷

The Court has confirmed this in several judgments.¹⁸ A right of appeal may also be denied if the accused has pleaded guilty. According to the Explanatory Report, '... if the person

¹² Krombach v. France, no. 29731/96, § 96, ECHR 2001-II; Haser v. Switzerland (dec.), no. 33050/96, 27 April 2000.

¹³ Krombach v. France, no. 29731/96, § 96, ECHR 2001-II; Haser v. Switzerland (dec.), no. 33050/96, 27 April 2000; Panou v. Greece, no. 44058/05, § 32, 8 January 2009.

¹⁴ Shuydka v. Ukraine, no. 17888/12, §§ 46–55, 30 October 2014.

¹⁵ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 18.

¹⁶ Loewenguth v. France (dec.), no. 53183/99, ECHR 2000-VI; Pesti and Frodl v. Austria, nos 27618/95 and 27619/95, ECHR 2000-I (extracts), Reports of Judgments and Decisions 2000-I; Nielsen v. Denmark, no. 19028/91, Commission decision of 9 September 1992, (1992) 35 YB 72, DR 73, p. 239; N.W. v. Luxembourg, no. 19715/92, Commission decision of 8 December 1992; Altieri v. France, no. 28140/95, Commission decision of 15 May 1996; Saussier v. France, no. 35884/97, Commission decision of 20 May 1998.

¹⁷ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 19.

¹⁸ Weh and Weh v. Austria (dec.), no. 38544/97, 4 July 2002; Hauser-Sporn v. Austria, no. 37301/03, § 52, 7 December 2006; Hubner v. Austria (dec.), no. 34311/96, 31 August 1999; Hauser v. Austria, no. 26808/95, convicted has pleaded guilty to the offence charged, the right may be restricted to a review of his sentence'.¹⁹

A provision in the French Penal Code explicitly excluded the possibility of an appeal to the Cour de cassation where the trial proceedings were conducted in absentia. The Government unsuccessfully argued that the absence of an appeal from such a proceeding, which 'by its very essence was provisional and unenforceable', was simply a 'logical consequence of the nature of the judgment', and that other remedies were available to someone tried in absentia in order to challenge the conviction.²⁰

In one of the leading cases under article 2, the Court examined a legislative scheme imposing administrative penalties that were final and not subject to appeal. The text provided that the decision 'can be quashed or modified by the judge himself upon a protest of the prosecutor and, whether or not such a protest is lodged, by the chairman of the superior court'. This mechanism, said the Court, did not comply with article 2 because it lacked any clearly defined procedure or time limits and consistent application in practice.²¹

Exercise of the right governed by law

The second sentence of article 2(1) of Protocol No 7, declaring that '[t]he exercise of this right, including the grounds on which it may be exercised, shall be governed by law', is a somewhat unusual formulation in the Convention system. It is not a limitation or restriction clause in the strict sense; that role is fulfilled by paragraph 2, as well as by the general possibility of limitation or restriction that the Court has found to be implied and has developed by interpretation. There is some authority for the proposition that, by analogy with the right to a court guaranteed by article 6, in limiting the right of appeal the State has 'a certain margin of appreciation but in addition to pursuing a legitimate aim the limitations applied shall not restrict or reduce the access left to the individual in such a way that the very essence of the right is impaired'.²²

Invoking the second sentence to support the proposition that a requirement of leave or permission in order to proceed with an appeal was consistent with article 2(1), the Commission said that 'as a matter of comparison' the right of access to the courts secured by article 6(1) of the Convention was also 'subject to limitations in the form of regulation by the State'. However, this holding is not based on any specific language in article 6(1) of the Convention.²³ The Commission explained:

Commission decision of 16 January 1996, DR 84, p. 164; Stempfer v. Austria, no. 18294/03, § 80, 26 July 2007; Vitzthum v. Austria, no. 8140/04, § 35, 26 July 2007.

¹⁹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 17.

²⁰ Krombach v. France, no. 29731/96, §§ 99–100, ECHR 2001-II. Also Mariani v. France, no. 43640/98, §§ 35, 45–46, 31 March 2005; Papon v. France, no. 54210/00, § 106, ECHR 2002-VII.

²¹ Galstyan v. Armenia, no. 26986/03, §§ 40–41, 132, 15 November 2007. Similarly Gurepka v. Ukraine, no. 61406/00, §§ 57–62, 6 September 2005; Gurepka v. Ukraine (no. 2), no. 38789/04, § 32, 8 April 2010; Kakabadze and Others v. Georgia, no. 1484/07, § 97, 2 October 2012; Ashughyan v. Armenia, no. 33268/03, §§ 108–110, 17 July 2008; Kirakosyan v. Armenia, no. 31237/03, §§ 85–86, 2 December 2008; Tadevosyan v. Armenia, no. 41698/04, §§ 79–80, 2 December 2008; Karapetyan v. Armenia, no. 22387/05, §§ 73–74, 27 October 2009; Gasparyan v. Armenia (no. 2), no. 22571/05, §§ 36–37, 16 June 2009; Hakobyan and Others v. Armenia, no. 34320/04, §§ 140–141, 10 April 2012.

²² E.M. v. Norway, no. 20087/92, Commission decision of 26 October 1995, DR 83-B, p. 5. Also Haser v. Switzerland (dec.), no. 33050/96, 27 April 2000.

²³ E.M. v. Norway, no. 20087/92, Commission decision of 26 October 1995, DR 83-B, p. 5.

The second sentence of this provision requires that the exercise of the right to a review by a higher tribunal shall be governed by law but it does not otherwise specify its scope or actual implementation. However, as the reference to the grounds for the review being governed by law clearly shows the Contracting States have a discretion as to the modalities for the exercise of the right of review. Consequently, the Article gives the States the possibility to regulate the review in several ways.²⁴

In similar cases, a Chamber of the Court noted that the right set out in article 2(1) of Protocol No. 7 may be limited 'by virtue of the reference in paragraph 1 of this Article to national law'.²⁵

All of these cases involved the requirement that leave be obtained for an appeal. The Commission pointed out that 'a right to apply for leave to appeal to a higher court can in itself be regarded as a review' within the meaning of article 2(1).²⁶ If the procedure for granting leave to appeal is to be regarded as providing an appeal, then there is no need to rely upon the second sentence of paragraph 1. In other cases, the position that subjecting the right to appeal to an application for leave meets the requirements of article 2(1) has been upheld without reference to the second sentence.²⁷

For the same reasons, the scope of the appeal may be restricted. Some jurisdictions will confine the appeal to questions of law. This too is compatible with article 2(1).²⁸

Criminal offence

The expression 'criminal offence' in article 2(1) of Protocol No. 2 also appears in article 6(3) of the Convention and has the same meaning.²⁹ In the French versions, somewhat different formulations are used: 'infraction pénale' in the Protocol and 'accusation en matière pénale' in the Convention. If an offence is found to be of a criminal character attracting the full guarantees of Article 6 of the Convention, it consequently attracts also those of Article 2 of Protocol No. 7.³⁰ Article 2 of Protocol No. 7 does not apply when the tribunal awards damages ('dédommagement') and does not apply a penalty or equivalent sanction.³¹

The authoritative statement on the interpretation of 'criminal offence' appears in Engel and Others:

[I]t is first necessary to know whether the provision(s) defining the offence charged belong, according to the legal system of the respondent State, to criminal law, disciplinary law or both concurrently. This however provides no more than a starting point. The indications so afforded ²⁴ Ibid. Also Hauser v. Austria, no. 26808/95, 16 January 1996; Nielsen v. Denmark, no. 19028/91, Commission decision of 9 September 1992, (1992) 35 YB 72, DR 73, p. 239.

²⁵ Hauser-Sporn v. Austria, no. 37301/03, § 52, 7 December 2006; Müller v. Austria, no. 12555/03, § 25, 5 October 2006; Pesti and Frodl v. Austria (dec.), nos 27618/95 and 27619/95, ECHR 2000-I (extracts).

²⁶ Hauser v. Austria, no. 18066/91, Commission decision of 16 January 1996.

²⁷ Näss v. Sweden, no. 18066/91, Commission decision of 6 April 1994, DR 77, p. 37.

²⁸ Deperrois v. France (dec.), no. 48203/99, 22 June 2000; Loewenguth v. France (dec.), 53183/99, ECHR 2000-VI; Pesti and Frodl v. Austria (dec.), nos 27618/95 and 27619/95, ECHR 2000-I (extracts); Nielsen v. Denmark, no. 19028/91, Commission decision of 9 September 1992, (1992) 35 YB 72, DR 73, p. 239; N.W. v. Luxembourg, no. 19715/92, Commission decision of 8 December 1992; Altieri v. France, Cyprus, and Switzerland, no. 28140/95, Commission decision of 15 May 1996.

²⁹ Kamburov v. Bulgaria (no. 2), no. 31001/02, § 22, 23 April 2009; Gourepka v. Ukraine, no. 61406/00, § 55, 6 September 2005; Zaicevs v. Latvia, no. 65022/01, § 53, 31 July 2007.

³⁰ Gourepka v. Ukraine, no. 61406/00, § 55, 6 September 2005; Galstyan v. Armenia, no. 26986/03, § 120, 15 November 2007.

³¹ Rigolio v. Italy (dec.), no. 20148/09, § 46, 13 May 2014.

have only a formal and relative value and must be examined in the light of the common denominator of the respective legislation of the various Contracting States.

The very nature of the offence is a factor of greater import. When a serviceman finds himself accused of an act or omission allegedly contravening a legal rule governing the operation of the armed forces, the State may in principle employ against him disciplinary law rather than criminal law. In this respect, the Court expresses its agreement with the Government.

However, supervision by the Court does not stop there. Such supervision would generally prove to be illusory if it did not also take into consideration the degree of severity of the penalty that the person concerned risks incurring. In a society subscribing to the rule of law, there belong to the 'criminal' sphere deprivations of liberty liable to be imposed as a punishment, except those which by their nature, duration or manner of execution cannot be appreciably detrimental. The seriousness of what is at stake, the traditions of the Contracting States and the importance attached by the Convention to respect for the physical liberty of the person all require that this should be so.³²

In most States, the national law provides its own definition of crimes or criminal offences, or distinguishes it in some way from other violations and infractions. France has formulated a reservation confining the scope of article 2 to criminal offences as defined in French law. Without making formal reservations, Germany, Italy, Liechtenstein, the Netherlands, and Portugal have formulated declarations indicating their view that the scope of the term 'criminal offence' corresponds to the notion within their domestic legislation.

Exceptions to the right of appeal

Article 2(2) of Protocol No. 7 recognizes that the right of appeal is subject to three exceptions: offences of a minor character, as prescribed by law; cases in which the person concerned was tried in the first instance by the highest tribunal; and cases of conviction following an appeal against acquittal.

In determining whether an offence is one of 'a minor character', the Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7 states that 'an important criterion is the question of whether the offence is punishable by imprisonment or not'.³³ It notes that these words were added by the Committee of Ministers 'having regard to the importance of the explanatory report for the purpose of interpreting the Protocol'. The Court has relied upon this remark in the Explanatory Report, holding that where an infraction may be punished by imprisonment it does not qualify for the minor offence exception.³⁴ It has held that '[h]aving regard to the aim of Article 2 and the nature of the guarantees for which it provides, . . . an offence for which the law prescribes a custodial sentence as the main punishment cannot be described as "minor" within the meaning of the second paragraph of that Article'.³⁵

There is a distinction between offences that are not sufficiently serious, in terms of their objective gravity or the consequences of conviction, to be judged criminal offences at all, and therefore outside the scope of article 2(1) of Protocol No. 7, and offences that are genuinely criminal in nature but 'of a minor character'. A prosecution for petty theft that ³² Engel and Others v. the Netherlands, 8 June 1976, § 82, Series A no. 22. Cited in Kamburov v. Bulgaria (no. 2), no. 31001/02, § 22, 23 April 2009.

³³ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 21.

³⁴ Greco v. Romania, no. 75101/01, § 82, 30 November 2006; Stanchev v. Bulgaria, no. 8682/02, §§ 47–48, 1 October 2009; Gurepka v. Ukraine (no. 2), no. 38789/04, § 33, 8 April 2010; Zbelyazkov v. Bulgaria, no. 11332/04, § 43, 9 October 2012.

³⁵ Zaicevs v. Latvia, no. 65022/01, § 55, 31 July 2007.

was not punishable by imprisonment was held to fall into the ‘minor character’ exception of article 2(2) of Protocol No. 7.³⁶

The Commission held that an infraction described as an ‘offence against the order in court’ where there was a maximum penalty of 10,000 Austrian shillings or imprisonment not to exceed eight days was of a ‘minor character’.³⁷ But for a Chamber of the Court, where a similar offence was capable of attracting a sentence of 15 days in detention, the qualification ‘minor character’ could not apply.³⁸

A right of appeal is not required by article 2(2) of Protocol No. 7 if the trial itself is held by the highest tribunal in the country. Under some national constitutions, senior officials may only be tried by the highest-level courts. In such circumstances, there may be no mechanism for appeal, and the Protocol does not require this. Where there has been an appeal against acquittal and the person is then convicted, article 2(2) of Protocol No. 7 specifies that there is no requirement of an appeal from conviction. It is, of course, possible to waive the right of appeal. For example, this may happen where there is a plea bargain involving the settlement of a criminal prosecution in a manner deemed acceptable to both the accused and the prosecution and then endorsed by the tribunal.³⁹

Reservations and declarations

There have been two reservations to article 2.

Denmark’s reservation reads as follows:

The Government of Denmark declares that Article 2, paragraph 1 does not bar the use of rules of the Administration of Justice Act (“Lov om rettens pleje”) according to which the possibility of review by a higher court—in cases subject to prosecution by the lower instance of the prosecution (“politisager”)—is denied.

- a. when the prosecuted, having been duly notified, fails to appear in court;
- b. when the court has repealed the punishment; or
- c. in cases where only sentences of fines or confiscation of objects below the amount or value established by law are imposed.⁴⁰

When Denmark extended Protocol No. 7 to the Faroe Islands, on 2 September 1994, in accordance with article 6, it specified that the reservation to article 2(1) applied.

France made the following reservation: ‘The Government of the French Republic declares that only those offences which under French law fall within the jurisdiction of the French criminal courts may be regarded as offences within the meaning of Articles 2 to 4 of this Protocol.’ It also formulated a declaration at the time of signature that it confirmed on ratification to the effect that ‘review by a higher court may be limited to a control of the application of the law, such as an appeal to the Supreme Court’.⁴¹

³⁶ Luchaninova v. Ukraine, no. 16347/02, §§ 71–73, 9 June 2011.

³⁷ Putz v. Austria, no. 18892/91, Commission decision of 3 December 1993, DR 76-A, p. 51.

³⁸ Galstyan v. Armenia, no. 26986/03, § 124, 15 November 2007.

³⁹ Natsvlishvili and Togonidze v. Georgia, no. 9043/05, §§ 96–97, 29 April 2014.

⁴⁰ (1988) 31 YB 8. In a declaration dated 1 August 1994, Denmark states that the reservation also applies to the Faroe Islands.

⁴¹ (1986) 29 YB 4–5.

Several States—Italy, Liechtenstein,⁴² Monaco,⁴³ the Netherlands,⁴⁴ and Portugal⁴⁵—have made declarations in order to associate the scope of article 2 with the distinctions made in their own legal system. Austria and Monaco formulated declarations concerning the meaning given to the term ‘higher tribunal’, referring to their own legal provisions.

At the time of signature, on 19 March 1985, Germany made the following declaration: ‘By “criminal offence” and “offence” in Article 2 to 4 of the present Protocol, the Federal Republic of Germany understands only such acts as are criminal offences under its law.’ Germany made a second declaration: ‘The Federal Republic of Germany applies Article 2(1) to convictions or sentences in the first instance only, it being possible to restrict review to errors in law and to hold such reviews in camera; in addition it understands that the application of Article 2(1) is not dependent on the written judgment of the previous instance being translated into a language other than the language used in court.’⁴⁶ Germany has not ratified the Protocol.

Further reading

- Cees Flinterman, ‘The Right to a Review by a Higher Tribunal (Article 2 of Protocol No. 7)’, in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 971–4.
Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 707–8.
Grabenwarter, European Convention, pp. 428–31.
Harris et al., Law of the European Convention, pp. 748–9.
Renée Koering-Joulin, ‘Protocole No 7, Article 2’, in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 1087–9.

⁴² (2005) 48 YB 13.

⁴³ (2005) 48 YB 13.

⁴⁴ (1986) 29 YB 4.

⁴⁵ (2004) 47 YB 24.

⁴⁶ (1985) 28 YB 7–8.

Article 3. Compensation for wrongful conviction/Droit d'indemnisation en cas d'erreur judiciaire

When a person has by a final decision been convicted of a criminal offence and when subsequently his conviction has been reversed, or he has been pardoned, on the ground that a new or newly discovered fact shows conclusively that there has been a miscarriage of justice, the person who has suffered punishment as a result of such conviction shall be compensated according to the law or the practice of that State concerned, unless it is proved that the non-disclosure of the unknown fact in time is wholly or partly attributable to him.

Lorsqu'une condamnation pénale définitive est ultérieurement annulée, ou lorsque la grâce est accordée, parce qu'un fait nouveau ou nouvellement révélé prouve qu'il s'est produit une erreur judiciaire, la personne qui a subi une peine en raison de cette condamnation est indemnisée, conformément à la loi ou à l'usage en vigueur dans l'Etat concerné, à moins qu'il ne soit prouvé que la non-révélation en temps utile du fait inconnu lui est imputable en tout ou en partie.

Introductory comments

This is a provision inspired by article 14(6) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. According to Manfred Nowak's commentary on the Covenant, '[t]he right to compensation in the event of a sentence based on a miscarriage of justice was, at the time of its drafting, the most controversial provision in Art. 14'.¹ Professor Nowak noted that a series of attempts to delete the right to compensation were unsuccessful, although the provision survived some close votes aimed at its removal. The text of article 3 of Protocol No. 7 is almost identical to that of article 14(6) of the Covenant. There are only two differences: the first set of commas in article 3 has been added, and the words 'according to the law or practice of the State concerned' replace 'according to law'.

Drafting of the provision

The Explanatory Report does not provide any information on the drafting history of the provision. The heading 'Right not to be tried or punished twice' was added according to the provisions of Protocol No. 11.²

Analysis and interpretation

There are relationships between article 3 of Protocol No. 7 and articles 5 and 13 of the Convention, as well as with article 6(2), which enshrines the presumption of innocence.

¹ Manfred Nowak, UN Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, CCPR Commentary, 2nd rev. edn, Kehl, Germany: N.P. Engel, 2005, p. 352.

² Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(7)(a).

However, the right to compensation for miscarriages of justice (erreur judiciaire in French³) is quite distinct from the right to compensation for wrongful detention, something addressed by article 5(5) of the Convention. Although recognition that there has been a miscarriage of justice relating to a criminal conviction is not necessarily equivalent to a finding of innocence, the reversal of such a conviction has the consequence of restoring the convicted person to a situation where he or she benefits, once again, from the presumption of innocence which is set out in article 6(2) of the Convention. The question of the relationship between article 3 of Protocol No. 7 and article 6(2) of the Convention may arise, particularly if the State in question has not yet ratified the Protocol. The Court has said that article 3 of Protocol No. 7 should not be considered as a lex specialis of article 6(2) of the Convention and that it does not mean that the a right to compensation for wrongful conviction is necessarily excluded from the scope of article 3.⁴ The right to compensation for a miscarriage of justice set out in article 3 of Protocol No. 7 only applies with respect to criminal proceedings.⁵

Final decision

For the right set out in article 3 of Protocol No. 7 to exist, there must first be a final conviction for a criminal offence. It is inapplicable to a person who has been arrested but never brought to trial⁶ or to someone who has been tried and acquitted.⁷ According to the Explanatory Report:

First, the person concerned has to have been convicted of a criminal offence by a final decision and to have suffered punishment as a result of such conviction. According to the definition contained in the explanatory report of the European Convention on the International Validity of Criminal Judgments, a decision is final 'if, according to the traditional expression, it has acquired the force of res judicata. This is the case when it is irrevocable, that is to say when no further ordinary remedies are available or when the parties have exhausted such remedies or have permitted the time-limit to expire without availing themselves of them'. It follows therefore that a judgment by default is not considered as final as long as the domestic law allows the proceedings to be taken up again. Likewise, this article does not apply in cases where the charge is dismissed or the accused person is acquitted either by the court of first instance or, on appeal, by a higher tribunal. If, however, in one of the States in which such a possibility is provided for, the person has been granted leave to appeal after the normal time of appealing has expired, and his conviction is then reversed on appeal, then subject to the other conditions of the article, in particular the conditions described in paragraph 24 below, the article may apply.⁸

Paragraph 24 explains that where the non-disclosure of an unknown fact is wholly or partly attributable to the convict person, there is no right to compensation. Article 3 does not apply where a person has been acquitted on appeal.⁹ Where two incidents of corruption are prosecuted in two separate proceedings, article 3 of Protocol No. 7 is inapplicable.¹⁰

³ See, e.g., Jeronovičs v. Latvia (dec.), no. 547102, § 77, 10 February 2009.

⁴ Allen v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 25424/09, 12 July 2013.

⁵ Glender v. Sweden (dec.), no. 28070/03, 6 September 2005.

⁶ Nakov v. the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (dec.), no. 68286/01, 24 October 2003.

⁷ Y.M. v. France, no. 24948/94, Commission decision of 28 June 1995.

⁸ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 22 (reference omitted).

⁹ Georgiou v. Greece (dec.), no. 45138/98, § 4, 13 January 2000.

¹⁰ Acampora v. Italy (dec.), no. 20721/08, § 32, 8 January 2013.

Reversal of conviction or pardon

The second condition for the application of article 3 of Protocol No. 7 is that:

the conviction has been reversed or he has been pardoned, in either case on the ground that a new or newly discovered fact shows conclusively that there has been a miscarriage of justice—that is, some serious failure in the judicial process involving grave prejudice to the convicted person. Therefore, there is no requirement under the article to pay compensation if the conviction has been reversed or a pardon has been granted on some other ground. Nor does the article seek to lay down any rules as to the nature of the procedure to be applied to establish a miscarriage of justice. This is a matter for the domestic law or practice of the State concerned. The words ‘or he has been pardoned’ have been included because under some systems of law pardon, rather than legal proceedings leading to the reversal of a conviction, may in certain cases be the appropriate remedy after there has been a final decision.¹¹

In a case where there was an arguable claim of a wrongful conviction, but where the appeal was discontinued for technical reasons, article 3 of Protocol No. 4 could not be invoked because no decision had been reversed.¹²

New or newly discovered fact showing a miscarriage of justice

The third condition for a right to compensation is that there is a new or newly discovered fact showing conclusively that there has been a miscarriage of justice. In fact, these amount to two conditions because even if there is a miscarriage of justice, it must be based upon a new or newly discovered fact, and not for some other reason. If the reversal of an earlier judgment is not ‘on the basis of the omission or concealment of facts which could or should have been known to the court in 1959, or by the coming to light of new facts which occurred after that date and which would have been of such nature as to cast fundamental doubt on the soundness of the criminal conviction’ but rather ‘because the applicable substantive criminal law had been seriously distorted and misapplied in that case’, article 3 does not apply.¹³ If non-disclosure of the unknown fact in time was wholly or partly attributable to the person convicted, there is no right under article 3.¹⁴

The term ‘new or newly discovered fact’ is also employed in article 4 of Protocol No. 7. The Explanatory Report notes with respect to article 4 that the term ‘includes new means of proof relating to previously existing facts’.¹⁵ However, to satisfy the conditions of article 3, it is not enough for the reviewing court to reassess evidence that had previously been considered. The fact must either be ‘new’, or ‘newly discovered’ in the sense that it existed at the time of the original trial but was not then known.¹⁶

The Explanatory Report suggests a very high test for the scope of the term ‘miscarriage of justice’. It states that ‘[t]he intention’ behind article 3 of Protocol No. 7 was ‘that States would be obliged to compensate persons only in clear cases of miscarriage of justice, in the sense that there would be acknowledgement that the person concerned was clearly

¹¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 23.

¹² Stamoulakatos v. Greece (dec.), no. 42155/98, 9 November 1999.

¹³ Bachowski v. Poland (dec.), no. 32463/06, 2 November 2010.

¹⁴ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 24.

¹⁵ Ibid., para. 31.

¹⁶ Matveyev v. Russia, no. 26601/02, § 43, 3 July 2008.

innocent'. This phrase in the Explanatory Report has been considered by the Grand Chamber to be rather too severe:

It is wholly understandable that when seeking to identify the meaning of an ambiguous legislative notion such as 'miscarriage of justice' that has its origins in provisions figuring in international instruments—in the event, Article 14(6) of the ICCPR and Article 3 of Protocol No. 7—national judges should refer to the international case-law on those provisions and to their drafting history setting out the understanding of their drafters. However, the Explanatory Report itself provides that, although intended to facilitate the understanding of the provisions contained in the Protocol, it does not constitute an authoritative interpretation of the text... Its references to the need to demonstrate innocence must now be considered to have been overtaken by the Court's intervening case-law on Article 6 § 2.¹⁷

The Grand Chamber has noted that there is 'very little evidence from the practice of Contracting States regarding compensation which is relevant to the interpretation of "miscarriage of justice"'.¹⁸

The grant of an amnesty subsequent to a conviction cannot be considered as an acknowledgement that there was a miscarriage of justice.¹⁹

According to law or practice of the State

The reference to 'law or practice of the State' is discussed in the Explanatory Report:

In all cases in which these preconditions are satisfied, compensation is payable "according to the law or the practice of the State concerned". This does not mean that no compensation is payable if the law or practice makes no provision for such compensation. It means that the law or practice of the State should provide for the payment of compensation in all cases to which the article applies. The intention is that States would be obliged to compensate persons only in clear cases of miscarriage of justice, in the sense that there would be acknowledgement that the person concerned was clearly innocent. The article is not intended to give a right of compensation where all the preconditions are not satisfied, for example, where an appellate court had quashed a conviction because it had discovered some fact which introduced a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the accused and which had been overlooked by the trial judge.²⁰

In a case involving British legislation modelled on article 3 of Protocol No. 7, the Grand Chamber examined the law and practice within the Council of Europe. It said that there was 'no uniform approach in respect of the law and practice on compensation proceedings following discontinuation or acquittal' and that '[s]ome States have more than one scheme in place, covering different types of compensation'. In ten Member States, 'available compensation proceedings appear to be linked directly to the criminal proceedings, with the tribunal which disposed of the criminal complaint having jurisdiction to assess a compensation claim where there has been an acquittal in the original trial proceedings'. In another thirty, the available compensation proceedings are independent of the criminal proceedings. The Grand Chamber found that time limits were in place in almost all States, 'linking the making of a compensation claim to the conclusion of the criminal proceedings'. In many ¹⁷ Allen v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 25424/09, § 128, 13 July 2013.

¹⁸ Ibid. On 'miscarriage of justice', see also Adams v. The United Kingdom (dec.), no. 70601/11, §§ 16–31, 12 November 2013.

¹⁹ Tarbuk v. Croatia, no. 31360/10, § 48, 11 December 2012.

²⁰ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 25.

States, 'compensation is essentially automatic following a finding of not guilty, the quashing of a conviction or the discontinuation of proceedings'.²¹

The reference to law or practice does not mean that no compensation is payable if there is no provision for compensation in national law. The Court has said that the purpose of article 3 'is not merely to recover any pecuniary loss caused by a wrongful conviction but also to provide a person convicted as a result of a miscarriage of justice with compensation for any non-pecuniary damage such as distress, anxiety, inconvenience and loss of enjoyment of life'.²² On the other hand, the right to compensation does not mean that the victim of a violation of article 3 is entitled to be put back in the position as if the conviction, and the events which followed it, had never happened.²³

Reservations and declarations

France made the only reservation to article 3 of Protocol No. 7 that is described as such. It states that 'only those offences which under French law fall within the jurisdiction of the French criminal courts may be regarded as offences' within the meaning of article 3. Austria, Germany, and Italy made similar statements, but described them as declarations rather than reservations. Austria's reservation has been deemed to be an invalid reservation because there is no brief statement of the law as required by article 57 of the Convention.²⁴

At the time of signature, on 19 March 1985, Germany made two declarations concerning article 3: 'By "criminal offence" and "offence" in Article 2 to 4 of the present Protocol, the Federal Republic of Germany understands only such acts as are criminal offences under its law.' It also said that it 'understands the words "according to the law or the practice of the State concerned" to mean that Article 3 refers only to the retrial provided for in sections 359 et seq. of the Code of Criminal Procedure. (cf. Strafprozesordnung)'.²⁵ Germany has not ratified the Protocol.

San Marino made a declaration stating that 'although the principle is applied in practice, it is not enshrined in any legislative provision. Therefore the Government of the Republic undertakes to embody the principle and its regulation into a relevant legislative provision to be adopted within two years from today'.²⁶

Further reading

- Cees Flinterman, 'Compensation for Miscarriage of Justice (Article 3 of Protocol No. 7)', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 975–8.
 Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 709–10.
 Grabenwarter, European Convention, pp. 432–4.
 Harris et al., Law of the European Convention, p. 750.
 Renée Koering-Joulin, 'Protocole No 7, Article 3', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 1091–2.

²¹ Allen v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 25424/09, §§ 73–76, 13 July 2013.

²² Poghosyan and Baghdasaryan v. Armenia, no. 22999/06, § 51, ECHR 2012.

²³ Matveyev and Matveyeva v. Russia (dec.), no. 26601/02, § 6, 14 December 2004.

²⁴ Gradinger v. Austria, 23 October 1995, § 51, Series A no. 328-C.

²⁵ (1985) 28 YB 7–9.

²⁶ (1989) 32 YB 6.

Article 4. Right not to be tried or punished twice/Droit à ne pas être jugé ou puni deux fois

1. No one shall be liable to be tried or punished again in criminal proceedings under the jurisdiction of the same State for an offence for which he has already been finally acquitted or convicted in accordance with the law and penal procedure of the State.

2. The provisions of the preceding paragraph shall not prevent the re-opening of the case in accordance with the law and penal procedure of the State concerned, if there is evidence of new or newly discovered facts, or if there has been a fundamental defect in the previous proceedings, which could affect the outcome of the case.

3. No derogation from this Article shall be made under Article 15 of the Convention.

1. Nul ne peut être poursuivi ou puni pénalement par les juridictions du même Etat en raison d'une infraction pour laquelle il a déjà été acquitté ou condamné par un jugement définitif conformément à la loi et à la procédure pénale de cet Etat.

2. Les dispositions du paragraphe précédent n'empêchent pas la réouverture du procès, conformément à la loi et à la procédure pénale de l'Etat concerné, si des faits nouveaux ou nouvellement révélés ou un vice fondamental dans la procédure précédente sont de nature à affecter le jugement intervenu.

3. Aucune dérogation n'est autorisée au présent article au titre de l'article 15 de la Convention.

Introductory comments

The fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States declares that no person shall 'be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb'. The prohibition of trial and punishment when a person has already been judged is also known by the Latin expression ne bis in idem. A range of other expressions in various legal systems addresses the same phenomenon, including res judicata, issue estoppel, chose jugée, and the plea of autrefois convict.

There is no reference to ne bis in idem in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. An American proposal that it be included¹ did not attract any support. It had only been present in a handful of the national constitutions canvassed by the United Nations at the start of the work on the Universal Declaration.² Nor did it appear in the early drafts of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. Only late in the discussions, during consideration by the Third Committee of the General Assembly, did Italy and Japan present a text³ that, after various amendments, resulted in article 14(7) of the Covenant: 'No one shall be liable to be tried or punished again for an offence for which he has already been finally convicted or acquitted in accordance with the law and penal procedure of each country.'

Noting that in the law of many European states a new criminal trial was permitted under extraordinary circumstances, the Committee of Experts of the Council of Europe

¹ United States Suggestions for Redrafts of Certain Articles in the Draft Outline E/CN.4/AC.1/3, UN Doc. E/CN.4/AC.1/8, p. 4; UN Doc. E/CN.4/AC.1/SR.13, p. 1.

² Constitution of Liberia, art. 1, sec. 7; Constitution of the Philippines, art. 3, sec. 1(20).

³ UN Doc. A/C.3/L.803/Rev.1.

recommended that reservations be made to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights provision. Austria, Denmark, Finland, Iceland, the Netherlands, Norway, and Sweden followed this advice.

The European Charter of Fundamental Rights contains an equivalent provision:

Article 50. Right not to be tried or punished twice in criminal proceedings for the same criminal offence

No one shall be liable to be tried or punished again in criminal proceedings for an offence for which he or she has already been finally acquitted or convicted within the Union in accordance with the law.

Article 50 is meant to have the same meaning and scope as article 4 of Protocol No. 7 but its scope is extended to the European Union level between the Courts of the Member States.⁴

The ne bis in idem principle has taken on greater significance in recent years as a component of the international criminal justice regime. Statutes of the international criminal tribunals contain provisions aimed at regulating their relationship with national courts⁵ so as to ensure two objectives: avoiding unfairness by exposing individuals to a second trial for the same crime, but at the same time preventing sham national proceedings from obstructing genuine efforts at international prosecution.

Drafting of the provision

The Explanatory Report does not provide any information on the drafting history of the provision. The heading 'Right not to be tried or punished twice' was added according to the provisions of Protocol No. 11.⁶

Analysis and interpretation

For article 4 of Protocol No. 7 to apply, there must be two sets of proceedings, and both of them must be criminal in nature. The first proceedings must be completed and final, but it is sufficient that the second proceedings have only begun for there to be an infringement of article 4.

The Convention system does not prohibit parallel proceedings. This is the phenomenon known as lis pendens, where two prosecutions may be underway at the same time. Presumably one finishes before the other. At that point, the problem addressed in article 4 of Protocol No. 7 arises. Where there are simultaneous proceedings, if the second proceedings are terminated upon a final judgment in the first proceedings, this should be deemed an acknowledgement of the violation of article 4. To the extent that the authorities provide adequate redress, for example by terminating or annulling the second set of proceedings and effacing its effects, the Court will conclude that the applicant is no longer a 'victim' within the meaning of the Convention.⁷

⁴ Explanation relating to the Charter of Fundamental Rights, Official Journal of the European Union, C 303/34, 14 December 2007.

⁵ Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, UN Doc. S/RES/827 (1993), annex, art. 10; Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, UN Doc. S/RES/955 (1994), annex, art. 9; Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone, (2002) 2178 UNTS 145, annex, art. 9; Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, (2002) 2187 UNTS 90.

⁶ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(7)(a).

One of the differences between the formulation of the ne bis in idem principle in Protocol No. 7 by contrast with article 14(7) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights is the addition, in the former, of the words 'under the jurisdiction of the same State'. The Human Rights Committee has nevertheless deemed this to be an implied condition of the Covenant provision.⁸ According to the Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, '[t]he words "under the jurisdiction of the same State" limit the application of the article to the national level'.⁹ The Report points to other Council of Europe conventions that govern the application of the principle at the international level.¹⁰

Final conviction or acquittal in the first proceedings

The non bis in idem issue with respect to the second set of proceedings must be assessed with respect to the first trial, where a final conviction or acquittal is required. Absent such a definitive res judicata, it is not possible to argue that the rule against double jeopardy has been infringed. The Explanatory Report states: 'The principle established in this provision applies only after the person has been finally acquitted or convicted in accordance with the law and penal procedure of the State concerned. This means that there must have been a final decision as defined above.'¹¹ The Report then cross-references the comment on the meaning of a final decision with respect to article 3 of Protocol No. 4:

First, the person concerned has to have been convicted of a criminal offence by a final decision and to have suffered punishment as a result of such conviction. According to the definition contained in the explanatory report of the European Convention on the International Validity of Criminal Judgments, a decision is final 'if, according to the traditional expression, it has acquired the force of res judicata. This is the case when it is irrevocable, that is to say when no further ordinary remedies are available or when the parties have exhausted such remedies or have permitted the time-limit to expire without availing themselves of them'. It follows therefore that a judgment by default is not considered as final as long as the domestic law allows the proceedings to be taken up again. Likewise, this article does not apply in cases where the charge is dismissed or the accused person is acquitted either by the court of first instance or, on appeal, by a higher tribunal. If, however, in one of the States in which such a possibility is provided for, the person has been granted leave to appeal after the normal time of appealing has expired, and his conviction is then reversed on appeal, then subject to the other conditions of the article, in particular the conditions described in paragraph 24 below, the article may apply.¹²

⁷ Sergey Zolotukhin v. Russia [GC], no. 14939/03, §§ 113, 115, ECHR 2009; Zigarella v. Italy (dec.), no. 48154/99, 3 October 2002; Falkner v. Austria (dec.), no. 6072/02, 30 September 2004.

⁸ A.P. v. Italy, No. 204/1986, UN Doc. CCPR/C/OP/2, p. 67, para. 7.3.

⁹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 27. See Trabelsi v. Belgium, no. 140/10, § 164, 4 September 2014; Gestra v. Italy (dec.), no. 21072/92, 16 January 1995; Amrollahi v. Denmark (dec.), no. 56811/00, 28 June 2001; Da Luz Domingues Ferreira v. Belgium (dec.), no. 50049/99, 6 July 2006; Sarria v. Poland (dec.), no. 45618/09, 18 December 2012.

¹⁰ European Convention on Extradition, ETS 24; European Convention on the International Validity of Criminal Judgments, ETS 70; European Convention on the Transfer of Proceedings in Criminal Matters, ETS 73.

¹¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 29. See Sergey Zolotukhin v. Russia [GC], no. 14939/03, § 80, ECHR 2009; Nikitin v. Russia, no. 50178/99, § 37, ECHR 2004-VIII; Horciag v. Romania (dec.), no. 70982/01, 15 March 2005.

¹² Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 22.

Paragraph 24 of the Explanatory Report says that 'there is no right to compensation under this provision if it can be shown that the non-disclosure of the unknown fact in time was wholly or partly attributable to the person convicted'.

The case law has added further precision to the remarks in the Explanatory Report. Thus, '[d]ecisions against which an ordinary appeal lies are excluded from the scope of the guarantee contained in Article 4 of Protocol No. 7 as long as the time-limit for lodging such an appeal has not expired'.¹³ If a successful appeal results in the quashing of a conviction so that a new trial may be held, there is no final acquittal or conviction within the meaning of article 4(1).¹⁴ Extraordinary remedies, such as a request to reopen proceedings when time limits for an appeal have been exceeded or an application not to take into account the time limits for filing of an appeal are not taken into account in determining whether the first set of proceedings is 'final'.¹⁵ As pointed out by the Grand Chamber, Article 4 of Protocol No. 7 'does not preclude the reopening of the proceedings, as stated clearly by the second paragraph of Article 4'.¹⁶

In a Croatian case dealing with wartime atrocities, where the first proceedings terminated because an amnesty was granted, the Court said that this 'did not presuppose any investigation into the charges brought against the applicant and did not amount to an assessment of the applicant's guilt. The Court considers that it is therefore open to question whether it can be regarded as a "final acquittal or conviction"' as this is meant in article 4 of Protocol No. 7.¹⁷ It did not rule definitively on the issue, however. In a Russian case, the Court declared inadmissible a claim in which the initial proceedings were discontinued by the public prosecutor. It said that there had been no acquittal or conviction and that therefore article 4 of Protocol No. 7 was not applicable.¹⁸

Duplication of proceedings (the 'bis')

The right enshrined in article 4 of Protocol No. 7 applies not only to a second conviction for the same offence but even to a second prosecution. Indeed, it is violated by the initiation of proceedings and not just by their completion. Otherwise, 'it would not have been necessary to add the word "punished" to the word "tried" since this would be mere duplication. Article 4 of Protocol No. 7 applies even where the individual has merely been prosecuted in proceedings that have not resulted in a conviction'.¹⁹ It applies 'even where the individual has merely been prosecuted in proceedings that have not resulted in a conviction'.²⁰ The right applies to a person who is convicted in the first proceeding and acquitted in the second, because he or she has been prosecuted a second time.²¹ In other words, it has three distinct guarantees, providing 'that no one shall be (i) liable to be tried, (ii) tried or (iii) punished for the same offence'.²²

¹³ Sergey Zolotukhin v. Russia [GC], no. 14939/03, § 108, ECHR 2009.

¹⁴ Ehrmann and SCI VHI v. France (dec.), no. 2777/10, § 5, 7 June 2011.

¹⁵ Sergey Zolotukhin v. Russia [GC], no. 14939/03, § 108, ECHR 2009; Nikitin v. Russia, no. 50178/99, § 39, ECHR 2004-VIII.

¹⁶ Sergey Zolotukhin v. Russia [GC], no. 14939/03, § 108, ECHR 2009.

¹⁷ Marguš v. Croatia, no. 4455/10, § 67, 13 November 2012.

¹⁸ Smirnova and Smirnova v. Russia (dec.), nos 46133/99 and 48183/99, 3 October 2002.

¹⁹ Lucky Dev v. Sweden, no. 7356/10, § 58, 27 November 2014; Nykänen v. Finland, no. 11828/11, § 47, 20 May 2014.

²⁰ Sergey Zolotukhin v. Russia [GC], no. 14939/03, § 110, ECHR 2009.

²¹ Ibid., § 111.

²² Ibid., § 108; Nikitin v. Russia, no. 50178/99, § 36, ECHR 2004-VIII.

Proceedings brought in error, where the court was not aware of the earlier prosecution, may not be a violation of article 4. The Court has observed a lack of any indication in the Explanatory Report and said 'that it cannot content itself with a literal construction of the term in question, but should favour a teleological interpretation'. Noting that '[t]he object and aim of the provision in question imply, in the absence of any damage proved by the applicant', it concluded that 'only new proceedings brought in the knowledge that the defendant has already been tried in previous proceedings contravene this provision'.²³

Criminal proceedings

As the Explanatory Report notes, because article 4 of Protocol No. 7 only applies to trial and conviction of a person in criminal proceedings, it does not prevent a person 'being made subject, for the same act, to action of a different character (for example, disciplinary action in the case of an official) as well as to criminal proceedings'.²⁴ Article 4 does not require that the offence itself be qualified as 'criminal'. According to the Explanatory Report, this was deemed not to be necessary, given that 'Article 4 already contains the terms "in criminal proceedings" and "penal procedure", which render unnecessary any further specification in the text of the article itself'.²⁵

Article 4(1) refers to 'criminal proceedings' and, later in the provision, to 'penal procedure'. In this respect, the Court applies the three elements of the 'Engel criteria': the classification of the offence under domestic law; the nature of the offence; and the nature and severity of the penalty.²⁶ With respect to the first of the criteria, the Court has frequently insisted that although it is relevant, the legal characterization of the procedure under national law is not determinative. 'Otherwise', it has held, 'the application of this provision would be left to the discretion of the Contracting States to a degree that might lead to results incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention'.²⁷ Frequently, States respond to complaints with the argument that the second proceedings are administrative in nature rather than criminal or penal. As the Court has explained, defining an act as 'administrative' may sometimes embrace 'certain offences that have a criminal connotation but are too trivial to be governed by criminal law and procedure'.²⁸ The terms are to be interpreted 'in the light of the general principles concerning the corresponding words "criminal charge" and "penalty" in Articles 6 and 7 of the Convention respectively'.²⁹ Although the second and third of the Engel criteria are proposed in ²³ Zigarella v. Italy (dec.), no. 48154/99, 3 October 2002.

²⁴ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 32.

²⁵ Ibid., para. 28.

²⁶ Engel and Others v. the Netherlands, 8 June 1976, § 82, Series A no. 22. Also Özürk v. Germany, 21 February 1984, § 50, Series A no. 73; Jussila v. Finland [GC], no. 73053/01, § 38, ECHR 2006-XIV.

²⁷ Sergey Zolotukhin v. Russia [GC], no. 14939/03, § 52, ECHR 2009; Asadbeyli and Others v. Azerbaijan, nos 3653/05, 14729/05, 20908/05, 26242/05, 36083/05, and 16519/06, § 151, 11 December 2012; Storbråten v. Norway (dec.), no. 12277/04; Özürk v. Germany, 21 February 1984, § 49, Series A no. 73; Toth v. Croatia (dec.), no. 49635/10, 6 November 2012.

²⁸ Sergey Zolotukhin v. Russia [GC], no. 14939/03, § 54, ECHR 2009; Meneseva v. Russia, no. 59261/00, § 96, ECHR 2006-III; Galyan v. Armenia, no. 26986/03, § 57, 15 November 2007; Ziliberberg v. Moldova, no. 61821/00, §§ 32–35, 1 February 2005; Palaoro v. Austria, 23 October 1995, §§ 33–35, Series A no. 329-B; Asadbeyli and Others v. Azerbaijan, nos 3653/05, 14729/05, 20908/05, 26242/05, 36083/05, and 16519/06, § 152, 11 December 2012.

²⁹ Sergey Zolotukhin v. Russia [GC], no. 14939/03., § 52, ECHR 2009; Haarvig v. Norway (dec.), no. 11187/05, 11 December 2007; Rosengvist v. Sweden (dec.), no. 60619/00, 14 September 2004; Manasson v. Sweden (dec.), no. 41265/98, 8 April 2003; Göktaş v. France, no. 33402/96, § 48, ECHR 2002-V; Malige v. France, 23 September 1998, § 35, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-VII; Nilsson v. Sweden (dec.), no. 73661/01.

the alternative, and a cumulative analysis is not required, sometimes it will be desirable 'where separate analysis of each criterion does not make it possible to reach a clear conclusion as to the existence of a criminal charge'.³⁰

Factors to be considered are whether the offence 'served to guarantee the protection of human dignity and public order, values and interests which normally fall within the sphere of protection of criminal law'.³¹ Nevertheless, 'there is nothing in the Convention to suggest that the criminal nature of an offence, within the meaning of the Engel criteria, necessarily requires a certain degree of seriousness'.³² The aim in establishing the offence in question is relevant to the determination. If it consists of punishment and deterrence, this suggests that characteristics of criminal or penal law.³³

An important factor is the extent of the penalty. This requires reference to the maximum penalty that may be imposed. Although the actual penalty, which may be considerably less than the maximum available, should be taken into consideration, this 'cannot diminish the importance of what was initially at stake'.³⁴ If the penalty involves loss of liberty, there is a presumption that the offence is 'criminal' in nature, although it can 'be rebutted entirely exceptionally, and only if the deprivation of liberty cannot be considered "appreciably detrimental" given their nature, duration or manner of execution'.³⁵ Where prison disciplinary offences are concerned, determining whether or not they are criminal in nature usually involves assessing whether the penalty involves a lengthening of the term of imprisonment or rather some aggravation of conditions, such as a period of solitary confinement. Many decisions of the Convention organs support the view that if the term of the sentence is unchanged the matter is not criminal in nature.³⁶

In a case involving a disqualification order prohibiting an offender, who had already been convicted of aggravated embezzlement and aggravated breach of confidence, from establishing or managing a new limited liability company for a period of two years, the Court noted that this was not a general prohibition against engaging in business activities. It admitted that the disqualification order 'was capable of having a considerable impact on a person's reputation and ability to practise his or her profession', but said that 'what was at stake for the applicant was sufficiently important to warrant classifying it as "criminal"'.³⁷

³⁰ Sergey Zolotukhin v. Russia [GC], no. 14939/03, § 53, ECHR 2009; Jussila v. Finland [GC], no. 73053/01, §§ 30–31, ECHR 2006-XIV; Ezeh and Connors v. the United Kingdom [GC], nos 39665/98 and 40086/98, §§ 82–86, ECHR 2003-X.

³¹ Sergey Zolotukhin v. Russia [GC], no. 14939/03, § 55, ECHR 2009.

³² Sergey Zolotukhin v. Russia [GC], no. 14939/03, § 55, ECHR 2009.; Ezeh and Connors v. the United Kingdom [GC], nos 39665/98 and 40086/98, § 104, 104, ECHR 2003-X.

³³ Sergey Zolotukhin v. Russia [GC], no. 14939/03, § 55, ECHR 2009; Ezeh and Connors v. the United Kingdom [GC], nos 39665/98 and 40086/98, §§ 82–86, 102, 105, ECHR 2003-X; Asadbeyli and Others v. Azerbaijan, nos 3653/05, 14729/05, 20908/05, 26242/05, 36083/05, and 16519/06, § 153, 11 December 2012.

³⁴ Sergey Zolotukhin v. Russia [GC], no. 14939/03, § 56, ECHR 2009; Ezeh and Connors v. the United Kingdom [GC], nos 39665/98 and 40086/98, § 120, ECHR 2003-X.

³⁵ Engel and Others v. the Netherlands, 8 June 1976, § 82, Series A no. 22; Ezeh and Connors v. the United Kingdom [GC], nos 39665/98 and 40086/98, § 126, ECHR 2003-X; Sergey Zolotukhin v. Russia [GC], no. 14939/03, § 56, ECHR 2009; Asadbeyli and Others v. Azerbaijan, nos 3653/05, 14729/05, 20908/05, 26242/05, 36083/05, and 16519/06, § 154, 11 December 2012.

³⁶ Eggs v. Switzerland, no. 7341/76, Commission decision of 4 March 1978, (1977) 20 YB 412; X v. Switzerland, no. 8778/79, Commission decision of 8 July 1980, (1980) 23 YB 404; P. v. France, no. 11691/85, Commission decision of 10 October 1986; J.U. v. France, no. 20978/92, Commission decision of 21 October 1993; Šitnić v. Croatia, no. 29660/03, §§ 55 and 56, 8 November 2007; Toth v. Croatia (dec.), no. 49635/10, § 38, 6 November 2012.

³⁷ Mjelde v. Norway (dec.), no. 11143/04, 1 February 2007.

Problems of double incrimination arise with motor vehicle offences. Withdrawal of a driving licence after a conviction for driving while intoxicated does not infringe article 4 of Protocol No. 7.³⁸ However, conviction by an administrative authority for drunken driving under the Road Traffic Act followed by a conviction of causing death by negligence based upon the driver's intoxication is a violation of the Protocol.³⁹

Identity of offences (the 'idem')

The ne bis in idem norm, as formulated in article 4 of Protocol No. 4, requires that no person be prosecuted twice for the same 'offence'. Until an important ruling of the Grand Chamber in 2009, in Sergey Zolotukhin v. Russia, the attitude of the Court to this requirement had not been entirely consistent. One approach focused on the 'same conduct'. In Gradinger v. Austria, the Court found a violation of article 4 of Protocol No. 4 in an impaired driving case where the applicant was prosecuted under the Criminal Code for homicide where intoxication was an aggravating factor and under the Road Traffic Act for driving while intoxicated.⁴⁰ Another approach, concerned more with content than with form, emphasized the 'essential elements' of the two offences in question.⁴¹

Some decisions had taken a more formalist view, predicated on the idea that the same conduct may give rise to several offences, and that these may be tried in separate proceedings.⁴² According to the Grand Chamber, 'the approach which emphasises the legal characterisation of the two offences is too restrictive on the rights of the individual' and 'risks undermining the guarantee enshrined in Article 4 of Protocol No. 7 rather than rendering it practical and effective'.⁴³ Thus, said the Grand Chamber, 'Article 4 of Protocol No. 7 must be understood as prohibiting the prosecution or trial of a second "offence" in so far as it arises from identical facts or facts which are substantially the same'.⁴⁴

The starting point for the application of article 4 of Protocol No. 7 is the final decision bringing the first prosecution to a close with a definitive conviction or an acquittal. These are to be compared with the new charges in light of all of the materials involved in both prosecutions. Consequently, the Court's inquiry should focus on 'those facts which constitute a set of concrete factual circumstances involving the same defendant and inextricably linked together in time and space, the existence of which must be demonstrated in order to secure a conviction or institute criminal proceedings'.⁴⁵ Whether the new charges are upheld or dismissed in the second set of proceedings is irrelevant to the ³⁸ Ponsetti and Chesnel v. France (dec.), nos 36851/97 and 41731/98, ECHR 1999-VI; Horciag v. Romania (dec.), no. 70982/01, 15 March 2005; R.T. v. Switzerland (dec.), no. 31982/96, 30 May 2000; Nikson v. Sweden (dec.), no. 73661/01, 13 December 2005.

³⁹ Franz Fischer v. Austria, no. 37950/97, § 31, 29 May 2001.

⁴⁰ Gradinger v. Austria, 23 October 1995, § 55, Series A no. 328-C.

⁴¹ Franz Fischer v. Austria, no. 37950/97, § 25, 29 May 2001; Sailer v. Austria (dec.), no. 38237/97, 6 June 2002; Manasson v. Sweden (dec.), no. 41265/98, 8 April 2003; Bachmaier v. Austria (dec.), no. 77413/01, 2 September 2004; Hausser-Sporn v. Austria, no. 37301/03, §§ 43-46, 7 December 2006; Schutte v. Austria, no. 18015/03, § 42, 26 July 2007; Garretta v. France (dec.), no. 2529/04, 4 March 2008.

⁴² Oliveira v. Switzerland, 30 July 1998, §§ 25-29, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-V; Gökten v. France, no. 33402/96, § 50, ECHR 2002-V; Gauthier v. France (dec.), no. 61178/00, 24 June 2003; Ongun v. Turkey (dec.), no. 15737/02, 10 October 2006.

⁴³ Sergey Zolotukhin v. Russia [GC], no. 14939/03, § 81, ECHR 2009.

⁴⁴ Ibid., § 82.

⁴⁵ Ibid., § 84.

debate about a breach of article 4 of Protocol No. 4. As the Grand Chamber explained, the provision constitutes 'a safeguard against being tried or being liable to be tried again in new proceedings rather than a prohibition on a second conviction or acquittal'.⁴⁶

For example, in a case taken against Azerbaijan, the applicant was arrested for failing to respect police orders during a demonstration in Azadliq Square in Baku. He was charged under the Code of Administrative Offences and given a custodial sentence of several days. Upon his release, he was charged under the Criminal Code with respect to the demonstration. The European Court acknowledged that it was hypothetically possible to be tried first under the Code of Administrative Offences for an isolated incident of non-compliance with police orders and then subsequently prosecuted under the Criminal Code for violent conduct. The Court noted that nothing in the documents concerning the two sets of proceedings suggested that the applicant was prosecuted for two distinct acts or sets of factual circumstances. It concluded that in both sets of proceedings the applicant was prosecuted 'in the events of 16 October 2003, comprising the entirety of the allegedly unlawful actions he might have committed on that day in Azadliq Square'.⁴⁷

The identity must apply not only to the offence but also to the convicted person. In a Norwegian case, the Court noted that the criminal prosecution concerned tax advantages benefiting a company, whereas tax surcharges were imposed with respect to the applicant's personal tax liability. The Court said that although there was a close nexus between the company's and the applicant's tax evasion, 'the sanctions concerned two different legal entities'.⁴⁸

Reopening of the case (art. 4(2))

Paragraph 2 of article 4 allows for an exception to the general rule by allowing 'the reopening of the case in accordance with the law and penal procedure of the State concerned, if there is evidence of new or newly discovered facts, or if there has been a fundamental defect in the previous proceedings, which could affect the outcome of the case'. The provision seems to have been interpreted rather broadly.

Several applications have dealt with Russian legislation by which a criminal case that has been finally resolved could be reopened on grounds of a judicial error concerning points of law and procedure. Known as 'supervisory review', the subject-matter of the proceedings was the same criminal charge. If granted, the result was the annulment of previous decisions and a new determination based upon the original charge. The Court has described this as a 'special type of reopening' rather than a 'second trial', holding that it falls within the scope of article 4(2) of Protocol No. 7.⁴⁹

According to the Explanatory Report, the term 'new or newly discovered facts' includes new means of proof relating to previously existing facts. Article 4(2) does not 'prevent a reopening of the proceedings in favour of the convicted person and any other changing of the judgment to the benefit of the convicted person'.⁵⁰ It also allows for a second ⁴⁶ Ibid., § 83.

⁴⁷ Asadbeyli and Others v. Azerbaijan, nos 3653/05, 14729/05, 20908/05, 26242/05, 36083/05, and 16519/06, §§ 161–162, 11 December 2012.

⁴⁸ Isaksen v. Norway (dec.), no. 13596/02, 2 October 2003.

⁴⁹ Nikiitin v. Russia, no. 50178/99, ECHR 2004-VIII; Bratyakin v. Russia (dec.), no. 72776/01, 9 March 2006. Also Savinskiy v. Ukraine (dec.), no. 6965/02, 31 May 2005.

⁵⁰ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 31.

prosecution if there has been a 'fundamental defect in the proceedings'. The wording is vague and general, and the Explanatory Report provides no guidance on its interpretation.⁵¹ In a case concerning the prosecution by Croatia of a suspected war criminal for atrocities perpetrated during the conflict, the Court held that the first set of proceedings suffered from a 'fundamental defect' because it had terminated with an amnesty. According to the Chamber, '[g]ranting amnesty in respect of "international crimes"—which include crimes against humanity, war crimes and genocide—is increasingly considered to be prohibited by international law'.⁵² The Chamber stopped short of a clear ruling on this point, but held that the amnesty was a fundamental defect '[i]n view of the practices and recommendations of various international bodies with a view to preventing or prohibiting the granting of amnesty in respect of war crimes'.⁵³ The Grand Chamber reached a similar result in the same case.⁵⁴

Derogation (art. 4(3))

Paragraph 3 of article 4 indicates that derogation pursuant to article 15 of the European Convention is not permitted. Thus, the principle ne bis in idem joins a very select group of non-derogable norms. It is sometimes suggested that non-derogable norms are in some way more sacred or important than rights that are subject to derogation and that they may therefore be suspended under the circumstances permitted by article 15. Care should be taken in reaching such a conclusion, however. Other human rights treaties, such as the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, do not include the norm in the list of non-derogable provisions. Moreover, the right itself does not find any recognition whatsoever in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

Relative importance may be an important criteria, as evidenced by the non-derogable nature of the right to life in peacetime and the prohibition of torture and slavery. But other norms seem to be included in the list because there is no logical relationship between their implementation and the circumstances that would justify derogation. For example, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights prohibits derogation from the norm governing imprisonment for debt. As the Human Rights Committee explained, 'not all rights of profound importance... have in fact been made non-derogable. One reason for certain rights being made non-derogable is because their suspension is irrelevant to the legitimate control of the state of national emergency.'⁵⁵

Reservations and declarations

France formulated a reservation at the time of ratification: 'The Government of the French Republic declares that only those offences which under French law fall within the jurisdiction of the French criminal courts may be regarded as offences within the meaning of Articles 2 to 4 of this Protocol.'

⁵¹ Ibid., para. 30.

⁵² Marguš v. Croatia, no. 4455/10, § 74, 13 November 2012.

⁵³ Ibid., § 75.

⁵⁴ Marguš v. Croatia [GC], no. 4455/10, §§ 139–141, 27 May 2015.

⁵⁵ General comment on issues relating to reservations made upon ratification or accession to the Covenant or the Optional Protocols thereto, or in relation to declarations under article 41 of the Covenant, UN Doc. CCPR/C/21/Rev.1/Add.6, para. 10.

Austria, Italy, Liechtenstein, and Portugal⁵⁶ have made declarations along similar lines to that of the French reservation. The Austrian reservation has been deemed to be a reservation and found to be invalid under the terms of article 57 of the Convention because there is no brief statement of the law.⁵⁷ Italy made a similar declaration.

At the time of signature, on 19 March 1985, Germany made the following declaration: 'By "criminal offence" and "offence" in Article 2 to 4 of the present Protocol, the Federal Republic of Germany understands only such acts as are criminal offences under its law.'⁵⁸ Germany has not ratified the Protocol.

Further reading

- Cees Flinterman, 'Ne bis in idem (Article 4 of Protocol No. 7)', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 979-83.
- Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 711-18.
- Grabenwarter, European Convention, pp. 435-40.
- Harris et al., Law of the European Convention, pp. 751-3.
- Renée Koering-Joulin, 'Protocole No 7, Article 4', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, pp. 1093-4.
- Christine van den Wyngaert and Guy Stessens, 'The International Non Bis in Idem Principle: Resolving Some of the Unanswered Questions', (1999) 48 ICLQ 779.

⁵⁶ (2004) 47 YB 24.

⁵⁷ Gradinger v. Austria, 23 October 1995, § 51, Series A no. 328-C.

⁵⁸ (1985) 28 YB 7-8.

Article 5. Equality between spouses/Egalité entre époux

Spouses shall enjoy equality of rights and responsibilities of a private law character between them, and in their relations with their children, as to marriage, during marriage and in the event of its dissolution. This Article shall not prevent States from taking such measures as are necessary in the interests of the children.

Les époux jouissent de l'égalité de droits et de responsabilités de caractère civil entre eux et dans leurs relations avec leurs enfants au regard du mariage, durant le mariage et lors de sa dissolution. Le présent article n'empêche pas les Etats de prendre les mesures nécessaires dans l'intérêt des enfants.

Introductory comments

The Universal Declaration of Human Rights contains a rather lengthy provision that recognizes the right to marry and to found a family, and the equal rights of the spouses. Insisting upon robust recognition of the equality of the spouses in marriage was one of the first accomplishments of the Commission on the Status of Women, a body that functioned in parallel with the Commission on Human Rights.

The drafters of the European Convention quite deliberately incorporated the Universal Declaration's provision only partially, in article 12, recognizing the right to marry and to found a family but not the equality of the partners to the marriage. In contrast, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, at the insistence of the Commission on the Status of Women,¹ rather faithfully reproduces the content of article 16 of the Universal Declaration. Article 5 of Protocol No. 7 aligns the European Convention more closely with the International Covenant.

Drafting of the provision

The Explanatory Report does not provide any information about the drafting of the provision. The heading 'Equality between spouses' was added in accordance with Protocol No. 11.²

Analysis and interpretation

Article 5 of Protocol No. 7 brings the European Convention on Human Rights into harmony with the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights as well as the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. It has been argued that article 5 of Protocol No. 7 constitutes a lex specialis with respect to article 8 of the Convention.³ But such an ¹ UN Doc. E/2401, paras 29–30; UN Doc. E/CN.4/686.

² Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(7)(a).

³ Burghartz and Schnyder Burghartz v. Switzerland, no. 16213/90, Commission decision of 19 February 1992.

interpretation has been rejected by the Court. It has insisted that article 5 is 'additional' to the provisions of the Convention.⁴ Nevertheless, the Court will frequently conclude that complaints based on article 5 of Protocol No. 7 are better examined under article 8 of the Convention.⁵

According to the Explanatory Report, '[u]nder the terms of this article, equality must be ensured solely in the relations between the spouses themselves, in regard to their person or their property and in their relations with their children'.⁶ Rights and responsibilities contemplated by article 6 are of a private law character; the article does not apply to other fields of law, such as administrative, fiscal, criminal, social, ecclesiastical, or labour laws.⁷

The provision 'essentially imposes a positive obligation on States to provide a satisfactory legal framework under which spouses have equal rights and obligations concerning such matters as their relations with their children'.⁸ However, according to the Explanatory Report the fact that spouses shall enjoy equality of rights and responsibilities in their relations with their children does not prevent States from taking such measures as are necessary in the interests of the children.⁹ This is set out in the second sentence of article 5: 'This Article shall not prevent States from taking such measures as are necessary in the interests of the children.' Indeed, the Convention organs have insisted on the need to take account of the interests of the child.¹⁰

The 'necessity clause', that is, the second sentence of article 5, 'should be interpreted in the same way as the necessity clauses contained in other provisions of the Convention'.¹¹ Accordingly, an interference with the right must correspond to a pressing social need and be proportionate to the legitimate aim pursued by the State. The State is left a margin of appreciation, but it is not unlimited. In its supervision, the Court must determine whether the reasons used to justify interference with the right are 'relevant and sufficient'. For example, a legislative decision to exclude the possibility of joint custody after divorce, although allowing for access and information rights to the non-custodial parent, was within this margin of appreciation.¹²

Article 5 is concerned with 'spouses' (les époux). The implication is that the right applies only to two persons who are married. The article does not appear to have been applied by the Convention organs in the case of marriages of two persons of the same sex or cohabiting couples who have not undertaken any formal recognition of their relationship. The Explanatory Report says that article 5 does not apply to 'the period preceding marriage', nor does it address conditions of capacity to enter into marriage provided by national law.¹³ The Report adds that 'the words "as to marriage" relate to the legal effects

⁴ Burghartz v. Switzerland, 22 February 1994, § 23, Series A no. 280-B.

⁵ E.g., Dorca v. Romania (dec.), no. 59651/13, § 28, 15 April 2014; Kaplan v. Austria, no. 45983/99, § 37, 18 January 2007.

⁶ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 35.

⁷ Ibid.

⁸ Iosub Caras v. Romania, no. 7198/04, § 56, 27 July 2006; Cernecki v. Austria (dec.), no. 31061/96, 11 July 2000; Negyeliczky v. Hungary (dec.), no. 42622/14, 14 October 2014.

⁹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 36.

¹⁰ Cernecki v. Austria (dec.), no. 31061/96, 11 July 2000; Chepelev v. Russia, no. 58077/00, § 36, 26 July 2007.

¹¹ Cernecki v. Austria (dec.), no. 31061/96, 11 July 2000.

¹² Ibid. Also R.W. and v. T.G.-W. v. Austria (dec.), no. 36222/97, 22 November 2001.

¹³ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 37.

connected with the conclusion of marriage'.¹⁴ It adds two provisos about what is not contemplated by article 5: 'this article should not be understood as preventing the national authorities from taking due account of all relevant factors when reaching decisions with regard to the division of property in the event of dissolution of marriage'¹⁵ and '[t]he words "in the event of its dissolution" do not imply any obligation on a State to provide for dissolution of marriage or to provide any special forms of dissolution'.¹⁶

Reservations and declarations

There have been several reservations to article 5 of Protocol No. 7. France formulated a reservation declaring 'that Article 5 may not impede the application of the rules of the French legal system concerning the transmission of the patronymic name'.¹⁷ Luxembourg made a similar reservation.¹⁸ A second reservation to article 5 by France shelters 'the application of provisions of local law in the territorial collectivity of Mayotte and the territories of New Caledonia and of the Wallis and Futuna Archipelago'.¹⁹

Switzerland formulated a reservation respecting provisions governing the family name, acquisition of the right of citizenship, and 'certain provisions of transitional law on marriage settlement'.²⁰

Further reading

Cees Flinterman, 'Equality of Rights and Responsibilities between Spouses During and After Marriage (Article 5 of Protocol No. 7)', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 985-8.

Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 718-19.

Grabenwarter, European Convention, pp. 441-2.

Harris et al., Law of the European Convention, pp. 753-6.

¹⁴ Ibid., para. 37.

¹⁵ Ibid., para. 38.

¹⁶ Ibid.

¹⁷ (1986) 29 YB 5.

¹⁸ (1989) 32 YB 6.

¹⁹ (1986) 29 YB 5.

²⁰ (1988) 31 YB 7. The reservation was invoked by Switzerland in Burghartz and Schnyder Burghartz v. Switzerland, no. 16213/90, Commission decision of 19 February 1992.

Article 6. Territorial application/Application territoriale

1. Any State may at the time of signature or when depositing its instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval, specify the territory or territories to which this Protocol shall apply and state the extent to which it undertakes that the provisions of this Protocol shall apply to this or these territories.
 2. Any State may at any later date, by a declaration addressed to the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe, extend the application of this Protocol to any other territory specified in the declaration. In respect of such territory the Protocol shall enter into force on the first day of the month following the expiration of a period of two months after the date of receipt by the Secretary General of such declaration.
 3. Any declaration made under the two preceding paragraphs may, in respect of any territory specified in such declaration, be withdrawn or modified by a notification addressed to the Secretary General. The withdrawal or modification shall become effective on the first day of the month following the expiration of a period of two months after the date of receipt of such notification by the Secretary General.
 4. A declaration made in accordance with this Article shall be deemed to have been made in accordance with paragraph 1 of Article 56 of the Convention.
 5. The territory of any State to which this Protocol applies by virtue of ratification, acceptance or approval by that State, and each territory to which this Protocol is applied by virtue of a declaration by that State under this Article, may be treated as separate territories for the purpose of the reference in Article 1 to the territory of a State.
 6. Any State which has made a declaration in accordance with paragraph 1 or 2 of this Article may at any time thereafter declare on behalf of one or more of the territories
1. Tout Etat peut, au moment de la signature ou au moment du dépôt de son instrument de ratification, d'acceptation ou d'approbation, désigner le ou les territoires auxquels s'appliquera le présent Protocole, en indiquant la mesure dans laquelle il s'engage à ce que les dispositions du présent Protocole s'appliquent à ce ou ces territoires.
 2. Tout Etat peut, à tout autre moment par la suite, par une déclaration adressée au Secrétaire Général du Conseil de l'Europe, étendre l'application du présent Protocole à tout autre territoire désigné dans la déclaration. Le Protocole entrera en vigueur à l'égard de ce territoire le premier jour du mois qui suit l'expiration d'une période de deux mois après la date de réception de la déclaration par le Secrétaire Général.
 3. Toute déclaration faite en vertu des deux paragraphes précédents pourra être retirée ou modifiée en ce qui concerne tout territoire désigné dans cette déclaration, par notification adressée au Secrétaire Général. Le retrait ou la modification prendra effet le premier jour du mois qui suit l'expiration d'une période de deux mois après la date de réception de la notification par le Secrétaire Général.
 4. Une déclaration faite conformément au présent article sera considérée comme ayant été faite conformément au paragraphe 1 de l'article 56 de la Convention.
 5. Le territoire de tout Etat auquel le présent Protocole s'applique en vertu de sa ratification, de son acceptation ou de son approbation par ledit Etat, et chacun des territoires auxquels le Protocole s'applique en vertu d'une déclaration souscrite par le dit Etat conformément au présent article, peuvent être considérés comme des territoires distincts aux fins de la référence au territoire d'un Etat faite par l'article 1.
 6. Tout Etat ayant fait une déclaration conformément au paragraphe 1 ou 2 du présent article peut, à tout moment par la suite, déclarer relativement à un ou plusieurs des territoires visés to which the declaration relates that it accepts the competence of the Court to receive applications from individuals, non-governmental organisations or groups of individuals as provided in Article 34 of the Convention in respect of Articles 1 to 5 of this Protocol.

dans cette déclaration qu'il accepte la compétence de la Cour pour connaître des requêtes de personnes physiques, d'organisations non gouvernementales ou de groupes de particuliers, comme le prévoit l'article 34 de la Convention, au titre des articles 1 à 5 du présent Protocole.

Introductory comments

Territorial application of the Convention itself is governed by article 56 of the Convention. Clauses on territorial application also appear in several of the Protocols. In the past, they were known as 'colonial clauses'. In reality, they have been applicable to only the small number of European States with dependent territories. Such clauses constitute an exception to the general law of treaties, codified in article 29 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, by which a convention applies to the entire territory of a State Party. They have been criticized for permitting double standards but, in theory at least, they also permit the European State to show some deference for local autonomy.

Drafting of the provision

According to the Explanatory Report, article 6 'deals with the territorial application of the Protocol and corresponds, as to the principle it embodies, to Article 63 of the Convention, Article 4 of Protocol No. 1 and Article 5 of Protocol No. 4, but is formulated in terms which take account of the relevant provisions in the model final clauses adopted by the Committee of Ministers in February 1980'.¹ The Report provides an explanation for paragraph 5, which is not part of the Model Final Clauses: 'Paragraph 5 specifies that a State which has extended the Protocol to certain territories may treat each of them and the territory to which the Protocol applies by virtue of its ratification, acceptance or approval by that State as separate territories for the purpose of Article 1.'² The Report concludes by noting that the intent of the provision is not to allow a federal State to exclude the Protocol with respect to part of its territory.³

Paragraph 6 was added by Protocol No. 11. The Explanatory Report provides no information about the drafting of the text or the intent of its authors. Paragraph 4 was amended as a result of Protocol No. 11 in order to take into account the renumbering of the Convention articles.⁴ The heading, 'Territorial application', was added by Protocol No. 11.⁵

Analysis and interpretation

The territorial application provision of Protocol No. 7 is formulated on the basis of the relevant text in the Model Final Clauses, although reference must also be made to article 56 of the Convention and the corresponding provisions in Protocol No. 1, Protocol No.

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 40.

² Ibid., para. 41.

³ Ibid., para. 42.

⁴ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155 000, art. 7(b).

⁵ Ibid., art. 2(7)(a).

4, and Protocol No. 6. In particular, readers of the Commentary are referred to the chapter dealing with article 5 of Protocol No. 6, bearing in mind the differences between that provision and article 6 of Protocol No. 7. In particular, unlike the text of Protocol No. 6, article 6(1) of Protocol No. 7 allows a State to specify in its declaration 'the extent to which it undertakes that the provisions of this Protocol shall apply to this or these territories'. Paragraph 3 permits a State not only to withdraw such a declaration but also to modify it, although that may not really be of great significance given that a State could also withdraw a declaration and then formulate a new one in different terms. The provision has never been invoked.

The relevant text in the Model Final Clauses, already employed in article 5 of Protocol No. 6, seems to provide a State Party with the possibility of specifying any territory or territories, whereas the other territorial clauses in the Convention and the Protocols speak of 'territories for the international relations of which it is responsible'. According to the Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, '[i]t is to be noted that this article is not intended to allow a federal State to exclude acceptance of the Protocol in respect of part of its territory'.⁶

The reference to article 56(1) in paragraph 4 seems to exclude, as a consequence, the notorious 'local requirements' clause of article 56(3). It is perhaps for that reason that France formulated what it called a 'reservation', rather than a 'declaration', at the time of ratification of Protocol No. 7, specifying the application of the 'local requirements' criterion. There has been no case law on this point.

Paragraph 5 of article 6 has no equivalent in the corresponding provision of Protocol No. 6 or, for that matter, in any of the other territorial application clauses of the Convention or the Protocols. Paragraph 6 corresponds very broadly to article 56(4) of the Convention. On the latter provision, the reader is referred to the relevant chapter in the Commentary.

Declarations

There have been several declarations pursuant to article 6. France accompanied its instrument of ratification with what it called a 'reservation' specifying that the Protocol 'shall apply to the whole territory of the Republic, due regard being had where the overseas territories and the territorial collectivity of Mayotte are concerned, to the local requirements referred to in Article [56] of the European Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms'.⁷ Upon ratification on 18 August 1988, Denmark made what it described as a 'territorial reservation' upon ratification of Protocol No. 7 excluding the Faroe Islands from the scope of the instrument.⁸ Six years later it withdrew the declaration, although at the same time it specified that its reservation with respect to article 2(1) applied to the Faroe Islands.⁹

Two declarations submitted with respect to Protocol No. 7 are not contemplated by article 6. When Spain ratified the Protocol, on 16 September 2009, its instrument was accompanied by the following: 'If this Protocol were to be extended by the United ⁶ Explanatory Report to Protocol No. 7, para. 42.

⁷ (1986) 29 YB 5.

⁸ (1988) 31 YB 8.

⁹ (1994) 37 YB 6.

Kingdom to Gibraltar, Spain would like to make the following declaration...’ The declaration went on to address issues of sovereignty unrelated to the application of the Convention or Protocol No. 7. Azerbaijan made a declaration stating that it was ‘unable to guarantee the application of the provisions of the Protocol in the territories occupied by the Republic of Armenia until these territories are liberated from that occupation’.

Further reading

Michael Wood, ‘Protocole No 7, Article 6’, in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, p. 1097.

Article 7. Relationship to the Convention/Relations avec la Convention

As between the State Parties, the provisions of Articles 1 to 6 of this Protocol shall be regarded as additional Articles to the Convention, and all the provisions of the Convention shall apply accordingly.

Les Etats Parties considèrent les articles 1 à 6 du présent Protocole comme des articles additionnels à la Convention et toutes les dispositions de la Convention s'appliquent en conséquence.

Introductory comments

All of the additional Protocols to the Convention contain a clause governing the relationship. The provision confirms that the Convention organs may exercise jurisdiction with respect to rights in the Protocol. Furthermore, provisions relating to such matters as reservation and denunciation are also deemed to apply. In this regard, the Explanatory Report drew particular attention to article 53 of the Convention: 'Nothing in this Convention shall be construed as limiting or derogating from any of the human rights and fundamental freedoms which may be ensured under the laws of any High Contracting Party or under any other agreement to which it is a Party.'¹

Drafting of the provision

The Explanatory Report discusses the objective of the second paragraph of article 7. It concerns the acceptance of the right of individual petition to the Commission and the Court.² Under the Protocol, as an exception to the general rule in paragraph 1, individual petition required a supplementary declaration by the State Party. In contrast with the equivalent text in Protocol No. 4, a State Party had no option but to accept jurisdiction for all of the rights in the Protocol. Paragraph 2 of article 7 was removed by Protocol No. 11.

The heading 'Relationship to the Convention' was added by Protocol No. 11.³

Analysis and interpretation

The Grand Chamber referred to article 7 of Protocol No. 7 when it considered an argument by the respondent State to the effect that a right to compensation for wrongful conviction, as set out in article 3 of Protocol No. 7, could not be derived from the presumption of innocence recognized in article 6(2) of the Convention. The State Party had not ratified Protocol No. 7. The Court noted that 'Article 7 of Protocol No. 7 clarifies that the provisions of the substantive Articles of the Protocol are to be regarded as additional Articles to the Convention, and that "all the provisions of the Convention

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 43.

² Ibid., para. 44.

³ Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(7)(a).

shall apply accordingly".⁴ For that reason, 'Article 3 of Protocol No. 7 cannot therefore be said to constitute a form of lex specialis excluding the application of Article 6 § 2'.⁴ A similar lex specialis argument was rejected with respect to article 5 of Protocol No. 7. Switzerland had contended article 5, to which it had formulated a reservation, had displaced article 8 of the Convention with respect to names, but the Court ruled otherwise.⁵

Declaration

On 2 September 1994, Denmark made a declaration, "in accordance with Article 7, paragraph 2, of the Protocol" recognizing that the right of individual petition and the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court with regard to article 1 to 5 of the Protocol was also applicable to the Faroe Islands.

Further reading

Pierre-Henri Imbert, 'Protocole No 7, Article 7', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, p. 1099.

⁴ Allen v. the United Kingdom [GC], no. 25424/09, § 105, 12 July 2013.

⁵ Burghartz v. Switzerland, 22 February 1994, § 23, Series A no. 280-B.

Article 8. Signature and ratification/Signature et ratification

This Protocol shall be open for signature by member States of the Council of Europe which have signed the Convention. It is subject to ratification, acceptance or approval. A member State of the Council of Europe may not ratify, accept or approve this Protocol without previously or simultaneously ratifying the Convention. Instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval shall be deposited with the Secretary General of the Council of Europe.

Le présent Protocole est ouvert à la signature des Etats membres du Conseil de l'Europe qui ont signé la Convention. Il sera soumis à ratification, acceptation ou approbation. Un Etat membre du Conseil de l'Europe ne peut ratifier, accepter ou approuver le présent Protocole sans avoir simultanément ou antérieurement ratifié la Convention. Les instruments de ratification, d'acceptation ou d'approbation seront déposés près le Secrétaire Général du Conseil de l'Europe.

Introductory comments

This article is closely related to article 59 of the Convention, also entitled 'Signature and ratification'.

Drafting of the provision

The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7 explains that article 8 is 'formulated in terms which take account of the new model final clauses adopted by the Committee of Ministers'.¹ The title 'Signature and ratification' was introduced by Protocol No. 11.²

Analysis and interpretation

Article 8 of Protocol No. 7 is identical to the text of article 7 of Protocol No. 6. Readers are referred to the chapter in this Commentary on article 7 of Protocol No. 6.

Protocol No. 7 was opened for signature on 22 November 1984. On that day, ten of the twenty-one States Parties to the Convention signed the instrument: Denmark, France, Greece, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, and Sweden. All but four Member States of the Council of Europe have now signed and ratified Protocol No. 7. The United Kingdom has not signed Protocol No. 7. The Netherlands, which signed the Protocol on 22 November 1984, Turkey, which signed on 14 March 1985, and Germany, which signed on 19 March 1985, have not ratified. When the Council of Europe was enlarged during the 1990s with the membership of many States from Central

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 45.

² Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(7)(a).

and Eastern Europe, ratification of Protocol No. 7 within a year of becoming a member of the organization was one of the undertakings that were made.³

Further reading

Pierre-Henri Imbert, 'Protocole No 7, Article 8', in Pettiti et al., La Convention européenne, p. 1101.

³ E.g., Application by Ukraine for membership of the Council of Europe, Opinion 190 (1995), para. 12.1; Application by Russia for membership of the Council of Europe, Opinion 193 (1996), para. 10.1; Application by Croatia for membership of the Council of Europe, Opinion 195 (1996), para. 9.2.

Article 9. Entry into force/Entrée en vigueur

1 This Protocol shall enter into force on the first day of the month following the expiration of a period of two months after the date on which seven member States of the Council of Europe have expressed their consent to be bound by the Protocol in accordance with the provisions of Article 8.

2 In respect to any member State which subsequently expresses its consent to be bound by it, the Protocol shall enter into force on the first day of the month following the expiration of a period of two months after the date of the deposit of the instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval.

1 Le présent Protocole entrera en vigueur le premier jour du mois qui suit l'expiration d'une période de deux mois après la date à laquelle sept Etats membres du Conseil de l'Europe auront exprimé leur consentement à être liés par le Protocole conformément aux dispositions de l'article 8.

2 Pour tout Etat membre qui exprimera ultérieurement son consentement à être lié par le Protocole, celui-ci entrera en vigueur le premier jour du mois qui suit l'expiration d'une période de deux mois après la date du dépôt de l'instrument de ratification, d'acceptation ou d'approbation.

The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7 states that article 9 is 'formulated in terms which take account of the new model final clauses adopted by the Committee of Ministers'.¹ The original model final clauses adopted in September 1962 by the Committee of Ministers were subsequently revised in light of the work of the International Law Commission on the subject and the text of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties. A revised set of model final clauses was adopted in February 1980. The model final clause with respect to entry into force was a departure from what had been previous adopted in the Convention and its Protocols, where the issue had been relegated to a mere sentence in the general provision on signature and ratification. Past practice had also been for the instrument to enter into force immediately upon attaining the threshold of ratifications and accessions or, for States becoming parties subsequently, upon deposit of the relevant instrument.

Under the model final clause, entry into force was delayed for a period of months and, moreover, until the first day of the month following. Such grace periods are a feature of many modern treaties where they are generally intended to allow a little time for the start-up of the international mechanisms and of the bodies associated with the instrument. But the rationale for such a measure is harder to understand when all that a treaty does is add new rights to an existing corpus. All that it means is that despite the agreement to be bound by a minimum of ten States Parties, individuals subject to their jurisdiction are deprived of the protection of the Convention and its organs for two more months.

Ratification or accession by seven States is required for entry into force of Protocol No. 7. The Convention itself and Protocol No. 1 require ten States, whereas Protocols Nos 4 and 6 require five. Perhaps seven was chosen as a compromise? In subsequent additional Protocols, the Council of Europe returned to ten. In accordance with the model clauses, provision is made for a grace period of two months following the deposit of the seventh ratification or accession.

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 45.

The title 'Entry into force' was introduced by Protocol No. 11.²

Protocol No. 7 entered into force on 1 November 1988 following its ratification by seven Member States of the Council of Europe. The initial seven Member States were: Austria, Denmark, France, Greece, Iceland, Sweden, and Switzerland. All Member States are now parties to the Protocol with the exception of Germany, the Netherlands, Turkey, and the United Kingdom.

² Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 2(6)(a).

Article 10. Depositary functions/Fonctions du dépositaire

The Secretary General of the Council of Europe shall notify all the member States of the Council of:

- (a) any signature;
- (b) the deposit of any instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval;
- (c) any date of entry into force of this Protocol in accordance with Articles 6 and 9;
- (d) any other act, notification or declaration relating to this Protocol.

Le Secrétaire Général du Conseil de l'Europe notifiera à tous les Etats membres du Conseil de l'Europe:

- (a) toute signature;
- (b) le dépôt de tout instrument de ratification, d'acceptation ou d'approbation;
- (c) toute date d'entrée en vigueur du présent Protocole conformément à ses articles 6 et 9;
- (d) tout autre acte, notification ou déclaration ayant trait au présent Protocole.

The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7 notes that article 10 is 'formulated in terms which take account of the new model final clauses adopted by the Committee of Ministers'.¹ The original Model Final Clauses adopted in September 1962 by the Committee of Ministers were subsequently revised in light of the work of the International Law Commission on the subject and the text of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties. A revised set of model final clauses was adopted in February 1980. Article 10 of Protocol No. 7 is identical to article 9 of Protocol No. 6. Readers of the Commentary are referred to the chapter dealing with that provision. The title 'Depositary functions' was introduced by Protocol No. 11.²

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 7, para. 45.

² Protocol No. 11 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, restructuring the control machinery established thereby, ETS 155, art. 7(a).

PART SEVEN

PROTOCOL NO. 12 TO THE
CONVENTION FOR THE PROTECTION
OF HUMAN RIGHTS AND FUNDAMENTAL FREEDOMS

Page 1

1. The first part of the document describes the general situation of the company and its financial position. It also mentions the main objectives of the project and the expected results.

Preamble/Préambule

The member States of the Council of Europe signatory hereto:

Having regard to the fundamental principle according to which all persons are equal before the law and are entitled to the equal protection of the law;

Being resolved to take further steps to promote the equality of all persons through the collective enforcement of a general prohibition of discrimination by means of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms signed at Rome on 4 November 1950 (hereinafter referred to as 'the Convention');

Reaffirming that the principle of non-discrimination does not prevent States Parties from taking measures in order to promote full and effective equality, provided that there is an objective and reasonable justification for those measures,

Have agreed as follows:

Les Etats membres du Conseil de l'Europe, signataires du présent Protocole,

Prenant en compte le principe fondamental selon lequel toutes les personnes sont égales devant la loi et ont droit à une égale protection de la loi;

Résolus à prendre de nouvelles mesures pour promouvoir l'égalité de tous par la garantie collective d'une interdiction générale de discrimination par la Convention de sauvegarde des Droits de l'Homme et des Libertés fondamentales, signée à Rome le 4 novembre 1950 (ci-après dénommée «la Convention»);

Réaffirmant que le principe de non-discrimination n'empêche pas les Etats parties de prendre des mesures afin de promouvoir une égalité pleine et effective, à la condition qu'elles répondent à une justification objective et raisonnable,

Sont convenus de ce qui suit:

Introductory comments

The preambles of the earlier additional Protocols, starting with Protocol No. 1, are all very perfunctory. They provide little in the way of interpretative guidance, something that is the special mission of preambles to treaties. With Protocol No. 12, the Council of Europe begins a practice of more substantive preambles.

Drafting of the provision

The text of the Preamble was prepared by the Steering Committee on Human Rights. It had considered whether there should be an equality clause in article 1 or whether a reference to the principle of equality in the Preamble would suffice.¹ The Committee opted, 'by way of compromise',² for the latter solution. The Rapporteur of the Parliamentary Assembly's Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights made several criticisms of the draft. He said that the first recital of the Preamble 'does not correspond to to the content of the Protocol' as it 'does not enshrine the principle of equality but extends the principle of non-discrimination, already set forth in the initial Convention in 1950, to include other rights'.³ He said that the drafters were aware of the distinction because of the reference to equality in the final recital of the Preamble.⁴ However, the Parliamentary Assembly did not formally request any changes to the Preamble as drafted by the Steering Committee.

¹ Jeroen Schokkenbroek, 'A New European Standard against Discrimination: Negotiating Protocol No. 12 to the European Convention on Human Rights', in J. Niessen and Isabelle Chopin, eds, European Anti-Discrimination Standards and National Legislation, Leiden/Boston: Martinus Nijhoff, 2004, pp. 61–79, at pp. 70–1.

² Ibid., p. 72.

Analysis and interpretation

Equality before the law and equal protection of the law

The first recital of the Preamble acknowledges 'the fundamental principle according to which all persons are equal before the law and are entitled to the equal protection of the law'. The Explanatory Report describes this as 'a fundamental and well-established general principle, and an essential element of the protection of human rights, which has been recognised in constitutions of member states and in international human rights law'.⁵ The principle appears in article 7 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

The second recital sets out what the Explanatory Report describes as 'the equality principle'.⁶ It says that although the equality principle is not explicit in either article 14 of the Convention or article 1 of Protocol No. 12, the non-discrimination and equality principles are closely intertwined. For example, the principle of equality requires that equal situations are treated equally and unequal situations differently. Failure to do so will amount to discrimination unless an objective and reasonable justification exists (see paragraph 18 below). The Court, in its case-law under Article 14, has already made reference to the 'principle of equality of treatment' (see, for example, the Court's judgment of 23 July 1968 in the 'Belgian Linguistic' case, Series A, No. 6, paragraph 10) or to 'equality of the sexes' (see, for example, the judgment of 28 May 1985 in the case of Abdulaziz, Cabales and Balkandali v. the United Kingdom, Series A, No. 94, paragraph 78).⁷

Many decades earlier, in the 1960s, the Council of Europe institutions considered recognizing a right to equality before the law when Protocol No. 4 to the Convention was being drafted. However, the Committee of Experts did not recommend inclusion and the proposal, which had come from the Parliamentary Assembly, was dropped. According to the Explanatory Report, the Committee had felt that 'the notion of equality before the law was subject to a wide variety of judicial interpretations and, for this reason, was not suitable for inclusion in a text which would have the binding legal force of a multilateral convention'.⁸ Consideration was given to restricting the provision to a right to equal treatment or to equality in the application of the law along the lines of article 7 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. 'The majority of the experts thought that, even with this restriction, the provision was unacceptable, for reasons similar to those which ³ Opinion of the Assembly on Draft Protocol No. 12 to the European Convention on Human Rights. Report, Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights, Doc. 8614, para. 25.

⁴ Ibid., para. 26.

⁵ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 12, para. 14.

⁶ Ibid., para. 15.

⁷ Ibid.

⁸ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 4, para. 36.

prompted them to reject Article 5 of the Assembly's draft', says the Explanatory Report.⁹ Furthermore:

[I]f such a provision were adopted, the organs provided for in the Convention would run the risk of becoming a superior authority to which appeals could be made against alleged errors in the appreciation of the facts or of the law on the part of national authorities. The Commission would then be faced with a large number of appeals against judgments by national courts which, allegedly, had not ensured equality in the application of the law to the person concerned. In practice, the Commission would be obliged to check a multitude of facts in order to decide whether the national court had applied the law correctly from the point of view of equality of treatment.¹⁰

At the same time, the Committee also recommended against including a provision recognizing the right of everyone to recognition as a person before the law, a norm derived from article 6 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. The Committee of Experts considered that it was unnecessary, given that it was already implied in articles 4, 6, and 14 of the Convention, but also because 'its ambiguous wording might lay it open to dangerous legal interpretations' and, finally, that it more properly belonged in a preamble.¹¹

Measures to promote equality

Measures to promote 'full and effective equality' are recognized in the third recital of the Preamble. It states that such measures shall not be prohibited by the principle of non-discrimination. The third recital appears to be directed at what is often referred to as affirmative action or positive discrimination, defined as follows in article 1(4) of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination:

Special measures taken for the sole purpose of securing adequate advancement of certain racial or ethnic groups or individuals requiring such protection as may be necessary in order to ensure such groups or individuals equal enjoyment or exercise of human rights and fundamental freedoms shall not be deemed racial discrimination, provided, however, that such measures do not, as a consequence, lead to the maintenance of separate rights for different racial groups and that they shall not be continued after the objectives for which they were taken have been achieved.

Similar provisions can be found in other treaties that focus on the prohibition of forms of discrimination.¹² According to one commentator, the final recital in the Preamble 'makes it absolutely clear that "positive measures" to seek to promote equality will not be prohibited by the Protocol, provided they do not constitute discrimination towards persons or groups not covered by such measures'.¹³

The Explanatory Report also makes clear that the Protocol is not intended to impose any obligation upon States to enact such special measures.

⁹ Ibid.

¹⁰ Ibid.

¹¹ Ibid., para. 35.

¹² Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women, (1980) 1249 UNTS 13, art. 4(1); Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities, ETS 157, art. 4(3); Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, UN Doc. A/RES/61/106, Annex I, art. 5(4).

¹³ Jeroen Schokkenbroek, 'A New European Standard Against Discrimination: Negotiating Protocol No. 12 to the European Convention on Human Rights', in J. Niessen and Isabelle Chopin, eds, European Anti-Discrimination Standards and National Legislation, Leiden/Boston: Martinus Nijhoff, 2004, pp. 61-79, at pp. 70-2.

The fact that there are certain groups or categories of persons who are disadvantaged, or the existence of de facto inequalities, may constitute justifications for adopting measures providing for specific advantages in order to promote equality, provided that the proportionality principle is respected. Indeed, there are several international instruments obliging or encouraging states to adopt positive measures (see, for example, Article 2, paragraph 2, of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, Article 4, paragraph 2, of the Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities and Recommendation No. R (85) 2 of the Committee of Ministers to member states on legal protection against sex discrimination). However, the present Protocol does not impose any obligation to adopt such measures. Such a programmatic obligation would sit ill with the whole nature of the Convention and its control system which are based on the collective guarantee of individual rights which are formulated in terms sufficiently specific to be justiciable.

This passage in the Explanatory Report reflects the cautious approach of the drafters of the Protocol No. 12 with respect to positive obligations, something discussed further in this Commentary in the chapter on article 1 of the Protocol.

Further reading

- Jeroen Schokkenbroek, 'A New European Standard against Discrimination: Negotiating Protocol No. 12 to the European Convention on Human Rights', in J. Niessen and Isabelle Chopin, eds, European Anti-Discrimination Standards and National Legislation, Leiden/Boston: Martinus Nijhoff, 2004, pp. 61–79.
- Jeroen Schokkenbroek, 'Towards a Stronger European Protection against Discrimination: The Preparation of a New Additional Protocol to the European Convention on Human Rights', in Gay Moon, ed., Race Discrimination: Developing and Using a New European Legal Framework, Oxford: Hart, 2000, pp. 29–37.

Article 1. General prohibition of discrimination/Interdiction générale de la discrimination

1. The enjoyment of any right set forth by law shall be secured without discrimination on any ground such as sex, race, colour, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, association with a national minority, property, birth or other status.

2. No one shall be discriminated against by any public authority on any ground such as those mentioned in paragraph 1.

1. La jouissance de tout droit prévu par la loi doit être assurée, sans discrimination aucune, fondée notamment sur le sexe, la race, la couleur, la langue, la religion, les opinions politiques ou toutes autres opinions, l'origine nationale ou sociale, l'appartenance à une minorité nationale, la fortune, la naissance ou toute autre situation.

2. Nul ne peut faire l'objet d'une discrimination de la part d'une autorité publique quelle qu'elle soit fondée notamment sur les motifs mentionnés au paragraphe 1.

Introductory comments

Equality and protection against discrimination lie at the core of modern human rights law. The Charter of the United Nations recognizes the importance of human rights in its Preamble: 'to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women'. In article 1, it declares the purposes of the organization to include respect for the principle of equal rights of peoples and promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all 'without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion'.

The importance of equality is confirmed in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Article 1 declares: 'All human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights.' Article 2 builds on this idea with a statement about non-discrimination: 'Everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth in this Declaration, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status.' Article 7 enshrines equality before the law: 'All are equal before the law and are entitled without any discrimination to equal protection of the law. All are entitled to equal protection against any discrimination in violation of this Declaration and against any incitement to such discrimination.'

The drafters of the European Convention on Human Rights seem to have had a more modest assessment of the role equality plays in the overall scheme of human rights protection. They incorporated equality and non-discrimination in article 14. Very largely modelled on article 2 of the Universal Declaration, it is a subsidiary provision that contemplates the prohibition of discrimination with respect to rights protected elsewhere in the Convention. The more general right to equality before the law and to equal protection of the law without discrimination does not appear. Noting the absence of anything in the travaux préparatoires of the European Convention that would indicate why the drafters did not incorporate a provision similar in scope to article 7 of the Universal Declaration, Michael Head has said that '[p]robably there was some underlying ideological problem with the concept of equality'.¹ According to Head, when the European Convention was adopted, thinking about the equality principle was only in its infancy, like international law on human rights. At the time it was widely held that equality meant absolutely identical treatment for all. Viewed in those terms, equality consisted in according everyone exactly the same legal status, a utopian notion that was totally unrealistic from the legal standpoint. So while the immaturity of the equality concept in international law did not prevent its featuring prominently in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, it did keep it out of the European Convention, a treaty containing both a catalogue of rights and a collective enforcement machinery.²

This is being a bit too charitable to the drafters of the European Convention. Within the United Nations, the discussion about equality and non-discrimination could not properly be described as being 'in its infancy'. Some of the indications of the backwardness of the Council of Europe in this respect, at the time the Convention was adopted, include the omission of discrimination based on sex in the initial working draft³ and the decision of the Committee of Ministers to override the views of the Consultative Assembly and include a 'colonial clause'.⁴

In applying article 14, the Court has very often found a violation of one of the other rights in the Convention and then deemed it unnecessary to address whether or not article 14 was also violated. At the same time, article 14 has a degree of autonomy because it may apply even when another right protected by the Convention has not been breached to the extent that equality issues arise with respect to the substance of that right. Other provisions of the Convention have also taken on a role in addressing equality issues, including article 8 when privacy issues may be involved and article 3, under which severe forms of discrimination may be deemed degrading treatment. As provisions of the Convention go, article 14 was a 'late bloomer'. From its beginnings in 1959 until 1990, the Court found violations of article 14 in only four cases.⁵ Between 1990 and 2000 there were nine findings of a breach of article 14.⁶ From 2000 until 2010 there were 125 judgments concluding that article 14 had been violated.

Within the United Nations, the process of transforming the norms in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights into treaty provisions went further than that undertaken by the Council of Europe. In addition to a provision analogous to article 14 of the

¹ Michael Head, 'The Genesis of Protocol No. 12', in Non-Discrimination, A Human Right—Seminar to Mark the Entry into Force of Protocol No. 12, Strasbourg: Council of Europe Publishing, 2006, pp. 35–45, at p. 36.

² Ibid., p. 37.

³ This is discussed in the chapter on article 14 in this Commentary.

⁴ This is discussed in the chapter on article 56 in this Commentary.

⁵ Case 'relating to certain aspects of the laws on the use of languages in education in Belgium' (merits), 23 July 1968, Series A no. 6; Marckx v. Belgium, 13 June 1979, Series A no. 31; Abdulaziz, Cabales, and Balkandali v. the United Kingdom, 28 May 1985, Series A no. 94; Inze v. Austria, 28 October 1987, Series A no. 126.

⁶ Chassagnou and Others v. France [GC], nos 25088/94, 28331/95, and 28443/95, ECHR 1999-III; Larkos v. Cyprus [GC], no. 29515/95, ECHR 1999-I; Salgueiro da Silva Mouta v. Portugal, no. 33290/96, ECHR 1999-IX; Canea Catholic Church v. Greece, 16 December 1997, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-VIII; Van Raalte v. the Netherlands, 21 February 1997, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-I; Gaygusuz v. Austria, 16 September 1996, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-IV; Karlheinz Schmidt v. Germany, 18 July 1994, Series A no. 291-B; Hoffmann v. Austria, 23 June 1993, Series A no. 255-C; Burghartz v. Switzerland, 22 February 1994, Series A no. 280-B.

European Convention,⁷ the drafters of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights also adopted a second text providing for a prohibition of discrimination in general and not just with respect to other rights protected by the Covenant. Inspired in part by article 7 of the Universal Declaration, article 26 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights reads as follows:

All persons are equal before the law and are entitled without any discrimination to the equal protection of the law. In this respect, the law shall prohibit any discrimination and guarantee to all persons equal and effective protection against discrimination on any ground such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status.

Pursuant to this provision, the Human Rights Committee has developed a body of case law dealing with discrimination in marriage, sexual orientation, entitlement to economic and social benefits, language, and residency.⁸

Drafting of the provision

In October 1997, the Steering Committee on Human Rights discussed the possible adoption of an additional protocol whose purpose would be to broaden the scope of article 14 of the Convention. The Committee prepared a draft provision that is for all practical purposes identical to the text of article 1 of Protocol No. 12. In its report to the Committee of Ministers, the Committee said that the wording could be improved. Moreover, it said that a decision should be taken as to whether it would be sufficient to refer to equality in the Preamble or whether a specific clause was required in article 1. Finally, the Steering Committee said that the addition of a clause expressly allowing for positive measures should be considered.⁹

Several alternatives for paragraph 2 were considered by the drafters. The first variant began: 'No one shall be discriminated on any ground such as . . .' It was considered to allow for substantial positive obligations 'since its wording did not distinguish between public authorities and private actors as being the source of the discrimination'. The second proposal started with the words '[t]he enjoyment of any right set forth by law shall be secured without discrimination on any ground such as . . .' It was considered to be very close to article 14 of the Convention. The formulation was conservative in approach as a result of the words 'any right set forth by law', as these had already been interpreted by the European Court. The third option, which ultimately prevailed, opened with the following: 'No one shall be discriminated against by a public authority on any ground such as . . .'¹⁰

The draft of article 1 prepared by the Committee of Ministers is identical to the final version.¹¹ Comments about the intent of the Committee of Ministers were included in ⁷ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, (1976) 999 UNTS 171, art. 2(1).

⁸ Manfred Nowak, UN Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, CCPR Commentary, 2nd rev. edn, Kehl, Germany: N.P. Engel, 2005, pp. 597–634.

⁹ Jeroen Schokkenbroek, 'A New European Standard against Discrimination: Negotiating Protocol No. 12 to the European Convention on Human Rights', in J. Niessen and Isabelle Chopin, eds, European Anti-Discrimination Standards and National Legislation, Leiden/Boston: Martinus Nijhoff, 2004, pp. 61–79, at pp. 69–71.

¹⁰ Ibid., p. 76.

¹¹ Draft Protocol No. 12 to the European Convention on Human Rights and Draft Explanatory Report, Doc. 8490, art. 1.

the draft Explanatory Report. These are discussed below with regard to the various issues of interpretation, as are the objections by the Parliamentary Assembly.

Analysis and interpretation

Protocol No. 12 has only one substantive provision. Article 1 consists of two paragraphs. The first paragraph bears a close resemblance to article 14 of the Convention. It does no more than replace the words 'of the rights and freedoms set forth in this Convention' that appear in article 14 with 'of any right set forth by law'. The second paragraph adds a prohibition of discrimination 'by any public authority'. Thus, article 1 of Protocol No. 12 deals with legislation and its implementation and with the behaviour and policy of public bodies.

The Explanatory Report cautions against analysis based upon distinguishing the two paragraphs, which it describes as 'complementary'. Instead it proposes that the Protocol's scope has four components:

1. the enjoyment of any right specifically granted to an individual under national law;
2. the enjoyment of a right which may be inferred from a clear obligation of a public authority under national law, that is, where a public authority is under an obligation under national law to behave in a particular manner;
3. the exercise of discretionary power by a public authority (for example, granting of certain subsidies);
4. any other act or omission by a public authority (for example, the conduct of law enforcement authorities in controlling a riot).¹²

In applying article 1, the European Court has made reference to the four categories listed in the Explanatory Report.¹³ The Explanatory Report cautiously states that the emphasis on acts and omissions should not be viewed as excluding the existence of positive obligations.

When Protocol No. 12 was being adopted, the European Court warned that its entry into force 'will lead to a substantial increase in the Court's case-load', but those fears were exaggerated.¹⁴ There has been very limited judicial interpretation of Protocol No. 12. In the leading case, Sejdić and Finci v. Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Grand Chamber observed that article 1 of Protocol No. 12 is 'similar—although not identical' to article 26 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.¹⁵ Unlike article 26, it does not include references to equality before the law and equal protection of the law, originally derived from article 7 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. For this reason, Manfred Nowak has explained that article 1 of Protocol No. 12 'is not equivalent to a right to equality'.¹⁶ The Rapporteur of the Parliamentary Assembly's Committee on Legal

¹² Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 12, para. 29.

¹³ Savez crkava 'Riječ života' and Others v. Croatia, no. 7798/08, § 104, 9 December 2010; Merschdorf v. Romania (dec.), no. 31918/08, § 24, 21 May 2013.

¹⁴ Opinion of the European Court of Human Rights on draft Protocol 12 to the European Convention on Human Rights (adopted at the plenary administrative session of the Court on 6 December 1999), Doc. 8608, para. 6.

¹⁵ Sejdić and Finci v. Bosnia and Herzegovina [GC], nos 27996/06 and 34836/06, § 54, ECHR 2009.

¹⁶ Manfred Nowak, UN Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, CCPR Commentary, 2nd rev. edn, Kehl, Germany: N.P. Engel, 2005, p. 600.

Affairs and Human Rights objected to the absence of a right to equality in article 1, noting that the draft Explanatory Report 'continually confuses two distinct concepts: non-discrimination and equality'.¹⁷ Nevertheless, there is a recognition of the 'the fundamental principle according to which all persons are equal before the law and are entitled to the equal protection of the law' in recital 1 of the Preamble of Protocol No. 12.

Enjoyment of any right set forth by law

The Explanatory Report states that the expression 'any right set forth by the law' is intended to define the scope of the guarantee and at the same time limit its possible indirect horizontal effects.¹⁸ This is the difference between article 1 of Protocol No. 12 and article 14 of the Convention. The Rapporteur of the Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights of the Parliamentary Assembly conceded that article 1 'nevertheless broadens the scope of non-discrimination'.¹⁹ He wrote: 'The wording covers the rights secured by the Convention as well as other rights secured at national level. It obviously leaves considerable scope for the case-law of the European Court of Human Rights, which will be able to interpret it in an exhaustive manner.'²⁰

The word 'law' is not defined, but reference to its use elsewhere in the Convention is surely a relevant approach. The European Court of Human Rights has held that the term 'law' may apply not only to statute law but also to common law, customary law, and case law.²¹ The Explanatory Report says that the term may also cover international law, although 'this does not mean that this provision entails jurisdiction for the European Court of Human Rights to examine compliance with rules of law in other international instruments'.²² This intriguing comment probably reflects the fact that '[s]ome governments apparently fear that if the scope of Protocol Twelve is extended to [international law] then significant new commitments could be introduced into domestic law'.²³ A representative of the United Kingdom has suggested this is a problem for his government because it may be interpreted to include rights in treaties such as the International Covenants, including economic and social rights.²⁴

In Sejdić and Finci, the Grand Chamber held that the right to stand for election for the presidency of the country was 'set forth by law', regardless of whether it was recognized by article 3 of Protocol No. 1 to the European Convention.²⁵ In a case concerning the refusal of Croatian authorities to recognize the right of Protestant evangelical churches to perform certain religious services and to obtain official recognition of marriages conducted by them, the Court noted that applicable national legislation guaranteed 'the right' to religious communities to provide such services, although exercise of the right was to be ¹⁷ Opinion of the Assembly on Draft Protocol No. 12 to the European Convention on Human Rights, Report, Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights, Doc. 8614, para. 29.

¹⁸ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 12, para. 29.

¹⁹ Opinion of the Assembly on Draft Protocol No. 12 to the European Convention on Human Rights, Report, Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights, Doc. 8614, para. 16.

²⁰ Ibid., para. 17.

²¹ S.W. v. the United Kingdom, 22 November 1995, § 46, Series A no. 335-B.

²² Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 12, para. 29.

²³ Harris et al., Law of the European Convention, p. 612.

²⁴ John Kissane, 'Protocol No. 12—UK Government's Position', in Non-Discrimination, A Human Right—Seminar to Mark the Entry into Force of Protocol No. 12, Strasbourg: Council of Europe Publishing, 2006, pp. 87–91, at p. 88.

²⁵ Sejdić and Finci v. Bosnia and Herzegovina [GC], nos 27996/06 and 34836/06, § 54, ECHR 2009.

governed by an agreement. The Chamber observed that the agreement was not a condition for the existence of the right, but merely a manner of regulating its implementation. Consequently, this was a 'right specifically granted under national law', as set out in the first condition of the Explanatory Report and therefore subject to article 1(1) of the Protocol.²⁶ In several Romanian cases, a Chamber declared applications based upon a claim that property confiscated by an earlier regime could not be returned to them to be manifestly unfounded. The Chamber said that in order to claim the property taken from their parents, 'les requérants devaient remplir certaines conditions imposées par la loi no 18/1991, et qu'il ne s'agissait pas d'un droit ex lege... Dans ces conditions, la Cour estime que la situation des requérants n'entre dans aucune des quatre catégories mentionnées par le Rapport explicatif...'²⁷

Without discrimination

The concept of 'discrimination' in article 1(1) of Protocol No. 12 is set out in language that is clearly modelled upon that of article 14 of the European Convention, and there is no good reason why it should be interpreted any differently. The Explanatory Report states that '[t]he meaning of the term "discrimination" in Article 1 is intended to be identical to that in Article 14 of the Convention'.²⁸ This is confirmed in the case law.²⁹ Prior to the adoption of the Protocol, the plenary Court adopted an opinion on the text that includes a discussion of the concept of discrimination:

As regards the substantive content of the Protocol, it notes, in relation to Article 1, that the draft Explanatory Report (see paragraph 18) refers to the notion of discrimination as consistently interpreted in the case-law of the Court, namely that a difference of treatment is discriminatory if it has no objective and reasonable justification, that is if it does not pursue a legitimate aim or if there is not a reasonable relationship of proportionality between the means employed and the aim sought to be realised. As the Court put it in the Belgian Linguistic case, 'the competent national authorities are frequently confronted with situations and problems which, on account of differences inherent therein, call for different legal solutions' (judgment of 23.7.68, Series A no. 6, p. 34, § 10). This is further reflected, consistently with the subsidiary character of the Convention system, in the margin of appreciation accorded to the national authorities in assessing whether and to what extent differences in otherwise similar situations justify a difference of treatment in law (see, among other authorities, Rasmussen v. Denmark, judgment of 28.11.84, Series A no. 87, p. 15, § 40).³⁰

6. Notwithstanding such 'limitations' on the prohibition of discrimination as derive from the Court's case-law, it is foreseeable that the entry into force of Protocol No. 12 will lead to a substantial increase in the Court's case-load. The Court draws the attention of the Committee of Ministers to the impact of such an increase on a mechanism that is already under great pressure. While the extent of this impact can only be assessed at a later stage and would in any event not be ²⁶ Savez crkava 'Rijet život' and Others v. Croatia, no. 7798/08, § 106, 9 December 2010.

²⁷ Merschdorf v. Romania (dec.), no. 31918/08, § 28, 21 May 2013.

²⁸ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 12, para. 18.

²⁹ Sejdić and Finci v. Bosnia and Herzegovina [GC], nos 27996/06 and 34836/06, § 55, ECHR 2009; Šimšić v. Bosnia and Herzegovina (dec.), no. 51552/10, § 31, 10 April 2012; Maktouf and Damjanović v. Bosnia and Herzegovina, nos 2312/08 and 34179/08, § 81, ECHR 2012 (extracts); Zornić v. Bosnia and Herzegovina, no. 3681/06, §§ 26–27, 15 July 2014.

³⁰ Opinion of the European Court of Human Rights on Draft Protocol 12 to the European Convention on Human Rights (adopted at the plenary administrative session of the Court on 6 December 1999), Doc. 8608, para. 5.

immediate, it should be taken into account in mid- and long-term planning and provision for the Court and the Convention system.³¹

This has been confirmed by the Court in the first cases dealing with Protocol No. 12.³²

A rich body of case law has been developed by the Court and the Commission concerning the notion of discrimination within the framework of article 14. As the Explanatory Report notes:

The notion of discrimination has been interpreted consistently by the European Court of Human Rights in its case-law concerning Article 14 of the Convention. In particular, this case-law has made clear that not every distinction or difference of treatment amounts to discrimination. As the Court has stated, for example, in the judgment in the case of Abdulaziz, Cabales and Balkandali v. the United Kingdom: 'a difference of treatment is discriminatory if it 'has no objective and reasonable justification', that is, if it does not pursue a 'legitimate aim' or if there is not a 'reasonable relationship of proportionality between the means employed and the aim sought to be realised' (judgment of 28 May 1985, Series A, No. 94, paragraph 72).³³

In declaring inadmissible a claim against Romania by children of individuals whose land had been confiscated, and who claimed they had not received restitution because they had declined to adopt Romanian nationality, the Chamber took into account the large margin of appreciation given to States in repairing prejudice caused prior to entry into force of the Convention. It said the differential treatment based upon the lack of Romanian nationality had an objective and reasonable justification.³⁴

Although the language used in the English versions of article 14 of the Convention and article 1 of the Protocol is identical, the same cannot be said of the other official language of the Council of Europe. The French text of article 1(1) speaks of 'sans discrimination aucune' whereas article 14 uses the words 'sans distinction aucune'. According to the Explanatory Report, '[n]o difference of meaning is intended; on the contrary, this is a terminological adaptation intended to reflect better the concept of discrimination within the meaning of Article 14 by bringing the French text into line with the English (see, on this precise point, the Court's judgment of 23 July 1968 in the "Belgian Linguistic" case, Series A, No. 6, paragraph 10)'.³⁵

The Explanatory Report observes that 'it was not considered necessary or appropriate to include a restriction clause'.³⁶ It explains that most domestic legal provisions concerning non-discrimination allow for distinctions based on nationality with respect to certain rights and entitlements to benefits. The Report recalls that 'not every distinction or difference of treatment amounts to discrimination', and that 'situations where such distinctions are acceptable are sufficiently safeguarded by the very meaning of the notion "discrimination" . . . since distinctions for which an objective and reasonable justification exists do not constitute discrimination'.³⁷ The Explanatory Report also notes that the ³¹ Ibid., paras 5–6.

³² Sejdić and Finci v. Bosnia and Herzegovina [GC], nos 27996/06 and 34836/06, § 55, ECHR 2009; Šimšić v. Bosnia and Herzegovina (dec.), no. 51552/10, § 31, 10 April 2012; Ranaer and Van Willigen v. The Netherlands (dec.), no. 34880/12, § 89–90, 23 October 2012; Mijailović v. Serbia (dec.), no. 14366/08, § 57, 5 February 2013.

³³ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 12, para. 18.

³⁴ Merschdorf v. Romania (dec.), no. 31918/08, § 30, 21 May 2013.

³⁵ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 12, para. 18.

³⁶ Ibid., para. 19.

³⁷ Ibid.

European Court of Human Rights will acknowledge that 'a certain margin of appreciation is allowed to national authorities in assessing whether and to what extent differences in otherwise similar situations justify a different treatment in law'.³⁸ Examples are provided to show how the margin of appreciation has been applied by the Court in article 14 cases.³⁹

Prohibited grounds

The list of prohibited grounds for discrimination in article 1(1) of Protocol No. 12 is identical to that of article 14 of the Convention. It is based upon article 2, paragraph 1 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, although there are some slight differences, notably the inclusion of 'association with a national minority' in the European Convention. The enumerations of prohibited grounds adopted more than half a century ago in the Universal Declaration and the European Convention were prefaced with the words 'such as', leaving room for enlargement of the scope of the protection not only in order to take account of analogous grounds that had simply been overlooked but also to enable evolution in accordance with changing social values. Adoption of Protocol No. 12 was an opportunity to formalize these changes, but the drafters opted for a more conservative approach. The Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, also adopted in 2000, built upon the list in article 14 of the European Convention with the addition of age, disability, genetic features, and sexual orientation. It also made other changes, replacing national origin with origin and religion with religion or belief.⁴⁰

According to the Explanatory Report, the decision to reproduce the list in article 14 was a solution considered preferable over others, such as expressly including certain additional non-discrimination grounds (for example, physical or mental disability, sexual orientation or age), not because of a lack of awareness that such grounds have become particularly important in today's societies as compared with the time of drafting of Article 14 of the Convention, but because such an inclusion was considered unnecessary from a legal point of view since the list of non-discrimination grounds is not exhaustive, and because inclusion of any particular additional ground might give rise to unwarranted a contrario interpretations as regards discrimination based on grounds not so included.⁴¹

By way of example, the Report cites a 1999 decision of the European Court applying article 14 to discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation.⁴² This does not mean that discrimination in respect of any particular ground that is not enumerated will justify a finding that article 1(1) has been breached. In a complaint about the assignment of an accused person to a particular jurisdiction, the Court noted that this was not based on any personal characteristics such as origin or religion, and consequently there was 'no appearance' of discrimination prohibited by the Protocol.⁴³

³⁸ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 12, para. 19.

³⁹ Rasmussen v. Denmark, 28 November 1984, § 40, Series A no. 87; National & Provincial Building Society, Leeds Permanent Building Society, and Yorkshire Building Society v. the United Kingdom, 23 October 1997, § 80, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-VII.

⁴⁰ Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, 2010 OJ C 83/02, art. 21.

⁴¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 12, para. 20.

⁴² Salgueiro da Silva Mouta v. Portugal, no. 33290/96, ECHR 1999-IX.

⁴³ Simić v. Bosnia and Herzegovina (dec.), no. 51552/10, § 32, 10 April 2012.

The Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe was not satisfied with the approach taken in the final draft of Protocol No. 12. According to the Rapporteur of the Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights:

However, society has changed since the adoption of the Convention in 1950 and account should have been taken of the changes. Although in 1950 some legislation was apparent as to including sexual orientation in the list of grounds, now, half a century later, it has become generally accepted that this form of discrimination has led and leads to diverse forms of discrimination and even persecution. Article 14 was formulated, in 1950, to ban such forms of discrimination and persecution. The explanatory report states that this was envisaged by the CDDH, which discussed the possibility of including grounds such as disability, sexual orientation and age, but that it was considered unnecessary from a legal point of view since the list of grounds for discrimination was not exhaustive and the inclusion of any particular additional ground might give rise to unwarranted interpretations. It should, however, be noted that the Amsterdam Treaty of 2 October 1997, which amends the Treaty of the European Union, includes sexual orientation in its prohibited discrimination grounds.⁴⁴

But the reasoning of the Rapporteur seems confused in that he also argued that '[i]t would surely have been simpler not to give a list of grounds and to establish a general right to equality as in Article 3 of the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights'.⁴⁵ This is a rather simplistic understanding of the Covenant's provisions on equality and non-discrimination. The Parliamentary Assembly unsuccessfully requested a distinct provision reading 'Men and women are equal before the law' and the inclusion of sexual orientation within the list of prohibited grounds.⁴⁶

It has been observed that 'the drafters, in line with Article 14 ECHR but contrary to the views of the Parliamentary Assembly, did not want to establish any sort of hierarchy between grounds explicitly mentioned and those not so mentioned in the protocol'. Apparently some experts had even suggested that if the grounds of discrimination were to be updated vis-à-vis the list in the 1950 text of the Convention, they would want to remove 'race' from the enumeration because the term was no longer accepted as a legitimate scientific category.⁴⁷

Discrimination by any public authority

Paragraph 2 of article 1 completes the protection against discrimination by ensuring that acts of public authorities do not escape scrutiny. It was included out of caution because, as the Explanatory Report states, there may be 'some doubt' as to whether paragraph 1 on its own covers all four of the categories contemplated by the Protocol, and more specifically the third and fourth categories. According to the Explanatory Report, 'the first and second paragraphs of Article 1 are complementary. The result is that those four elements are at all events covered by Article 1 as a whole'.⁴⁸

⁴⁴ Report, Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights, Doc. 8614, para. 19.

⁴⁵ Ibid., para. 21.

⁴⁶ Opinion No. 216 (2000), Draft Protocol No. 12 to the European Convention on Human Rights.

⁴⁷ Jeroen Schokkenbroek, 'A New European Standard against Discrimination: Negotiating Protocol No. 12 to the European Convention on Human Rights', in J. Niessen and Isabelle Chopin, eds, European Anti-Discrimination Standards and National Legislation, Leiden/Boston: Martinus Nijhoff, 2004, pp. 61–79, at p. 74, fn. 18.

⁴⁸ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 12, para. 29.

According to the Explanatory Report, the term 'public authority' in paragraph 2 has been borrowed from articles 8(2) and 10(1) of the Convention and is intended to have the same meaning as in those provisions. Use of the term 'clearly seeks to limit horizontal effects, without excluding them altogether'.⁴⁹ The concept of public authority covers courts and legislative bodies, as well as the public administration. Examples of issues that might arise include access to public places and to goods, employment, the provision of services, the grant of nationality, and the conduct of law enforcement officials.

In the Croatian case concerning certain rights of religious institutions, the Chamber noted that the applicable legislation did not confer authority to provide religious education in schools and nurseries or to obtain official recognition of marriages celebrated by them. This was granted on the basis of agreements with the authorities made on a discretionary basis rather than as the consequence of an entitlement established by legislation. The Chamber said that although the issue did not fall under the first of the four categories in the Explanatory Report, because it was not a 'right specifically granted under national law', it was nevertheless covered by the third category because it involved alleged discrimination 'by a public authority in the exercise of discretionary power'.⁵⁰

Positive obligations

The European Court of Human Rights has developed a framework of analysis for all fundamental rights that looks to positive obligations upon the government, requiring it to take action in order to address violations and not simply to refrain from acting. This is especially important with respect to so-called horizontal effects of human rights, where an individual may be a victim of a violation of human rights attributable to another individual or by a corporate body. This is obviously of particular relevance in the area of discrimination, where so many violations are attributable to individuals and other non-State actors.

Nevertheless, and no doubt fully aware of the orientation of the Court, the drafters of Protocol No. 12 approached the issue of positive obligations with considerable caution. The Explanatory Report affirms that although the existence of positive obligations 'cannot be excluded altogether', the 'prime objective of Article 1 is to embody a negative obligation for the Parties: the obligation not to discriminate against individuals'.⁵¹ It continues:

25. On the one hand, Article 1 protects against discrimination by public authorities. The Article is not intended to impose a general positive obligation on the Parties to take measures to prevent or remedy all instances of discrimination in relations between private persons. An additional protocol to the Convention, which typically contains justiciable individual rights formulated in concise provisions, would not be a suitable instrument for defining the various elements of such a wide-ranging obligation of a programmatic character. Detailed and tailor-made rules have already been laid down in separate conventions exclusively devoted to the elimination of discrimination on the specific grounds covered by them (see, for example, the Convention on Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, which were both elaborated within the United Nations). It is clear that the present Protocol may not be construed as limiting or derogating from domestic or treaty provisions which provide further protection from discrimination (see the comment on Article 3 in paragraph 32 below).

⁴⁹ Jeroen Schokkenbroek, 'A New European Standard against Discrimination: Negotiating Protocol No. 12 to the European Convention on Human Rights', in J. Niessen and Isabelle Chopin, eds, European Anti-Discrimination Standards and National Legislation, Leiden/Boston: Martinus Nijhoff, 2004, pp. 61–79, at p. 76.

⁵⁰ Savez crkava 'Riječ života' and Others v. Croatia, no. 7798/08, § 107, 9 December 2010.

⁵¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 12, para. 24.

26. On the other hand, it cannot be totally excluded that the duty to 'secure' under the first paragraph of Article 1 might entail positive obligations. For example, this question could arise if there is a clear lacuna in domestic law protection from discrimination. Regarding more specifically relations between private persons, a failure to provide protection from discrimination in such relations might be so clear-cut and grave that it might engage clearly the responsibility of the State and then Article 1 of the Protocol could come into play (see, mutatis mutandis, the judgment of the Court of 26 March 1985 in the case of X and Y v. the Netherlands, Series A, No 91, paragraphs 23–24, 27 and 30).

27. Nonetheless, the extent of any positive obligations flowing from Article 1 is likely to be limited. It should be borne in mind that the first paragraph is circumscribed by the reference to the 'enjoyment of any right set forth by law' and that the second paragraph prohibits discrimination 'by any public authority'. It should be noted that, in addition, Article 1 of the Convention sets a general limit on state responsibility which is particularly relevant in cases of discrimination between private persons.

28. These considerations indicate that any positive obligation in the area of relations between private persons would concern, at the most, relations in the public sphere normally regulated by law, for which the state has a certain responsibility (for example, arbitrary denial of access to work, access to restaurants, or to services which private persons may make available to the public such as medical care or utilities such as water and electricity, etc). The precise form of the response which the state should take will vary according to the circumstances. It is understood that purely private matters would not be affected. Regulation of such matters would also be likely to interfere with the individual's right to respect for his private and family life, his home and his correspondence, as guaranteed by Article 8 of the Convention.

The Explanatory Report has been described as 'a compromise', intended to reassure States that they will not be ordered by the Court to set up affirmative action programmes or otherwise interfere in largely private matters.⁵² Uncertainty about the scope of the Protocol in this area may help account for the chequered pattern of signature and ratification. According to one textbook, '[s]ome states have been reluctant to ratify the Protocol as they consider that it contains too many uncertainties and that its application is potentially too wide. The British government, for example, has stated that it will "wait and see" how the Court interprets and applies Protocol Twelve before ratifying it.'⁵³ Fifteen years after the Protocol's adoption, the United Kingdom is still waiting.

For the time being, the case law is very meagre and it is difficult to anticipate the extent to which the Court will develop positive obligations within article 1 of the Protocol. According to Olivier de Schutter, '[a] positive obligation may be imposed on State Parties to adopt measures in order to prohibit discrimination by private parties, in situations where the failure to adopt such measures would be clearly unreasonable and result in depriving persons from the enjoyment of rights set forth by law'.⁵⁴

⁵² Fried van Hoof, 'General Prohibition of Discrimination (Article 1 of Protocol No. 12)', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 989–92, at p. 991.

⁵³ Harris et al., Law of the European Convention, p. 612.

⁵⁴ Olivier de Schutter, The Prohibition of Discrimination under European Human Rights Law Relevance for EU Racial and Employment Equality Directives, Brussels: European Commission, 2005, p. 25.

Further reading

- Robert Badinter, 'Du protocole no 11 au protocole no 12', in G. Flécheux, ed., Mélanges en hommage à Louis Edmond Pettiti, Brussels: Bruylant, 1998, pp. 103–12.
- M. Bell, 'Combating Racism through European Law: A Comparison of the Racial Equality Directive and Protocol 12', in Isabelle Chopin and J. Niessen, eds, Combating Racial and Ethnic Discrimination: Taking the European Legislative Agenda Further, London: Migration Policy Group and Commission for Racial Equality, 2002, p. 7.
- Lucy Claridge, 'Protocol 12 and Sejdić and Finci v Bosnia and Herzegovina: A Missed Opportunity?', [2011] EHRLR 82.
- Frowein/Peukert, MenschenRechtsKonvention, pp. 720–2.
- Grabenwarter, European Convention, pp. 443–5.
- Michael Head, Non-Discrimination, A Human Right—Seminar to Mark the Entry into Force of Protocol No. 12, Strasbourg: Council of Europe Publishing, 2006.
- Fried van Hoof, 'General Prohibition of Discrimination (Article 1 of Protocol No. 12)', in Van Dijk et al., Theory and Practice, pp. 989–92.
- Urfan Khaliq, 'Protocol 12 to the European Convention on Human Rights, a Step Forward or a Step Too Far?', (2001) 3 Public Law 457.
- Gay Moon, 'The Draft Discrimination Protocol to the European Convention on Human Rights: A Progress Report', [2000] EHRLR 49.
- Jeroen Schokkenbroeck, 'A New European Standard against Discrimination: Negotiating Protocol No. 12 to the European Convention on Human Rights', in J. Niessen and Isabelle Chopin, eds, European Anti-Discrimination Standards and National Legislation, Leiden/Boston: Martinus Nijhoff, 2004, pp. 61–79.
- Jeroen Schokkenbroeck, 'Towards a Stronger European Protection against Discrimination: The Preparation of a New Additional Protocol to the European Convention on Human Rights', in Gay Moon, ed., Race Discrimination: Developing and Using a New European Legal Framework, Oxford: Oxford University Press, pp. 29–37.
- O. De Schutter, The Prohibition of Discrimination under European Human Rights Law Relevance for EU Racial and Employment Equality Directives, Brussels: European Commission, 2005.

Article 2. Territorial application/Application territoriale

1. Any State may, at the time of signature or when depositing its instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval, specify the territory or territories to which this Protocol shall apply.

2. Any State may at any later date, by a declaration addressed to the Secretary General of the Council of Europe, extend the application of this Protocol to any other territory specified in the declaration. In respect of such territory the Protocol shall enter into force on the first day of the month following the expiration of a period of three months after the date of receipt by the Secretary General of such declaration.

3. Any declaration made under the two preceding paragraphs may, in respect of any territory specified in such declaration, be withdrawn or modified by a notification addressed to the Secretary General of the Council of Europe. The withdrawal or modification shall become effective on the first day of the month following the expiration of a period of three months after the date of receipt of such notification by the Secretary General.

4. A declaration made in accordance with this article shall be deemed to have been made in accordance with paragraph 1 of Article 56 of the Convention.

5. Any State which has made a declaration in accordance with paragraph 1 or 2 of this article may at any time thereafter declare on behalf of one or more of the territories to which the declaration relates that it accepts the competence of the Court to receive applications from individuals, non-governmental organisations or groups of individuals as provided by Article 34 of the Convention in respect of Article 1 of this Protocol.

1. Tout Etat peut, au moment de la signature ou au moment du dépôt de son instrument de ratification, d'acceptation ou d'approbation, désigner le ou les territoires auxquels s'appliquera le présent Protocole.

2. Tout Etat peut, à tout autre moment par la suite, par une déclaration adressée au Secrétaire Général du Conseil de l'Europe, étendre l'application du présent Protocole à tout autre territoire désigné dans la déclaration. Le Protocole entrera en vigueur à l'égard de ce territoire le premier jour du mois qui suit l'expiration d'une période de trois mois après la date de réception de la déclaration par le Secrétaire Général.

3. Toute déclaration faite en vertu des deux paragraphes précédents pourra être retirée ou modifiée, en ce qui concerne tout territoire désigné dans cette déclaration, par notification adressée au Secrétaire Général du Conseil de l'Europe. Le retrait ou la modification prendra effet le premier jour du mois qui suit l'expiration d'une période de trois mois après la date de réception de la notification par le Secrétaire Général.

4. Une déclaration faite conformément au présent article sera considérée comme ayant été faite conformément au paragraphe 1 de l'article 56 de la Convention..

5. Tout Etat ayant fait une déclaration conformément au paragraphe 1 ou 2 du présent article peut, à tout moment par la suite, déclarer relativement à un ou plusieurs des territoires visés dans cette déclaration qu'il accepte la compétence de la Cour pour connaître des requêtes de personnes physiques, d'organisations non gouvernementales ou de groupes de particuliers, comme le prévoit l'article 34 de la Convention, au titre de l'article 1 du présent Protocole.

The first three paragraphs of article 2 are based upon the relevant text in the Model Final Clauses. Paragraph 4 is derived from article 6(4) of Protocol No. 7. Paragraph 5 is based on article 56(4) of the Convention.¹ The reader is referred to the relevant chapters of this Commentary.

There have been two declarations pursuant to article 2. In its instrument of ratification deposited on 15 June 2001, Georgia declared: 'Georgia declines its responsibility for the violations of the provisions of the Protocol on the territories of Abkhazia and Tskhinvali region until the full jurisdiction of Georgia is restored over these territories.'² In its instrument of acceptance deposited on 28 July 2004, the Netherlands stated that it 'accepts the Protocol for the Kingdom in Europe, the Netherlands Antilles and Aruba'.³

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 12, para. 31.

² (2001) 44 YB 21.

³ (2004) 47 YB 25.

Article 3. Relationship to the Convention/Relations avec la Convention

As between the States Parties, the provisions of Articles 1 and 2 of this Protocol shall be regarded as additional articles to the Convention, and all the provisions of the Convention shall apply accordingly.

Les Etats parties considèrent les articles 1 et 2 du présent Protocole comme des articles additionnels à la Convention et toutes les dispositions de la Convention s'appliquent en conséquence.

The Explanatory Report devotes two paragraphs to article 3:

32. The purpose of this article is to clarify the relationship of this Protocol to the Convention by indicating that all the provisions of the latter shall apply in respect of Articles 1 and 2 of the Protocol. Among those provisions, attention is drawn in particular to Article 53, under the terms of which 'Nothing in this Convention shall be construed as limiting or derogating from any of the human rights and fundamental freedoms which may be ensured under the laws of any High Contracting Party or under any other agreement to which it is a Party'. It is clear that this article will apply in the relations between the present Protocol and the Convention itself. It was decided not to include a reference to Article 16 of the Convention in this Protocol.

33. As has already been mentioned in paragraph 21 above, Article 1 of the Protocol encompasses, but is wider in scope than the protection offered by Article 14 of the Convention. As an additional Protocol, it does not amend or abrogate Article 14 of the Convention, which will therefore continue to apply, also in respect of States Parties to the Protocol. There is thus an overlap between the two provisions. In accordance with Article 32 of the Convention, any further questions of interpretation concerning the precise relationship between these provisions fall within the jurisdiction of the Court.

If the European Court of Human Rights makes a finding that article 14 of the Convention has been breached, it will not then consider the matter from the perspective of Protocol No. 12. No useful purpose would be served by such duplication.¹

¹ Savez crkava 'Riječ života' and Others v. Croatia, no. 7798/08, § 115, 9 December 2010.

Article 4. Signature and ratification/Signature et ratification

This Protocol shall be open for signature by member States of the Council of Europe which have signed the Convention. It is subject to ratification, acceptance or approval. A member State of the Council of Europe may not ratify, accept or approve this Protocol without previously or simultaneously ratifying the Convention. Instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval shall be deposited with the Secretary General of the Council of Europe.

Le présent Protocole est ouvert à la signature des Etats membres du Conseil de l'Europe qui ont signé la Convention. Il sera soumis à ratification, acceptation ou approbation. Un Etat membre du Conseil de l'Europe ne peut ratifier, accepter ou approuver le présent Protocole sans avoir simultanément ou antérieurement ratifié la Convention. Les instruments de ratification, d'acceptation ou d'approbation seront déposés près le Secrétaire Général du Conseil de l'Europe.

The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 12 explains that the text of article 4 'correspond[s] to the wording of the Model Final Clauses adopted by the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe'.¹ Article 4 of Protocol No. 12 is identical to the text of article 7 of Protocol No. 6. Readers are referred to the chapter in this Commentary on article 7 of Protocol No. 6.

Protocol No. 12 was opened for signature on 4 November 2000, the fiftieth anniversary of the adoption of the European Convention. On that day, twenty-six Member States of the Council of Europe signed the instrument. Since that time, it has been signed by another twelve Member States, almost all of them deposited prior to entry into force on 1 April 2005.² But subsequently, the Protocol seems to have run out of steam, and only two States, Spain and Andorra, have signed it since 2005. Several States have neither signed nor ratified Protocol No. 12: Bulgaria, Denmark, France, Lithuania, Malta, Monaco, Poland, Sweden, Switzerland, and the United Kingdom. The Protocol has been ratified by the following States: Albania, Andorra, Armenia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Cyprus, Finland, Georgia, Luxembourg, Macedonia, Montenegro, the Netherlands, Romania, San Marino, Serbia, Slovenia, Spain, and Ukraine.

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 12, para. 34.

² For a complaint declared inadmissible because Slovakia has signed but not ratified Protocol No. 12, see Fehér and Dolník v. Slovakia (dec.), nos 14927/12 and 30415/12, §§ 53–55, 21 May 2013.

Article 5. Entry into force/Entrée en vigueur

1. This Protocol shall enter into force on the first day of the month following the expiration of a period of three months after the date on which ten member States of the Council of Europe have expressed their consent to be bound by the Protocol in accordance with the provisions of Article 4.

2. In respect of any member State which subsequently expresses its consent to be bound by it, the Protocol shall enter into force on the first day of the month following the expiration of a period of three months after the date of the deposit of the instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval.

1. Le présent Protocole entrera en vigueur le premier jour du mois qui suit l'expiration d'une période de trois mois après la date à laquelle dix Etats membres du Conseil de l'Europe auront exprimé leur consentement à être liés par le présent Protocole conformément aux dispositions de son article 4.

2. Pour tout Etat membre qui exprimera ultérieurement son consentement à être lié par le présent Protocole, celui-ci entrera en vigueur le premier jour du mois qui suit l'expiration d'une période de trois mois après la date du dépôt de l'instrument de ratification, d'acceptation ou d'approbation.

This provision is the entry into force clause adopted by the Committee of Ministers in February 1980 as one of the Model Final Clauses. Readers of this Commentary are referred to the chapter on article 8 of Protocol No. 7. Unlike article 8 of Protocol No. 7, article 5 of Protocol No. 12 gives States a three-month delay following signature prior to entry into force.

Protocol No. 12 entered into force on 1 April 2005, following the tenth ratification.

Article 6. Depositary functions/Fonctions du dépositaire

The Secretary General of the Council of Europe shall notify all the member States of the Council of Europe of:

- (a) any signature;
- (b) the deposit of any instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval;
- (c) any date of entry into force of this Protocol in accordance with Articles 2 and 5;
- (d) any other act, notification or communication relating to this Protocol.

Le Secrétaire Général du Conseil de l'Europe notifiera à tous les Etats membres du Conseil de l'Europe:

- a) toute signature;
- b) le dépôt de tout instrument de ratification, d'acceptation ou d'approbation;
- c) toute date d'entrée en vigueur du présent Protocole conformément à ses articles 2 et 5;
- d) tout autre acte, notification ou communication, ayant trait au présent Protocole.

The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 12 explains that article 6 'correspond[s] to the wording of the Model Final Clauses adopted by the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe'.¹ The text is virtually identical to article 9 of Protocol No. 6. Readers of the Commentary are referred to the chapter dealing with that provision.

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 12, para. 34.

PART EIGHT

PROTOCOL NO. 13 TO THE
CONVENTION FOR THE PROTECTION
OF HUMAN RIGHTS AND FUNDAMENTAL FREEDOMS, CONCERNING THE ABOLITION OF
THE DEATH PENALTY IN ALL CIRCUMSTANCES

THE HISTORY OF

THE CITY OF BOSTON
FROM THE FIRST SETTLEMENT TO THE PRESENT TIME
BY NATHANIEL BENTLEY OF BOSTON
IN TWO VOLUMES.
VOL. I.

Preamble/Préambule

The member States of the Council of Europe signatory hereto,

Convinced that everyone's right to life is a basic value in a democratic society and that the abolition of the death penalty is essential for the protection of this right and for the full recognition of the inherent dignity of all human beings;

Wishing to strengthen the protection of the right to life guaranteed by the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms signed at Rome on 4 November 1950 (hereinafter referred to as 'the Convention');

Noting that Protocol No. 6 to the Convention, concerning the Abolition of the Death Penalty, signed at Strasbourg on 28 April 1983, does not exclude the death penalty in respect of acts committed in time of war or of imminent threat of war;

Being resolved to take the final step in order to abolish the death penalty in all circumstances,

Have agreed as follows:

Les Etats membres du Conseil de l'Europe, signataires du présent Protocole,

Convaincus que le droit de toute personne à la vie est une valeur fondamentale dans une société démocratique, et que l'abolition de la peine de mort est essentielle à la protection de ce droit et à la pleine reconnaissance de la dignité inhérente à tous les êtres humains;

Souhaitant renforcer la protection du droit à la vie garanti par la Convention de sauvegarde des Droits de l'Homme et des Libertés Fondamentales signée à Rome le 4 novembre 1950 (ci-après dénommée «la Convention»);

Notant que le Protocole n° 6 à la Convention concernant l'abolition de la peine de mort, signé à Strasbourg le 28 avril 1983, n'exclut pas la peine de mort pour des actes commis en temps de guerre ou de danger imminent de guerre;

Résolus à faire le pas ultime afin d'abolir la peine de mort en toutes circonstances,

Sont convenus de ce qui suit:

Introductory comments

There is an abolitionist bent to article 6 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, adopted by the United Nations General Assembly in 1966. Article 6(6) states: 'Nothing in this article shall be invoked to delay or to prevent the abolition of capital punishment by any State Party to the present Covenant.'¹ The American Convention on Human Rights, adopted by the Organisation of American States three years later, prevents a State that has already abolished the death penalty from re-instating it.² In that sense, it is an abolitionist treaty, although the retention of capital punishment is not an obstacle to a State wishing to ratify the American Convention. Protocol No. 6 to the European Convention on Human Rights, adopted by the Council of Europe in 1983, was the first international treaty dedicated exclusively to the abolition of the death penalty. It was nevertheless an imperfect instrument because it did not exclude the death penalty in respect of acts committed in time of war or of imminent threat of war. The compromise that this represented with a more principled and absolute approach was justified at the time as being necessary to obtain support for the instrument. That was perhaps a miscalculation. Attitudes were evolving more quickly than the ponderous negotiators in Strasbourg. In the end, only a few States actually availed themselves of the wartime exception offered them by article 2 of Protocol No. 6. Just as Protocol No. 6 was adopted in order to amend what had become an anachronistic reference in article 2(1) of the European Convention, so Protocol No. 13 was required in order to bring Protocol No. 6 into the twenty-first century.

¹ International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, (1976) 999 UNTS 171, art. 6(6).

² American Convention on Human Rights, (1979) 1144 UNTS 123, art. 4(3).

Drafting of the provision

The initiative for a Preamble that was more elaborate and substantive than that of Protocol No. 6 came from several members of the Committee of Experts. The Committee agreed to an explicit reference to the right to life and to the concept of human dignity. Members of the Committee also proposed including a brief reference to the abolitionist process under way for two decades as well as to refer to abolition of the death penalty in law as well as in practice.³ A proposal to insert a general sentence to the effect that criminal justice policy should aim at rehabilitation of criminals 'was not retained because it was too wide-ranging and might lead to problems of interpretation'.⁴ Suggestions that arguments favouring abolition be included were rejected as being 'counter-productive, whereas the aim of the protocol was unequivocal rejection of capital punishment'.⁵ There were several proposals on the notion of 'final step', 'decisive step', 'further step', or 'definitive step' and about the idea of 'abolishing unconditionally'. There was concern about a reference in the draft to the 'significant legal and political evolution' because this might serve as an a contrario argument in respect of other regions.⁶

Analysis and interpretation

The Preamble to Protocol No. 13 is much more elaborate than the corresponding text in Protocol No. 6. The latter consists of only two recitals, one of them a perfunctory reference to the European Convention, the other stating 'that the evolution that has occurred in several member States of the Council of Europe expresses a general tendency in favour of abolition of the death penalty'. The lengthy Preamble to Protocol No. 13 provides the philosophical underpinning for the Protocol. Given that the substantive provisions of Protocol No. 13 do nothing more than reiterate those of Protocol No. 6 minus the reference to capital punishment in wartime found in article 2 of that instrument, the substantial Preamble is the most significant difference in the texts of the two instruments.

The right to life

The first recital of the Preamble affirms the relationship of the right to life—initially set out in article 2 of the European Convention on Human Rights—to the subject of capital

³ Steering Committee for Human Rights, 27th meeting, 22 June 2001, DH-DEV (2001) 3, para. 20.

⁴ Ibid., para. 21.

⁵ Ibid.

⁶ Ibid., para. 23.

punishment: 'Convinced that everyone's right to life is a basic value in a democratic society and that the abolition of the death penalty is essential for the protection of this right and for the full recognition of the inherent dignity of all human beings...'⁷ The second recital notes that the Protocol is intended to strengthen the protection of the right to life' guaranteed by the European Convention. The reference is to article 2 of the Convention, entitled 'Right to life', declared by article 15 as a right that is not subject to derogation except in the case of lawful acts of war.

It is not without interest that the Preamble does not in any way suggest a relationship with the prohibition of torture or inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, given that it is within the framework of article 3 of the Convention that the Court's case law has addressed the subject of the death penalty.⁸

The Explanatory Report describes the right to life as 'an inalienable attribute of human beings' and a 'supreme value in the international hierarchy of human rights' that is 'unanimously guaranteed in legally binding standards at universal and regional levels'. It goes on to explain that when international standards to guarantee the right to life were drawn up, exceptions were made for the death penalty. Nevertheless, the Report states that 'there has since been an evolution in domestic and international law towards abolition of the death penalty, both in general and, more specifically, for acts committed in time of war'.⁹

Readers of this Commentary are referred to the chapter on article 2 of the Convention for a detailed discussion of the right to life.

Relationship to Protocol No. 6

The third recital refers to Protocol No. 6 in the following terms: 'Noting that Protocol No. 6 to the Convention, concerning the Abolition of the Death Penalty, signed at Strasbourg on 28 April 1983, does not exclude the death penalty in respect of acts committed in time of war or of imminent threat of war...'. The Committee of Ministers, in the Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 13, described Protocol No. 6 as a 'landmark stage' in the 'evolution in domestic and international law towards abolition of the death penalty'.¹⁰ This rather positive assessment of Protocol No. 6 cannot easily be deduced from the third recital, however.

Although Protocol No. 13 presents itself as an additional protocol to the Convention itself, in reality it is very much an additional protocol to Protocol No. 6. That is because it 'corrects' the wartime exception to the abolition of the death penalty in Protocol No. 6 in the same way that Protocol No. 6 'corrects' the reference to capital punishment in article 2(1) of the Convention. It would be easy, with the benefit of hindsight, to claim that the Council of Europe misjudged the situation in 1983 when Protocol No. 6 was adopted. It might well have omitted article 2, where the wartime exception is set out, without significantly hindering ratification by a large majority of States Parties to the European Convention. It is probably more uncertain to say the same thing about the reference to ⁷ Cited in Al Nashiri v. Poland, no. 28761/11, § 577, 24 July 2014; Al-Saadoon and Mufdhi v. the United Kingdom, no. 61498/08, § 115, ECHR 2010 (extracts); Ocalan v. Turkey [GC], no. 46221/99, § 58, ECHR 2005-IV; Ocalan v. Turkey, no. 46221/99, § 56, 12 March 2003.

⁸ Al Nashiri v. Poland, no. 28761/11, § 120, 24 July 2014.

⁹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 13, paras 1–3.

¹⁰ Ibid., paras 3–4.

capital punishment in article 2(1) of the Convention. Most of the original signatories of the European Convention had already, in November 1950, abandoned the death penalty in law or in practice. However, it lingered on in a handful of countries—Ireland, the United Kingdom, and France—for several more years. These three States might well have found themselves unable to ratify the Convention had it imposed a prohibition on capital punishment.

That the drafters of Protocol No. 6 showed good judgment in limiting the scope of the instrument to peacetime is also reflected in the subsequent protocols dealing with the death penalty adopted in the systems of United Nations and the Organisation of American States.¹¹

The 'final step'

The fourth recital expresses the resolve of the Member States of the Council of Europe to abolish the death penalty in all circumstances. There is an interesting distinction with the equivalent formulation in Protocol No. 6 where the Preamble refers to 'The Member States of the Council of Europe, signatory to this Protocol'. Protocol No. 13 is the result of a consensus reached by all Member States. Although an additional rather than an amending protocol, with the consequence that it does not require unanimous ratification for entry into force, the Preamble seems to indicate that this is more than an instrument applicable only to those States that have signed, or eventually ratified, the instrument.

The Protocol is described as 'the final step' in full abolition. It is the first legal instrument in any of the international human rights systems to comprise such a measure.

Further reading

Jon Yorke, 'The Right to Life and Abolition of the Death Penalty in the Council of Europe,' (2009) 34 European Law Review 205 (2009).

Jon Yorke, 'Inhuman and Degrading Punishment and Abolition of the Death Penalty in the Council of Europe', (2010) 16 European Public Law 77.

¹¹ Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, (1991) 1642 UNTS 414; Protocol to the American Convention on Human Rights to Abolish the Death Penalty, OASTS No. 73.

Article 1. Abolition of the death penalty/Abolition de la peine de mort

The death penalty shall be abolished. No one shall be condemned to such penalty or executed. La peine de mort est abolie. Nul ne peut être condamné à une telle peine ni exécuté.

Introductory comments

The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 13 points not only to Protocol No. 6 but to 'universal and regional standards', an apparent reference to the additional protocols adopted to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the American Convention on Human Rights. These three instruments provide for partial abolition of capital punishment while acknowledging the possibility, in one form or another, of exceptions relating to wartime and military justice. The Report says 'there has since been an evolution in domestic and international law towards abolition of the death penalty, both in general and, more specifically, for acts committed in time of war'.

Drafting of the provision

Article 1 is identical to the draft text in the Swedish proposal. During discussion in the Committee of Experts, various proposed amendments were considered. The insertion of '[n]o one within the jurisdiction of a State Party to the present Protocol may be ...' was deemed to be superfluous, as the notion was implied in all additional protocols as a result of article 1 of the Convention. The words '(No one shall be) condemned (...) or executed' were retained by the Committee of Experts in order to prohibit both imposition of sentence and execution.¹

Analysis and interpretation

According to the Explanatory Report, article 1 'must be read in conjunction with Article 2 of the Protocol'. It 'affirms the principle of the abolition of the death penalty. This entails the obligation to abolish this penalty in all circumstances, including for acts committed in time of war or of imminent threat of war. The second sentence of this article aims to underline the fact that the right guaranteed is a subjective right of the individual.'²

Readers of the Commentary are referred to the detailed discussion in the chapter on article 1 of Protocol No. 6, a text that is identical to that of article 1 of Protocol No. 13.

¹ Steering Committee for Human Rights, 27th meeting, 22 June 2001, DH-DEV (2001) 3, para. 13.

² Ibid., para. 14.

Further reading

Jon Yorke, 'The Right to Life and Abolition of the Death Penalty in the Council of Europe', (2009) 34 European Law Review 205 (2009).

Jon Yorke, 'Inhuman and Degrading Punishment and Abolition of the Death Penalty in the Council of Europe', (2010) 16 European Public Law 77.

Article 2. Prohibition of derogations/Interdiction de dérogations

No derogation from the provisions of this Protocol shall be made under Article 15 of the Convention.

Aucune dérogation n'est autorisée aux dispositions du présent Protocole au titre de l'article 15 de la Convention.

Because article 5 deems the provisions of the Protocol to be regarded as additional articles to the Convention, with the consequence that all the provisions of the Convention shall apply accordingly, article 2 is necessary in order to prevent the application of article 15 of the Convention. Article 15 allows measures of derogation from the Convention 'in time of war or other public emergency threatening the life of the nation'. Thus, because the 'object and purpose' of the Protocol is abolition of the death penalty in time of war or of imminent threat of war as well as in time of peace, it was deemed necessary to exclude the application of article 15.¹

This provision is identical to article 3 of Protocol No. 6. Readers of the Commentary are referred to the chapter dealing with that provision.

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 13, para. 15.

Article 3. Prohibition of reservations/Interdiction de réserves

No reservation may be made under Article 57 of the Convention in respect of the provisions of this Protocol.

Aucune réserve n'est admise aux dispositions du présent Protocole au titre de l'article 57 de la Convention.

According to the Explanatory Report, article 3 is meant as an exception to article 57 of the Convention.¹ Because article 5 of Protocol No. 13 confirms that the provisions of the Convention apply, it is necessary to exclude article 57 in order to prohibit reservations. The text of article 3 is virtually identical to that of article 4 of Protocol No. 6. Readers of the Commentary are referred to the chapter dealing with that provision.

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 13, para. 16.

Article 4. Territorial application/Application territoriale

1. Any State may, at the time of signature or when depositing its instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval, specify the territory or territories to which this Protocol shall apply.
 2. Any State may at any later date, by a declaration addressed to the Secretary General of the Council of Europe, extend the application of this Protocol to any other territory specified in the declaration. In respect of such territory the Protocol shall enter into force on the first day of the month following the expiration of a period of three months after the date of receipt of such declaration by the Secretary General.
 3. Any declaration made under the two preceding paragraphs may, in respect of any territory specified in such declaration, be withdrawn or modified by a notification addressed to the Secretary General. The withdrawal or modification shall become effective on the first day of the month following the expiration of a period of three months after the date of receipt of such notification by the Secretary General.
1. Tout Etat peut, au moment de la signature ou au moment du dépôt de son instrument de ratification, d'acceptation ou d'approbation, désigner le ou les territoires auxquels s'appliquera le présent Protocole.
 2. Tout Etat peut, à tout autre moment par la suite, par une déclaration adressée au Secrétaire Général du Conseil de l'Europe, étendre l'application du présent Protocole à tout autre territoire désigné dans la déclaration. Le Protocole entrera en vigueur à l'égard de ce territoire le premier jour du mois qui suit l'expiration d'une période de trois mois après la date de réception de la déclaration par le Secrétaire Général.
 3. Toute déclaration faite en vertu des deux paragraphes précédents pourra être retirée ou modifiée, en ce qui concerne tout territoire désigné dans cette déclaration, par notification adressée au Secrétaire Général du Conseil de l'Europe. Le retrait ou la modification prendra effet le premier jour du mois qui suit l'expiration d'une période de trois mois après la date de réception de la notification par le Secrétaire Général.

Article 4 is largely based upon the territorial application provision found in the Model Final Clauses adopted by the Committee of Ministers in February 1980.¹ The wording is very similar to that of article 5 of Protocol No. 6. According to the Explanatory Report:

[t]his clause was included only to facilitate a rapid ratification, acceptance or approval by the States concerned. The purpose of paragraph 3 is merely to make allowance for formal withdrawal or modification in case the State Party ceases to be responsible for the international relations of a territory specified in such a declaration and not to allow in any way states to re-introduce the death penalty in such territory.²

Denmark formulated declarations with respect to Greenland and the Faroe Islands³ that have since been withdrawn.⁴ The Kingdom of the Netherlands has accepted the Protocol for the Netherlands Antilles and Aruba in addition to its metropolitan territory in Europe.⁵ The United Kingdom's ratification was accompanied by a declaration indicating

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 13, para. 17.

² Ibid.

³ (2002) 45 YB 21.

⁴ For the Faroe Islands: (2003) 46 YB 13.

⁵ (2006) 49 YB 10.

that the Protocol would initially apply to the metropolitan area of Great Britain and Northern Ireland.⁶ Subsequently, it issued a series of declarations extending the application of Protocol No. 13 to the Isle of Man, the Bailiwick of Guernsey, the Bailiwick of Jersey, the Sovereign Base Areas of Akrotiri and Dhekelia in Cyprus, Anguilla, Bermuda, the Falkland Islands, Gibraltar, Montserrat, St Helena, Ascension and Tristan da Cunha, South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands, and the Turks and Caicos Islands.⁷

Article 4 does not contemplate declarations by which a portion of the territory is excluded from the scope of the Protocol. Two States that do not exercise sovereignty over portions of their territory, Georgia and Moldova, have made declarations in this respect.⁸

⁶ (2003) 46 YB 13.

⁷ (2004) 47 YB 25.

⁸ Ibid. This issue is discussed in more detail in the chapter on article 56 of the Convention in this Commentary.

Article 5. Relationship to the Convention/Relations avec la Convention

As between the States Parties the provisions of Articles 1 to 4 of this Protocol shall be regarded as additional articles to the Convention, and all the provisions of the Convention shall apply accordingly.

Les Etats parties considèrent les articles 1 et 2 du présent Protocole comme des articles additionnels à la Convention et toutes les dispositions de la Convention s'appliquent en conséquence.

The text of article 5 is virtually identical to that of article 6 of Protocol No. 6. Readers of the Commentary are referred to the chapter dealing with that provision.

The Explanatory Report points out that Protocol No. 13 is an additional protocol and that, as such, it does not 'supersede Article 2 of the Convention, since the first sentence of paragraph 1 and the whole of paragraph 2 of that article still remain valid'. However, the Report adds that it is 'no longer applicable in respect of the States Parties to this Protocol'. Another consequence is that States Parties to Protocol No. 6 that ratify Protocol No. 13 cannot avail themselves of the wartime exception provided by article 2 of the former instrument.¹

When Protocol No. 13 was being drafted, the Rapporteur of the Parliamentary Assembly proposed that a second paragraph be added to article 5: 'When this Protocol has come into force in all States Parties to the Convention, the second sentence of Article 2 Paragraph 1 of the Convention shall be replaced with the text of Article 1 of this Protocol, and in the first sentence of Article 57 of the Convention, after the words "provision of the Convention" the words "except for Article 2 paragraph 1" shall be added.'²

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 13, para. 18.

² Opinion No. 233 (2002) on the Draft Protocol to the European Convention on Human Rights concerning the Abolition of the Death Penalty in All Circumstances, para. 6; Report, Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights, Doc. 9316, para. 11.

Article 6. Signature and ratification/Signature et ratification

This Protocol shall be open for signature by member States of the Council of Europe which have signed the Convention. It is subject to ratification, acceptance or approval. A member State of the Council of Europe may not ratify, accept or approve this Protocol without previously or simultaneously ratifying the Convention. Instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval shall be deposited with the Secretary General of the Council of Europe.

Le présent Protocole est ouvert à la signature des Etats membres du Conseil de l'Europe qui ont signé la Convention. Il sera soumis à ratification, acceptation ou approbation. Un Etat membre du Conseil de l'Europe ne peut ratifier, accepter ou approuver le présent Protocole sans avoir simultanément ou antérieurement ratifié la Convention. Les instruments de ratification, d'acceptation ou d'approbation seront déposés près le Secrétaire Général du Conseil de l'Europe.

The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 13 explains that the text of article 6 'correspond[s] to the wording of the Model Final Clauses adopted by the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe'.¹ Article 6 of Protocol No. 13 is identical to the text of article 7 of Protocol No. 6. Readers are referred to the chapter in this Commentary on article 7 of Protocol No. 6. Protocol No. 13 was opened for signature on 3 May 2002. On that day, 36 Member States of the Council of Europe signed the instrument. Since that time, it has been signed by all but two Member States, Azerbaijan and Russia. Protocol No. 13 has been ratified by forty-four Member States. Armenia signed Protocol No. 13 on 19 May 2006, but has not ratified.

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 13, para. 20.

Article 7. Entry into force/Entrée en vigueur

1. This Protocol shall enter into force on the first day of the month following the expiration of a period of three months after the date on which ten member States of the Council of Europe have expressed their consent to be bound by the Protocol in accordance with the provisions of Article 4.

2. In respect of any member State which subsequently expresses its consent to be bound by it, the Protocol shall enter into force on the first day of the month following the expiration of a period of three months after the date of the deposit of the instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval.

1. Le présent Protocole entrera en vigueur le premier jour du mois qui suit l'expiration d'une période de trois mois après la date à laquelle dix Etats membres du Conseil de l'Europe auront exprimé leur consentement à être liés par le présent Protocole conformément aux dispositions de son article 4.

2. Pour tout Etat membre qui exprimera ultérieurement son consentement à être lié par le présent Protocole, celui-ci entrera en vigueur le premier jour du mois qui suit l'expiration d'une période de trois mois après la date du dépôt de l'instrument de ratification, d'acceptation ou d'approbation.

This provision is the entry into force clause adopted by the Committee of Ministers in February 1980 as one of the Model Final Clauses. Article 7 of Protocol No. 13 is virtually identical to the text of article 8 of Protocol No. 6. Readers are referred to the chapter in this Commentary on article 8 of Protocol No. 6. Protocol No. 13 entered into force on 1 July 2003.

Article 8. Depositary functions/Fonctions du dépositaire

The Secretary General of the Council of Europe shall notify all the member States of the Council of Europe of:

- (a) any signature
- (b) the deposit of any instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval;
- (c) any date of entry into force of this Protocol in accordance with Articles 2 and 5;
- (d) any other act, notification or communication relating to this Protocol.

Le Secrétaire Général du Conseil de l'Europe notifiera à tous les Etats membres du Conseil de l'Europe:

- a) toute signature;
- b) le dépôt de tout instrument de ratification, d'acceptation ou d'approbation;
- c) toute date d'entrée en vigueur du présent Protocole conformément à ses articles 2 et 5;
- d) tout autre acte, notification ou communication, ayant trait au présent Protocole.

The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 13 explains that article 8 'correspond[s] to the wording of the Model Final Clauses adopted by the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe'.¹ The text is virtually identical to article 9 of Protocol No. 6. Readers of the Commentary are referred to the chapter dealing with that provision.

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 13, para. 20.

PART NINE

PROTOCOL NO. 16 TO THE
CONVENTION FOR THE PROTECTION
OF HUMAN RIGHTS AND FUNDAMENTAL FREEDOMS

1. The first part of the document discusses the importance of maintaining accurate records of all transactions. This is essential for ensuring the integrity of the financial data and for providing a clear audit trail.

2. The second part of the document outlines the various methods used to collect and analyze data. These methods include direct observation, interviews, and the use of specialized software tools.

3. The third part of the document describes the results of the data collection and analysis. It shows that there is a significant correlation between the variables being studied, which supports the hypothesis that was tested.

4. The final part of the document provides a conclusion and discusses the implications of the findings. It suggests that the results of this study could be used to inform policy decisions and to guide future research in this area.

Preamble/Préambule

The member States of the Council of Europe and other High Contracting Parties to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, signed at Rome on 4 November 1950 (hereinafter referred to as 'the Convention'), signatories hereto,

Having regard to the provisions of the Convention and, in particular, Article 19 establishing the European Court of Human Rights (hereinafter referred to as 'the Court');

Considering that the extension of the Court's competence to give advisory opinions will further enhance the interaction between the Court and national authorities and thereby reinforce implementation of the Convention, in accordance with the principle of subsidiarity;

Having regard to Opinion No. 285 (2013) adopted by the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe on 28 June 2013,

Have agreed as follows:

Les Etats membres du Conseil de l'Europe et les autres Hautes Parties contractantes à la Convention de sauvegarde des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales, signée à Rome le 4 novembre 1950 (ci-après dénommée « la Convention »), signataires du présent Protocole,

Vu les dispositions de la Convention, notamment l'article 19 établissant la Cour européenne des droits de l'homme (ci-après dénommée « la Cour »);

Considérant que l'extension de la compétence de la Cour pour donner des avis consultatifs renforcera l'interaction entre la Cour et les autorités nationales, et consolidera ainsi la mise en œuvre de la Convention, conformément au principe de subsidiarité;

Vu l'Avis n° 285 (2013), adopté par l'Assemblée parlementaire du Conseil de l'Europe le 28 juin 2013,

Sont convenus de ce qui suit:

Protocol No. 16 to the Convention, adopted in October 2013, enables the 'highest courts and tribunals' of a State Party to ask the Court for 'advisory opinions on questions of principle relating to the interpretation or application of the rights and freedoms defined in the Convention or the Protocols thereto'.¹ Dean Spielmann, the President of the European Court, has called it 'the Protocol of the dialogue'. According to the Preamble of the Protocol, 'the extension of the Court's competence to give advisory opinions will further enhance the interaction between the Court and national authorities and thereby reinforce implementation of the Convention, in accordance with the principle of subsidiarity'.²

The first recital in the Preamble begins with the words 'The member States of the Council of Europe and other High Contracting Parties to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms...' Although this unusual formulation is not discussed in the Explanatory Report, it would appear to be an acknowledgement of the future accession to the Convention by the European Union.³

The final recital in the Preamble to Protocol No. 16 refers to Opinion No. 285 (2013) adopted by the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe on 28 June 2013. The

¹ Protocol No. 16 to the Convention on the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, ETS 214, art. 1(1).

² On the drafting of Protocol No. 16, see Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 16.

³ Report, Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights, AS/Jur (2013) 21, Doc. 13220, para. 8.

Opinion expresses the wish of the Parliamentary Assembly that the Committee of Ministers adopt the Protocol. It includes the following statement:

2. This additional protocol to the Convention, which must be ratified by 10 High Contracting Parties to the Convention before it enters into force, is likely to:
 - 2.1. strengthen the link between the Court and States' highest courts by creating a platform for judicial dialogue, thereby facilitating the application of the Court's case law by national courts;
 - 2.2. help shift, from ex post to ex ante, the resolution of a number of questions of interpretation of the Convention's provisions in the domestic forum, saving—in the long run—the valuable resources of the Court; the speedier resolution of similar cases on the domestic plane will also reinforce the principle of subsidiarity.⁴

For general observations about the role of the preamble of a treaty, see the chapter in this Commentary on the Preamble to the European Convention on Human Rights.

⁴ Draft Protocol No. 16 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Opinion 285 (2013).

Article 1. [Requests for an advisory opinion]

1. Highest courts and tribunals of a High Contracting Party, as specified in accordance with Article 10, may request the Court to give advisory opinions on questions of principle relating to the interpretation or application of the rights and freedoms defined in the Convention or the protocols thereto.

2. The requesting court or tribunal may seek an advisory opinion only in the context of a case pending before it.

3. The requesting court or tribunal shall give reasons for its request and shall provide the relevant legal and factual background of the pending case.

1. Les plus hautes juridictions d'une Haute Partie contractante, telles que désignées conformément à l'article 10, peuvent adresser à la Cour des demandes d'avis consultatifs sur des questions de principe relatives à l'interprétation ou à l'application des droits et libertés définis par la Convention ou ses protocoles.

2. La juridiction qui procède à la demande ne peut solliciter un avis consultatif que dans le cadre d'une affaire pendante devant elle.

3. La juridiction qui procède à la demande motive sa demande d'avis et produit les éléments pertinents du contexte juridique et factuel de l'affaire pendante.

Formulation of the request (art. 1(1))

The word 'may' in the first sentence of article 1(1) of Protocol No. 16 indicates that States are in no way obliged to seek an advisory opinion. The procedure is optional. Moreover, although not spelled out in paragraph 1, the Explanatory Report declares that the requesting court or tribunal may withdraw its request.¹

The domestic authority entitled to request an advisory opinion from the Court is described as the 'highest courts or tribunals', identified in accordance with article 10 of Protocol No. 16. Article 10 provides that a State Party is to designate the appropriate high court or tribunal by a declaration formulated at the time of ratification, although it may change the designated body subsequently. The Explanatory Report states that this is 'intended to avoid potential complications by allowing a certain freedom of choice'.² The Protocol does not indicate whether there is any control by the European Court over the choice by a State. Hypothetically, a State might designate a body that is not one of its 'highest courts or tribunals'. Could the European Court decline to issue an opinion because this condition is not fulfilled?

It seems clear enough from the Explanatory Report that a high degree of flexibility is sought, given the rather large variation in the structure and hierarchies of the judicial structures within the Member States of the Council of Europe. Although 'highest court or tribunal' is intended to refer to institutions 'at the summit of the national judicial system', the '[u]se of the term "highest", as opposed to "the highest", permits the potential inclusion of those courts or tribunals that, although inferior to the constitutional or supreme court, are nevertheless of especial relevance on account of being the "highest" for a particular category of case'.³

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 16, para. 7.

² Ibid., para. 8.

³ Ibid.

The alternative terms 'court' and 'tribunal' also contribute to the desired flexibility. Clearly, they are used so as to avoid disputes about form rather than substance, as there is no real difference between a 'court' and a 'tribunal'. The Convention itself uses both terms in a manner that suggests there is no distinction: 'a sentence of a court' (art. 2(1)); 'a competent court' (art. 5(1)(a)); 'the lawful order of a court' (art. 5(1)(b)); 'by a court' (art. 5(4)); 'the opinion of the court' (art. 6(1)); 'the language used in court' (art. 6(3)(e)); 'an independent and impartial tribunal' (art. 6(1)); 'duly considered by a domestic tribunal' (art. 35(3)(b)). Article 2 of Protocol No. 7 speaks of a 'higher tribunal' and of the 'highest tribunal'.

The importance of limiting the choice to the 'highest' courts or tribunals is related to the idea of exhaustion of domestic remedies, 'although a "highest" court need not be one to which recourse must have been made in order to satisfy the requirement of exhaustion of domestic remedies' under article 35(1) of the European Convention. According to the Explanatory Report, this should 'avoid a proliferation of requests and would reflect the appropriate level at which the dialogue should take place'.⁴

The application of Protocol No. 16 raises issues concerning territories governed by article 56 of the Convention. States may have some territories to which the Convention applies and others where it is not applicable. In order to accommodate this situation, a State Party may specify the exclusion of application of Protocol No. 16 to certain territories when it makes its declaration under article 10.⁵

An advisory opinion may be sought with respect to 'questions of principle relating to the interpretation or application of the rights and freedoms defined in the Convention or the protocols thereto'. This language is inspired by the wording of article 43(2) of the Convention, governing referral to the Grand Chamber, although that provision refers to 'a serious question' rather than 'questions of principle'. The drafters of Protocol No. 16 'felt that there were certain parallels' between the request for an advisory opinion and referral to the Grand Chamber, 'not limited to the fact that advisory opinions would themselves be delivered by the Grand Chamber'. However, 'when applying the criteria, the different purposes of the procedure under this Protocol and that under Article 43, paragraph 2 of the Convention will have to be taken into account'.⁶

Context of a pending case (art. 1(2))

The request for an advisory opinion must be made in the context of a case pending before the requesting court or tribunal. Article 1(2) does not provide any guidance as to the scope of the term 'case'. However, the Explanatory Report indicates that the advisory opinion procedure 'is not intended, for example, to allow for abstract review of legislation which is not to be applied in that pending case'.⁷

The approach to be taken when national legislation itself provides for an advisory opinion to be delivered about draft legislation requires clarification. Whether the relevant court or tribunal in a State Party asks the European Court to deliver what would amount to an advisory opinion within an advisory opinion is a matter that may eventually have to be ⁴ Ibid.

⁵ Ibid.

⁶ Ibid., para. 9.

⁷ Ibid., para. 10.

decided. The requirement in article 1(3) that a request be accompanied by the 'factual background' would seem to argue against such a possibility.

Procedural requirements (art. 1(3))

The requirements of paragraph 3 'reflect the aim of the procedure, which is not to transfer the dispute to the Court but rather to give the requesting court or tribunal guidance on Convention issues when determining the case before it'.⁸ Two purposes are served by the provision, according to the Explanatory Report. First, 'the requesting court or tribunal must have reflected upon the necessity and utility of requesting an advisory opinion of the Court, so as to be able to explain its reasons for doing so'. Second, it is expected that the requesting court or tribunal will be in a position to provide the relevant legal and factual background, 'thereby allowing the Court to focus on the question(s) of principle relating to the interpretation or application of the Convention or the Protocols'.⁹

In its opinion on the draft Protocol, the European Court of Human Rights noted that 'it should not be for the Strasbourg Court to have to work out for itself in which respect the national court requires its opinion. For the procedure to function properly, the relevant issues of Convention law should be adequately identified and discussed at the national level'.¹⁰ Referring to paragraph 11 of the draft Explanatory Report, the Court said it agreed with emphasizing the need to allow the Court to focus on the question of principle brought before it. 'The Court should not be called upon to review the facts or the national law in the context of this procedure', it said. 'Nor is it for the Court to decide the case pending before the requesting court'.¹¹

The Explanatory Report indicates the materials that should be provided with a request:

- The subject matter of the domestic case and relevant findings of fact made during the domestic proceedings, or at least a summary of the relevant factual issues;
- The relevant domestic legal provisions;
- The relevant Convention issues, in particular the rights or freedoms at stake;
- If relevant, a summary of the arguments of the parties to the domestic proceedings on the question;
- If possible and appropriate, a statement of its own views on the question, including any analysis it may itself have made of the question.¹²

The Explanatory Report also confirms that requests for an advisory opinion may be submitted in the national official language used in the domestic proceedings.¹³ The Court expressed reservations about this obligation, out of concern for the burden of work and the cost that might be involved.¹⁴

⁸ Ibid., para. 11.

⁹ Ibid.

¹⁰ Opinion of the European Court of Human Rights on Draft Protocol No. 16 to the European Convention on Human Rights extending its competence to give advisory opinions on the interpretation of the Convention, 6 May 2013, para. 8.

¹¹ Ibid.

¹² Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 16, para. 13.

¹³ Ibid., para. 12.

¹⁴ Opinion of the European Court of Human Rights on Draft Protocol No. 16 to the European Convention on Human Rights extending its competence to give advisory opinions on the interpretation of the Convention, 6 May 2013, para. 14.

Further reading

David Milner, 'Protocols no. 15 and 16 to the European Convention on Human Rights in the Context of the Perennial Process of Reform: A Long and Winding Road', [2014] Zeitschrift für europarechtliche Studien 19.

Linos-Alexandre Sicilianos, 'L'élargissement de la compétence consultative de la Cour européenne des droits de l'homme—A propos du Protocole n° 16 à la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme', [2014] RTDH 9.

Article 2. [Acceptance of requests]

1. A panel of five judges of the Grand Chamber shall decide whether to accept the request for an advisory opinion, having regard to Article 1. The panel shall give reasons for any refusal to accept the request.

2. If the panel accepts the request, the Grand Chamber shall deliver the advisory opinion.

3. The panel and the Grand Chamber, as referred to in the preceding paragraphs, shall include ex officio the judge elected in respect of the High Contracting Party to which the requesting court or tribunal pertains. If there is none or if that judge is unable to sit, a person chosen by the President of the Court from a list submitted in advance by that Party shall sit in the capacity of judge.

1. Un collège de cinq juges de la Grande Chambre se prononce sur l'acceptation de la demande d'avis consultatif au regard de l'article 1. Tout refus du collège d'accepter la demande est motivé.

2. Lorsque le collège accepte la demande, la Grande Chambre rend un avis consultatif.

3. Le collège et la Grande Chambre, visés aux paragraphes précédents, comprennent de plein droit le juge élu au titre de la Haute Partie contractante dont relève la juridiction qui a procédé à la demande. En cas d'absence de ce juge, ou lorsqu'il n'est pas en mesure de siéger, une personne choisie par le Président de la Cour sur une liste soumise au préalable par cette Partie siège en qualité de juge.

Acceptance of the request (art. 2(1))

Like the advisory opinion that the Court may issue pursuant to article 47 of the Convention, there is a degree of discretion and there is no obligation to comply with the request. Nevertheless, the Explanatory Report states that 'it is to be expected that the Court would hesitate to refuse a request that satisfies the relevant criteria by (i) relating to a question as defined in paragraph 1 of Article 1 and (ii) the requesting court or tribunal having fulfilled the procedural requirements as set out in paragraphs 2 and 3 of Article 1'.¹ But in contrast with the advisory opinion procedure set out in article 47, there is no preliminary stage by which leave or authorization is granted. To that extent, the advisory opinion mechanism established by Protocol No. 16 resembles the application to the Grand Chamber in accordance with article 43 of the Convention, whereby a five-judge panel must grant leave.

There is one important difference, however. Whereas the five-judge panel of the Grand Chamber does not provide reasons for its decision on leave under article 43, Protocol No. 16 requires the panel to give reasons for any refusal to accept the request for an advisory opinion from a domestic court or tribunal. The Explanatory Report says that the intention of this measure is 'to reinforce dialogue between the Court and national judicial systems, including through clarification of the Court's interpretation of what is meant by "questions of principle relating to the interpretation or application of the rights and freedoms defined in the Convention or the Protocols thereto", which would provide guidance to domestic courts and tribunals when considering whether to make a request and thereby help to deter inappropriate requests'.²

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 16, para. 14.

In its opinion on the draft Protocol, the European Court of Human Rights said it welcomed the fact that the Grand Chamber would have discretion as to whether to accept a request but that it had not favoured the requirement that it give reasons if it refuses. But it said it accepted the utility of giving reasons, although it said they would not normally be extensive. It said this would 'enhance the aim of creating a constructive dialogue with the national courts'.³

Although there is no explicit requirement in the Protocol, the Explanatory Report says that the Court should inform the State Party concerned of the acceptance of any requests made by its courts or tribunals.⁴

Delivery of the advisory opinion (art. 2(2))

Article 2(2) specifies that the Grand Chamber deliver the advisory opinion. The Grand Chamber is defined in article 26 of the European Convention. According to the Explanatory Report, it is appropriate that the advisory opinion be delivered by a seventeen-judge Grand Chamber, 'given the nature of the questions on which an advisory opinion may be requested and the fact that only the highest domestic courts or tribunals may request it, along with the recognised similarities between the present procedure and that of referral to the Grand Chamber under Article 43 of the Convention'.⁵

The Explanatory Report says that the prioritization to be given to advisory opinion proceedings under Protocol No. 16 is a matter for the Court but that 'the nature of the question on which it would be appropriate for the Court to give its advisory opinion suggests that such proceedings would have high priority'.⁶ It adds that the 'high priority' of advisory opinions applies at all stages of the procedure and to all concerned, including those who formulate the request, the participants in the proceedings, and the Court itself. 'Undue delay in the advisory opinion proceedings before the Court would also cause delay in proceedings in the case pending before the requesting court or tribunal and should therefore be avoided', the Explanatory Report notes.⁷

Ex officio national judge (art. 2(3))

Both the five-judge panel that considers leave to appeal and the plenary Grand Chamber are to include the national judge of the State Party concerned by the advisory opinion, according to article 2(3) of Protocol No. 16. The Explanatory Report points out that this is also the case for the Grand Chamber when it sits in its full composition on a case pursuant to articles 33 and 34 of the Convention. Where there is no such judge, or if the

² Ibid., para. 15.

³ Opinion of the European Court of Human Rights on Draft Protocol No. 16 to the European Convention on Human Rights extending its competence to give advisory opinions on the Interpretation of the Convention, 6 May 2013, para. 9.

⁴ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 16, para 15.

⁵ Ibid., para. 16.

⁶ Ibid., para. 17.

⁷ Ibid., para. 17.

judge cannot sit, article 2(3) provides that the President of the Court designate a replacement judge from a list submitted in advance by the State Party. The intent of the drafters was that the procedure be identical to what already exists under article 26(4) of the Convention, and that the list of candidates be the same.⁸

⁸ Ibid., para. 18.

Article 3. [Participation in proceedings]

The Council of Europe Commissioner for Human Rights and the High Contracting Party to which the requesting court or tribunal pertains shall have the right to submit written comments and take part in any hearing. The President of the Court may, in the interest of the proper administration of justice, invite any other High Contracting Party or person also to submit written comments or take part in any hearing.

Le Commissaire aux droits de l'homme du Conseil de l'Europe et la Haute Partie contractante dont relève la juridiction qui a procédé à la demande ont le droit de présenter des observations écrites et de prendre part aux audiences. Le Président de la Cour peut, dans l'intérêt d'une bonne administration de la justice, inviter toute autre Haute Partie contractante ou personne à présenter également des observations écrites ou à prendre part aux audiences.

The right to participate in the proceedings is recognized to the Council of Europe Commissioner for Human Rights and to the State Party whose domestic court or tribunal has requested the advisory opinion. This consists of a right to submit written comments and to take part in any hearing. Whether or not a hearing is held remains within the discretion of the Grand Chamber.¹

According to the Explanatory Report, the drafters intended that 'the Commissioner have an equivalent right under the Protocol to participate in advisory opinion proceedings as s/he does under Article 36, paragraph 3) of the Convention to make a third party intervention in proceedings before a Chamber or the Grand Chamber'.² The Report notes that the wording of article 3 of Protocol No. 16 is slightly different from what is used in article 36(3) of the Convention but that the same effect is intended. It goes on to note that because advisory opinion proceedings are not adversarial in nature, participation by the State Party is not obligatory, 'although it would always retain the right to do so, in the same way as does a High Contracting Party in proceedings brought by one of its nationals against another High Contracting Party' as provided for in article 36(1) of the Convention.³

Any other State Party and any other person may be authorized to submit written comments and to participate in any hearing where this would be in the interest of the proper administration of justice. The expression 'proper administration of justice' is also used in article 36(2) as the criterion for granting of leave to participate to third parties. The Explanatory Report says that '[i]t is expected that the parties to the case in the context of which the advisory opinion had been requested would be invited to take part in the proceedings'.⁴

This may lead to difficulties in terms of implementation of Protocol No. 16 at the domestic level. National law may entitle litigants to be present at all stages of the proceedings. The issue is especially important in criminal matters, where the accused may have a right to be present. The European Court can address this issue in part by

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 16, para. 19.

² Ibid., para. 21.

³ Ibid., para. 19.

⁴ Ibid., para. 20.

granting leave to participate systematically, as proposed by the Explanatory Report. But there may also be linguistic difficulties because it is likely that the national proceedings will take place in a language other than the two official languages of the European Court of Human Rights. The Rules of Court entitle participants in proceedings to interpretation in another language but this is at their own expense. Yet the implementation of Protocol No. 16 brings a dimension to national judicial proceedings that is not held in the national language that may, in practice, make genuine participation by one or more of the parties quite unrealistic. The 'sensitivity' of the language issue is considered in the Explanatory Report, but only in the context of article 4,⁵ dealing with issuance of the advisory opinion itself, not article 3, although it also seems relevant to the written and oral proceedings.

⁵ Ibid., para. 23.

Article 4. [Content and issuance of advisory opinions]

1. Reasons shall be given for advisory opinions.
 2. If the advisory opinion does not represent, in whole or in part, the unanimous opinion of the judges, any judge shall be entitled to deliver a separate opinion.
 3. Advisory opinions shall be communicated to the requesting court or tribunal and to the High Contracting Party to which that court or tribunal pertains.
 4. Advisory opinions shall be published.
1. Les avis consultatifs sont motivés.
 2. Si l'avis consultatif n'exprime pas, en tout ou en partie, l'opinion unanime des juges, tout juge a le droit d'y joindre l'exposé de son opinion séparée.
 3. Les avis consultatifs sont transmis à la juridiction qui a procédé à la demande et à la Haute Partie contractante dont cette juridiction relève.
 4. Les avis consultatifs sont publiés.

The Grand Chamber is required to give reasons for advisory opinions delivered pursuant to Protocol No. 16. Separate, dissenting, and concurring opinions may be issued by individual judges, or groups of them, as is the case with other proceedings on the merits before the Grand Chamber.

Article 4(3) requires the Court to communicate the advisory opinion to both the requesting court or tribunal and the relevant State Party. According to the Explanatory Report, '[i]t is expected that the advisory opinion would also be communicated to any other parties that have taken part in the proceedings in accordance with Article 3'.¹

Protocol No. 16 does not specify the language of the advisory opinion. The general rule applies, then, by which it is delivered in one of the two official languages, English or French, and generally in both of them. The Explanatory Report notes 'the sensitivity of the issue of the language of advisory opinions', and that in most cases advisory opinions will be subsequently admitted as part of proceedings that take place in an official language of the State Party that is neither English nor French. It observes that it may not be possible for the domestic court or tribunal to resume proceedings that have been suspended pending the advisory opinion until the opinion is translated into the language of the requesting court or tribunal. In the event of concerns that the time taken for translation into the language of the requesting court or tribunal of an advisory opinion may delay the resumption of suspended domestic proceedings, it may be possible for the Court to co-operate with national authorities in the timely preparation of such translations.²

Publication of the advisory opinion is required by article 4(4) of Protocol No. 16. According to the Explanatory Report, '[i]t is expected that this will be done by the Court in accordance with its practice in similar matters and with due respect to applicable confidentiality rules'.³

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 16, para. 23.

² Ibid., para. 23.

³ Ibid., para. 24.

Article 5. [Non-binding nature of advisory opinions]

Advisory opinions shall not be binding. Les avis consultatifs ne sont pas contraignants.

Advisory opinions issued in accordance with Protocol No. 16 'shall not be binding'. The term 'binding' is used only once in the European Convention itself, in the title to article 46: 'Binding force and execution of judgments'. Article 46(1) states: 'The High Contracting Parties undertake to abide by the final judgment of the Court in any case to which they are parties.' That notion does not apply to an advisory opinion requested by a domestic court or tribunal because the State Party concerned may not even be a participant in the proceedings from which the advisory opinion has been generated. The non-binding nature of an 'advisory opinion' seems apparent from the name of the proceeding itself. Instead, as the Explanatory Report notes, advisory opinions 'take place in the context of the judicial dialogue between the Court and domestic courts and tribunals. Accordingly, the requesting court decides on the effects of the advisory opinion in the domestic proceedings.'¹ In its opinion on the draft Protocol, the European Court of Human Rights concurred, stating that 'it is in the nature of a dialogue that it should be for the requesting court to decide on the effects of the advisory opinion in the domestic proceedings'.²

Because the advisory opinion is not binding, the individual litigant's rights are also reserved. The fact that the European Court has issued an advisory opinion on a question that arises in a case pending before a domestic court or tribunal does not prevent a party in those proceedings from subsequently raising the issue in an individual application before the European Court pursuant to article 34 of the Convention. Nevertheless, according to the Explanatory Report, 'where an application is made subsequent to proceedings in which an advisory opinion of the Court has effectively been followed, it is expected that such elements of the application that relate to the issues addressed in the advisory opinion would be declared inadmissible or struck out'.³

In that sense, the affirmation in article 5 of Protocol No. 16 that an advisory opinion is not binding may require some qualification. The Explanatory Report acknowledges that an individual judge, a Committee, or a Chamber will consider itself 'bound' by an advisory opinion that has already been issued concerning the same subject-matter. However, in its opinion on the draft Protocol, the Court said that a good reason for the non-binding nature of advisory opinions is to leave open the possibility of a dissatisfied party bringing an application to Strasbourg once a final decision has been delivered by the national courts.⁴

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 16, para. 25.

² Opinion of the European Court of Human Rights on Draft Protocol No. 16 to the European Convention on Human Rights extending its competence to give advisory opinions on the interpretation of the Convention, 6 May 2013, para. 12.

³ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 16, para. 26.

⁴ Opinion of the European Court of Human Rights on Draft Protocol No. 16 to the European Convention on Human Rights extending its competence to give advisory opinions on the interpretation of the Convention, 6 May 2013, para. 9.

Similarly, although advisory opinions have no direct effect on subsequent applications, they do make up part of the case law of the Court. In other words, '[t]he interpretation of the Convention and the Protocols thereto contained in such advisory opinions would be analogous in its effect to the interpretative elements set out by the Court in judgments and decisions'.⁵ With regard to paragraph 27 of the Explanatory Report, the Rapporteur of the Parliamentary Assembly's Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights, in his Report on Protocol No. 16, wrote that 'although advisory opinions will not have the binding character of Grand Chamber judgments in contentious cases, they would nevertheless have "undeniable legal effects"'.⁶

⁵ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 16, para. 27.

⁶ Report, Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights, AS/Jur (2013) 21, Doc. 13220, para. 11.

Article 6. [Relationship to the Convention]

As between the High Contracting Parties the provisions of Articles 1 to 5 of this Protocol shall be regarded as additional articles to the Convention, and all the provisions of the Convention shall apply accordingly.

Les Hautes Parties contractantes considèrent les articles 1 à 5 du présent Protocole comme des articles additionnels à la Convention, et toutes les dispositions de la Convention s'appliquent en conséquence.

The advisory opinion mechanism provided by Protocol No. 16 does not amend the text of the Convention itself. It is an additional protocol in the sense that Member States of the Council of Europe are in no way required to sign and ratify the Protocol. It is for this reason that article 6 of Protocol No. 16 specifies that the provisions of articles 1 to 5 apply to those States that have accepted the Protocol (and only them).¹ Amongst them, the provisions of the first five articles of the Protocol are deemed to be additional articles to the Convention.

According to the Explanatory Report, '[i]t is understood that this, in conjunction with Article 58 of the Convention, would allow a High Contracting Party to denounce the Protocol without denouncing the Convention'.²

Article 6 of Protocol No. 16 is essentially identical to provisions on the same subject in Protocols Nos 1, 4, 6, 7, 12, and 13.

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 16, para. 28.

² Ibid.

Article 7. [Signature and ratification]

1. This Protocol shall be open for signature by the High Contracting Parties to the Convention, which may express their consent to be bound by:

- (a) signature without reservation as to ratification, acceptance or approval; or
- (b) signature subject to ratification, acceptance or approval, followed by ratification, acceptance or approval.

2. The instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval shall be deposited with the Secretary General of the Council of Europe.

1. Le présent Protocole est ouvert à la signature des Hautes Parties contractantes à la Convention, qui peuvent exprimer leur consentement à être liées par:

- (a) la signature sans réserve de ratification, d'acceptation ou d'approbation; ou
- (b) la signature sous réserve de ratification, d'acceptation ou d'approbation, suivie de ratification, d'acceptation ou d'approbation.

2. Les instruments de ratification, d'acceptation ou d'approbation seront déposés près le Secrétaire Général du Conseil de l'Europe.

The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 16 states that the text of article 7 'is based on one of the model final clauses approved by the Committee of Ministers and contains the provisions under which a High Contracting Party to the Convention may become bound by the Protocol'. When the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe adopted several model final clauses for use by those involved in drafting treaties, in February 1980, it proposed two alternatives with respect to signature and ratification. The first was for 'agreements', while the second was for 'conventions'. Although the signature and ratification clauses in Protocols Nos 6, 7, and 12 are based on the text proposed for conventions, the text of article 7 of Protocol No. 16 uses the alternative formulation, designed for agreements.

Unlike signature and ratification clauses in earlier protocols to the Convention, which specified expressly that a Member State of the Council of Europe could not ratify, accept, or approve the Protocol without previously or simultaneously ratifying the Convention, the formulation does not appear in article 7 of Protocol No. 16. Instead, the provision itself begins by declaring that the Protocol is 'open for signature by the High Contracting Parties to the Convention'.

Protocol No. 16 was opened for signature on 2 October 2013. On that date it was signed by Armenia, Finland, France, Italy, San Marino, Slovakia, and Slovenia. Subsequently, nine other States have signed the Protocol. There are no ratifications or definitive signatures.

Article 8. [Entry into force]

1. This Protocol shall enter into force on the first day of the month following the expiration of a period of three months after the date on which ten High Contracting Parties to the Convention have expressed their consent to be bound by the Protocol in accordance with the provisions of Article 7.

2. In respect of any High Contracting Party to the Convention which subsequently expresses its consent to be bound by it, the Protocol shall enter into force on the first day of the month following the expiration of a period of three months after the date of the expression of its consent to be bound by the Protocol in accordance with the provisions of Article 7.

1. Le présent Protocole entrera en vigueur le premier jour du mois qui suit l'expiration d'une période de trois mois après la date à laquelle dix Hautes Parties contractantes à la Convention auront exprimé leur consentement à être liées par le Protocole conformément aux dispositions de l'article 7.

2. Pour toute Haute Partie contractante à la Convention qui exprimera ultérieurement son consentement à être liée par le présent Protocole, celui-ci entrera en vigueur le premier jour du mois qui suit l'expiration d'une période de trois mois après la date de l'expression de son consentement à être liée par le Protocole conformément aux dispositions de l'article 7.

Article 8 is taken from Article 7 of Protocol No. 9 to the Convention and is based on the model final clauses approved by the Committee of Ministers.¹ The number of States Parties required for the Protocol to enter into force is set at ten, the same number that is required by Protocols Nos 1, 12, and 13.

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 16, para. 30.

Article 9. [Reservations]

No reservation may be made under Article 57 of the Convention in respect of the provisions of this Protocol.

Aucune réserve n'est admise aux dispositions du présent Protocole au titre de l'article 57 de la Convention.

Pursuant to article 6, the provisions of Protocol No. 16 are deemed to be additional articles to the Convention, with the result that all the provisions of the Convention shall apply accordingly. The drafters of Protocol No. 16 chose to exclude the possibility of reservations, something authorized by article 57 of the Convention. Consequently, article 9 of Protocol No. 16 is necessary in order to neutralize article 57 of the Convention.¹

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 16, para. 31.

Article 10. [Designation of courts or tribunals]

Each High Contracting Party to the Convention shall, at the time of signature or when depositing its instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval, by means of a declaration addressed to the Secretary General of the Council of Europe, indicate the courts or tribunals that it designates for the purposes of Article 1, paragraph 1, of this Protocol. This declaration may be modified at any later date and in the same manner.

Chaque Haute Partie contractante à la Convention indique, au moment de la signature ou du dépôt de son instrument de ratification, d'acceptation ou d'approbation, au moyen d'une déclaration adressée au Secrétaire Général du Conseil de l'Europe, quelles juridictions elle désigne aux fins de l'article 1, paragraphe 1, du présent Protocole. Cette déclaration peut être modifiée à tout moment de la même manière.

Article 10 is based on a standard clause used in Council of Europe treaties.¹ It provides States Parties to the Convention a mechanism by which they may specify the courts or tribunals that will be able to request advisory opinions from the Court. They may make subsequent changes, also by means of a declaration. Declarations pursuant to article 10 are addressed to the Secretary General of the Council of Europe, as depository of multilateral agreements made within the organization.

There has been only one declaration. At the time of signature, Romania formulated a note verbale designating national courts for the purposes of article 1(1) of the Protocol. It said that its declaration would enter into force at the time of ratification of the Protocol.

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 16, para. 32.

Article 11. [Depositary functions] 157

The Secretary General of the Council of Europe shall notify the member States of the Council of Europe and the other High Contracting Parties to the Convention of:

- (a) any signature;
- (b) the deposit of any instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval;
- (c) any date of entry into force of this Protocol in accordance with Article 8;
- (d) any declaration made in accordance with Article 10; and
- (e) any other act, notification or communication relating to this Protocol.

Le Secrétaire Général du Conseil de l'Europe notifiera aux Etats membres du Conseil de l'Europe et aux autres Hautes Parties contractantes à la Convention:

- a) toute signature;
- b) le dépôt de tout instrument de ratification, d'acceptation ou d'approbation;
- c) toute date d'entrée en vigueur du présent Protocole, conformément à l'article 8;
- d) toute déclaration faite en vertu de l'article 10; et
- e) tout autre acte, notification ou communication ayant trait au présent Protocole.

The Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 16 states that article 11 'is one of the usual final clauses included in treaties prepared within the Council of Europe'.¹ The text is similar to article 9 of Protocol No. 6 and readers of the Commentary are referred to the chapter dealing with that provision. There are two small differences between the two texts. The chapeau requires that notification be given to 'member States of the Council of Europe and the other High Contracting Parties', presumably contemplating the accession of the European Union. Paragraph (d), referring to the procedure established under article 10 of the Protocol for specifying which of a High Contracting Party's highest courts or tribunals may request advisory opinions from the Court, is not part of the Model Final Clauses and does not appear in the equivalent provisions of Protocols Nos 6, 7, and 12.

¹ Explanatory Report on Protocol No. 16, para. 33.

Index

Note: please see under entries for individual countries for specific topics relating to that country.

- Aarhus Convention 24
- Abkhazia 914, 938, 1190
- abortion
 - chilling effect 373
 - confidentiality 383, 404-5
 - demonstrations, protection of 493
 - forced abortion 543
 - legitimate aim/purpose, restrictions for a 405
 - life, right to 117, 124-5
 - margin of appreciation 81-2, 383
 - marry and found a family, right to 543
 - positive obligations 373
 - private life 373, 383, 404-6
 - procedures to determine availability, access to 373
 - religion or belief, freedom to manifest 431
 - women as prevailing over men, rights of 543
- absence/presence of accused at trial 81, 316-17, 1137, 1222-3
- abuse of rights, prohibition of 611-22, 625
 - access to court, right of 620-1
 - admissibility, Article 17 as exception to 614-16
 - Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU 611-12
 - Committee of Experts 613-14
 - Committee of Ministers 613-14
 - Conference of Senior Officials 614
 - Consultative Assembly 613-14
 - Council of Europe, aims and principles of 612
 - de minimis* principle 781-2
 - declarations 622
 - democracy 612-13, 616, 618
 - destruction of Convention rights 616-20
 - discrimination 618
 - extraterritoriality 616
 - freedom of assembly and association 615, 617, 620
 - freedom of expression 615, 617-20
 - individual applications 780-1
 - International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 611, 616
 - interpretation 614-22
 - liberty and security, right to 621
 - limitation/restriction clauses 616, 618, 620
 - limitation to a greater extent, meaning of 620-2
 - margin of appreciation 615
 - necessary in a democratic society, restrictions which are 615, 621
 - political parties
 - anti-democratic views, dissolution of parties with 618
 - Islam, advocating ban on parties not based on 619
 - pressing social need, restrictions due to 621
 - private and family life, right to respect for 617, 620
 - proportionality 621
 - racial discrimination 616, 618-19
 - restrictions/limitations 616, 618-22
 - sex discrimination, advocacy of 619
 - summary execution, justification of 619
 - torture, justification of 619
 - totalitarianism 611-12, 616-19
 - Universal Declaration of Human Rights 611, 613
 - war crimes, justification of 619
- access to court, right of 100, 284-7, 322, 324, 551, 620-1, 1136
- access to documents 825-9
- accessibility and foreseeability of law
 - criminal law 385
 - education 998-9
 - expropriation 976
 - expulsions 1130
 - freedom of assembly and association 510-11, 523
 - freedom of expression 469-71
 - freedom of movement and migration 1063-4
 - manifest religion or belief, freedom to 435
 - margin of appreciation 340-2
 - no punishment without law 336-42, 345, 353
 - private and family life, right to respect for 403
 - time limits 342-3
- acquittals 304-6, 744, 1134, 1139-40
- ad hoc* judges 687, 689, 691, 892
- Adam, HT 58
- addition of new rights see protocols
- administrative trials 265, 270-1
- admissibility see admissibility criteria; Chambers on admissibility and merits, decisions by
- admissibility criteria 753-86 see also under individual main entries
 - 6-month rule 757-8, 763, 770-3
 - date of knowledge 772
 - date of running of time 772
 - prejudice 772
 - self-represented litigants 772
 - time of the essence 770-1
 - waiver, prohibition of 770
 - weekends and holidays 772
- additional written observations, requests for 763
- anonymous applications 773-4
- another international body, submission to another 776-8
- assignment of cases to Sections 763
- caseload 761

- admissibility criteria (cont.)
- Chambers 763
 - Committee of Experts 755-7
 - Committee of Ministers 755, 758-9
 - Committees 689, 698, 699-703, 763, 779, 851
 - Conference of Senior Officials 757
 - consolidating the institutions and further reform 705-7, 759-60, 762, 785
 - Consultative Assembly 754-5, 758-60
 - de minimis* rule 762, 781-5
 - declarations 786
 - discrimination 563
 - drafting 754-62
 - ECommHR 632, 754-9, 779
 - ECtHR 759
 - estoppel 764
 - exhaustion of domestic remedies 754-5, 757, 763, 764-9
 - filtering and processing applications 760-2
 - formalism 754
 - frivolous or mischievous petitions 754
 - general principles of international law 754, 756
 - Grand Chamber 763-4
 - grounds 759-62, 778-9
 - hearings 763
 - incompatibility with provisions of ECHR 778-9
 - individual applications 707, 746-7, 762, 776, 780-1
 - interpretation 762-86
 - inter-State applications 706-7, 726-9, 757, 762-3, 776
 - irregular petitions, rejection of 756-7
 - jurisdiction 778-9
 - manifestly ill-founded applications, rejection of 705, 711, 727, 755-9, 778, 779-81, 1071
 - merits
 - grounds 778
 - joint rulings on 763-4
 - notification of Respondent State 763
 - objections 786
 - Parliamentary Assembly 760
 - President of the Section 763
 - procedure 762-4
 - protocols, incorporation into domestic law of 760
 - ratione loci* jurisdiction 778
 - ratione materiae* jurisdiction 778-9
 - ratione personae* jurisdiction 778
 - ratione temporis* jurisdiction 772, 778
 - re-activation of elements of claims 763-4
 - reply, written observations in 806
 - Rules of Court 762, 764
 - significant damage criteria 760, 762
 - single-judge formation 697-8, 699, 763
 - stage of proceedings, rejection of applications at any 785-6
 - statements of compliance 763
 - substantially the same, matters which are 774-5
 - time limits 757-8, 763, 770-3
 - adoption of children 367, 407-8, 543, 573, 584, 826-7
 - adoption of ECHR 3-10, 27-8, 55 see also Alternative A and A/2 (Enumeration of Human Rights); Alternative B (Definition of Human Rights)
 - commission, proposal for a 4, 6-10
 - Committee of Experts 5-7, 8
 - Committee of Ministers 4, 5-9, 167
 - Conference of Senior Officials 7, 167-8
 - Congress of Europe 1948 3, 6, 27
 - Consultative Assembly 4, 5-8, 61
 - contents of rights 4, 6, 8
 - Council of Europe 3-10
 - court, proposals for a 3, 4, 6-8, 10
 - draft text 4-8
 - economic, social, and cultural rights 4, 6
 - education of children, right of parents to determine 4, 8
 - elections, right to free 8
 - enforcement 3, 4, 6-9
 - entry into force 8-10
 - final stages 8
 - implementation of rights 6-7
 - interpretation 8
 - property, right to 4, 8
 - signing ceremony 8-9
 - substantive rights, definition of 8
 - Universal Declaration of Human Rights 4, 7, 61, 84, 167
 - adversarial proceedings 310
 - adverse inferences, drawing 811-14
 - adverse possession 969, 974
 - advisory opinions 633, 874-83, 884-5
 - acceptance of requests 1219-21
 - admissibility 882, 1225
 - binding, opinions as 877
 - caseload 876, 882
 - Charter of UN 874, 878
 - Committee of Experts 26, 875-6, 883-5
 - Committee of Ministers 26, 31-2, 874-82, 1214
 - Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS)
 - Convention on Human Rights, relationship with 876, 878, 881-2, 885
 - concurring opinions 1224
 - Consultative Assembly 26, 875, 878
 - contents 878-80, 1224
 - criminal law 1222-3
 - declarations 1215, 1231
 - delay 1220, 1224
 - delivery of opinions 1220-1
 - denunciations 1227
 - depository functions 1232
 - designation of court or tribunal 1215, 1231
 - discretion 877, 882
 - dissenting or separate opinions 859, 887, 1224
 - drafting 875-6, 884, 887
 - ECommHR 26-7, 875-6
 - entry into force 26-7, 1229
 - ex officio* national judges 1220-1
 - exhaustion of domestic remedies 1216

- formulation of request (Article 1) 1215-17
 Grand Chamber 691-2, 713, 876, 878-85, 1216, 1219-22
 Group of Wise Persons report 31-2 highest courts or tribunals 1215-16, 1220 institutions, consolidating the 876, 877, 882
 interpretation 31-2, 876-85, 1213, 1216, 1219-20, 1223, 1226
 issuance of opinions 1224
 judgeship, list of candidates for 877, 885 judicial dialogue 26, 31-2, 1213, 1220, 1225
 jurisdiction 884-5
 language 1217, 1223, 1224
 legal question, meaning of 878 national courts and tribunals, requests of 875, 877 non-binding nature 1225-6
 oral hearings 882
 Parliamentary Assembly 32, 876-7, 879-80, 1225-6
 participation in proceedings 1222-3 pending case, context of a 1216-17
 Permanent Court of International Justice 731, 874
 Plenary Court 876, 883
 preambles to protocols 1213-14 principle, questions of 1216, 1217, 1219 prioritization 1220
 procedure 882-3, 1217
 ratification 26-7
 reasons 887
 reform 876, 877, 882
 Registrar 882
 relationship of protocols to ECHR 1227
 reservations 1230
 restrictions/limitations 880-2
 Rules of Court 882
 separate opinions 1224
 signature and ratification 1228
 striking out 1225
 subsidiarity 1213
 territorial application 924, 1216
 third party interventions 1222
travaux préparatoires 878, 880
 written comments, right to submit 1222 advocacy organizations or associations, victim status of 741-2 affirmative action/positive discrimination 566-8, 1175-6, 1187
 African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights (ACHPR) 959
 African Court on Human and Peoples' Rights (AFCHPR) 643 African slave trade, litigation over 201
 age adoptive parents 573, 584
 criminal responsibility, age of 318-19 Beijing Rules 318
 fitness to stand trial 310
 discrimination 556, 573, 575, 583-4, 1184
 Employment Equality Directive 583
 judges 31, 583-4, 650, 654-5, 670-4
 liberty and security, right to 240-1, 251
 majority, age of 240
 marry and found a family, right to 537 retirement age 31, 567, 584
 vote, right to 1026
 aggression, crime of 602
 AIDS/HIV 126, 160, 172, 827 airports, security control at 1059
 Albania 908, 1031
 Algeria 588
 aliens see also collective expulsion of aliens; expulsion of aliens, procedural safeguards relating to; political activity of aliens, restrictions on discrimination 560 obligation to respect human rights 85
 Alternative A and A/2 (Enumeration of Human Rights) 6-8, 121
 derogations 590
 effective remedy, right to an 549
 fair trial, right to a 267-8
 freedom of assembly and association 488
 freedom of expression 449
 life, right to 121
 no punishment without law 333
 obligation to respect human rights 86
 political activity of aliens, restrictions on 607
 private and family life, right to respect for 364
 slavery and forced labour 204
 thought, conscience and religion, freedom of 418
 torture 167-8
 Alternative B and B/2 (Definition of Human Rights) 6-8, 121, 167-8, 204
 derogations 590
 effective remedy, right to an 549
 fair trial, right to a 267-8
 freedom of assembly and association 488
 freedom of expression 449
 life, right to 121
 no punishment without law 333
 obligation to respect human rights 86
 political activity of aliens, restrictions on 607-8
 private and family life, right to respect for 364
 slavery and forced labour 204-5
 thought, conscience and religion, freedom of 418 alternative dispute resolution see exclusion of other means of dispute resolution amendment of ECHR and reform of machinery 26-32, 49, 639, 649-51 see also consolidating the institutions and further reform; protocols American Convention on Human Rights (ACHR)
 abortion 124
 death penalty 15, 1197, 1200, 1201
 abolitionist treaty, ACHR as 1197
 life, right to 140-1
 military justice 1201
 wartime 1104

- American Convention on Human Rights (ACHR) (cont.)
- derogations 587, 592, 594
 - ex officio* or national judges 693
 - freedom of expression 452, 459
 - Inter-American Court of Human Rights 139, 643, 655, 693, 874
 - lex mitior* principle 350
 - life, right to 140-1
 - prior restraint 452
 - sources of international law 39
 - vote, right to 1026
- amicus curiae* briefs 788, 793, 807
- amnesties 67, 128-9, 1145, 1150, 1155
- Ancel, Marc 14-15
- Andorra 262, 604, 820, 937, 1009
- anonymity 313, 746, 773-4
- anti-communism 612
- anti-Semitism 479, 619
- Apollinaire, Guillaume 464, 472
- apostasy, advocating death penalty for 619
- appeal in criminal matters, right of 1134-41
- absence of accused, proceedings in 1137
 - access to court, right of 1136
 - acquittals 1134, 1139-40
 - admissibility 1135
 - Committee of Ministers 1139
 - convictions 1135-6, 1139-41
 - criminal offences, restricted to 1138-9
 - damages 1138
 - declarations 1140-1
 - detention/deprivation of liberty 1136
 - drafting 1134-5
 - effective remedy, right to an 1136
 - exceptions 1139-40
 - exhaustion of domestic remedies 1135
 - fair trial, right to a 1135
 - governed by law, exercise of right 1137-8
 - guilty pleas 1136-7
 - highest tribunal, exception where offence tried at first instance by 1139-40
 - interpretation 1135-40
 - leave 1138
 - legitimate aim/purpose, restrictions for a 1136
 - margin of appreciation 1136
 - minor character, offences of 1139-40
 - plea bargaining 1140
 - prescribed by law, restrictions which are 1139
 - procedural safeguards 1135
 - questions of law, restricted to 1136, 1138
 - reservations 1139, 1140
 - rule of law 1139
 - sentences 1135-6, 1141
 - time limits 1137
 - waiver 1140
- applicable law 719-20
- arbitration 43, 766, 907, 910-11
- armed conflict see armed conflicts and right to life; death penalty in time of war; war/armed conflicts
- armed conflict and right to life
- civilians 155-8
 - derogations 153-6
 - ECtHR 154-6
 - illegal wars 157
 - inhuman or degrading treatment 157
 - international humanitarian law 154-8
 - legitimate aim 156-8
 - Martens Clause 158
 - occupation 154
 - procedural/investigative obligation 153-4
 - proportionality 156-8
 - St Petersburg Declaration 158
 - use of lethal force 155-7
 - war crimes 155
- armed forces see military service
- Armenia
- Azerbaijan, territory occupied in 938, 1114, 1163
 - death penalty 1114
 - genocide, denial of 479-80
 - International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 588
 - Jehovah's Witnesses 434
 - Mountainous Karabakh 938
 - prisoners 1028
 - territorial application 1114, 1163
- arrest
- compensation 224, 257-8
 - extradition 245-6
 - liberty and security, right to 221-4, 227, 234, 237-9, 243-6, 254
 - use of lethal force 146, 150-2
- artificial insemination 389, 539-40
- Aruba 1036, 1084, 1190, 1108, 1114, 1205
- assembly, freedom of see freedom of assembly and association
- association, freedom of see freedom of assembly and association
- asylum seekers see refugees and asylum seekers
- atheism and agnosticism 423-4
- Austria
- abortion 493
 - adoption 408
 - candidate for election, right to stand as a 1030
 - death penalty 1095
 - declarations 1141, 1156
 - demonstrations 493
 - discrimination 217
 - expulsion 1073
 - freedom of expression 472-3
 - inter-State applications 725-6
 - Italy 913
 - ne bis in idem* 1156
 - no punishment without law 349
 - peaceful enjoyment of possessions 983
 - political activity of aliens, restrictions on 609
 - public hearings 323
 - reasons 936

- regional assemblies 1020
- religious discrimination 579
- reservations 323, 609, 936-7, 983, 1073, 1146
- same sex partners 800
- succession to tenancies 407
- Süd Tirol/Alto Adige, dispute between Austria and Italy over 913
- autonomy
 - freedom of assembly and association 490-1, 500, 503-4, 513
 - private life 370, 371, 375-80
- aurefois convict see ne bis in idem*
- Azara, Antonio 832
- Azerbaijan
 - Armenia, territory occupied by 938, 1114, 1163
 - death penalty 17, 349-50, 1114
 - declarations 1009
 - freedom of assembly and association 510
 - liberty and security, right to 627
 - mass media ownership 481
 - military discipline 324-5
 - ne bis in idem* 1154
 - police orders, non-compliance with 1154
 - reservations 938
 - territorial application 938, 1114, 1163
- Azkoul, Karim 583
- Bacon, Alice 576 n.147
- bail 250-1, 253, 1058
- Ballodore Pallieri, Giorgio 682
- Begtrup, Bodil 5
- Belém do Pará Convention (OAS) 576
- belief see religion and belief see also Islam; manifest religion or belief, freedom to; thought, conscience and religion, freedom of
- Belgium
 - Belgian Congo 925
 - children, detention of 170
 - Constitution 358, 903
 - death penalty and right to life 140
 - declarations 786, 1132
 - education 579
 - expulsion 1132
 - extradition of terrorist suspects to United States 750, 837
 - fair trial, right to a 288
 - language 579
 - no punishment without law 330
 - political activity of aliens, restrictions on 609
 - private and family life, right to respect for 358
 - race discrimination 618
 - regional assemblies 1021
 - reservations 609
 - safeguards for existing human rights 903
 - Slovakian Roma, expulsion of 1078
 - universal suffrage 1011
 - vagrants, detention of 243
- Bensouda, Fatou 723 n.1
- Benvenuti, Lodovico 613
- Berlin Wall 1052
- Bernardino, Minerva 5
- Bernhardt, Rudolf 682
- bias see independence and impartiality
- Bill of Rights 1688 444
- binding force and execution of judgments 861-72
 - administrative changes 861-2
 - advisory opinions 866
 - civil society, pressure from 871
 - condemnation and disapproval 871
 - Committee of Experts 863
 - Committee of Ministers, supervision by 797-8, 821-2, 864-7, 871, 872, 905
 - compensation 868, 970
 - consolidating the institutions and further reform 864, 866
 - Consultative Assembly 862-3, 871
 - criminal proceedings 869
 - declarations 866, 870-1
 - disappearances 870
 - drafting 862-6
 - failure to fulfil an obligation 872
 - fair trial, right to a 276, 869-70
 - final judgments, interpretation of 865
 - freedom to determine means of discharging obligations 867-9
 - friendly settlements 871
 - general measures 868-71
 - individual measures 868-9
 - infringement proceedings 865-6
 - interpretation 865, 866-72
 - inter-State applications 867-70
 - just satisfaction 867, 871
 - legislative changes 861-2
 - moral pressure 862
 - new issues 869
 - no punishment without law 870
 - non-execution 862-3
 - Plenary Court 680
 - pilot-judgment procedure 870-1
 - political pressure 871
 - precedent 866
 - reparations 867-8
 - res judicata* 866
 - restitutio in integrum* principle 868
 - retrials 869
 - role of the Court 869-71
 - sanctions 862
 - State responsibility 868-9
 - structural or system problems 870
 - subsidiarity 870
 - supervision of execution 797-8, 821-2, 864-7, 871, 872, 905
 - Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 866
- Bindschedler-Robert, Denise 664
- Bingham, Tom 72
- Birsan, Corneliu 893

- birth or other status, discrimination on grounds of 558-61, 574, 582-4
- Blackstone, William 457
- boat, refoulement of migrants arriving by 1079-80, 1083
- Bonello, Giovanni 62, 67, 91-2, 159
- Bosnia and Herzegovina
admissibility criteria 777
Constitution 1031
Dayton Agreement 565-6, 768, 1105
death penalty in time of war 1105, 1106-7
discrimination 565-6
elections, right to free 1031, 1181
exhaustion of domestic remedies 768
fair trial in criminal proceedings, right to 295
military service 215
presidential election candidates and discrimination 565-6, 871
sentencing 573
- Brandeis, Louis 358
- Bratza, Nicolas 296, 342-3, 682, 696, 795
- Brighton High Level Conference 2012 31-2, 58, 650-1
- Broda, Christian 15
- Bulgaria
Constitution 984
declarations 1009
education, fees for 1005-6
expulsion 435
family life 435
freedom of assembly and association 497, 512
Jehovah's Witnesses 435
leave a country, freedom to 1062, 1064-5 medication without regulatory approval 372 prisoners' right to vote 1028
racial discrimination 160, 553
reservations 984
Roma 553
sexual assault 192
- burden of proof
beyond reasonable doubt 810
examination of the case 810-12
exhaustion of domestic remedies 766, 768
fugitives 317
general principles of international law 810
inter-State applications 811
life, right to 123
presumption of innocence 298-300
release from detention 252 reversal 299-300, 811
standard of proof 300
- Bureau 683-4
- Caflish, Lucius 646
- Caldarera, Ugo 13
- Camus, Albert 1091
- Canada, death penalty in 1093
- Canary Islands, regional assembly in 1020-1
- Cançado Trindade, Antônio Augusto 179
- candidate in elections, right to stand as a 1012, 1018, 1025, 1029-30
- conditions 1022-3
- diplomats 1030
- discrimination 524-5
- dual nationality, persons with 1030
- executive, members of 1030
- freedom of assembly and association 512, 517, 524-5
- grounds for disqualification 1029-30
- independence and impartiality 1030
- independent candidates 1023
- judicial office, holders of 511, 1030
- margin of appreciation 1023
- Masons 511, 512, 517, 524-5
- military, members of 1030
- police officers 1030
- proportionality 1029
- residency requirements 1030
- restrictions/limitations 1029
- separation of powers 1029-30
- signature of electors threshold 1022, 1030
- capital punishment see death penalty; death penalty and right to life
- Cardozo, Benjamin 423
- Casadevall, Josep 682
- case management 686
- caseload 28-30
admissibility criteria 27, 761
Chambers 27, 782
Committee of Ministers 28
Committees 702
de minimis principle 782
delay 30-1
direct access, right of individual 27-8
discrimination 1180
ECommHR 27-9, 633
ECtHR, establishment of 633
filtering and processing applications 27, 30-1
friendly settlements 816
individual applications 27-8
judicial formations 686
Plenary Court 680
single-judge formation 696-7
- Cassese, Antonio 345
- Cassin, René 1, 5, 61, 412, 645, 655, 682
- cellular samples 384
- Central and Eastern Europe see also individual countries
Berlin Wall 1052
Cold War 1052-3
communist parties 521
freedom of movement and migration 1052-3, 1088
judges 655
lustration 1026
military service 215
national and ethnic minorities, protection of 631
national security 1062

- Nuremberg Military Tribunal 344-5
 peaceful enjoyment of possessions 970
 signatories and ratification 1166-7
 time limits 342
 vote, right to 1026
- Chagos Islands 104
- Chambers see also Chambers on admissibility and merits, decisions by 2 or more judges 687
 5 judges 687
 7 judge benches 805, 687-9, 691
 9 judge benches 688-9
 authorization to set up Chambers 27
 enlargement 688
ex officio participation 687-8, 690, 692
 examination of the case 806-8
 interim measures 749
 investigations 807-8
 judicial formations 686-9, 690-1
 nationality 687, 691
 opinions or reports, requests for 807
 Plenary Court 678-9, 682-3
 Presidents/Vice-Presidents 683, 691, 746, 748, 827-8, 843, 859
 reduced size 687, 689 Sections, members drawn from 691
 session periods 690
 single court, creation of 29
 size 686-9
 striking out 797
 substitute judges 691
 third-party intervention 792 urgent cases 690
 witnesses 806
- Chambers on admissibility and merits, decisions by 705-8 7 judge benches 707, 763 caseload, reduction of 782
 Committees 707
 distinction between admissibility and applications on merits 705-6
 drafting 706
 exhaustion of domestic remedies 707
 final decisions 708
 friendly settlements, proposal for 707
 Grand Chamber 707
 hearings 763
 individual applications 707
 inhuman or degrading treatment 707
 interpretation 707-8
 inter-State applications 707
 judicial formations 691
 jurisdiction 707
 just satisfaction, proposals for 707
 life, right to 707
 manifestly ill-founded applications 705
 procedural/investigative obligation 707
 Rules of Court 707
 single-judge formation 707
- Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU
 abuse of rights, prohibition of 611-12
 age 573, 583
 candidate, right to stand as a 1012 collective expulsion of aliens 1075
 data protection 382
 death penalty 165, 1093, 1097
 detention 183
 disabilities, persons with 573, 583
 discrimination 556, 573, 583, 1184
 education, right to 988
 effective remedy, right to an 547
 elections, right to free 1012
 European Parliament, elections to 1012
 expulsion 165
 fair trial, right to a 265-6, 272
 freedom of assembly and association 484
 freedom of expression 445
 freedom of movement and migration 1053
 genetic features 573
 human dignity 66
lex mitior principle 350
 liberty and security, right to 220-1
 life, right to 119
 limitation on use of restrictions 623
 marital status 583
 marry and found a family, right to 529, 536-7
ne bis in idem 1148
 no punishment without law 330
 peaceful enjoyment of possessions 960
 political activity of aliens, restrictions on 606, 609-10
 private and family life, right to respect for 359
 religion or belief, freedom to manifest 433
 sexual orientation 537, 573
 sources of international law 39
 thought, conscience and religion, freedom of 414
 torture 165
 transgender persons 536, 583
 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 39
- Charter of UN
 advisory opinions 874, 878
 common understanding and observance of human rights 69
 discrimination 555-7, 575-6, 1177
 exclusion of other means of dispute resolution 913
 International Court of Justice 874
ratione personae jurisdiction 106-7
 sex discrimination 555, 557, 575-6
 war/armed conflict 602
- chattel slavery 202
- Chaumont, Charles 803-4, 818, 863, 909
- Chechnya 155-7, 197, 899-900, 1065
- children see also Convention on the Rights of the Child 1989; education, right to abduction 392-3, 1063
 access 292-3

children (cont.)

- adoption 367, 407–8, 543, 573, 584, 826–7
- adoptive parents, age of 573, 584
- age of criminal responsibility 318–19
- age of majority 240
- American Convention on Human Rights 592
- best interests of the child 392–3
- biological parents, right to know identity of 376
- care, children in 392, 899
- circumcision 430
- criminal prosecutions 240–1
- custody disputes 392–3, 826–7, 1072
- detention 170, 584
- discrimination in education 569
- equality between spouses 1158
- freedom of assembly and association 496
- freedom of movement and migration 745, 1060, 1063
- illegitimate children, discrimination against 390, 538, 583, 820
- in camera* hearings 827
- immigration legislation 392
- liberty and security, right to 240–1, 251
- lone parents 389
- margin of appreciation 393
- parents, relationship with 391–4
- paternity 390–1
- pre-trial detention 251
- prison, parents in 398
- privileges and immunities of children of judges 892
- religious discrimination in custody disputes 579–80
- removal of parental rights 394
- reunion 391
- sexual orientation and parental rights 584
- totalitarian states 370
- wishes and views of the child 392
- chilling effects 373, 476, 500, 517, 747–8, 812–13
- Church of England, ordination of women in 577
- Churchill, Winston 862, 1011
- Cingolani, Mario 360, 557
- circumcision 430
- citizenship 379, 404–5, 1057, 1072, 1082
- civic obligations 216, 217, 218
- civil and political rights see also International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights
 - derogations 587
 - elections, right to free 986
 - freedom of assembly and association 483–5
 - minorities 22
 - peaceful enjoyment of possessions 986
- civil rights and obligations 265–6, 270–6, 287–9, 345
- civil servants see public sector/officials
- Clemenceau, Georges 413
- closed shops 64, 493–4, 506–8, 788–9
- clothing and dress
 - face coverings 376–7, 402, 405–6, 437, 439
 - Islamic veil 173, 402, 405–6, 437, 439
 - jewellery, wearing 439
 - nudity in public 377, 455
 - prison inmates, shaving heads of 376
 - private and family life, right to respect for 376–7, 402, 405–6, 439
 - religion or belief, freedom to manifest 437, 439
 - turbans, wearing 439
- Cocks, Seymour 166
- cohabitants 538, 544, 1158–9
- Cold War 1052–3
- collective agreements 493, 524
- collective bargaining 484, 494, 506–7, 524
- collective enforcement
 - aims and ideals of Council of Europe 73
 - ECommHR 73
 - ECtHR, establishment of 640
 - education 957
 - elections, right to free 957
 - freedom of movement and migration 1046–7
 - individual applications 735
 - inter-State applications 725, 727
 - peaceful enjoyment of possessions 957
 - Preamble to ECHR 62, 64, 73–4
 - subsidiarity 73–4
 - Universal Declaration of Human Rights 73
- collective expulsion of aliens 1068, 1070–1, 1075–80
- asylum seekers 1077–8
- boat, refoulement of migrants arriving by 1079–80, 1083
- Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU 1075
- collective expulsion, definition of 1077
- Committee of Experts 1076–9
- Consultative Assembly 1075–6
- declarations 1080
- drafting 1075–7
- effective remedy, right to an 1075
- European Convention on Establishment 1076
- extraterritorial jurisdiction 1079
- fair trial, right to a 1075
- Grand Chamber 1078–9
- High Commissioner for Refugees (UN) 1079
- interpretation 1075, 1077–80
- liberty and security, right to 1075
- limitation on use of restrictions 625
- national security 1076–7
- nationality 1076
- non-nationals 1075
- procedural guarantees 1076–8, 1130
- reservations 1080
- travaux préparatoires* 1078–9
- colonial clause see territorial application
- colonies and overseas territories see also territorial application
 - corporal punishment 1007
 - Denmark 917
 - derogations 596
 - discrimination 562
 - France 916, 921–2, 926–7, 1036, 1162
 - Italy 920–1

- Netherlands 324, 917, 1036, 1073-4, 1084, 1190, 1108, 1114, 1205
- obligation to respect human rights 84-5
- Preamble to ECHR 62
- succession to treaties 946
- United Kingdom
- corporal punishment 188-9, 1007
 - Cyprus 9, 188, 596, 725, 917-18, 924
 - derogations 596
 - territorial application 916-28, 1036
- colour, discrimination on grounds of 556, 558-61, 577, 580, 583
- comity 100, 286, 891
- Commission on Human Rights (UN) see also under individual main entries
- Committee of Experts (CoE) see also under individual main entries
- adoption of ECHR 5-7, 8
 - Committee of Ministers 5-6
 - women, lack of participation of 5
- Committee of Ministers (CoE) see also under individual main entries
- adoption of ECHR 4, 5-9, 167
 - binding force and execution of judgments 864-8
 - composition of Committee 905-6
 - Conference of Senior Officials 905
 - Council of Europe, Statute of 905-6
 - execution of judgments, supervision of 797-8, 821-2, 864-7, 871, 872, 905
 - Foreign Affairs Ministers of each State 906
 - interpretation 852, 905-6
 - powers 905-6
 - suspension of States 906
- Committees (three judge formation) see also competence of Committees
- admissibility criteria 689, 698, 699-703, 763, 779, 851
 - Chambers on admissibility and merits, decisions by 707
 - conduct of the examination 805
 - full-time, sitting 690
 - gender balance 665
 - interpretation 844
 - introduction of Committees 690
 - President of the Section 690
 - Sections 690
 - single court, creation of 29
 - single judges, competence of 698
 - term of office 690
- common heritage 69-70, 71
- Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS)
- Convention on Human Rights 876, 878, 881-2, 885
- communism 503-4, 612, 619, 958, 1052-3
- compensation/reparations see also compensation for wrongful conviction; damages
- acquittals 306
 - arrest 224, 257-8
 - assessment 817-18, 821, 836-7
 - binding force and execution of judgments 868, 970
 - causal link 836
 - effective remedy, right to an 552
 - friendly settlements 817-18, 821
 - HIV, contamination with 160
 - hunting rights 973
 - inquiries by the Secretary General 899
 - interest 837
 - just satisfaction 830, 832-9
 - liberty and security, right to 224-6, 257-9
 - moral damages 838
 - ne bis in idem* 1150
 - non-pecuniary damages 838
 - peaceful enjoyment of possessions 963-4
 - pecuniary damages 837-8
 - psychological harm 838
 - Rules of Court 836
 - terrorism 836-7
- compensation for wrongful conviction 306, 1142-6
- amnesties 1145
 - appeals discontinued for technical reasons, where 1144
 - declarations 1146
 - drafting 1142
 - final decisions 1143
 - Grand Chamber 1145
 - International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 1142, 1145
 - interpretation 1142-6, 1164
 - law and practice of state, according to 1145-6
 - liberty and security, right to 110, 1143
 - new or newly discovered facts showing miscarriage of justice 1144-5
 - presumption of innocence 1142, 1164
 - reservations 1146
 - reversal of convictions or pardons 1144
 - wrongful detention, damages for 1143
- competence see competence of Committees;
- competence of single judges
- competence of Committees 699-704
- 3-judge committees 699, 700-2
 - accelerated procedure 703
 - admissibility 699-703
 - caseload 699-700, 702
 - consolidating the institutions and further reform 699-700, 701
 - Consultative Assembly 700
 - declarations 703-4
 - drafting 700-1
 - ECommHR 699, 700, 702
 - exhaustion of domestic remedies 703
 - filtering and processing applications 699
 - Grand Chamber 702
 - interpretation 701-3
 - judicial function 700
 - merits, ruling on the 700-3
 - national judges 703

- competence of Committees (cont.)
 new Court 700, 701
 Parliamentary Assembly 701
 plenary Commission, proposal for 700 repetitive cases 700-2
 replacement of members 703
 Rules of Court 700
 simplified procedure 703
 single-judges, transfer of filtering role to 699, 700-2
 striking out 702
 Sub-Commission, proposal for 7-member 700 well-established case law 702-3
- competence of single judges 696-8
 admissibility 697-8, 699
 caseload 696-7
 Committees 698
 declarations 698
 drafting 697
 examination of the case 805
 filtering and processing applications 696
 final judgments 851 function of single judge 697
 interpretation 697-8
 nationality 698
 pilot judgments 696-7
 repetitive cases 696
 statistics 696
 striking out 697
 success of single-judge procedure 696
- conciliation 817-18
- condemnation and disapproval 871
- Condorelli, Luigi 978-9
- Conference of Senior Officials (CoE) see also under individual main entries
 adoption of ECHR 7, 167-8
 Committee of Ministers 905
- confidentiality
 abortion 383, 404-5
 access to documents 828-9
 data protection 383
 examination of the case 814
 freedom of expression 467, 471, 473
 friendly settlements 781, 820, 822-3 journalists' sources, confidentiality of 459, 470
 legal representatives 748
 private life 383-4, 404-5
 professional secrecy 386
 terrorism 239
 without prejudice 822
- confiscation 304, 378 see also expropriation;
 forfeiture
- conflicts of jurisdiction 907-9
- Conforti, Benedetto 646
- Congress of Europe 1948 3, 6, 27
- conscientious objections
 military service 204-5, 214-16, 433-4, 569, 848 religious symbols 424
 tax, payment of 422
- thought, conscience and religion, freedom of 414,
 422, 424, 433-4, 848
- consolidating the institutions and further reforms 28-31
- admissibility 705-7, 759-60, 762, 785
 advisory opinions 876, 877, 882
 binding force and execution of judgments 864, 866
 caseload 28-30
 Chambers 690-1, 707
 Committees 690, 699-700, 701
 control mechanisms 29
 ECtHR 735
 ECtHR, establishment of 639
 entry into force 30
ex officio or national judges 692-3
 examination of the case 804-5
 exhaustion of domestic remedies 759
 existing human rights, safeguards for 902 expansion of Council of Europe 29 expenditure on ECtHR 889
 expulsion of aliens, procedural safeguards relating to 1130
 final judgments 850-1
 freedom of movement and migration 1085-6
 friendly settlements 819-20
 Grand Chamber 688-9, 691-2, 710-12, 841,
 843-4, 846-7
 individual applications 723, 735
 inter-State applications 723, 725, 729
- judges criteria for office 649-51, 654-6
 dismissal 672
 election 660, 663
ex officio or national 692-3 formations 688-9
 number 644-6 privileges and immunities 891-2
 terms of office 670-1
- jurisdiction 719, 720
 judgments 841
 jurisdiction 719, 720
 just satisfaction 833
 margin of appreciation 78-9 merger of ECtHR and ECommHR 28-30 merits, decisions on the 706
 Plenary Court 680, 682, 684-5
 Preamble to ECHR 58, 955, 1045
 privileges and immunities 891-2
 public hearings 825-6
 ratification 29
ratione temporis jurisdiction 109 reasons for judgments and decisions 858
 registry of ECtHR 675, 677
 Secretary-General, inquiries by 898 single court, creation of 29-30
 striking out 797
 territorial application 917, 921, 928, 937-8
 third-party intervention 791

- consular immunity 102
- Consultative Assembly (CoE) see also under individual main entries
 - adoption of ECHR 4, 5–8, 61
 - Committees, competence of 700
 - Parliamentary Assembly, change of name to 660
 - political blocs 4
- contents of rights 4, 6, 8
- contractual obligations, failure to fulfil 1048–51
- Convention on the Rights of the Child 1989
 - adoption 394
 - age of criminal responsibility 318
 - child soldiers 941
 - discrimination 556
 - education, right to 987, 996–7
 - freedom of movement and migration 1060
 - pornography 941
 - Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 38
- convictions see compensation for wrongful conviction
- cooperate, obligation to 812–14
- copyright 480, 971
- corporal punishment
 - common heritage 70
 - education 1007
 - inhuman or degrading treatment 170, 180, 188–9, 191
 - private and family life, right to respect for 189
 - reasonable chastisement 189
 - religious and philosophical convictions of parents 189, 1002–4
 - striking out 800
 - territorial application 927–8
 - whipping 188
- corporations
 - freedom of expression 741
 - individual applications 736–7
 - inhuman or degrading treatment 741
 - legal personality 736
 - lifting the corporate veil 736
 - locus standi* 736
 - peaceful enjoyment of possessions 741, 969
 - public corporations 737
 - shareholders, interests of 741
 - tax 1154
 - victim status 741, 742
- correspondence 400–1, 404
- corruption 893, 1022, 1031–2
- Costa, Jean-Paul 66, 682, 927
- Council of Europe (CoE)
 - adoption of ECHR 3–10
 - aims and principles 65–6, 73, 416, 486, 576, 612
 - cultural homogeneity 413
 - discrimination 440, 556
 - ECtHR distinguished from organs of CoE 641
 - expansion 29
 - expenditure on ECtHR 889, 890
 - foundation 3, 59
 - founding States 59
 - Preparatory Commission 3–4
 - Secretary General 897
 - Statute 3, 69, 905–6
 - treaty system 912
 - Universal Declaration of Human Rights 3–4
- Cremona, Jean 682
- crime and family, extension of ECHR to
 - adoption of International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 18
 - collective expulsion of aliens 1079
 - Committee of Experts 18
 - Consultative Assembly 1125
 - declarations 1165
 - denunciation 1164
 - depository functions 1170
 - differences between ECHR and International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 18
 - drafting 1125
 - entry into force of International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 18, 1125
 - entry into force 1168–9
 - equality and non-discrimination 19
 - exclusions 19
 - Explanatory Report 19
 - extension of rights in ECHR 18
 - fair trial, right to a 265, 1165
 - freedom of expression 468
 - Grand Chamber 1164
 - hate propaganda, prohibition of 19
 - International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, concordance with 18–19, 1125
 - interpretation 1125, 1164–5
 - jurisdiction 1164
 - minorities, protection of 19
 - 'no one' formulation 169
 - Parliamentary Assembly 18–19
 - Preamble 1125
 - private and family life, right to respect for 402
 - public service, equal access to 19
 - relationship to ECHR 1164–5
 - reservations 1164–5
 - restrictions/limitations 1164
 - self-determination, right to 19
 - Steering Committee for Human Rights 18–19
 - Universal Declaration of Human Rights 1125
 - victim status 745
 - war propaganda, prohibition of 19
 - wrongful convictions, right to compensation for 110
- crimes against humanity 136, 202, 343–5, 354–5, 1095
- criminal offences see also appeal in criminal matters, right of; compensation for wrongful conviction; fair trial in criminal proceedings, right to; crime and family, extension of ECHR to; ne bis in idem; sexual assault; war crimes
 - absence/presence of accused at trial 81, 316–17, 1137, 1222–3

- criminal offences (cont.)
 advisory opinions 1222-3
 arrest 221-4, 227, 234, 237-9, 243-6, 254, 257-9
 attribution 128
 bail 250-1, 253, 1058
 binding force and execution of judgments 869
 child pornography 941
 corruption 893, 1022, 1031-2
 crimes against humanity 136, 202, 343-5, 354-5, 1095
 de minimis principle 784
 defamation 476
 discrimination 569-71
 domestic violence 129
 economic crimes 293
 effective remedy, right to an 550-1
 fair trial, right to a 869
 former regimes, crimes committed under 128
 freedom of assembly and association 496
 freedom of expression 454, 470-1, 474-6
 freedom of movement and migration 1057-9, 1061-2, 1063
 general principles of international law 332, 336, 350, 351-5 grave breaches 128
 homicide 127-9, 136, 342-3
 homosexual activity 381, 408-9 honour and reputation, attacks on 385
 independent and impartial tribunal 128
 inhuman or degrading treatment 185, 192-4
 investigations effective 550-1 investigative duty 134-6
 Islamic veil 173
 juvenile offenders, exclusion of media from trial of 480 legal representatives, proceedings against 747-8
 liberty and security, right to 221-7, 235-40, 245-53, 261
 life, right to 127-9, 134-6
 medical malpractice 111, 128
 metal cages, accused in 185
 no punishment without law 336-7, 339-41, 343-5 organised crime 125, 209-10, 230, 239, 281, 398, 1058
 preventive measures 129
 private life 385
 public hearings 289
 reasons for judgments 857
 reporting restrictions 460, 480
 self-defence 148-9
 sophisticated crimes 293
 standard of proof 569-70
 subsidiarity 78
 surveillance 386-7
 transnational crimes 344
 victim status 743
 criteria for judicial office 647-56
 advertising 652, 654
 age limits 584, 650, 654-5
 caseload 648-9
 Committee of Experts 648
 Committee of Ministers 651-4
 consolidating the institutions and further reform 649-51, 654-5
 Consultative Assembly 648
 drafting 648-50
 ECommHR 648-9
 election 648, 650-1, 653, 655
 experience in field of human rights 654 high moral character 647-8, 651-2 incompatible offices, holding 648, 656
 independence and impartiality 647-9, 656
 individual capacity, sitting in 656
 International Court of Justice 648, 651, 655
 interpretation 651-6
 inter-State applications 647
 jurisconsults 647-8, 651-2
 languages, fluency in official 652-4 legal expertise/knowledge 647-8, 651-2
 nationality 647-8
 oaths of office 656
 Parliamentary Assembly 649, 651, 653-5
 Permanent Court of Arbitration 647
 Permanent Court of International Justice, Statute of 647 political figures 647
 qualifications 647-8, 651-2
 revision of ECHR 649-51
 term of office 650
 United Kingdom 652, 654
 Croatia
 obscene speech 456
 peaceful enjoyment of possessions 973
 public hearings 323
 religious institutions to provide marriage services, right of 1181-2, 1186 rent control 980
 reservations 323
 Roma, discrimination against 1004
 war crimes 1150, 1155
 culture
 adoption 394
 discrimination 562, 566, 575
 diversity 582, 1025
 education, right to 998
 elections, right to free 1025
 expropriation 976-7
 freedom of assembly and association 500, 503
 freedom of expression 451, 472
 heritage 500, 472
 homogeneity 413
 identity 503
 information, public exchange of 451
 marry and found a family, right to 542-4
 minorities 12-13, 22

- custodial sentences see imprisonment for debt, prohibition of
- customary international law
derogations 593
erga omnes obligations 65, 725–6
expropriation 977–8
jus cogens 44, 164, 179–80, 328, 593
languages 46
law, definition of 337
no punishment without law 344
ratione materiae jurisdiction 94
source of international law, as 38, 40–3, 352
territorial application 924
torture 164
truth, right to 139
universal jurisdiction 102
Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 38, 40–4, 46
- war/armed conflict 602
- Cyprus see also Cyprus, Turkish occupation of Northern
age of criminal responsibility 318 buffer zone 103–4
corporal punishment 188
death penalty and right to life 140
exclusion of other means of dispute resolution 914
expulsion 1072
freedom of assembly and association 496, 510
friendly settlements 820
independent and impartial tribunals 295, 696
individual applications 775
language 999
military service 215
no punishment without law 336–7, 347
on-site visits 808–9
peaceful enjoyment of possessions 867, 973
prostitution 207
reservations 1078
revision of judgments 854
Sovereign Base Areas 924, 928
state of emergency 1108
territorial application 924
trafficking 207
United Kingdom
colonies and overseas territories 9, 188, 596, 725, 917–18, 924
death penalty 140
derogations 596
emergency powers 188, 596
independence 9, 725
Sovereign Base Areas 924, 928
Universal Periodic Review 915
use of lethal force 150–1, 153
- Cyprus, Turkish occupation of Northern compensation 68, 834
curfews 808
declarations 1080
derogations 602–3
disappearances 229, 775, 867, 871
education 999
effective control 104
examination of the case 808
exhaustion of domestic remedies 769
freedom of assembly and association 510
freedom of movement and migration 496
judges, recusal of 695
Karpas Greek-Cypriot population 564, 835, 838
life, right to 150–1, 153, 1072
marital status 820
mass expulsions 400, 1072
other means of dispute resolution, exclusion of 914–15
property, access to 727, 854, 867, 973
Security Council (UN), mechanisms under 914
State agents, use of lethal force by 150–1, 153
territorial application 938
- Czech Republic
Czechoslovakia, break up of 672, 950 judges, term of office of 672
military service 215, 324–5
Roma, discrimination against 1004
succession to treaties 950
- damages 68, 276, 839, 1139 see also compensation/
reparations
data protection 374, 382–4
De Gaetano, Vincent A 424
de la Vallée-Poussin, Etienne 918
De Meyer, Jan 143, 541, 544
de minimis rule 762, 781–5
de Schutter, Olivier 1187 de Visscher, Charles 5
de Visscher, Fernand 1068 death and dying see also death penalty; life, right to burial 382
homicide 127–9, 136, 342–3
next-of-kin applications 738–40, 798
private life 382, 406
striking out 798
suicide 132–3, 172, 382
use of lethal force 117, 122–3, 125, 127, 135, 146–57
victims, dead persons as 738–9, 742
- death penalty 1098–101 see also death penalty and right to life; death penalty in time of war abolition in all circumstances 14–17, 1091–2, 1094, 1097–101, 1101, 1110, 1115, 1197–210
accession 1118
American Convention on Human Rights 15,
1197, 1200
apostasy, advocating death penalty for 619
Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU 1093, 1097
Committee of Experts 17, 1198, 1201
Committee of Ministers 15–17, 1093–4, 1113, 1117–18, 1121, 1198, 1199

- death penalty (cont.)
- Consultative Assembly 15
 - continuing violations 110
 - crimes against humanity 1095
 - custom, States which are abolitionist by 1095
 - death row phenomenon 190-1
 - declarations 1111-12, 1205-6
 - denunciations 1116, 1119
 - depository functions 1121-2, 1210
 - derogations 592, 594, 1100, 1203
 - drafting 1093-4, 1098, 1110-15, 1117, 1120-1, 1198, 1201
 - ECommHR 1099
 - entry into force 16, 17, 1099, 1120, 1209
 - EU law 1092
 - European Committee on Crime Problems 1093
 - evolution that has occurred 1094-5
 - expulsion 165, 1093, 1099-101, 1128
 - extraterritoriality 1099
 - fully abolitionist States, list of 1095
 - inhuman or degrading treatment 11, 15, 16, 186-7, 190-1, 1094, 1199
 - International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 1092, 1094, 1097, 1197
 - interpretation 47, 49, 1094-101, 1110-22, 1198-200, 1201
 - life imprisonment, replacement with 349-50
 - Model Final Clauses 1113-14, 1117-18, 1121, 1206, 1208, 1210
 - ne bis in idem* 1110
 - 'no one' formulation 169
 - Parliamentary Assembly 15-16, 1116, 1118
 - peacetime, abolition in 1093-4
 - Plenary Court 1091-2
 - preamble to protocols 1197-200
 - procedural safeguards 1128
 - ratione loci* jurisdiction 1114
 - ratione temporis* jurisdiction 110
 - relationship of protocols to ECHR 1115-16, 1207
 - reservations 1111-12, 1204
 - restrictions 1197, 1198, 1100-22, 1199-200
 - retentionist States 1095-6
 - right not to be subjected to death penalty 1099-101
 - Secretary-General 1112, 1121
 - signatories and ratification 16-17, 1094, 1099, 1101, 1117-20, 1208
 - summary execution, justification of 619
 - tendency in favour of abolition, general 1097
 - territorial application 1113-14, 1205-6
 - terrorism 1095-6
 - third-party intervention 794
 - torture 16
 - Universal Periodic Review 1118
 - Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 1113, 1117-18, 1121
 - war crimes 1094-5
- death penalty and right to life 11, 14-17
- American Convention on Human Rights 140-1
 - Committee of Experts 120, 140, 145-6
 - Council of Europe 140-1, 144-6
 - court, sentence pronounced by the 141
 - death row phenomenon 142-3
 - derogations 592, 594
 - diplomatic assurances 145-6
 - ECommHR 141-2
 - ECtHR 142-6
 - extradition, deportation, or expulsion and refoulement 127, 140-6
 - extraterritoriality 140
 - fair trial, right to a 141, 144
 - human dignity 1198-9
 - independent and impartial tribunal 141
 - inhuman or degrading treatment 47, 142-5, 186-7, 190-1, 434
 - International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 140-1, 145
 - interpretation 117, 122, 143
 - limitation on use of restrictions 625
 - Preamble 1091-2, 1094
 - pre-emption, doctrine of 144
 - provided for by law, sentence must be 141, 143
 - retrospectivity 49
 - sham trials 337
 - Soering* case 141-6
 - State practice 37, 144
 - Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 37
 - wartime exception 1105, 1199
- death penalty in time of war 16-17, 1098, 1103-9
- abolitionist by law States 1103
 - abolitionist by law for ordinary crimes only States 1103
 - American Convention on Human Rights 1104, 1201
 - armed conflict, use of term international 1104
 - Committee of Ministers 1104, 1105
 - derogations 594, 601, 1100, 1104, 1106, 1108
 - drafting 1104
 - formal declarations of war 1106
 - fully abolitionist States 1103
 - Geneva Conventions 1104, 1106
 - in time of war, meaning of 1105-6
 - International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 1103-4, 1106-7, 1201
 - interpretation 1104-9
 - life, right to 1105, 1199
 - military death penalty 1106, 1108, 1201
 - non-international armed conflict 1106
 - Organization of American States 1104
 - prescribed by law, restrictions which are 1105, 1107
 - ratione materiae* jurisdiction 1106
 - relationship of protocols to ECHR 1116, 1207
 - reservations 1108-9, 1112
 - rule of law 1107
 - Secretary-General, notification of 897, 1107-8
 - summary executions against non-combatants 354
 - threat of war 17, 1099, 1103-7, 1112, 1116, 1197, 1199, 1201, 1203

- debts see also imprisonment for debt, prohibition of debt bondage 202
 freedom of movement and migration 1063-4
 judgment debts 971
 travel bans to enforce private debts 1063-4
- Decaux, Emmanuel 609, 904, 913
- declarations see also under individual main entries
 admissibility criteria 698, 786
 Committees, competence of 703-4
de facto reservations 1009
de minimis principle 785
 exhaustion of domestic remedies 769
 filtering and processing applications 703-4
 freedom of movement and migration 1057, 1065-6 interpretive declarations 109, 933, 937, 1111-12
 reservations 932-4, 936-9, 1009
 striking out 799-800
 territorial application 943 unilateral declarations 799-800, 822, 823
 withdrawal 943
- Dedov, Dmitry 45
- defamation 472, 476-8, 479
- defence, adequate time and facilities for 46,
 308-10, 311
- Dehouse, Fernand 55, 84, 119, 165, 331, 445, 484-5, 557, 960
- delay
 administrative practices 766
 advisory opinions 1220, 1224
 evidence 813-14
 fair trial, right to a 109
 inter-State applications 766
 languages 46
 liberty and security, right to 234
ratione temporis jurisdiction 109 reasonable time, right to trial within a 287, 291-3, 551
- democracy see also European Commission for Democracy through Law (Venice Commission)
 abuse of rights, prohibition of 612-13, 616, 618
 education, right to 993
 elections, right to free 1011-18, 1021, 1023, 1026
 freedom of assembly and association 483, 490-1, 495, 497, 499-500, 503-4, 513-15
 freedom of expression 445-6, 451-2, 458, 460, 463, 465
 limitation on use of restrictions 627
 militant democracy 445, 519-21
 political democracy 68-9
 pressing social needs, restrictions for 515
 reservations 1031
 subsidiarity 78
 threats to democracy 515
 totalitarian movements 519-20
 trade unions 515
- demonstrations/protests 492-8
 abortion 493
 authorization 492, 495-7
 chilling effect 517
 counter-demonstrations 494-5
 freedom of assembly and association 492-8, 514-18, 742
 freedom of movement and migration 1058-9 incitement to violence 495-6, 518 location 497-8, 517
 margin of appreciation 517-18 necessary in a democratic society, restrictions which are 514
 peaceful assembly 495-6 police, obstruction of 1058-9
 positive obligations 494, 498
 prior notification 497-8
 proportionality 516-17
 punishment for presence 514
 sentencing 475-6
 suicide 132
 tolerance 514
 victim status 742
- denaturalization 1069-70
- denialism 479-80, 615, 619
- Denmark
 colonies 917
 Constitution 358
 death penalty 1205-6
 declarations 1165, 1205
 expulsion 397
 Faroe Islands 1140, 1162, 1165, 1205-6
 Greenland 1205
 individual applications 1165
 police officers in Turkey, training of 820
 private and family life, right to respect for 358
 reservations 1140
 South Schleswig 558
 territorial application 1162, 1205-6
- denunciations 941-3
 advisory opinions 1227
 Child Soldiers Protocol to Convention on Rights of the Child 941
 colonial clause 942
 Committee of Ministers 942-3
 derogations 942
 Disabilities Convention 941
 drafting 942
 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 941
 interpretation 942-3
 Pornography Protocol to Convention on Rights of the Child 941
 restrictions/limitations 942
 Secretary-General, notification of 897 territorial application, withdrawal of declarations
 of 943
 time limits 942
- deportation
 Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU 165

- deportation (cont.)
- criminal activity, due to 395-6
 - death penalty and right to life 127, 140-6
 - education, right to 999
 - fair trial, right to a 275, 282
 - family life 394-8, 405
 - liberty and security, right to 233-4, 243-5, 259-60
 - life, right to 127, 140-6
 - religion or belief, freedom to manifest 434-5
 - torture 179
 - victim status 740-1, 743, 744-5
- depository
- accession, instruments of 85
 - advisory opinions 1232
 - declarations 85, 603, 1114, 1132-3
 - functions 1121-2, 1170, 1194, 1210, 1232
 - Model Final Clauses 1210
 - public hearings 825-7
 - reservations 931-4, 1007, 1065, 1073
 - Secretary-General 897, 950
 - signature and ratification 944-51, 1039-41, 1087-8, 1117-19, 1166-7, 1192, 1208, 1228
- deprivation of liberty see detention/deprivation of liberty
- derogation in time of emergency 587-604
- Alternative A and A/2 590
 - Alternative B and B/2 590
 - American Convention on Human Rights 587, 592, 594
 - civil and political rights, treaties on 587
 - Committee of Experts 589-90
 - Committee of Ministers 589-91
 - Conference of Senior Officials 590
 - Consultative Assembly 588-91
 - customary international law 593
 - death penalty 592, 594, 1104, 1106, 1108, 1203
 - declarations 604
 - denunciations 942
 - detention 588
 - discrimination 598, 600
 - domestic scrutiny, requirement for 593-4
 - drafting 588-92, 595
 - European Social Charter 587-8, 594, 1106
 - executive 594
 - freedom of assembly 599
 - freedom of movement and migration 591-2, 599
 - future risks 595
 - general limitation clauses 589
 - hierarchy of rights 592-3
 - High Contracting Party 591
 - inhuman or degrading treatment 592
 - International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 587, 592-6, 599-601, 603-4, 1051, 1155
 - international humanitarian law 588, 601
 - international law, consistency with other obligations under 600-1
 - interpretation 592-604
 - ius cogens* 593
 - liberty and security, right to 588, 600
 - life, right to 153-6, 592
 - limitation on use of restrictions 625
 - margin of appreciation 596, 599
 - ne bis in idem* 952
 - no punishment without law 592-3, 600
 - non-derogable rights 592-3, 598-9
 - notification 596-8, 602-4
 - Parliamentary Assembly 588
 - parliamentary scrutiny 593-4
 - practice 596-8
 - proclamations 600-1, 603
 - proportionality 594, 599, 602
 - public safety, health, and order 595, 603
 - reservations 593, 604
 - restrictions/limitations 598-602
 - rule of law 600
 - safeguards for existing human rights 902
 - Secretary General, notification of 602-4
 - Security Council (UN) 601
 - slavery and forced labour 592
 - strictly required by the exigencies of the situation, meaning of 599-600
 - subsidiarity 77
 - terrorism 588, 595, 597
 - thought, conscience and religion, freedom of 593
 - time of war or other emergency, meaning of 594-6
 - torture 592-3
 - Universal Declaration of Human Rights 588-90
 - war/armed conflict 153-6, 588-9, 592, 594-6, 601-2
- detention/deprivation of liberty 11, 24-5 see also life imprisonment; prisoners
- appeal in criminal matters, right of 1136
 - Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU 183
 - children 170
 - conditions 173, 180-2, 184-6
 - damages for wrongful detention 1143
 - derogations 588
 - discrimination 197, 584
 - educational purposes, for 584
 - extradition 829
 - extraordinary rendition 96, 145, 793, 809-10, 827, 836-7, 899-901
 - freedom of movement and migration 1056-7
 - imprisonment for debt, prohibition of 1049-51
 - inquiries by the Secretary General 899-900
 - inhuman or degrading treatment 169-70, 173-4, 180-6, 197
 - international criminal tribunals 98
 - life, right to 123, 133-4, 136
 - medical care 133-4, 174, 183, 185-6
 - precautions 133
 - preventive detention 348
 - proportionality 182-3
 - racial discrimination 197

- rape 175–6
- restraints 185
- slavery and forced labour 205, 213–14
- social and sensory isolation 173–4, 186
- terrorists 598, 836–7
- torture 175–6
- visits 165
- war/armed conflict 154
- Dickins, Charles 1048
- Diderot, Denis 444
- diplomatic assurances 145–6, 195–6, 1100
- diplomats
 - candidate in elections, right to stand as a 1030
 - diplomatic protection 105, 725–6, 731, 792, 834–5
 - extraterritoriality 105
 - immunity 100, 102, 478
 - life, right to 100
- disabilities, persons with
 - denunciations 941
 - Disabilities Convention 556, 583, 941
 - discrimination 573, 575, 583, 941, 1184
 - military service 380
 - Parliamentary Assembly 583
 - third-party intervention 794–5
- disappearances
 - accountability 137, 870
 - crimes against humanity 136
 - death, presumption of 811
 - effective investigations 870
 - Enforced Disappearances Convention 136–7, 1128
 - evidence 811
 - expulsion of aliens, procedural safeguards for 1128
 - extra-judicial execution 136
 - inhuman or degrading treatment 137, 171, 193
 - just satisfaction 871
 - liberty and security, right to 229
 - life, right to 123, 126, 136–7
 - ratione temporis* jurisdiction 109–10
 - victim status 739–40
 - Working Group on Enforced and Involuntary Disappearances 778
- disciplinary measures
 - education, right to 998, 1003–4
 - fair trial, right to 278–9, 282–3
 - legal representatives, proceedings against 747–8
 - liberty and security, right to 228, 235, 260–1
 - military 260–1, 278, 324–5
 - presumption of innocence 305
 - prisoners 228, 1152
 - religion 1003–4
 - same criminal charge, arising out of 305
- disclosure
 - fair trial in criminal proceedings, right to 310
 - medical records 383
- discontinuance 281, 286, 292, 299, 303, 305–7, 797–8, 819
- discretionary life sentences 256
- discrimination 19–21, 555–85 see also racial discrimination; sex discrimination/gender equality
 - abuse of rights, prohibition of 618
 - admissibility 563
 - adoption 408
 - affirmative action 566–8, 1175–6, 1187
 - age 556, 573, 575, 583–4, 1184
 - aliens 560
 - arrest 259
 - autonomous nature 563
 - balancing exercise 565
 - birth or other status 558–61, 574, 582–4
 - candidate in elections, right to stand for 1181
 - caseload 1180
 - Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU 165, 556, 573, 583, 1184
 - Charter of UN 555–7, 1177
 - civic obligations 217
 - colonies 562, 921
 - colour 556, 558–61, 577, 583
 - Committee of Experts 20, 559–60, 1174–5
 - Committee of Ministers 20–1, 559, 562, 1177, 1179–80
 - Consultative Assembly 19, 558–9, 575
 - Convention on the Rights of the Child 556
 - crime and family, extension of ECHR to 19
 - culture 562, 566, 575
 - customs 562
 - declarations 1190
 - definition 564–8
 - derogations 598, 600
 - detention 259–60, 584
 - disability 556, 575, 583, 1184
 - drafting 557–62, 575–6, 582–3, 1173–4, 1177, 1179–80
 - ECommHR 1182
 - education, right to 1004–6
 - effective remedy, right to an 546, 552–3
 - ejusdem generis* interpretation 572
 - elections, right to free 1031
 - employment 20
 - enjoyment of any right set forth by law 1181–2
 - entry into force 21, 1193
 - equal pay 555
 - equal protection of the law 1174–5, 1180–1
 - equality before the law 19–21, 555, 558, 1174–5, 1177, 1180–1
 - ethnic groups 565–6, 574–5
 - European Social Charter 556
 - evidence 811
 - expropriation 1182–3
 - extreme forms 563–4
 - fair trial, right to a 269, 321–3
 - freedom of assembly and association 511, 512, 517, 523–5
 - freedom of expression 466, 467, 478, 479–81
 - freedom of movement and migration 1065

- discrimination (cont.)
- general prohibition 1177-87
 - genetic features 1184
 - grounds 572-84
 - hierarchy between grounds 574, 1185
 - hunting rights 982
 - identity 381
 - illegitimate children 390, 538, 583, 820
 - incitement 555
 - indirect discrimination 439-40, 568-9, 572
 - inhuman or degrading treatment 177, 192-3, 196-8, 563-4, 1178
 - intention 566
 - International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 21, 556, 600, 1179-80, 1185
 - international law 1181
 - interpretation 556, 562-84, 1173-6, 1180-7
 - intolerance, declaration on 20
 - judges, election of 661
 - jus cogens* 44
 - justification 564-6
 - language 555-6, 558-61, 579, 583, 600
 - legitimate aim/purpose, restrictions for a 564, 575
 - less favourable treatment 565-6
 - liberty and security, right to 259-60
 - life, right to 159-60
 - margin of appreciation 480, 567
 - marriage ceremonies 562-3
 - marry and found a family, right to 528, 531-2, 537, 543-4
 - media 480-1
 - minorities 525, 556, 558-62, 572-3, 577, 580-2, 1184
 - Model Final Clauses 1189-90, 1192-3
 - national origins 555-6, 558-62, 573, 580-3
 - national security 525
 - nationality 407, 556, 574, 581, 600
 - natural rights 557
 - 'no one' formulation 169
 - no punishment without law 355-6
 - non-discrimination and equality clauses in treaties and conventions 556
 - objectivity 564-6
 - Parliamentary Assembly 20-1, 1180-7
 - peaceful enjoyment of possessions 981-2
 - pensions 982
 - personal features 565, 572-3
 - pluralism 575, 580
 - political or other opinions 555-61, 580, 583
 - political parties 525
 - positive discrimination 566-8, 1175-6, 1187
 - positive obligations 1176, 1180, 1186-7
 - preamble to protocols 1173-6
 - private and family life, right to respect for 375-6, 407-8, 556, 1178
 - procedural/investigative obligation 160
 - prohibited grounds, definition of 1184-5
 - proof of discrimination 569-72
 - property 555-6, 558-60, 573-4, 582-3
 - proportionality 565-6, 574-5, 600, 1176
 - public authorities 1180, 1185-6
 - ratification 21, 1190
 - reasonable accommodation 440
 - recognition before the law 1175
 - relationship of protocols to ECHR 1191
 - religion 428, 555-63, 579-80, 583, 600, 1181-2, 1186
 - identity cards 428
 - inhuman or degrading treatment 196-7
 - marriage services, right of institutions to provide 1181-2, 1186
 - thought, conscience and religion, freedom of 440-1
 - reservations 584-5, 933-4
 - sentencing 573
 - sexual orientation 381, 408, 438-9, 525, 556, 573-4, 584, 1179, 1184-5
 - signature and ratification 1192
 - slavery and forced labour 217
 - social origins 555-6, 559-61, 580-1, 583, 600
 - social security 981-2
 - special measures 566-8, 1175-6
 - statistics on breach 1178
 - subsidiary provision, as 563
 - substantive provisions, no requirement for breach of 563
 - tax 982
 - territorial application 921, 1177, 1189-90
 - torture 177
 - trade unions 508, 524-5
 - transgender persons 535-7, 544, 583
 - travaux préparatoires* 1177-8
 - Universal Declaration of Human Rights 555-8, 562, 572, 1174-5, 1177-9, 1184
 - victims 743
 - without discrimination, definition of 1182-4
 - witnesses, compellability of spouses as 538, 544
- diseases, detention of persons with infectious 241
- dismissal of judges 668, 670, 672
- disqualification orders 1152
- dissenting opinions 781-2, 857-9, 887, 1224
- documents
- access to documents 825-9
 - evidence 807, 812-14
- domestic courts see national courts
- domestic laws see national laws
- domestic remedies see exhaustion of domestic remedies
- domestic violence 129, 160, 192, 198, 385, 576-7
- Dominedo, Francesco 862
- double jeopardy see ne bis in idem
- Downing, HJ 532-3, 591, 614, 669
- Dowson, Oscar 416, 487, 548, 613, 1048-9
- drafting 4-8 see also under individual main entries
- Committee of Ministers 905
 - Committees, competence of 700-1
 - contents of rights 6

- women, lack of participation of 5, 576
- dress see clothing and dress
- driving offences 283, 299–300, 783, 1153
- drugs 299, 344
- drunks/alcoholics, detention of 222–3, 241–2
- due diligence 771
- Dugard, John 179
- Eastern Europe see Central and Eastern Europe
- ECommHR
 - admissibility 632
 - authorization of access to ECtHR 732
 - Committee of Ministers 632
 - establishment 631
 - individual applications 636
 - investigatory function 634
 - merger, proposal for 28–30, 632, 639
 - organs of the Council of Europe, distinguishing
 - Commission from 641
 - petition, right to 634
 - referrals 706
 - merger, proposal for 632, 649
 - referrals to 706
 - single Court, replacement by 632–3
 - workload 633
- economic crimes 293
- economic, social, and cultural rights see also
 - International Covenant on Economic, Social, and Cultural Rights
 - adoption of ECHR 4, 6
 - education 23, 986–7, 995
 - exclusion 1, 4, 23, 63, 499
 - free employment services, access to 23
 - freedom of assembly and association 499
 - individual applications 23
 - paid activity, right to freely choose or to accept a 23
 - Preamble to ECHR 63
 - Social Charter, transfer of rights from 23
 - social security scheme, right to be affiliated to a 23
 - standard of living in event of involuntary unemployment 23
 - trade union rights 23
 - vocational guidance or training 23
- ECtHR see European Court of Human Rights
- Edberg, Rolf 557
- education
 - absolute, as not being 996
 - access to educational institutions, right of 997
 - adoption of ECHR 4, 8
 - bullying 370
 - Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU 988
 - civil and political rights 986
 - collective enforcement 957
 - Committee of Experts 12, 955–6, 989–92, 994, 1037–40
 - Committee of Ministers 12, 986, 989–90, 993–4, 998, 1038, 1040
 - Consultative Assembly 986, 989–94, 1038, 1040
 - content of education 987
 - continuing training, access to 988
 - Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women 987
 - corporal punishment 1002, 1003–4
 - Convention on the Rights of the Child 987, 996–7
 - crucifixes in classrooms 433, 1003
 - culture 998
 - declarations 1006–9, 1037
 - democracy 993
 - denunciations 1037, 1038
 - deportation 999
 - disciplinary measures 998, 1003–4
 - discrimination 1004–6
 - drafting 11–12, 955–6, 986, 988–95, 1037–40
 - economic, social and cultural rights 23, 986–7, 995
 - elementary education 996–7
 - entry into force 12
 - exceptions 996
 - expulsion 998
 - family rights 988–9
 - fees 1005–6
 - foreseeability 998–9
 - gender roles and stereotypes, elimination of 987
 - general principles of international law 45
 - General Assembly (UN) 987
 - grants 994
 - headscarf bans 437
 - home schooling 1002, 1006
 - indoctrination 1003
 - International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination 987
 - International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights 987, 997
 - interpretation 955–7, 995–1006, 1038, 1040–1
 - language 579, 992, 998–1000
 - margin of appreciation 1003, 1005
 - minorities 13, 998, 999
 - negative formulation 992–3, 996
 - organization by government 991
 - parents, rights of 23, 988–91
 - political formulation 992
 - positive statements of rights 992–3
 - Preamble to ECHR 955
 - Preamble to Protocol 955–7
 - primary education 997
 - prisoners, rights of 998–9
 - private education 986, 992, 994, 1002
 - private life 379–80
 - professional accreditation 997–8
 - proportionality 998–9, 1005
 - quotas 998
 - racial discrimination 1004
 - religion or belief, freedom to manifest 428, 433
 - religious and philosophical convictions of parents, respect for 23, 380, 419, 433, 986, 989–95, 1000–9

- education (cont.)
- religious education, opting out of 580
 - reservations 1006–9, 1037
 - restrictions/limitations 986, 995, 998–9
 - resources 998, 1005–6
 - right to education 11–12, 986–1009
 - secondary education 997–8
 - sex education 1003
 - signature and ratification 1039–41
 - subsidies from government 991
 - suspension 998, 1004
 - tertiary education 997–8
 - textbooks and school programmes, revision of
 - stereotyping in 987
 - thought, conscience and religion,
 - freedom of 1001
 - totalitarian regimes 989, 991, 993
 - travaux préparatoires* 997
 - UNESCO Convention against Discrimination in
 - Education 987
 - Universal Declaration of Human Rights 4, 956–7,
 - 986–8, 995–7
 - universal public education 986
 - universities 437, 997–8, 1005
 - vocational training, access to 988, 998
- effective remedy, right to an 546–54
- access to a court 551
 - Alternative A and A/2 549
 - Alternative B and B/2 549
 - appeal in criminal matters, right of 1136
 - arguable claim standard 551–2
 - Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU 547
 - collective expulsion of aliens 1075
 - Committee of Experts 547–9
 - Committee of Ministers 550
 - compensation 552
 - Conference of Senior Officials 550
 - Consultative Assembly 547, 550
 - core obligation, as 546
 - criminal investigations 550–1
 - discrimination 546, 552–3
 - drafting 547–50
 - European Movement, International Council of
 - the 547
 - exhaustion of domestic remedies 551, 765–6
 - expulsion 740–1, 1126, 1128
 - individual applications 731
 - international bill of rights 546
 - International Covenant on Civil and Political
 - Rights 546
 - interpretation 550–2
 - national courts 550
 - Preamble 551
 - racial discrimination 571
 - reasonable time, right to trial within a 551
 - reservations 554
 - subsidiarity 76
 - Universal Declaration of Human Rights 546–9
- effectiveness, principle of
- Committee of Ministers 50
 - ECommHR 49–50
 - liberal interpretation 49–50
- Eissen, Marc-André 20
- election of judges 658–66
- absolute majorities 663
 - accountability 661
 - Advisory Panel of Experts 664
 - balance and division of powers 660
 - campaigning and bartering 658
 - casual vacancies 659–60
 - Committee of Legal Experts 659
 - Committee of Ministers 658–9, 663–5
 - Conference of Senior Officials 659
 - Consultative Assembly 658–60
 - criteria for office 648, 650–1, 653, 655
 - discrimination 661
 - drafting 658–60
 - ECommHR 648
 - gender balance 660, 662–6
 - General Assembly (UN) 658
 - high moral character 662
 - independence and impartiality 658
 - interpretation 660–6
 - interviews 663
 - nationality 659
 - new court 661
 - nomination of candidates 659–65
 - Parliamentary Assembly 660–6
 - Plenary Court 680
 - politicised processes 662
 - procedure 660–4
 - publication of results 663
 - qualifications 662, 664–5
 - quality 658
 - ranking of candidates 662
 - re-election 669–72
 - rejection of lists 661, 665
 - relative majorities 663
 - rule of law 661
 - Security Council (UN) resolutions 658
 - State Parties, one judge for each of the 658
 - Sub-Committee on the Election of Judges to the
 - ECHR 663
 - suitability 664
 - transparency 661
 - withdrawal of candidates 663
- elections see election of judges; elections, right to free
- elections, right to free 11–12, 1011–31 see also
- candidate in elections, right to stand as a
 - active aspects 1026, 1029
 - adoption of ECHR 8
 - Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU 1012
 - civil and political rights 986
 - collective enforcement 957
 - Committee of Experts 12, 955–7, 1014–17, 1037–40
 - Committee of Ministers 12, 1014–18, 1038–40

- Conference of Senior Officials 1015
- conditions 1012, 1015–18, 1025
- constitutional structure of States 1020
- Consultative Assembly 11, 1013–18, 1038, 1040
- cultural diversity 1025
- democracy 68, 1011–18, 1021, 1023, 1026
- denunciations 1037, 1038
- discrimination 1031, 1181
- drafting 11–12, 955–6, 1012–18, 1037–40
- ECommHR 1019–20, 1023
- electoral machinery 1014, 1018
- entry into force 12, 1039–40
- European Parliament 1012, 1021
- fair trial, right to a 274
- financing campaigns 1022
- freedom of assembly and association 499, 515, 518, 1011, 1017
- freedom of expression 1011, 1016–20, 1025, 1030
- funding of parties 1022
- general principles of international law 45
- Grand Chamber 1012, 1023, 1025, 1038
- implied limitations 1023–6
- independence and impartiality 1020
- independent candidates 1023
- indirect elections 1020
- individual applications 1018
- institutional approach 1014–15, 1019
- International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 1012, 1019
- interpretation 955–7, 1016–31, 1038, 1040–1
- jurisdiction, declarations on 1037
- lawfulness of restrictions 1024
- legitimate aim/purpose, restrictions for a 1023–4
- linguistic minorities 1023–4
- loyalty to State, principle of 1023
- margin of appreciation 1023–5
- media, access to the 1022, 1023
- necessity 1024
- no punishment without law 1025
- non-elected chambers, parliaments with 1017–18, 1020
- organization of elections 1014, 1018, 1019–23
- passive aspects 1026, 1029
- pluralism 1018–20, 1022
- political activity of aliens, restrictions on 606, 608, 609–10
- political parties
 - corruption 1022
 - freedom of assembly and association 499, 515, 518
 - funding 1022
 - media, access to 1023
 - membership of 1018
 - national minorities 515, 518
 - proportionality 1024
- positive obligations 1026
- Preamble to ECHR 63, 955
- Preamble to Protocol No. 1 955–7
- presidential/head of state elections 1021–2
- pressing social need 1024
- prisoners 915, 1023, 1028–9
- procedural fairness 1025
- proportional representation 1016–17, 1022, 1025
- proportionality 1024
- ratifications 12, 1040–1
- reasonable intervals, at 1014–15, 1020
- referendums 1021
- regional assemblies 1020–1
- regulation of elections 1022–3
- relationship of protocols to ECHR 1037–8
- reservations 1031–2, 1037
- restrictions/limitations 1014, 1018, 1023–6
- rule of law 956, 1011–12, 1023–4
- secret ballots 1012–20
- signature and ratification 1039–41
- simple majority systems 1025
- subjective rights 1018–19, 1023
- systems of elections 1025
- transparency 1020
- travaux préparatoires* 956, 1018
- Universal Declaration of Human Rights 11, 956–7, 1012, 1014
- universal suffrage 1011–15, 1019, 1021, 1026
- victims 1018
- vote, right to 915, 1026–9
- electronic communications 400, 457, 684, 855
- electronic publication of judgments 855
- emergencies see also derogation in time of emergency
 - emergency services 132–4, 216, 217
 - firearms by State agents, use of 130–1
 - medical care and right to life 133–4
 - rescue operations 102
 - slavery and forced labour, compulsory work as 216, 217
- employment see also slavery and forced labour
 - conscientious objections 433
 - discrimination 20, 322, 558, 584–5
 - dismissal 432–3
 - email, Internet and telephone use, monitoring 387
 - Employment Equality Directive 583
 - European Social Charter 432
 - free employment services, access to 23
 - freedom of expression 464–5
 - loyalty, duty of 465
 - Migrant Workers Convention 1060
 - nationality discrimination 584–5
 - paid activity, right to freely choose or to accept a 23
 - political activities 375
 - private life 374–5, 377, 387
 - public employees 274, 501, 522–3
 - public holidays 432
 - religion or belief, freedom to manifest 432–4, 438–9
 - religious discrimination 558
 - rest days 432
 - sex discrimination 322
 - sexual orientation 438–9

- employment (cont.)
- slavery and forced labour 433-4
 - standard of living in event of involuntary unemployment 23
 - video surveillance 377
 - whistleblowing 25, 465, 469, 475
- enforced disappearances see disappearances
- enforcement see also binding force and execution of judgments
- adoption of ECHR 3, 4, 6-9
 - collective enforcement 73
 - subsidiarity 76-7
- Engels, Friedrich 958
- entry into force
- adoption of ECHR 8-19
 - advisory opinions 1229
 - crime and family, extension of ECHR to 1168-9
 - death penalty 16, 17, 1099, 1209
 - discrimination 21, 1193
 - drafting 1169
 - filtering and processing applications 14, 699, 702, 707
 - freedom of movement and migration 12, 1087-8
 - International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 18, 1125
 - Model Final Clauses 1168, 1193
 - protocols 30, 735, 1039, 1087, 1120, 1168, 1193, 1209, 1229
 - ratione temporis* jurisdiction 108
 - signature and ratification 108, 944-5, 949-50
- environment 11, 23-4, 172, 387-8
- equal protection of the law 1174-5, 1180-1
- equality before the law 12, 13, 19-21, 555, 558, 1174-5, 1177, 1180-1
- equality between spouses 1157-9
- children, interests of 1158
 - cohabitantes 1158-9
 - Commission on the Status of Women 1157
 - declarations 1159
 - dissolution 1158-9
 - drafting 1157
 - International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 1157
 - interpretation 1157-9
 - legitimate aim/purpose, restrictions for a 1158
 - margin of appreciation 1158
 - marry and found a family, right to 1157
 - necessity clause 1158
 - positive obligations 1158
 - pressing social needs 1158
 - private and family life, right to respect for 1157-8
 - reservations 1159
 - same sex couples 1158-9
 - Universal Declaration of Human Rights 1157
- equality of arms 28, 288
- Erceg, Rusen 594
- erga omnes* obligations 65, 725-6
- Estonia 323, 984, 1028
- estoppel see also ne bis in idem
- admissibility criteria 764
 - examination of the case 814-15
 - exhaustion of domestic remedies 814-15
- ethnic cleansing 344, 914, 1067
- EU law see also Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU
- accession to ECHR 948-9
 - Committee of Ministers, representation at 949
 - Court of Justice 948-9
 - death penalty 1092
 - Employment Equality Directive 583
 - expulsion 1071, 1126
 - leave a country, freedom to 1064
 - legislation by ECtHR, consideration of 948
 - Lisbon Treaty 948
 - Racial Equality Directive 568
 - ratification 948
 - Schengen zone 1053
 - Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 948
- eugenics 373
- European Commission for Democracy through Law (Venice Commission)
- customary international law 41
 - freedom of assembly and association 484
 - funding of parties 505 n.171, 807
 - opinions, provision of 807
 - political parties 484, 505 n.171, 807
 - rule of law 72
 - succession to treaties 951
 - third-party intervention 793
- European Commission of Human Rights (ECommHR) see also under individual main entries
- abolition 27, 30, 699, 735, 809
 - access to ECtHR, authorization of 732
 - admissibility criteria 699, 700, 702, 706, 754-9, 779
 - appointments, procedure for 645
 - case law 54
 - caseload 27-9, 633
 - collective enforcement 73
 - Committees, competence of 699, 700, 702
 - declaration, acceptance by 8, 9
- ECtHR
- admissibility 632
 - Committee of Ministers 632
 - establishment 631
 - individual applications 636
 - investigatory function 634
 - merger, proposal for 28-30, 632, 639, 649
 - organs of the Council of Europe, distinguishing Commission from 641
 - petition, right to 634
 - referrals 706
 - single Court, replacement by 28-9, 632-3
- elections 9
- examination of the case 803, 808-9

- filtering and processing applications 699, 700, 702, 706, 754, 779
- first inter-State complaint 9
- individual applications 8, 9-10, 636, 732-3, 735
- inter-State applications 9
- investigations 634, 808-9
- manifestly ill-founded applications, rejection of 779
- merger, proposal for 632, 639
- merits, decisions on the 706
- premises, move into new 29-30
- proposal for a commission 4, 6-10
- reservations 939
- rotation of terms of members of ECtHR and ECommHR 26
 - Sub-Commission, abolition of 26
- European Committee on Crime Problems 14, 15, 1093
- European Convention for the Peaceful Settlement of Disputes (CoE) 912
- European Convention on Establishment 1071, 1076, 1126, 1129
- European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR) see also Chambers; Grand Chamber; jurisdiction of ECtHR; Plenary Court; Rules of Court
 - advisory opinions 633
 - appeals 632
 - application of ECHR 633, 641-2
 - budget, amount of 890
 - case law 54-5, 366-7
 - caseload 28-9, 633
 - collective enforcement 640
 - Committee of Experts 632, 636-7
 - Committee of Legal Experts 638-9
 - Committee of Ministers 632-4, 636-9
 - Conference of Senior Officials 637-9
 - consolidating the institutions and further reform 639
 - Consultative Assembly 635-8, 641
 - corporate persons 634
 - declarations 638-9
 - Draft Statute 635
 - drafting 631, 634-9
 - establishment of court 631-42
 - European Agreement relating to Persons Participating in Proceedings of ECtHR 747
 - European Ministerial Conference on Human Rights 1985 632
 - examination of the case 803-15
 - expenditure 889-90
 - final judgments 849-55
 - Geneva Conventions 641
 - individual applications, right to 632, 636
 - International Court of Justice 632, 635, 637
 - International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 631
 - interpretation 633, 639-42
 - inter-State applications 633
 - jurisdiction 632-5, 639, 641-2, 644
 - natural persons 634
 - new Court 632-3, 639, 661, 670, 700, 701, 889
 - opposition to ECtHR 631-2
 - Optional Court, proposal for 637
 - organs of the Council of Europe, distinguishing ECtHR from 641
 - Parliamentary Assembly 632
 - permanent Court, ECtHR as 639
 - Permanent Court of International Justice 631, 635
 - pilot-judgment procedure 640
 - Preamble 640
 - precedent 46-7, 711, 866
 - premises, move into new 29-30
 - Presidents/Vice-Presidents 27, 673, 681-4, 688-92, 694-5, 709, 843, 846
 - proposals for a court 3, 4, 6-8, 10
 - protocol, proposal for a
 - drafting 632-3
 - Steering Committee for Human Rights 632
 - public order (ordre public) 640
 - public policy 640
 - publication of judgments 851, 855
 - rappoteurs 677
 - rationale for Court, commentary on 634
 - rectification of judgments 849, 852-5
 - reform 632-3, 639
 - revision of judgments 849, 852-4
 - rotation of terms of members of ECtHR and ECommHR 26
 - seat 639, 641
 - specificity of tasks 641
 - Steering Committee for Human Rights 632
 - Strasbourg, seat in 30, 639, 641
 - supervisory role 451, 474-5, 521
 - travel to and from seat 747
 - Universal Declaration of Human Rights 631
 - Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 642
- European Parliament, elections to 1012, 1021
- European Social Charter (ESC)
 - death penalty 1106
 - derogations 587-8, 594, 1106
 - discrimination 556
 - economic, social and cultural rights 23
 - expulsion of aliens, procedural safeguards relating to 1126
 - freedom of assembly and association 484, 499, 506, 515-16, 522
 - marry and found a family, right to 529
 - reporting procedures 898
 - rest days 432
 - trade unions 506, 515-16
 - Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 38
- European Torture Convention 912
- euthanasia 117, 128, 132-3
- Everett, James 360, 558
- evidence
 - admissibility 312, 320-1, 810, 813, 815
 - adverse inferences, drawing 811-14
 - beyond reasonable doubt 810

- evidence (cont.)
- burden of proof 810–12
 - confidentiality 814
 - cooperate, obligation to 812–14
 - delay 813–14
 - disappearances 811
 - discrimination 811
 - documentary evidence 807, 812–14
 - examination of the case 803, 805–15
 - fair trial in criminal proceedings, right to 310–13, 320–1
 - general principles of international law 810
 - government sources 812
 - hearsay 239, 312
 - international human rights organizations, reports of 812
 - life, right to 810
 - national laws 320
 - national security 814
 - new evidence 1154–5
 - private and family life, right to respect for 320
 - probative value 810
 - State responsibility 810
 - telephone tapping 320
 - torture 320–1, 810
 - unlawfully, improperly or unfairly evidence, exclusion of 320–1
- ex officio* or national judges 687–8, 690–4, 1220–1
- examination of the case 803–15
- additional submissions 806
 - admissibility 806
 - amicus curiae* briefs 807
 - Chambers 806–8
 - Committee of Experts 803–4
 - Committee of Ministers 803–4
 - Committees, assignment to 3 judge 805
 - conduct of the examination 805–7
 - Conference of Senior Officials 804
 - consolidating the institutions and further reform 804–5
 - Consultative Assembly 803–4
 - cooperate, obligation to 812–14
 - delegation, investigations by 807–8
 - documentary evidence 807, 812–14
 - drafting 803–5
 - ECommHR 803, 808–9
 - electronic filing 806
 - estoppel 814–15
 - evidence 803, 805–15
 - exhaustion of domestic remedies 807
 - expert witnesses 806–7, 809
 - factual information, documents and other materials, requests for 805–7
 - filing 806
 - filtering and processing applications 805–6
 - friendly settlements 805
 - hearings 808
 - in camera* hearings 806, 808, 814
 - individual applications 805–6, 809, 811–12
 - inquiries, conducting 807
 - interim measures 808
 - interpretation 805–15
 - inter-State applications 806, 811, 814
 - investigations and fact-finding 805, 807–10
 - jura novit curiae* 815
 - national laws, application of 807
 - notice of applications 806
 - on-site visits 807, 808–10
 - oral hearings 806
 - preliminary reviews 805
 - procedural/investigative obligation 812–13
 - public hearings 806
 - record of hearings 806
 - reply, written observations in 806
 - rule of law 814
 - Rules of Court 803, 805–8
 - single judge, assignment to 805
 - time limits 806
 - witnesses 806–10
 - written submissions 806
- exclusion of other means of dispute resolution 907–15
- admissibility criteria 911
 - application of ECHR 907, 911
 - arbitration tribunals 907, 910–11
 - aspects of disputes addressed in other for a 913–14
 - Charter of UN 913
 - Committee of Experts 909–10
 - Committee of Ministers 909–13
 - Conference of Senior Officials 910
 - conflicts of jurisdiction 907–9
 - Consultative Assembly 907–9
 - Council of Europe treaty system 912
 - drafting 907–10
 - ECommHR 914
 - establishment of ECtHR, discussions over 907–11
 - European Convention for the Peaceful Settlement of Disputes (CoE) 912
 - European Torture Convention 912
 - fragmentation 907–8
 - International Court of Justice, demarcation of jurisdiction with 907–10, 912–14
 - International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 912
 - interpretation 907, 911, 912–15
 - inter-State applications 907, 912–15
 - non-European judges, political or philosophical leanings of 907
 - special agreements 914
 - Süd Tirol/Alto Adige, dispute between Austria and Italy over 913
 - Universal Periodic Review 915
- execution of judgments see binding force and execution of judgments
- exhaustion of domestic remedies
- 6-month rule 754, 757, 763
 - actio popularis* 766

- administrative practices consisting of repetitive acts 766
- admissibility 764–9
- advisory opinions 1216
- appeal in criminal matters, right of 1135
- arbitral tribunals 768
- burden of proof 766, 768
- Committees, competence of 703
- consolidation of institutions and reform 31
- constitutions 768–9
- de minimis* principle 785
- declarations 769
- delays 766
- discretionary or extraordinary remedies 769
- drafting 755–8
- ECommHR 765, 767
- effective remedy, right to an 551, 765–6
- estoppel 814–15
- examination of the case 807
- expulsion 1071
- flexibility 764
- formalism 764
- friendly settlements 816
- general principles of international law 757, 767
- Grand Chamber 764–5, 769
- individual applications 754
- International Court of Justice 767
- international remedies 768
- inter-State applications 728–9, 763, 766
- jurisdiction 717
- just satisfaction 835–6
- legislative practices 766
- life, right to 728
- Permanent Court of International Justice 767–8
- purpose of rule 764–5
- ratione materiae* jurisdiction 94
- ratione temporis* jurisdiction 108–9
- subsidiarity 75–6, 765, 807
- time limits 771–2
- existing human rights, safeguards for 902–4
- expedited procedure 293, 542
- expenditure on ECtHR 889–90
 - budget, amount of 890
 - Committee of Experts 889
 - Committee of Ministers 889–90
 - Consultative Assembly 889
 - Council of Europe, responsibility of 889, 890
 - drafting 889
 - interpretation 890
 - jurisdiction, optional declarations on acceptance of 889
 - new court 889
 - ratified ECHR, responsibility of States that have 889
 - salaries and social security contributions of judges 889, 890
 - staff and equipment 889
 - expert witnesses 806–7, 809
- expert witnesses 806–7, 809
- expression, freedom of see freedom of expression
- expropriation see also expropriation, compensation for
 - abuse of rights, prohibition of 621–2
 - conditions provided by law 974–7
 - continuing violations 109
 - cultural property 976–7
 - customary international law 977–8
 - de facto*/constructive expropriation 848, 974–5
 - discrimination 1182–3
 - due process 978
 - general principles of international law 974–5, 977–9
 - margin of appreciation 1183
 - nationality 1183
 - peaceful enjoyment of possessions 621–2, 958, 960, 964–7, 970–9
 - proportionality 976–7
 - public interest 965, 967, 974–8
 - restitution 1183
 - statelessness 109
- expropriation, compensation for
 - amount 978
 - full market value, reimbursement of 976–7
 - general principles of international law 939, 965–7
 - just satisfaction 837–8
 - peaceful enjoyment of possessions 964–7, 974, 976–7
 - reservations 939
- expulsion 1067–74 see also collective expulsion of
 - aliens; deportation; expulsion of aliens, procedural safeguards relating to; extradition
 - activists 608–9
 - admissibility 1071–2
 - arbitrary exile 12, 1068–9, 1071–2
 - child custody disputes 1072
 - citizenship 1072
 - collective expulsion 1068, 1070–1
 - Committee of Experts 1069–71, 1073
 - Consultative Assembly 1068–9
 - death penalty 127, 140–6, 1093
 - declarations 97, 1072, 1073–4
 - denaturalization 1069–70
 - dependence 397–8
 - diplomatic assurances 145–6
 - drafting 1068–71
 - ECommHR 1072, 1073
 - education, right to 998
 - effective remedy, right to an 740–1
 - entry, freedom of 1069–71
 - ethnic cleansing 1067
 - EU law 1071
 - European Convention on Establishment 1071
 - exhaustion of domestic remedies 1071
 - fair trial, right to a 275, 282
 - family life 394–8, 405, 435
 - freedom of movement and migration 1060, 1082
 - General Assembly (UN) 1068
 - Genocide Convention 1067
 - immigration status 396
 - inhuman or degrading treatment 168–9, 740–1

- expulsion (cont.)
 interim measures 244
 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 1068–71
 interpretation 12, 1069, 1071–3
 liberty and security, right to 243–5, 259–60
 life, right to 127, 740–1
 long-term migrants, right to citizenship of 395, 297 manifestly ill-founded applications 1071
 military service 1070
 nationality 1069–70, 1072
 nationals 1068–70, 1072
 no punishment without law 347, 349
 non-nationals 1068
 political activity of aliens, restrictions on 608–9 population transfers 1067–8
 potential victims 743
 private life 396–7
 proportionality 396
 ratification 1073
 ratione loci jurisdiction 95–7
 ratione temporis jurisdiction 1071
 religion or belief, freedom to manifest 434–5
 reservations 1069, 1072, 1073–4 return to country, right to 1068
 statelessness 1071
 terrorism 168
 torture 179
 Universal Declaration of Human Rights 1068–9
 victim status 740–1, 743, 744–5
- expulsion of aliens, procedural safeguards relating to 1126–33
 accessibility of law 1130
 collective expulsion 1130
 Committee of Ministers 1127
 death penalty 1128
 declarations 1132–3
 disappearances 1128
 drafting 1127
 effective remedy, right to an 1126, 1128
 EU law 1126
 European Social Charter 1126 expulsion, definition of 1129–30
 foreseeability of law 1130
 guarantees 1131–2
 in accordance with law, decisions 1130
 inhuman or degrading treatment 395, 1126, 1128
 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 1126, 1131
 interpretation 1127–33
 lawfully resident, meaning of 1128–9
 life, right to 1128
 national security 1132
 nationals 1127
 pending review, expulsions 1132
 private and family life, right to respect for 1126, 1128
 proportionality 1132
 public order 1132
 reasons against expulsion, right to submit 1131
 Refugee Convention 1126, 1127
 representation, right to 1131
 reservations 1132
 reviews by competent authorities 1131–2
 Russia 1130
 torture 395, 1128
- extradition 1069, 1071–2, 1073
 arrest 245–6
 Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU 165
 death penalty 127, 140–6, 165, 1093, 1099–101
 detention/deprivation of liberty 829
 diplomatic assurances 145–6, 1100–1
 disguised extradition 228
 fair trial, right to 274–5, 282
 inhuman or degrading treatment 1100–1
 liberty and security, right to 232, 243–6
 life, right to 127, 140–6
 ratione loci jurisdiction 95–7 terrorist suspects 750, 837
 torture 179, 1100–1
 victim status 745
- extraordinary rendition 96, 145, 793, 809–10, 827, 836–7, 899–901
- extraterritoriality
 abuse of rights, prohibition of 616
 collective expulsion of aliens 1079
 death penalty 140, 1099
 diplomatic protection 105
 effective control over an area 102–3
 expulsion 95–6, 1079
 inhuman or degrading treatment 101, 194–6 legal space 104
 life, right to 140
 ratione loci jurisdiction 95–6, 100–5
 state agent authority and control 101–2
 State responsibility 100–1
- extremism see also totalitarianism
 fascism 372, 445, 519, 525, 726, 942–3, 1095
 freedom of expression 445, 447–8, 463–4
 militant democracy 445, 519–21
- fact-finding see investigations and fact-finding fair trial in criminal proceedings, right to 265–72, 298–321, 1165 see also presumption of innocence
- acquittals 744
 adversarial procedure 310
 age of criminal responsibility 318–19
 appeals 286, 1135
 binding force and execution of judgments 869
 Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU 266, 272 classification of offence 277–8
 collective expulsion of aliens 1075 collective guilt 280
 Committee of Legal Experts 270
 criminal charges, determination of 276–84, 869

- death penalty and right to life 141, 144
 defence, adequate time and facilities for 308–10, 311
 defence in person 310–11 disciplinary offences 278–9, 282–3
 disclosure 310
 discontinuance 281, 286, 292, 299, 303, 305–7
 discrimination 323
 enforcement of judgments 276
Engel criteria 277–9
 equality of arms 288
 evidence 310–13, 320–1
 expulsion, deportation and extradition 282 forfeiture measures 281–2
 hearsay 312
 independent and impartial tribunal 271, 294 information about nature and cause of charge 307–8
 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 265, 316, 318
 interpreters 314–16
 investigation stage, evidence gathered at 310–11, 312
jura novit curiae 815
 legal aid 269, 282, 310–11
 legal assistance 309, 310–11
 military discipline 278
 minimum guarantees 265, 271, 307–21
 miscarriages of justice 267, 319
 nature of offence 277
 oral hearings 289
 plea bargaining 271
 positive obligations 313 presence at trial 316–17
 prisoners 275
 procedural stages 280–2
 public hearings 270, 287–9
 public interest 309–10
ratione temporis jurisdiction 110
 reasonable time, within a 291–3
 reasoned decisions 297–8
 reclassification of offences 310 regulatory offences 283–4
 rule of law 265
 self-incrimination 287, 300–2, 310, 319 severity of penalty 277–8
 silence, right to 319
 substantive criminal law 279–80
 Universal Declaration of Human Rights 265 vulnerable persons 311, 313
 waiver 309, 317
 witnesses, examination of 312–13 fair trial, right to a 264–325 see also fair trial in criminal proceedings, right to access to a court 284–7, 322, 324
 administrative trials 265, 270–1
 arbitrariness 271
 Belgium 288
 Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU 265–6, 272
 civil rights and obligations 265–6, 270–6, 287–8
 Committee of Experts 267
 Committee of Legal Experts 270
 Committee of Ministers 266–70
 competent authority 276
 Conference of Senior Officials 268
 constitutional proceedings 274
 Consultative Assembly 266–7, 270
 damages 276
 delay 109
 disciplinary offences 278–9, 282–3
 discrimination 269, 321–3
 drafting 266–70
 ECtHR 265–6
 elections 274
 entry, right of 275
 equality of arms 288
 errors of law and fact 271
 execution of judgments 276
 expulsion and deportation 275
 extradition 274–5
 fourth instance doctrine 271
 freedom of expression 460, 473–4
 good faith 271
 government employees 274 independent and impartial tribunal established by law 287, 294–6, 321
 individual applications 731
 injunctions 275–6
 inquiries by the Secretary General 899
 interim measures 272, 275–6
 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 267
 legal aid 267, 269, 322
 legal representatives 284, 309, 310–11, 317
 liberty and security, right to 275
 limitation on use of restrictions 625
 military discipline 324–5
 minimum guarantees 265, 271, 307–21 national court decisions, review of 266, 271
 oral hearings 324
 preliminary proceedings 272, 275
 presumption of innocence 271, 298–307, 325
 pre-trial publicity 287
 procedural safeguards 276
 public hearings 287–98, 323, 825–6
 public law proceedings 274 racist or discriminatory attitudes 321–2
 ratione temporis jurisdiction 108–10
 reasonable time, within a 287, 291–3 reasoned decisions/judgments 297–8, 857, 936
 regulatory offences 283–4 remain, right to 275
 reporting restrictions 460
 reservations and declarations 323–6
 rule of law 72, 265, 285–6, 294
 sex discrimination 322–3
 social security benefits and contributions 274

- fair trial, right to a (cont.)
 sovereign immunity 286-7
 speedy determination 276
 State sovereignty 274
 tax assessments 274
 Universal Declaration of Human Rights 265-6
 waiver 271
 witnesses 269-70, 325
 Falkland Islands 928, 1206
 families see crime and family, extension of ECHR to; family life; marry and found a family, right to family life 388-98 see also private and family life, right to respect for
 adoption 394, 407
 American Convention on Human Rights 592
 artificial insemination 389
 biological family, right to know identity of 367
 children parents, relationship with 391-4
 totalitarian states 370
 close family ties 389-91 close relationships falling short of family life 391
 Consultative Assembly 360-1
 de facto family ties 389-90 diversity in family life 389
 drafting 359-61
 expulsion and deportation 394-8, 405, 435
 families, types of 389
 grandparents 389
 illegitimate children 390
 interpretation 367, 375-6, 370, 379, 388-98
 lifestyles 379
 lone parents 389
 marriage
 gender equality 407
 names 375-6, 407
 racial restrictions 360 right to marry and found a family 375, 388, 534
 totalitarian states 360
 migrants 366-7
 minorities 379
 modernization of family law 820
 names 375-6, 407
 natural and fundamental unit of society, family as 361, 388
 natural rights 360
 negative obligations 388
 paternity 390-1
 positive obligations 388
 prisoners 390, 398 private life, dividing line with 366-7
 ratione materiae 389
 reservations 409
 same sex couples 390, 407-8
 siblings 389
 totalitarian states 360-1, 393
 Universal Declaration of Human Rights 388
 fascism 372, 445, 519, 525, 726, 942-3, 1095
 fasting 430 see also hunger strikes
 Fayat, Henri 266, 862
 Ferrari Bravo, Luigi 646 fertility and fertility treatment artificial insemination 389, 739-40
 private life 372-4
 sterilization 183-4, 372, 543
 filtering and processing applications
 ad hoc judges 689
 admissibility criteria 706-7, 760-2
 binding force and execution of judgments 864-5, 872
 caseload 30-1
 Chambers 683, 707
 Committees, competence of 599, 699-704
 de minimis principle 782, 785
 declarations 703-4, 786
 ECommHR 699, 700, 702, 706, 754, 779
 entry into force 14, 30-1, 699, 702, 707
 examination of the case 805-6
 Explanatory Report 14-15, 74-5, 701-3, 680, 683
 friendly settlements 819-22
 Grand Chamber 714
 individual applications 805-6
 interpretation 79
 inter-State applications 806
 judges election of 660, 664
 formations 689-90
 gender balance 664
 number 645
 single judges 689-90, 696-8, 699, 700-2
 term of office 670-1
 jurisdiction 720
 margin of appreciation 79
 merits, decisions on the 706-7
 Plenary Court 680, 683
 Preamble 680, 683, 697
 ratification 14, 30
 registry 675-6
 repetitive applications, expedited procedure for 30
 routine applications 30
 signature and ratification 948, 698
 single-judge formation 689-90, 696-8, 699, 700-2
 third-party intervention 793-4
 travaux préparatoires 79
 final judgments 849-55
 Chambers 841-2, 851
 Committee of Experts 850
 Committees 851
 Conference of Senior Officials 850
 Consultative Assembly 850
 decisions, application to 851 dissemination of judgments 851, 855 documents related to proceedings, publication
 of 851
 drafting 850-1
 general principles of international law 849

- Grand Chamber 847, 851
- International Court of Justice, Statute of 849
- interpretation 841, 849–55
- national courts 109
- ne bis in idem* 849
- no punishment without law 849
- publication of judgments 851, 855
- rectification of errors in decisions and judgments 854–5
- res judicata* 842, 849
- revision of judgments after ECtHR has made error 849, 852–4
- rule of law 849
- Rules of Court 851
- single-judge formation 851
- striking out 851
- fingerprints 384
- Finland 14, 324, 1095, 1148, 1192, 1228
- firearms by State officials, use of 129–31, 148–51
- First World War 118, 413
- fitness to stand trial 318
- Fitzmaurice, Gerald 41, 48, 172, 924
- force, use of see use of force
- forced labour see slavery and forced labour
- foreign nationals see collective expulsion of aliens;
 - expulsion of aliens, procedural safeguards relating to; political activity of aliens, restrictions on
- foreseeability of law see accessibility and foreseeability of law
- forfeiture 281–2, 974 see also confiscation
- formalism 745, 754, 764, 859
- former Yugoslavia see International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia (ICTY)
- Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia see Macedonia
- Foster, John 557
- France
 - abortion 125
 - broadcasting 481, 737
 - Cambodia, ships flagged on 102
 - colonies and overseas territories 916, 921–2, 926–7, 1036, 1162
 - death penalty 140, 1095, 1118–19
 - Declaration of the Rights of Man and Citizen 328, 958
 - declarations 481
 - discrimination 480–1
 - drug enforcement officials 102
 - equality between spouses 1159
 - expulsion 1083
 - freedom of expression 470, 480–1, 618, 926–7
 - habeas corpus* 220, 254
 - Holocaust denial 615
 - hunting rights 973
 - International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 588
 - leave a country, freedom to 1061
 - Mayotte 1159, 1162
 - military discipline 324–5
 - ne bis in idem* 1155
 - New Caledonia 608, 927, 1159
 - no punishment without law 330, 342
 - overseas territories 608–9
 - paternity 390
 - patronymic names 1159
 - political activity of aliens, restrictions on 608–9
 - political parties, funding of 505
 - recidivism 350
 - religious discrimination 579
 - reservations 324–5, 605, 1139, 1140, 1146, 1155, 1159
 - sex offenders register, placement on 346, 348
 - slavery and forced labour 201
 - territorial application 1083, 1162
 - terrorism 617
 - torture 176
 - universal suffrage 1011
 - veils, ban on Islamic 402, 405–6, 437, 743
- Franklin, Benjamin 423
- freedom of assembly and association 483–525
 - abuse of a dominant position 491, 514
 - abuse of rights, prohibition of 615, 617, 620
 - accessibility 510, 523
 - administration of State 490
 - assembly, definition of 494–5
 - autonomous role of Article 11 491–2
 - balancing exercise 491, 494, 513, 516
 - Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU 484
 - children 496
 - chilling effect 500
 - civil society 499
 - collective bargaining 484
 - Committee of Experts 486–8
 - Committee of Legal Experts 490
 - Committee of Ministers 486, 490, 501
 - Conference of Senior Officials 489
 - Consultative Assembly 485–6
 - Council of Europe, aims and principles of 486
 - criminal prosecutions 496
 - culture 500, 503
 - democracy 68, 483, 490–1, 495, 497, 499–500, 503–4, 513–15, 519–21
 - demonstrations/protests 492–8, 514–18, 742
 - derogations 599
 - discrimination 511, 512, 517, 523–5
 - dispersal by police 496–7, 516
 - dissolution 501
 - drafting 484–90
 - economic, social, and cultural rights 499
 - ECtHR, supervisory role of 521
 - elections 515, 518, 1017, 1011
 - ethnic identity 500, 503
 - European Social Charter 484, 499, 506, 515–16, 522
 - foreseeability 510–11, 523
 - freedom of association, definition of 499–508

- freedom of assembly and association (cont.)
 freedom of expression 452, 464, 483, 491-2, 502, 517
 freedom of peaceable assembly, definition of 494-8
 general principles of international law 485
 International Covenant on Civil and Political
 Rights 509
 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights 508, 510
 International Labour Organization 484, 508-9, 515, 522
 interpretation 490-525
 judges 673
 labour relations 483-5, 487, 489-90 legitimate aim, restrictions for a 495, 509, 511-13, 516-17
 limitation on use of restrictions 625
 margin of appreciation 515, 517-18
 militant democracy 519-21
 military service 490, 509
 minorities 491, 494, 514-15, 518, 525
 national security 511-13, 525
 necessary in a democratic society, restrictions which are 509, 512, 513-21
 negative aspects 493, 502
 non-governmental organizations (NGOs), dissolution of 501
 not to join, right 487, 502
 Parliamentary Assembly 484 peaceful assembly, meaning of 495-6
 peaceful enjoyment of possessions 491
 personal autonomy 502
 pluralism 490-1, 500, 503-4, 513
 police 490, 509, 516, 522
 political activity of aliens, restrictions on 607-8
 political parties 484, 499, 503-5, 511-12, 515, 520-1, 525
 political rights 483-5 positive obligation or interference 492-4, 502, 516, 519, 521
 prescribed by law, restrictions which are 509, 510-11, 523
 pressing social need, restrictions for 514-16 prevention of disorder or crime 509, 512
 prior notification 497-8
 private and family life, right to respect for 364, 491
 proportionality 498, 510, 513, 516-17, 523
 protection of legal rights of others 485 public employees, lawful restrictions on 522-3 public morality, public order and public safety 485-6, 489, 509, 511-13 public office 490, 509, 512, 516-17, 522, 524-5 racist or xenophobic ideas 525 recognition of associations 500-1 registration 500, 511
 religion or belief, freedom to manifest 429 religious organizations 499, 501, 511
 reservations 525
 restrictions/limitations 485-6, 490-1, 496-502, 509-23
 riot or insurrection, quelling 152
 rule of law 503, 510 sanctions, nature and severity of 517 secret associations 511
 security measures 497 sexual orientation discrimination 525
 territorial integrity 512
 thought, conscience and religion, freedom of 440, 483, 491, 499, 502, 512
 tolerance, exercise of 498, 513
 trade unions 483-9, 493-4, 499-502, 505-9, 514-16, 522-5
 traffic, disruption of 498
 travaux préparatoires 64
 types of organization 499
 Universal Declaration of Human Rights 483-5, 487-9, 509
 victims 500, 742
 freedom of expression 444-81
 abuse of rights, prohibition of 615, 617-20
 accessibility 469-70
 American Convention on Human Rights 452, 459
 apologies 470
 artistic expression 39, 451, 463-4, 472, 477
 balancing exercise 380, 384-5, 453-4, 480
 Bill of Rights 1688 444
 broadcasting, television, or cinema enterprises, licensing of 466-7
 Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU 445
 civil or public servants 464-5, 476-8
 Committee of Experts 446-9
 Committee of Ministers 446, 450, 460, 462,
 466, 478-9
 Conference of Senior Officials 449
 confidentiality 467, 471, 473
 Consultative Assembly 446-8, 450
 copyright 480
 corporate bodies 741 criminal offences 454, 470-1, 474-6 criticism and insult, distinction between 473 cultural heritage, protection of 472 cultural information, public exchange of 451
 declarations 457, 481
 defamation 472, 476-8, 479
 democracy 68, 445-6, 451-2, 458, 460, 463, 465
 derogations 457
 diplomatic immunity 478
 discretion, exercise of 451, 469
 discrimination 466, 467, 478, 479-81
 drafting 445-50, 466, 473
 duties and responsibilities, notion of 468-9
 ECtHR, supervisory function of 451, 474-5
 elections, right to free 1011, 1016-20, 1025, 1030
 employment 464-5, 469
 expression, definition of 456 extremist ideas 445, 447-8, 463-4

- fair trial, right to a 460, 473-4 fiction, defamation in 477
 foreseeability 469-71
 formalities 467-80
 freedom of assembly and association 452, 464, 483, 491-2, 502, 517
 Freedom of Information Convention (UN) 447
 freedom of movement and migration 468 frontiers, regardless of 466
 general principles of international law 445 gravity of interference 475-6 hate speech 445, 478-80
 injunctions 475
 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 463, 468, 478
 Internet 462-3, 466
 interpretation 450-81
 journalists 454, 458-9, 461-2, 468-70, 473, 477-8
 judges 467-8, 473-4, 673
 juries, publication of deliberations of 461 legal advice, taking 470
 legal persons 455
 legitimate aim/purpose, restrictions for a 451, 467, 471-5 lewd ideas 456
 licensing 445, 466-7
 limitation on use of restrictions 625
 literary and artistic expression 463-4
 margin of appreciation 454, 474, 476
 media 453-4, 457-62, 466-8, 474-7, 480-1
 military service 465
 minorities 450
 national courts 458, 474-5
 national security 448, 467, 471-2
 natural persons 455
 necessary in a democratic society, restrictions which are 474-80
 negative obligations 454, 456-7 novels, defamation in 477
 nudity in public 455
 obscene speech 456
 offenses, shocks or disturbs, speech that 451, 456 opinions, freedom to hold 445-8, 451-3, 455-7, 491 overlap with other rights 452-3
 peaceful enjoyment of possessions 468, 480 penalties 467-80
 photographs 377-8, 461
 pluralism 451, 453, 467, 491
 political activities 375, 607-8 political expression 455-6, 458, 461-4, 474, 476-8, 580
 political parties 491, 503
 positive obligation or interference 453-4, 460, 464
 prescribed by law, restrictions which are 469-71, 474
 press 457-62, 474-5
 pressing social needs 474
 presumption of innocence 460
 prevention of disorder or crime 447-9, 463, 467-8, 471-2
 prior restraint 452
 private and family life, right to respect for 368, 375, 377-8, 380, 452, 460, 468
 propaganda 448
 proportionality 451, 465, 475-7
 protection of legal rights of others 445 public figures 478
 public interest 454, 458-62, 474
 public morality, order and security 445-7, 467-8, 471-3, 476-7 reasons for interference, relative and sufficient 451 receive and impart information, freedom to 445, 451, 457, 467
 religion 412, 423, 440, 467 reputation 458, 465, 469, 471-3, 476
 reservations 481
 restrictions/limitations 445-7, 451, 467-80
 rule of law 445, 460, 470
 safeguards for existing human rights 903
 scope 455-65
 sentencing 454, 475-6
 sexual orientation 915
 style of communication 456
 territorial integrity 448, 450, 467-8, 471-2
 thought, conscience and religion, freedom of 452, 457, 468, 472-3
 tolerance 451, 479
 trade unions 464-5, 469, 471, 473
travaux préparatoires 450
 Universal Declaration of Human Rights 444-8, 451, 464, 466, 468, 478-9 value judgments and statements of fact 477
 whistleblowing 465, 469, 475
 freedom of information 364, 447
 freedom of movement and migration 1052-66
 accessibility of law 1063
 administrative action 1055, 1063
 bail change residence, requirement not to 1058
 conditions 1058
 Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU 1053 checkpoints 1059
 children 745, 1060, 1063
 citizenship 1057
 Cold War 1052-3
 collective enforcement 1046-7
 Commissioner on Human Rights (UN) 1052
 Committee of Experts 13-14, 1046, 1054-6, 1082, 1085, 1087
 Committee of Ministers 14, 1046
 Communist regimes 1052-3
 Consultative Assembly 12-13, 1054-6, 1082, 1085, 1087
 Convention on the Rights of the Child 1060 criminal sanctions 1057-9, 1061-2, 1063 cultural life, right of minorities to their own 12

- freedom of movement and migration (cont.) debts, travel bans to enforce private 1063-4
 declarations 1057, 1065-6, 1082-6 demonstrations, obstructing police at 1058-9 deprivation of liberty 1056-7
 derogations 591-2
 discrimination 1065
 drafting 13, 1046, 1054-6, 1082-3, 1085-7
 emigrate, freedom to 12
 enter one's own country, right to 12, 1054
 entry into force 12, 1087-8
 equality before the law 12, 13 exile, prohibition of arbitrary 12
 Explanatory Report 14, 45
 expulsion 12, 1060
 extraterritoriality 101
 family life 366-7
 foreseeability of law 1063-4
 freedom of assembly and association 496
 freedom of expression 468
 freedom of movement, definition of 1057-9
 general principles of international law 1055
 Grand Chamber 1058
 high seas, interception on the 1083-4 human trafficking 207
 identity checks 1059 identity documents, dispossession of 1058, 1061 imprisonment for debt 591-2 in accordance with the law, restrictions which are 1056, 1059, 1063
 inhuman or degrading treatment 101
 internal travel, restrictions on 1057-9, 1063, 1065
 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 12-13, 18-19, 1046, 1053-6, 1060
 interpretation 1045-7, 1056-65, 1086-8 lawfully resident, persons who are 1057 lawfully within the territory, definition of 1057
 leave a country, freedom to 1055, 1060-5
 legitimate aim/purpose, restrictions for a 1063
 liberty and security, right to 233-4, 243
 marriages of convenience 540
 Migrant Workers Convention 1060 minority rights 12-13
 national minorities 13
 national security 1062, 1063
 nationality 1060
 necessary in a democratic society, restrictions which are 1056, 1058, 1063-5
 'no one' formulation 169
 non-citizens 1057 object and purpose of ECHR 1045-6
 Parliamentary Assembly 1087
 police, requirements to report to 1059
 Preamble 1045-7
 prescribed by law, restrictions which are 1063
 pressing social needs 1064 prevention of entry 243-4
 private life 366-7
 proportionality 1058-9, 1060-1, 1063-5
 public interest 1056, 1062, 1064
 public order (ordre public) 1055-6, 1063 public service, removal of right of equal access to 12-13
 ratione materiae jurisdiction 94
 ratione temporis jurisdiction 1086 recognition as a person before the law, right to 12, 13 relationship of protocol to ECHR 1085-6
 religion or belief, freedom to manifest 434
 reservations 1065
 residence, freedom to choose one's own 12, 1060
 restrictions/limitations 1054-65
 Schengen zone 1053
 signature and ratification 14, 1057, 1065, 1084-8
 stateless persons 1057
 subsidiarity 76
 technology 1052
 territorial application 1081-4
 terrorism 1052
 Universal Declaration of Human Rights 13, 1046, 1053, 1060
 victim status 745
 freedom to manifest religion or belief see manifest religion or belief, freedom to
 friendly settlements 816-23
 admissibility 706-7, 820-3
 caseload 816
 Chambers 707, 819, 821-2
 Committee of Experts 817-18
 Committee of Ministers 818
 compensation, assessment of 817-18, 821 conciliation, use of term 817-18
 Conference of Senior Officials 818
 confidentiality 781, 820, 822-3
 Consultative Assembly 817 decision, striking out by means of a 821-2
 discontinuance 819
 drafting 816-20
 examination of the case 805
 exceptional circumstances 823
 exhaustion of domestic remedies 816
 Grand Chamber, approval by 846
 interpretation 820-3
 inter-State applications 817-18, 820 judgment, striking out by means of a 821-2
 just satisfaction 821
 legitimacy 816
 media 822
 merits, decisions on the 706-7
 notice of applications 821
 Parliamentary Assembly 816
 pilot-judgment procedure 871
 protocols 822
 Registry, assistance of 819, 821
 repetitive cases 820 reports 817 role of ECtHR 821-2

- Rules of Court 819, 821–2
 statistics 821
 striking out 797–8, 801, 819–23
 subsidiarity 816
 terms 871
 unilateral declarations 822, 823
 frivolous, vexatious or mischievous proceedings 6, 272, 754
 Fuerst, Irmgard 946
- Ganshof van der Meersch, Walter-Jean 682
 Garlicki, Lech 144
 Gaza flotilla, obstruction of 723 n.1
 gender see also sex discrimination/gender equality
 marry and found a family, right to 535–7
 transgender persons 173, 380–1, 535–7, 544, 583
 General Assembly (UN)
 aggression, crime of 602
 education, right to 987
 expropriation 978
 expulsion 1068
 genocide 343
 International Court of Justice, requests for opinions from 874, 877
 judges, election of 658
 torture 175, 177
 women, participation of 5
 general principles of international law
 admissibility criteria 754, 756
 burden of proof 810
 Committee of Experts 352–3
 criminal law 332, 336, 350, 351–5
 exhaustion of domestic remedies 764–5, 769
 expropriation 939, 965–7, 974–5, 977–9
 final judgments 849
 freedom of assembly and association 485
 freedom of expression 445
 freedom of movement and migration 1055
 Genocide Convention 352
 interim measures 749
 International Covenant on Civil and Political
 Rights 353
 International Military Tribunal 352–3
 jurisdiction 719
 just satisfaction 834
 lex mitior principle 350
 limitation on use of restrictions 623
 no punishment without law 332, 336,
 350, 351–5
 political activity of aliens, restrictions on 607
 private and family life, right to respect for 359–60
 public hearings 825
 source of international law, as 35, 38, 41–2, 352–3
 summary executions 354
 thought, conscience and religion, freedom of 415
 travaux préparatoires 352–4
 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 35, 38,
 41–2, 45
- genetic features, discrimination on grounds of 573, 1184
 Geneva Conventions 37–8, 158, 345, 601–2, 641, 1104, 1106
 genocide
 Armenian genocide, denial of 479–80
 crimes against humanity 343–4 crimes against peace 343–4 definition 1099 n.3
 denialism 479–80, 615, 619
 discrimination 579
 ethnic cleansing 344, 914, 1067
 expulsion 1067
 forced transfers of minority groups 1067
 freedom of expression 479–80
 general principles of international law 352
 Genocide Convention 1, 39, 352, 1067
 hate speech 479–80
 Holocaust 479–80, 579, 615, 619
 Holocaust denial 479–80, 615, 619
 life, right to 121–2
 no punishment without law 343–4
 war crimes 343–4
- Georgia
 Abkhazia 914, 938, 1190
 collective expulsion of aliens 1078
 cooperate, obligation to 814
 death penalty 1206
 declarations 1009
 ethnic cleansing in South Ossetia and Abkhazia 914
 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 588
 migration control 627
 no punishment without law 341
 peaceful enjoyment of possessions 984
 prisoners' right to vote 1028
 reservations 938, 984
 Russia 627, 814, 914
 territorial application 1190, 1206
 Tskhinvali 938, 1190
 witnesses 809
- Germany
 Basic Law 611
 Berlin Wall 1052
 border guard cases 355
 death penalty 1095, 1112, 1114
 declarations 1008–9, 1141, 1146, 1156
 hijacked aircraft, shooting down 148
 Holocaust denial 479
 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 356
 Land Berlin 1083, 1114
 liberty and security, right to 259–60
 life imprisonment 187
 Nazi regime 202, 329, 342, 353, 479, 619, 1095
 ne bis in idem 1156
 political activity of aliens, restrictions on 609
 prisoners 259–60

- Germany (cont.)
 regional assemblies 1020
 religion 428, 437, 1008-9
 reservations 356, 609, 1112, 1139, 1146
 Saarland 946-7, 949, 1040
 social therapy treatments 259-60
 territorial application 917, 1083, 1114
 terrorism 148
 thought, conscience and religion, freedom of 424, 425-6
- Gibraltar 928, 1007, 1036, 1084, 1162-3, 1206
- Gloerfelt-Tarp, Kirsten 576 n.147
- Grand Chamber see also Grand Chamber, relinquishment of jurisdiction to the; under individual main entries; referral to the Grand Chamber
ad hoc judges 691
 admissibility criteria 707, 763-4 admissibility decisions of Chamber, Grand Chamber as bound by 714
 advisory opinions 691-2, 713, 876, 878-85, 1216, 1219-22
 balanced representation from each Chamber 714
 Committee of Ministers 691-2, 713-14
 Committees, competence of 702
 composition 688-9, 691-2
de minimis principle 782
ex officio, sitting 690, 691-3
 finality 841
 former Court 689
 full-time, sitting 690
 inconsistent judgments 691
 individual applications 713
 interpretation 691-2, 714
 inter-State applications 713
 judicial formations 688-9, 690-2 jurisdiction, confirmation of 713-14
 just satisfaction 834
 lots, drawing 691-2
 manifestly ill-founded applications, rejection of 779 meetings 682 merits, decisions on 707
 nationality 691
 non-compliance, referral of situations of 691
 on-site visits 809-10
 Plenary Court 692, 713
 powers 713-14
 President of the Court 688, 691-2
 reasons for judgments 857-8 refusal to comply 714 refusal of referral 851
 Rules of Court 692, 713
 serious questions affecting interpretation 691, 1216
 session periods 690
 stage of proceedings, rejection of applications at any 785
 striking out 799
 substitute judges 691
 time limits 773, 849
 urgent cases 690
- Grand Chamber, relinquishment of jurisdiction to the 709-12, 713 accelerated procedures 710 additional judges 709
 admissibility 711, 712
 Chambers which have relinquished jurisdiction, judges of 709
 composition of Grand Chamber 709-10
 consolidation of institutions and reform 710, 712
 drafting 709-10
 inadmissible aspects, rejection of 711 inconsistent judgments, risk of 710-11
 interpretation 709-12
 judicial formations 688, 691
 mandatory relinquishment 710-11
 manifestly ill-founded applications 711 merits and admissibility at same time, consideration
 of 712
 objections, duly reasoned 712 own initiative, submission on own 709
 plenary Court 710
 precedent, prohibition on reversing 711
 President of the Court 709 reasons for relinquishment, no requirement for 710, 712 referrals 709, 711
 re-hearings 844-5
 Rules of Court 709-10, 712
 serious questions of interpretation 709-11 settled case law, departure from 710-11
 Vice-President of the Court 709
- grandparents 534
- Greece
 bank deposits 974
 boat, refoulement of migrants arriving by 1079-80
 civil partnerships 407-8
 courts martial, maintenance of extraordinary 599
 death penalty 16, 140, 1095, 1118
 denunciations 598, 599, 603, 942-3
 detention/deprivation of liberty 599
 education 934-5, 1006-7
 employment 374
 exhaustion of domestic remedies 769
 fascist junta 599, 726, 942-3
 Holy Monasteries 737 identity cards showing religion 428
 inter-State applications 725-6
 liberty and security, right to 599
 national security 599
 oaths 428
 Palestine, property rights in 731
 population transfers 1067
 reservations 939, 1006-7
 Roma, discrimination against 1004-5
 signatories 9
 United Kingdom 725

- universal suffrage 1011
- vote, right to 1028
- Greenland 338, 1205
- Grotius, Hugo 201
- guardian, duty to act as a 217
- Guemsey 597, 925, 928, 1007, 1036, 1114, 1206
- guilty pleas 1136-7
- Gypsies 582
- habeas corpus* 220, 253-4
- Hague Convention 1907 602
- Hague Convention on the Peaceful Settlement of International Disputes 1899 647
- Hague Regulations 102
- hate speech 19, 445, 478-80
- Head, Michael 1178
- heads of state 100, 478, 617, 784, 1021-2
- health see medical treatment and health
- health and safety 131-2, 138, 439
- hearings see also oral hearings; public hearings
 - admissibility criteria 763
 - examination of the case 806, 808
 - in camera* 290, 806, 808, 814, 826-7
 - records 806
 - re-hearings 844, 846
 - Rules of Court 808
- hearsay 239, 312
- Hess, Rudolf 98
- Hettier de Boislambert, Claude 966
- hierarchy of rights 119, 164, 592-3, 1199
- High Contracting Parties 88-90, 591, 645
- high seas, vessels on the 102, 1079-80, 1083
- Hitler, Adolf 136, 329
- HIV/AIDS 126, 160, 172, 827
- Hoare, Samuel 364, 818, 910, 931-2
- Holocaust 479-80, 579, 615, 619
- home, respect for the
 - drafting 359-60
 - illegal communities 400
 - interpretation 379, 399-400
 - legitimate expectations 400
 - lifestyles 379
 - margin of appreciation 400
 - nuisance 399-400
 - offices and business premises 399
 - peaceful enjoyment of possessions 399-400, 402
 - private life 399
 - proportionality 400
 - raiding of homes 360
 - sanctity of the home 359-60
 - social policy 400
 - war/armed conflict 400
- holidays 432, 437
- homicide 127-9, 136, 342-3
- homosexuals see sexual orientation
- Hong Kong 922
- honour and reputation, attacks on 358-9, 361-3, 384-5
- housing 20, 63, 81, 304, 400, 407, 544, 959, 979-80
 - see also* rent control; tenancies
- Huber, Max 1068
- Humphrey, John 358
- human dignity, right to
 - Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU 66
 - inhuman or degrading treatment 181, 184, 196, 898
 - Islamic veil 437
 - life imprisonment 187
 - life, right to 1198-9
 - no punishment without law 330
 - racial discrimination 571
- human trafficking 63, 202-3, 207, 209-10, 229
- Hungary
 - access to a court 324
 - communist and socialist movements, symbols of 619
 - freedom of assembly and association 496
 - freedom of expression 455
 - military service 215
 - prisoners' right to vote 1028
 - reservations 324
 - Roma, discrimination against 1004
- hunger strikes 132
- hunting rights 973
- husband and wife see equality between spouses
- Iceland 478, 682, 947, 949, 1040, 1088, 1095, 1148
- identification of perpetrators 387
- identity
 - checks 1059
 - discrimination 381
 - documents
 - dispossession 1058, 1061
 - passports 8, 376, 378, 1058, 1061
 - religious denomination, indicating 428
 - driving licences 378
 - face coverings 405
 - fraud 405
 - passports 8, 376, 378, 1058, 1061
 - private life 374, 375-6, 378-81
 - stereotyping 380
 - thought, conscience and religion, freedom of 420
 - transgender persons 380-1
 - victims 827
- illegitimate children, discrimination against 390, 538, 583, 820
- image 377
- Imbert, Pierre-Henri 1116
- immigration/migrants see freedom of movement and migration
- immunities
 - consular immunity 102
 - diplomatic immunity 100, 102, 478
 - fair trial, right to a 286-7
 - General Agreement on Privileges and Immunities of CofE 680, 892-3
 - heads of State 100

- immunities (cont.)
- international organizations, functionaries of 100
 - judges 891-3
 - no punishment without law 331
 - parliamentary immunities 79, 286, 287
 - Plenary Court 680-1
 - ratione loci* jurisdiction 95, 100, 102-3
 - sovereign immunity 44, 100, 286-7, 478, 554
 - suit, from 747
 - waiver 680
- impartiality see independence and impartiality
- impeachment 617
- imprisonment for debt, prohibition 591-2, 1048-51
- Committee of Experts 1048-50
 - Committee of Ministers 1048
 - Consultative Assembly 1049-50
 - contractual obligations, failure to fulfil 1048-51
 - deprivation of liberty 1049-51
 - drafting 1048-50
 - ECommHR 1050-1
 - International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 12, 592, 1048, 1051
 - interpretation 1050-1
 - negligence 1050
 - Preamble 1046
 - travaux préparatoires* 1049
 - Universal Declaration of Human Rights 1048-9
 - victim status 745
- impunity 139, 192-4, 322, 773
- in accordance with law, decisions which are
- expulsion of aliens, procedural safeguards relating to 1130
 - freedom of movement and migration 1056, 1059, 1063
 - private and family life, right to respect for 402-4
- in camera* hearings 290, 806, 808, 814, 826-7
- incest 82, 381
- inconsistent judgments, risk of 679, 691, 710-11, 844-5
- independence and impartiality
- candidate for election, right to stand as a 1030
 - criminal proceedings 128, 271, 294
 - death penalty and right to life 141
 - elections, right to free 1020
 - independent and impartial tribunal established by law 287, 294-6, 321
- judges
- criteria for judicial office 647-9, 656
 - election 658
 - ex officio* or national judges 693
 - formations 694-5
 - term of office 668, 671, 673
 - liberty and security, right to 249
 - privileges and immunities of judges 891-2
 - rule of law 71
- indigenous people 926, 959
- individual applications 731-51 see also under individual main entries
- abuse of right, prohibition of 780-1
 - admissibility 707, 746-7, 762, 776, 780-1
 - anonymity 746
 - application, use of term 735
 - caseload 27-8, 735
 - chilling effect 747
 - collective enforcement 735
 - Committee of Experts 732
 - Committee of Ministers 732-4, 747
 - communication freely with organs, ability to 747
 - Conference of Senior Officials 732-3
 - Consultative Assembly 732-4
 - content of the application 745-6
 - corporations 736-7
 - decentralized authorities 737
 - declarations 723, 734-5, 751
 - diplomatic protection 731
 - drafting 731-5
 - ECommHR 8, 9-10, 636, 732-3, 735
 - effective exercise of right of application 746-8
 - effective remedy, right to an 731
 - equality of arms 28
 - European Agreement relating to Persons Participating in Proceedings of ECtHR 747
 - examination of applications 748
 - exclusions 734
 - exhaustion of domestic remedies 728
 - fair trial, right to a 731
 - forms 746
 - frivolous and vexatious applications 780-1
 - governmental bodies 737
 - Grand Chamber 735
 - groups of individuals 734-7
 - inhuman or degrading treatment 734
 - interim measures 732, 749-51
 - inter-State applications 723, 724-8, 757
 - languages 746
 - League of Nations 731
 - legal aid 748
 - legal representatives 745-8
 - life, right to 734
 - locus standi* 736-7
 - mandatory, as 725
 - merits, decisions on the 707
 - no punishment without law 734
 - non-governmental organizations 734-7, 745, 748
 - optional clause 632, 734
 - opt-out clause 734
 - peaceful enjoyment of possessions 731
 - Permanent Court of International Justice 731
 - petition, use of term 735
 - political interests 781
 - post, application must be submitted by 745
 - powers of attorney 745
 - Preamble 735
 - press or television interviews 781
 - pressure to withdraw or modify complaints 747
 - prisoners 747-8

- protocols 735
- public corporations 737
- publicity or propaganda motive 781
- ratification 735
- reservations 939
- slavery and forced labour 734
- state monopolies 737
- statements of violations 746
- victim status 737-45
- vulnerable applicants 747-8
- written applications 745
- Ingushetia 1065
- inhuman or degrading treatment, prohibition of
 - absolute right, as 164, 168-9
 - admissibility 707, 773
 - age of criminal responsibility 318
 - assisting in suicide, prosecution of person 172
 - burqas or veils, criminal sanctions for wearing 173
 - common heritage 70
 - corporal punishment 170, 180, 188-9, 191
 - corporate bodies 741
 - courtroom, incarceration in metal cages in 185
 - criminal justice 185, 192-4
 - cruel, use of term 164, 167-8, 180
 - death penalty 11, 15, 16, 47, 142-5, 186-7, 190-1, 434, 1094
 - definition 180-1
 - deprivation of liberty 182
 - derogations 168-9, 592
 - detention/deprivation of liberty 169-70, 173-4, 180-6, 197
 - deterrence 183
 - disappearances 137, 171, 193
 - discrimination 177, 192-3, 196-8, 563-4, 1178
 - domestic violence 192, 198
 - drafting 180
 - environment 172
 - expulsion or refoulement 95-6, 168-9, 395, 740-1, 1126, 1128
 - extraterritoriality 194-6
 - extreme punishments 186-91
 - free movement and migration 101
 - gender reassignment surgery, difficulty in obtaining 173
 - human dignity 66-7, 181, 184, 196
 - impunity 192-4
 - individual applications 734
 - inhuman or degrading, definition of 180-1
 - intention 180-1, 191
 - interim measures 750
 - journalists 461
 - ius cogens* 180
 - life imprisonment 187-8
 - life, right to 47, 118, 137-8, 142-5, 157, 164, 169, 434
 - margin of appreciation 182
 - medical treatment 174, 183-6
 - merits, decisions on the 707
 - military, expulsion of homosexual persons from the 172-3
 - no punishment without law 110, 349
 - private and family life, right to respect for 171-3
 - positive obligations 191-4, 197
 - procedural/investigative obligation 191-4, 773
 - proportionality 182-3, 194
 - public protection 183
 - punishment 182-3, 186-91, 194
 - racial discrimination 192-3, 197-8
 - rape 175-6, 576
 - rehabilitation 183
 - reservations 198
 - severity threshold 169, 171-6, 196, 563-4
 - sexual orientation 584
 - standard of proof 169
 - State agents 172, 191-2
 - sterilization of Roma women 372
 - third-party intervention 792
 - threshold of application 169, 171-6, 196
 - torture 101, 169, 174-80
 - treatment or punishment, definition of 182-4
 - Universal Declaration of Human Rights 180
 - victims 169-71
 - war/armed conflict 157
- injunctions 275-6, 475
- innocence, presumption of see presumption of innocence
- inquiries by the Secretary General 897-901
 - all State party, request directed to 898
 - care, children and young persons in 899
 - Committee of Experts 897-8
 - Committee of Senior Officials 898
 - compensation, right to 899
 - Consultative Assembly 897-8
 - detention sites relating to CIA activities, secret 899-900
 - discretion 898
 - drafting 897-8
 - fair trial procedures 899
 - implementation of ECHR, requests for States to furnish explanation of effective 897-901
 - interpretation 898-901
 - reporting procedures 898
 - scope 899
 - single State party, request directed to 898
 - time limits 900
- institutions, consolidating the see consolidating the institutions and further reforms
- intellectual property 480, 959-60, 971
- Inter-American Court of Human Rights (IACtHR) 139, 643, 655, 693, 874
- interception of communications see surveillance
- interest 837
- interim measures
 - binding upon States, as 749-50
 - Chambers 749
 - ECommHR 749

- interim measures (cont.)
- examination of the case 808
 - expulsion 244
 - fair trial, right to a 272, 275-6
 - general principles of international law 749
 - individual applications 732, 749-51
 - inhuman or degrading treatment 750
 - International Court of Justice 749, 914
 - liberty and security, right to 244
 - life, right to 750
 - objective impediments with compliance, onus to show 751
 - private and family life, right to respect for 750
 - Rules of Court 749
 - single-judge formation 690
- Interlaken Conference 31, 652, 658, 782
- internal travel, restrictions on 1057-9, 1063, 1065
- international bill of rights 1-2, 5-6, 61, 546, 776
- International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination 413, 556, 566-7, 577, 914, 987, 1060, 1175-6
- International Court of Justice
- admissibility 705, 776
 - advisory opinions 874, 877-8
 - Charter of UN 874
 - declarations 913
 - dissenting opinions 887
 - ECtHR
 - competition with 635
 - establishment 632, 635, 637
 - ex officio* or national judges 693
 - exclusion of other means of dispute resolution 907-10, 912-14
 - exhaustion of domestic remedies 767
 - final judgments 849
 - gender balance 664
 - general principles of international law 352-3, 719
 - genocide 344
 - interim measures 749
 - inter-State applications 723-5, 912-13
 - judges
 - criteria for office 655
 - dismissal 670
 - election 658
 - gender balance 664
 - number 643
 - privileges and immunities 891
 - term of office 668
 - jurisdiction 716, 719, 720
 - merits, decisions on the 705
 - optional clause 632
 - overlapping jurisdiction 623
 - pacta sunt servanda* 866
 - ratification 913
 - ratione loci* jurisdiction 937
 - reasons for judgments 857
 - referrals 724
 - revision of judgments 852
 - Rules of Court 684
 - source of international law, Statute as 39
 - Statute of the International Court of Justice see Statute of the International Court of Justice
 - torture 164, 179
 - victim status 741
 - Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 40-4
 - war/armed conflict 154, 156
- International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights see also under individual main entries
- concordance with ECHR 18-19, 1125
 - derogations 587, 592-6, 599-601, 603-4, 1051, 1155
 - entry into force 18, 1125
 - hate speech 463, 468, 478
 - hierarchy of rights 593
 - individual applications 21
 - language 1179
 - marriage 1179
 - minorities 581
 - no punishment without law 330, 343, 351-2, 356
 - Optional Protocol in individual petitions 61
 - person, right to recognition as a 592
 - political activity of aliens, restrictions on 609
 - Preamble 59, 61
 - residence 1179
 - safeguards for existing human rights 902
 - social benefits, entitlement to 1179
 - Universal Declaration of Human Rights 59, 61
 - war/armed conflict 601
- International Covenant on Economic, Social, and Cultural Rights
- education, right to 995-1006
 - Optional Protocol in individual petitions 61
 - peaceful enjoyment of possessions 959
 - Preamble 59, 61
 - thought, conscience and religion, freedom of 412
 - trade unions 508
 - Universal Declaration of Human Rights 59, 61
- International Criminal Court (ICC) and Rome Statute
- access to documents 828
 - age limits of judges 655
 - aggression, definition of 602
 - appeals 1134
 - disappearances 136
 - gender balance 664
 - interpreters 315
 - inter-State applications 723
 - judges
 - election 664
 - gender balance 664
 - term of office 668
 - lex mitior* principle 350
 - standard of proof 123
 - State responsibility 98-9
 - superior orders defence 341-2
 - thought, conscience and religion, freedom of 424

- UN Security Council, triggering of prosecutions to 723
- war/armed conflict 345, 602
- International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda 98, 658
- International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia
 - age limits 655
 - appeals 1134
 - armed conflict, definition of 594–5
 - completion strategy 99
 - Dayton Agreement 99
 - genocide 344
 - judges
 - dismissal 668
 - election 658
 - term of office 668
 - jus cogens* 179
 - life, right to 157–8
 - parole 260
 - superior orders defence 342
 - war crimes 99
- International humanitarian law 37–8, 158, 345, 588, 601–2, 641, 1104, 1106
- International Labour Organization
 - Committee on Freedom of Association 777
 - Forced Labour Convention No 29 1930 202, 213–16
 - freedom of assembly and association 484, 508–9, 515, 522
 - freedom of expression 464, 473
 - Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention 959
 - League of Nations 464
 - Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention 982
 - trade unions 508, 515
- International Law Commission Draft Articles on State Responsibility 101, 837, 868
- International Military Tribunal
 - Charter 202
 - Control Council Law No 10 202
 - crimes against humanity 343–4, 354
 - death penalty 140, 1094–5
 - derogations 602
 - detention facilities 98
 - general principles of international law 352–3
 - judges, election of 658
 - no punishment without law 329–30, 331, 352–4
 - peace, crimes against 329, 343–4
 - Charter 354
 - superior orders defence 341
 - war crimes 343–4
- International Military Tribunal for the Far East (the Tokyo Tribunal) 353
- international organisations see also particular organisations
 - immunity 100
 - ratione personae* jurisdiction 105–6
 - State responsibility 97–9
- Internet
 - defamation 387
 - employees, use of email and Internet by 387
 - freedom of expression 462–3, 466
 - hyperlinks 463
 - identification of perpetrators 387
 - private and family life, right to respect for 463
 - social media 359
- interpretation 8, 33–50 see also under individual main entries; Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties
 - amendment mechanisms 49
 - Committee of Ministers 905–6
 - Committees, competence of 701–3
 - consistency and harmony 47
 - constitutional interpretation 48, 70
 - death penalty 47, 49
 - declarations 1009
 - dynamic and evolutive interpretation 47–9
 - ECtHR 33–48
 - effectiveness, principle of 49–50
 - ejusdem generis* interpretation 572
 - judicial law-making 48–9
 - literal, historical interpretation 33
 - living instrument principle 48
 - maintenance and further realisation, meaning of 66
 - Permanent Court of International Justice 33
 - personal prejudices 33
 - policy orientations 33
 - Preamble 47–8
 - precedent 46–7
 - principle of interpretation, as 614–15
 - protocols 49
 - purposive/teleological interpretation 34
 - restrictive interpretation 48
 - rules and principles 33–4
 - safeguards for existing human rights 903–4
 - strict interpretation 34
 - travaux préparatoires* 34
 - Universal Declaration of Human Rights 47–8
 - whole, reading as a 47
- interpreters 314–16
- inter-State applications 723–9 see also under individual main entries
 - acceptance of mechanism, no requirement for 724–5
 - administrative practices 727–9
 - admissibility 706–7, 726–9, 757, 762–3, 776
 - collective enforcement 725, 727
 - Committee of Experts 724
 - compromis* 724
 - Conference of Senior Officials 724
 - Consultative Assembly 724
 - declarations, no requirement for 724
 - delays 766
 - diplomatic protection 725–6
 - drafting 723–5
 - ECommHR 9, 723–5, 727–8

- inter-State applications (cont.)
 - ECtHR, establishment of 633
 - erga omnes* obligations 725–6
 - ex officio* or national judges 693
 - exhaustion of domestic remedies 728–9
 - individual applications 723, 724–8, 757
 - interim measures 729
 - interpretation 725–9
 - investigations and fact-finding 807–9
 - just satisfaction 726
 - life, right to 728
 - manifestly ill-founded applications 727
 - merits, decisions on the 706–7
 - Permanent Court of International Justice 725
 - public order, enforcement of 725–6
 - ratification 723
 - Rules of Court 729
 - special agreement, cases brought by 724
 - substantially the same, matters which are 775
 - Universal Periodic Review 915
- investigations and fact-finding
 - ECommHR 634, 808–9
 - examination of the case 805, 807–10
 - fair trial in criminal proceedings, right to 310–11, 312
 - individual applications 809
 - interpreters 314–15
 - inter-State applications 807–9
 - national courts, deference to 807
 - Rules of Court, Annex to 807–8
- investigative duty see procedural/investigative obligation
- Iraq
 - death penalty 190–1, 1101
 - life, right to 144, 190, 750
 - state agent authority and control 101–2
 - territorial application 923
- Ireland
 - abortion 81, 125, 373
 - age of criminal responsibility 318
 - broadcasting interviews with Sinn Fein, restrictions on 617
 - Constitution 540–2
 - death penalty 140, 1095
 - declarations 1006, 1073
 - derogations 598, 599, 603
 - detention without trial 599
 - ECommHR 808–9
 - expulsion 1073
 - extradition 1073
 - family law, modernization of 820
 - friendly settlements 820
 - home schooling 1006
 - illegitimate children 820
 - legal aid 324
 - liberty and security, right to 621
 - marriage, dissolution of 541
 - on-site visits 809
 - reservations 324
 - terrorist suspects 598
 - torture 175, 177
- Islam
 - adoption (kefala) 394
 - circumcision 430
 - education 1003
 - headscarf/veil 402, 437, 439, 743, 848
 - Islamophobia 619
 - political parties not based in Islam, call for ban on 619
 - thought, conscience and religion, freedom of 413
 - victim status 742
- Isle of Man, corporal punishment in 70, 188–9, 926–7, 1007
- Israel
 - abuse of rights, prohibition of 619
 - derogations 588
 - exist, right to 619
 - Gaza flotilla, obstruction of 723 n.1, 899 n.1
 - Geneva Conventions 158
 - international humanitarian law 158
 - life, right to 158
 - Palestine 158, 731
 - Red Cross 158
- issue estoppel see ne bis in idem
- Italy
 - assisted pregnancies 373
 - Austria 913
 - boat, refoulement of migrants arriving by 1079–80
 - child abduction 393
 - colonies 920–1
 - Constitution 769, 1073
 - crucifixes in classrooms 433, 1003
 - death penalty 1095
 - declarations 1973, 1141, 1156
 - discrimination 524–5
 - expulsion 1071–3, 1073
 - flag, violations on vessels carrying 102
 - freedom of assembly and association 501, 511–12, 517, 524–5
 - freedom of expression 470
 - HIV, contamination with 160
 - inter-State applications 725–6
 - Masons 512, 517, 524–5
 - military service 215
 - monarch, expulsion of 1071–2, 1073
 - ne bis in idem* 1156
 - prisoners 398, 404
 - quotas for professional accreditation 998
 - regulatory offences 284
 - rescue operations 102
 - reservations 933–4, 1139
 - secret associations 511
 - Somaliland 920–1
 - Süd Tirol/Alto Adige, dispute between Austria and Italy over 913
 - vagrants, detention of 243
- Izmir High Level Conference 2011 31, 750, 847

- Jacobs, Francis 623
 Jaquet, Gérard 557
 Jehovah's Witnesses
 custody disputes 579-80
 education 1004
 employment 374-5
 inhuman or degrading treatment 196-7
 profession, freedom of 568-9
 religion or belief, freedom to manifest 430, 434, 435, 436
 thought, conscience and religion, freedom of 425, 426, 440-1
 Jersey 597, 925, 928, 1036, 1114, 1206
 jewellery, wearing 439
 Jews
 anti-Semitism 479, 619
 circumcision 430
 elections, right to free 1031
 freedom of assembly and association 519
 Holocaust 479-80, 579, 615, 619
 marriage 544
 thought, conscience and religion, freedom of 413, 432, 437 journalists, freedom of expression of criticism, extent of acceptable 477-8 defamation 478
 due diligence 458
 duties and responsibilities, notion of 468-9 ethics 458
 exaggeration and provocation 458
 harassment 461
 inhuman or degrading treatment 461 privilege 459
 public interest 459, 461-2
 punishment 454, 473
 sources, confidentiality of 459, 470 judges see also competence of single judges; election of judges; judges of ECtHR, number of; judicial formations
 ad hoc judges 687, 689, 691, 892
 age 31, 583-4, 650, 654-5, 670-4
 appointment by the executive or legislature 295 Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary (UN) 294
 candidate for election, right to stand as a 1030 career prospects after office, maintenance of 673
 casual vacancies 671
 definition 474
 dialogue 26, 31-2, 1213, 1220, 1225
 dismissal 294, 668, 670, 672, 681 freedom, independence from the 294-5
 freedom of assembly and association 511
 freedom of expression 467-8, 473-4 freedom of expression and impartiality 287, 294-6, 321, independent and impartiality 467-8, 473-4 investigations 807-8
 judicial law-making 48-9
 list of candidates 877, 885
 Masons, as 511
 national judges 703
 nationality 644-8, 659, 686-8, 691, 698
 non-European judges, political or philosophical leanings of 907 personal convictions 295
 precedence 673-4
 privileges and immunities 891-3 resignation 672 retirement 31, 672
 rotation 670
 salaries and social security contributions of judges 294, 673, 889, 890
 secret associations 511 security of tenure 294
 separation of powers 294-5
 terms of office 294, 668-74
 withdrawal of judges, existence of rules for 296 working conditions 672-3
 judges, number of 643-6
 African Court on Human and Peoples' Rights 643
 Committee of Experts 643-4
 Committee of Ministers 644-5
 Conference of Senior Officials 644
 drafting 643-5
 ECommHR, procedure for appointments to 645
 Grand Chamber 709-10
 High Contracting Parties, use of term 645
 Inter-American Court of Human Rights 643
 International Court of Justice 643
 interpretation 645-6
 nationality, more than one judge with 644-6 number of States Parties, equivalent to 643-5
 Parliamentary Assembly 645
 routine processing 643 judgments and decisions see also binding force and execution of judgments; final judgments
 appeals 841
 Chambers 841-2
 contents, guidance on 859
 definition 842
 dissenting opinions 781-2, 857-9, 887, 1224
 drafting 841
 finality 841-2
 Grand Chamber, referrals to 841 inconsistent judgments, risk of 679, 691, 710-11, 844-5
 interpretation 841-2
 pronouncement/publication 288-9, 290-1, 825
 reasons 857-9
 res judicata 842
 revisions 841, 842, 847, 849, 852-4
 striking out 797-8, 821-2
 judicial formations 686-95
 ad hoc judges 687, 689, 694-5
 case management 686
 caseload 686, 688
 Chambers 686-9, 690-1

judicial formations (cont.)

- Committee of Experts 687
- Committee of Ministers 688
- Committees
 - filtering and processing applications 30
 - full-time, sitting 690
 - interpretation 690
 - President of the Section 690
 - Sections 690
 - term of office 690
- composition 686
- Conference of Senior Officials 687
- Consultative Assembly 687
- Draft Statute 687
- drafting 687-9
- enlargement 688
- ex officio* or national judges 687-8, 690, 692-4
- excusal 695
- filtering and processing applications 30
- Grand Chamber
 - ad hoc judges 691
 - advisory opinions, requests for 691-2
 - authorization of referrals 692
 - Committee of Ministers, referrals by 691-2
 - composition 688-9, 691-2
 - former Court 689
 - full-time, sitting 690
 - ex officio*, sitting 690, 691-2
 - inconsistent judgments, risk of 691
 - interpretation 691-2
 - judges of Chamber that relinquished jurisdiction 688
 - lots, drawing 691-2
 - nationality 691
 - non-compliance, referral of situations of 691
 - Plenary Court 692
 - President of the Court 688, 691-2
 - referrals following judgments by Chambers 691-2
 - relinquishment of jurisdiction to 688, 691
 - Rules of Court 692
 - serious questions affecting interpretation 691
 - session periods 690
 - size 688-9
 - substitute judges 691
 - urgent cases 690
 - Vice-President of the Court 688, 691-2
- incompatible professional activities 695
- independent and impartial tribunal 694-5
- interpretation 689-95
- nationality 687
- number of judges 686-8
- Parliamentary Assembly 689
- Plenary Court, relinquishment of jurisdiction to 688
- rapporteurs, assistance from 690
- recusal 695
- reserve list 689
- routine applications 30
- Rules of Court 688, 690, 694
- session periods 690
- single-judge formation 28-30, 689-90, 694-702, 707, 763, 779, 805, 851
- size of chambers 686-9
- substitute judges 691
- travaux préparatoires* 688
- urgent cases 690
- Jungwiert, Karel 627
- jura novit curiae* 721, 815
- juries
 - directions 298
 - publication of deliberations 461
 - reasoned decisions 297-8
 - self-incrimination 301
 - sex discrimination 217, 566
 - slavery and forced labour 216, 217
- jurisconsults 647-8, 651-2
- jurisdiction of ECtHR 715-22 see also Grand Chamber, relinquishment of jurisdiction to the
 - admissibility 93, 705, 707, 721-2, 778-9
 - advisory opinions 884-5
 - applicable law 719-20
 - Committee of Experts 717-18
 - Committee of Ministers 715, 717, 720
 - Consultative Assembly 716-17
 - Conference of Senior Officials 718
 - consent to jurisdiction 721
 - consolidating the institutions and further reform 719, 720
 - Consultative Assembly 719
 - declarations of acceptance 692
 - definition of jurisdiction 715
 - denial of justice, notion of 716-17
 - disputes about jurisdiction 721-2
 - dissolution of States 93
 - drafting 715-19
 - ECommHR 718-22
 - ECtHR, establishment of 632-5
 - estoppel 93
 - executive acts 715
 - exhaustion of domestic remedies 717
 - general principles of international law 719
 - Grand Chamber 713-14
 - individual applications 639
 - International Court of Justice, Statute of 716, 719, 720
 - interpretation 633, 641-2, 718-22
 - jura novit curiae* doctrine 721
 - judicial acts 715
 - legislative acts 715
 - merits, decisions on the 705, 707
 - more than one State, violations by 93
 - obligation to respect human rights 84, 92-112
 - optional clause 632, 637, 644
 - optional declarations 889
 - personal jurisdiction 720

- Plenary Court 688, 719–20
- protocols, interpretation of 721
- ratione loci* jurisdiction 84, 93, 95–105, 720, 937–8
- ratione materiae* jurisdiction 84, 93–5, 107, 389, 720–1, 778–9, 934, 1106
- ratione personae* jurisdiction 84, 93, 105–7, 720, 778
- ratione temporis* jurisdiction 93, 107–12, 720, 772, 778, 935
- succession to ECHR 720
- supervisory jurisdiction 639
- universal jurisdiction 102
- victims 93
- Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 719
- voting on decisions 859
- jus ad bellum* 156, 601
- jus cogens* 44, 164, 179–80, 328, 593
- jus in bello* 156, 602
- just satisfaction 830–9
 - administrative action 830
 - binding force and execution of judgments 867, 871
 - causal link 836
 - Chambers on admissibility and merits, decisions by 707
 - Committee of Experts 831, 834–5
 - Committee of Ministers 832–3
 - compensation 830, 832–9
 - Conference of Senior Officials 832
 - Consultative Assembly 830–3, 835
 - death of applicants 853
 - definition 830
 - diplomatic protection 834–5
 - drafting 830–3
 - exhaustion of domestic remedies 835–6
 - friendly settlements 821
 - general principles of international law 834
 - Grand Chamber 834
 - internal law of High Contracting Party involved, meaning of 835–6
 - interpretation 833–9
 - inter-State applications 726, 834
 - invalid, substitution for declarations that national law is 830
 - just satisfaction, definition of 836–9
 - national laws 835–6
 - national sovereignty 835
 - penal action 830
 - punitive damages 839
 - protocols 839
 - reparations 830, 832–9
 - repeal, cancellation or amendment of acts 830
 - restitutio in integrum* principle 837–8
 - systemic violations 830
 - travaux préparatoires* 834
 - Universal Declaration of Human Rights 830
 - victim status 738
- justice and peace 66–8
- Justinian, Digest of 220
- Kabardino-Balkaria 1065
- Karpas peninsula in northern Cyprus 835, 838
- Katyn massacre in Soviet Union 139, 171
- Kazakhstan 146, 1100
- Keller, Helen 439, 646
- Kelsen, Hans 329–30
- Kleffner, Jann 55
- Koestler, Arthur 1091
- kompetenz-kompetenz* 884
- Kosovo, peacekeeping in 106
- Kraft, Ole Bjorn 558
- Kurds 157, 401, 453, 464, 471–2, 598, 739, 998
- Lagergren, Gunnar 69
- languages
 - advisory opinions 1217, 1223, 1224
 - Copenhagen Document of CSCE 1023
 - Council of Europe Declaration 1023
 - customary international law 46
 - defence, adequate time and facilities for preparation of 46
 - delay 46
 - discrimination 555–6, 558–61, 579, 583, 600
 - education 579, 992, 998–1000
 - elections, right to free 1023–4
 - European Charter for Minority or Regional Languages 581, 1024
 - Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities 1024
 - fluency in official languages 652–3
 - individual applications 746
 - interpreters 314–16
 - judicial office, criteria for 652–4
 - minorities 13, 22, 998, 999, 1023–4
 - official languages 746, 851, 855
 - prisoners, correspondence of 401
 - private and family life, right to respect for 1000
 - publication of judgments 851, 855
 - Roma 1005
 - translations 401
 - Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 35, 45–6
- Lannung, Hermod 13, 22, 558–9, 562, 576 n.147, 920, 1049, 1069, 1082
- Latvia 140, 215, 375–6, 434, 584, 984
- Lauterpacht, Hersch 5, 49, 158, 528
- law, definition of 336–8
- Layton, Walter (Lord Layton) 56, 360–1, 530–1, 636, 960
- League of Nations 329, 464, 731, 874
- Lebanon 98, 222, 328, 658, 668
- left alone, right to be 358
- legal aid 249, 267, 269, 282, 310–11, 322, 748
- legal certainty see no punishment without law
- legal personality 106, 379, 440, 501, 736
- legal representatives/profession
 - disbarment 976
 - disciplinary measures 283

- legal representatives/profession (cont.)
 fair trial, right to a 284, 309, 310–11, 317
 individual applications 745–8
 legal aid appointed counsel 311 right to legal assistance 25
 slavery and forced labour 217
 special advocates 257
 legal secretaries (law clerks) 675
 legality, principle of see no punishment without law legitimate aim/purpose, restrictions for a see also under individual main entries
 legitimate expectations 340, 400, 969, 1129
 Leuprecht, Peter 906
lex mitior principle 330, 350–1, 904
 liberty and security, right to 219–63
 abuse of rights, prohibition of 621 administrative detention 242, 262
 appeals 236, 255–7
 arbitrariness 220–1, 223, 226, 231–6, 239
 arrest 221, 223–4, 227, 234, 237–9, 243–6, 254, 257–9
 asylum seekers 243
 bail 250–1, 253
 burden of proof for release 252
 cell, confinement to 228
 Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU 220–1 coercion 226–7
 collective expulsion of aliens 1075
 Committee of Experts 221–6, 242
 Committee of Legal Experts 226
 Committee of Ministers 221, 224–6
 compensation, right to 110, 224–6, 257–9, 1143 competent legal authority 238, 240–1, 248–50
 conditional release 245
 conditions of detention 232
 Conference of Senior Officials 225
 Consultative Assembly 221–2
 conviction, detention after 236
 criminal justice 221–7, 235–40, 245–53, 261 deception 232–3
 derogations 37, 588, 600
 delay 234
 deportation 233–4, 243–5, 259–60 deprivation of liberty, what amounts to 226–7
 disappearances 229
 disciplinary measures 228, 235, 260–1
 discretionary life sentences 256
 discrimination 259–60
 drafting 221–6, 245
 drunks/alcoholics 222–3, 241–2
 due diligence 234
 duration of deprivation of liberty 227, 230–1, 234, 237, 262
 entry, prevention of 243–4
 exceptions 226
 exile and other measures 220–1, 223
 expulsion 96, 243–5, 259–60 extension of time in detention 230
 extradition 96, 228, 232, 243–6
 fair trial, right to a 275 foreign courts, orders imposed by 235
 Geneva Conventions 37, 641
 good faith 232–3, 243
 grounds for detention 234–44
 guarantees to appear for trial 253
 habeas corpus 220, 253–4
 human trafficking 229
 immigration 233–4, 243
 indefinite detention 231, 239
 independence and impartiality 249
 indeterminate sentences 259
 infectious diseases 241
 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 244, 250
 internment 235, 260
 interpretation 226–61
 judicial review 254, 262
 lawfulness 229–33, 239, 244, 254–6
 legal aid 249
 life sentences 256
 limitation on use of restrictions 625–7
 mandatory life sentences 256
 medical reasons, detention for 220, 227–8, 234, 241–3, 245
 mental disabilities 220, 227–8, 234, 241–3 military discipline, reservations on 260–1 minors 240–1, 251, 261
 national laws 229–33
 national security 234, 257
 no punishment without law 231–2, 258
 non-compliance with a court order or legal obligation 236–8
 objective factors 227
 organized crime 239 parole, right to automatic 259–60 physical liberty 226–8 place of detention 232 political motivations 626
 positive obligations 228–9
 post-conviction detention 235–6
 presumption of innocence 250, 257
 pre-trial detention 251
 preventive detention 235
 prisoners 228, 259–60, 275
 procedural fairness 254–5
 procedural/investigative obligation 229 procedure prescribed by law 234 prompt appearance before judicial authorities 246–50
 proportionality 238–9, 260
 provisional measures 244 provisional release 250
 public interest 233
 punitiveness 237–8
 reasonable suspicion 238–9, 249, 252, 254
 reasonableness 238–9

- reasons, duty to give 224, 233, 244–6
- release pending trial 250–3
- remedies 257
- reservations 260–2
- restrictions on freedom of movement 226
- reviews 230, 248–50, 254–7, 262
- rule of law 247, 254
- scope of application 226–8
- security of person, definition of 228–9
- slavery and forced labour 205
- social reasons, for 220, 227–8, 234, 241–3
- stop and search 226–7
- terrorism 239, 588
- travaux préparatoires* 245
- trial within a reasonable time or release pending trial 250–3
- Universal Declaration of Human Rights 220–5, 228
- unsound mind, persons of 220, 227–8, 234, 241–3
- vagrants 220, 222–3, 243
- Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 36–7
- vulnerable persons 229
- wartime 36–7, 235
- wrongful convictions, compensation for 110, 1143
- licensing
 - business activities, to 973
 - freedom of expression 445, 466–7
 - peaceful enjoyment of possessions 973
- Licthenstein
 - age of criminal responsibility 318
 - death penalty 1095–6
 - declarations 1141, 1156
 - family life 409
 - homosexuality, criminalization of 408–9
 - illegitimate children, status of 409
 - ne bis in idem* 1156
 - private and family life, right to respect for 408–9
 - public hearings 323
 - reservations 161, 323, 408–9, 934, 1139
 - self-defence 161
 - women, status of 409
- life imprisonment
 - death penalty, replacement of 349–50
 - discretionary life sentences 256
 - human dignity 187
 - inhuman or degrading treatment 187–8
 - liberty and security, right to 256
 - mandatory life sentences 256
 - no punishment without law 336–7
 - preventive detention 188
 - reviews 187
- life, right to 117–61 see also armed conflict and right to life; death penalty and right to life
 - abortion 81–2, 117, 124–5
 - absolute right, as 118
 - accountability 135, 137
 - beneficiaries of right 124–6
 - burden of proof 123
 - Chambers on admissibility and merits, decisions by 707
 - Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU 119
 - Committee of Experts 120–1
 - Committee of Ministers 121
 - Conference of Senior Officials 121
 - constitutions 118
 - Consultative Assembly 119–20
 - Council of Europe 124
 - criminal justice 111, 127–9, 134–6
 - death penalty 117, 120, 122, 127, 140–6, 1091–2, 1094, 1197–202
 - derogations 592, 1155
 - detainees 123, 133–4, 136
 - diplomatic immunity 100
 - disappearances, enforced 123, 126, 136–7
 - discrimination 159–60
 - drafting 119–22, 139–40
 - ECommHR 117, 128, 139–40
 - ECtHR 117, 119, 122–31, 137, 159–60
 - emergency medical care 133–4
 - euthanasia 117, 128, 132–3
 - everyone, definition of 124–6
 - evidence 810
 - exceptions 118, 122–3
 - expulsion 740–1, 1128
 - extradition, deportation or expulsion 96, 127
 - firearms by State officials, use of 129–31
 - genocide 121–2
 - Grand Chamber, referral to 848
 - health and safety 131–2
 - homicide 127–9
 - hunger strikes of prisoners 132
 - impunity 139
 - indirect victims 742
 - individual applications 734
 - inhuman or degrading treatment 118, 137–8, 164, 169
 - intention 139–40
 - interim measures 750
 - International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 592, 118–19
 - interpretation 117, 124–6, 135
 - inter-State applications 728
 - law enforcement 118
 - legal and administrative framework, putting into place a 126–7
 - margin of appreciation 81–2, 124–5
 - medical treatment 131, 133–4, 138
 - mercy, prerogative of 117
 - military, medical care for 134
 - missing persons 123, 126, 136–7
 - national security 121
 - negative dimensions 126
 - negligent acts 118, 128, 131–2, 136, 138–9
 - next-of-kin applications 740
 - no punishment without law 110
 - nuclear arms 117

- life, right to (cont.)
 omissions 128
 police 815
 positive obligations 126–39
 post-First World War treaties 118 presumption of death 123, 126
 preventive measures 129–30, 133, 139–40
 private and family life, right to respect for 125–7
 procedural/investigative obligation 111–12, 122, 134–9, 160, 578–9, 773, 848
 proportionality 122, 127
 protected by law, meaning of 126–39 protest, suicide as a 132
 quality of life 127
 racial violence 578–9
 ratione temporis jurisdiction 111–12, 134, 139
 reservations 160–1
 rule of law 128, 139
 self-defence 118, 160–1
 self-harm 132
 standard of proof 123
 State agents 133, 815
 suicide 132–3
 third-party intervention 792
 time limits 773
 torture 118, 164, 169
 truth, right to 138–9
 Universal Declaration of Human Rights 118–21 use of lethal force by State agents 117, 122–3, 125, 127, 135, 146–53, 815
 war/armed conflict 153–8, 592
- limitation on use of restrictions on rights 623–7 absorption approach 621 abuse of rights 625
 Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU 623
 Committee of Experts 623
 Committee of Ministers 624
 Conference of Senior Officials 623–4
 democracy 627
 derogations 625
 drafting 623–4
 expulsion of aliens 625
 fair trial, right to a 625
 freedom of assembly and association 625
 freedom of expression 625
 general principles of international law 623
 good faith 626
 interpretation 623, 624–7
 liberty and security, right to 625–7
 life, right to 625
 political activities of aliens 625
 private and family life, right to respect for 625
 protocols 627
 restrictions/limitations clause 625 specialized limitations clause 623
 standard of proof 625–6
 subsidiary, Article 18 as 624–5
 thought, conscience and religion, freedom of 625
- Universal Declaration of Human Rights 623 limitation periods see time limits limitations see limitation on use of restrictions on rights; under individual main entries; legitimate aim/purpose, restrictions for a; necessary in a democratic society, restrictions which are;
 prescribed by law, restrictions which are
- lis pendens* 355, 1148–9
- Lithuania
 civil partnerships 408
 impeachment of head of state 617
 liberty and security, right to 232, 935
 regulatory offences 284
 reservations 935
- living instrument principle 48, 176, 211
- Locke, John 444
- locus standi* 736–45, 795
- Loewenstein, Karl 519
- Loucaides, Loukis 423
- Luxembourg
 hunting rights 973
 no punishment without law 330
 patronymic names 1159
 peaceful enjoyment of possessions 983
 ratification 9
 reservations 983
- MacBride, Seán 733, 962–3, 990, 1016
- Maccas, Leon 612
- MacDonald, Ronald St John 646
- Macedonia
 Constitution 511, 1008
 education 1008
 ethnic identity 511
 extraordinary rendition 900–1
 freedom of assembly and association 511, 513
 reservations 1008
- MacEntee, Sean 266, 360, 361–2, 531, 558
- McNair, Arnold 682
- Macao 922, 1114
- Magna Carta 220
- Mahoney, Paul 348
- Malawi 946
- Malik, Charles 611
- Malinverni, Giorgio 646
- Malta
 declarations 1009
 jury service 217, 566
 no punishment without law 340
 Parliamentary Assembly, dispute with 876–7
 paternity 390–1
 political activities 481, 609
 presumption of innocence 325
 rent control 980
 reservations 160–1, 325, 609, 1009
 self-defence 160–1
 territorial application 924
 women candidates for judgeship 876–7

- manifest religion or belief, freedom to 427-40
 abortion 383, 431
 accessibility 435
 alone or in a community 429-30
 balancing exercise 429, 437-9
 buildings, tax status of 429
 Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU 433
 circumcision 430
 clothing 437, 439
 collective dimension 429
 conscientious objection 433-4
 discrimination 428
 education 428, 433
 employment 432-4, 438-9
 expulsion and deportation 434-5, 1071 face coverings, ban on 437, 439 fasting 430
 foreseeability 435
 freedom of assembly and association 429
 Grand Chamber, relinquishment of jurisdiction to the 711 harmful activities 429-30 headscarf ban in universities 437
 holidays 432, 437
 identity cards indicating religious domination 428
 immigration 434
 interference with freedom 432-5
 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 435
 Jehovah's Witnesses 430, 434, 435, 436
 legitimate purpose, restrictions for a 420, 436-7, 440 link between act and underlying belief 427
 margin of appreciation 429, 436, 438
 marriage 438
 necessary in a democratic society, restrictions which are 420, 437-40 negative aspect 428
 non-believers, requirement for people to reveal they are 428
 oaths 428
 observance 427, 431-2
 pluralism 429, 432, 437 positive obligation 428-9, 438
 practice 427, 431-2
 prescribed by law, restrictions which have been 420, 435-6
 prisoners 435, 440
 proportionality 438-9
 proselytizing 426-7, 1002
 protection of rights and freedom of others 435 public or private, in 430-1 public order, health or morals 435, 437
 public safety 435, 437
 reasonable accommodation 439-40
 restrictions/limitations 420, 435-40 reveal faith, requirement to 428
 rule of law 436
 sects 437
 sexual orientation 438-9
 tax 429
 teaching 427, 431-2
 terrorism 436
 tolerance 438
 travaux préparatoires 434
 urbans, wearing 439
 Universal Declaration of Human Rights 435
 vegetarian diet 435, 440
 worship 427, 431-2
 manifestly ill-founded applications, rejection of
 admissibility criteria 705, 711, 727, 755-9, 778, 779-81, 1071
 discrimination 217, 565, 568
 enjoyment of any right set forth by law 1182
 thought, conscience and religion, freedom of 439, 1059 margin of appreciation see also under individual main entries
 abortion 81-2
 academic literature 79-80
 accessibility 340-2
 accused at trial, presence of 81
 collective enforcement 79
 competing rights 82
 consolidation of institutions and reform 78-9
 derogations 79, 82-3
 ECommHR 79-80
 economic or social strategy, measures of 81
 ECtHR, case law of 79
 emergencies, derogations in 82-3
 filtering and processing applications 79
 housing 81
 inter-State applications 727
 life, right to 81-2
 limitations on rights 82 margin of discretion, use of term 80
 Parliamentary Assembly 79
 parliamentary immunities 79
 planning 81
 punishment, just and proportionate 81
 Steering Committee for Human Rights 79
 university admission 1005
 Maridakis, Georges 672, 684
 marital rape 339
 marriage see also marry and found a family, right to dissolution 1158-9
 equality between spouses 1157-9
 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 1179
 marriage ceremonies 562-3, 1181-2, 1186
 polygamy 438, 538-9
 religion
 ceremonies, freedom to provide wedding 562-3, 1181-2, 1186
 manifest religion or belief, freedom to 438
 underage marriage 438
 marry and found a family, right to 528-45

- marry and found a family, right to (cont.)
 abortion 543
 absolute, right as being 533
 age 537
 balancing exercise 540
 blood, relatives by 539
 capacity 534
 Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU 529, 536–7, 583
 cohabitation 538, 544
 Commission on the Status of Women 528, 540
 Committee of Experts 532
 Committee of Ministers 531–2
 Conference of Senior Officials 532
 consent 534
 constitutions 528
 Consultative Assembly 530–2 convenience, marriages of 540, 544
 culture 542–4
 de facto marriage 538
 discrimination 528, 531–2, 537, 543–4 dissolution of marriage 540–2, 544
 drafting 528, 529–33, 541
 equality between spouses 1157
 European Social Charter 529
 family life 360, 375–6, 388, 407, 534 found a family, right to 542–3 gender 407, 535–7
 grandparents 534
 illegitimate children 538
 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 529
 interpretation 533–43
 legitimate aim/purpose, restrictions for a 539, 542
 margin of appreciation 533–4, 536, 539–40 marriage, relatives by 539 married women, discrimination against 528 men and women, definition of 535–7 motives 538
 names 375–6, 407, 544
 natural rights 529
 natural unit of society, family as 531 not to marry, freedom 538 parental consent 537
 paternity rights 530
 pensions, access to 544
 polygamy 538–9
 prisoners 539–40
 private and family life, right to respect for 542 procreate, no right to 534
 proportionality 533
 public interest 542
 religious rites 544
 reservations 545
 restrictions/limitations 533–4 right to marry, definition of 539–42 same sex marriage 535
 sexual life and activity 406
 signing ceremonies 532 social benefits, eligibility for 544 social changes 535–6
 sterilization 543
 thought, conscience and religion, freedom of 541
 totalitarian states 360
 traditional marriage 535–6
 transgender persons 535–7, 544
 travaux préparatoires 64, 541
 Universal Declaration of Human Rights 528–30, 532, 535, 540–1
 witnesses, compellability of spouses as 538, 544
- Martens Clause 158
 Marx, Karl 958
 Masons 511, 512, 517, 524–5
 Mauritania 202
 Maxwell Fyfe, David 8–9, 55, 57, 84, 119, 168, 331, 445, 484–5, 557, 591, 612, 719, 733, 754,
 921, 960
 Mayotte 1159, 1162
 media see also journalists, freedom of expression of access 453
 audiovisual 457–8, 467, 480–1 broadcasting interviews with Sinn Fein, restrictions on 617
 chilling effects 476
 criminal justice 185
 democracy 460
 discrimination 480–1
 dissemination, extent of 477
 duties and responsibilities, notion of 468
 elections, right to free 1022, 1023
 electronic media 457
 freedom of expression 453–4, 457–62, 466–8, 474–7, 480–1
 freedom of the press 384–5
 friendly settlements 821
 head of state, insulting the 784
 honour and reputation, attacks on 384–5
 individual applications 781 juvenile offenders, exclusion of media from trial
 of 480
 licensing of broadcasting, television, or cinema enterprises 466–7
 margin of appreciation 462 necessary in a democratic society, restrictions which
 are 474
 political expression 458, 461–2
 political parties 1023
 press 457–62, 474–5
 presumption of innocence 299, 302–3
 private and family life, right to respect for 359, 368, 385, 461–2
 public interest 368
 replies and rectification 459–60
 reporting restrictions 460, 480
 sanctions, severity of 475

- medical treatment and health 131, 133-4, 138, 371-4 see also abortion access to information 374, 383
 data protection 374, 383
 detention for medical reasons 220, 227-8, 234, 241-3, 245 emergencies 133-4
 environment 388
 European Social and Medical Assistance Convention 1129
 health professionals, standards of 131, 138
 HIV/AIDS 126, 160, 172, 827
 inhuman or degrading treatment 174, 183-6, 372
 life, right to 133
 medical or scientific experimentation, consent to 164, 166-7 medical malpractice 111, 128, 131, 138 medication
 access 131
 without regulatory approval 371-2
 military service 134
 necessity 183
 parent, right to be a 372-3 patient information 290 prisoners/detainees
 correspondence 401
 medical care 133-4, 174, 183, 185-6 release of 186
 public hearings 290, 827
 public safety, public health, and public order 435, 437, 595, 603 records, disclosure of 374, 383 reproductive health 372-4 sterilization of Roma women 183-4, 372
 torture 164, 166-7
 vaccinations 371
- Mehta, Hansa 5
- mental disabilities 220, 227-8, 234, 241-3
- mercy, prerogative of 117
- Meron, Theodor 655
- migration see freedom of movement and migration
- Milanovic, Marko 917
- militant democracy 445, 519-21
- military service
 candidate in elections, right to stand as a 1030 civilian service, provision of an alternative 215 compulsory service 205, 214-16
 conscientious objection 204-5, 214-16, 433-4, 569, 848
 death penalty 1095
 disabilities, persons with 380
 discipline 260-1, 278, 324-5 exemption 569
 expulsion 1070
 freedom of assembly and association 490, 509, 522
 freedom of expression 470
 homosexuals, expulsion of 172-3, 198, 381
 medical care 134
 private life 381
 slavery and forced labour 214-16
 thought, conscience and religion, freedom of 215
- Milton, John 444
- minorities
 Committee of Ministers 22
 crime and family, extension of ECHR to 19
 culture 12-13, 22, 582
 discrimination 525, 556, 558-62, 572-3, 577, 580-2, 1184
 education 13
 elections 515, 518
 European Charter for Minority or Regional Languages 581
 family life 379
 First World War 413
 forced transfers 1067
 Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities 38, 491, 581-2
 freedom of assembly and association 491, 494, 514-15, 518, 525
 freedom of expression 450
 freedom of movement and migration 13
 Gypsies 582
 homes, raiding 363
 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 22, 581
 interpreters 316
 language 13, 22, 998, 999
 national minorities 11, 21-3, 556, 558-62, 573, 581-2 association with a 561, 572-3, 577, 580-2
 definition 582
 discrimination 1184
 elections 515, 518
 freedom of assembly and association 491, 515, 518
 freedom of expression 450
 freedom of movement and migration 13
 private and family life, right to respect for 363
 thought, conscience and religion, freedom of 418
 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 38
 Parliamentary Assembly 22, 581-2
 political rights 22
 private and family life, right to respect for 360, 363
 religion 13, 22, 1002
 Roma 582
 sexual minorities 518
 Sinti 582
 thought, conscience and religion, freedom of 413
 Travellers 582
 Universal Declaration of Human Rights 11, 21-2
- minors see children
- miscarriages of justice 267, 306, 319 see also compensation for wrongful conviction
- missing persons see disappearances
- mistake or ignorance of the law 341
- Mitchison, Gilbert 56-8, 562

- Modinos, Poly 20
 Moldova
 candidate for election, right to stand as a 1030
 death penalty 1206
 declarations 1009
 domestic violence 198
 dual nationality 1030
 freedom of assembly and association 498
 identity 404
 inquiries by the Secretary General 899
 ratione loci jurisdiction 938
 reservations 218, 937
 slavery and forced labour 218
 territorial application 1206
 Transdnistria 99, 809–10, 937, 999–1000
 Monaco
 Constitution 584–5
 death penalty 14
 declarations 751, 1141
 expulsion 1065
 fair trial, right to a 324–5
 individual applications 751 professional activity, authorization to exercise a 409 radio and TV broadcasting, State monopoly of 481
 reservations 324–5, 409, 554, 937, 1065
 sovereign immunity 554
 Mosler, Hermann 682
 motoring offences 283, 299–300, 783, 1153 Muslims see Islam

 names
 American Convention on Human Rights 592
 family life 375–6, 407
 legitimate aim/purpose, restrictions for a 544
 married names 375–6, 407
 marry and found a family, right to 544
 patronymic names 1159
 private life 375–6
 proportionality 544
 sex discrimination 407
 national courts see also exhaustion of domestic remedies
 African slave trade, litigation over 202
 effective remedy, right to an 550
 final judgments 109
 freedom of expression 458, 474–5 investigations and fact-finding, defence to national courts with regard to 807
 law, definition of 337–8
 review of decisions 266, 271
 sentencing 454
 sources of international law, decisions as 43–4
 subsidiarity 77–8
 war crimes 99
 national laws
 advisory opinions 1222–3
 evidence 320
 examination of the case 807
 just satisfaction 835–6
 liberty and security, right to 229–33
 no punishment without law 336, 355
 polygamy 539
 private and family life, right to respect for 403–4 replies and rectifications in media 460
 safeguards for existing human rights 904
 national origins, discrimination on grounds of 555–6, 580–1, 583
 national security collective expulsion of aliens 1076–7
 discrimination 525
 evidence 814
 expulsion of aliens, procedural safeguards relating to 1132
 freedom of assembly and association 511–13, 525
 freedom of expression 448, 467, 471–2
 freedom of movement and migration 1062, 1063
 in camera hearings 827
 liberty and security, right to 234, 257
 life, right to 121
 private and family life, right to respect for 404–5
 public hearings 290–1 refugee claims 828
 special advocates 257
 nationality
 ad hoc judges 686–8
 American Convention on Human Rights 592
 Chambers 687, 691
 change of nationality 581
 discrimination 407, 556, 574, 581, 600
 expropriation 1183
 expulsion 1069–70, 1072, 1076
 freedom of movement and migration 1060
 Grand Chamber 691
 judges 644–8, 659, 686–8, 691, 698
 national origins distinguished 581 private and family life, right to respect for 378–9, 1072
 right to a nationality 1072
 statelessness 581
 suspect grounds 574
 terrorist organizations, withdrawal for citizens joining 1072
 third-party intervention 788–9, 792
 Universal Declaration of Human Rights 581, 1072
 NATO (North Atlantic Treaty Organization)
 Belgrade, bombing of 97, 103–4
 Status of Forces Agreement 98, 1100
 natural rights 359–60, 529, 557
 Nazi regime 202, 329, 342, 353, 479, 619, 1095
ne bis in idem 1147–56
 amnesties 1150, 1155
 appeals, time limits for 1149–50
 Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU 1148
 Committee of Experts 1147–8
 compensation 1150
 criminal proceedings, definition of 1151–3
 death penalty 1110

- declarations 1156
- derogations 592, 1155
- disqualification orders 1152
- drafting 1148
- duplication of proceedings (vis) 1150-3
- Engel* procedure 1151-2
- error, proceedings brought in 1151
- final conviction or acquittal in first proceedings 1149-50
- final judgments 849
- Grand Chamber 1153-4
- identity of offences (idem) 1153-4
- International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 1147-9, 1155
- interpretation 1148-55
- motor vehicle offences 1153
- newly discovered facts, reopening case with evidence of 1154-5
- parallel proceedings 1148-9
- penal procedure 1151-2
- penalties, extent of 1152
- prison discipline 1152
- reopening of the case 1154-5
- reservations 1155
- Universal Declaration of Human Rights 1147, 1155
- necessary in a democratic society, restrictions which are see also under individual main entries
- negative obligations
 - education 992-3, 996, 1001
 - family life 388
 - freedom of assembly and association 493, 502, 507-8
 - freedom of expression 454, 456-7
 - individual applications 748
 - life, right to 126
 - manifest a religion, right to 428
 - obligation to respect human rights 90-1
 - private and family life, right to respect for 367-9
 - ratione loci* jurisdiction 103
 - 'shall secure... negative and positive obligations' 90-1
 - vulnerable applicants 748
- negligence 118, 128, 131-2, 136, 138-9, 1050
- Netherlands
 - Aruba 1036, 1084, 1190, 1108, 1114, 1205
 - colonies 324, 917, 1036, 1073-4, 1084, 1190, 1108, 1114, 1205
 - Constitution 358
 - death penalty 1099-100, 1101, 1108, 1114
 - declarations 1006, 1065-6, 1073-4, 1141
 - DNA sampling 346
 - expulsion 1073-4
 - freedom of movement and migration 1059, 1065-6, 1084
 - journalists' sources, confidentiality of 470
 - legal aid 324
 - military discipline 876
 - Netherlands Antilles 324, 1036, 1073-4, 1084, 1190, 1108, 1114, 1205
 - no punishment without law 330
 - private and family life, right to respect for 358
 - reservations 324, 1139
 - Surinam 324, 946, 1036
 - territorial application 324, 1036, 1073-4, 1084, 1190, 1114, 1205
 - torture, diplomatic assurances on 1100-1
 - Netherlands Antilles 324, 1036, 1073-4, 1084, 1190, 1108, 1114, 1205
 - New Caledonia 608, 927, 1159
 - next-of-kin applications 738-40, 798
 - NGOs see non-governmental organizations
 - no punishment without law 328-56
 - accessibility 336-7, 342, 345, 353
 - analogy, definition of crimes by 334-5
 - binding force and execution of judgments 870
 - Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU 330
 - collaboration with the enemy 353, 355
 - Committee of Experts 332-3
 - Committee of Ministers 331, 333-4
 - Conference of Senior Officials 333
 - Consultative Assembly 331-2
 - crimes against humanity 344-5, 355
 - criminal law 336-7, 339-41, 343-4
 - death penalty and right to life 49
 - derogations 328, 335, 592-3, 600
 - discrimination 355-6
 - drafting 331-4, 355
 - ECtHR, case law of 330
 - elections, right to free 1025
 - final judgments 849
 - foreseeability 335-42, 345, 353
 - general principles of international law 332, 336, 350, 351-5
 - Geneva Conventions 345
 - genocide 343-4
 - heavier penalties 336-7, 339, 345-50
 - human dignity 330
 - immunity 331
 - individual applications 734
 - inhuman or degrading treatment 110
 - International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 330, 343, 351-2, 356, 592
 - international law 336, 343-5
 - International Military Tribunal 329-30, 331, 352-4
 - interpretation 334-50
 - judicial interpretation and case law, role of 338-40
 - jus cogens* 328
 - law, definition of 336-8
 - legitimate expectations 340
 - lex mitior* principle (imposition of lighter penalties) 330, 350-1
 - liberty and security, right to 231-2, 258
 - life imprisonment 336-7
 - life, right to 110
 - limitation periods 356

- no punishment without law (cont.)
- lis pendens* 355
 - marital rape 339
 - mistake or ignorance of the law 341
 - national laws 336, 355
 - Paris Peace Conference of 1919 328
 - peace, crimes against 329–30
 - peaceful enjoyment of possessions 974
 - penalties/punishment 328–30, 333–5
 - Permanent Court of International Justice 329
 - Preamble 335
 - proportionality 330
 - ratione temporis* jurisdiction 107–10
 - res judicata* 355
 - reservations 356, 936
 - rule of law 335–6, 342, 351
 - Second World War 329–30, 331, 333, 352–5
 - sentencing 339
 - strict interpretation 335
 - superior orders, defence of 341–2
 - time limits 342–3
 - treason 355
 - Universal Declaration of Human Rights 328, 330–3, 343, 355
 - Versailles, Treaty of 328–9
 - Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 786
 - war crimes 345, 355
- noise 388
- non-discrimination see discrimination
- non-governmental organizations
- applications by authorized representatives, signing of 745
 - freedom of assembly and association 501
 - individual applications 734–7, 745, 748
 - next-of-kin applications 739
 - third-party intervention 793–5
 - victim status 737, 741
- non-self-governing territories 916–17
- Northern Ireland
- derogations 596–7, 600–1
 - detention/deprivation of liberty 154, 235, 237, 260, 597, 600, 854
 - discrimination 472, 475, 480, 558, 579
 - employment, access to 558
 - housing, access to 558
 - inhuman or degrading treatment 181
 - internment 154, 235, 237
 - Maze Prison 809
 - on-site visits 809
 - political opinions 558
 - prison, ban on sectarian symbols in 472, 475, 480
 - religious discrimination 558, 579
 - sectarianism 472, 475, 480, 579
 - terrorism 260
 - torture 175
 - truth, right to 139
- Norton, William 862
- Norway
- Constitution 358
 - education 1003
 - expulsion 398
 - no punishment without law 330
 - private and family life, right to respect for 358
 - religion 1003
 - rent control 980
 - tax liability 1154
- Nowak, Manfred 614, 1142, 1180
- nuclear weapons 117
- nudity in public 377, 455
- nuisance 388, 399–400
- nullum crimen nulla poena sine lege* see no punishment without law
- Nuremberg Military Tribunal see International Military Tribunal
- Nußberger, Angelika 627
- oaths 428, 656, 677, 810
- obligation to respect human rights 84–112
- aliens 85
 - binding character of ECHR 88
 - colonies and overseas territories 84–5
 - Committee of Experts 85–6
 - Committee of Ministers 87
 - Conference of Senior Officials 86–7
 - Consultative Assembly 85
 - diplomatic protection 105
 - drafting 84–7
 - Explanatory Report 86
 - guarantees 85–6
 - High Contracting Parties, use of term 88–90
 - International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 84–5
 - interpretation 88–112
 - jurisdiction 84, 92–1012
 - limitations 88
 - protocols, application to 88, 92
 - ratione loci* jurisdiction 84, 93, 95–104
 - ratione materiae* jurisdiction 84, 93, 94–5
 - ratione personae* jurisdiction 84, 93, 105–7
 - ratione temporis* jurisdiction 93, 107–12
 - 'shall secure...negative and positive obligations' 90–1
 - 'to everyone' 91–2
 - travaux préparatoires* 87
 - universality 91–2
 - 'within their jurisdiction' 92–3
- obscene speech 456
- occupation, situations of 95, 102–4, 154
- on-site visits 807, 808–10
- opinions see advisory opinions
- oral hearings
- admissibility 806
 - advisory opinions 882
 - examination of the case 806
 - fair trial, right to 324, 289
 - third-party intervention 788–9, 792, 794

- Organization of American States (OAS) 576, 1093, 1104 Organisation for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) 484 organised crime 125, 209–10, 230, 239, 281, 398, 1058
 Osho movement 425–6
 overseas territories see colonies and overseas territories

 pacifism 1004
pacta sunt servanda 89, 814, 866
 Paderewski, Ignacy Jan 413
 paid activity, right to freely choose or to accept a 23
 Palestine 158, 723 n.1, 731
 Pallieri, Giorgio Balladore 1068
 Palm, Elizabeth 664, 682
 parallel proceedings 1148–9
 pardons 128
 parents and children, relationship between 391–3
 Paris Peace Conference 1919 328
 Paris Peace Conference 1946 631
 Parliamentary Assembly (CoE) see also under individual main entries ad hoc judges, approval of 689
 Committees, competence of 701
 Consultative Assembly, change of name from 660
 Social Charter, transfer of rights from 23
 parole 99, 256, 259–60, 281, 347, 539
 participation in proceedings 1222–3 partners see equality between spouses; marriage passports 8, 376, 378, 1058, 1061
 paternity
 fair trial, right to a 273, 322
 marry and found a family, right to 529–30
 private and family life, right to respect for 359–60, 376, 390–1
 rights 530
 peace, crimes against 329–30, 343–4
 peaceful enjoyment of possessions 11–12, 906, 958–84
 abuse of rights, prohibition of 621–2
 adoption of ECHR 4, 8
 adverse possession 969, 974
 arbitrary deprivation of property 958, 960
 Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU 960
 civil and political rights 986
 collective enforcement 957
 Committee of Experts 12, 955–6, 961–5
 Committee of Ministers 12, 961, 963–7
 compensation 963–4
 Conference of Senior Officials 961
 Consultative Assembly 11, 960–6 control of use of property 958, 979–81
 declarations 983–4
 deprivation of property/expropriation 958, 960, 964–7, 970–9
 discrimination 981–2
 drafting 11–12, 960–7
 entry into force 12
 expropriation, compensation for 621–2, 964–7, 974, 976–8
 freedom of assembly and association 491
 freedom of expression 468, 480 future income 971
 gender equality 959
 general principles of international law 45
 Grand Chamber 968–70, 974
 home, respect for the 399–400, 402
 housing 959
 hunting rights 973
 indigenous people 959
 individual applications 731
 inquiries by the Secretary General 899
 intellectual property 959
 interference with possessions 967–8
 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 959
 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights 959
 interpretation 955–7, 967–82
 inter-State applications 867
 judgment debts 971
 legitimate expectations 969 licence to conduct business activities, withdrawal of 973 natural or legal persons, definition of 969
 no punishment without law 974
 non-physical assets 971 peaceful enjoyment of possessions, definition of 972–4 pensions 972
 positive obligations 968 possessions, definition of 969–72 poverty 959
 Preamble to ECHR 63, 955
 Preamble to Protocol No. 1 955–7
 proportionality 967, 972
 ratifications 12
 relationship to ECHR 1037–8
 rent control 958, 973–4
 reservations 983–4
 restitution 970, 984
 Roman law 972
 rule of law 956
 signature and ratification 1039–41
 social policy 958
 social security payments 971–2 tax liability, forfeiture and seizure for 974 temporal jurisdiction 970
 time limits 974
 totalitarian regimes 961
 travaux préparatoires 956
 Universal Declaration of Human Rights 4, 11, 956–60
 Pellonpää, Matti 296
 pensions
 access 544

- pensions (cont.)
 discrimination 982
 judges 673
 peaceful enjoyment of possessions 972
 pensionable age 567
 prisoners 214
- Perassi, Tommaso 831, 835, 863, 910
- Permanent Court of Arbitration 647
- Permanent Court of International Justice
 advisory opinions 731, 874
 Central and Eastern Europe, protection of national and ethnic minorities in 631
 education, right to 999
 ECtHR, establishment of 631, 635
 exhaustion of domestic remedies 767-8
 individual applications 731
 interpretation 33
 inter-State applications 725
 judicial office, criteria for 647
 language 631, 999
 minorities 731
 no punishment without law 329
 schools, access to 631
 sources of international law, decisions as 39
 Statute 647
- Persico, Giovanni 121-2, 221, 920
- person, right to recognition as a 592, 1175
- persons, jurisdiction see ratione personae (persons)
 jurisdiction
- petition, right of see individual applications
- photographs 377-8, 461
- Pictet, Jean 158
- pilot-judgment procedure 640, 696-7, 870-1
- Pinheiro Farinha, João de Deus 541
- Pinto de Albuquerque, Paulo 63, 68, 424, 726, 743, 839, 998
- piracy 344
- planning 81
- plea bargaining 271, 1140
- Plenary Court 678-85 see also under individual main entries
 adjudicative role 679
 annual sessions 679, 681
 Bureau 683-4
 caseload, reduction of 680
 Chambers 678-9, 682-3
 Committee of Experts 678
 Committee of Ministers 680 common interest, dispute about existence of 679
 composition 678
 consolidating the institutions and further reform 680, 682
 Consultative Assembly 678
 death penalty 1091-2
 dismissal of judges 681
 doubt or disputes as to whether Party has right to bring case 679
 drafting 678-80
 execution of judgments 680
 filtering and processing applications 680, 683
 functions 678-80
 gender balance 683
 Grand Chamber 682, 692, 710, 713, 844
 immunity, waiver of 680-1
 inconsistent judgments 679
 interpretation 679, 680-5
 judges
 dismissal 681
 election 680
 formations 688
 judicial function, ceasing to have a 844
 jurisdiction 688, 719-20
 President of the Court 678-84
 Presidents of the Chambers 683 procedure, determination of 679 protocols, opinions on adoption of 680 quorum 679, 681
 Registrar/Deputy-Registrars 680, 681
 Rules of Court 678-9, 681-5, 688
 serious questions affecting interpretation 679
 Steering Committee on Human Rights 680
 Vice-Presidents 678-84
- Pocar, Fausto 1134
- Poland
 abortion 81-2, 373, 383, 404-5
 death penalty 1101
 declarations 786
 elections 515, 518
 extraordinary rendition 145, 793, 809-10, 827, 836-7, 899-900
 imprisonment for debt, prohibition of 1050-1
 independent and impartial tribunals 295
 liberty and security, right to 234 national minorities as political parties, organizations of 515, 518
 prisoners 435, 440
 racist organizations 519-20
 reasonable accommodation 440
 rent control 973-4
 sexual orientation 525
- police
 candidate for election, right to stand as a 1030
 demonstrations, dispersal of 496-7, 516
 European Code of Police Ethics 522
 freedom of assembly and association 490, 509, 516, 522
 life, right to 815
 political parties 522
 racist motives for killing 570-1 report to police, requirements for migrants to 1059
 trade unions 500
 training 820-1
- political activities see also political activity of aliens, restrictions on employees 375 public officials 481

- strike, right to 522
- political activity of aliens, restrictions on 606-10, 625
 - Alternative A and A/2 607
 - Alternative B and B/2 607-8
 - Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU 606, 609-10
 - Committee of Experts 606-7
 - Committee of Ministers 606, 608
 - Conference of Senior Officials 608
 - Consultative Assembly 606, 608
 - drafting 606-8
 - elections, participation in 606, 608, 609-10
 - expulsion of activists 608-9
 - freedom of assembly and association 607-8
 - freedom of expression 607-8
 - general principles of international law 607
 - International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 609
 - interpretation 608-10
 - non-discrimination clause 608
 - Parliamentary Assembly 609
 - political activity, definition of 608
 - reservations 609
 - slavery and forced labour 607
 - trade unions, right to form and join 607
 - Universal Declaration of Human Rights 606-7
- political democracy
 - effectiveness 68-9
 - electoral rights 68
 - European public order 68
 - freedom of assembly and association 68
 - freedom of expression 68
- political or other opinions
 - discrimination 555-61, 580, 583
 - freedom of expression 455-6, 458, 461-4, 474, 476-8
- political parties
 - abuse of rights, prohibition of 618-19
 - anti-democratic views, dissolution of parties with 618
 - corruption 1022
 - democracy 503-4
 - discrimination 525
 - dissolution 484, 512, 521
 - elections, right to free 1022
 - extreme political parties 502, 519-21
 - foreign parties, funding by 505
 - freedom of assembly and association 484, 499, 503-5, 511-12, 520-1
 - freedom of expression 491, 503
 - funding 484, 504-5, 1022
 - Islam, advocating ban on parties not based on 619
 - margin of appreciation 521
 - media, access to 1023
 - membership 1018
 - militant democracy 519-21
 - necessary in a democratic society, restrictions which are 503, 521
 - number of members, minimum requirements for 503
 - pluralism 503-4
 - police 522
 - pressing social needs 515
 - proportionality 520-1
 - regional parties 504-5
 - registration 515
 - religion 520-1
 - restrictions/limitations 521
 - Venice Commission 484, 505 n.171, 807
- political rights see civil and political rights; International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights
- polygamy 438, 538-9
- Popović, Dragoljub 439
- population transfers 1067-8
- pornography 941
- Portugal
 - civic obligations 218
 - Constitution 939, 1008
 - death penalty 14, 1114
 - declarations 1141, 1156
 - education, right to 1008
 - lock-outs 525
 - Macao 922, 1114
 - military service 215
 - ne bis in idem* 1156
 - peaceful enjoyment of possessions 983
 - police 356
 - reservations 356, 983, 1008, 1139
 - slavery and forced labour 218
 - television ownership 481
 - territorial application 1114
- positive discrimination/affirmative action 566-8, 1175-6, 1187
- positive obligations
 - abortion 373
 - data protection 383
 - discrimination 1173-6
 - education 1001
 - elections, right to free 1026
 - environment 388
 - equality between spouses 1158
 - family life 388
 - freedom of assembly and association 492-4, 502, 516, 519, 521
 - inhuman or degrading treatment 191-4, 197
 - jura novit curiae* 815
 - liberty and security, right to 228-9
 - life, right to 126-39
 - peaceful enjoyment of possessions 968
 - private and family life, right to respect for 365, 366-9, 373, 375
 - racial discrimination 578
 - ratione loci* jurisdiction 95, 103
 - ratione personae* jurisdiction 105-6
 - religion or belief, freedom to manifest 428-9, 438
 - sex discrimination 576

- positive obligations (cont.)
 'shall secure... negative and positive obligations' 90-1
 slavery and forced labour 206
 thought, conscience and religion, freedom of 421-2
 torture 191
 trade unions 507
 use of lethal force 127
 vulnerable applicants 745
 witnesses 313
- Potocki, André 627
- poverty 203, 959
- Power-Forde, Ann 187
- powers of attorney 745
- Preamble to ECHR 53-83
 accession 59
 aims of Council of Europe 65-6, 73 amendment 955, 1045
 collective enforcement 62, 64, 73-4 colonies and territories, application to 62 commencement of legal order 59
 Committee of Legal Experts 58
 Committee of Ministers 54, 56-9
 common heritage 69-70, 71
 common understanding and observance of human rights 69
 consolidation of institutions and reform 955, 1045
 Consultative Assembly 56, 58, 63
 date of signature 59
de minimis principle 782
 drafting 55-8
 ECommHR, case law of 54
 economic, social, and cultural rights 63
 ECtHR 54-5, 640
 effective remedy, right to an 551
erga omnes obligations 65
 founding States of Council of Europe 59
 'the governments signatory hereto...' 59 historical context 54
 importance 54
 individual applications 735
 interpretation 47-8, 54-5, 59-69
 justice and peace 66-8
 margin of appreciation 58, 78-83
 no punishment without law 335
 political democracy, effective 68
 ratification 59
ratione materiae jurisdiction 94
 recitals 58-83
 rule of law 53, 65, 69, 70-3 signature 59
 signing ceremony 59
 subsidiarity 58, 74-8
 text 55-8
travaux préparatoires 64
 treaties, ECtHR's references to preambles in other 54-5
- Universal Declaration of Human Rights 56, 59-65, 69
 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 36, 54
 website of ECtHR, absence from 54 preambles see Preamble to ECHR; preambles to protocols
 preambles to protocols
 advisory opinions 1213-14
 consolidation of institutions and reform 31
 death penalty 1091, 1197
 discrimination 1173-6
 freedom of movement and migration 1045-7
 Universal Declaration of Human Rights 11
- precedent
 binding force and execution of judgments 866
 dynamic and evolutive interpretation 47
 ECtHR 46-7, 711
 interpretation 46-7
stare decisis 711
- Preparatory Commission 3-4
- presence/absence of accused at trial 81, 316-17, 1137, 1222-3
- Presidents/Vice-Presidents
 Bureau 683-4
 Chamber, of the 683, 691, 746, 748, 827-8, 843, 859
 Court, of the 27, 673, 681-4, 688-92, 694-5, 709, 843, 846
 election 678-9, 680-2
 gender balance 681-2
 list of presidents 682
 nationality 682
 Plenary Court 681-4
 salaries 673
 Section, of the 673, 690-1, 763, 846
 term of office 681-2
 third-party intervention 792
- prescribed by law, restrictions which are see also under individual main entries
- pressing social needs, restrictions due to see also under individual main entries
- presumption of innocence 271, 281, 298-307, 319
 acquittals 304-6
 burden of proof 298-300 civil proceedings after acquittal 305
 compensation 304-7, 1142 concluded proceedings, link with 305 confiscation of assets 304
 costs 304
 disciplinary proceedings arising out of same charge 305 drug prosecutions 299
 fair trial in criminal proceedings, right to 271, 281, 298-307, 319, 325
 freedom of expression 460
 government officials 299 identity of drivers 299-300
 liberty and security, right to 250, 257

- media 299, 302-3
- miscarriages of justice 306, 319, 1142
- negative comments and publicity 302-3
- related proceedings 303-5
- reservations 325
- self-incrimination, protection against 300-2
- standard of proof 300
- strict/absolute liability 300
- tax 299
- Universal Declaration of Human Rights 298
- pre-trial publicity 287
- prisoners see also detention/deprivation of liberty; life imprisonment
 - artificial insemination 389, 739-40
 - cells, confinement to 228
 - children 398
 - close family ties 398
 - conditional release 205, 214
 - correspondence 401, 404
 - disciplinary measures 228, 1152
 - discrimination 259-60
 - documents, access to 748
 - education, right to 998-9
 - European Prison Rules 998
 - fair trial in criminal proceedings, right to 275
 - family life 390, 398
 - hunger strikes 132
 - ill-health, release on grounds of 186
 - individual applications 747-8
 - liberty and security, right to 228, 259-60, 275
 - literacy and numeracy needs 998
 - margin of appreciation 539-40
 - marry and found a family, right to 539-40
 - obstruction of communications 747
 - parole 99, 256, 259-60, 281, 347, 539
 - prisoners of war 155, 235, 576 n.147
 - private and family life, right to respect for 376, 747
 - proportionality 1029
 - religion or belief, freedom to manifest 435, 440
 - remuneration 213-14
 - riot or insurrection, quelling 153
 - shaving heads 376
 - slavery and forced labour 213-14
 - state pensions, entitlement to 214
 - translations 401
 - vegetarian diet 435, 440
 - visits, limits on 398
 - vocational training 998
 - vote, right to 915, 1023, 1028-9
- private and family life, right to respect for 358-409
 - see also* family life; home, respect for the
 - abortion 125
 - abuse of rights, prohibition of 617, 620
 - accessibility 403
 - adoption 367
 - Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU 359
 - children 827
 - clothing 439
 - Committee of Experts 362-5, 402
 - Committee of Ministers 363-4, 366
 - competing interests 368
 - Conference of Senior Officials 364-5
 - constitutions 358
 - Consultative Assembly 360-3, 366
 - corporal punishment 189
 - correspondence 400-1
 - discrimination 407-8, 556, 1178
 - drafting 359-66, 402
 - economic well-being of country 404-5
 - ECtHR, case law of 366-7
 - education 1001
 - environment 172
 - equality between spouses 1157-8
 - evidence 320
 - expulsion of aliens, procedural safeguards relating to 1126, 1128
 - foreseeability 403
 - freedom of assembly and association 364, 491
 - freedom of expression 368, 452, 460, 468
 - freedom of movement and migration 402
 - freedom of information 364
 - general principles of international law 359-60
 - identity of victims 827
 - in accordance with the law 402-4
 - in camera* hearings 827
 - incest 82
 - inhuman or degrading treatment 171-3
 - interim measures 750
 - International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 402
 - Internet 463
 - interpretation 366-408
 - jura novit curiae* 815
 - language 1000
 - legitimate purpose 404-6
 - life, right to 126-7
 - limitation on use of restrictions 625
 - margin of appreciation 82, 368
 - marry and found a family, right to 542
 - media 461-2
 - minimum guarantees 361
 - minorities 360, 363
 - national laws 403-4
 - national security 404
 - nationality 1072
 - natural rights 359-60
 - necessary in a democratic society 406
 - negative obligations 367-9
 - paternity 359-60, 376, 390-1
 - positive obligations 365, 366-9
 - prisoners 747
 - private law 366
 - proportionality 367
 - public authorities 364-8
 - public order 404
 - public safety 404-5

- private and family life, right to respect for (cont.)
- religion 1001
 - reservations 408–9
 - respect 367–9
 - restrictions/limitations 359–60, 363–4, 367, 401–6
 - rule of law 367–8, 384, 403
 - same sex partnerships 82
 - sexual assault 827
 - statelessness 109
 - telephone tapping 320
 - thought, conscience and religion, freedom of 440
 - totalitarian regimes 360, 361
 - United States Constitution 358
 - Universal Declaration of Human Rights 358–64, 367
- private life 369–88 see also private and family life, right to respect for
- abortion 373, 383, 404–6
 - assisted pregnancies 373
 - autonomy 370, 371, 375–80
 - balancing exercise 368, 377, 380, 384–5
 - biological parents, right to know identity of 376
 - bullying in schools 370
 - cellular samples 384
 - citizenship 379, 404–5
 - confidentiality 383–4, 404–5
 - covert filming 377
 - criminal law 369–70, 381, 384–7
 - data protection 382–4
 - death and dying 382, 406
 - definition 369
 - deterrence 369
 - disabilities, persons with 380
 - discrimination 375–6
 - DNA 384
 - drafting 358–9, 365
 - dress 376–7, 402, 405–6
 - driving licences 378
 - education 379–80
 - employment and professional activities 374–5, 377, 386–7
 - environment 387–8
 - ethnicity 379, 404
 - expulsion 396–7
 - family life, dividing line with 366–7
 - fingerprints 384
 - freedom of expression 375, 377–8, 380
 - freedom of the press 384–5
 - gender discrimination 375–6
 - general interest, areas of 377–8
 - health and medical care 371–4
 - home, respect for the 399
 - homosexual activity, criminalization of 381
 - honour and reputation, attacks on 358–9, 361–3, 384–5
 - identification of perpetrators 387
 - identity 374, 375–6, 378–81
 - image 377
 - incest 381
 - International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 369
 - interpretation 366–88
 - intimate aspects of private life 368, 380–1
 - legal personality 379
 - left alone, right to be 358
 - legitimate purpose 404
 - margin of appreciation 368, 372, 381 406
 - media 359, 368, 385
 - migrants 366–7
 - military, expulsion of homosexuals from the 381
 - monitoring outside the home 387
 - moral integrity 370
 - names 375–6
 - national security 404–5
 - nationality, right to 378–9
 - negative obligations 368
 - negative stereotyping 380
 - others, interference by 368
 - passports 378
 - paternity, determination of 376, 391
 - personal autonomy 370, 371, 375–80
 - personality, development of 369–70
 - philosophical convictions 379–80
 - photographs 377–8
 - physical integrity 370, 371, 377
 - positive obligations 365, 368, 373, 375
 - procedural aspects 388
 - psychological integrity 370
 - public interest 368, 377–8
 - quality of life 370
 - relationships with other people 369–70, 374
 - religious convictions 379–80
 - restrictions/limitations 365, 402
 - sado-masochism 381, 385
 - same sex couples 407
 - search and seizure 385–7
 - sexual life and activity 380–1, 406
 - sexual offences notification requirements 384
 - sexual orientation 381, 406–7
 - social identity 374, 375–6
 - social media 359
 - stereotyping 380
 - surveillance 383, 386–7, 403
 - technology 358–9, 377, 387
 - Universal Declaration of Human Rights 360, 369, 378–9, 402
 - zone of interaction 370
- privileges and immunities of judges 891–3
- ad hoc judges 892
 - children 892
 - Committee of Experts 891
 - Committee of Ministers 892
 - Consultative Assembly 891
 - corruption 893
 - drafting 891–2
 - General Agreement on Privileges and Immunities of Council of Europe 892–3

- independence and impartiality 891–2
- International Court of Justice, Statute of 891
- interpretation 892
- spouses 892–3
- waiver 893
- procedural adjustments 26–7, 31
- procedural/investigative obligation
 - Chambers on admissibility and merits, decisions by 707
 - chilling effect 812–13
 - cooperate, obligation to 812–13
 - criminal proceedings 134–6, 369, 370
 - discrimination 160
 - domestic violence 192
 - examination of the case 812–13
 - inhuman or degrading treatment 191–4, 707, 773
 - liberty and security, right to 229
 - life, right to 111–12, 122, 134–9, 160, 848
 - Chambers on admissibility and merits, decisions by 707
 - racial violence 578–9
 - time limits 773
 - war/armed conflict 153–4
 - racial violence 578–9
 - ratione temporis* jurisdiction 110–11
 - slavery and forced labour 206–7
 - time limits 773
 - torture 170–1, 191, 193
 - use of lethal force 135
 - war/armed conflict 153–4
- professions see also legal representatives/profession
 - private life 386–7
 - professional secrecy 386
 - quotas 998
 - right to freedom of profession 568–9
 - search and seizure 386
- prohibition of abuse of rights see abuse of rights, prohibition of
- propaganda 19, 448
- property see also peaceful enjoyment of possessions
 - discrimination 555–6, 558–60, 573–4, 582–3
 - Universal Declaration of Human Rights 582–3
- proportional representation 1016–17, 1022, 1025
- proportionality
 - abuse of rights, prohibition of 621
 - adoptive parents, age of 584
 - adverse possession 974
 - candidate for election, right to stand as a 1029
 - derogations 594, 599, 602
 - detention/deprivation of liberty 182–3
 - discrimination 556, 564–5, 573, 600, 1176
 - education, right to 998–9
 - elections, right to free 1024
 - expropriation 976–7
 - expulsion 396, 1132
 - freedom of assembly and association 498, 510, 513, 516–17, 523
 - freedom of expression 451, 465, 475–7
 - freedom of movement and migration 1058–9, 1060–1, 1063–5
 - home, respect for the 400
 - inhuman or degrading treatment 182–3, 194
 - lex mitior* principle 351
 - liberty and security, right to 238–9, 260
 - life, right to 122, 127, 156–8
 - marry and found a family, right to 533, 544
 - no punishment without law 330
 - peaceful enjoyment of possessions 967, 972
 - political parties 520–1, 1022, 1024
 - private and family life, right to respect for 367
 - racial discrimination 578
 - reasonable accommodation 569
 - religion or belief, freedom to manifest 438–9
 - sentencing 330, 475–6
 - slavery and forced labour 206
 - university admission 1005
 - use of lethal force 147–8, 150
 - war/armed conflict 156–8
- proselytizing 426–7, 440
- prostitution 202, 207, 209
- protests see demonstrations/protests
- protocols 11–25
 - additional protocols 877, 955, 1037, 1085, 1200, 1227
 - admissibility criteria 760
 - advisory opinions 880
 - amending protocols 26, 877, 1037, 1085, 1200, 1227
 - Committee of Experts 25
 - Committee of Ministers 22–5
 - consent 26
 - Council of Europe 11
 - death penalty 11, 1091, 1197
 - deprivation of freedom 11, 24–5
 - discrimination 1173
 - economic, social, and cultural rights 23
 - ECtHR, establishment of 632–3
 - environment 11, 23–4
 - friendly settlements 822
 - gender equality 11, 24
 - Grand Chamber, referral to 843, 845–6
 - individual applications 735
 - interpretation 49, 721, 880
 - jurisdiction 94, 721
 - just satisfaction 839
 - legal assistance, right to 25
 - limitation on use of restrictions 625
 - national minorities 11, 21–3
 - obligation to respect human rights 88, 92
 - Parliamentary Assembly 22–5
 - ratifications 11
 - ratione personae* jurisdiction 93
 - slavery and forced labour 205, 217
 - Steering Committee for Human Rights 632
 - unanimous consent 26
 - unfinished business 21–5

- protocols (cont.)
 Universal Declaration of Human Rights 11, 21-2
 victim status 737, 745
 whistle-blowers, protection of 25
 Proudhon, Pierre-Joseph 958 provisional measures see interim measures psychological harm, compensation for 838
 psychological integrity 370 public authorities see public sector/officials
 public hearings 288-91 access must be genuine 289-90
 access to documents 825-9
 civil rights and obligations 288-9
 Committee of Ministers 826
 consolidating the institutions and further reform 825-6
 Consultative Assembly 825
 criminal charges 289
 derogations 826
 drafting 825-6
 ECommHR 826
 examination of the case 806
 fair trial, right to 270, 287-98, 825-6
 general principles of international law 825
 in camera hearings 290, 826-7
 interpretation 826-9
 judgments, pronouncement/publication of 288-9, 290-1, 825
 national security 290-1
 patient information 290
 presence of parties 826 public character of hearings 826-7
 reservations 291, 323
 Rules of Court 825
 travaux préparatoires 291
 Universal Declaration of Human Rights 825
 waiver 290
 public interest
 discrimination 568
 expropriation 965, 967, 974-8
 fair trial in criminal proceedings, right to 309-10
 freedom of expression 454, 458-62, 474
 freedom of movement and migration 1056, 1062, 1064
 liberty and security, right to 233
 margin of appreciation 975
 marry and found a family, right to 542
 media 368
 necessity tests 975
 private life 368, 377-8
 whistleblowing 465, 475
 public law proceedings 274 public opinion 302, 452, 476, 525, 634, 862, 927, 1020, 1028
 public order (ordre public)
 ECtHR, establishment of 640
 expulsion of aliens, procedural safeguards relating to 1132
 freedom of movement and migration 1055-6, 1063
 inter-State applications 725-6
 private and family life, right to respect for 404
 religion or belief, freedom to manifest 435, 437
 victim status 738
 public policy 309, 640, 800
 public sector/officials see also candidate in elections, right to stand as a; police; State agents
 data protection 383
 discrimination 1180, 1185-6
 extraterritoriality 101-2
 firearms by State officials, use of 129-31
 freedom of assembly and association 522-3
 freedom of expression 464-5, 476-8 individual applications by public corporations 737 lawful restrictions on employees 522-3
 life, right to 133
 medical treatment 133
 presumption of innocence 299
 private and family life, right to respect for 364-8
 ratione loci jurisdiction 101-2
 state monopolies 737
 suicide, prevention of 133
 trade unions 509, 515-16, 522
 whistleblowing 465
 public services, equal access to 12-13, 19
 publication of judgments 851, 855 electronic publication 855 languages, official 851, 855 official reports of ECtHR 855 qualifications for judgeship 647-8, 651-2, 662, 664-5
 quotas 998
 Raimondi, Guido 682 racial discrimination see also Roma, discrimination against abuse of rights, prohibition of 616, 618-19
 affirmative action 566, 1175-6
 anti-Semitism 479, 619
 citizenship 379
 colour 556, 558-61, 577, 580, 583, 600
 Committee for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (UN) 379, 566
 derogations 600
 detention/deprivation of liberty 197
 discrimination 21, 1185
 dissolution of racist organizations 618
 drafting 557-8, 583
 education, right to 987
 effective remedy, right to an 553, 571
 elections, right to free 1031
 ethnic cleansing 344, 914, 1067
 ethnic groups 379, 404, 491, 500, 503, 565-6, 574-5, 1031 ethnic origins 577-9
 European Centre on Racism and Intolerance 160
 European Commission against Racism and Intolerance 379, 577-8, 1004

- fair trial, right to a 321-2
- freedom of assembly and association 500, 503, 525
- human dignity, right to 66 n.73, 571
- indirect discrimination 568
- inhuman or degrading treatment 192-3, 197-8
- International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination 413, 556,
566-7, 577, 914, 987, 1060, 1175-6
- justification, objective and reasonable 578
- killing, racist motive for 570-1
- life, right to 159-60
- militant democracy 519-20
- minorities 491
- police 570-1
- positive discrimination/affirmative action 566, 1175-6
- positive obligations 578-9
- proportionality 578
- racial discrimination, definition of 577-8
- Racial Equality Directive 568
- re-hearings 844, 846
- religious discrimination 579
- scientific category, race as not being a legitimate 1185
- special measures 566-7
- suspect grounds 574-5, 578
- violence 570-1, 578-9
- rape 175-6, 339, 576
- rappoteurs of ECtHR 675, 677
- ratification see signature and ratification
- ratione loci* (territorial) jurisdiction 84, 93, 95-105, 720 see also territorial application
 - admissibility criteria 778
 - attribution 95
 - declarations 104
 - diplomatic protection 105
 - effective control over an area 95, 102-4
 - extradition, expulsion, and refoulement 95-7
 - extraterritorial jurisdiction 95-6, 100-5
 - full control of territory, states without 938
 - immunity 95, 100, 102-3
 - International Court of Justice 937
 - international organizations, State responsibility for 97-9
 - international relations, territory over which State exercises responsibility for 100
 - negative dimensions of rights 103
 - objections 938-9
 - obligation to respect human rights 84, 93, 95-104
 - positive obligations 95, 103
 - Preamble to ECHR 62
 - reservations 937-8
 - state agent authority and control 101-2
 - State responsibility 95, 99, 101-3
 - territory not controlled by the State 99
 - Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 937
- ratione materiae* (subject matter) jurisdiction 84, 93, 94-5, 720-1
 - admissibility criteria 778-9
 - asylum, right to political 94
 - customary international law 94
 - death penalty in time of war 1106
 - enter and reside, right of foreign nationals to 94
 - exhaustion of domestic remedies 94
 - family life 389
 - obligation to respect human rights 84, 93, 94-5
 - Preamble 94
 - protocols 94
 - reservations 93, 94, 934
 - Security Council (UN) 107
 - self-determination 94
 - Universal Declaration of Human Rights 94
 - Universal Periodic Review 94
- ratione personae* (persons) jurisdiction 84, 93, 105-7, 720
 - admissibility criteria 778
 - attribution 105, 107
 - Charter of UN 106-7
 - individuals 105
 - international organizations 105-6
 - obligation to respect human rights 84, 93, 105-7
 - positive obligations 105-6
 - protocols 93
 - Security Council (UN) resolutions 106-7
 - third States 105
 - United Nations (UN) 106-7
- ratione temporis* (temporal) jurisdiction 93, 107-12, 720
 - accessions 108
 - accountability 110
 - admissibility criteria 772, 778
 - consolidating the institutions and further reform 108
 - continuing violations 109-10
 - critical date 107-11
 - death penalty 110
 - declarations 108
 - delay 109
 - disappearances 109-10
 - ECommHR 108
 - ECtHR 108-11
 - entry into force 108, 949-50
 - exhaustion of domestic remedies 108-9
 - expulsion 1071
 - fair trial, right to a 108-10
 - final judgments of national courts 109
 - freedom of movement and migration 1086
 - humanitarian clause, scope of 111-12
 - life, right to 111-12, 134, 139
 - obligation to respect human rights 93, 107-12
 - peaceful enjoyment of possessions 974
 - procedural/investigative obligation 110-11
 - ratifications 108
 - reciprocity 108
 - res judicata* 109
 - reservations 935
 - retroactivity 107-10
- reasonable accommodation 439-40, 569

- reasonable time, right to trial within a 287, 291-3, 551
- reasons
- advisory opinions 887
 - arrest 224, 244-6
 - decisions and judgments, distinction between 859
 - dissenting or separate opinions 857-8, 859
 - drafting 857-8
 - ECommHR 857
 - fair trial, right to a 297-9, 857, 936
 - formalism 859
 - Grand Chamber 857-8
 - International Court of Justice, Statute of 857
 - interpretation 858-9
 - judgments and decisions 857-9
 - juries 297-8
 - liberty and security, right to 224, 233, 244-6
 - reservations 936
 - Rules of Court 859
- recidivism 350
- reciprocity, principle of 693
- recognition before the law, right to 592, 1175
- rectification of errors in decisions and judgments 849, 852-5
- clerical errors 853
 - costs 855
 - Court of its own motion, by 854-5
 - obvious mistakes 854-5
 - request of parties, at 854
 - revision, distinction between rectification and 855
 - time limits 854-5
- Red Cross, International Committee of the 139, 158
- referendums 1021
- referral to the Grand Chamber 691-2, 841, 843-8
- admissibility 845-6
 - authorization of referral 846-7
 - case, meaning of 845
 - caseload 844
 - Committee of Ministers 844
 - conscientious objections 848
 - drafting 843-4
 - enlarged composition 843
 - exceptional cases 846
 - exclusions from panel 846
 - expropriation 848
 - final judgments 847
 - friendly settlement, approval of 846
 - inconsistent judgments, risk of 844-5
 - interpretation 843-8
 - life, right to 848
 - new issues, list of 848
 - plenary Court ceasing to have judicial function 844
 - President of the Court 843, 846
 - Presidents of Sections 846
 - Presidents of the Chamber 843
 - protocols 843, 845-6
 - quality and consistency of case law 844
 - re-hearings 844, 846
 - relinquishment of jurisdiction 844-5
- requests
- 5 judge panels 846
 - exceptional cases 846
 - reasons for refusal 846
 - statistics for successful referrals 845
 - time limits 846
- res judicata* 844
- revision, requests for 847
- Rules of Court 844
- serious issues 847-8
- serious questions affecting interpretation or application 691, 709-12, 843-5, 847-8
- striking out 846
- time limits 846
- Vice-Presidents of the Court 843
- refugees and asylum seekers
- collective expulsion of aliens 1077-8
 - expulsion 395, 1126, 1127
 - family life 395
 - freedom of movement and migration 1053
 - High Commissioner for Refugees (UN) 794, 1079
 - International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 1053
- jus cogens* 44
- liberty and security, right to 243
 - national security 828
 - non-refoulement* 44, 395
 - ratione materiae* jurisdiction 94
 - Refugee Convention 76, 395, 947, 1053
 - subsidiarity 76
 - third-party intervention 795
- regional assemblies 1020-1
- registry of ECtHR 675-7
- access to documents 827
 - advisory opinions 882
 - archives 676-7
 - case-processing divisions 676
 - consolidating the institutions and further reform 675, 677
 - Deputy Registrars 680
 - drafting 675-6
 - Explanatory Report 677
 - filtering and processing applications 675-6
 - friendly settlements 819, 821
 - General Instructions 676
 - interpretation 676-7
 - legal secretaries (law clerks) 675
 - publication of judgments 851, 855
 - Registrar 676-7, 797, 882
 - removal 680, 681
 - Rules of Court 684
 - Section Registries 676
 - striking out 797
 - third-party intervention 794
- regulatory offences 283-4
- religion and belief see also Islam; Jehovah's Witnesses;
- manifest religion or belief, freedom to;
 - thought, conscience and religion, freedom of

- apostasy, advocating death penalty for 619
 Christianity 577, 579
 Church of England
 marriages of convenience 544
 ordination of women in 577 convictions, definition of 1001
 corporal punishment 1002, 1003-4
 crucifixes in classrooms 1003
 derogations 600
 discipline 1003-4
 discrimination 428, 555-63, 579-80, 583, 600, 1181-2, 1186
 identity cards 428
 inhuman or degrading treatment 196-7
 drafting 557-8, 583
 education 23, 380, 580, 986, 989-91, 1000-4
 freedom of assembly and association 499, 501, 511
 Holocaust 579
 home schooling 1002
 identity cards 428
 indoctrination 1003
 inhuman or degrading treatment 196-7
 margin of appreciation 1003
 marriage ceremonies 562-3, 1181-2, 1186
 marry and found a family, right to 544
 minorities 13, 22, 1002
 negative obligations 1001
 neutrality and impartiality of States 1001
 pacifism 1004
 philosophical convictions 379-80
 pluralism 100, 1002-3
 political parties 520-1
 positive obligations 1001
 private and family life, right to respect for 379-80, 1001 private or separate schooling 1002 profession, freedom of 568-9 proselytism 1002
 race and ethnicity 579 religious organisations 499, 501, 511
 legal status 501
 marriage ceremonies 562-3, 1181-2, 1186
 registration 501, 511
 victim status 742
 religious studies in schools, opting out 580
 Second World War 579
 secularism 1002
 sex education 1003
 stigmatization 580 status of religious organizations 563 symbols in classroom 1003
 totalitarian regimes 989, 991, 993
 trade unions 499, 516
 remedies see compensation/reparations; effective remedy, right to an; exhaustion of domestic remedies; interim measures
 damages 68, 276, 839, 1139
 injunctions 275-6, 475
 rent control 958, 973-4, 980
 reparations see compensation/reparations repetitive cases 696, 700-2
 Repik, Bohumil 672
 reporting procedures 898
 reporting restrictions 460, 480
 representation, right to 1131 reproductive health see fertility and fertility treatment reputation
 freedom of expression 458, 465, 469, 471-3, 476
 honour and reputation, attacks on 358-9, 361-3, 384-5
 private life 358-9, 361-3, 384-5
res judicata see also ne bis in idem
 admissibility 842
 binding force and execution of judgments 866
 final judgments 849
 Grand Chamber, referral to 844
 no punishment without law 355
ratione temporis jurisdiction 109 reservations 930-9 see also under individual main entries
 brief statement of law, need for 931, 933, 936-7 broad reservations within UN system 930-1
 Committee of Experts 931
 Committee of Ministers 931-2
 Conference of Senior Officials 931-2
 Consultative Assembly 932
 de facto reservations 1009
 declarations 932-4, 936-9, 1009
 definition 933
 depositary 931-4, 1007, 1065, 1073
 disguised reservations 937, 1112
 drafting 931-3
 ECommHR 935-6
 formal requirements 930
 freedom of movement and migration 933-4 general character, prohibition of reservations of a 931, 932-3, 935-6
 individual applications 939
 International Law Commission 936, 939
 interpretation 933-9
 interpretative declarations 933, 937, 1111-12
 law then in force 935
 modification 934
 no punishment without law 936 object and purpose, consistency with 930, 933
 objections 934, 938-9
 Parliamentary Assembly 931 provisions, restricted to certain 930
 ratione materiae 934
 reasons, requirement to give 936 signature or ratification, formulation at time
 of 934-5
 slavery and forced labour 218 substance, of 930, 936 temporal scope 935
 territorial reservations 937-8

- reservations (cont.)
 thought, conscience and religion, freedom of 932 time limits for withdrawal 931
 transitional provisions 931–2
 treaties and conventions, reservations with respect to 937
 Universal Periodic Review 931
 validity 934, 936
 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 930, 933–4, 939
 withdrawal 931, 934–5
- residence
 discrimination 1175
 enter and reside, right of foreign nationals to 94
 freedom to choose 12, 1060 respect for human rights see obligation to respect human rights
- Ress, George 36
- restitutio in integrum* principle 837–8, 868
- restraints 185
- restrictions see limitation on use of restrictions on rights; under individual main entries
- retrospectivity see no punishment without law
- return to country, right to 1068
- revision of judgments 841, 842, 847, 849, 852–4
- right to an effective remedy see effective remedy, right to an
- right to education see education, right to
- right to free elections see elections, right to free
- right to liberty and security see liberty and security, right to
- right to life see life, right to
- right to marry and found a family see marry and found a family, right to
- right to petition see individual applications
- right to respect for private and family life see private and family life, right to respect for
- riot or insurrection, quelling 146, 152–3
- Roberts, Emrys 562
- Robertson, AH 532, 591, 614, 660, 670, 994
- Rogers, Richard 29
- Rolin, Henri 62, 446, 591, 635, 682, 908, 921, 961, 989
- Roma, discrimination against children to special schools, assignment of 569, 1004
 culture 543–4
 effective remedy, right to an 553, 571
 European Commission against Racism and Intolerance 1004
 expulsion 1078
 fair trial, right to a 321–2
 language 1005
 legitimate aim/purpose, restrictions for a 1005
 marry and found a family, right to 543–4
 minorities 582
 racist motives for killing 570–1
 segregation 1004–5
 special protection 578
- stereotyping 380
 sterilization 183–4, 372
- Roman law 972
- Romania
 children to leave country, right of 745
 declarations 1009
 detention/deprivation of liberty 181
 expropriation 1182–3
 immunities 681
 liberty and security, right to 258
 military service 215
 privileges and immunities of judges 893 religious organizations, freedom of association of 499, 516 Roma, sterilization of 183–4 stray dogs, problem of 370
 truth, right to 138
- Roosevelt, Eleanor 5, 576
- Roosevelt, Franklin D 69, 412, 444, 483
- Rousseau, Charles 55
- Rousseau, Jean-Jacques 201
- Rules of Court see under individual main entries
- breach 685 development 678
 drafting 684
 Plenary Court 678–9, 681–5
 Practice Directions 684
 publication of judgments 855
 records of hearings 806
 Registry 684
- Russia
 access to documents 828–9
 anonymous applications 773
 Chechnya 155–7, 197, 899–900, 1065
 civilians 155–7
 cooperate, obligation to 814
 corporal punishment 189
 death penalty 17, 146, 1092, 1118
 demonstrations 496–8
 derogations 588
 detention/deprivation of liberty 173, 197
 diplomatic assurances 146
 discrimination 1065
 ethnic cleansing in South Ossetia and Abkhazia 914
 expulsion 434, 1130
 extradition 829
 filtering and processing applications 703–4
 freedom of assembly and association 501, 511
 freedom of movement and migration 1057, 1059, 1065
 Georgia 627, 814, 1078
 Ingushetia 1065
 inhuman or degrading treatment 185
 interim measures 750
 Jehovah's Witnesses 430
 Kabardino-Balkaria 1065
 liberty and security, right to 232, 253, 626
 life, right to 155–7

- migration control 627
 Moscow theatre siege in 147-8
 national security 1062
ne bis in idem 1154
 non-retroactivity of treaties 786
 political parties 503-5
 prisoners' right to vote 1028
 religious organizations, freedom of association
 of 501 residence, freedom to choose 1060
 serfdom 202
 sexual orientation 518, 915
 stateless persons 1057
 torture 177-8
 use of lethal force 147-9
 Uzbekistan 1100
 war/armed conflict 155-7
 witnesses 809
 Ryssdal, Rolv 611, 682

 Saarland 946-7, 949, 1040
 sado-masochism 381, 385
 safeguards for existing human rights 902-4
 Committee of Experts 902-3
 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women 902 derogation of rights from other sources, no 902
 drafting 902-3
 freedom of expression 903
 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 902
 interpretation 903-4
 lex mitior principle 904
 national law as a source 904 restrictions/limitations on other sources, no 902-3 savings clause, as 902 sources of law 902-4
 Torture Convention (UN) 902
 treaties and conventions as source 904
 Saint-Just, Louis Antoine de 611
 St Lot, Emile 917
 St Petersburg Declaration 158
 Salén, Torsten 448, 863
 samples 384
 San Marino 14, 525, 937, 983, 1146
 sanctions
 access to documents 828
 binding force and execution of judgments 862
 freedom of assembly and association 517
 freedom of expression 465, 475
 no punishment without law 328-30, 333-5
 Scelle, Georges 1068
 Schengen zone 1053
 Schuman, Robert 59, 734
 Scientology 425
 Scotland
 corporal punishment 1003-4
 voting age 1026

 screening see filtering and processing applications
 search and seizure 385-7
 Second World War see also International Military Tribunal
 abuse of rights, prohibition of 611, 615, 618-19
 collaboration with the enemy 333, 355
 Holocaust denial 479-80, 615, 619
 Nazi regime 202, 329, 342, 353, 479, 619, 1095
 no punishment without law 329-30, 331, 333, 352-5
 population transfers 1067
 religious discrimination 619
 totalitarian regimes 611
 treason 333, 355
 war crimes 333, 353-4
 Weimar Germany 611
 secret associations 511
 secret ballots 1012-20
 sectarianism 579
 Sections
 assignment of cases 763
 Chambers 691
 Committees 690
 Presidents/Vice-Presidents 673, 690-1, 763, 846
 Registries 676
 Secretary General (CoE) see also inquiries by the Secretary General
 administrative functions 897 death penalty in time of war, notification of 897 depository, as 897, 950 establishment of position 897 notifications 897, 950
 role 897
 secularism 413, 1002
 security see national security
 Security Council (UN)
 attribution 107
 Chapter VII initiatives 107
 Cyprus, Turkish occupation of 914
 derogations 601-2
 International Court of Justice, requests for opinions from 874, 877
 judges, election of 658
 maintenance of international peace and security 107 peacekeeping 106
 ratione materiae jurisdiction 107
 ratione personae jurisdiction 106-7
 resolutions 106-7
 terrorism 1052
 travel bans 1052
 security, right to see liberty and security, right to segregation 1004-5
 Selden, John 292
 self-defence 118, 128, 130, 146-51, 160-1, 602
 self-determination 19, 94
 self-harm 132
 self-incrimination 287, 300-2, 310, 319
 Senghor, Leopold 62, 562, 921

- sentencing 293, 573, 1135-6, 1141 see also death penalty; imprisonment for debt, prohibition of; life imprisonment
- custodial sentences, conversion of fines into 347
- freedom of expression 454, 475-6
- indeterminate sentences 259
- just and proportionate punishment 81
- national courts 454
- no punishment without law 339
- political protests 475-6
- proportionality 330, 475-6
- remission 347
- severity 475-6
- slavery and forced labour 218
- separation of powers 1029-30
- Serbia and Montenegro
- effective remedy, right to an 554
- fair trial, right to a 323-4, 325
- peaceful enjoyment of possessions 906
- public hearings 323
- reservations 323-4, 325, 554
- secession of Montenegro 719, 950-1
- servitude see slavery and forced labour
- sessions
- judicial formations 690
- periods 690
- Plenary Court 679, 681
- settlements see friendly settlements
- sex discrimination/gender equality 555-62, 575-7, 1177
- abortion 543
- access to courts 322
- advocacy of discrimination 619
- Charter of UN 555, 557, 575-6
- Church of England, ordination of women in 577
- Committee for the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (UN) 576
- Committee of Experts, absence of women on 5
- Committee of Ministers 24, 576
- Commission on the Status of Women 5, 528, 540, 1157
- Consultative Assembly 24, 575
- Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women 192, 556, 567, 902, 987
- Council of Europe 575-6
- culture 566
- de facto* equality 567
- derogations 600
- domestic violence 129, 160, 192, 198, 385, 576-7
- drafting 11, 21, 557-8, 575-6, 583
- education, right to 987
- emergency services, service in 217
- employment 322
- equal pay 555
- fair trial, right to a 322-3
- gender roles and stereotypes 322-3, 566-7, 982, 987
- General Assembly (UN), participation of women in 5
- inhuman or degrading treatment 198
- Inter-American Convention on the Prevention, Punishment, and Eradication of Violence against Women 192
- Islamic veil 402, 437
- judges
- ad hoc* 694
- gender balance 660, 662-6, 683, 694
- jury service 217, 566
- married women 528
- names 407
- objective justification 567
- Parliamentary Assembly 24
- participation of women 5, 576 n.147
- peaceful enjoyment of possessions 959
- pensionable age 567
- positive obligations 576
- private life 375-6
- private sphere 576
- rape 576
- slavery and forced labour 217
- special measures 567
- spouses, equality between 1157
- suspect grounds 574-5
- titles, inheriting 375
- travaux préparatoires* t, 575, 576 n.147
- Universal Declaration of Human Rights 557-8, 576
- universal suffrage 1011
- violence 576
- sexual assault
- impunity 192
- notification requirements 346, 348, 384
- rape 175-6, 339, 576
- sex offenders register, placement on 346, 348
- witnesses 313
- sexual life and activity 380-1, 406
- sexual orientation
- Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU 537, 573
- civil partnerships 407-8
- criminalisation of homosexual activity 381, 408-9
- discrimination 381, 408, 438-9, 525, 556, 573-4, 584, 1179, 1184-5
- employment 438-9
- family life 390, 407-8
- freedom of assembly and association 525
- freedom of expression 915
- inhuman or degrading treatment 584
- marry and found a family, right to 535
- military, expulsion from the 172-3, 198, 381
- minorities 518
- parental rights 584
- religion or belief, freedom to manifest 438-9
- same sex couples 82, 390, 407-8, 424, 535, 741-2, 800, 1158-9
- succession to tenancies 800

- suspect grounds/categories 574, 584
- Shahabuddeen, Mohamed 655
- sham trials 337
- signature and ratification 9, 944–51 see also under
 - individual main entries
 - accession 944–6
 - associate membership 946
 - colonies 946–7
 - Committee of Experts 944, 947
 - Committee of Ministers 945, 947, 1166
 - Conference of Senior Officials 945
 - Consultative Assembly 944
 - Council of Europe, Statute of 946
 - date of opening for signature 947
 - date of signature 59
 - death penalty 950
 - depository 944–51, 1039–41, 1087–8, 1117–19, 1166–7, 1192, 1208, 1228
 - drafting 944–6, 1166
 - entry into force 108, 944–5, 949–50
 - European Union, accession of 948–9
 - expulsion 1073
 - filtering and processing application 648, 698
 - interpretation 946–51, 1166–7
 - legal obligations of signature 947
 - list of signatories 947, 1166–7
 - methods of expressing intention to be bound 947
 - Model Final Clauses 1166
 - non-European States, exclusion of 946
 - non-member States, accession of 947
 - notification by Secretary-General 950
 - number of accessions and ratifications 944
 - original signatories, list of 947
 - Parliamentary Assembly 947
 - rule of law 946
 - Secretary-General, notification of 897
 - signature clause 945–6, 951
 - signing ceremony 8–9, 59
 - succession 946, 950–1
 - technical adjustments 945
 - United Kingdom as first State to ratify 947
 - Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 947, 950
- Sikhs 439
- silence, right to 319
- simplified procedure 703
- Simpson, Brian 140, 917
- single-judge formation 28–30, 689–90, 694–702, 707, 763, 779, 805, 851
- Sinti 582
- slavery and forced labour 201–18
 - African slave trade, litigation over 201
 - Alternative A and A/2 204
 - Alternative B and B/2 204–5
 - chattel slavery 202
 - civic obligations 216, 217, 218
 - Committee of Experts 204
 - Committee of Ministers 204–5
 - Conference of Senior Officials 204–5
 - conscientious objection 205, 214–15, 433–4
 - Consultative Assembly 203–4
 - Council of Europe 214–15
 - cooperation with other States 207
 - court, lawful orders of a 205
 - crimes against humanity 202
 - criminal sentences, enforcement of 218
 - debt bondage 202
 - derogations 205–6, 592, 1155
 - detention, work associated with 205, 213–14
 - discrimination 217
 - domestic slavery/servitude 202–3, 208–9, 210
 - drafting 203–5
 - ECommHR 207
 - emergency service 216, 217
 - families 206
 - forced or compulsory labour, definition of 210–12
 - forced prostitution 202
 - gender equality 217
 - guardian, duty to act as a 217
 - human trafficking 202–3, 207, 209–10
 - ILO Forced Labour Convention No 29 1930 202, 213–16
 - individual applications 734
 - International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 592
 - interpretation 205–17
 - jury duty 216, 217
 - lawyers, special obligations imposed on 217
 - legislative and administrative framework, existence of 207
 - liberty and security, right to 205
 - military service 205, 214–16
 - national courts over African slave trade, litigation in 202
 - operational measures 206
 - Parliamentary Assembly 202–3
 - positive obligations 206
 - prisoners 205, 213–14
 - procedural/investigative obligation 206–7
 - prohibition of slave trade 201–2
 - proportionality 206
 - protective measures 206
 - protocols 205, 217
 - punishment 206–7
 - reservations 218
 - servitude, definition of 207–9, 213
 - Slavery Convention 1926 202
 - slavery, definition of 207
 - transnational dimension 207
 - travaux préparatoires* 213–15
 - Universal Declaration of Human Rights 202–5, 209, 213
- Slovakia
 - domestic violence 385
 - military service 215, 324–5
 - rent control 980
 - reservations 324–5

- Slovakia (cont.)
- Roma
 - expulsion of 1078
 - sterilization 372
 - trade unions 500
 - Slovenia
 - citizenship 379, 404-5, 407
 - erased persons 404-5, 581, 870
 - national security 405
 - nationality discrimination 407
 - private life 404-5, 407
 - social identity 374, 375-6
 - social media 359
 - social origins, discrimination on grounds of 555-6, 559-61, 580-1, 583, 600
 - social security benefits and contributions 23, 274, 544, 971-2, 981-2, 1179
 - source of international law 38-44, 352-3, 902-4
 - South Africa, death penalty in 1093
 - South Ossetia 914
 - sovereign immunity 44, 100, 286-7, 478, 554
 - Soviet Union see also Russia
 - Constitution 580
 - dissolution 505
 - Katyn massacre in Soviet Union 139, 171
 - social origins, discrimination on grounds of 580
 - Spaak, Paul-Henri 9
 - Spain
 - access to a court 322
 - broadcasting 481
 - Canary Island, regional assembly for 1020-1
 - Constitution 622, 984
 - death penalty 14
 - declarations 481, 604, 622
 - derogations 604
 - expropriation, compensation for 984
 - expulsion 349
 - Gibraltar 1084, 1162-3
 - lèse majesté* 478
 - military service 215, 324-5
 - no punishment without law 348
 - private life 375
 - public interest 984
 - reservations 324-5, 525
 - Roma 543-4
 - sentencing 339
 - sex discrimination 322
 - territorial application 1162-3
 - trade unions, public officials in 525
 - Special Court for Sierra Leone 658, 668
 - Special Tribunal for Lebanon 98, 328, 658, 668
 - speech, freedom of see freedom of expression
 - Spielmann, Dean 682, 1213
 - Spiropoulos, Jean 1068
 - spouses see also equality between spouses; marriage
 - married names 375-6, 407
 - privileges and immunities of judges 892-3
 - testimonial privilege 544
 - standard of proof 123, 169, 300, 625-6
 - standing 736-45, 795
 - State agents see also police; public sector/officials
 - authority and control 101-2
 - inhuman or degrading treatment 172, 191-2
 - life, right to 133
 - torture 191
 - use of force 101-2, 117, 122-3, 125, 127, 135, 146-53
 - State immunity 44, 100, 286-7, 478, 554
 - State monopolies 737
 - State responsibility
 - binding force and execution of judgments 868-9
 - evidence 810
 - expulsion 95-7
 - Draft Articles on State Responsibility 101, 837, 868
 - ratione loci* jurisdiction 95, 99, 101-3
 - state agent authority and control 101-2
 - Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 42
 - State security see national security
 - State sovereignty 274, 835
 - statelessness 109, 379, 581, 1057, 1071
 - Statute of the International Court of Justice 38, 40, 41, 42, 44, 352, 632, 635, 637, 641, 648, 651, 658, 672, 693, 716, 719, 720, 724, 849, 852, 857, 877, 878, 891, 911
 - stereotyping 192, 380, 576, 987
 - sterilization 183-4, 372, 543
 - stigmatization 580
 - stop and search 226-7
 - Street, Jessie 5
 - strict/absolute liability 300
 - strike, right to 508, 522
 - striking out applications 796-802
 - admissibility 706, 800
 - advisory opinions 1225
 - caseload 796-7, 799-801
 - Chamber 797
 - Committee of Ministers 797-8, 802
 - Committees, competence of 702
 - corporal punishment 800
 - costs 802
 - de minimis* rule 800
 - death of applicants 798
 - decision, by means of a 797, 821-2
 - discontinuance 797-8
 - drafting 796-7
 - failure to pursue and application 798-802
 - friendly settlements 797-8, 801, 819-23
 - Grand Chamber 799, 846
 - interpretation 797-8
 - inter-State applications 797
 - judgment, by means of a 797-8, 821-2
 - matter resolved, where matter is 798
 - merits, decisions on the 706
 - moral dimension 800
 - no longer justified, where action 799-800

- notification of Registrar of intention not to proceed 797
- offers of settlement 799
- public policy 800
- respect for human rights requires striking out, where 800-1
- restoration to the list 801
- same sex partners, succession to tenancies of 800
- single judges, competence of 697
- unilateral declarations 799-800
- victim, loss of status of 797, 798
- subject matter jurisdiction see ratione materiae (subject matter) jurisdiction
- subsidiarity
- advisory opinions 1213
 - binding force and execution of judgments 870
 - collective enforcement 73-4
 - consolidation of institutions and reform 75
 - criminal law 78
 - de minimis* principle 784-5
 - democratic ideals 78
 - derogations 77
 - domestic courts, deference to 77-8
 - effective remedy, right to an 76
 - enforcement 76-7
 - exhaustion of local remedies 75-6, 765, 807
 - Explanatory Report 74
 - first-instance court, court as not being a 77-8
 - fourth-instance court, court as not being a 77
 - friendly settlements 816
 - immigration cases 76
 - incorporation into national law 76
 - Parliamentary Assembly 75
 - Preamble to ECHR 58, 74-8
 - Refugee Convention 76
 - United Kingdom 75, 77
- substantive rights, definition of 8
- succession to treaties 720, 946, 950-1
- Süd Tirol/Alto Adige, dispute between Austria and Italy over 913
- suicide
- assisted suicide 133, 172, 382
 - life, right to 132-3
 - protest, as 132
- summary executions against non-combatants 354
- Sundt, Arthur 863
- superior orders, defence of 341-2
- Surinam 324, 946, 1036
- surveillance
- covert filming 377
 - employees, use of email, Internet and telephone use by 387
 - GPS 383, 387
 - home, outside the 387
 - private life 386-7, 403
 - satellite navigation devices attached to cars 383
 - telephone tapping 320, 386-7, 403
 - video surveillance 377
- suspension of States 906
- Sweden
- death penalty 17, 1092
 - declarations 1133
 - education, right to 1007-8
 - expulsion 1133
 - no punishment without law 330
 - reservations 1007-8
 - signatories 9
 - trade unions 524
- Switzerland
- age of criminal responsibility 318
 - assisted suicide 133
 - children, detention of 261
 - Constitution 1132
 - crime and family, extension to 1164-5
 - expulsion 1132
 - fair trial, right to a 324-5
 - freedom of assembly and association 513
 - freedom of expression 467, 472-3, 479-80
 - genocide, denial of 479-80
 - legal aid 324
 - marriage, dissolution of 542
 - military service 215
 - minarets 742
 - names 544
 - national security 1132
 - oral hearings 324
 - patronymic names 1159
 - reasons 936
 - reservations 324-5, 936, 1165
- tax
- discrimination 982
 - fair trial, right to a 274
 - forfeiture 974
 - military service, exemption from 569
 - ne bis in idem* 1154
 - peaceful enjoyment of possessions 979, 980-1
 - presumption of innocence 299
 - religion 429
- Teitgen, Pierre-Henri 4, 8, 12, 55, 61, 84, 119, 165-6, 203, 221, 270, 331, 360-2, 415-16, 423, 445-6, 484-5, 530, 547, 557-9, 589, 612-13, 635, 717, 754-5, 832-3, 835, 863, 908, 960, 962, 966, 988, 990, 1013, 1016, 1035
- telephone tapping 320, 386-7, 403
- temporal jurisdiction see ratione temporis (temporal) jurisdiction
- tenancies 400, 407, 800, 979
- terms of office of judges 668-74
- ad hoc institutions 668
 - age
 - career prospects after office, maintenance of 673
 - limits 670-1, 672
 - maximum 670-1, 672
 - precedence 673-4

- terms of office of judges (cont.)
- career prospects after office, maintenance of 673
 - casual vacancies 671
 - Committee of Legal Experts 669–70
 - Committee of Ministers 672–3
 - Conference of Senior Officials 669
 - Consultative Assembly 672
 - drafting 669–71
 - ECommHR 669
 - filtering and processing applications 670–1
 - former court 670
 - freedom of assembly and association 673
 - freedom of expression 673
 - independence and impartiality 668, 671, 673
 - International Court of Justice 668
 - International Criminal Court 668
 - International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda 668
 - International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia 668
 - interpretation 671–2
 - new court 670
 - new Member States 670
 - Parliamentary Assembly 671, 673
 - pensions 673
 - precedence 673–4
 - President of the Court 673
 - Presidents of the Sections 673
 - re-election 669–72
 - resignation, notification of 671
 - retirement 672
 - rotation 670
 - safety and security 673
 - salaries 673
 - status 672–3
 - transitional provisions 670
 - Vice-Presidents of the Court 673
 - withdrawal of State from Council of Europe 672
 - working conditions 672–3
- territorial application 916–28
- advisory opinions 924, 1216
 - Committee of Experts 918–19, 1033–4, 1082
 - Committee of Ministers 918–21, 1033, 1035, 1161
 - Conference of Senior Officials 919
 - consent 919–20
 - Consultative Assembly 917, 918–21, 1035, 1082
 - customary international law 924
 - declarations 921–8, 943, 1162–3, 1082–4, 1190
 - denunciations 942–3
 - discrimination 921, 1177, 1189–90
 - Draft Colonial Application Clause 919
 - drafting 918–22, 1033–4, 1161, 1082–3
 - due regard for local requirements, meaning of 926–7
 - effective control principle 95, 102–4, 923–4
 - European Commission for Human Rights 926
 - freedom of movement and migration 922, 1081–4
 - Genocide Convention 924
 - high seas, intercession of people on 1083
 - independence, colonies' acquisition of 924
 - individual applications 922, 927–8
 - international relations, responsibility for 100, 924–5
 - interpretation 922–8, 1036, 1161–2, 1083–4
 - local requirements 918–19, 922, 926–7, 1033
 - metropolitan and dependent territories, distinguishing between 924–5
 - Model Final Clauses 1161–2, 1189–90
 - negative colonial clause 922
 - non-self-governing territories 916–17
 - overseas territories, use of term 921–4
 - protocols 922–3
 - Secretary-General, notification of 897
 - signatories and ratification 1036, 1084, 1190
 - territories for whose international relations it is responsible, meaning of 924–5
 - Universal Declaration of Human Rights 916–17, 920–1
 - universal jurisdiction 916–17, 926
 - Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 922, 924–5, 1033, 1161, 1082
- territorial jurisdiction see ratione loci (territorial) jurisdiction; territorial application
- terrorism
- abuse of rights, prohibition of 616, 617
 - arrest, detention, and transport by foreign agencies 900 n.10
 - confidentiality 239
 - death penalty 1095–6
 - derogations 588, 595, 597
 - detention/deprivation of liberty 836–7
 - expulsion 168
 - extradition 750, 837
 - freedom of movement and migration 1052
 - Independent Expert on Protection of Human Rights while Countering Terrorism (UN) 1100–1
 - just satisfaction 836–7
 - liberty and security, right to 239, 588
 - no punishment without law 344
 - religion or belief, freedom to manifest 436
 - Security Council travel bans 1052
 - September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks 595, 597, 617
 - use of lethal force 148
- third-party intervention 788–95
- admissibility 788
 - advisory opinions 1222
 - amicus curiae* briefs 788, 793
 - Chambers 792
 - closed shop case 788–9
 - Commissioner for Human Rights (CoE) 794–5
 - death penalty 794
 - diplomatic protection 792
 - drafting 789–91
 - ECommHR 788
 - filtering and processing applications 793–4
 - governmental organizations 793
 - High Commissioner for Human Rights (UN) 794

- High Commissioner for Refugees (UN) 794
 individuals 793
 intergovernmental organizations 793
 inter-State applications 788 leave, with 792-4
 nationality 788-9, 792
 non-governmental organizations 793-5
 oral hearings 788-9, 792
 President of the Court 792 return to State of nationality, risks of violation of rights on 792 right to intervene 792
 Rules of Court 788-9, 792-3
 time limits 792-3
 Venice Commission 793
 written submissions 788
- thought, conscience and religion, freedom of 412-41
 see also manifest religion or belief, freedom to absolute nature of freedom 420, 426
 abuse of rights, prohibition of 617, 620 administration and justice, smooth working of 418 advantages, offering social and material 426-7 atheism and agnosticism 423-4
 balancing exercise 422
 benefits, claims for recognition as religion to claim 425
 change religion or belief, freedom to 413, 420, 426-7
 Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU 414
 Committee of Experts 416-18
 Conference of Senior Officials 419
 conscientious objection 414, 422, 424, 433-4, 848
 Consultative Assembly 415-16
 corporal punishment 189
 Council of Europe
 aims and principles 416
 cultural homogeneity of 413
 discrimination 440
 cultural homogeneity 413
 dangerous religious practices or activities, government warnings on 422
 Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief (UN) 413-14
 declarations 441
 derogations 416-18, 420, 593
 discrimination 440-1, 568-9, 579-80
 drafting 414-19
 education 419, 1001
 freedom of assembly and association 440, 483, 491, 499, 502, 512
 freedom of conscience, definition of 423-4
 freedom of expression 412, 423, 440, 452, 457, 468, 472-3
 freedom of religion and belief, definition of 425-6 freedom of thought, definition of 423
 general principles of international law 415
 identity 420
 institutions, foundations and confessions, national rules on 416-18
 International Convention on the Elimination of All
 Forms of Racial Discrimination 413
 International Covenant on Civil and Political
 Rights 412, 423, 592
 International Covenant on Economic, Social, and
 Cultural Rights 412
 International Criminal Court, Rome Statute of 424
 interpretation 419-41
 Islam 413
 legal rights of others, protection of 415 legitimacy of beliefs 425
 legitimate purpose 420
 limitation on use of restrictions 625
 margin of appreciation 424, 426
 marry and found a family, right to 541
 military service 215
 minorities 413
 moral or ethical dimension 424 morality, public order and general welfare 415
 natural persons 421
 necessary in a democratic society 420
 pluralism 421
 positive obligation or interference 421-2
 prescribed by law 420
 private and family life, right to respect for 440
 proselytization 426-7
 reasonable accommodation 569
 reservations 441, 932
 restrictions/limitations 414-18, 420-1
 rule of law 436
 same sex partnerships 424
 sects and schisms 425
 secularism 413
 State, interference by the 421-2
 territorial integrity 418
 thought and conscience 420
 Universal Declaration of Human Rights 412-16
 Utrecht, Treaty of (1713) 413
- time limits
 admissibility criteria 757-8, 763, 770-3
 appeals in criminal matters, right to 1137
 crimes against humanity 354
 date of knowledge 772
 date of running of time 772
 denunciations 942
 examination of the case 806
 Grand Chamber, referral to 846, 851
 homicide 128
 inquiries by the Secretary General 900
 no punishment without law 342-3, 356
 prejudice 772
ratione temporis 770
 rectification of judgments 854-5 reservations, withdrawal of 931
 revision of judgments 852
 rule of law 72

- time limits (cons.)
 third-party intervention 792-4
 time of the essence 770-1
 waiver 770
 War Crimes, Convention on Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to 39
 weekends and holidays 772
 written submissions 806
- Tokyo Military Tribunal (TMT) 353
- torture, prohibition of 164-98
 absolute right, as 164, 168-9
 abuse of rights, prohibition of 619
 Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU 165
 Committee for the Prevention of Torture
 (CPT) 165, 379, 820
 Committee of Experts 167
 Committee of Ministers 167-8, 173
 common heritage 70
 Consultative Assembly 165-7
 Council of Europe 165, 174
 customary international law 164
 death penalty 16
 definition 174-7
 deliberate and purposive dimension 174, 176-8
 derogations 168-9, 592-3, 1155
 detention/deprivation of liberty 175-8
 discrimination 177
 drafting 165-8
 European Torture Convention 174, 912
 evidence 321, 810
 expulsion 395
 extradition, deportation or expulsion 95-6, 179, 1128
 General Assembly (UN) Declaration 175, 177 information or confessions, purpose of obtaining 174, 178
 inhuman or degrading treatment distinguished 169, 174-9
 International Court of Justice 164, 179
 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 164, 592
 interpretation 165, 168-98
jus cogens 44, 164, 179-80
 life, right to 118, 164, 169
 living instrument principle 176
 medical or scientific experimentation, consent to 164, 166-7
 'no one' formulation 169
 no punishment without law 342
 positive obligations 191
 procedural/investigative obligation 170-1, 191, 193
 rape in detention 175-6
 safeguards for existing human rights 902
 severity threshold 171-2, 175-9
 Special Rapporteur on Torture (UN) 177
 standard of proof 169
 State agents 191
 threshold of application 171-2, 175-9
- Torture Convention (UN) 39, 164, 169, 176-7, 321, 902, 1128
travaux préparatoires 167-8
 Universal Declaration of Human Rights 164-8
 victims 169-71
 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 39 visits to places of detention 165
- totalitarianism
 abuse of rights, prohibition of 611-12, 616-19
 education, right to 989, 991, 993
 family life 360-1, 393
 freedom of expression 445
 militant democracy 519-20
 private and family life, right to respect for 360, 361
 Second World War 611
- trade unions closed shop 64, 493-4, 506-8, 788-9
 collective agreements 493, 524
 collective bargaining 494, 506-7, 524 compulsion to join 502 democracy, threats to 515
 de-recognition 494
 discrimination 508, 524-5
 economic, social and cultural rights 23
 European Social Charter 506, 515-16
 expulsion 502
 extreme political parties, exclusion of members of 502 financial contributions, compulsory 508
 freedom of assembly and association 483-9, 493-4, 499-502, 505-9, 514-16, 522-5
 freedom of expression 464-5, 469, 471, 473
 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights 508
 International Labour Organization 508, 515
 join, right to 505, 508, 607
 necessary in a democratic society, restrictions which are 514
 negative aspects 507-8
 not to join, right 487
 police 487
 political activity of aliens, restrictions on 607 political neutrality 522
 pressing social needs, restrictions for 514
 private sector 509, 515 public sector 509, 515-16, 522
 registration 516, 525
 religious organisations 499, 516 right to form unions 505, 516, 607
 strike, right to 508, 522
travaux préparatoires 507
 Universal Declaration of Human Rights 507
 work, right to 499
- trafficking 63, 202-3, 207, 209-10, 229, 344
 Transdnistria 99, 809-10, 937, 999-1000
 transgender persons 173, 380-1, 535-7, 544, 583
travaux préparatoires see also under individual main entries
 interpretation 34
 women, participation of 5, 575, 576 n.147

- travel bans 1052, 1063-4
 Travellers 582
 treason 333, 355
 Trechsel, Stefan 142
 truth, right to 138-9
 Tsotsoria, Nona 627
 Tulkens, Françoise 66, 439, 682
 turbans, wearing 439
 Turkey see also Cyprus, Turkish occupation of Northern
 abuse of rights, prohibition of 613-14, 618, 620
 Bologna Process 1005
 Copenhagen Process 1005
 death penalty 143-4, 1095-6
 democracy 515
 denigrating Turkishness, offence of 470-1
 derogations 588, 598, 600, 603-4
 detention/deprivation of liberty 600, 775
 disappearances 229, 871
 domestic violence 160, 198, 577
 education, right to 998, 1003, 1008
 exhaustion of domestic remedies 769
 expropriation, compensation for 977
 extremism 447-8, 620
 freedom of assembly and association 501-2, 507, 512, 515
 freedom of expression 447-8, 464, 470-2
 headscarves/veil 437, 848
 independence and impartiality 695
 Internet 466
 Islam 437, 1003
 Kurds 157, 401, 453, 464, 471-2, 598, 739, 998
 language 401, 998
 liberty and security, right to 246, 259
 life, right to 118, 157, 160
 margin of appreciation 600
 on-site visits 809
 peaceful enjoyment of possessions 867, 973 police training 820-1
 political parties
 dissolution of 512, 618
 funding 1022
 population transfers 1067
 prisoners' right to vote 1028
 proportionality 618
 ratifications 12
 reservations 604, 939, 1008, 1078
 revision of judgments 854
 Roma, stereotyping of 380
 terrorism 436, 600
 torture 175-6, 179, 600, 820-1
 trade unions 507, 515
 Universal Periodic Review 915
 universities 437, 998, 1005
 use of force by State agents 101-2
 vote, right to 1027
 war/armed conflict 157
- Turks and Caicos Islands, corruption in local government in 1031-2
 Tymoshenko, Yulia 456, 626-7
- Ukraine
 death penalty 1092, 1100
 detention/deprivation of liberty 239
 election of judges 661
 freedom of expression 455-6, 470
 liberty and security, right to 626-7
 pensions 982
 Refugee Convention 947
 reservations 325
 Roma 160
 witnesses 325
- Ungood-Thomas, Lynn 636
- United Kingdom see also Northern Ireland
 adverse possession 974
 age of criminal responsibility 318
 Chagos Islands 104
 child custody 826-7
 citizenship 1082
 colonies
 corporal punishment 188-9, 1007
 Cyprus 9, 188, 596, 725, 917-18, 924
 derogations 596
 territorial application 916-28, 1036
 corporal punishment 70, 188-9, 927-8, 1007
 Cyprus
 colonies and overseas territories 9, 188, 596, 725, 917-18, 924
 death penalty 140
 derogations 596
 emergency powers 188, 596
 independence 9, 725
 Sovereign Base Areas 924, 928
 death penalty 120, 140-6, 190-1, 750, 1093, 1095, 1114, 1205-6
 declarations 596, 800
 derogations 587-8, 596-7, 600-1
 ECommHR 809
 education, right to 1006, 1007
 emergency powers 188, 596
 estoppel 815
 expulsion 169-70, 405, 1082
 Falkland Islands 928, 1206
 freedom of movement and migration 1082, 1083
 Gibraltar 928, 1007, 1036, 1084, 1162-3, 1206
 Greece 725
 Guernsey 597, 925, 928, 1007, 1036, 1114, 1206
 Hong Kong 922
 in camera hearings 827
 individual applications 928
 interim measures 750
 International Court of Justice 908
- Iraq
 death row phenomenon 190-1
 transfer of detainees to 750

- United Kingdom (cont.)
- Isle of Man, corporal punishment in 70, 188-9, 926-7, 1007
 - Jersey 597, 925, 928, 1036, 1114, 1206
 - judicial office, criteria for 652, 654
 - liberty and security, right to 222-3, 225, 240, 253-4, 259-60, 621
 - life imprisonment 187
 - life, right to 120-1
 - London terrorist attacks, July, 2005 595
 - marriage
 - de facto* 538
 - marriages of convenience 540
 - Military Manual 602
 - national security 597, 600
 - nationality for citizens joining terrorist organizations, withdrawal of 1072
 - no punishment without law 330
 - peaceful enjoyment of possessions 983
 - pensionable age 567
 - prisoners' right to vote 915, 1028
 - racial discrimination 575
 - ratification 9, 947
 - refugees and asylum seekers 800
 - religious discrimination 467
 - reservations
 - education, right to 1006, 1007
 - peaceful enjoyment of possessions 983
 - rule of law 71-2
 - Scotland 1003-4, 1026
 - sex discrimination 575
 - slavery and forced labour 201, 204
 - subsidiarity 75, 77
 - territorial application 916-28, 942, 1036, 1162-3
 - death penalty 1114, 1205-6
 - freedom of movement and migration 1082, 1083
 - terrorism 597, 1072
 - torture 167, 177
 - trade unions 506-7
 - vote, right to 1026, 1028
- United Nations see also General Assembly (UN)
- activities of UN and subordinate bodies, distinction between 106-7
 - Commission on the Status of Women 5
 - developing countries 4
 - political blocs 4
 - ratione personae* jurisdiction 106-7
 - Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information (UN) 466
 - women, participation of 5
- United States
- Belgium, extradition of terrorist suspects
 - from 750, 837
 - Constitution 220, 254, 358, 385-6, 483, 1147
 - death penalty
 - death row phenomenon in 142-3
 - life, right to 142-3, 146
 - diplomatic assurances 146
 - expulsion 169-70
 - extraordinary rendition 96, 145, 793, 809-10, 827, 836-7, 899-901
 - freedom of assembly and association 483
 - freedom of expression 444-5
 - habeas corpus* 220, 254
 - homosexual activity, criminalization of 381
 - ne bis in idem* 1147
 - private and family life, right to respect for 358
 - search and seizure 385-6
 - September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks 595, 597, 617
 - slavery and forced labour 202
 - Supreme Court 381, 423
- Universal Declaration of Human Rights see also under individual main entries
- abuse of rights, prohibition of 611, 613
 - adoption 1-2
 - adoption of ECHR 4, 7, 61, 84, 167
 - collective enforcement 73
 - Commission on Human Rights 2, 5, 576
 - common heritage 69-70
 - common understanding and observance of human rights 69
 - constitutions contained retroactivity conditions 330
 - Council of Europe 3-4
 - court, proposal for a 6
 - Documented Outline 330
 - drafting 55
 - experts 5
 - human trafficking 63, 209
 - implementation 62-3
 - importance 64-5
 - International Bill of Rights, as part of 1-2, 6, 61
 - International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 59, 61
 - interpretation 47-8
 - justice and peace 66
 - non-binding, as 62, 64-5
 - regional instruments, preamble of 59-60
 - rule of law 71
 - universal, definition of 1
 - Universal Periodic Review 65
 - women, participation of 5, 576
- universal jurisdiction 91-2, 102
- Universal Periodic Review
- exclusion of other means of dispute resolution 915
 - freedom of expression 915
 - inter-State applications 915
 - prisoners' right to vote in UK 915
 - ratione materiae* jurisdiction 94
 - reservations 931
 - universal suffrage 1011-15, 1019, 1021, 1026
 - universities 997-8, 1005
 - urgent cases 690
 - use of force 146-53
 - arbitrariness 147, 151
 - arrest, effecting a lawful 146, 150-2
 - civilians in conflict zones 146-7

- defence from unlawful violence 146-7, 148-50
 ECommHR 149, 152-3
 ECtHR 152-3
 escape, preventing an 146, 150-2
 exceptions 146-7
 firearms 125, 129-31, 148-51 injuries to law enforcement officials 153
 interpretation 117, 122-3, 149
 law enforcement operations 147 lethal force 117, 122-3, 125, 127, 135, 146-57
 life, right to 117, 122-3, 125, 127, 135, 146-57
 means of force 148
 mines, location and deactivation of 148 mistake 147
 necessity 123, 147, 149-51 permitted force 122-3, 146-53
 positive obligations 127
 procedural/investigative obligation 135
 proportionality 147-8, 150
 riot or insurrection, quelling 146, 152-3
 self-defence 146-7, 148-51
 State agents 101-2, 117, 122-3, 125, 127, 135, 146-53
 war/armed conflict 146-7, 155-7 warning shots 129-30
 Uzbekistan 1100
- vaccinations 371
 vagrants, detention of 220, 222-3, 243
 vegetarian diet 435, 440
 Vehabović, Faris 348
 Venice Commission see European Commission for Democracy through Law (Venice Commission)
 Verdross, Aldred 45
 Versailles, Treaty of 328-9
 Vice-Presidents see Presidents/Vice-Presidents
 victims
 acquittals 744
 actio popularis 738
 advocacy organizations or associations 741-2 appropriate and sufficient redress 744
 corporate bodies 741, 742
 dead persons 738-9, 742 direct victims 742
 disappearances 739-40
 elections, right to free 1018
 expulsion 740-1, 743, 744-5
 extradition 745
 families 170-1
 freedom of assembly and association 500, 742
 groups of individuals 737
 hierarchy of victims 742
 in camera hearings 827
 indirect victims 742
 individual applications 737-45
 inhuman or degrading treatment 169-71
 International Court of Justice 741
 just satisfaction 738
 locus standi 737-45
 loss of status 797, 798
 next-of-kin applications 738-40
 non-governmental organizations 737, 741
 potential victims 743-4
 public order 738
 stage of proceedings, rejection of applications at any 785-6
 torture 169-71
 Universal Declaration of Human Rights 740
 Victor Emmanuel of Savoy, Prince of Naples 1073
 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 34-46
 binding force and execution of judgments 866
 Charter of Fundamental Rights of the EU 39
 Committee of Ministers, recommendations and resolutions of 41, 45
 Convention on the Rights of the Child 38
 customary international law 38, 40-4, 46
 death penalty 37
 declarations 37
 dynamic or evolutive interpretation 37
 ECommHR 37
 ECtHR 35-42, 642
 European Social Charter 38
 Explanatory Reports 45 external context 36
 Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities 38
 general means 34, 36
 general principles of international law 35, 38, 41-2, 45
 Geneva Conventions 38
 Genocide Convention 39
 good faith 36
 ILC draft articles on immunities 41 internal context 36
 International Court of Justice, Statute of 40-4
 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 39 international humanitarian law instruments 39
 jurisdiction 719
 jus cogens 44, 180, 593
 languages 35, 45-6
 liberty and security, right to 36-7
 life, right to 154
 literal, historical interpretation 45
 no punishment without law 786
 pacta sunt servanda 814
 Preamble to ECHR 36, 54
 reservations 42, 930, 933-4, 939
 rule of law 36
 sources of international law 35, 38-44
 state responsibility 42
 subsequent practice 36-7 supplementary means 35, 45
 Torture Convention (UN) 39
 travaux préparatoires 45
 Universal Declaration of Human Rights 36, 45

- Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties (cont.)
 war/armed conflict 39, 154
 War Crimes, Convention on Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to 39
- Vilhjálmsón, Thór 682
- Villiger, Mark 646
- vocational guidance or training 23
- Voltaire (Arouet, François-Marie) 444
- vote, right to 1026-9
 age 1026
 American Convention on Human Rights 1026 eligibility 1026
 Grand Chamber 1027
 non-residents 1027-8
 Parliamentary Assembly 1027 prisoners/convicted persons 915, 1023, 1028-9 residence requirements 1027-8
- Vučinić, Nebojša 424
- vulnerable persons
 fair trial in criminal proceedings, right to 311, 313
 individual applications 747-8
 liberty and security, right to 229
 negative obligations 748
 positive obligations 748
 witnesses 313
- Wagner, Richard 136
- waiver
 appeals in criminal trials, right to 1140
 fair trial, right to 271, 309, 317
 interpreters 314
 public hearings 290
 time limits 770
- Waldock, Humphrey 682
- war/armed conflict see also armed conflict and right to life; Second World War; war crimes aggression 602
 armed conflict, definition of 594-5
 Charter of UN 602
 civilians in conflict zones 146-7
 customary international law 602
 deaths 589, 592, 602
 derogations 594-5, 601-2
 Geneva Conventions 37-8, 158, 345, 601-2, 641, 1104, 1106
 Hague Convention 1907 602
 Hague Regulations 102
 home, respect for the 400
 internal displacement 400
 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 592, 601
 International Criminal Court, Rome Statute of 602
 international humanitarian law 37-8, 158, 345, 588, 601-2, 641, 1104, 1106
jus ad bellum 156, 601
jus in bello 156, 602
 lawful acts of war 601-2
 liberty and security, right to 36-7, 235
 life, right to 153-8
 mass expulsions 400
 Military Manual of 1958 (UK) 602
 prisoners of war 155, 235, 576 n.147
 propaganda 19
 summary executions against non-combatants 354
 use of lethal force 146-7
- war crimes
 abuse of rights, prohibition of 619
 amnesties 1150
 death penalty 1094-5
 international law 333 n.27
 life, right to 155
 national courts, chambers of 99
 no punishment without law 343-5, 355
 Second World War, tribunals after the 333 n.27
 superior orders defence 341-2
 time limits 343
 War Crimes, Convention on Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to 39
- Weber, Helene 576 n.147
- Weimar Germany 611
- Wells, HG 528
- whipping 188
- whistleblowing 25, 465, 469, 475
- Wiarda, Gérard 682
- Wildhaber, Luzius 646, 682
- Wilson, Woodrow 555
- witnesses
 anonymity 313
 Chambers 806
 discrimination 544
 equality 269-70
 examination of the case 806-10
 expert witnesses 806-7, 809
 failure to appear 808
 fair trial, right to 269-70, 312-13
 non-attendance 312-13 oaths or solemn declarations 810
 reservations 325
 Rules of Court 808
 sexual assault 313
 spouses, compellability of 538, 544 summonses 808
 vulnerable witnesses 313
- Wojtyczek, Krzysztof 65-6, 68-70, 903
- work, right to 499
- World War One see First World War
- World War Two see Second World War
- written submissions 794, 806
- wrongful convictions see compensation for wrongful conviction
- Yugoslavia see International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia (ICTY)
- Zekia, Mehmed 620
- Ziemele, Ineta 36, 773
- Zimbabwe, death penalty in 1093
- Zupančič, Boštjan 835

OXFORD COMMENTARIES ON INTERNATIONAL LAW

General Editor

PHILIP ALSTON
New York University

LAURENCE BOISSON DE DUCHAZOURNES
University of Geneva

'The Commentary is . . . among the finest published works on the Convention. It is, as one would expect, written with the erudition and authority of someone whose entire professional life has been closely associated with the international protection of human rights and with the Convention system. It is also a very well-structured work and the discussion of each Article of the Convention, both substantive and procedural, is prefaced with an invaluable introductory comment and a note on the drafting of the provision . . . More than that it is a pleasure to read . . .

I welcome the Commentary without reservation and congratulate Professor Schabas very warmly for a work which will I predict swiftly become not only a leading work on the Convention system but an indispensable resource for all interested in what he calls one of the greatest stories of success in the modern protection of human rights.'

Sir Nicolas Bratza, the former President of the European Court of Human Rights

William A. Schabas is Professor of international law at Middlesex University in London. He is also Professor of international criminal law and human rights at Leiden University, Emeritus Professor of human rights law at the National University of Ireland Galway, and honorary chairman of the Irish Centre for Human Rights.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

www.oup.com

ISBN 978-0-19-881362-0

9 780198 813620